Hoveringham. Hoveringham or Horringham church has a Saxon porch with a curious bas relief of St. Michael, the patron of the chapel, and the dragon, now nearly hidden by a modern brick buttreſs built to ſupport that ſide of the church, and a monument for ſir Robert Gouſill, knt. ſometime lord of this town, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheir of Thomas Fitz-Alan earl of Arundel, and relict of Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, on which is their effigies cumbent curiouſly carved in marble.

Southwell. "Southwelle town is meately well builded, but "there is no market publick. The minſter of our "Lady is large, but of no pleaſant building, but "rather ſtrong. There lyeth in the quier in an arch "an archbiſhop of York. The biſhop of York hath "there a pretty palace, and the miniſters of the "church be well lodged, eſpecially the prebendarys, "The archbiſhop has three parks, the little park, "alias New park, Norwood park; but Hexgre is the "chefeſt of them[e]." This church was founded by Paulinus about 630; but the firſt grant we meet with of it to the ſee of York is by king Eadwy to archbiſhop Oſcetyl[f]. Dr. Thoroton tells us that king Edgar, brother and ſucceſſor of king Eadwy, in a certificate of the court of Augmentations, is ſaid to be the founder of this church[g]. Here were ſeveral canons at the Conqueſt, but the preſent number of 16 was not ſettled till the next century. The chapter was refounded after its ſurrender by Henry VIII. 1543, a. r. 33, with greateſt part of its antient poſſeſſions, and it was again reſtored by Elizabeth 1584, and confirmed by James I. 1604. The common revenues are rated at £. 39. clear, and the prebends at between £.287 and 316: all together, 26 Henry VIII. at £. 516.[h] The palace on the ſouth ſide of the church in the little or new park is aſcribed to Wolſey, but was more probably built by Booth, whoſe chapel of St. Mary on the ſouth ſide of the church, in which he was buried 1464[i], was ruined as well as the palace in the civil war, and is now turned into a ſchool. His brother, alſo archbiſhop of York, who died 1480[k], was buried here, and has an altar-tomb between the chapel and the nave. In the choir is a braſsleſs ſlab for archbiſhop Corbridge, who died at Lanham in this county 1303, and whoſe body was found in [q] G. Thoroton, 148.

[r] Tan. 405.
[s] G.
[t] Holland.
[u] Tan. 411. Thoroton, 168.
[x] Tan. 412. Thoroton, 143.
[y] Tan. 403. Thoroton, 177.
[z] Hiſt of the Houſe of Yvery, vol. I. p. 289.
[a] P. 310. ex lib. mag. pen. capit. de Southwell.
[b] Tan. 410.
[b] Ib. 403.
[c] Lel. V. 93.
[d] Tan. 404.
[e] Lel. V. 93.
[f] Tan. 399.
[g] G. Monumenta Brit.
[h] Tan. ubi ſup.
[i] Godwin, 643.
[k] Ib. 697.

putting up a new pulpit about 40 years ago. Archbiſhop Sandys was buried here 1588, and has a marble monument with his effigy cumbent on the north ſide of the altar. Archbiſhop Rotheram added ſome offices and rooms about 1490[l] to this palace, which was demoliſhed in the civil war, and the parks are now leaſed out[m], as is even the minſter yard alſo.

The whole church is in length from eaſt to weſt 306 feet, in breadth 59 in height 120. The nave was burnt by lightning 1711. Here was an hoſpital of St. Mary Magdalen 1313[n].

On a pillar in the church is this inſcription:

Hanc
Collegiatam & parochialem eccleſiam religioſa antiquitas fundavit.

Rex Henricus VIII. illuſtriſſimus	reſtauravit 1543	Edwardo Lee archiepiſcopo Ebor. piiſſimo	petente.
Regina Elizabetha religioſiſſima	ſancivit 1584	Edwino Sandys archiepiſc. Ebor. digniſſimo	intercedente.
Monarcha Jacobus præpotentiſſimus	ſtabilivit 1604	Henrico Howard com. Northamptonienſi prænobiliſſimo	mediante.

A domino factum eſt iſtud.
Da gloriam Deo,
Honorem regi.
Sint ſicut Oreb & Zebe & Salmana
Qui dicunt poſſideamus ſanctuarium Dei.
Pſal. 83. 11.
Det Deus hoc ſanctum ſanctis ſit ſemper aſylum exulis, idolatras ſacrilegoſque ruat.
Gervas. Lee
In piam gratumque Mæcænatum memoriam poſuit.
1608.

The town is divided into Burgage, corruptly called Burridge, which takes up that part from the market place to the river Greet, and the Prebendage, and church[o]. From this town was denominated a family of conſiderable note in our hiſtory in the reigns of Henry III. Edward I. and Henry VI. when they ſpread themſelves into Norfolk and Suffolk, and in that of Charles II. ſir Robert Southwell ſettled at King's Weſton, Glouceſterſhire[s], whoſe deſcendant (1776) obtained the title of lord Clifford by deſcent through his mother, one of the coheirs general of that ancient barony.

The manor of Southwell, with the precinct and ſite of the college, and divers lands late belonging thereto, were conveyed by John Beaumont, eſq; to king Edward VI. in diſcharge of a debt due from him to the ſaid king, which conveyance was confirmed by ſtatute 4 and 5 Philip and Mary c. 1. Edward VI. granted the manor in his third year to John earl of Warwick[p].

The termination of its antient name in Bede Tiovul Fingaceſter ſeems to imply a Roman ſettlement ſomewhere in the neighbourhood of Southwell, which is an antient place, but on the wrong ſide of the river. Poſſibly there may have been a ſtation on the ſouth ſide of Trent, or on the lingula formed by this river, or a ſmaller one, which in Camden is called Snite, and perhaps here has been a bridge over the Trent, which has occaſioned the name of Ad Pontem. Mr. Horſley, from a view of the ground, did not think the ſituation or appearance very unpromiſing, and accordingly he fixes AD PONTEM in this neighbourhood[q].

"Almoſt a mile or I cam to this village [Rom-ford] I cam hard by Hexgreve park on the right hand, and a little beyond on the left hand I ſaw nere at hand Mr. Newman's, a knight's park and pretty manor. It is in Ketelington paroche[r]."

Hexgrave park was probably made by archbiſhop Walter in the time of Henry III.[s]

Norwood park was purchaſed after the civil wars by Mr. Edward Clud, a celebrated perſon in this county on the part of the parliament t. Charles I. who built a pretty brick houſe in it, and after the reſtoration become tenant to the archbiſhop of York[t]. Of late years it has been the property of a branch of the antient family of Sutton in this county, and John Sutton, eſq; not many pears ago, having built a fine ſeat here, his brother and heir ſir Richard Sutton, bart. obtained an act of Parliament for having this eſtate in fee by exchange with the ſee of York for other lands.

Offington belonged to Edmund Cartwright, eſq; who married Anne ſiſter of archbiſhop Cranmer[u], and it continued in his deſcendants till of late years, when the family expiring in four daughters coheirs, they joined and ſold it to one William Deniſon, a merchant at Leeds in Yorkſhire, who was ſome time high-ſheriff of this county, and acquired a very large fortune by being concerned in the cloathing manufactory of that town. The church at Offington, in which are the Cartwright monuments engraved in Thoroton, has been lately pulled down to be rebuilt, and a magnificent mauſoleum has been erected for the interment of the ſaid Deniſon.

Kelham was the ſeat of the late lord George Sutton, a younger ſon of John Manners, duke of Rutland[x], who inherited it, Averham, and other conſiderable eſtates in this county, from his mother the heir of Robert Sutton lord Lexington. It is a fine modern ſeat on the banks of the Trent, but lies low.

"In Langer village hard by the church is a ſtone houſe of the lord Scropes, embateld like a caſtle[y]." Robert Tybetot held the village of Langar of the king in capite of the honour of Peverel for one knight's fee. 21 Henry I. the manor was held by Robert de Rhodes of the ſame honour. Gerard de Rhodes held Langare and Clifton of ſaid honour by ſervice of one knight of the new feofment.

The Tiptofts had no property in Langer ſince 46 Edward III. when Robert the laſt of them dying without male heirs, the cuſtody of all his lands and of his three daughters was committed to Richard le Scrope, whoſe ſon Roger marrying Margaret the eldeſt[z] brought this ſeat into his family, in which it continued to Emanuel created earl of Sunderland 3 Charles I. He having no iſſue by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of John earl of Rutland, this and the reſt of his eſtates were ſettled on three natural daughters, of whom the third and youngeſt Annabella marrying John ſecond ſon of ſir John Howe of Compton c. Glouceſter, brought this manſion into that family[a].

[l] Godwin, 698. [m] Mag. Brit. 93. G.
[n] Tan. 411. [o] Thorot. p. 316. 317. [p] Thor. 317.
[q] G. See before, vol. I. p. 273. [q] Brit. Rom. 439. [r] Lel. V. 93. [s] Thoroton, 316.
[t] Ib. 317. [u] Thorot. p. 355. where the houſe is engraved. [x] Thorot. 329.
[y] Lel. V. 93. [z] Dugd. Bar. II. 40. I. 655 6. [a] Thoroton, where is a view of the houſe.

Their eldeſt ſon was created 1701 viſcount Howe of Ireland, and their ſecond ſon's ſon lord Howe of Chedworth c. Glouceſter 1741: Richard 4th lord viſcount Howe, rear admiral of the blue, is the preſent owner of Langar, and 1782 was created viſcount Howe of Langar.

"Half a mile ere I came to Langar I came by ſir "John Chaworthes manor place called Warton "hall[b]." This place called alſo Wivreton in Titheby pariſh came to the Chaworths by marriage in the reign of Richard II.[c]

Trent runs next by Aram or Averham, the ſeat of the Suttons, of whom Robert was created lord Lexington 21 Charles I. and ſucceeded 1668 by his ſon[d] Robert, with whom the title expired. He left a daughter Bridget his heir, who married John late duke of Rutland, whoſe ſecond and third ſons both poſſeſſed this eſtate, and aſſumed the ſurname of Sutton; lord George the latter dying ſeiſed thereof this preſent year 1783. Sir William Sutton, who died 1611, has a monument here.

"Newark upon Trent a good market town[e]." The market place is large and regularly built, with two good inns. The trade of Newark is greatly increaſed, as are the inhabitants and buildings; and in conſequence thereof the river has lately been made navigable up to the town by act of parliament, and conſidering that there is no particular manufacture carried on here, this place is as much increaſed and improved in all reſpects of late years as any town in the kingdom. Its ſituation on the north road and five horſe fairs, where great numbers of brood mares are brought up and diſperſed over the north countries, are its principal ſupport. Here were formerly two churches, but one of them was deſtroyed during the ſiege in the civil war; the other built t. Henry VI. is juſtly reckoned one of the fineſt pariſh churches in England. The ſtone ſpire at the weſt end is lofty, adorned with the twelve apoſtles in niches, and ſtands on a ſquare tower ornamented with arch work and imagery. In the windows of the north aile have been painted the hiſtory of the New Teſtament, of which are ſtill ſeveral good compartments, and the great eaſt window had the hiſtory of Joſeph. The pillars are light and beautiful; the choir incloſed by a rich wooden ſcreen, and behind it a ſpacious eaſt aile. The very beautiful font of grey marble, repaired ſince the civil wars, has on its foot the inſcription in Pl. IX. fig. 3, and on the ſhaft the twelve Apoſtles. Here was a houſe of Auſtin and another of Obſervant friars[f]; alſo an hoſpital of St. Leonard, founded by biſhop Alexander, and another of the Knights Templars annexed to it, and burnt in the civil war[g]. An almſhouſe for five poor widows, founded by William Philipott 1557, now augmented to maintain 15. Edward VI. incorporated this town under one alderman and 12 aſſiſtants[h]. During the troubles at the end of John's reign this caſtle was in the hands of the royal party, and ſtoutly defended for the king. The barons frequently ſallying out to ravage the lands of the inſurgents, the Dauphin ſent Gilbert de Gaunt, whom he had created earl of Lincoln, but he, hearing of the king's approach, retired to London. John, having loſt great part of his army, with his baggage and military cheſt, in croſſing the Waſhes, came hither only to die of a broken heart. After the treaty ſigned 1218 between Henry III. and Lewis of France the caſtle was ſeized by ſome of the diſcontented barons, but after it had ſtood a ſiege of eight days by the king's troops under the earl marſhal, it was given up to Robert biſhop of Lincoln, to whom it of right belonged[i]. King Charles I's garriſon in the caſtle were twice beſieged 1643 and 1646, but ſurrendered by the king's order by lord Belaſiſe the governor. The king retreated here after his defeat in going to join Montroſe in Scotland, and again when he attempted that expedient the ſecond time. When he put himſelf into the hands of the Scots this caſtle was by his order ſurrendered to them. The parliament afterwards cauſed it to be demoliſhed, ſo that there remains now only the weſt wall and part of the ſouth angle being built very ſtrong. A thin gold ring belonging to Mr. Heron of Newark, found in a garden there, and ſhewn to the Society of Antiquaries 1741, had this inſcription: AGLA. THALCVT. CALCVT. CATTAMA. IC.[k] Biſhop Alexander had a charter for coining money at Newark. A piece of his coin would be a great curioſity. Urns have been found near the Foſs at Newark.

Kingſton belonged to Anthony Babington, attainted of treaſon in the reign of Elizabeth, afterwards to Gilbert earl of Shrewſbury[l]. Kingſton.

Smite brook riſes at the ſouth-weſt corner of Broughton houſe, where at Boroughfield, weſt of the road, are found Roman foundations and piles. At Caſtle hill cloſe was a large building. Roman coins and earthen pipes, urns, and bricks, have been found there. Smite brook.

At Collingham, or Brugh near it, Horſley[m] places the CROCOLANA of Antoninus. The ramparts are ploughed over, but the Roman coins, called Brugh pennies, have been found here, and foundations often ſtruck upon. Many pots, urns, bricks, iron ore, and cinders, have been found here[n]. Collingham. Brugh.

Tuxford on the other ſide the Trent, branded to a proverb for its mirey ſituation, has a handſome church, and a freeſchool built by Charles Read of Billingham, Lincolnſhire, eſq; endowed with 50*l*. per ann. for a maſter and uſher, 20*l*. per annum for teaching and boarding four clergymen's or decayed gentlemen's ſons, and 20*l*. for teaching the town boys. He did the ſame at Corby in Lincolnſhire, and at Drax in Yorkſhire, adding at the laſt an hoſpital[o]. Tuxford.

In the corner of Newark wapentake is Brodholme nunnery, founded t. Stephen by Agnes de Camvile wife of Peter Gouſla founder of the Premonſtratenſian abbey at Newhouſe, valued at £. 16.[p] Brodholme.

Littleborough, ten or eleven computed miles from Lincoln, anſwers to SEGELOCUM or AGELOCUM 14 miles from LINDUM. Here Dr. Gale[q] ſaw an urn, which beſides aſhes and bones contained a coin of Domitian. Here have been found two Roman altars[r]. Mr. Hewet communicated to the Society of Antiquaries by Mr. Wray a drawing of one 1759, and coins of Adrian, Carauſius, &c. found on his eſtate here: and 1766 two fair braſs coins of Adrian and Gallienus. A Roman medical ſeal, teſſera, or kind of tally, found near this place, is engraved in Pl. IX. Littleborough AGELOCVM.

[b] Lel. V. 93.
[c] Thoroton, p. 98—100. where is a view of the gatehouſe.
[d] Dugd. II. 475. Thorot. 325.
[e] Lel. V. 97. Thoroton 196—204.
[f] Tan. 412.
[g] Ib. 408.
[h] Holland.
[i] Mat. Par. I. 300.
[k] Ant. Soc. min.
[l] Thorot. 9.
[m] P. 432.
[n] Stuk. I. 98, 99.
[o] Thorot. 381. 384.
[p] Tan. 406. Thoroton, 195.
[q] Anton. p. 96.
[r] Horſley, 434.

fig.

fig. 5. ſuch being, as we are told, a little flat ſquare piece of ſtone, and having a particular inſcription; and uſed in the Roman armies, by being, on certain occaſions, delivered to each of their ſoldiers to diſtinguiſh them from the enemy, and alſo in their ſetting their nightly guard, by being given from one centurion to another, quite through the army, till it returned to the tribune, who firſt delivered it. Upon receipt of this the guard was immediately ſet. A ſtylus, an agate, and many cornelian ſeals are mentioned by biſhop Gibſon.

It is ſcarce worth obſerving that Talbot fixes Agelocum at Aulerton in Shirwood, and Fulk at Agle only ſix miles from Lincoln: Thoroton[s] at Eaton or Idleton on the bank of the Idle. Burton and Weſſeling ſuppoſe AGELOCUM and SEGELOCUM confounded by the common cuſtom of the Romans in prefixing or omitting an S. It might be an obvious error of the tranſcribers.

Erwaſh r. Aſhfield. Erwaſh river riſes at Kirkby in Aſhfield in this county[t].

Mansfield. "Maunſefeld a pretty market town of one pariſh[u]." Henry de Haſtings held it 26 Edward I.[x] "Soone "after I entred within a mile or leſs into the very Shirwood foreſt. "thick of the woody foreſt of Shirwood, where is "great game of deer, and ſo I rode a v miles in the "very woddy ground of the foreſt, and ſo to a litle "pore ſtreet a thoroughfare at the end of this "wood[y]."

The hereditary foreſters or keepers of this foreſt of Shirewood were men in their times of high eſtimation, viz. Sir Gerard de Normanvile, at the Conqueſt, the Cauzés and Birkins, by whoſe heir it came to the Everinghams. Of which family ſir Adam Everingham was ſummoned to parliament in the reigns of Edward II. and III. at which time they were ſeated at Laxton, antiently called Lexinton, where alſo flouriſhed a great family ſo ſurnamed, whoſe heirs were married into the houſes of Sutton of Averham and Markham[z].

Clipſton. A little north-eaſt of Mansfield is Clipſton or King's Clipſton, where our kings had a palace ſo early as Henry II.[a] John frequently reſided here both before and after his acceſſion, and hence his charter granted to Nottingham in his firſt year is dated. A parliament was held here by Edward I. 1290, and an old oak at the edge of the park bears the name of the Parliament oak. Edward II. and III. were here. Henry VI. granted and ſettled the manor with Mansfield and Lyndeby on Edmund earl of Richmond and Jaſper earl of Pembroke. Henry VIII. granted it to Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk, and Edward VI. to John earl of Warwick and Henry Sidney. On their forfeiture it remained in the crown till James I. when it was paſſed to the feoffees of Gilbert earl of Shrewſbury. It came afterwards to the duke of Newcaſtle and now belongs to the duke of Portland. Its ſmall ruins are engraved by Mr. Groſe. The park is near eight miles in circumference, and was once famous for its fine oaks, many of which were deſtroyed during the troubles of Charles I.

Cukeney. From a bridge over Welbec water to Cukeney village about a mile[b].

Herdby. Herdby, where queen Eleanor died 29 November 19 Edward I. was not as vulgarly ſuppoſed near Bolingbrook in Lincolnſhire, but in the pariſh of N. Cliſton on the Trent in this county five miles from Lincoln, where was a villa and chapel of eaſe to that pariſh, which is one of the prebends of Lincoln. The king founded a chantry in Herdby chapel, afterwards removed into Lincoln cathedral, where her bowels were buried under a ſumptuous cenotaph under the eaſt window. The king gave the dean and chapter 200 marks more to ſupport this chantry, wherewith they purchaſed the manor of Navenby a market town near Lincoln. Croſſes were erected to her memory at Herdby, Lincoln, Newark, Leiceſter, Geddington, Northampton, Stony Stratford, Dunſtaple, St. Albans, Waltham, Cheapſide, Charing croſs, and by Weſtminſter abbey. Peck and Sympſon add three more at Grantham, Stamford, and Woburn. See before in Lincolnſhire, p. 271.

Mauveſinus de Herſey held the town (villa) of Oſberton of the earl of Eu, on condition of being his ſteward (diſpenſator) and the heir of Alferton held the land by the like ſervice[c].

William Ruffus and Henry de Mauveſin held the town of Grave by one knight's fee. Ralph de Crumbwell held the town of Lameley of the honour of Tickhill. William ſon and heir of Roger de Creſſy held Hoddeſtoc (Hodſock) for one knight's fee. Reginald de Colwick held Colwik in chief of the honour of Peverel by the ſervice of twelve arrows a year. Stephen Maluvel held Ramton for one knight's fee. William Sampſon held Epiſton and Wadebery, of the barony of Odinſels for one knight's fee. Stephen de Beauchamp held Cotes of the king in chief by ſervice of one bracket cum ligamine[d].

Stanford or Steinford in Ruſhcliffe hundred, antiently called Ruccliffe from the coppices growing on the hills called riſes, was t. Edward IV. the eſtate of ſir Richard Illingworth chief baron of the Exchequer, from whom it deſcended to Thomas Kniveton, who being attainted of coining in the reign of Mary, ſhe gave it to one Raynes her goldſmith[e].

Sutton Bonington in the ſame hundred is truly two towns. The moſt ſoutherly is Sutton juxta Bonington, the other Bonington. Sutton belonged firſt to the Bellers, then deſcended to the Swillingtons, after to the Fieldings[f], who ſold it to the Grays[g].

Gotham in the reign of Elizabeth belonged to William St. Andrew, who came out of Scotland with the earl of Leinſter, who married him to his ward daughter of William de Dire about the reign of John[h].

Selleſton belonged to lord Cantalupe, who gave it to Bredſole priory co. Derby. In Elizabeth's reign it belonged to ſir Charles Moulton, knt.[i]

A little to the eaſt of Idleton is Laxton or Lexington[k], which gave title of baron to Robert Sutton before mentioned.

On the Idle is E. Redford a borough and market town, with a freeſchool, joined by a bridge to W. Redford, where John Dorrel, M. D. founded an hoſpital[l] 1666. Edward I. granted to the burgeſſes of Retford that they might hold this town of the king and his heirs in fee farm rendering x*d.* yearly per manus ſuas proprias at the Exchequer,

[a] P. 398. 415.
[b] Lel. I. 106.
[c] Inq. 26 Ed. I. in Cotton MS. Jul. C. VII.
[d] Ib.
[e] MS. Cott. Tit. A. XXIV.
[f] Ib.
[g] Thoroton, p. 8.
[h] Ib. Thorot. 17—22.
[i] Ib. 250.
[k] Thorot. 375.
[l] Mag. Brit. 139.
[s] Thoroton, p. 8.
[t] Lel. I. 106.
[u] MS. Cott. Tit. A. XXIV. Thorot. 272.
[x] Inq. in Cott. Lib. Jul. C. VII.
[y] Lel. I. 110.
[z] Holland.
[a] See Madox' Hiſt. of the Exchequer.

of

of St. Michael, saving to the king and his heirs their tallage, when he or they ſhould cauſe their demeſnes in England to be tallaged, and that they might chooſe their bailiffs out of the community of their town yearly or when they ſhould think meet [m].

At Tylney in Hayton pariſh near the market town of E. Retford, was found a Druid amulet of an aqueous tranſparent colour, with yellow ſtreaks, and many Roman ſeals on cornelians [6].

Lord chief juſtice Markham, who died 1409, has this epitaph in Markham church [n].

"Orate pro anima Johannis Markham juſticiarii "qui obiit in feſto Sancti Silveſtri anno Domini 1409."

He was appointed by Edward IV. in the room of judge Forteſcue.

"Werkenſop a prety market town of two ſtreets, "and metely well builded. There is a fair park hard "by it, and the beginnings of a fair manor place of "ſquarid ſtone in the ſame. The old caſtle on a hill "by the town is clene down and ſcant known where "it was. This town, caſtle, and large park, longid "firſt to the Lovetotes, then as ſome ſay to one of "the Neviles. Then were the Furnivaulx of cer- "tainty owners thereof, and after the Talbotes. "The priory of the black canons there was a thing "of great building and a place of ſepulture to the "aforeſaid noblemen [o]. A great wood, called "Room wood, longid to this abbey." "Wyrkeſop "is called in ſome old writings Radeford. Wilhel- "mus Lovetoft was the firſt founder of it in the time "of Anſelm biſhop of Canterbury and Gerard biſhop "of York in Henry's days. His blood and inheri- "tance came to a daughter that married one Furni- "vall. After Furnivalle's inheritance came to a "daughter, the which was married to one Nevile, "and he had a daughter by her, the which was mar- "ried to Talbot the firſt earl of Salop, and among "other children he had Talbot of her called Dñs de "Lile. This Nevile hath a goodly tomb in the "middis of the quire. Many of the Lovetofts, Fur- "nivalles, and Talbottes buried at Wirkſop. It is a "market town, and there is a place now invironed with "trees called the caſtle hill, where the Lovetofts had "ſometime a caſtle. The ſtones of it were fetched "as ſome ſay to make the fair lodge in Wyrkſoppe "park not yet finiſhed. The earl of Shrewſbyris' fa- "ther was about to have finiſhed it as appearith by "much hewyd ſtone lying there. But I am of opinion "that the canons had the ruins of the caſtle to make "the cloſure of their large walls. There is at the "ſouth ſide of the priory court a very fair great gate "of hewn ſtone [q]." William Lovetoft founded this priory t. Henry I. It was valued at £.239. [p] The houſe came from the Talbots to the Norfolk family by marriage of Alathea daughter of Gilbert ſon of George, (both earls of Shrewsbury) with Thomas Howard earl of Arundel [r]. It was engraved in two views by Buck. It was all burnt with all the furniture and pictures except one wing 1761, and begun to be rebuilt on a magnificent plan with an extenſive front, upwards of 300 feet in length, by Edward late duke of Norfolk, who here kept up the ſpirit of antient hoſpitality. The grand drawing room is 53 feet by 31, hung with Gobelin tapeſtry. Many family pictures have been brought hither from other ſeats The park is about eight miles round, with a noble boundary of wood [s]. In the church now ſtanding, which is the weſt end of the priory church, are monuments for William Lovetoft, his ſon Richard, and grandſon William; the laſt Thomas Furnivall and his ſon William, on oppoſite ſides behind the choir [t]. The abbey gate remains, the room over it uſed for a ſchool. The navigation from Cheſterfield to the Trent goes by the bottom of the town, and has reduced the price of coals from 7*d.* or 8*d.* to 4*d.*½ per hundred. On the weſt ſide of the town is a circular hill incloſed with a trench except on one ſide where there is a ſteep bank going down to a branch of the little river. This was the ſite of the caſtle [u].

Welbeck. About a mile and an half from Wirkſop is Welbeck abbey, founded for Premonſtratenſians from Newhouſe c. Lincoln, tranſlated from Cukency t. Henry II. Biſhop Hotham of Ely bought the latter manor, &c. and ſettled them in this houſe, whoſe canons were thereby augmented, and this was made the chief houſe of the order in England 1512, and valued at £.249. per ann. [x] It was a noble building, ſeated in the loweſt part of a fine park ſurrounded with good timber, and made the ſeat of William and Henry dukes of Newcaſtle, afterwards of John Hollis marquis of Clare and duke of Newcaſtle, who married Henry's daughter and coheireſs Margaret [7]. His only daughter and heir Henrietta married Edward Harley, ſecond earl of Oxford, and had an only daughter Margaret, now dutcheſs dowager of Portland, whoſe ſon William Bentinck duke of Portland is the preſent owner. Only the cellar arches of the abbey remain. The principal rooms of the old houſe have been fitted up by the preſent duke. William duke of Newcaſtle was ſo great a maſter of horſemanſhip, that when turned of 80 he continued to divert himſelf with it, inſomuch, ſays Dr. Thoroton, that he is thought to have taken as great pleaſure in beholding his great ſtore of choice well managed horſes wherewith his fine ſtables are continually furniſhed appear to exerciſe their gifts in his magnificent riding houſe, which he long ſince built there of brick, as in elder time any one could take to ſee the religious performances of the monks in the choir of the great church of St. James, now utterly vaniſhed, except the chapel for the houſe was any part of it, which of late years alſo hath lain buried in the ruins of its roof [y]." This riding houſe was ſince converted into a ſtable, but is now reſtored to its original uſe. The hall is adorned with paintings of horſes in various attitudes of the manege. The park is about eight miles round, containing many old oaks. The venerable one called the Greendale oak, with a road cut through it, ſtill bears one green branch. Such branches as have been cut or broken off are guarded from wet by lead. The diameter of this tree at the ſurface of the ground is eleven feet and a half, at the top whence the firſt branches iſſue 14 feet 2 inches; circumference there 35 feet; height of trunk 53; height of arch 10, width 6 [z]; Mr. Evelyn mentions ſeveral more oaks of extraordi-

[m] Mich. Commun. 5 and 6 Ed. I. Rot. 2. b. Madox Hiſt. of Exch. 502.
[6] G.
[n] G. Thorot. p. 386.
[o] Lel. I. 106.
[p] Lel. V. 92.
[q] Tan. 401.
[r] Dugd. Bar. I. 334.
[s] Bray's Tour, 2d edit. 331—335.
[t] Thorot. 453—460. Mr. Bray deſcribes a defaced tomb and three large ſtatues lying on the ground.
[u] Bray, 337.
[x] Tan. 405.
[7] G.
[y] P. 453.
[z] Evelyn's Sylva, Ed. Hunter, 502.

nary ſize in Workſop park. In another part of the park, near the gate which goes in from Workſop, is a remarkable tree called the Seven Siſters, conſiſting of ſeven ſtems ſpringing up from one root, but one is now broken off. The preſent duke made an extenſive lake, and carried over it a magnificent bridge of three arches, the centre being 90 feet wide, the ſide ones each 75; but it fell down almoſt as ſoon as completed, and has not been rebuilt [a].

Clumber. Clumber park, the ſeat of the duke of Newcaſtle, was begun little more than 20 years ago. A park near 13 miles round, filled with many large and thriving plantations, with a good houſe elegantly fitted up and furniſhed, ſucceeds what was before a rabbet warren [b].

Rume r. Rumford. "Rume river riſith by ſouth of Maunſefeld, a v "miles from Rumford abbay, and when the ſtreame "cummith nere the abbay it maketh there in a bot- "tom a fair lake of the ſame name, and ſo coming again "into a narrow courſe goith to Rumford village, and "as I learned thereafter receiveth both Budby water "and Gesberton water, and after with a meetly long "courſe goith to Bowtre, of ſome called Vautre, a "market town in Nottinghamſhire [c], a v mile from "Doncaſter, and ſo as I heard ſay into Trent [d]."

Rufford. "On the farther ſide of Rume water is a village "called commonly Ruford for Rumeford, a quarter "of a mile beyond which ſtood a late Rumeford ab- "bey of white monks. The earl of Shrewſbyri hath "it now of the king for exchange of land of his in "Ireland [e]." Rufford abbey founded for Ciſtertians by Gilbert earl of Lincoln 1148, valued at £.176. per ann. [f] is about ſix miles from Welbeck. It paſſed by marriage of Mary daughter of George earl of Shrewsbury to ſir George Savile of Thornhill c. York, bart. whoſe great grandſon George was created viſcount Halifax 19 Charles II. and afterwards marquis of Hallifax, and much enlarged and adorned this place, where James I. and Charles I. were frequently entertained, it being very pleaſant and commodious for hunting in Shirwood foreſt [g]. A Maun r. large pool through which runs the little river Maun at ſome diſtance ſouth from the houſe was filled up in Dr. Thoroton's time [g]. It belongs now to ſir George Savile, bart.

Thoreſby. Thoreſby is another ſeat of the duke of Kingſton, rather a comfortable houſe than a magnificent ſeat, in a park 13 miles round [h].

Blythe. "Blith is but metely buildid. At the eaſt end of "the town is the church wherein be no tombs of "noblemen. I aſked of a caſtle that I heard ſay "was ſometime at Blithe, but other anſwer I learned "not, but that a little ere I came into the town there "appeared in a wood ſide tokens of an antient build- "ing [i]." Roger de Builly founded here a Benedictine priory 1088, valued at £.113. [k] Here was alſo an hoſpital for lepers, valued at £.8. 14s. [l] Roman coins were found here 1692 [m].

"About a mile beyond Blithe I paſſed by a park Hod- "called Hodſak, where maſter Clifton hath a fair "houſe [n]."

The Soke of Oſwardkirke was formerly antient demeſne of the crown of England, but Henry III. granted it to Henry de Haſtings to be holden at the common law in exchange for certain lands and tenements in Cheſhire which were ſo holden, after which exchange the men and tenements of the ſaid ſóke uſed to be taxed with the community of the county, and not with the tenements of the king's antient demeſnes [o]. All lands in Oſwaldbek ſoke to be inheritable according to the common law, and not partable between heirs male as they have been [p].

"In the mene townlet of Scroby I marked two Scroby "things, the paroche church, not big but built very "well ex lapide polito quadrato, and a great manor "place ſtanding within a moat and longing to the "archbiſhop of York, built in two courts, whereof "the firſt is very ample and all built of timber ſave "the front of the houſe that is of brick, to the "which aſcenditur per gradus lapideos. The inner "court building, as far as I marked, was of timber "building, and was not in compaſs paſt the 4th part "of the outer court [q]." The houſe was reckoned, ſays Dr. Thoroton, a far greater houſe of reſort, and a better ſeat for proviſion than Southwell, and had attending to it the north ſoke, conſiſting of very many towns thereabouts. It hath a fair park belonging to it. Archbiſhop Sandys cauſed it to be demiſed to his ſon ſir Samuel, ſince which the houſe hath been demoliſhed almoſt to the ground. The church a fair one, if not ruinous, is appropriated to the archbiſhop of York [r].

Scroby water in ſome part divides the counties of Nottingham and York [s].

At Matterſey or Merſy was a Gilbertine priory, M. founded by Roger de Mareſay before 1192, valued at £.55. [t].

At Wallingwells or Parco de Carleton, Ralph de Wa Cheurolcourt, t. Stephen founded a Benedictine nunnery, valued at £.58. [u]

William de Bohun was created earl of Notting- Ear ham in parliament 11 Edward III. [x] No

Charles Howard earl of Nottingham, grandſon of Thomas 2d duke of Norfolk, was ſucceeded 1624 by his 2d ſon Charles [y], and he 1642 by his half brother Charles, who dying without iſſue the title became extinct. 33 Ch. II. 1681 ſir Heneage Finch, lord Finch of Daventry and keeper of the great ſeal, and afterwards chancellor, was created earl of Nottingham, and dying next year, was ſucceeded by his ſon Daniel, who having in 1729 ſucceeded to the title of earl of Winchelſea on the death of his 2d couſin John the laſt earl, was ſucceeded in both titles the ſame year by his ſon and nameſake, and he 1769 by his nephew George the preſent earl.

[a] Bray, 341. [b] Ib. 346. [c] Yorkſhire. [d] Lel. V. 92. [e] Ib. [f] Tan. 404. [g] Thorot. p. 435. [h] Bray, 448. [i] Lel. I. 105, 106. [k] Tan. 400. Thoroton, 472. [l] Tan. 409. [m] MS. n. G. [n] Lel. I. 106. Thorot. 467—469. [o] Paſch. Brevia 9 Ed. II. rot. 84. a. Madox, Hiſt. of Exch. 499. Thoroton, 431. [p] Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. [q] Lel. I. 37. [r] Thorot. 479. [s] Lel. I. 37. [t] Tan. 409. [u] Ib. 406. [x] Cart. 11 Ed. III. n. 49. [y] Dugd. Bar. II. 278.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Nottinghamſhire.

Acer campeſtre. Common Maple; in Nottingham coppices, and elſewhere.

— Pſeudoplatanus. Greater Maple or Sycamore-tree; in Nottingham park.

Achillea Ptarmica. Sneeze-wort or Gooſetongue; in meadows and wet woods: at Mansfield, and elſewhere.

Adoxa Moſchatellina. Tuberous Moſchatel; in woods and ſhady places: in the boggy part of Basford Scottum.

Ægopodium Podagraria. Herb Gerard, Goutweed, or Aſhweed; in the way from Nottingham caſtle to the Leen.

Agaricus bulboſus. Bulbous Agaric; on Marſhall hills.

——— campanulatus β. Bell Agaric; in Colwick wood.

——— campeſtris. Common Muſhroom; in fields and paſtures: about Cotgrave, plentifully.

——— campeſtris β Georgii. A variety of the common Muſhroom; in meadows.

——— Chanterellus. Yellow Agaric or Champignon; on Marſhall hills.

——— equeſtris. Starry Agaric; in Nottingham coppices, and elſewhere.

——— fimetarius. Egg Agaric; on a bank going to Nottingham lings.

——— fuliginoſus. Sooty Agaric; in Nottingham coppices.

——— fragilis. Brittle Agaric; in Colwick wood.

——— lividus. Livid Agaric; in Calton Cowdale.

——— mutabilis. Variable Agaric;
——— ſeparatus. Blackiſh Agaric;
——— umbelliferus. Umbrella Agaric;
} in Colwick wood.

——— violaceus. Violet Agaric; on Marſhall hills.

Alchemilla vulgaris. Common Ladies Mantle; in a cloſe near Shepherd race, in Calton liberty, in great plenty, and in the clay fields in Nottingham coppices near the Primroſe holes.

Aliſma ranunculoides. Leſſer Water-Plantain; by the ſide of the Trent a little on that ſide Clifton hill coming from Nottingham.

Allium urſinum. Ramſons; in Colwick wood.

——— vineale. Crow Garlic; plentifully in Larkdale, and elſewhere.

Anemone nemoroſa. Wood Anemony; in Colwick wood, and elſewhere.

Anethum fœniculum. Fennel or Finckle; on the rock of Nottingham caſtle.

Anthyllis vulneraria. Ladies Finger or Kidney Vetch; in ſeveral fields about Mapperly, and elſewhere.

Antirrhinum Linaria. Common Toadflax; in barren meadows and paſtures.

——— orontium. Leaſt Snap-Dragon; on ſome walls at Teverſall and Woollaton.

——— ſpurium. Round-leaved Toad-flax or Fluellin; in the corn fields on Clifton hills.

Apium graveolens. Common Smallage; in marſhes and ditches: at Lenton.

Aquilegia vulgaris. Common Columbines; in Aſply cloſe, and alſo in that part of the wood which joins to the cloſe.

Arum maculatum. (var. foliis venis aureis.) A variety of common Wake-Robin or Cuckow-point with golden veins in the leaves; in a cloſe called Felldike, between Bingham and Carcalſton, plentifully.

Aſperula odorata. Woodroof; in ſhady places on Colwick hills, in Nottingham coppices, and elſewhere.

Aſplenium Adiantum nigrum. Black Maiden Hair; in the rock holes at Nottingham park, and elſewhere.

——— Ruta muraria. White Maidenhair; on the walls of Nottingham caſtle, and elſewhere.

——— Scolopendrium. Harts Tongue; on Gedlington church, and elſewhere.

——— Trichomanes. Common Maidenhair; on the walls of Basford church, and on the garden walls of Anneſly.

Aſtragalus glycyphyllos. Wild Liquorice or Liquorice Vetch; on the ſand hills going from Cowlane towards Nottingham gallows, on the right hand in a lane leading from Larkdate to Radford lings, and in Colwick wood.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade or Dwale; on Clifton hill facing Trent, and in a quarry at Mansfield.

Avena nuda. Naked Oatgraſs or Pilcorn; in corn fields: about Arnold, Basford, and Bockſtow.

——— fatua. Bearded Oatgraſs; in corn fields.

Berberis vulgaris. Berberry or Pepperidge-buſh; in an hedge at Clifton hall, and elſewhere.

Betonica officinalis. Wood Betony; in Colwick wood, and elſewhere.

Betula alba. Birch-tree; in Eaſtwood, and elſewhere.

——— Alnus. Alder-tree; at Anneſley, and elſewhere.

Boletus fomentarius β. Spongy Boletus; on oaks and other trees in Colwick wood.

——— hepaticus. Liver Boletus; in Calton Cowdale, at the foot of oak trees.

——— igniarius. Touchwood Boletus; on willows.

——— verſicolor. Striped Boletus; on trees and old wood, &c.

——— villoſus. Hairy Boletus; on trees: in Colwick wood.

Borago officinalis. Borage. near Nottingham gallows, and elſewhere.

Briza media. Ladies Hair, Quaking graſs or Cowquakes; in fields.

Bryum aureum. Golden Bryum; in the rock holes at Nottingham.
——— æstivum. Spring Bryum; on rocks and mountainous places; in Larkdale, and elsewhere.
——— argenteum. Silver Bryum;
——— extinctorium. Extinguisher Bryum;
——— cirratum β. A variety of Starry Bryum;
——— horneum. Swan's neck Bryum;
——— murale. Wall Bryum;
——— pomiforme. Apple Bryum;
——— pulvinatum. Grey Bryum;
——— purpureum. Purple Bryum;
——— ——— γ. A variety of purple Bryum;
——— murale. Hairy Bryum;
——— serpyllifolium ζ. undulatum. A variety of Thyme-leaved Bryum; ——— setaceum. Pale Bryum;
——— subulatum. Subulated Bryum;
——— scoparium. Broom Bryum;
——— truncatulum. Brown Bryum;
——— undulatum. Curled Bryum;
(in Larkdale, Nottingham park, and elsewhere.)

Butomus umbellatus. Flowering Rush; in watery ditches about Nottingham, and elsewhere.

Byssus aurea. Golden Byssus; on the walls of Colwick church.
——— Flos aquæ. Paper Byssus; on stagnant waters.
——— incana. Mealy Byssus: on banks of ditches, &c: in Colwick wood, and elsewhere.
——— velutina. Velvet Byssus; on the rock behind the bath at Mansfield.

Campanula glomerata. Lesser Bell-flower or Canterbury Bells; in a close at Mansfield near Asply.
——— rapunculus. Esculent Bell-flower or Rampions; in Radford hollows, and elsewhere.
——— Trachelium. Great Bell-flower or Canterbury bells; in Colwick wood, and in a close near Asply in the way to St. Ann's well from Woodlane.

Carduus lanceolatus β. A variety of Spear Thistle; on the side of Clifton hill, and in Asply cherry holt.
——— eriophorus. Woolly-headed Thistle; upon Cotgrave wolds.
——— lanceolatus γ. A variety of the last; in a close leading to Asply cherry holt.
——— marianus. Milk Thistle; on Nottingham castle rocks, and elsewhere.
——— nutans. Musk Thistle: in Nottingham castle-yard, on the sand hills without Chapple Bar, and elsewhere.

Carlina vulgaris. Carline Thistle; in meadows and pastures: about Colwick, and elsewhere.

Centaurea nigra. Common Knapweed or Matfellon; ——— scabiosa. Greater Knapweed or Matfellon;
(at the entrance of Colwick wood.)

Cerastium arvense. Corn Mouse-eared Chickweed; in corn fields and sandy meadows: near Nottingham park, about Radford fields, and elsewhere.
——— semidecandrium. Least Mouse-eared Chickweed; on walls and sand hills.

Chenopodium vulvaria. Stinking Orach; between Chapel Bars and the sand hills, and elsewhere.

Chara tomentosa. Brittle Chara; in one of the clay-pits near Mapperly brickkilns.
——— vulgaris. Common Chara; in a small watery place at the entrance of Whitemore close near Radford church.

Chlora perfoliata. Yellow Centaury; in Whitemore close not far from Radford church, and about Mansfield.

Chrysosplenium oppositifolium. Opposite-leaved Golden Saxifrage; in a ditch on the left hand of Woodlane coming from Nottingham, and elsewhere.

Cichoreum Intybus. Wild Succory; by the road side at Cotgrave, and elsewhere.

Cicuta virosa. Long-leaved Water Hemlock; in the pools in Nottingham park.

Circæa Lutetiana. Enchanters Nightshade; in Colwick wood, and elsewhere.

Cistus Helianthemum. Dwarf Sun-flower or Cistus; in Nottingham park.

Clavaria coralloides. Coral Clavaria; on Marshall hills.
——— digitata. Fingered Clavaria;
——— Hypoxylon. Horned Clavaria;
——— Hypoxylon γ. A variety of Horned Clavaria;
——— muscoides. Dwarf Clavaria;
(on rotten stumps of trees in Colwick wood.)
——— pistillaris. Club Clavaria: on rotten wood; on Nottingham course.

Clematis Vitalba. Traveller's Joy; in hedges on road sides.

Cochlearia Coronopus. Swine's Cress; once found on the bank of an enclosure joining to Woolaton New Lodge.
——— officinalis. Scurvy grass; on the wall at Woolaton.

Colchicum autumnale. Meadow Saffron; in Nottingham meadows and about Trent bridge.

Comarum palustre. Purple Marsh Cinquefoil; on bogs: in Nottingham park and Basford churchyard.

Conferva rivularis. River Conferva or Crow Silk; in rills and little brooks.

Convolvulus arvensis β. A variety of Small Bindweed; in the corn field between Radford and Linton.

Conyza squarrosa. Plowman's Spikenard; in a close a little beyond the second forge at Pleasly on the Derbyshire side about 14 miles from Nottingham.

Cornus sanguinea. Female Cornel, Dogberry-tree Gatterwood or Prickwood; in Nottingham coppices, and elsewhere.

Corylus Avellana. Hazel or Nut. This was formerly so common in this neighbourhood, that some derive the name of this town from thence quasi Nuttingham.

Crocus officinalis, sylvestris. Crocus; in the clay field above Foxlane.

Cynoglossum officinale. Common Hound's Tongue; plentifully in Woollaton park.

Daphne Laureola. Spurge Laurel; in Colwick wood.

Dianthus Deltoides. Maiden Pink; on the sandy hills in the way from Nottingham to Lenton, plentifully, and elsewhere.

Drosera rotundifolia. Round-leaved Sundew; in a moist place near a brook near Oxton, and by Cordwell brook near Mansfield.

Epilobium alpinum. Alpine Willow Herb; in the hedge of a ditch between Lenton and Beeston.

Equisetum fluviatile. River Horse-tail; in the pool in Nottingham park, and elsewhere.

Equiſetum hyemale. Rough Horſe-tail or Shave Graſs; amongſt the ruſhes on Nettleworth green two miles from Mansfield.

——— ſylvaticum β. A variety of Wood Horſe-tail; in Colwick and Aſply woods.

Erica cinerea. Fine leaved Heath; in the hollows about Nottingham.

— tetralix. Croſs-leaved Heath; in ſeveral parts of Mansfield foreſt.

Erigeron acre. Blue Flea-bane; in the cloſes near Mansfield.

Eriophorum polyſtachion. Cotton Graſs; on bogs and wet heaths: in Whitemoor cloſe, and elſewhere.

Euonymus Europæus. Spindle tree; in Wood-lane going to St. Ann's Well, and elſewhere.

Eupatorium cannabinum. Hemp Agrimony; in ditches and on the ſide of rivers: between Nottingham and Lenton.

Euphorbia amygdaloides. Wood Spurge; in Colwick wood.

Fontinalis pennata. Feathered Watermoſs; on a poſt in the Trent above Colwick, and elſewhere.

——— ſquamoſa. Squamous Watermoſs; in the Trent at Colwick, and on a wheel of the firſt forge at Pleaſley.

Galeobdolon luteum. Nettle Hemp; in Colwick lane and wood, and elſewhere.

Galeopſis tetrahit β. Common Nettle Hemp with a white flower; ——— δ. ditto, with a party-coloured flower; } about Mansfield in a place called Hules's black hills.

Galium ſpurium. Corn Ladies Bedſtraw; in the pits at Woollaton, and in other places in corn and fallow fields.

Geniſta Anglica. Needle Furze or Petty Whin; in the gorſe at Bridgeford.

—— tinctoria. Dyers Broom, Woodwaxen or Bare Broom; in a cloſe called Fox hill cloſe in the road to Gedling.

Gentiana Amorella. Autumnal Gentian or Fell-wort; in dry meadows: at Eaſt Lake.

——— Centaurium. Leſſer Centaury; in Barford field and elſewhere.

Geranium Columbinum. Long ſtalked Dove's-foot Crane's-bill; in corn fields, meadows, and hedges: in Larkdale.

——— lutidum. Shining Crane's-bill; in Larkdale, and elſewhere.

——— moſchatum. Muſk Crane's-bill; in dry meadows and banks.

——— pratenſe. Crow-foot Crane's-bill; in a cloſe near Aſply.

——— rotundifolium. Round-leaved Crane's-bill; on walls and hedges, and elſewhere.

Geum rivale. Water Avens; by the ſide of the wood by Aſply houſe, and elſewhere.

Gnaphalium ſylvaticum. Upright Cudweed; in the cloſes near Mansfield.

Hieracium murorum β. A variety of French or Golden Lungwort; in the rock holes at Nottingham.

Hippocrepis comoſa. Tufted Horſeſhoe Vetch; in Nottingham park.

Hippuris vulgaris. Mare's-tail; in a little brook at Weſt Lake.

Hydrochæris Morſus ranæ. Frog-bit; in ditches: in Nottingham park.

Hypericum Androſæmum. Tutſan or Park leaves; in Colwick wood.

——— humifuſum. Trailing St. John Wort; on Bury hills at Mansfield.

——— quadrangulum. St. Peter's wort; ——— perforatum. St. John's-wort; ——— pulchrum. Upright St. John's-wort; } in Colwick wood.

Hypnum complanatum. Flat Hypnum; ——— filiforme. Filiform Hypnum; ——— ſylvaticum. Wood Hypnum; ——— taxifolium. Yew-leaved Hypnum; } on trees: in Colwick wood.

Jaſione montana. Hairy Sheep's Scabious; on heaths and mountainous meadows: in Radford hollows.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Creſs: in gravelly places: in Nottingham park and Radford lings.

Juncus articulatus. Jointed Ruſh; in watery places.

Jungermannia aſplenoides. Spleenwort Jungermannia; in Nottingham coppices.

——— bicuſpidata. Forked Jungermannia; ——— bidentata. Bifid Jungermannia; } in ſhady wet woods in a hollow beyond Larkdale.

——— digitata. Scaly Jungermannia; ——— complanata. Flat Jungermannia; } on the bark of trees in Colwick wood.

——— pinguis. Slippery Jungermannia; in the coppices at Nottingham, and elſewhere.

Juniperus communis. Juniper; in a wilderneſs by Colwick hall, and on a common going to Southwell beyond Oxton.

Lactuca ſaligna. Leaſt Lettice or Dwarf Gum Succory; in the hollow way at Carleton.

——— viroſa. Strong ſcented wild Lettuce; on Clifton hill, and elſewhere.

Lemna triſulca. Ivy-leaved Duck's-meat; in a pool in Nottingham park.

Leonurus Cardiaca. Mother-wort; on a bank on the left hand of Lenton field going to the abbey yard from Nottingham, and elſewhere.

Lichen ater. Rugged Lichen; on rocky places in Nottingham park.

——— calicaris. Channeled Lichen; on rocks and bark of trees: in Colwick wood.

——— ciliaris. Ciliated Lichen; on trees: in Colwick wood.

——— criſpus. Curled Lichen; on walls, &c: near the firſt forge at Pleſley.

——— caninus. Aſh coloured Ground Liver-wort; in Nottingham park, and elſewhere.

——— farinaceus. Mealy Lichen; on trees: in Colwick and Thorny wood.

——— floridus β. hirtus. Rough Liver-wort: on trees; in Thorny wood, and elſewhere.

——— olivaceus γ. A varity of Olive coloured Liver-wort; on trees and dead wood: in Colwick wood and elſewhere.

Lichen pallescens. Pale Lichen; on rocks, stones, and trees.

——— palmatus. Palmated Lichen; on the rock in Pleshy park.

——— physodes. Inflated Lichen; on trees, rocks, and stones: on Nottingham and Bestwood park pales.

——— pulmonarius. Lungwort; on oak trees in Thorny wood.

——— pyxidatus. Cup Liverwort;
——— ——— γ. A variety of ditto;
——— ——— δ fimbriatus. Indented Cup Liverwort;
} in the hollows about Nottingham gallows.

——— ——— ζ filiformis. Trumpet Liverwort; in the close by the hollows beyond Larkdale.

——— ——— λ cornutus. Plain Liverwort; on heaths, &c.

——— ——— ξ digitatus. Fingered Liverwort; in Nottingham park.

——— ——— ϖ gracilis. Tall Liverwort; in the hollows about Nottingham gallows.

——— subulatus β furcatus. Forked Liverwort; on heaths in Nottingham park.

Lithospermum officinale. Gromwell, Gromill, or Graymill; in Colwick lane, and elsewhere.

Linum catharticum. Purging Flax; in Radford field, and elsewhere.

Ligustrum vulgare. Privet or Prim: in Colwick lane, plentifully.

Lycoperdon pedunculatum. Stalked Puff Ball; in Colwick wood.

Lysimachia nemorum. Yellow Pimpernel of the woods; on the bank of a ditch leading from Nottingham coppices to St. Ann's Wells.

——— tenella. Purple Moneywort; on bogs in Basford Scottum, and elsewhere.

Lythrum hyssopifolia. Grass Poly or small hedge Hyssop; in watery places: at Wilford.

Malva Alcea. Vervain Mallow; in fields and hedges: about Mansfield, and elsewhere.

Marchantia hemisphærica. Hemispheric Marchantia; on wet rocks, and in Larkdale, and near Nottingham gallows.

——— conica. Conic Marchantia; in wet places: in Larkdale.

——— polymorpha β. Common Marchantia; on a sandy rock near Nottingham castle.

Marrubium vulgare. White Horehound; at the foot of Nottingham castle, and elsewhere.

Melampyrum sylvaticum. Yellow Cow Wheat; in a wood near lord Byron's park in the road to Mansfield.

Medicago lupulina β. Black Medick, or Nonesuch; in Nottingham park, and elsewhere.

Melissa Calamintha. Field Calamint; on a bank in Basford town, and in a lane leading from the Rount into Basford.

Mentha aquatica β hirsuta. Round headed Water Mint;
——— ——— γ. A variety of Common Water Mint;
} about Nottingham pool.

——— piperata. Pepper Mint; on the bank of St. Ann's Well at Woodlane.

——— pulegeum exigua. Smooth Mint; by the water side at Radford.

——— rotundifolium. Round-leaved Mint; near the Bath at Mansfield.

——— sylvestris. Long-leaved Horse Mint; by the water side at Radford.

Mercurialis perennis. Dog's Mercury; in Colwick wood.

Mnium palustre. Marsh Mnium; in Basford Scottum.

Myosurus minimus. Mousetail; in corn fields: between Radford and Woolaton park.

Nepeta Cataria. Cat Mint; on dry banks.

Nymphæa alba. White Water Lily; in ponds and flow rivers:
——— lutea. Yellow Water Lily;
} at Lenton, and elsewhere.

Ononis inermis. Hairy Restharrow; about Radford hollows, also about the lower walk of Clifton hall.

Onopordum acanthium. Cotton Thistle; on the banks of closes about Nottingham.

Ophioglossum vulgatum. Adders Tongue; in Gedling meadows; in a close near Newthorpe common, and in several closes about Eastwood.

Ophrys Apifera. Bee Orchis; in chalky meadows and pastures at Asply.

——— ovata. Twayblade; in several closes about Asply and Colwick wood, near the brick kilns.

——— muscifera. Fly Orchis; in chalky meadows and pastures: at Asply.

——— spiralis. Triple Ladies Traces; in a close at Colwick.

Orchis conopsea. Sweet Orchis; in meadows and pastures: at Asply.

——— latifolia. Broad-leaved Orchis; in several places about Scottum.

——— pyramidalis. Purple late-flowering Orchis; in meadows and pastures of a chalky soil: at Asply.

Origanum vulgare. Common Marjoram; on Colwick hills.

Orobanche major. Broom Rape; amongst the gorse at Mansfield.

Orobus tuberosus. Wood Pease, or Heath Pease; in the coppices at Nottingham.

Osmunda lunaria. Moonwort; in a close at East wood.

——— regalis. Osmund Royal; in Leaver's close near Mansfield.

——— spicant. Rough Spleenwort; on Bury hills at Mansfield.

Oxalis Acetosella. Wood Sorrel; in the coppices at Nottingham.

Parietaria officinalis. Pellitory of the Wall; on Nottingham castle, and elsewhere.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris; True Love, or One berry; in Colwick wood, and at Asply.

Parnassia palustris. Grass of Parnassus; in wet meadows; at Basford Scottum; and in the Dam close at Papplewick.

Pedicularis palustris. Marsh Red Rattle or Louse-wort; on bogs and wet meadows: in Radford field, and elsewhere.

Peucedanum officinale. Sulphurwort or Hogs Fennel; in Colwick wood, and elsewhere.

Peziza acetabulum. Cup Peziza; on rotten wood: on Colwick hills; and in Pleshy forges.

——— coccinea. Scarlet Cup Peziza; on rotten wood on Colwick hills.

——— cyathoides. Smooth Peziza; on rotten wood:
——— fulva. Orange Peziza; on dung and on gravel:
} in Colwick wood.

——— scutellata. Ciliated Peziza; on a boggy place called the Black hills at Mansfield.

Pinguicula

Pinguicula vulgaris. Yorkſhire Sanicle or Butterwort; in Basford Scottum, and in Whitemoor cloſe.

Phallus eſculentus. Eſculent Morel; in woods and hedges near Aſply, and at Brookſlow.

Potamogeton criſpum. Curled Pondweed, or Greater Water Caltrops; in a ditch behind Nottingham ſpaw.

——— lucens. Shining Pondweed; in the Trent.

——— perfoliatum. Perfoliate Pondweed; in a ditch at the Trent bridge.

Potentilla argentea. Tormentil Cinquefoil; on the ſandy rock juſt below the pinfold at Nottingham leading to Radford.

Polygonum Biſtorta. Greater Biſtort, or Snakeweed; in a cloſe between Lenton church-yard, and in Leen.

Polypodium aculeatum. Prickly Auriculate male fern; } in woods and ſhady places at St. Ann's well.

——— criſtatum. Creſted Polypody; }

——— Dryopteris. Branched Polypody; on the rocks near Pleſby forge.

——— Filix fœmina. Female Fern; behind St. Ann's well, and elſewhere.

——— Lonchitis. Rough Polypody; in Buryfield near Mansfield.

——— vulgare. Common Polypody; on trees and dry banks; in Nottingham park, and elſewhere.

Poterium ſanguiſorba. Common Burnet; in the cloſe leading to the cherry holts at Aſply.

Prenanthes muralis. Ivy-leaved Wall Lettuce; on Aſply and Basford church walls.

Prunus ceraſus. Bird Cherry; in Nottingham park, on Clifton hill, and in Blidſworth field.

Ranunculus auricomus. Wood, Crow foot, or Golden locks; in Colwick wood, and elſewhere.

——— Lingua. Great Spear wort; in wet meadows and on banks of lakes: in Basford Scottum, and on a moor between Bridgeford and Gamſton.

——— aquatilis δ. Fennel Leaved Water Crowfoot; in ditches: at Mapperley.

Rhamnus catharticus. Buckthorn; at Basford, Bulwell, and elſewhere.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants, or Squinancy berries; in the cloſes by the Leen at Basford.

Roſa Eglanteria. Sweet Briar, or Eglantine; on Colwick hills.

—— ſpinoſiſſima. Burnet Roſe; on the ſand hills.

Rubus idæus. Raſpberry, Framboiſe, or Hindberry; in a hedge between Brockſlow and Nuttal.

—— cæſius. Dewberry; between Clifton hall and Barton, and elſewhere.

Rumex maritimus. Golden dock; by the Leen ſide going from Snenton meadows towards the Trent.

—— ſanguineus. Blood Dock; in woods: at Mansfield.

Sagittaria ſagittifolia. Arrow head; in moiſt ditches about Nottingham.

Salix repens β. A variety of Creeping Willow; } in Basford Scottum.

—— γ. Arenaria. Sand Willow; }

Salvia verbenacea. Clary; in the yard of Nottingham caſtle, plentifully, and elſewhere.

Sambucus Ebulus. Dwarf Elder, or Danewort; in a cloſe overagainſt Gamſton, and in Bunny lane.

Sambucus nigra β. Elder with a green fruit; in Graves lane near Oxton.

Sanguiſorba officinalis. Burnet Saxifrage; in moiſt meadows and paſtures about Nottingham.

Sanicula Europæa. Sanicle; in Colwick wood.

Saponaria officinalis. Soapwort; in meadows and hedges: near Mansfield.

Satyrium hirſinum. Lizard Satyrion; in Colwick wood, and at the bottom of Clifton hill.

Saxifraga granulata. White Saxifrage; in meadows and paſtures.

Schœnus nigricans. Black Bogruſh; in Basford Scottum.

Scirpus ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus Graſs; in a marſhy cloſe at Nottingham, between the Leen and the park.

Scrophularia Scorodonia. Baulm leaved Figwort; in watery places and hedges: at Woolaton.

Senecio erucifolius. Hoary Groundſel; about Mansfield, and elſewhere.

Serratula tinctoria. Common Sawwort; in the hollows without the gate, opening towards Radford lings coming from Larkdale.

Silene nutans. Nottingham Catchfly; on the walls of Nottingham caſtle.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders; upon moiſt rocks about Nottingham, eſpecially of the caſtle.

Solidago Virgaurea. Common Golden Rod; in the hollows without the gate opening towards Radford lings.

Sorbus Aucuparia. Mountain Aſh, or Quicken tree; on the walls of Nottingham.

Sparganium ramoſum. Greater Bur-reed; in a pond between the bowling-green and the gardener's houſe at Holmpierpont.

Spiræa Filipendula. Common Dropwort; on the ſide of the road leading from the Sand hills to Radford church, in a cloſe near Aſply hall, and about Woolaton.

Stellaria graminea γ. A variety of Leſſer Stitchwort; in wet meadows and near ſprings; among the gorſe on Nottingham lings, and elſewhere.

Symphytum officinale, flore purpureo. Common Comfrey, with a purple flower; on the bank of a watery ditch near Trent bridge going to Wilford.

Tanacetum vulgare. Common Tanſey; in a cloſe at Wilford, and elſewhere.

Taxus Europæus. Eugh; in the hedges about Blidworth, and about Mooregreen.

Thalictum flavum. Meadow Rue; on the ſide of a watery ditch beyond Nottingham Spaw going to Wilford, and elſewhere.

Tragopogon luteum. Goat's beard, or Go to bed at Noon; upon the rocks at Nottingham caſtle, in the park, and elſewhere.

Tremella granulata. Granulated Tremella; in banks of ditches and rivers, and in ſandy wet woods: at the bottom of Mapperley hill coming from Nottingham.

——— Juniperina. Yellow Tremella; on Juniper, Furze, and Broom; at Wilford.

Trifolium alpeſtre. Perennial Trefoil, or Marle Graſs; in mountainous meadows and paſtures here and there.

——— Melelotus officinalis. Melelot; in Radford field, and elſewhere.

Trifolium ſtriatum. Knotted Trefoil; on the caſtle rock facing Lenton in Nottingham park, and elſewhere.

——— ſubterraneum. Dwarf Trefoil; in Nottingham park plentifully.

Turritis glabra. Smooth Tower Muſtard; in the fields between Radford and Lenton.

Tuſſilago Farfara. Coltsfoot; in Whitemoor cloſe plentifully, and elſewhere.

——— hybrida. Stalked Butterbur; in the yard of the mill at Lenton, and in the road to Wollaton hall.

——— Petaſites. Butter Bur; in Basford church yard, and elſewhere.

Typha latifolia. Greater Catstail, or Reed Mace; in a watery part of a cloſe at Chiſwell three miles from Nottingham, and in a pond at Mansfield.

Vaccinium Myrtillus. Billberries, or Whorble Berries; in ſeveral parts of Nottingham lings, in lord Byron's park at Newſtead, and in Shirwood foreſt.

Valantia cruciata. Croſswort; in Larkdale, Wood lane, Colwick lane, and elſewhere.

Valeriana dioica β. A variety of the Marſh Valerian; in Basford Scottum.

——— officinalis β. A variety of Wild Valerian; on a bank on the left hand going up Mapperly hill.

Verbaſcum Lychnitis β. Hoary Mullein; upon walls and dry places: about Wollaton hall, and elſewhere.

Ulva compreſſa. Compreſſed Laver; on the ſea ſhore, and in the Trent on the backſide of Clifton hall in plenty.

 Fuller celebrates the Liquorice of this county.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE

YORKSHIRE

CHESHIRE

DERBYSHIRE

Sheffield

Manchester

Stockport

Macclesfield

Buxton

Chesterfield

Mansfield

Worksop

Retford

Doncaster

Rotherham

Barnsley

Huddersfield

Ashton

Stalybridge

Glossop

Hayfield

Chapel en le Frith

Whaley Bridge

New Mills

Marple

Hyde

Dukinfield

Denton

Audenshaw

Droylsden

Ashton under Lyne

Oldham

Saddleworth

Mossley

Delph

Dobcross

Uppermill

Greenfield

Saddleworth

Micklehurst

Lees

Grotton

Springhead

Royton

Shaw

Crompton

Middleton

Heywood

Rochdale

Littleborough

Todmorden

Hebden Bridge

Mytholmroyd

Sowerby Bridge

Halifax

Elland

Brighouse

Rastrick

Hipperholme

Lightcliffe

Northowram

Shelf

Queensbury

Thornton

Clayton West

Skelmanthorpe

Scissett

Denby Dale

Kirkburton

Shepley

Holmfirth

Meltham

Honley

Lepton

Almondbury

Huddersfield

Kirkheaton

Lindley

Golcar

Slaithwaite

Marsden

Linthwaite

Milnsbridge

Crosland Moor

Lockwood

Newsome

Berry Brow

Paddock

Longwood

Golcar

Outlane

Shelley

Flockton

Kirkheaton

Upper Hopton

Mirfield

Dewsbury

Ossett

Wakefield

Horbury

Ryhill

Crofton

Sandal

Walton

Stanley

Alverthorpe

Wrenthorpe

Thornes

Normanton

Castleford

Pontefract

Knottingley

Ferrybridge

Featherstone

Pontefract

Hemsworth

Darton

Barnsley

Wombwell

Darfield

Hoyland

Elsecar

Cudworth

Royston

Grimethorpe

Brierley

Shafton

Gawber

Worsbrough

Dodworth

Silkstone

Silkstone Common

Stainborough

Penistone

Thurlstone

Shepley

Kirkburton

Flockton

Upper Hopton

Mirfield

Dewsbury

Ossett

Wakefield

Horbury

Ryhill

Crofton

Sandal

Walton

Stanley

Alverthorpe

Wrenthorpe

Thornes

Normanton

Castleford

Pontefract

Knottingley

Ferrybridge

Featherstone

Pontefract

Hemsworth

Darton

Barnsley

Wombwell

Darfield

Hoyland

Elsecar

Cudworth

Royston

Grimethorpe

Brierley

Shafton

Gawber

Worsbrough

Dodworth

Silkstone

Silkstone Common

Stainborough

Penistone

Thurlstone

Sheffield

Rotherham

Mexborough

Swinton

Wath upon Dearne

Rawmarsh

Parkgate

Greasbrough

Kimberworth

Wincobank

Brightside

Attercliffe

Darnall

Tinsley

Handsworth

Woodhouse

Beighton

Mosborough

Eckington

Dronfield

Dronfield Woodhouse

Unstone

Barlow

Holmesfield

Totley

Bradway

Ecclesfield

Grenoside

Stannington

Loxley

Bradfield

Low Bradfield

Dungworth

Stocksbridge

Deepcar

Oxspring

Langsett

Midhopestones

Broomhead

Upper Midhope

Hazlehead

Bolsterstone

Ewden Village

Ewden Beck

Agden Reservoir

Dale Dike Reservoir

Damflask Reservoir

Redmires Reservoirs

Rivelin Valley

Rivelin Dam

Wyming Brook

Ringinglow

Fulwood

Sharrow

Nether Edge

Ecclesall

Abbeydale

Millhouses

Totley

Dore

Bradway

Beauchief

Greenhill

Norton

Norton Lees

Heeley

Meersbrook

Woodseats

Chapeltown

Ecclesfield

Grenoside

Stannington

Loxley

Bradfield

Low Bradfield

Dungworth

Stocksbridge

Deepcar

Oxspring

Langsett

Midhopestones

Broomhead

Upper Midhope

Hazlehead

Bolsterstone

Ewden Village

Ewden Beck

Agden Reservoir

Dale Dike Reservoir

Damflask Reservoir

Redmires Reservoirs

Rivelin Valley

Rivelin Dam

Wyming Brook

Ringinglow

Fulwood

Sharrow

Nether Edge

Ecclesall

Abbeydale

Millhouses

Totley

Dore

Bradway

Beauchief

Greenhill

Norton

Norton Lees

Heeley

Meersbrook

Woodseats

Chapeltown

Sheffield

Rotherham

Mexborough

Swinton

Wath upon Dearne

Rawmarsh

Parkgate

Greasbrough

Kimberworth

Wincobank

Brightside

Attercliffe

Darnall

Tinsley

Handsworth

Woodhouse

Beighton

Mosborough

Eckington

Dronfield

Dronfield Woodhouse

Unstone

Barlow

Holmesfield

Totley

Bradway

A MAP OF Derbyshire from the best AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

E. Noble delin.t et curavit

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

0 1 2 3 4 5 6

55 50 45 40 35 30 25 1°20 Longitude 15 West from 10 London 5

WARWICKSHIRE

LEICESTERSHIRE

STAFFORDSHIRE

YORKSHIRE

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE

WIRKSWORTH WAPENTAKE

SCARSDALE HUNDRED

HIGH PEAK HUNDRED

MORESTON HUNDRED

APPLETREE HUNDRED

REPTON & GRESLEY HUNDRED

NEEDWOOD FOREST

Sheen
Ausfield
Okeover
Mathfield
Ellaston
Rocester
Uttoxeter
Marchington
Hanbury
Roleston
Eggington
Burton
Repton
Willington
Findern
Chelaston
Aston
Weston
Castle Donington
Shardlow
Great Swine
Sawley
Long Eaton
Attenburgh
Breaston
Sandiacre
Stapleford
Trowell
Cossall
Ilkeston
Heanor
Eastwood
Church Greasley
Selston
Pentridge
Ripley
Alfreton
Mansfield
Sutton in Ashfield
Kirkby
Pleasley
Shirebrook
Tibshelf
Blackwell
Normanton
Shirland
Matlock
Bonsall
Middleton
Dethick
Wirksworth
Ashbourn
Parwich
Alsop
Tissington
Bentley
Osmaston
Edlaston
Shirley Brailsford
Yeaveley
Marston Montgomery
Cubley
Roylston
Sudbury
Scropton
Doveridge
Sapperton
Barton
Church Broughton
Trusley
Radborn
Etwall
Hilton
Findern
Willington
Newton Solney
Melbourne
Stanton
Ticknall
Calke
Cauldwell
Rosliston
Linton
Lullington
Coton Park
Walton
Stretton
Clifton
Chilcott
Appleby
Swebston
Ashby de la Zouch
Cole Orton
Packington
Normanton
Osmaston
Ednaston
Muggington
Duffield
Derby
Chaddesden
Spondon
Borrowash
Ockbrook
Draycote
Risley
Morley
Smalley
Denby
Heanor
Holbrook
Horsley
Kidsley Park
Shipley
Codnor Park
Langley
Turnditch
Hulland
Kirk Ireton
Wirksworth
Carsington
Brassington
Aldwark
Gotham
Kingston
Weaver Hall
Cold Eaton
Tissington
Parwich
Balidon
Wyaston
Osmaston
Yeaveley
Shirley Brailsford
Ellaston
Sheen
Longford
Marston Montgomery
Cubley
Roylston
Barton
Church Broughton
Sudbury
Doveridge
Scropton
Hanbury
Roleston
Eggington
Willington
Findern
Chelaston
Aston
Weston
Castle Donington
Shardlow
Great Swine
Sawley
Long Eaton
Attenburgh
Breaston
Sandiacre
Stapleford
Trowell
Cossall
Ilkeston
Heanor
Eastwood
Church Greasley
Selston
Pentridge
Ripley
Alfreton
Mansfield
Sutton in Ashfield
Kirkby
Pleasley
Shirebrook
Tibshelf
Blackwell
Normanton
Shirland
Matlock
Bonsall
Middleton
Dethick
Wirksworth
Ashbourn
Parwich
Alsop
Tissington
Bentley
Osmaston
Edlaston
Shirley Brailsford
Yeaveley
Marston Montgomery
Cubley
Roylston
Sudbury
Scropton
Doveridge
Sapperton
Barton
Church Broughton
Trusley
Radborn
Etwall
Hilton
Findern
Willington
Newton Solney
Melbourne
Stanton
Ticknall
Calke
Cauldwell
Rosliston
Linton
Lullington
Coton Park
Walton
Stretton
Clifton
Chilcott
Appleby
Swebston
Ashby de la Zouch
Cole Orton
Packington
Normanton
Osmaston
Ednaston
Muggington
Duffield
Derby
Chaddesden
Spondon
Borrowash
Ockbrook
Draycote
Risley
Morley
Smalley
Denby
Heanor
Holbrook
Horsley
Kidsley Park
Shipley
Codnor Park
Langley
Turnditch
Hulland
Kirk Ireton
Wirksworth
Carsington
Brassington
Aldwark
Gotham
Kingston
Weaver Hall
Cold Eaton
Tissington
Parwich
Balidon
Wyaston

DERBYSHIRE.

THE weſt ſide of Nottinghamſhire is bounded by the county of Darby, Saxon Deopbi ꝛcype, commonly called Darbiſhire, which is itſelf bounded on the ſouth by Leiceſterſhire, on the weſt by Staffordſhire, on the north by Yorkſhire, being of an almoſt triangular figure, but not equilateral. For from the ſouth point where it is ſcarce ſix miles broad it extends itſelf ſo much both ways that towards the north it is near 30 miles broad. It is divided into two parts by the river Derwent, which riſing in the northern edge runs ſouth to the Trent, diſcoloured by the black ſoil it paſſes through. The eaſt and ſouth part are cultivated and not unfruitful, and have ſeveral parks. The weſt part beyond the Derwent, called the Peake, is all rocky, full of barren mountains and wilds, but rich in lead, iron, and coal mines, and very fit for feeding ſheep.

The firſt remarkable place in the ſouth angle is Greiſely caſtle, almoſt deſtroyed, built, with a monaſtery in honour of St. George, by the Greiſleys, its antient lords, who derive their deſcent from William Fitz-Nigell, ſurnamed de Greiſley, and have lived here in great dignity ever ſince the Norman invaſion, having conſiderably augmented their eſtate by marriage with the daughter and heireſs of the antient family of Gaſteney. On the river Dove, which parts this county from Staffordſhire, till it falls into the Trent nothing remarkable occurs beſides country villages and the market town of Aſhburne, where the family of the Cokaines long flouriſhed, and Norbury, where long lived the noble and very antient family of the Fitz-Herberts, of which Anthony Fitz-Herbert was ſo deſervedly reſpected for his ſkill in the common law[a]. The neareſt to this laſt place is Schirley, the antient eſtate of the family of Shirley deſcended from one Fulcher, who, beſides the antiquity of their family, acquired great honour and property by intermarrying with the heireſſes of Breos, Baſſet of Brailesford, Stanton, Lovett, &c. Round about this are many places that have given name and reſidence to famous families: Longford, Bradbourne, Kniveton, whence the Knivetons of Mercaſton and Bradley, from whom deſcends St. Lo Kniveton, to whoſe ſtudious diligence I am much indebted: Keidelſton, where live the Curſons, as alſo at Croxton; Radborne, where ſir John Chandos lord of the place laid the foundations of a large houſe, from whom by a daughter it deſcended by hereditary ſucceſſion to the Poles, who now live there. But theſe particulars I leave to the perſon who has undertaken a particular deſcription of this county[b].

On the Trent where it receives the Dove we ſee Repandun as our hiſtorians call it; Saxon Dnepandun[c], and we now Repton, which from a large town has ſunk into a ſmall village. It was formerly very conſiderable both from the burial of Ethelbald, that good king of the Mercians, who loſt his life by the treachery of his own people, and of the reſt of the Mercian kings, and for the misfortune of Burthred, laſt king of Mercia, who having by dint of intreaties and money held his crown 20 years, was here by the Danes ſtripped of it, or rather releaſed from the ſplendid plague of government, and ſtands as an example how unſettled is every thing that reſts on money. Next not far from the Trent is Melborn, a royal caſtle running to ruin, in which John duke of Bourbon taken at the battle of Agincourt was kept nine years in the cuſtody of Nicholas Montgomery the younger. Scarce five miles hence the river Derwent turns north, riſing as I before obſerved in the northern extremity of the county from the mountains of the Peak, and ſometimes daſhing among ſtones, ſometimes watering verdant meads, continues its courſe for near 30 miles almoſt due ſouth. In ſo long a courſe it paſſes by nothing remarkable but Chatteſworth, a ſpacious elegant houſe worth ſeeing, begun by ſir William Candiſh or Cavendiſh, of the noble and antient family of Gernon in Suffolk, and finiſhed lately at great expence by his illuſtrious conſort Elizabeth now counteſs of Shrewſbury.

Melborn.

Chatteſworth.

Where the Derwent turns eaſt after paſſing Little Cheſter, q. d. the Little City, where Roman coins are frequently dug up, ſtands Darby, Saxon Noꝛth poꝛthiȝ, and "according to the Daniſh idiom, as the antient writer Athelward[d] obſerves, Deoraby;" the chief town of the whole county, to which it gives its name derived from the river Derwent on which it ſtands. It is an elegant town, neither ſmall nor ill peopled. On the eaſt ſide the river Derwent makes a beautiful appearance, paſſing with a bold and rapid ſtream under a very handſome ſtone bridge, on which the piety of our anceſtors built a chapel, now neglected. The ſouth part is divided by a clear ſtream called Mertenbroke. It has five churches, the biggeſt of which dedicated to All Saints has a tower of remarkable height and beauty. In it the counteſs of Shrewsbury before-mentioned not caring to truſt to the affection of heirs has provided herſelf a tomb, and in the neighbourhood an hoſpital for 12 poor perſons, eight men and four women. This place is remarkable antiently for having been the retreat of the Danes when they harraſſed the country, till Ethelfleda that victorious lady of the Mercians falling upon them by ſurprize with greater ſlaughter made herſelf miſtreſs of it. In the Confeſſor's time, as appears by Domeſday book[e], it had 143 burgeſſes, who afterwards declined ſo much that in the Conqueror's time there were but 100 left, "who at the feaſt of St. Martin paid the king 12 trabes or thraves[f] of corn." It is now famous for the aſſizes held here

Little Cheſter.

Derby.

Mertenbroke r-

[a] He died 1538.
[b] Probably St. Lo Kniveton above-mentioned.
[c] Sax. Chron. 59. 82, 83.
[d] P. 843. to diſtinguiſh it from Tamewortbage, Tamworth. So alſo Sax. Chron. 100. 114.
[e] Fol. 280. a.
[f] A thrave contained 24 ſheaves. Du Cange. v. trabs.

for the whole county, and for its excellent malt liquor which we call ale, from the Daniſh word oela, not as Ruellius derives it from Alica. The Britans gave it the old name of Κορμω, for which we have by corruption in Dioſcorides [g] Curmi, where he ſays the Britans and Iberians (perhaps Hibernians) inſtead of wine uſe Curmi *, a liquor made of barley. This is our barley wine which Julian the apoſtate ſmartly calls in an epigram Πυροζηνη και Βρομου ϗ Βρομιον, q. d. Corn made of wheat and oats not the liquor of Bacchus. It is the antient and peculiar liquor of the Engliſh and Britans, and at the ſame time the moſt wholeſome, though Henry d'Abrinces a Norman, poet to Henry III. ſmartly ridicules it in theſe lines:

Neſcio quid Stygiæ monſtrum conforme paludi
Cerviſiam plerique vocant; nil ſpiſſius illa
Dum bibitur; nil clarius eſt dum mingitur, unde
Conſtat quod multas fæces in ventre relinquit.

Sure 'tis ſome monſter of the Stygian pool
They here call ale; the draughts how thick and foul
Firſt taken down are piſt ſo wond'rous thin,
Plenty of dregs muſt needs remain within.

But the learned Frenchman Turnebus, in his treatiſe on wine, doubts not but thoſe who drink this liquor, if they avoid exceſs, will be longer lived than thoſe who drink wine; whence it happens, that many of our ale-drinkers live to the age of 100. Aſclepiades, indeed, in Plutarch [h], when ſpeaking of ſome Britans living to 120, aſcribes this to the coldneſs of the climate, which preſerves the natural heat of the body.

The wealth of this town ariſes entirely from buying up corn and retailing it to the people in the uplands; and almoſt all the inhabitants are foreſtallers of this ſort.

Barons Montjoy. Elwaſton.

Not far from hence the Derwent proceeds to where Radulphus de Montjoye held lands t. Edward I. and by Elwaſton, whence came Walter Blunt, advanced by Edward IV. to the rank of baron Montjoy [i], whoſe poſterity have ſet off their illuſtrious deſcent by literary accompliſhments; and among them eſpecially Charles now earl of Devonſhire, baron Montjoy, lord deputy of Ireland, and knight of the garter, has ſo diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his valour and learning as to be excelled by none, and equalled by few. Below this the Derwent falls into the Trent, which afterwards receives the Erewaſh that here divides this county from Nottinghamſhire. On this ſtands Riſeley belonging to the Willoughbies, of whom I am told was ſir Hugh Willoughby, who, going on diſcoveries in the north ſeas, was frozen to death with his men near Wardhous in Scandinavia 1553. Near it is Sandiacre, or as ſome will have it, Saint Diacre, the ſeat of the noble family of the Greys of Sandiacre, whoſe eſtate came in right of his wife to Edward Hilary, whoſe ſon took the name of Grey, and a few years after one of his heireſſes married ſir John Leake, and the other J. Welſh.

Erewaſh r. Riſeley. Sandiacre.

Codenor. Barons Grey of Codenor.

On the eaſt ſide in order follow to the north Codenor, antiently Coutenoure, a caſtle that belonged to the barons Grey, who were called lords Grey of Codenor, whoſe eſtate in the laſt age came by marriage to the Zouches, John de la Zouch, 2d ſon of William lord de la Zouch, of Haringworth, marrying Elizabeth, heir of Henry Grey, laſt lord of Codenor. Winfeld, a noble manor, where Ralph lord Cromwell, t. Henry VI. built a houſe for that time very magnificent. Next comes Alfreton, ſuppoſed to have been built and named from king Alfred, which had alſo its lords called from it De Alfreton, of whom the ſecond Robert, ſon of Ralph, built the little monaſtery of Beauchief in the remoteſt corner of this county, but a few years after, by failure of iſſue male, their eſtate went by two daughters to the family of Cabors, or Chaworth, and Latham in Lancaſhire. Their arms were Az. two chevrons, O. which were alſo borne with a change of colour by the Muſards [k], barons of Stanley, in this county, who ceaſed t. Edward I. in N. Muſard, and his eldeſt ſiſter married T. de Freſchevill, whoſe poſterity ſtill flouriſh here. Higher up on the edge of the county in a rough ſoil is Hardwic, which gives name to a famous family in this county, of which Elizabeth, preſent counteſs of Shrewsbury, has there begun two fine houſes almoſt cloſe together, by their lofty appearance affording a moſt pleaſing view at a diſtance. This now gives title of baron to William Cavendiſh her ſecond ſon, whom king James lately created baron Cavendiſh of Hardwic.

More inland is Cheſterfield in Scardale, q. d. the *vale incloſed with cragg*s; ſkarres being the Saxon name for Craggs. Its new name and the ruins of its walls prove its antiquity, but its antient name is buried and loſt. It is celebrated among authors only for the battle between Henry III. and the barons, in which Robert de Ferrars laſt earl of Derby of that family was taken priſoner, degraded of his honour by authoriry of parliament, and afterwards lived in a private ſtation, and his poſterity enjoyed only the title of barons. To this Cheſterfield adjoins on the weſt Walton, which came by inheritance from the Brctons by Loudham to the Foliambs of great fame in theſe parts. On the eaſt is Sutton, where the knights of the name of Leak have long been eminent.

A little way from hence is Bolſover, an antient caſtle ſtanding ſomewhat higher, which belonged to the Haſtings lords of Abergavenny by exchange with Henry III. who, being unwilling to have the earldom of Cheſter, to which it belonged, parcelled out among women, gave other eſtates in different parts to the ſiſters of John Scot the laſt earl.

The weſt part of the county beyond the Derwent being covered with hills and mountains, whence perhaps it was antiently called by the Saxons Peac-lond, and now perhaps Peake, which among us implies height, is parted from Staffordſhire by that rapid and clear river the Dove, of which more in its place. Though it has in many places rough and ſlippery craggs, there is in it a great number of graſſy hills and vallies [l] where herds of cattle and numerous flocks of ſheep feed in ſecurity. There is no danger now from the wolves, which were formerly ſo troubleſome here that certain perſons held lands here at Wormhill to hunt and catch them, whence they were called Wolvehunt, as is evident from the public records †. It abounds ſo in lead that the chymiſts who

* The beer which Dioſcorides calls Curmi is by the Engliſh called ale, from the Daniſh word oel.

† Inq. 2 E. II.

[g] B. II. c. 110. He deſcribes it as made of wheat in the weſt, in Iberia and Britain; ω τη προς εσπεραν Ιβηρια ϗ Βριτανια. But in other places of barley, which creates head-achs, bad juices, and hurts the nerves.

[h] De placitis philoſoph. V. c. 30.

[i] with a penſion. Holland.

[k] That is to ſay Doubters and Delayers. Ib.

[l] By reaſon that under the upper cruſt of the earth there is lime ſtone which yields a fruitful ſlough or humour. Ib.

who have condemned the planets to the mines as if they were guilty of ſome crime, ridiculouſly pretend that Saturn, to whom they have aſſigned power over lead, has been very kind to us in giving us lead, and angry with the French to whom he has denied it. But I believe Pliny [m] referred to this county when he ſaid, "In Britain they find ſuch quantities of lead under the ſurface of the earth, that a law has been made to ſtint them to a certain quantity [*]." For in theſe mountains lead ſtones, as the miners call them, are daily dug up in great plenty. On the hills expoſed to the weſt wind by Creach and Workeſworth (which laſt has its name from the lead works) at ſtated times when the weſt wind blows, which by experience they have found to be the moſt conſtant wind, they melt it with great quantities of wood, and draw it off by channels, by running in which it is formed into maſſes called Sowes. Nor do they find only lead here but alſo in diſtinct veins Stibium, called in the ſhops Antimony, which the Grecian ladies uſed to dye their eyebrows, whence the poet Ion [n] calls it ομμα-τογραφον, eyepaint. Here are alſo dug millſtones and grindſtones, and ſometimes a certain white Spar exactly reſembling Cryſtal is found in quarries; for ſtones formed in quarries like diamonds are called by the miners Spar.

Beſides Workeſworth before-mentioned nothing remarkable occurs except Haddon on the river Wie, the ſeat of the Vernons for many years, a family as antient as illuſtrious in theſe parts, ſo that ſir George Vernon, who lived in our time, for his magnificent manner of living, his houſe open to all men of worth, and his commendable hoſpitality, acquired among the common people the name of king of the Peak. But by his daughters and heireſſes this fine eſtate came to John Mannours of the family of the earl of Rutland, and Thomas Stanley of that of the earls of Derby [o]. Near this lies Bakewell on the ſame rivulet, which opens itſelf a way among the hills into the Derwent. This was called by the Saxons Baðecan ƒell [p], and Marianus ſays Edward the elder built a town [q] there. I know not whether it got the name from the Baths which the old Engliſh called Bade and Baden, as did the Germans in their language; whence Baden in Germany, and Buda in Hungary. Certain it is that at the head of the river Wie not far from hence the warm ſprings bubble up, now called Buxton well, being found by experience good for the ſtomach, nerves, and the whole body. The right honourable George earl of Shrewsbury has lately erected buildings there, and they have begun to be reſorted to by the nobility. At this time the unfortunate heroine Mary queen of Scots bid adieu to Buxton in this diſtich of Cæſar's on Feltria, with ſome alteration [r]:

Buxtona, quæ calidæ celebrabere nomine lymphæ,
Forte mihi poſthac non adeunda, vale.

Buxton, whoſe fame thy milkwarm waters tell,
Whom I perhaps no more ſhall ſee, farewell.

But this by the bye. Theſe waters appear to have been known to the antients by the cauſeway or Roman paved road called Bathgate running ſeven miles from hence to a little village called Burgh, near which on a hill ſtands an old caſtle formerly belonging to the Peverells, called the Caſtle in the Peake, in Latin de Alto Pecco, which king Edward III. † gave with the manor and honour to his ſon John duke of Lancaſter upon his ſurrendering the earldom of Richmond into the king's hands. Under this is a cavern or ſubterraneous paſſage, which (with reverence be it ſpoken) is called the Devil's Arſe, with a wide entrance and many receſſes, in which Gervaſe of Tilbury, either from ignorance of the truth, or paſſion for fable, tells us a certain ſhepherd ſaw a ſpacious country interſperſed with ſtreams and vaſt bodies of ſtagnant waters. From ſuch fables, however, this cavern is ranked among the wonders of England, nor are there wanting like ſtories about another cave in the neighbourhood called Elden hole, which is no otherwiſe remarkable than for its perpendicular deſcent and great depth. But as to what ſome write that they are vents for winds it is a miſtake; nor do theſe lines of Necham on the wonders of England ſuit either of theſe caverns:

Eſt ſpecus Eoliis ventis obnoxia ſemper;
Impetus e gemino maximus ore venit.
Cogitur injectum velamen adire ſupernas
Partes, deſcenſum impedit aura potens.

There is a cave to Eolian winds expos'd,
Its double mouth diſcharges furious vent;
In vain are coverings to each mouth oppos'd,
The force of air forbids the cloth's deſcent.

Bathgate.
Burgh.
Caſtle in the Peak.
Devil's Arſe in the Peak.
Elden hole.

But the remarkables of this hilly rough country have been comprehended by an anonymous poet in this couplet:

Mira alto Pecco tria ſunt; barathrum, ſpecus, antrum;
Commoda tot; plumbum, gramen, ovile pecus:
Tot ſpecioſa ſimul ſunt; caſtrum, balnea, Chatſworth:
Plura ſed occurrunt quæ ſpecioſa minus.

Three wonders has high Peak, among her rocks,
As many bleſſings, lead, graſs, fleecy flocks:
Three beauties, caſtle, bath, and Chatſworth ſeat;
But many more deformities we meet.

The lords of Derby, of the family of the Peverells, were the ſame who we before obſerved, were lords of Nottinghamſhire [s]. Afterwards king Richard I. granted and confirmed to his brother John "the earldom and caſtles of Nottingham, Lancaſter, Derby, &c. with the honours thereto belonging, and alſo the honour of Peverell." The next earls were of the Ferrars family, as far as I can collect from the regiſters of the monaſteries of Tutbury, Merivall, and Burton. William de Ferrariis, ſon of a daughter and heireſs of Peverell, whom king John with his own hand (as an old record ſets forth) created earl of Derby ‡; William his ſon, and this William's ſon Robert, who in the civil war forfeited his dignity; ſo that none of his poſterity, though they lived in the Lords and Earls of Derby.

* Brodæus.
[m] N. H. XXXIV.
[n] In Omphale: Και την μελαιναν ϛιμμιν ομμαλοξεϛον.
† 46 Ed. III.
‡ Simeon Dunelmenſis. Hoveden, M. Par. 214. Chartæ ant. 1 J.
[o] Son of Thomas earl of Rutland, and to ſir Thomas Stanley, ſon of Edward earl of Derby. Holland.
[p] Sax. Chron. 110.
[q] burh. urbs. Gibſon; though here he tranſlates it a fort.
[r] The lines falſely aſcribed to Julius Cæſar are,
Feltria, perpetuo nivium damnata rigore,
Terra mihi poſthac non habitanda, vale.
See his fragments in the Variorum Edition of his Commentaries.
[s] Dugd. Bar. I. 436.

highest higheſt ſplendor, were completely reſtored to the honour. King Henry III.[t] gave the greateſt part of this Robert's eſtates to Edmund his younger ſon; and king Edward III. (I have the authority of the original grant) by advice of parliament, appointed Henry of Lancaſter ſon of Henry earl of Lancaſter earl of Derby "to him and his heirs," aſſigning him at the ſame time a revenue of 1000 marks "a year during the life" of Henry earl of Lancaſter his father.[u] From this time the title was united to the houſe of Lancaſter till Henry VI. granted it to Thomas Stanley, who had before married Margaret the king's mother, and of this family William 6th earl of Derby, a moſt honourable perſon, at preſent enjoys the title.

So much for the counties of Nottingham and Derby, part of which was inhabited by the people called in Bede's time[x] the Northern Mercians from their ſettlement north of the Trent, and he ſays "they had the land of 7000 families." North Merc

[t] 12 E. III. Dugd. I. 784.
[x] Ecc. Hiſt. III. 24.
[u] who died 19 E. III. 345. Ib.

ADDITIONS,

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Derby is 56 miles long by 34 in the north or broadeſt part, and 168 in circumference. It is divided into ſix hundreds, and contains 1 borough, 11 market towns, 21115 houſes, 126900 inhabitants, and 680000 acres.

The principal landholders here at the conqueſt were, the king, the biſhop of Cheſter[a], the abbot of Burton[b], earl Hugh, Roger of Poitou, Henry de Fereires, William Peverel, Walter D'Aincourt, Jeffrey Alſelin, Ralph Fitz Hubert, Ralph de Burun, Haſculth Muſard, Gilbert de Gand, Nigel de Statford, Robert Fitz William, Roger de Buſli, and the king's thanes[c].

Greiſley priory of Auſtin canons was valued at l. 31. per annum[d].

Dovedale is in every part deep and narrow. It receives its name from the Dove, a ſhallow rapid ſtream, that, riſing in the pariſh of Alſtonfield, runs through it, and here divides the counties of Derby and Stafford, running ſometimes cloſe to the rocks on one ſide, ſometimes on the other, often barely leaving a foot path. Theſe rocks are grey, of a very wild and groteſque variety of height and ſhape. About a mile from the entrance, the dale, ſuddenly contracting its dimenſions, is no wider than the rocky channel of the river; and ſoon after opens into the meadows where the cattle were grazing. Yew, aſh, white leaf, and other trees grow out of the crevices ſcattered in various parts, and ſometimes form a thick wood from the bottom to the top. Of the ſeveral caverns here one particularly attracts attention, a perforated crag riſing juſt before it in the form of a magnificent arch. This leads to a cavern called Reynard's hall, and to another called his kitchen. The rocks continue ſome diſtance beyond this, and then are loſt by degrees, ſhooting to a very conſiderable height in the moſt fantaſtic ſhapes. Thoſe on the left are diverſified with wood. The river is of various width, very clear, ſeldom deep, and produces trout and grayling. It almoſt always runs rapidly, and has many ſmall falls, but none of conſequence. Its bed is ſometimes overgrown with weeds, and the ſides often ſo, which takes off much of its beauty.

At the entrance of the dale ſtands Thorp-cloud, a conical mountain covered with ſheep.

Ilam, the reſidence of Mr. Porte, is ſituated at the entrance of a little beautiful vale. A hanging wood in front forms a noble amphitheatre, and behind towers Thorp cloud, with a rude chaos of mountain behind mountain.

At the foot of a rock near his garden emerge the rivers Hamp and Manifold, which ingulph themſelves at a conſiderable diſtance from hence and from each other, the one ſix, the other four miles off, the one running north, the other weſt, yet come out of this rock within ten yards of each other, the former from a hole of about four feet deep, the latter from one of 14. They preſently join their ſtreams, and receiving another current in this meadow run into the Dove at no great diſtance under the name of the Manifold. In the rock above is a ſeat of which Congreve was very fond, and where he wrote his comedy of the Old Batchelor.

At Hertiſhorn was born March 5, 1659-60, Dr. George Stanhope, a truly amiable divine. He was educated ſucceſſively at Uppingham in Rutland, and at Eton, whence he was elected to King's college, Cambridge; became B. A. 1681; M. A. 1697; vicar of Deptford 1703; and Dean of Canterbury the ſame year. He was alſo chaplain to King William and Queen Mary, and to Queen Anne; and died, univerſally beloved, March 18, 1727-8. Hertiſhorn.

"Aſcheburn, a market town in the Peake[e]," called in Domeſday Eſſeburne[f], is now a neat market town, having a ſtone bridge over a ſmall river which is croſſed in going to Derby: the bridge over Dove is about a mile below on the road going to Staffordſhire. It it not in the Peak as Leland places it, but in the Wapentake of Wirkſworth called ſometimes the Low Peak. Aſhburn.

In Aſhburn church is an inſcription on a braſs plate found ſome years ſince in repairing it, and now fixed againſt one of the pillars, purporting that it was dedicated to St. Oſwald king and martyr April 24, 1241, by Hugh Patteſhull, biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry[g].

"Anno ab incarnacione domini m° cc° xli. viii°
"kal. Marc̃ dedicata eſt hec eccl̃ia. et hoc altare con-
"ſecratum in honore ſci Oſwaldi regis & martiris
"a venerabili patre domino hugone de patiſhul co-
"ventrenſi epiſcopo."

The vicarage was given to the ſee of Lincoln by William Rufus by the name of Eſcburna, and is in the gift of the dean of Lincoln, who holds the rectory.

"Divers well diſpoſed citizens of London being "born in or near tb Aſhborne in the Peak combining
"their loving benevolence together have builded
"there a fair ſchool-houſe with convenient lodgings
"for a maſter and liberal maintenance allowed
"thereto[h]."

At Mapleton near Aſhborne is a remarkable flat arch of the ſtone bridge, the ſpan of the arch being 70 feet and the ſpring or ſemidiameter but 11 feet, as ſir Joſeph Ayloffe was informed by Mr. Neild. Mapleton.

[a] I. e. of Lichfield at that time and after frequently called biſhop of Cheſter, from ſo capital a place as Cheſter being in that dioceſe.
[b] Burton on Trent. [c] Domeſday, fol. 272. [d] Tan. 79. [e] Lel. VII. 44.
[f] Fol. 273. a, [g] Gent. Mag. XLII. 1772. p. 417. 447. 515. 552. 562. 573.
[h] Stowe's Survey of Lond. p. 67. Fuller's Worth. Derb. 237.

Norbury. Norbury, I believe, belongs now to the Fitzherberts of Swinnerton, in the county of Stafford. Here was born ſir Anthony Fitz Herbert, chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, author of the treatiſe "de Natura brevium."

Winſter. In the different dales between Matlock and Bakewell are villages, Winſter a little mineral market town, and innumerable cottages ſcattered on the ſides of the cultivated hills. The miners employ their leiſure in clearing the ground for the plough, and it repays the labour.

Foſton. At Foſton, in or near Sidbury, was born 1540. Arthur Agard, 45 years deputy chamberlain of the Exchequer, who died 1615. Mr. Camden calls him Antiquarius inſignis [i]. Walter Achard, or Agard, claimed to hold by inheritance the office of eſcheator and coroner of the whole honour of Tutbury, in the county of Stafford, and of the bailliwick of Leyke, for which he produced no other evidence than a white hunting horn, adorned with ſilver gilt in the middle, and at each end with a belt of black ſilk, ſet with ſilver gilt buckles, and the arms of Edmund ſecond ſon of Henry III. [k] This horn is now in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Samuel Foxlowe of Staveley, in this county, who enjoys the poſts of feodary or bailiff in fee, eſcheator, coroner, and clerk of the market of Tutbury honor, by this tenure, and by virtue of his being in poſſeſſion of this horn, which he purchaſed of Chriſtopher Stanhope, of Elvaſton, eſq; into whoſe family it came by a marriage with the heireſs of Agard. The arms, as repreſented by Mr. Pegge [l], are really thoſe of the houſe of Lancaſter, impaling Ferrars of Tamworth, who probably held thoſe offices before Agard: for Nicholas Agard of Tutbury, who was living 1569, married Elizabeth daughter and coheir of Roger Ferrars, 11th ſon of ſir Thomas Ferrars of Tamworth [m]. Foſton is now the ſeat of Mr. Bate.

Ripley. At Ripley, an eſtate of the duke of Devonſhire in Morlaſton hundred, was found, 1730, an urn full of coins of Gallienus, Carauſius, Victorinus, &c. [n]

Shirley. Shirley belonged to the earl Ferrers, but the late earl ſold ſome part.

Longford. Longford is the eſtate and ſeat of Thomas William Coke, eſq; of Holkham, Norfolk.

Radbourne. Radbourne was the ſeat of Sacheverell Pole, eſq. who died lately, and was ſucceeded by his ſon a minor.

Kniveton. St. Lo Kniveton was an eminent antiquary. His collections are for the moſt part in the Yelverton library, but Le Neve had three or four volumes of them. His MS. hiſtory of the earls of Arundel, from the Conqueror to his own time, was bought at Le Neve's ſale by Mr. Weſt. I have a copy of Vincent on Brook, with notes by him, Le Neve, and Dugdale. He is quoted Mon. Ang. I. 572-3, for tranſcribing from Swaveſey regiſters Cambridgeſhire; and a paper of his on the deſcent of titles of honor, particularly baronies, in the female line is printed in Archæologia III. 285.

Hopton hall. At Hopton hall, the ſeat of Philip Gell, eſq. ſouth of Wirkſworth, are or were theſe two inſcriptions over the hall door about two feet aſunder [o]:

At Keddleſton, Domeſday Cheteleſtune, the property of Henry de Ferrars [p], the antient ſeat of the Curzons, is a ſtately houſe lately rebuilt by Nathaniel Curzon, created lord Scarſdale 1761. The village and inn for the accommodation of thoſe who come to drink of a medicinal well, which has the virtues of Harrowgate water, are removed out of ſight. The church ſtands cloſe to the weſt end of the houſe.

Holland ſays, whether ſir Robert Curzon, knighted by king Henry VII. and created a baron of the empire by the emperor Maximilian 1500, on account of his ſingular valour, on whom alſo king Henry VIII. conferred the title of a baron of England aſſigning to him a liberal penſion, were deſcended from theſe Curzons, I dare not affirm. But from a viſitation of this county in the Harleian library N° 1486, it appears that that branch of the Curzons is extinct on the deceaſe of that Robert without iſſue.

At Duffield has been a caſtle and foreſt of the Ferrars [q].

At Repton, or Þpeopandune [r], was before A.D. 660 a noble monaſtery of religious of both ſexes under an abbeſs after the old Saxon faſhion, wherein ſeveral of the royal line were buried. But this being deſtroyed by the Danes, Maud, widow of Ranulph ſecond earl of Cheſter, built here 1172 a priory for black canons, whom ſhe firſt, 1161, placed at Calk, valued at £.118. [s] The Mercian kings who reſided at Tamworth were buried here. In a cloſe north of the church at the end of the laſt century was found near the ſurface a ſquare of 15 feet incloſed by a wall once covered with ſtones laid on wooden joiſts, and containing a ſtone coffin, in which was a human ſkeleton nine feet long, ſurrounded by 100 more of the common proportions, their feet pointing to it, the floor paved with broad flat ſtones, and entered by a door and ſtone ſteps 40 yards from it nearer the church and river. The old labourer who found theſe planted a ſycamore over the ſpot when he covered all up again [t]. The Danes who ravaged Lindſey wintered here 874 [u]. Since the diſſolution ſir John

[i] Ann. Jac. I. 1615.
[k] Blount's ant. tenures, p. 25. MS. St. Lo Kniveton.
[l] Archæologia, III. 6.
[m] MS. Viſitation of Derbyſhire, fol. 6. b.
[n] Ant. Soc. min.
[o] Ant. Soc. min.
[p] Domeſd. f. 875.
[q] Mr. Mander, Ant. Soc. min. 1763.
[r] Rapendune. Domeſd. f. 273. b.
[s] Tan. 78.
[t] Phil. Tranſ. N° 400.
[u] Sax. Chron. 82.

Port

ſort of Etwall in this county, now the ſeat of the Cottons, by will founded here a freeſchool, which he endowed with lands in this county and Lancaſhire, as alſo an hoſpital at Etwall, both which ſtill flouriſh [r].

"Melburne caſtle, two miles from Dunnington, is pretty and in metely good repair [x]." The Society of Antiquaries engraved it from a draught in the duchy office. It was royal demeſne at the Conqueſt [y], and in the time of Henry II. who gave it to Hugh de Beauchamp, and after his death his ſon Hugh held it by gift of his father. Afterwards his elder brother Oliver claimed it; but it was agreed between them that Hugh ſhould diſcharge Oliver of 100*l.* rent in Chelerdeſton [Keddleſton], which ſaid Oliver gave it to William Fitz Geoffrey with his daughter in marriage, and the ſaid William to hold it by the king's grant and confirmation [z].

"Darwent riſeth plaine weſt a little above Blak-
"well [Bakewell] a market town, to Darle in the "Peke, to Wenneſle village and thoro' Crumford
"bridge to Watſtonde Welbridge [a], to Darle, Darby,
"Sawla feri five miles by land from Darby, where "it goith into Trente [b].

Chatteſworth houſe was begun by ſir William Cavendiſh, and finiſhed by his widow Elizabeth afterwards counteſs of Shrewſbury. The queen of Scots was confined 19 years here, and an iſland planted on the top of a tower in a pool was called her garden [c]. It was rebuilt by William firſt duke of Devonſhire, the chapel and hall painted by Verrio, and the gardens filled with a variety of waterworks [d] in the fantaſtic taſte of the laſt century, now removed except the caſcade, jet d'eau, willow, and cylindrical batteries.

So much has been ſaid of Chatſworth that it is no wonder if the viſitor is diſappointed [d]. The chapel is elegant, and there is a good deal of the exquiſite carving of Gibbon, who loſt his life here in putting it up, by a fall from a ſcaffold. Colley Cibber's father wrought here with eclat. The ſtables and bridge were built about 1760.

Edinſor adjoining, called in Domeſday [e] Edneſoure, was then the property of Henry de Ferrars.

At Little Cheſter Dr. Stukeley on good ground places the Derventio of Ravennas different from that of the Notitia and Itinerary, of which in Yorkſhire. Horſley [f] agrees with him that the Derventio of the Notitia is the Derventio of the Itinerary, but ſeems rather diſinclined to place that ſtation here. Dr. Salmon ſays [g] we have no ſtation of the Itinerary in Derbyſhire; whether it was that the Romans at that time having had long and quiet poſſeſſion, found not the ſame neceſſity of maintaining as numerous garriſons as at firſt, or whether there were garriſons kept in other places not mentioned in the Itinerary, is not eaſy to determine. Dr. Stukeley traced the wall all round, and ſome vaults and foundations. It is ſquare between the Ricning way or Ikenild and the river. Coins, earthen pipes, braſs rings, human bones, and ſtags' horns have been dug up, and the foundations of a bridge may be felt in the river [h] croſſing to Darley hill which overhangs the town [i]. Mr. Degg ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries, 1721, a coin of Antoninus, rev. two hands joined holding a caduceus, COS III. thrown up by a mole at Derventio, and in 1726 ſeveral coins of the lower empire.

"Darby a market town [k]." Its privileges and charters are of great antiquity. It is exempted from paying toll in London or any other place except Wincheſter and ſome few other towns, and is an old ſtaple for wool. In the ſouth-eaſt corner ſtood a caſtle, of which remains only the name of Cow caſtle hill, and the ſtreet leading weſt to St. Peter's church is called in old deeds Caſtle gate [l]. Here are five churches, and was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. James, near which have been dug up large bones and ſtone coffins. That on the bridge dedicated to St. Mary was in Charles II's time fitted up for a meeting-houſe, but has been ſince rebuilt and made a dye-houſe. In All Saints collegiate church [l], whoſe body was rebuilt by Gibbs, is a noble monument for the earl and counteſs of Devonſhire, another for Elizabeth counteſs of Shrewsbury, who erected it in her life time, and one for Richard Craſhaw of London, merchant, who died 1651, and from being the ſon of a poor nailor, and going to London in a ſuit of leather, by induſtry got a conſiderable eſtate, ſo that beſides many charitable acts in his life, he left at his death above £. 4000. to the poor, lecturers, &c. [4] The tower was erected in the reign of Henry VIII. DERBY.

The looms ſet up here on a model from Italy by Mr. Loomb 1734, were the firſt ſilk manufactory, a curious machine of 26586 wheels, turned by one ſingle water-wheel which goes round three times in a minute, and at each revolution works 73,728 yards of ſilk, puts in motion 97,746 other ſprings and wheels, and employs 3 or 400 hands [m]. After the inventor's death it was ſold, and copied in many places. Here are ſeveral ſmaller. The patent being open it is at preſent worked by one Lloyd of London [n]. Mrs. Duesbury's porcelain manufactury employs 100 hands, and the gold and blue colouring are brought to a great degree of perfection.

Here was a ſmall Cluniac cell belonging to Bermondſey abbey, c. Surrey, about 1140 [o], two hoſpitals for lepers t. Henry II. and a houſe of Dominicans [p].

Elizabeth counteſs of Shrewsbury founded a noble hoſpital at Derby for twelve poor people, who have each £. 10. per annum [q]. Here is alſo a freeſchool built by the corporation, and endowed with £. 60. a year [r].

Derby ſtands on the river Derwent, and has a ſpacious market place, in which is the town hall, and an aſſembly room lately furniſhed in a handſome manner by the 4th duke of Devonſhire. In St. Mary gate is the county hall. In the laſt rebellion the Pretender puſhed forward as far as this town, and kept his court in a houſe belonging to lord Exeter, the back of which looks towards the river.

[r] G. [x] Lel. I. 24.
[y] Domeſd. fol. 273. b. [z] Inquiſition 26 E. I. Cotton MS. Julius C. VII.
[a] Or Watſtonel Bridge. [b] Lel. VII. 45. [c] Kennet's memoirs of Cavendiſh.
[d] G. [4] Mr. Bray's Tour, 2d ed. p. 168---174. [e] Domeſd. fol. 276. a.
[f] Horſley, Brit. Rom. p. 489. [g] P. 450. [h] Stukeley It. I. 50, 51.
[i] G. Mr. Pegge on roads in the country of the Coritani, p. 5, 6. [k] Lel. VII. 44.
[l] G. [l] Tan. 82. [4] G. [m] Stuk. I. 50. [n] Bray, ubi ſup. [o] Tan. 79.
[p] Ib. 82, 83. [q] Kennet, ubi ſup. [r] Fuller, 237.

Robert

Robert Ferrars, ſecond earl of Derby, founded a religious houſe dedicated to St. Helen near this town t. Henry I. or Stephen, ſoon after tranſlated to Little Derby, or Darley, a pleaſant village not far off on the Derwent, valued at £. 258.[s] Its abbot founded a ſmall Benedictine nunnery about 1160 at King's mead near Derby, valued at £. 18.[t]

Darley.

Kingſmead.

This town gave birth to the learned Thomas Linacre, phyſician to Henry VII. and VIII. and an intimate friend of Eraſmus. He died 1524, and was buried in St. Paul's cathedral[u]. John Flamſted the great aſtronomer was born here 1646, and died 1719.

At Yeveley in Appletree hundred was a preceptory of knights of St. John of Jeruſalem t. Richard I. valued at £. 93.[x]

Yeveley.

At Truſley, in the ſame hundred, was born George Cooke, brother to ſir John Cooke, ſecretary of ſtate, biſhop of Briſtol and Hereford, who died 1650[y].

Truſley.

At Bredſall, in the ſame hundred, was an houſe of friars hermits t. Henry III. afterwards a priory of Auſtin canons, valued at £. 10. 17s.[z] The priory belongs to and is inhabited by Mr. Greenſmith[a].

Bredſall.

At Lockay, or Lockho, near Derby, was a preceptory or hoſpital ſaid to be of the order of St. Lazarus of Jeruſalem, ſubject to an alien priory in France, and given by Edward III. to King's hall, Cambridge[b].

Lockay.

Ekvaſton belongs now, if I am not miſinformed, to Stanhope earl of Harrington.

Elwaſton.

Dale, or de parco Stanley priory, was founded t. Henry II. by Serlo de Grendon for black canons from Calk abbey, ſoon ſucceeded by Premonſtratenſians from Tupholm and Welbec, in whoſe ſtead William Fitz Ralph ſeneſchal of Normandy founded 1204 an abbey of that order, valued at £. 144.[c]

Dale.

In Riſeley park was found 1729 a ſilver diſh or ſalver adorned with hunting and rural ſcenes in bas relief and this inſcription:

Riſeley.

Exſuperius epiſcopus eccleſiæ Bogienſi dedit; ſetting forth that it was given by Exuperius, biſhop of Bayeux and Tolouſe, A. D. 405, to the church of Bouges, where was fought 1421 the battle between the Scots under the duke d'Alenſon quartered in the church and the Engliſh under Thomas duke of Clarence brother to Henry V. who was ſlain there; ſo that it was probably given as a trophy to Dale abbey, five miles from the park[d].

From the Willoughbies of Riſeley was deſcended ſir Hugh Willoughby, who, ſetting out May 10, 1555, with three ſhips to make diſcoveries, was in January following frozen to death with all his crew[e].

Sandiacre.

Sandiacre ſtands by that name in Domeſday[f], the property of three of the king's thanes.

Codnor caſtle.

"Codnore ſumtyme longing to the lorde Greys, "five miles eaſt from Horeſton. It is now all ru- "inoſe[g]."

"Souche hath Codnor caſtle, ſumtyme the chiefeſt "houſe of the Grayes, where he now doth much "coſte. This Souch is a man of fair landes[h]."

Of this family of Grey was William Grey, biſhop of Ely, lord treaſurer of England t. Edward IV. the laſt clergyman who held that office till biſhop Juxon. He died 1478[i].

Codenor caſtle belongs now to Leigh Maſter, eſq; At the Conqueſt it belonged to William Peverell[k].

Beauchief belongs to Peter Pegge, eſq; couſin to my friend the rev. Mr. Samuel Pegge, rector of Whittington near Cheſterfield, to whom I owe much information for this county. It was a Premonſtratenſian abbey, founded by Robert Fitz Ranulph, lord of Alfreton, valued at £. 126.[l] Edward earl of Oxford had a cornelian ſet in ſilver, inſcribed, SIGILL IO' HIS DE BECCDEF.

Alfreton is a market town.

Staveley belonged at the Conqueſt to Aſcuith Muſard[m]. Ralph Muſard held it of the king in chief by ſervice of one knight[n]. John Freſcheville was created 17 Charles II. baron Staveley, but died without iſſue male[o].

The manor houſe of South Wingfeld belongs to the earl of Thanet and Emanuel Halton, eſq. the latter of whom once lived in it. At the Conqueſt this place belonged to Roger de Poitou[p].

Hardwick gave birth to Elizabeth, daughter of John Hardwick, commonly called Beſs of Hardwick. She was married firſt to Robert Barley, of Barley in this county; ſecondly to ſir William Cavendiſh, who was anceſtor to the preſent duke of Devonſhire, and finiſhed Chatſworth on her account; thirdly to ſir William St. Lo, and fourthly to George earl of Shrewsbury, whom ſhe ſurvived, and died 1607, aged 87. She built three of the moſt elegant ſeats that were ever raiſed by one hand within the ſame county, Chatſworth, Hardwick, and Oldcotts, or Oldcotes. Of theſe the two firſt were tranſmitted entire to the firſt duke of Devonſhire, but the laſt was always the property of the Pierreponts, one of whom married Frances, the counteſs of Shrewſbury's daughter. She had the cuſtody of Mary queen of Scots 17 years in her laſt husband's time, and that unfortunate princeſs's chamber and rooms of ſtate, with her arms and other inſignia, a carpet and hangings of her work, are ſtill remaining here; though her bed was taken for plunder in the civil war[q]. Here is a portrait of her, inſcribed Maria D. G. Scotiæ piiſſima regina Franciae dowaria an. æt. regni 36 Anglicæ captivitatis 10 S. H. 1578, as at Hatfield, and a picture repreſenting two apartments, in both of which ſhe is working by candlelight, but in one a nobleman putting his hand on her ſhoulder, and guards waiting below.

Hardwick hall is about 7 or 8 miles from Cheſterfield, ſituate on a hill like a caſtle in the midſt of a wood. It was brought into the Devonſhire family by the counteſs of Shrewſbury, who built it near the ſpot where the old manſion of Hardwick ſtood, part of which is ſtill remaining. William earl of Devonſhire, great grandſon of this lady, reſided here and at Chatſworth, and by his weight and influence contributed very much to the Revolution. King William raiſed him to the title of duke, and honoured

[s] Tan. 79. [t] Tan. 80. [u] Fuller, Worth. Derb. 235.
[x] Tan. 82. [y] Fuller, [z] Tan. 83.
[a] Bray, ubi ſup. [b] Tan. 83. [c] Tan. 81.
[d] Stukeley's Diſſertations on it, with two plates. [e] Fuller, Worth. Derb. 234. Hakluit's Voyages, I. 231.
[f] Fol. 278. b. [g] Lel. VII. 44. [h] Lel. VI. 68. [i] Fuller, Derb. 233. Bentham's Ely, 176. 178.
[k] Domeſd. f. 276. a.
[l] Tan. 81. The biſhop miſtakes in ſaying that the founder was one of the murderers of Becket, and that the church was dedicated to that martyr.
[m] Domeſd. fol. 277. b.
[n] Inquiſit. 26 E. I. Cott. MS. Jul. C. 841. [o] Dugd. Bar. II. 482. Le Neve MS. n.
[p] Domeſd. f. 273. b. [q] Kennet's Memoirs of Cavendiſh, p. 67.

him with the higheſt employments. He was a firm and ſteady patriot. The inſcription which he ordered for his tomb is remarkable:

Willielmus dux Devon:
Bonorum principum fidelis ſubditus,
Inimicus & inviſus tyrannis.

The houſe is ſquare, built of ſtone dug out of the hill on which it ſtands, and has a lofty tower at each corner, and a ſpacious court in the front. Going through a large hall, a grand ſtaircaſe leads to the apartments on the firſt floor, which conſiſt of a dining-room, and ſeveral bed-chambers; but the ſtate-apartments are on the ſecond floor. In the drawing-room is a good picture of the counteſs. The ſtate-room is very large, and at one end is a canopy and chair of ſtate, where the firſt duke uſed to have a levee. A noble gallery, of about 195 feet in length, extends along the eaſt front, with ſquare projecting windows. Here are portraits of many royal and noble perſonages, but greatly hurt by damps. The bed-chamber uſed by Mary queen of Scots whilſt ſhe was here in cuſtody of the earl of Shrewſbury is ſhewn, with her arms carved in wood over the door, with MR in a cypher, and round it, Marie Stewart par la grace de Dieu royne d'Eſcoſſe douariere de France: Creſt a lion; motto, In my defens. In one of the chambers are a ſuit of hangings, with chairs of her work. The counteſs's arms are over ſeveral of the chimnies, and a motto of much vanity, expreſſing that ſhe was eminent for her birth, virtue, &c. &c. but more for her ſplendid fortune. The rooms are moſtly hung with tapeſtry of the time, now looking very dull. When the new houſe at Chatſworth was built a great deal of the old houſe here was pulled down for the timber, which was carried thither; but part of it, and many of the walls, are ſtill ſtanding. In Kennet's memoirs of the Cavendiſh family, he ſays, that one of the rooms in this old houſe was of ſuch exact proportion, and ſuch convenient lights, that it was thought fit for a pattern of meaſure and contrivance of a room in Blenheim; but he does not ſay what room. The duke generally ſpends a few weeks here in the ſpring; and, indeed, the ſituation is much more magnificent than that of Chatſworth [r].

The great manor of Cheſterfield belonged to Baldwin de Wake 50 Henry III. when the battle was fought here. Robert Ferrars was deep in the party of the barons, and had ſmarted for it, and after the battle of Eveſham bound himſelf by oath to a forfeiture of his eſtate and honours if he rebelled again. After the barons were diſinherited in the parliament at Northampton 1265, many of them were extremely diſſatisfied, this earl and Wake among the reſt; and Robert the next ſpring aſſembling his friends and followers at Duffield frith or foreſt, where he had a caſtle, was ſoon joined by a number of reſpectable malcontents. They came on, and took poſt at Cheſterfield, where they were ſurprized by the king's nephew Henry and his friends, and many ſlain and taken. Among the laſt were earl Ferrars, who had the gout at the time, and concealed himſelf under ſome wool in the church. He was conveyed in irons to Windſor, and was releaſed three years after, but not being able to perform the terms on which he recovered his lands, loſt them and his earldom finally three years after, as did Baldwin de Wake this manor. The Ferrars eſtate and title granted to Edmund Crouchback; and conveyed by his daughter to John of Gaunt, became in ſome ſort the foundation of the great duchy of Lancaſter, now abſorbed in the crown. The battle itſelf was a ſort of æra in the neighbouring chronicles [s]. Matthew Paris mentions a caſtle here at that time, which Mr. Pegge doubts. Here was a very antient hoſpital for lepers [t]. Cheſterfield is a corporation and market town, and has a freeſchool. King John made it a free burrough, and gave it to William Briwere his particular favourite [u]. It gave title of earl, 1628, 4 Charles I. to Philip lord Stanhope of Shelford, who was ſucceeded 1656, by his grandſon Philip; he, 1713, by his ſon Philip; and he 1725 by his ſon Philip, born 1695, who died 1773, aged 78, and is ſucceeded by Philip ſon of Arthur Stanhope of Mansfield grandſon of Dr. Michael Stanhope, and 5th earl.

"Ambre riſith weſt of Cheſtrefeld, and leveth two "miles on the left hand onto us to Winfeld village "an eight mile to Ambre bridge, two miles to "Chriche chace a wood faſt by where it runnith "into Darwent [x]."

Brimington. In a field at Brimington near Cheſterfield, was found in a ſtone quarry this inſtrument of iron ſtone, lodged in a bed of yellow clay. It is 22 inches long and from one to two broad, and by Mr. Pegge ſuppoſed a Britiſh club. The Ikenild-ſtreet from Tapton caſtle into Yorkſhire could not go very far from the place where it was found [y].

Brampton. Brampton chapel is ſuppoſed by an inſcription on one of the walls to have exiſted ſo early as 1155. It ſeems to have been rebuilt and conſecrated 1253 by Brendan biſhop of Ardfert, ſuffragan to Weſeham biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry, but ſtill continued dependent on the rectory of Cheſterfield, which belongs to the dean of Lincoln, the vicarage not being endowed till 1268. The dean and the pariſhioners claimed a right of nomination to this chapel, but at Derby aſſizes 1758 the verdict went in favour of the dean, and a decree iſſued thereupon in the court of the Exchequer [z].

John Hewett, eſq. exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries, drawings taken 1775, of the plan, ſection, front of porch, and S. modillions, front and ſection of 1ſt, 2d and 3d arches, and four pillars in the ſemicircular part of Streetly or Stetely chapel on the north-eaſt extremity of this county near the road between Workſop and Cheſterfield, of Saxon work, and now a barn. Streetly.

Dronfield. Five miles north of Cheſterfield is Dronfield, a ſmall market town.

Scarſdale. Scarſdale, the diviſion wherein Cheſterfield ſtands, gave title of earl to Francis Leak, lord Deincourt of Sutton 1645, ſucceeded by his ſon Nicholas, and grandſon Robert, and Nicholas his great grandſon by the younger branch, with whom it ended [a]. The violent fermentations in the ſtate and the death of the king in conſequence thereof produced an extraordinary effect on the firſt earl. He retired to [r] Mr. Bray's Tour, 2d ed. p. 161. 167.

[s] Dugd. Bar. I. 701.
[t] Tan. 82.
[u] Pegge's acc. of R. de Weſeham, p. 39—41.
[x] Lel. VII. 45.
[y] See Gent. Mag. 1783, LIII. p. 393.
[z] Mr. Pegge on it, Archaeol. II. 276.
[a] G. Dugdale's Bar. II. 450.

his eſtate at Sutton, and cauſing his grave to be dug, laid himſelf down in it every Friday [b]. What the zeal of the laſt age would call an effort of devout horror, the philoſophy of the preſent would ridicule as a piece of folly. The title of Scarſdale was revived in a barony 1761 in Nathaniel Curzon of Kedleſton in this county.

Sutton. Sutton, at the Conqueſt the property of Roger of Poitou and of the Leakes [c], is now the eſtate of Gilbert Clarke, eſq.

Walton. Walton of John Woodyear, eſq. of Crookhill c. York. F. F. Foljambe, eſq. of Walton, now lives at Aldwark near Rotherham.

Bolſover. Bolſover, which in Domeſday [d] belonged to William Peverel, was the eſtate of the earl of Oxford, now of the duke of Portland. The ſite of the caſtle is occupied by a moſt ill contrived and inconvenient houſe, which, by the arms carved in ſtone over the door, Cavendiſh impaling Ogle, is ſuppoſed to have been built by ſir Charles Cavendiſh, duke of Newcaſtle, youngeſt ſon of ſir William by the counteſs of Shrewſbury, who married one of the daughters, and at length ſole heir of lord Ogle. The gallery is 72 feet long. The outer court, conſiſting of offices and ſtables, is large, and walled in: the inner is leſs, in which ſtands the houſe built of brown ſtone, ſquare, and lofty. A flight of ſteps leads to a ſmall hall, the roof ſupported by pillars, and from thence into the only room deſigned for habitation on this floor, in the centre of which is a pillar ſupporting a heavy arched roof, round which is a plain circular table uſed to dine on. The reſt of the rooms are ſmall and not numerous, and the floors of plaiſter. A range of buildings, now unroofed and ruined, ſtood on a noble terrace commanding a magnificent proſpect. Theſe are ſaid to have been fitted up for the reception of Charles I. when he viſited the earl of Newcaſtle at Welbeck in his progreſs into Scotland 1633, and a year or two afterwards with his queen. The earl gave up this houſe for their majeſties lodging, and ſpent £. 14000. on their entertainment. Ben Jonſon was employed in preparing the ſcenes and ſpeeches, and all the gentry in the country were ſent for to wait on their majeſties. When the duke went abroad the parliament ſeized the place, and ſold it, and it began to be pulled down, when ſir Charles the duke's younger brother purchaſed it, and reſtored it to the family. In the church is a noble monument of the firſt ſir Charles Cavendiſh, and on the ſouth ſide is an additional building for the burial of the family [e]. Near the altar-piece is ſome carving on a ſtone formed like a ſarcophagus ſix feet by three, repreſenting the Nativity; the child on the Virgin's lap holds a bird [f].

Wirkſworth. Wirkſworth is a large town with a hall for holding the manor court. It lies in a bottom eternally overhung with ſmoke from the lead and calamine works, the principal covering being here and there broken into by pillars of white ſmoke from the ſmelting mills. This town, which one would think the winter torrents and land floods muſt unavoidably overflow, has ſcarce any ſupply of water. Here is a ſtrong medicinal water [g], and moſt of the ſtreams or ſprings in theſe parts paſs through, and are tainted by lead mines. It is a large market town with a handſome church, a freeſchool, and almſhouſe. Here the Barmoot court is held by a maſter and 24 jurors, who determine diſputes relative to theſe mines. 83 Roman denarii, from Auguſtus to Verus, were found at or near this town 1735 [h].

We have evidence that the Wirkſworth mines were wrought early in the eighth century by the Saxons, when Eadburga, daughter of Adulf, king of the Eaſt Angles, and abbeſs of Repton in this county, ſent St. Guthlac a leaden coffin and a ſhroud, in which he was buried [i]; and 835 Kenwara another abbeſs gave lead here to the amount of 300 ſhillings to Chriſt church at Canterbury [k]. In Domeſday here were three lead mines [l], beſides others at Bakewell, Aſhford, Crich, and Meſſesford. On Cromford nether moor in the pariſh of Wirkſworth was found 1777 a pig of lead 19 inches and ¼ to 22 inches and ¼ by 3 inches and ¼ to 5 inches and ¼ and 3 inches ¼ thick, and weighing 126lb. inſcribed, which Mr. Pegge explains as ſtamped by the 6th legion, in memory of the emperor Hadrian, who brought this legion into Britain about A. D. 120 or 124, and died 138 [m]. Another was found in autumn 1783 on Matlock moor, and is now in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Adam Wolley the younger of Matlock. The inſcription is as follows:

IMP. CAES. HADRIANI. AVG. MEI. LVI.

L. ARVCONI. VERECVNDI. MEAL. LVND.

which Mr. Pegge interprets, Lucii Aruconii Verecundi Metalliſci (or Metallarii) Lundinenſis, ſuppoſing Aruconius to be the merchant or farmer of the lead works in Derbyſhire, but reſident in London. The weight is 84lb. Hence there is no ſlight ground for conjecture that theſe mines were worked alſo by the Romans. The king claims the 13th penny on the mines round Wirkſworth, for which the owners compound at £. 1000. per annum, and the tythe is ſaid to have produced as much formerly.

"Aegleſburn riſith in a rocke in the paroche of "Oreworthe, thens to Iderſe three miles, to Doſeld "church three miles. A little beyond Dovefeld "at a place Eglesburn much goith into Darwent [n]."

The village of Cromford has alſo lead works. At this place ſtands a mill for ſpinning cotton, invented by one Mr. Arkwright, who has a patent for it, and in conjunction with ſome other perſons carries on the buſineſs with great advantage to himſelf and the neighbourhood. It employs about 200 perſons, chiefly children, and to make the moſt of the term for which the patent was granted, they work by turns night and day. Another mill as large as the firſt is building here, and new houſes riſing round it. A third is begun at Bakewell [o].

On the banks of the Darwent, is Matlock, where is a weak medicinal water [p], efficacious in cholicky, conſumptive, and cutaneous caſes [q], and much frequented by the neighbouring gentry as an agreeable retreat during the ſummer months for health and amuſement, without the infection of ſouthern manners. Here are two baths. The old bath, as it is called, though there had been a bath at the place long before, was built 1734, the houſe belonging to which is largeſt

[b] Dugd. Bar. II. 452. [c] Domeſd. f. 273. b. [d] f. 276. a.
[e] Bray, 343—346. [f] Lord Colraine in A. S. Min. 1735.
[g] Short's Hiſt. of Min. Waters of England, 4to. 1736, p. 276. [h] Mr. Weſt in A. S. min.
[i] Lel. Coll. II. 590. It. IV. 131. [k] Somner, pp. ad Ant. Cant. p. 38. [l] plumbaria, fol. 273. b.
[m] Archæol. V. 370. [n] Lel. VII. 45. [o] Bray, p. 119. [p] Short, p. 270.
[q] Medley on Matlock water. Percival's Experiments and Obſervations on Buxton and Matlock; Phil. Tranſ. LXII. p. 455.

and moſt frequented, though the new one has a handſome houſe in a pleaſanter ſituation. The baths are temperate, and the water lighter than common water poſſeſſes the virtues of Briſtol and Bath waters. It was firſt known about 1698. There is a hot ſpring in a hill beyond the old bath, but notwithſtanding all attempts to prevent it it mixes with a cold one in its way to the river. Here is a water of a ſtrong petrifying quality; a large ſtratum formed by which is uſed for building, and is very ſerviceable. Matlock great Torr is 140 yards perpendicular. Near Matlock bridge are two chalybeat ſprings[r].

Two miles ſouth-weſt is Middleton bath, which riſes cloſe by the ſouth ſide of Bonſal brook, at the foot of a very high ſteep mountain, a mile from Middleton, and two from Wirkſworth. It is uſed chiefly to cure mangey horſes and dogs, but is fit to be employed to much greater purpoſes[s]. The manor of Midleton was held t. Edward II. by Thomas de Furnival of Thomas de Chaworth[t].

On the top of the hill called Riber, which is above Matlock church eaſtward, is a ſtone ſaid to have been formerly a rocking ſtone, not very large, and placed on two other ſtones[u].

At Bonſal there is a ſchool founded and built by Robert Ferne, eſq. who ſettled 20*l. per ann.* on the maſter, 10*l. per ann.* to put two boys apprentices, and other 10*l. per ann.* for the repairs of the ſchool-houſe, and to purchaſe religious books, &c.

On the commons about Winſtre are ſeveral barrows. In the largeſt were found two glaſs veſſels eight or ten inches high, with wide round mouths, and containing about a pint of clear greeniſh water, a ſilver bracelet about two inches broad, an ornament of philigrain work, gold, or ſilver gilt, with red glaſs beads, and remains of a wooden box and claſps and hinges. See Pl. IX. fig. 7.[x]

On the ſouth end of Stanton moor (which is 24 miles from Derby, 12 from Cheſterfield, and four from Bakewell, a wild uncultivated waſte, very high land, rocky, and about two miles by one and a half in breadth from eaſt to weſt), cloſe to the village of Birchover, is a very ſingular maſs of large rocks, called Roulter, Rowter, or Roo-Tor. Theſe rocks ſtand on the top of a hill commanding an extenſive view over the moor, and ſeem to have been a place much frequented by the Druids.

On one of them is a rock baſon. The pillar on the top was ſet up a few years ago to ſupport a weather-cock. In another part is a rocking ſtone eight feet ſeven inches in circumference. There are ſeveral caves among theſe rocks on the north ſide. Many of theſe ſtones appear from their ſituation to have been placed by art. About a quarter of a mile weſt of Rowter, on a ſimilar kind of hill, is [illegible], an aſſemblage of large rocks, called Bradley rocks. The largeſt of theſe is a rocking ſtone 32 feet in circumference. It moves with great eaſe, and ſeems, from its extraordinary poſition, to have been placed there by human ſtrength. It reſts upon two ſtones clear of the ground, and, if one may judge from its ſituation, and from the paſſage between the two ſtones it reſts upon, we may ſuppoſe it to have been a ſtone Deity. It anſwers to the deſcription given by doctor Borlaſe of rock idols in Cornwall, called Tolmens. At about a quarter of a mile weſt of Bradley rocks are ſeveral rock baſons. On a hill ſtands another group, called Carcliff or Crackcliff. Among theſe are four very perfect rock baſons. On the eaſt and weſt ſide of Stanton Moor are ſeveral large rocks and ſtones, none of which have baſons, nor are they to be found but on rocks that ſtand on hills, and in the neighbourhood of Druidical remains. In a cave 11 feet by nine and ſeven feet high, at the foot of Carcliff rocks, is a hermitage. At the eaſt end of the cave is a crucifix, the figure three feet high, cut out of the ſolid rock in high relief, the ſculpture not bad. On the top of the croſs there appears to have been ſomething like letters, but now ſo defaced by time as not to be made out. On the left hand of the crucifix is a niche, as if intended for a ſtatue. Facing the entrance are the remains of ſeats hewed out of the rock. On Stanton Moor, about half a mile north of Rowter, is a Druid temple of nine ſtones, called by the country people the Nine Ladies. At 34 yards weſt of the temple is a ſingle ſtone, which they have named the King. The diameter of the circle is 11 yards; the ſtones are about two feet ſix inches high; there appears to have been one in the centre. Near it are ſeveral cairns; one had been opened a few years ago, and much rummaged: bones were found, and a large blue glaſs bead with orifices not larger than the tip of a tobacco-pipe[y].

Hartle Moor.

On Hartle Moor, about half a mile weſt of the Nine Ladies, is another Druid temple. It conſiſts at preſent only of ſix ſtones; but the field they ſtand in goes by the name of the Nine Stone Cloſe, and if we may judge by the eye, there were formerly that number. The height of the talleſt ſtone is 17 feet. At 75 yards ſouth ſtand two ſtones ſomewhat ſmaller[z].

Caſtle Ring.

About two hundred yards north from the abovementioned temple is a circular Britiſh work called Caſtle Ring. It has a deep ditch and double vallum; the entrance is very viſible on the ſouth-eaſt ſide, where part of the vallum has been levelled by the plough. The diameter from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt is 143 feet, from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt 165 feet. As no coins or Roman utenſils have been found near it, there ſeems to be ſufficient grounds to ſuppoſe it to be a Britiſh and not a Roman encampment. It has been thought by ſome to have been a Daniſh work. Certain it is that the Danes ſecured themſelves for ſome time in Derby, after they had driven out the Saxons; but as this place is at a great diſtance from that town, and is near to many Druidical remains we may rather ſuppoſe it to be Britiſh[a].

Durwood.

In removing a large ſtone at Durwood near Hartle moor was found a large urn half full of burnt bones, and near it two antient querns, or hand mill ſtones, flat at top, and ſomewhat convex on the under ſides, about four inches and an half thick, and about a foot diameter, the upper ſo much leſs than the under that being placed on it it could be turned round within the rim of it. Such ſtones Mr. Thoresby[b] deſcribes as found at Cookridge in Yorkſhire. Others are found in Bratton camp, Wilts[c], and ſuch are in common uſe in the Hebrides[d]. Three circles of ſtones are to be ſeen very near the ſpot where theſe

[r] Bray, 120—129.
[s] Ib. 124.
[t] Madox' Hiſt. of Exch. 376.
[u] Bray, Ib. 129, 130.
[x] Archæol. III. 274.
[y] Account of ſome Druidical remains on Stanton and Hurtle moor in the Peak, by Major Rooke, Archæol. VI. p. 110—115.
[z] Ducat. Leod. p. 160.
[a] See before, Vol. I. p. 100.
[b] Leonard's Voyage to the Hebrides, p. 281.

mili-

millſtones were found, and on a ſtone at the entrance of the largeſt circle is a rock baſon [c].

At the eaſt ſide of Stanton Moor are three very remarkable ſtones. They ſtand at the edge of a declivity looking over Darley dale, and about a quarter of a mile from each other in a north and ſouth direction. They have at a diſtance much the appearance of towers. That to the ſouth is called Cats Stone, and has a road leading to it cut through a ſurface of looſe ſtones and rock. This was evidently intended as an approach to the ſtone, where it ends, and meets a precipice. Another ſtone is called Gorſe Stone. This name is undoubtedly derived from a Britiſh word gorſeddau (ſetting aloft), which Dr. Borlaſe, in his Antiquities of Cornwall, explains to be Druidical places of elevation. In ſome places they were made of earth, and ſometimes upon high rocks, from whence they uſed to pronounce their decrees. The other, which is the largeſt of the three, is called Heart Stone, and meaſures 83 feet in circumference. A ſtone of a very ſingular ſhape, called Andle Stone, ſtands by itſelf on Stanton Moor, about a quarter of a mile north of Rowter. It ſeems to have been formed by art, and might probably have been a rock idol. On the middle of Stanton Moor is a ſmall work 16 yards diameter; the vallum is of earth and ſtones, but there does not appear to have been a ditch: the entrance is towards the ſouth. There are ſeveral cairns near it, and many traces of Britiſh works are perceivable on various parts of the moor, but nothing perfect can be made out. Some rocks in a ſmall encloſure at the north-weſt end of the moor near the village of Stanton appear to have been a Cromlech. The ground theſe rocks ſtand in belonged to the family of the Caltons, whoſe anceſtor about one hundred and fifty years ago had a Latin inſcription cut in Roman capitals on two of them. On one; Res ruſtica, quæ ſine dubitatione proxima et quaſi conſanguinea ſapientiæ eſt, tam diſcentibus eget quam magiſtris. On the other, Nihil eſt homini libero dignius, et quod mihi ad ſapientis vitam proxime videtur accedere.

By the number of Druidical remains on Stanton Moor we may reaſonably ſuppoſe this place to have been inhabited by the Druids. Here are temples, caves, rock baſons, rocking ſtones, gorſeddaus, rock idols, and cairns. Their ſacred groves have long ſince given way to cultivation; but their more durable monuments have ſtood the ravages of time, and remain as helps to illuſtrate their hiſtory [d].

Mr. Bray gives the following deſcription of this wonderful aſſemblage of rocks, or rather huge ſtones piled on one another, forming an hill which runs in length for 70 yards or more from eaſt to weſt, the north and ſouth ſide being nearly perpendicular. You go up at the eaſt end by a moderate aſcent, when prodigious maſſes of ſtone preſent themſelves, and a paſſage about ſix feet higher appears, which formerly went under part of them, and came out on the north ſide, but the middle of it is now fallen in. On the north ſide you find ſome immenſe ſtones, which form a kind of alcove, ſeeming as if ſcooped out for that purpoſe. Going up to the higher part are two rocking ſtones, which can be moved by the hand; one of them, ſuppoſed to weigh 50 ton, reſts on two points of leſs than a foot diameter each, but there is now earth and graſs collected which cover the ſtone on which they reſt, yet not ſo as to prevent its being moveable. On the higheſt ſtone of all a round pillar of three joints, with a weather-cock at the top, has been let into ſuch a hole as that which appears in the ſtone on Riber. On the north ſide of one of the upper ſtones towards the weſt end of the hill is cut a chair with two arms, of very rude workmanſhip, and a ſeat for one perſon on each ſide of it. One of the uppermoſt ſtones meaſures 37 feet or more in length. When ſeated in this chair you ſee towards the right a ſingle ſtone on an oppoſite hill, called the Eandle, or Anvil ſtone; and to the right of that another, called Thomas's Chair. On this laſt there was a few years ago a ſtone cut in ſhape of a chair, with a ſeat on each ſide, but it is now thrown down. Looking to the left on the points of a crag are two upright ſtones, called Robin Hood's Stride. A little to the right of them, at the other end of the range, terminating in a heap of looſe ſtones, is Cratcliff Torr. South of Robinhood's Stride is Bradley, or Bradwell Torr, where is another ſhaking ſtone. This laſt is probably that which Dr. Borlaſe ſays he heard of as being four yards high, and twelve round. Of the two at Routar, he ſays, the largeſt is computed to weigh at leaſt 20 ton, and that it is on a Karn 20 feet high [e]. At the foot of Routar, on the ſouth ſide, is a houſe called Routar hall, once the habitation of a gentleman's family lately belonging to Henry Eyre, eſq. of Derby, from whom it deſcended to the preſent lady Maſſareen his daughter. There is alſo a ſmall chapel. From this houſe is a way up to theſe ſtones, where part of them is ſeen in a moſt extraordinary poſition. The higheſt heap of them here forms a face to the weſt, where they hang over one another almoſt without ſupport in the manner of that deſcribed by Dr. Borlaſe in Plate XI. fig. 5, but much larger. The guide would make you believe that the ſacrifices were performed here, and that the marks of fire are ſtill viſible on theſe ſtones. The north ſide at this end conſiſts of vaſt maſſes piled on one another in the ſame manner, ſmall ſtones ſeeming to have been put in to ſupport the large ones. The heap goes further towards the weſt; but leſs high, and is terminated by a ſingle ſquare ſtone placed on ſome others.

It ſeems incredible that theſe ſtones ſhould have been brought and placed here by any human art, as no engine now known would be equal to the taſk of bringing and placing them in the poſition in which they are now ſeen. Yet when one conſiders Stonehenge, which is beyond doubt the work of art; when we hear what maſſes of ſolid ſtone were carried to Palmyra and raiſed to a great height, one cannot ſay it is impoſſible that this ſhould be the work of human hands. Dr. Borlaſe [f] obſerves that the ancients had powers of moving vaſt weights, of which we have now no idea. Whatever knowledge was poſſeſſed by the Druids, and they are ſuppoſed to have had ſo abſolute a command of the people that nothing would be wanting to effect what they might deſign, there are other certain marks of their having been in this neighbourhood. But after all, may not this heap be the effect of that convulſion which has left ſuch aſtoniſhing marks of its violence in this country, and might not the Druids finding the ſtones here remove the ſurrounding earth and uſe them as a place of religious worſhip, taking advantage of the uncommon circumſtance of ſuch large ſtones being moveable by ſo ſmall a force, to make the multitude believe they were inveſted with ſupernatural powers.

[c] Pegge in Archæol. VII. 19—23. [d] Rooke ubi ſupra. [e] Ant. of Cornwall, p. 182. [f] Ib. 175.

Dr. Borlaſe deſcribes a tolman in Cornwall, and another in Scilly, to conſiſt of a large orbicular ſtone ſupported by two ſtones, between which there is a paſſage, and ſays they are both in the decline of hills beneath a large karn of rocks ſtanding on two natural ſupporters. He adds afterwards, "Another thing is worthy of our notice in this kind of monuments, which is, that underneath theſe vaſt ſtones there is a hole or paſſage between the rocks." Whether this was uſed as a ſanctuary for an offender to fly to, or to introduce proſelytes, novices, people under vows, or about to ſacrifice into their more ſublime myſteries, he does not determine.

The ſtones on Routor do not ſeem to anſwer the deſcription of a Tolman, but that on Bradley Torr does; the paſſage, however, might be for a ſimilar purpoſe.

Cratcliff preſents a broad and very lofty perpendicular front of ſtones wonderfully large facing Winſter and Elton. Some of the upper ones are worn on the edges as if jagged, and many of them are marked with ſeams, probably occaſioned by the rain waſhing away the ſofter parts. Mr. Rooke ſays there are four rock baſons on the top. At the weſtern end is a ſmall cave in the rock open to the ſouth, which was formerly the habitation of a hermit. At the eaſt end of it the figure of our Saviour on the croſs was carved on the ſtone, and great part of it is ſtill remaining. On the left of it is a niche. Facing the entrance was a ſeat hewed out of the rock. A bed-place ſeems to have been ſeparated from the reſt, the holes remaining in which the poſts were probably placed. On the ſame range of hills two ſtones ſtanding upright in a direct line from one another have got the name of Robinhood's Stride. They are alſo called Mockbeggar-hall from the reſemblance they have to chimnies at each end of a manſion-houſe, and which on the north ſide particularly migh induce the poor traveller to make up to it in hopet of refreſhment. Still more weſt of this is another craggy rock, which from the road to Elton ſeems to hang almoſt without ſupport[g].

In a paſture ground adjoining to a farm of the duke of Devonſhire, called One Aſh Grange, ſouth-eaſt of Monyaſh and north of Newhaven, is a circle of ſtones or Druidical temple called Arbe Lows, 50 yards diameter, ſurrounded by a large circular bank of earth, 11 yards high in the ſlope, higher towards the ſouth or ſouth-eaſt, formed by a large barrow; the ditch within four yards wide, with two entrances eaſt and weſt. On the rampart by the eaſt entrance is a tumulus with a ditch and appearing to have been opened. To the ſouth-weſt 400 or 500 yards off in the open paſture, through which the road above-mentioned paſſes, is another barrow, which by a low faint rampart deſcribing an irregular ſemicircular direction ſeems connected with the temple at its eaſtern entrance. In the middle of the area of the temple towards the eaſt are ſtones which formed the Kiſtvaen. The ſtones are thrown down, amounting to 32, and three in the centre, probably about eight feet high. The entrance is at the north or north weſt. Weſt or ſouth-weſt of the great barrow a little diſtance from the bank is a ſmaller barrow, whence one ſees many more on the tops of the adjacent hills, and one very large one about half a mile off, called Endlow, in which have been found aſhes and burnt bones. They all have a baſon on the top[h]. Endlow.

The ſummits of moſt of the hills in the two Peaks are called Lows, which in Saxon ſignifies a hill, and on the tops of moſt of them are to be ſeen barrows of ſtone. Near Braſington by the road ſide leading to Buxton on the right is a vaſt barrow called Stanhope low or Stoneheap low, where human bodies have been found in caſes compoſed of four large ſtones ſet edgeways, covered with a fifth large one. Theſe are covered with leſſer ſtones, and raiſed to a mount. Human bones have of late years been taken out of this barrow. There are many more in this neighbourhood, ſome of which have been rifled, and others remain perfect. Some, particularly in Eyam pariſh, on the moors, over which turnpike roads have lately been made, have been broken up for the materials, and in ſome were found urns containing bones and beads, &c. and in others what is called a Druid's ring. Stanhope low.

The effect of the earthquake which deſtroyed Liſbon November 1, 1755, on the lead mines at Eyam edge in the Peak, was very ſenſibly felt by the miners in a drift about 60 fathom or 120 yards deep, and above 50 yards from one end to the other. A miner in the eaſt end of the vein about ſix fathoms below the others called them down, when they all felt three more ſhocks at the interval of about four or five minutes, and after each heard a loud rumbling in the bowels of the earth. The time between the firſt and fifth ſhocks was about twenty minutes, and the ſecond was ſo violent as to cauſe the rocks to grind one upon another[i].

In the High Peak the king has a large manor called de Alto Pecco, and within it was formerly a foreſt, now diſafforeſted, and the king's eſtates here were called the Honour of High Peak, and had many dependent manors, a caſtle, and foreſt. Edward III. granted it to John of Gaunt, and it became, as it ſtill continues, part of the duchy. The courts, receipts, &c. were always at the caſtle till it fell to ruin, and then the records were transferred to Tutbury, ſo that it is now ſaid to be within the honour of Tutbury.

In the Low Peak the crown has alſo a manor called the manor of the Wapentake of Wirkſworth, parcel of the duchy.

The peculiar dialect of this country begins on theſe hills, and runs into Lancaſhire, moſt high countries having a dialect of their own.

Haddon Grange is a venerable ſeat of the duke of Rutland, one of the moſt curious and perfect of our old caſtellated manſions. The houſe ſtands on a gentle hill in the midſt of thick woods overhanging the Wye, which winds along the valley at a great depth beneath. The houſe conſiſts of two courts. The firſt is entered by an arched gateway in a corner. In the centre building between the two courts is the great hall with its butteries and cellars. At the other end of the hall is a drawing room, and in a corner of the hall a ſtaircaſe formed of large blocks of ſtone leading to the gallery, 110 feet by 17, the floor of Haddon.

[g] Tour, p. 130-136. [h] Ib. p. 242. [i] Phil. Tranſ. vol. XLIX. p. 398.

which is ſaid to have been laid with boards cut out of one oak, which grew in the park. In one of the windows are the arms of England in the garter ſurmounted with a crown. In another are thoſe of the earl of Rutland, impaling Vernon with its quarterings, in the garter. In the ſame window are the arms of the earl of Shrewſbury alſo in the garter. In the eaſt window of the chapel were portraits of many of the family of Vernon, parts of which ſtill remain, and a date of Milleſimo ccccxxvii. In the north window Edwardus Vernon, and his arms; and in a ſouth window is Willmus Truſſell. In the great eaſt window, and others on each ſide of it, are ſome good remains of painted glaſs. At right angles within the gallery are three ſmaller apartments. All theſe rooms are ſtill hung with arras, which conceals their clumſy doors. At the other ſide of the drawing room were two or three other apartments handſomely fitted up, and joining it to the chapel, which has a low antechapel, a nave, two ailes, and a font. The reſt of the houſe is taken up with a number of ſmall rooms above and below for ſervants and retainers. Over the door of the great porch are cut in ſtone the arms of Vernon and Fulco de Pembridge lord of Tonge, c. Salop [k], whoſe daughter and heireſs Iſabel married ſir Richard Vernon, and brought him a great eſtate.

The rooms (except the gallery) are dark and uncomfortable, and give no favourable idea of our anceſtors' taſte of domeſtic pleaſures; yet was this place for ages the ſeat of magnificence and hoſpitality. It was at length quitted by its owners, the dukes of Rutland, for Belvoir caſtle in Lincolnſhire. The antient garden is but ſmall, conſiſting of parallel terraces placed one above another, each having a ſort of ſtone baluſtrade. The great park was ploughed up about twelve years ago [l].

For many generations Haddon was the ſeat of the Vernons, of whom ſir George, the laſt heir male, who lived in the time of queen Elizabeth, gained the title of King of the Peak, by his generoſity and noble manner of living. His ſecond daughter and heir Dorothy married John Manners, ſecond ſon of the firſt earl of Rutland, which title afterwards deſcended to their poſterity 1641. For more than one hundred years after the marriage this was the principal reſidence of the family, and the neighbourhood did not feel the loſs of their old patrons. So lately as the time of the firſt duke of Rutland (ſo created by queen Anne) ſeven ſcore ſervants were maintained; and during twelve days after Chriſtmas the houſe was kept open with the old Engliſh benevolence. This nobleman was ſo fond of the country that he rarely left it; and when he married his ſon to lord Ruſſell's daughter, made it an article in the ſettlement, that he ſhould forfeit part of the jointure if ſhe ever lived in town without his conſent. The character of this nobleman was truly great [m].

In the grounds was dug up an altar of rough ſtone, ſuch as the houſe is built of, with this inſcription, now quite evaneſcent, fixed in a dark part of the antechapel:

DEO
MARTI
BRACIACAE
OSITIUS
COECILIAN
PRAEFECT
TRO . . .
V. S.

Mr. Horſley takes Braciacæ for the name of a place [n]. Mr. Baxter and Mr. Pegge [o] rather think it is an epithet of Mars. This inſcription, with one or two more much broken and without any direction where found, were copied for biſhop Gibſon by Mr. Stonehouſe, rector of Darfield, c. York [p], whoſe large and valuable collection was purchaſed by Thomas lord Fairfax, and after his deceaſe by Mr. Thoreſby. Among the reſt was a large piece of bone, and a tooth dug up near Bradwall, about ſeven miles from Haddon. The tooth, though a quarter of an inch broke off, was 13 inches and an half in compaſs, weight 13lb. 10 oz. $\frac{1}{2}$, with which were found ſeveral other bones broken and diſperſed, and a very large ſcull. Dr. Johnſon wrote an eſſay on the tooth, which is ſuppoſed the grinder of an elephant [q].

At Overhaddon, which is the name of the village, Ov happened in the middle of the laſt century a caſe of extraordinary abſtinence; a girl, Martha Taylor, faſted for twelve months. An account of it was drawn up and publiſhed, 1660, by John Reynolds, addreſſed to the Royal Society, and dedicated to Dr. Walter Needham, proving that without any miracle the texture of human bodies may be ſo altered that life may be continued without the ſupplies of meat and drink [q]. A maiden of Confolens in Poitou faſted above three years in the beginning of that century [r].

Bakewell is at the foot of an hill; the church, Ba with a handſome ſpire, ſtanding on a little eminence makes a good appearance. In one of the chancels is a raiſed tomb for ſir George Vernon and his two wives, with their figures at full length recumbent on it; and againſt the wall are two magnificent monuments of alabaſter, one for ſir John Manners and Dorothy his wife, daughter and coheireſs of ſir George Vernon; the other for ſir George Manners and his wife (who erected it in her life-time) and their four ſons and five daughters, with all their figures. In the eaſt chancel is a ſmall raiſed tomb of alabaſter for John Vernon, ſon and heir of Henry Vernon, who died 12th of Auguſt, 1477. The font is of great antiquity, and the weſt arch of the church is of Saxon architecture [s].

Here was a chantry founded 44 Edward III. 1371, by ſir Godfrey Foljambe, knt. then living at Haſſop, and the gild of Holy Croſs at Bakewell, valued at the diſſolution at £. 4. per annum. The houſe engraved in the Antiquarian Repertory, vol. IV. p. 97, is now pulled down.

In the church-yard is an old croſs, ſaid to have been brought hither from ſome other place. On the upper part of the weſt face are viſible the remains of [k] Fretty impaled by Barry of 6 O. and Azure.

[l] Mr. King, Archæol. VI. 346—359. [m] Bray's Tour, 2d Ed. [n] P. 318. [o] Coins of Cunobelin, p. 17.
[p] Mr. Walter Stonehouſe was a great ſufferer in the civil war, being both diſplaced from his living and impriſoned.
[q] G. [q] One H. A publiſhed another tract on her caſe.
[r] See her caſe in Ames's Hiſtory of Printing, 541, in a tract printed 1603, with the like diſcuſſion.
[s] Bray, Ib. p. 154.

a cru-

a crucifix. On the top of the eaſt face a figure on horſeback like St. George. Below are other figures of very rude ſculpture and much damaged. The pariſh is ſo very large that it comprizes ten or twelve chapels of eaſe[t]. On the right hand of the bridle road hence to Chatſworth in a paſture is a ſquare plot with a tumulus, hollow at the top; part of the caſtle built by Edward the elder A.D. 924. Near the foot of the caſtle was lately found a copper bolt head or celt[u].

At Haſſop, two miles from Bakewell, in the Sheffield and Cheſterfield road, is a handſome ſeat of Thomas Eyre, eſq; in whoſe family it has been from 13 Henry VII. when it was purchaſed by his anceſtor of ſir Robert Plumpton of Plumpton. He purſues a plan begun by his father of making large plantations of trees[x].

Near two miles north or north-weſt beyond Bakewell is a village called Aſhford in the water. On a hill in this pariſh called Trincop is a large circular rampart encloſing the whole ſummit. On riſing the hill beyond the village (in the road to Tidſwell) a wall guards a precipice on the left, from whence is a moſt enchanting ſcene. The bottom is a narrow dale, called Monſall dale, running between the mountains on the left hand, fertilized by the little river Wye, which riſing near Buxton, about 10 miles off, finds its way between the hills, and runs through this dale, by Aſhford, Bakewell, and Haddon hall, into the Derwent. The deſcent from the point of view is ſteep and abrupt. The river runs through meadows, mixed with a few corn-fields, ſometimes of a conſiderable width, ſometimes narrowed by banks ornamented with fine trees; widening again it runs round a ſmall iſland; here it breaks over rocks, there it ſteals ſoftly along; and, twiſting in a thouſand meanders, is at length loſt behind the point of a hill; but the ſound of a conſiderable fall of its waters is heard. The ſide of the left hand hill, which is very ſteep, is in ſome parts of the fineſt turf, in others covered with underwood from the brow to the water's edge. The projecting hill, which is oppoſite, is of green turf, and after riſing to ſome heighth, becomes nearly flat; its plain is adorned with ſingle trees diſperſed over it, after which it riſes again[y].

At Aſhford a conſiderable work is carried on in poliſhing black marble dug there, and brown or yellow brought from the diſtance of about three miles. About 1748, one Mr. Watſon erected the mill for this purpoſe, the mechaniſm of which is very ingenious, and was his own invention. It both ſaws and poliſhes the marble. The black ſort which is dug here takes ſo fine a poliſh, that at firſt doing it might be taken for a looking-glaſs[z].

In 1759, in making a turnpike road through Wardlow village near Aſhford, on opening a heap of ſtones 32 yards diameter and about five feet high, that had been there time immemorial without any tradition concerning it, though manifeſtly a work of art, was found a monument to the memory of 17 or more perſons who had been there interred. The bodies appeared to have been laid on the ſurface of the ground on long flat ſtones ſeven feet and an half long, and their heads and breaſts protected from the incumbent weight of ſtone, by ſmall walls [or rather cheſts] made round them, with a flat ſtone on the top, excepting the two principal ones, which were completely incloſed in two ſtone cheſts about two feet high and ſeven feet long. On removing the rubbiſh, many jaw bones and teeth were found undecayed, but none of the larger bones. The ſtones of which theſe coffins were compoſed appeared plainly to have been taken from a quarry about a quarter of a mile diſtant. Near half the circle was vacant, which might be owing to accidental diſturbance by lying nearer the road or inattention on the firſt opening. The rev. Mr. Evatt of Aſhford, who communicated the account and drawing to the Royal Society 1761, ſuppoſed the circle later than the fence-wall above which interfered with part of it, and therefore referred it to the ſlain in the wars between the houſe of York and Lancaſter[a]. But it is much more probable that it was a family burial-place of the ſame kind with that at Repton in this county before-deſcribed, p. 306. Mr. Bray[b] draws a different concluſion from the poſition of the wall, and thinks it more likely that they would carry the wall ſtrait (eſpecially as the ſtones removed furniſhed materials for it, than that the monument ſhould be thrown up on both ſides of ſuch a wall and be intercepted by it. See Pl. IX. fig. 6.

Mr. Gale, in Philoſophical Tranſactions, N° 475, deſcribes a foſſil ſkeleton found in Lathkill dale near Bakewell.

At Stoney Middleton, the unuſual figure of the church, or rather chapel, which is an octagon, rebuilt 1759, ſtrikes the eye. It is a chapel of eaſe to the church of Hatherſage. Over the town is ſeen the ſmoak of the numerous kilns uſed for burning the rocks into lime for manure, by means of which the moſt barren of theſe hills are fertilized. Theſe kilns work only in the ſummer, except one which is conſtantly employed in burning lime for a ſmelting cupola here. It takes up two days to burn a kiln. The lime is drawn out at the bottom, and ſold for two-pence a ſtrike or buſhel. The men earn eight or ten ſhillings a week. Carts bring a load of ſlack (the ſmall part of the pitcoal) from about Sheffield and Cheſterfield, and receive for it a load of lime. Three ſtrikes of lime are conſidered as a load, and from forty to fifty loads are laid on an acre. Coals are ſold here for ſix-pence the hundred. Stoney Middleton.

In this village is a bath, called St. Martin's, nearly as hot as that of Buxton. It is incloſed by four walls, but is open at the top, and has been uſed by poor people with good ſucceſs in rheumatic caſes. There are alſo three warm petrifying ſprings on the weſt ſide of the church-yard and a chalybeat ſpring.

In the lead mines on the other ſide the mountain above theſe ſprings, and about two fathoms above the lead ore was a bed of boulder ſtones, any one of which being broken is found to contain from a gallon to half a pint of bitumen like Barbadoes tar, which melts to oil before the ſun or fire. There were alſo in the mines ſeveral ſprings that took fire with a candle, and would burn a week or fortnight, and all the water drilling through the ſtratum of boulder ſtones will take fire and burn many days. This bed was continued two or three miles all

[t] Bray, Ib. p. 155. Ecton.
[u] Bray, Ib. 156.
[x] Ib.
[y] Ib. p. 157, 158.
[z] Ib. p. 159.
[a] Phil. Tranſ. LII. part II. p. 544. See Pl. IX. fig. 6.
[b] Ubi ſup. p. 184, 185.

along

along Hucklow edge with its burning water. The firſt diſcovery of theſe ſtones happened by a workman breaking one of them. On the north ſide of the mountain oppoſite to theſe ſprings is a mine wh ch cannot be worked; for in picking or ſtriking the ore the ſudden ſhaking of the metal gives ſuch a violent motion to the ſulphur that it makes an exploſion like fired gunpowder[c].

Tidſwell. Tidſwell is a market town five miles north-eaſt of Buxton. John Danyel held the manor in fee farm by charter of king John[d]. Except two or three houſes the buildings are mean, but the church is large. In the chancel is a flat ſtone in memory of John, ſon of Thomas Foljambe, who did much towards building the church. The date is 1358. There is alſo a raiſed tomb (on which bread is given away every Sunday) for Samſon Meurrill, with a date of 1388, and another for Robert Purſglove, prior of Giſburn abbey, prebendary of Rotheram, and ſuffragan biſhop of Hull, who died 1579. In the ſouth tranſept is a tomb with whole-length figures of a man and woman, their names not known. A ſchool adjoins to the church yard. A ſmall clear ſtream runs through the town, coming down the valley from Buxton[e].

Here is a ſpring that ebbs and flows at uncertain times, twice or thrice in an hour after great rains; but in dry ſummers it entirely ceaſes. The well here mentioned is one of the wonders of the Peak. It is about a yard deep and broad, and the water riſes and falls three quarters of a yard. The water guſhes from ſeveral cavities at once, for the ſpace of five minutes. This phænomenon is occaſioned by the diſcharge of a ſubterraneous reſervoir, ſupplied by ſprings through a channel in the form of a ſiphon.

There being nothing remarkable in this ebbing and flowing well, beſides its ſecret ſupply with great quantities of water, which it throws out in ſudden gluts at uncertain times, even ſeveral times in an hour after great rains, and not once a week in dry weather, Dr. Short omitted it. It is hereby evident, however, that it has no communication with the ſea, nor its flux and reflux[f].

The deſcent of the hill to Caſtleton is long and ſteep. A fine vale is ſeen below, in which are two towns with handſome ſpires; but at the point of the hill, a ſhort turning to the left leads by a ſtill ſteeper road to Caſtleton, which appears on turning this point; the other town is called Hope. The church of this laſt place was granted by king John while earl of Moriton to the canons of Lichfield, to which grant he affixed his gold ring with a turquoiſe ſtone, which he uſually wore, and which is there expreſſed in the charter. "Non ſolum ſigilli "mei impreſſione ſed proprii annuli appoſitione robo-"ravi[g].

Hope.

At this point are ſome objects to be attended to. The vale below is of conſiderable width, fertile, and divided into cornfields and paſtures, watered by a rivulet which ſhews itſelf here and there. On the range of hills which riſe on the oppoſite ſide (and ſtretch away on the left to Caſtleton, terminating in a point called Mam Torr) near to Hope is a pointed knob, almoſt circular, round which is a trench, and nearer to Caſtleton is another, leſs conſpicuous. The former is called Win-hill, the latter Looſe-hill, from the event of a battle ſaid to have been fought between two parties poſted here, but who they were, or when it happened, the people cannot give any information.

On Win hill and Looſe hill are ſome ditches, whether for fences or ſlight temporary defence uncertain. About 1778 or 9, on removing large heaps of ſtones a little eaſt of Winhill pike, an urn of rude work ill baked, was found under them ſtanding on the ſurface of the ground, the top covered with a flat ſtone. At a dip of theſe hills, near Hope, the entrance of another dale is ſeen, which runs behind them, and is called Edale, of which hereafter. About a mile north of the Nether booth in Edale is a druidical tumulus, circular, about 66 feet diameter, 18 high, of rough ſtones of various ſizes, top hollow, four feet deep, ſix diameter, the inſide of the hollow black by fire, was deſtroyed a few years ago for the ſtones. It ſtood in a rough heathy paſture called the Nether More, on the ſummit of an hill, on one ſide of which is a level ground of 30 or 40 acres, at whoſe end at the foot of a circular mountain is a ditch about 660 yards long, ſloping to the other mountain. A few years ago a large ſtone lying on the ſide of the hill on the right of Edale village being removed, diſcovered 15 or 16 beads, about two inches diameter, one of amber, the reſt glaſs, ſome black and white, and of different colours[h].

Mam Torr is diſtinguiſhed by an abrupt precipice of brown ſtone, with a large area incloſed with a double trench running up to the edge of it. The vulgar ſtory is that this hill is continually crumbling, without being diminiſhed, and they call it The Shivering Hill, from the ſhivers of ſtone brought down by the froſt. That it is diminiſhed, and moſt viſibly ſo, I ſhall mention more particularly by and by. A more wonderful thing here is a rich lead mine, which though it has been worked much longer than any other which is known, ſtill abounds with ore, and finds employment for about 100 people[i].

Mam Torr ſtands on the right hand of the road from Caſtleton to Buxton about a mile. It is ſaid to be near 1000 feet above the level of Caſtleton valley[k]. In its bowels is the oldeſt mine worked in High Peak called Odin or Oder, perhaps Woden, from the great Saxon chief or deity[l]. The fore or eaſt part of this precipice is a frightful torr. On its weſt or back part is Adyn torr, the continual mouldering of which has carried off a large piece of the trenches on that ſide, as perhaps they never met on the foreſide. On the top and ſides of this hill is a camp, ſuppoſed to be Roman, of an oblong or pentagon form, running from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt, the broad end to the ſouth-weſt, where Mam Torr forms one part, Little Mam Torr the other, the ſmaller end to the north-eaſt on the ridge, which continues on towards Looſe hill. There has been a double trench all round it, but the ſouth corner is broken off by the falling of the earth at Great Mam Torr, and the weſt by that at Little Mam Torr, whereof remain to this day 1170 yards beſides what is decayed and fallen down; ſo that, ſuppoſing it to have been whole, it has not been leſs than 1650 yards in circumference. The inner trench is about 15 yards below the ſummit of the hill, on the very top whereof are two fine mounts about three [c] Bray, ib. 171—177.

[d] ex record E. II.
[e] Bray, p. 186, 187.
[f] Short's Hiſtory of the Mineral Waters of England, p. 29—34. notes.
[g] Dugdale, Warwickſh. p. 922. col. 1.
[h] Bray, p. 213, 214.
[i] Ib. 188.
[k] Whitehurſt's Enquiry, &c. p. 153.
[l] Mander.

yards higher. It is ſo contrived that it is impoſſible for ſo much as one man to riſe the hill undiſcovered, and far leſs any flying ſcouts or ſtraggling plunderers to come from any part to ſurprize the entrenchment undetected. The ſummit of the hill is not level, but runs in a ridge nearly from weſt to eaſt, along which is built a ſtone wall as a paſture fence now dividing the camp into two parts. The aſcent to it is very ſteep every way except at the north end, where the ditch croſſes the ridge. The principal entrance ſeems at the weſt corner very near the top of Little Mam Torr, but there is a track of an old road leading from Mam gate up the north ſide of the hill to a gate of about four yards wide at the ſmall end of the camp oppoſite to the other gateway. A third of like width, towards the north-weſt ſide, going down to Edale. Near the north-eaſt corner is a good ſpring. At the ſouth-weſt corner are two ſmall mounts within the camp. The trench is about 16 feet wide at bottom, and incloſes ſomething more than 16 acres. The whole circumference about 1200 yards. Mr. Aubrey mentions this camp in his Monumenta Britannica, and ſays that elephants' bones have been dug up near the hill. The mountain overtops the whole country, commands a proſpect over the whole Peak country, and into Staffordſhire, ſome parts of Yorkſhire, Cheſhire, and Lancaſhire. Its top is covered with corn mould two yards deep, then clay three quarters of a yard: after that a bed of ſhale and a row of iron ſtone alternately for about 20 yards lower: but the iron ſtone bed is ſtill the thickeſt, being often a yard, and the other not half ſo much: then begins an intermixture of ſhale and a mixed ſtone between iron ſtone and greet ſtone in beds of the ſame thickneſs, continuing to the foot of the Torr. Theſe ſtrata in this precipice lie all horizontally from north to ſouth, in the moſt exact order. In the upper part it is perpendicular, but in the lower it ſhelves or ſlopes, ſo as three ſtrong conceited youths in ſundry ages have attempted, and with imminent danger have climbed it. Its height from the top to the foot of the bare rocks is about 196 yards, or 456 feet, and from this to Caſtleton we may gueſs at 200 yards more. On the top it is about 60 yards broad, at the bottom of the running ſhale it is about 400 yards broad. It is daily mouldering down by the wind; for ſhale expoſed to the air a few days crumbles into very thin broad plates, ſo that the wind has carried up and covered the top of the mountain with it. It is as different from ſlate as ſpar or diamonds, for it corrodes and deſtroys all minerals near it except iron and coal, of whoſe vitriol it partakes, and has no ſolidity to be wrought upon. The above trench runs from the north ſide of Mam Torr along the ſouth ſide of the hill, north of Caſtleton: then turns ſouth, and croſſing the vale, falls in below the town, taking it and the caſtle in; then turns weſt, ſo goes up to Mam Torr; its whole circumference being about ſeven miles [m].

Little Mam Torr is 243 feet perpendicular. At the foot of it, near Mam gate, is a field called Hills paſture, from a number of ſmall hillocks irregularly diſperſed about it on the level ground. Among theſe were diſcovered a few years ago foundations of ſeveral buildings grown over with graſs. The ſtone was carried away to be uſed in other places; the walls were from 18 inches to two feet thick, compoſed of ſtone roughly hewn juſt enough to make them ſtick together with mortar or cement; ſeveral door ſills, one of them circular, about twenty-four feet diameter, with a door on the ſouth ſide. Eight feet weſt of it a ſmall building, containing three ſides of an oblong ſquare, one end open, the whole incloſed by an irregular triangular wall, the longeſt ſide about 50 yards. Near this were two other buildings nearly ſquare, wider at one end than at the other, the ſmalleſt end 12 feet, the other three ſides 18 feet each, the ſmall end of one to the ſouth, of the other to the weſt. At a little diſtance from the wide end of each is a heap of ſtone or rubbiſh, ſix feet long, and one high, covered with graſs. Two other larger buildings of irregular ſhape. From this camp a ditch is carried down the ſouth ſide of the hill croſs the valley to Micklow hill about three miles off, and thence ſouth-eaſt by ſouth croſſing the Bathom gate, and a ſtream riſing at Bradwell, and running by Brough. It goes in a ſtrait line to Shatton or Bradwell edge, about three miles more. It is called the Grey ditch, and probably was a prætentura. On the ſide of Mam Torr hill it is very viſible, but deſtroyed by the plough in many places in the valley; yet from Muklow hill to Chetton edge it is plainly ſeen. The ſlope or front towards Brough is about 20 feet high, and 12 broad at top. Pieces of ſpears, ſwords, ſpurs, and bridle bits have been found on both ſides, and very near it, between Bathom gate and Bradwell water. Juſt where it croſſes the former on the eaſt ſide of it is a large limeſtone rock, called Iden, or Eden tree, where it is ſaid one king Eddin had a houſe. One hundred yards from this ſpring is a ſaltiſh, purgative, clear cold ſpring, uſed with ſucceſs in ſcorbutic and ulcerous complaints by the poor, which runs into Bradwell water at a part of it vulgarly called Bird's waſh, perhaps Burgh waſh, a little before it joins the Nooe. On the point of land formed by the junction of theſe two ſtreams was the Roman ſtation called Brough or Burgh. The road called Bathom gate went hence to Buxton, and is plain for a mile from Brough parallel to the preſent road to Smaldale. After croſſing Grey ditch it turns north-weſt up the hill to the moor on this ſide Bathom edge, where it is plainly ſeen, and again for a mile on the Buxton ſide of the edge, and again, near Buxton, where the rev. Mr. John Watſon, 1772 [n], found a Roman ſtation unnoticed before, nor deſcribed by him. Where this road is moſt intire it meaſures 18 feet over compoſed of ſmall flinty gravel different from the natural ſoil. At the Dam of the foreſt, or Chapel of the foreſt, a few yards within Hernſtone lane, it enters the encloſures on the left, plainly diſcernable by the colour of the graſs till it enters that ſtrait lane that goes to Fairfield. Afterwards it winds to the left towards Fairfield, and proceeds by that village to Buxton, where it ends. There is no trace of a road to the north or north-eaſt of Brough, and therefore Mr. Pegge [o] concludes that it was only a communication between Brough and Buxton on Tideſwell moor, about 11 Italian miles in length. But Mr. Watſon [p] deſcribes a road from Melandra caſtle to Brough, called the Doctor's gate, which goes thence to a place in Yorkſhire called the Doctor's head, where it joined the great Roman road from Mancheſter to York.

Brough is a ſmall hamlet in Hope pariſh. The caſtle lies a little north of this road, communicating Brough.

[m] Short, p. 32.
[n] Bray, ubi ſup. p. 204—207.
[o] Account of Roman roads in Derbyſhire, p. 10—12.
[p] Archæol. III. 237.

with it from the ſouth corner. Many foundations have been ploughed up, and bricks between the caſtle and river. On the other ſide urns have been found. Mr. Pegge ſaw 1761 rude buſts of Apollo and another deity in ſtone found in the fields, with a coarſe pavement compoſed of tile and cement in the lower of the two fields, called Halſteds, at the confluence of Bradwell brook and the Nooe, and in the other were marks of an oblong ſquare building, whoſe angles were of rude grit ſtone, and the area covered with bricks and tiles, and here was found a fragment of Roman pavement, and alſo a fragment of a tile inſcribed O H, part of the word Cohors, a brick 8 inches by $7\frac{3}{4}$, and $1\frac{3}{4}$ thick, with C H fair in the middle, and a broken one with C. Mr. Wilſon of Bromehead hall near Sheffield has a piece of an urn found here inſcribed, and part of a fine red patera. In a field at the conflux of the two ſtreams a double row of pillars is remembered to have croſſed the point of land, but they have been entirely deſtroyed ſome time. On the left of a gate by the road ſide near the mill is a baſe and part of a column of grit ſtone, and on the ground by the gate lay a baſe or plinth, with part of a column on it, and a torus moulding to a pedeſtal ſerves now to cover a well. Two large well preſerved urns full of aſhes were found, and a third two years ago, and before that a half length figure of a woman in grit ſtone, the arms folded acroſs the breaſt. In 1780 at the north corner of the caſtle, a baking ſtone, ſuch as now uſed in the country for baking oat bread. Oppoſite the ſtation on the ſouth ſide Bradwell water a few houſes retain the name of Brough, where the common people ſay king Peverel had a houſe, meaning William Peverel [q]. At Brough, about 20 years ago, were dug up ſome Saxon idols [r].

VIA VIV
TR

The moors of Hope pariſh afford an extraordinary inſtance of the preſervation of human bodies buried in them. One Barber, a grafier, and his maid-ſervant going to Ireland in 1674, were loſt in the ſnow, and remained covered with it from January to May, when they were ſo offenſive that the coroner ordered them to be buried on the ſpot. About twenty-nine years afterwards ſome countrymen probably having obſerved the extraordinary property of this ſoil in preſerving dead bodies, had the curioſity to open the ground, and found them no way altered, the colour of the ſkin fair and natural, their fleſh ſoft as that of perſons newly dead. They were expoſed for a ſight during the courſe of twenty years following though they were much changed in that time by being ſo often uncovered. In 1716, Dr. Henry Bourn, M.B. of Cheſterfield ſaw the man perfect, his beard ſtrong and about a quarter of an inch long, the hair of his head ſhort, his ſkin hard and of a tanned leather colour pretty much the ſame as the liquor and earth they lay in. He had on a broad cloth, of which he tried in vain to tear off a ſkirt. The woman was more decayed having been taken out of the ground and rudely handled: her fleſh particularly decayed, her hair long and ſpringy like that of a living perſon: he took out one of her fore teeth, the upper part of which as far as contained in the ſocket was as elaſtic as a piece of ſteel, and being wrapt round his finger ſprung again to its firſt form, but this power was loſt in a few minutes after it had been in his pocket. Mr. Barber of Rotheram, the man's grandſon, had both bodies decently buried in Hope church, and upon looking into the grave ſome time afterwards, it was found they were entirely conſumed. Mr. Wermald, the miniſter of Hope, was preſent at their removal. He obſerved that they lay in about a yard deep in moiſt ſoil or moſs, but no water ſtood in the place. He ſaw their ſtockings drawn off, and the man's legs which had never been uncovered before were quite fair: the fleſh when preſſed by his finger pitted a little, and the joints played freely and without the leaſt ſtiffneſs. The other parts were much decayed. What was left of their clothes not cut off for curioſity was firm and good: the woman had on a piece of new ſerge which ſeemed never the worſe [s].

On the ſouth ſide the Merſey or Edrow in Gloſſop pariſh near Woolley bridge, is a Roman ſtation called Melandra caſtle, 122 yards by 112; the ramparts three yards broad, the ditches on the ſouth and ſouth-eaſt ſides partly remaining; the area called Caſtle-yard, and eleven fields adjoining the Caſtle carrs. The four entrances very viſible, and within is the ſite of the prætorium 25 yards ſquare. The road runs from Brough hither; the track ſtill uſed; another to Buxton, and perhaps a third into Yorkſhire. At the eaſt angle was found this inſcription on a ſtone 16 inches by 12, now in a farm-houſe wall [t].

The Rykeneld or Ikeneld ſtreet runs through this county by Derby and Cheſterfield into Yorkſhire. This is the ſecond ſtreet of the name in Britain; and in an old ſurvey or map of the country about Tupton moor made in the laſt century, it is called Rignall-ſtreet. Ad Trivona, a ſtation placed by Richard of Cirenceſter 12 miles from Derbentio, is Streeton on Trent, where the road enters the county, and croſſes Egginton heath to Derby or Little Cheſter by Little Over, down Darley ſlade to the Derwent; thence over Morley moor by Horſley park lodge to Pentrich by a ſquare camp with a double vallum on Pentrich common to Higham in Shirland, Stretton, Egſtow, a farm of ſir Henry Hunloke's, to the middle of whoſe avenue it points; and thereabouts in 1700 was found a braſs celt, now in his poſſeſſion. Between this place and Cheſterfield it cannot be traced. At Higham or Linbury was probably a ſtation, whoſe name, though not the diſtance, is loſt in Richard, and which Stukeley places at Alfreton. Ravennas puts Lugudarum or Lutudaron next to Derbentio, and

[q] Bray ubi ſup. p. 210—212.
[r] King in Archæol. VI. 248.
[s] Dr. Balguy in Phil. Tranſ. N° 434. p. 415.
[t] Archæol. III. p. 236.

Baxter makes this Chesterfield. If the station was here it might be at Tapton, called Castle hill, though the road is carried by common tradition to Kilmarsh cross the river into Yorkshire [u].

Castleton, and the cultivated country about it inclosed with green hedges, viewed from the hills near the caverns, affords a beautiful prospect. Though a small poor town at the foot of a hill, it has a good church and inn, and a house belonging to John Bagshaw, esq.

The remains of the castle stand on the point of the rock jutting over the mouth of the great cavern on the south and west sides 87 yards perpendicular. The outer walls of the keep in the south-west corner 55 feet high and 8 thick, with part of a staircase in them, are pretty entire; as is also the outer casing of freestone in many places. The ascent to it was by a narrow winding path up a most formidable steep, and the castle walls possess nearly the whole summit. The great gate on the east side is destroyed, and there appear to have been no buildings within the area, but only two little turrets and the keep; which last is only about 20 feet square within, and consists of two rooms. In the uppermost Mr. King [x] imagined he found an idol cell, in which he was confirmed by the discovery of some Saxon idols at Brough 18 years ago. But not to insist that these idols might be Roman lares or penates, we have no authority for placing any religious apartment in our castles prior to the introduction of Christianity among us. This castle must have been built with prodigious labour, the stone being brought from the hill on the opposite side of the town, and the approach being very difficult. The hills behind it are much higher, and seem to command it entirely; but there is a great chasm between those hills and the castle, and the only way of getting at it is by the ascent from the town, or by a very narrow pass on the side next the cavern. There is no appearance of a well within the walls. There is some water on the hill above, but it is beyond the precipice on which the castle stands; and how it could be fetched, if any enemy was near, is not easy to be guessed. Within the wall there is a little herring-bone ornament. This castle is ascribed to William Peverel, natural son of the Conqueror, who spent a Christmas here [y]. It seems to have been sometimes called the castle of Hope, of which John earl of Warren and Surrey was governor 18 Edward I. and John his grandson and successor had a grant of the castle and honor of Peke in as ample a manner as Peverel had before it escheated to the king [z]. It was taken from the barons 16 John by William de Ferrars great grandson of Margaret daughter and heir of William Peverel; and in the reign of Henry III. the custody of it was granted to Bryan de Lisle, who was much trusted by that prince [a]. It was used for keeping the mine court records till removed to Tutbury t. Elizabeth. An entrenchment beginning at the lower end of the valley inclosed the town, ending at the great cavern forms a semicircle, there called the Town Ditch. Here, at Burgh, and at Hope, are some chalybeat springs [b].

Dr. Short gives the following description of this castle [c]:

"The castle, which gives name to the town, is situate on the top of the rising ground on the south side of the town. It is about 100 yards higher than the village, and has either been a watch tower, armory, or fort, having no chimnies or other necessary conveniencies of habitation. The wall still remains at its first height, having besides the roof two other floors, each about sixteen feet high. Its length within from east to west is eight yards, without twelve and a half: from north to south eleven and a half, and seven within, with a very narrow stone stair within one corner of the wall. It has only one small room on a floor, with two small narrow lights on each fortified and inaccessible side. It is built all of the hardest freestone, which must have been a Herculean labour, first to bring them, and then to get them up to this place, there being no such stone in that country. The inside has never been plaistered, but only faced with smooth stones, cut a yard above and below the lights on each side full of antique figures which I could make nothing of. On the north side is the castle yard, from east to west between two and three hundred yards, and from north to south about one hundred and fifty. The castle and yard are fortified on the east by the castle cave, over which as Cotton tells us Tom Wilson and his master's mare tumbled. This cave is a small streight, shut up on both sides by great precipices of limestone rocks, open above, and about 200 yards broad at the narrowest place: at bottom is a most charming green walk, from 15 to 50 yards wide, and half a mile long. From the top of the torr before the castle gate is about sixty yards high. On the west side it is fortified by that shocking torr over the entry of Peak's hole. On the north side has formerly been another inaccessible rock, now covered with earth and the ruins of the castle-yard wall. On the south side was the entry into the castle, by a drawbridge, over a deep gulph cut out of the rock, accessible only by a small isthmus from the mountain above."

The ascent from Castleton is exceedingly steep; a small vale appearing beneath, in the center of which spires Hope steeple, on the margin of a meandering brook that issues from the cavern, called the Nooe.

Devil's Arse.

Two hundred yards from the surface of the ground is the entrance of the Devil's Arse, an irregular imitation of a Gothic furbast arch, whose extreme height is 30 yards, width 50. About 120 yards from this entry is Russet well, which rises with such impetuosity that it repels flat stones or pieces of wood thrown into it. The face of the rock over the entry is in the middle 89 yards and an half high. At 35 yards from the mouth are some wretched cottages; on a terrace below which is a blackish stream in a stoney bottom, running out of [u] Pegge on the Roman roads in the country of the Coritani, p. 2—10.

[x] King on Castles, Archæol. VI. 248—250.
[y] Dugd. Bar. I. 81. "Castrum de alto pecco est escheat. de Henrico Peverel. Comes de Ferrariis tenet illud cum tota foresta per donum reg. Johannis." Inquisit. 26 E. I. Cotton MS. Julius. C. VII. In Domesday, fol. 276. a. it is called "castellum in pechesers."
[z] Dugd. Ib I. 261. [a] Ib. I. 737. [b] Bray, p. 189—196.
[c] Short on mineral waters, p. 30, 31.

a cave.

a cave. 40 yards from the cottages begins a gentle deſcent of a ſand-bank. The cave here is 28 yards wide, and a little on this ſide is a very rude reſemblance of a bacon flitch. The roof declines here ſo as to require ſtooping

This celebrated cavern is viſited without danger, and with much leſs trouble than may be imagined by thoſe who have not gone into it. The mouth, in which are a few huts of ſome packthread-ſpinners, is 40 yards wide, and 14 high. Immediately within this arch is a cavern of the ſame height, 40 yards wide, and above 100 in length. At 150 yards the roof ſlopes down to about two feet from the ſurface. Here you come to the firſt water 14 inches deep, which is croſſed in a boat or kind of trough about a foot deep and juſt 15 inches and an half long, filled with ſtraw, on which the paſſenger muſt lie down on his back, the rock not allowing him to ſit upright. This is puſhed forward by a man who wades through the water. There is a way by the ſide through which one may paſs ſtooping very low, but often ſtopped with floods. This river is 16 yards over, and the rock beyond it riſes two yards and a half, to the height of 40 yards, and 70 wide, having ſeveral high openings in its roof. The ſtream is croſſed ſeven times before reaching the extremity, ſometimes on ſtepping ſtones, once on mens' backs. In one place the ſtream is loſt in a quickſand, but emerges again. The deepeſt part of the cave is 207 yards from the ſurface of the hill above. After croſſing on the guide's back a ſecond water, nine yards and a half broad, 87 yards from the firſt you come under three regular natural arches to a third cavern called Roger Rain's houſe, becauſe of the perpetual dropping. About the midway is a lofty vault on the right called The Chancel, 19 yards from the ſurface, on coming to which you are ſurpriſed with a number of lights above you, and a ſong by ſeveral men who have taken another path to it. At the ſide of this cavern, at the top of a ſteep rugged ſtoney aſcent, a ſmall irregular hole leads into a long, narrow, and very high cavern, which has ſurpriſing openings of various ſhapes on the top, but is not viſited by the generality of travellers. The ſecond river is 17 yards over, and four feet deep, fordable by great ſtepping ſtones, or at moſt only ancle deep, over which you are carried on the guide's back. Beyond this is a bank of brown ſand or clayey mud ſloping down for 50 yards to a cavern called the Devil's Cellar, in the roof of which is a large opening, through which the ſmoke of fires made in it has been ſeen to eſcape out of the rock above ground. Hence you advance under a low roof to an opening in the roof like a bell, and called Tom of Lincoln, and others ſimilar: at the farther end of which is the ſwallow that drinks the water that runs along the cave ſide, then to a channel with a clear ſtream which Cotton calls the third river, whoſe bank is a narrow ſlippery rock of the ſame ſand, on which you walk ſtooping. This leads to lower ground, over which the rock is ſo formed as to preſent a view through piazzas 70 yards long, terminating at the third river, where the rock cloſes, and the water beat back by the guide is heard after ſome interval to rebound from it very loudly. The proprietor of this curious cavity, having concluded from the ſound that there is another at no great diſtance, is endeavouring to effect a communication by gunpowder. In the rainy ſeaſon the water riſes in it above ſix feet. Theſe rivers are ſupplied by a ſtream which riſes without the cavern, and may be heard falling into it near the bell. The length of the whole cavern is 480 yards, the narroweſt part three yards, the thickneſs of ground above it 70 yards. At the diſtance of about 750 yards from the entrance, the rock comes down ſo cloſe to the ſurface of the water that it precludes all further paſſage. Not long ſince a gentleman determined to try if he could not dive under this rock, and riſe in the cavern which is ſuppoſed to be ſtill beyond it. He plunged in, but, as might be expected, ſtruck his head againſt the rock, and fell motionleſs to the bottom, from which the attendants, with difficulty, dragged him out [d].

Dr. Short gives the following deſcription of this cavern [e]:

"Peak's Hole, or the Devil's Arſe in the Peak, is five miles from Poole's hole, juſt by Caſtleton, on the ſouth or ſouth-weſt ſide of the town. About ſix ſcore yards before you come to the entry, on the left hand is the Ruſſet well, which riſes up with ſuch an impetuous force, that it throws back great heavy broad ſtones or pieces of wood thrown into it. It throws out a quantity of water ſufficient for three or four overſhot mills. Its depth I could not take, being filled up with great ſtones. It is about a yard over, and riſes from below the caſtle yard, and whether this might not be the ſpring that ſupplied the caſtle above with water, or whether the third river in the caves does not diſcharge itſelf this way, or whether both, is uncertain. However, it forms a large brook, or rivulet, which runs through the town, and has a ſtone bridge over it. Over the entrance both before and on each hand is certainly the moſt auguſt and awful front in the univerſe, being fifty-two yards and a half perpendicular rock on the right hand, and ſeventy-five and a quarter on the left, and directly in front from the caſtle wall to the ground is eighty-nine yards and a half. The precipice which ſlopes down all the way on the left hand from the caſtle is above 200 yards long, that on the right above 100. The breadth of the outer entry is above 40 yards, about 30 high, and all a ſloping bank from the bottom on the left hand to the ſide of the rock on the right, where is the foot-way in. From the fall of the drop at the entry to the faireſt of the four poor cottages within the cave's mouth is 35 yards and three quarters. Theſe cottages were formerly ten, but now reduced to four, only covered over with ſtraw and ruſhes, no walls nor chimnies, but a few ſtones cobbled up about three feet high. A little from the faireſt cottage to the top of the ſteps or top of a gentle deſcent on a ſand bank is thirty-nine yards and a half. The breadth of the cave is here twenty-eight yards. A little on this ſide is the Flitch of Bacon, though not like one. Oppoſite to it on the left hand is the entry into another ſmall cave called the Swine hole, twenty-eight yards and a half long, two wide, and two high. This has the ſmoothеſt drieſt roof of all, being directly under the caſtle. When you are got in 28 yards you come to the four cave ends, where you have one cave going ſtrait forward, but ſo filled with ſtones brought thither by great floods of the rivers in the hole that I could not get into it. On the left hand is another cave, no end whereof I could ſee. On the right hand is a third with a very good roof and floor of the ſame rock. Here I ventured to creep in 20 yards on knees and elbow elbows, and might have gone further had I taken to the belly; for it reaches the firſt river, and in that twenty yards there went off two other ſmall caves on the left hand, but I could not trace them. From the top of the ſteps to the bottom is twenty-nine yards and a half; from this to the river ſide along a ſand bank 46 yards and a half. Here it is twenty yards broad and ten high; but both height and breadth contract the river, the firſt not being above half a yard above water, the latter only eight yards. This firſt river, at the ſide of the rock on the left hand, is only 14 inches deep; on the right hand two yards and a half. The rock ſlopes down within 15 inches of the water, and in a flood it dips in. This river is ſixteen yards and a half over; the rock at the far ſide is about four inches higher; but three yards beyond it is two yards and a half high, and nine broad. From the farther ſide of this river you either aſcend a very rough ſteep way on the right hand to the chancel, or go ſtraight forward on a level to the ſecond river, which is forty yards, at midway whereof the cave is forty yards wide. The ſecond river is three yards wide, ſeventeen over, four feet deep. The entry into it is two yards and a half high; or if you aſcend on the right hand from the firſt river, it is thirty-five yards and a half long, and the entry into it ſix yards wide. From this entry to the level below at the ſecond river, it is twenty yards and a quarter high; the narroweſt place in the chancel is two yards and a quarter, and from three to four yards and a quarter high; a very ſmooth roof, with ſeveral petrefactions, and turned at the top like an arch. From the chancel to the level at the other ſide of the ſecond river is forty-two feet and a half; the farther end of the roof of the ſecond water is yet five feet higher. Beyond the ſecond river is a large high ſtately opening, with petrefactions ſpangling on the roof and ſides of the arch, which is 20 yards high. Then you come to the ſandy hills and the Devil's cellar, which are ſixty yards long, at the farther end of which is the ſwallow mouth which drinks in the water that runs along the cave's ſide. Then you come to the arches, which are 70 yards long. Then to a place ſo high that no roof is viſible: thence to the Devil's church and ſteeple; ſo on to Tom of Lincoln, and the figures of other fine bells all in arch work: thence to the third river, upon which the rock dipping down there is no further paſſage. The whole length of this cave is 480 yards."

[d] Bray, 196—199. James Ferguſon in Gent Mag. XLII. 518.

[e] Ubi ſup. p. 30.

At the foot of Mam Torr is another cavern called Water-hull, into which the people will uſe their endeavours to prevail on the traveller to deſcend. The deſcent, however, is very dirty and difficult, and there is not any thing at the bottom worth ſeeing. They get out of it ſome blue john, uſed for vaſes, &c. by the poliſhers; and petrifactions, amongſt which are ſome exactly reſembling the bones, vertebræ, and ſhells of fiſhes of various ſorts, cockles, oyſters, pectunculi, patellæ, and the nautilus; ſnails, ſtars, ſkrews, and various ſtriated figures; and pieces of the capſulæ of inſects, like thoſe of butterflies [f].

Caſtleton is a royal manor, leaſed to the duke of Devonſhire. Lady Maſſareen, daughter and heir of Henry Eyre, eſq; of Derby, and widow of the late lord Maſſareen, has conſiderable property here, and particularly a leaſe from the crown of a large tract of common, which has been incloſed, and is now good land.

A level is driving through a hill between the caſtle and Mam Torr, in the King's Field, which is carried on in the manner of the duke of Bridgewater's at Worſley-mill, and under the direction of Mr. Gilbert, his manager there. But the duke has this advantage, that his ſubterraneous canal is on a level with, and forms the outer canal, whereas here the water is all under ground, and runs to waſte, and at the mouth the rubbiſh carried ſo far by the boats is drawn up in buckets. To avoid the neceſſity of going into the grounds of the freeholders, they ſunk a ſhaft of about ten yards, and then found chinks enough in the rock below to carry off all the water that can come down. There is a flight of wide ſtone ſteps down to the water. Eight men are employed, who work about a fathom in a week. The expence is about fifty ſhillings a yard; but no difficulty, danger, or expence, can damp the ardour of the undertakers in this buſineſs. Between Matlock and Rooſley one is carrying on which has already coſt 10,000*l.* and ſcarce a third of the work is done, through the hill near Darley bridge, a rock of ſuch hardneſs that tools will ſcarcely touch it. The whole is performed by the tedious proceſs of blaſting with gunpowder, and even this is ſo impeded by the great quantity of water and moiſture, that the powder muſt be incloſed in tin pipes [g].

The hills on the different ſides of the town produce ſtone of very different quality. Thoſe on the ſouth, on one of which the caſtle ſtands, furniſh a ſtone which burns into lime, and is uſed for manure; thoſe on the north yield a grit-ſtone fit for building. The hill on the north, viewed at a diſtance, appears brown and barren, but is in fact very good paſture. The Yorkſhire drovers bring their cattle here the beginning of May, and keep them all the ſummer, paying about thirty ſhillings a head for their feed. It is not very eaſy to climb this hill, but it is worth the labour. Caſtleton-dale ſpreads as you aſcend, and on gaining the ſummit a ſequeſtered valley called Edale opens to the view in a beautiful manner. It is wide and fertile, the incloſures running up the ſides of the hills, and yearly increaſing. Other ſmall dales come into it from between other hills, and their verdure is contraſted by the brown tops of the yet uncultivated ridges. Near the end of one of theſe is the principal part of the village of Edale, and an humble chapel without ſpire or tower. A rivulet runs down by it, ſhewing itſelf in many places, and by the noiſe of its fall directs to a mill placed in a little grove. Two or three other clumps of houſes, and ſmall tufts of trees, and another ſtreamlet falling into this, enliven the ſcene. From hence various other dales branch off to what is called The Woodland of Derbyſhire, through which no high road has yet been made. This tract is of great extent, but much of it has been cleared of late, and the plough introduced, by the duke of Devonſhire, to whom it moſtly belongs [h]. Edale.

Oats is the only corn they ſow, which they do three or four years together on the gritſtone ſide, and ſix or ſeven on the limeſtone ſide, and then lay it down into graſs, in which ſtate it continues from four to ſix years before it is ploughed again. When they break up new ground on the hills, they denſhire[i] and lime it, or lime it only, which is found to kill the heath; and it does not fail to produce good crops[k].

[f] Bray, ubi ſup. 199.
[g] Ib. 213, 214.
[h] Ib. 200.

Haſelberge. Haſelberge, an hill near the Peak, is ſaid to change in three years time the hair of ſuch cattle as feed thereon to a grey colour[l].

Hobbes has comprized the wonders of the Peak in one line:

Ædes, mons, barathrum, binus fons, antraque bina.

Houſe, mountain, pit, two fountains, and two caves[s].

Through a wild and romantic avenue, the correſpondence of the oppoſite ſides of which ſuggeſts the idea that they have been ſeparated by a convulſion of nature, you at length deſcend into a fertile valley, encircled by mountains.

Elden hole. A mile ſouth of Mam Torr, and four miles eaſt of Buxton in the ſide of a graſſy hill, is that terrible perpendicular gulph or chaſm in a lime-ſtone rock Elden hole, which Dr. Short tried to plumb at ſeven different ſtations, at ſix whereof he could only reach 192 yards; from the ſeventh he plumbed it ſeveral times, and could only get 295 yards down, about 40 of which ſeemed to be in water. This place is 40 yards long above ground, and 10 over at the broadeſt: 40 yards from the day begins the mouth of the chaſm, not above four yards long and one and an half broad. About eight yards below this grip on the left hand opens a moſt diſmal and frightful cave, where one no ſooner enters than he ſeems loſt in a ſpacious boundleſs ſubterraneous abyſs of both ſpace and horror, which one wants words to expreſs, and, no doubt, theſe again communicate with others. Three ſtones being let fall perpendicularly into it, the time taken by the ſound, from the delivery to the ear, was 9″ 11″ 10‴. Dr. Halley ſays, that heavy bodies near the earth fall 16 feet and an half in one ſecond. The meaſure of ſound in one ſecond is 1142 feet. Hence, from a compound equation of the deſcending body and aſcending ſound, we trace it little more than 1266 feet or 422 yards deep. This cavern ſeems to have been occaſioned by ſome ſhake, as they are called here, or depreſſion of the earth, of which the cauſe is this. When the ſubterraneous paſſage which carries off the circulating water from theſe inviſible caverns is plugged up ſo that its vent is irrecoverably ſtopped, water being an incompreſſible body, its weight and preſſure on every ſide, eſpecially when the weight of ſeveral columns of water of different lengths are added to it and the cave full, the prodigious preſſure muſt and will force ſome vent, but the water having lifted up the earth above it, when once the firſt has got vent the laſt ſubſides. Theſe ſhakes and caverns are in the drieſt hardeſt places, as Dr. Short obſerved in ſeveral of them in this county[m].

Mr. Lloyd, who examined this cavern more attentively, gives the following deſcription of it.

The entrance of Elden hole is a chink about 30 yards long from north to ſouth, and nine wide. For the firſt 20 yards Mr. Lloyd deſcended obliquely; afterwards the paſſage was difficult by projecting craggs. When he had deſcended ten yards more, he found his rope at leaſt ſix yards from the perpendicular. From hence the breadth of the chink was about three yards, and the length ſix, the ſides irregular, moſs-grown, and wet. Within 14 yards of the bottom the rock opened on the eaſt, and he ſwung till he reached the floor of the cave, 62 yards from the mouth, the light from whence was ſufficient to read any print. The cavern conſiſts of two parts, one like an oven, the other like a dome of a glaſs houſe, communicating with each other by a ſmall arched paſſage. The diameter of the cavern may be above fifty yards, the height not viſible. On the ſouth ſide of the ſecond cavern was a ſmaller, about four yards long, and two high, lined with a ſparkling ſtalactites of deep yellow. A noble column above 90 feet high of the ſame incruſtation faced the firſt entrance. To the north lay a large ſtone covered with the ſame ſubſtance, as was a hole two yards under it, from whoſe edge ſprung a rocky buttreſs of vaſt ſolid maſſes againſt the ſide. Here alſo were various piles of incruſtations, which are of three kinds, the deep yellow ſtalactites, a thin coating covering the limeſtone like varniſh, and a rough efflorescence. In the floor of the great cavern had been a ſecond ſhaft covered by the miners, but formerly reaching a great depth to water, ſuppoſed to be a continuation of the ſubterraneous river that runs out of Caſtleton cave, which there diſcharges quantities of griſtone found only about Elden hole. Notwithſtanding the accident to Leiceſter's man in the reign of Elizabeth no damps are there now[n].

By the cuſtom of the miners, any one who finds a ſpot unworked, which he thinks likely to produce a vein of lead, though in another man's field, may put down a little wooden croſs called a ſtoter or ſtow, and enter his name with the proper officer, who ſets out a certain number of meers (a meer is twenty-nine yards), and he is then at liberty to work it, ſink pits, and lay the rubbiſh about ſixteen yards on each ſide as he proceeds. If he does not work it, and another has a mind to try his fortune, he goes to the officer, tells him ſuch a ſpot is not worked, and deſires him to nick it. The officer, with two of a jury of twenty-four, who are ſworn for the purpoſe of attending to this buſineſs, go to the ſpot, cut a nick in the croſs, and give notice to the firſt undertaker that they ſhall go again at ſuch a time for the ſame purpoſe. If no notice is taken, they go a ſecond and third time, after which the property is veſted in the new adventurer, ſubject to the like rules.

The lead ore when brought out of the mine is broken with heavy hammers on a ſtone called a knock-ſtone, then put into a wooden ſieve, and rinced in a large tub. The ore falls through, and leaves the lighter rubbiſh, which is ſkimmed off, thrown out at a hole in the wall, and thence taken to the buddle, where it is rinced again by a ſmall current of water, the lead falling to the bottom. What is carried down by the current is waſhed once more in the ſame manner, and the depoſit here, which is almoſt as fine as flour, is called belland. The beating and firſt rincing is done by women, who work nine hours in the day, and earn about ſeventeen pence, and the men about eight ſhillings a week.

After all this is gone through, an officer known by the name of the Barmaſter comes on behalf of the lord of the manor, and takes the proportion due to him, which is, in ſome places, every tenth, in

[i] See vol. I. p. 32.
[k] Bray, p. 201.
[l] Ray's letters, p. 346.
[s] G.
[m] Short, ubi ſup. p. 34.
[n] Phil. Tranſ. lxi. art. 31. Gent. Mag. 1772. xlii. 583.

ſome

ſome every thirteenth, in others every twentieth or twenty-fifth diſh; and till this is done, none can be removed or ſold. A diſh or hoppet is a peck, or ſixteen pints in the High Peak, and fourteen in the Low; nine diſhes make a load, and four of theſe a horſe load. When the dues are thus taken, the ore is carried to the ſmelting-houſe and run into pieces, two of which are called a pig, and weigh about eleven ſtone. Sixteen pieces make a fother, the weight of which is different according to the market it is deſigned for; to London, nineteen hundred and an half; to Hull, twenty-four hundred; to other places, the medium between theſe two. The price is, however, the ſame, and this difference in the weight is made to anſwer the expence of carriage, which is paid by the owner. On an average the fother is worth £.16 or 17. The lead is moſtly carried to the navigation of the river Donn or to Cheſterfield, to be ſent to market.

Pieces of ore of about the ſize of nutmegs are called bing; a ſmaller ſort peſey: in a ſtill ſmaller ſtate it is called ſmitham. Some years ago the miners contended that toll was not to be taken of this laſt; but as they had it in their power to reduce as much as they pleaſed to that ſize, they would have annihilated the toll. The duke of Devonſhire, therefore, who is leſſee of the crown throughout the High Peak, tried the queſtion, and ſucceeded. By this determination he is intitled to the thirteenth diſh of the whole, but he takes no more than a twenty-fifth, except occaſionally to aſſert his right. Mr. Rowles, who is leſſee of the crown in the Low Peak, has had the ſame diſpute, but takes the thirteenth.

The ore is run into pieces either in ſmelting-houſes or cupolas. The latter were introduced near fifty years ago, and are conſidered as leſs prejudicial to the health of the workmen than the former; but ſmelting-houſes are ſtill uſed. The ſmoke of the lead produces palſies, conſumptions, the byon, which reſembles the quinſy, and a diſorder in the bowels called the belland, and affects cattle which feed on the graſs or heath contaminated by the ſmoak. It gives a ſweetneſs to the herbage, and makes them eat it greedily, but the proprietors are often forced to pay damages for cattle which are killed by it.

A charge of lead, which is eighteen hundred weight, takes up from ſeven to ten hours in ſmelting. Two men are employed about it; the pay of the firſt is 1*s*. 3*d*. of the ſecond 1*s*. For ſuch trifling wages do men undertake ſuch an unwholeſome employment!

Diſputes between miners are tried at the Barmoot Court, which is held about Lady-day and Michaelmas, and at any intermediate time, if required. It conſiſts of a maſter and 24 jurors, choſen from among the miners, and exerciſing juriſdiction over them both above and below ground. At the general courts a jury of twenty-four working miners is ſworn, who are ſummoned when a ſpecial court is called, and twelve make a jury to try the cauſe. A ſpecial jury of holders of mines may be had, if demanded. On complaint to the court, the twenty-four view the matter in diſpute and give their opinion. If either party is diſſatisfied, a trial is had before the ſteward of the court, who is the judge, and council often attend. If the verdict is not ſatisfactory, the matter is removed to Weſtminſter-hall; and in caſes of importance this is generally done.

People often undertake to drive a ſough to carry off the water from their own or others mines. If they relieve the mine of another, they are intitled to a certain proportion of all the ore got in that mine after it is cleaned; ſometimes ſo much as one ſixth. If, in carrying on the work, they hit on a vein of lead, they frequently find that it is within the meers of ſome other miner, and then they are obliged to account for the produce [o]. The miners in this country are a ſet of the hardieſt and moſt brutiſh fellows imaginable. They dig about a quarter of a peck in four and ſometimes ſix hours, which they call a cope, at the rate of 10*d*. by which they earn a guinea a week, working all the while on their ſides. Some mines are 80 yards, others a great deal more from the ſurface, under which are three ſtrata of ſtone. The women, children, and old men earn a livelyhood by waſhing and ſifting the ore. It is carried to the forges on horſeback, each horſe carrying 20 ſtone, or 2¼ cwt. or ſix diſhes or pecks at one penny each, which in five turns, or a morning's work, earns 2*s*. 6*d*.

Buxton. At Buxton Dr. Gale [p] places AQUIS of Ravennas, which in a MS. note he had put at Aidon in Northumberland. Mr. Watſon diſcovered a Roman ſtation here [q]. Buxton was certainly well known to the Romans, and it is extremely probable that they uſed the tepid ſprings of this place for bathing. This people made two roads in the county of Derby, of which the leſſer croſſed a part of the Peak, namely from Buxton to the ſtation at Brough near Hope; which was intended probably to afford a communication between this place and the baths at Buxton. From Brough to Buxton this road may be traced, becauſe the materials of which it is compoſed are very different from the natural ground on each ſide. Upon Tideſwel moor the ſides of this cauſey may be diſtinguiſhed for many yards together where it is about ſeven or eight yards broad [r]. There was a Roman wall cemented with red Roman plaiſter near St. Anne's well, where were the ruins of the antient bath.

There are no records to ſhew clearly that Buxton was a place of requeſt in the ages ſubſequent to the Roman empire in England. The Monkiſh hiſtorians appear to have known little concerning it [s].

If theſe baths were uſed by the Saxons, as by the name of Batham gate going to the road leading to the Bath by way of eminence it ſhould ſeem they were, one may deduce the name from boc, coxit, q. d. the warm ſtones or rocks, or warm ſprings among the rocks, or from boc, or buc, a beech tree, if it were certain any ever grew there, and Skinner derives it from beocce, bocce, beech, and ton town. Mr. Pegge [t] inclines to this laſt derivation, or to that from becca, caper. Jones [u] fancied it from wild bucks, or from one Buck an owner, which is too vague; alſo that from wounded bucks taking ſoil here the hunters named the place Buckſtand [x], and again from bock-ſtein or ſtein-bock, boucſtein, the ſtein-buck, a

[o] Leigh, b. 1. p. 78. Bray, p. 219—224.
[p] MS. n.
[q] Archæol. III. 237.
[r] Mr. Pegge's account of the roads through the country of the Coritani.
[s] Ib.
[t] Ubi ſup. p. 11.
[u] The benefit of the antient baths of Buckſtones, by John Jones, 1572, 4°.
[x] Jones, ib.

kind

kind of goat which antiently inhabited the Peak. It ſeems to occur in Domeſday under the name of Beſtune [y].

Buxton was a place of note ſome time before queen Elizabeth's reign [z]. St. Anne was then the patroneſs of the place, and its tepid waters were in high requeſt both for drinking and bathing. At this time accommodations were provided for the reception of patients. In 1572 we find the following deſcription by Dr. Jones, of the principal building at Buxton, which was probably upon the very ſpot where the hall now ſtands. "Joining the chief "ſpring between the river and the bath is a very "goodly houſe, four ſquare, four ſtories high, ſo "well compact with houſes of office beneath, above, "and round about, with a great chamber and other "goodly lodgings to the number of thirty, that it "is and will be a beauty to behold, and very nota"ble for the right honourable and worſhipful that "ſhall repair thither, as alſo for others; yea, and "the poor ſhall have lodgings and beds hard by for "their uſes only. The baths alſo ſo bravely beau"tified with ſeats round about, and defended from "the ambient air, and chimnies for fire to air your "garments in the bath ſide, and other neceſſaries "moſt decent."

This building was erected by the earl of Shrewsbury, and occaſioned the waters of Buxton to be much more reſorted to than heretofore by all ranks of people. Mary queen of Scots being at that time in the cuſtody of the earl of Shrewsbury, was brought along with him and his wife Elizabeth to Buxton in one of his viſits to that place, upon which occaſion this heroic and unfortunate princeſs applied to Buxton Cæſar's verſes npon Feltria as before given. About 120 years ago or in 1670 this building was demoliſhed, and a new edifice erected by William third earl of Devonſhire. This building with various ſubſequent alterations is now the principal hôtel called the Hall.

The antient wall of Roman workmanſhip about St. Anne's well above-mentioned, together with its baſon which had been uſed from the time of Jones, was razed in 1709, when ſir Thomas Delves of Cheſhire, in memory of a cure, erected the late arch [a], which was deſtroyed about four years ago to make room for the foundation of the ſuperb building called the Creſcent, now erecting.

Several large and excellent houſes for the accommodation of viſitors for health or pleaſure have been erected within the laſt 40 years, and they have of late continued to increaſe almoſt annually. At preſent a ſpacious pile is erecting at the expence of at leaſt 50,000*l*. which is deſigned to afford various ſorts of accommodation.

Among other alterations ſubſequent to the building of the hall by the earl of Devonſhire, appear to have been the addition of two other baths, one for the uſe of female bathers, the other for the poor adjoining to the old bath, now appropriated for the men, called the gentleman's bath.

The tepid ſprings of Buxton are in a vale environed by hilly or more properly uneven wavy land, on the ſouth ſide of the rivulet Wye, within the diſtance of forty or fifty yards from each other, and about half a mile from the ſource of this rivulet.

The uppermoſt ſtratum on the ſouth of the Wye at Buxton is the firſt or black lime-ſtone, which is covered in ſome parts with fragments of ſhale of a few feet in thickneſs. Under this ſtratum lies the firſt bed of toad ſtone, and ſubjacent to this is the ſecond bed of lime-ſtone, under which is the ſecond ſtratum of toad ſtone, which is incumbent on a third bed of lime-ſtone. On the north ſide the Wye at Buxton the upper ſtratum is ſhale, but after aſcending towards the ſummit of the hill on this ſide the Wye it is the grit-ſtone bed incumbent on this ſhale and the lime-ſtone and toad-ſtone beds which conſtitute the "Cruſt of the Earth" of the Peake [b]. The above ſtrata on each ſide the Wye are ſeparated by apparently a chaſm that has been filled up with rubble conſiſting of the broken beds of the earth on each ſide of it [b].

The tepid ſprings of Buxton iſſue out of the bowels of the earth either through fiſſures in the black lime-ſtone upon the ſurface, or from the rubble that covers ſome parts of this ſtratum [c].

The gentleman's bath is 25 feet ſix inches in length, 12 feet 8 inches broad, and the average depth is four feet 10 inches: therefore it contains 2,697,696 cubic inches, and 9,566$\frac{8\,4}{2\,5\,1}$ ale gallons of water [d].

After the demolition of ſir Thomas Delves's arch and well above-mentioned, about four years ago the ſtreams which ſupplied this well were conducted in a different direction and to a greater diſtance to a new baſon called New St. Anne's, incloſed within an elegant temple of Grecian architecture. But the water in this new baſon was found to be diminiſhed in its heat, namely, to expand the quickſilver in Fahrenheit's thermometer to 80° or 80$\frac{1}{2}$, inſtead of 81° or 81$\frac{1}{4}$. This circumſtance, joined to the prejudices of the people in favour of the former well, excited general diſſatisfaction, ſome clamours and menaces. To appeaſe theſe complaints, a temporary well was made at the ſource of the ſprings that ſupply New St. Anne's well in the ſummer of 1781, until the water in the new baſon ſhould acquire its priſtine heat, which it was natural to ſuppoſe it muſt in time do from the occaſion of its loſs of heat, namely, the being conveyed in a channel through the earth near it much colder than itſelf, and the addition propoſed of covering the new baſon with a cover in contact with the water and receiving it through a hole in the ſide of it as through a pump ſpout. The effect of further time and this alteration was ſuch as was expected, ſo that the water in the new well is now 81° or 81$\frac{1}{4}$, and it is drunk with the advantages of being conveyed in a grit-ſtone channel inſtead of a leaden pipe, of being drunk without previous expoſure to the air, and in a neater manner as to the filling of glaſſes or other veſſels [e].

Buxton water is of the temperature of 81$\frac{1}{2}$ or 82° in the Gentleman's Bath, and 81° or 81$\frac{1}{4}$ in New St. Anne's Well. It has no colour, taſte, or ſmell, is perfectly tranſparent, but it contains a ſubſtance, apparently a permanent vapour, in the form of bubbles ſuſpended therein. Theſe bubbles are the peculiarity of this water as far as can be diſcovered by the ex-

[y] Fol. 273. b. 277, 278.
[z] Chemical Hiſtory of Buxton Water 1784, 8vo. vol. I. p. 2. by George Pearſon, M. D.
[a] Jones. Lambarde's Topograph. Dict.
[b] Chemical Hiſtory of Buxton Water 1784, vol. I. p. 139.
[c] Ib. p. 140.
[d] Ib. 145.
[e] Ib. p. 158.

terna

ternal ſenſes without inſtruments or experiments. Theſe bubbles ariſe in great abundance through the ſeams of the pavement in the old bath, paſs through the whole bulk of water, and burſt upon its ſurface. The nature of theſe bubbles was never examined by Short and others, although they pronounced confidently with regard to their properties. Of late years the opinion univerſally prevailed that they were gas or fixed air, a vapour that unites with quick lime, and forms calcareous earth with cauſtic Alkali, and compoſes mild Alkali, certainly not becauſe they were ſhewn by experiments to poſſeſs theſe properties, but perhaps becauſe they had been found to extinguiſh flame and animal life. The error of this opinion was detected in February, 1782, when it was diſcovered that theſe bubbles did not poſſeſs the properties of gas, although they are not reſpirable, and did not contain the ſmalleſt portion of air.

A number of experiments and obſervations ſhew theſe bubbles to be a permanent vapour reſembling in many properties air united with phlogiſton, ſometimes called phlogiſticated air. From the analyſis juſt made it appears that Buxton water contains the uſual impregnations of common hard waters, namely, vitriolic gypſum, ſea ſalt, calcareous earth, and air in unuſually ſmall quantity; that its medicinal efficacy muſt be founded as far as can be learned from chemiſtry, on its temperature, purity, and impregnation with a peculiar permanent vapour that ariſes from it ſpontaneouſly, which is wholly unfit for reſpiration and inflammation, but which is not gas or fixed air [f].

About one mile from Buxton in Aſhford road is a hill called Staden low, between which and the road is the ſquare vallum with the circle adjoining, mentioned by Dr. Stukeley [g], now ploughed down, yet ſtill diſtinguiſhable. He ſuppoſed it a circus, and ſays it is 160 feet diameter, the vallum 50 feet on each ſide, in one place the ditch inward, and on the point of the circle furtheſt from the ſquare a little ſemicircular cave of earth. His barrows on the tops of the hills may be two beacons on ſome adjacent hill [h].

About three miles from Buxton are the Marble ſtones, probably Dr. Stukeley's druidical marble ſtones near Hope, a natural rock, about 180 feet long and 80 broad, three feet above the ſurface, the face deeply channelled and full of holes. At the eaſt and weſt ends many irregular-ſhaped ſtones, a few inches from each other [i]. At the Tong, a white heap, under earth and ſtones quantities of human bones are found, and at a paſture called Perry in this peak foreſt, a very great quantity, in general found, under a bank ſeveral yards in length. Another collection of bones in a paſture called Harrod low, in the ſame foreſt, and one on Wormhill moor [k].

"Wye river, good for troutes, riſith in Darbyſhire, "near St. Anne of Buckſtane's welle, ſo to Bakewel, "a market towne to Haddon, and thereabout Wye "cummith into Darwent [l]."

Chee torr is about five miles from Buxton. The river Wye runs between the rocks, which ſeem to have been forced aſunder. One is ſaid to be 360 feet perpendicular [m].

On the moor between Stoncy Middleton and Sheffield, on the top of a hill called Great Owlar Torr, is a heap of large ſtones, on the top of which are three rock baſons perfect, and one broken off. Not far from this, on the edge of a hill, a vaſt ſtone near 20 feet high, poiſed on a tapering ſmaller, on a broad baſe ſix or ſeven feet, and covered with a cap. To the right of this a fortification called the Carles work, a wall of large ſtones eight or nine feet high, piled againſt a wall of ſloping earth, croſſes the neck of land higher than the adjoining part of the moor, and full of looſe ſtones. The ground to the right is irregular, incloſed with a fence of ſtones rudely placed. On the ſide towards Chatſworth is an entrance opening inwards without flanks. Near the turnpike road from Caſtleton by Hatherſage to Sheffield was a rocking ſtone, lately deſtroyed. Above Hatherſage church is a place called Camp green, a high large circular mound of earth incloſed by a deep ditch. In the church-yard they ſhew two ſtones 13 feet four inches diſtant [n], that mark the grave of Little John the friend of Robin Hood.

Great Owlar Torr.

Carles work.

At the foot of the hills called Coy moſſe [o], behind the town of Buxton, under a hill of limeſtone of nine or ten different ſorts, is Pool's Hole, 232 yards long, pretended to have been a retreat to a robber of that name. The path to it is ſo narrow, and the entrance ſo low, that it is ſcarce perceivable. On firſt entering, for a few yards one is obliged to ſtoop, but the cave preſently riſes, and the firſt thing you are ſhewn is Pool's ſaddle, no bad reſemblance. Further on his chair hangs from the roof, and by it an exact imitation of a flitch of bacon, with its white edge: in other parts are Cotton's haycock, a lion's head, Pool lying in ſtate, which has a tolerably exact figure of a corpſe, with the eyes cloſed, and the chin ſunk in the cheſt, of which it exhibits the brawny muſcles; his horſe, repreſenting the haunches, back, and bare ribs of a ſmall headleſs beaſt lying down; the dark lantern or bee-hive; the organs like Gothic fretwork. The queen of Scots pillar, a ſmooth maſs like alabaſter, projecting from the ſide of the cave about a yard from the ground and two yards high, beyond which the paſſage narrows, and few go further; but beyond this is a ſteep aſcent for near a quarter of a mile, which terminates near the roof in a hollow called the Needle's eye, in which a candle being placed repreſents a ſtar. Returning you are ſhewn a vault called Pool's cellar, and over it lies the ſhelf. The whole bottom of the vault is ſtrewed with ſtones, and the water continually dropping from the incruſtrations above deſcribed.

Poole's hole.

Dr. Short [p] gives the following deſcription of this cave:

"Poole's hole is a very little mile off Buxton. The rock over the front of its entry is ſeven yards perpendicular, the breadth of the outward entry at the ground nine yards. The door is two yards and a half wide in the rock. Here the height is from three to five feet, therefore we muſt enter ſtooping for 18 yards before we can ſtand up. Then we come into a large cavern 20 yards high, and ten broad, till at laſt its height riſes from 20 to 45 yards, and from [f] See Chemical Hiſtory of Buxton Water, vol. II.

[g] Ib. II. 26. [h] Bray, p. 236.
[i] Ib. p. 239. [k] Lel. VII. 45
[l] Ib. p. 243—245. [m] Bray, p. 240.
[n] Ib. p. 237. [o] G.
[p] Ubi ſup. p. 29.

20 to 50 wide. When you are 28 yards from the outer entry, you come to Pool's ſhelf, a great long broad flagſtone lying over head the whole breadth of the entry. Juſt on the right hand about five yards above the level is Pool's chamber and dining room, which ſhelve into the rock a pretty depth. From this ſhelf you enter another ſubterraneous paſſage on the left hand, which opens into the other at the Queen of Scot's Pillar; but here is nothing remarkable. Returning to the firſt, when you are 60 yards in you riſe up a ſteep aſcent, and leave a hollow on one ſide, climb up eleven yards and a quarter to the Flitch of Bacon, of which whoever can ſee any reſemblance muſt have a ſtrong fancy. Fifty-eight yards beyond this is the font, four feet high, and ten feet in circumference at the bottom, with a ſmall baſon of water on its top, which dropping from the roof has formed this large pedeſtal. Juſt by, on the ſame ſide, are four very large ſtalactitious concretions called haycocks and very like them. Six yards beyond the Flitch is the queen of Scots chair, whoſe fore and lower part is exactly in the form of an old chair. From the font to this chair are moſt magnificent, high, perpendicular walls of beautifull carved work, adorned with variety of figures as well of vegetables as others. Nine yards beyond the chair is the Lion couchant on his belly on a ſtone, with his head up. Juſt by it is the effigies of an old man, dead and laid out, of a dun blackiſh colour. Two yards and a half further is the queen of Scots pillar, and all upon the oppoſite wall is very noble carved work of ſtalactites. Thirty-four yards further is St. Andrew's needle, a ſmall paſſage three yards long under a great ſtone. You aſcend 60 yards and a half beyond this a moſt frightful precipice of rocks, this aſcent being 40 yards above the level, and all a rough rock, reaching very near the day. When you are here, your candles ſeem twinkling ſtars to the company below, as theirs do to you. Here you are at the end of the cave. At the foot of this precipice riſes up the water, which glides gently along the ſide of the hole to a ſwallow which drinks it in except in time of a very great flood. The organs are between the queen of Scots pillar and the lion."

Near this cave are found hexagonal quartz-chryſtals, which are coloured red by the iron they contain, but they are not ſo clear or handſome as Briſtol ſtones[p].

In the Gentleman's Magazine for Dec. 1748, p. 581, is a deſcription of Granvill's hole, in Perigord, reſembling Pool's hole. The whole length of this cave is 230 yards.

Chapel in the foreſt.

Chapel in the foreſt is a little village on the road from Mancheſter to Tidſwell, with a chapel of independent juriſdiction, ſo called from being ſeated in what was once the Peak foreſt, reduced to one clump of about 20 trees round a farm-houſe called the Chamber, ſaid to have been once a lodge[q].

In the high peak between Caſtleton and Hope was an hoſpital or ſpital houſe, t. Edward III. valued at 40*s.*[r]

Barleborough in the north-eaſt corner of the county, not far north of Cheſterfield, was the ſeat of the antient family of Rodes, originally of Nottinghamſhire. Gerard de Rodes was a great favourite with king John. His deſcendants Ralph and John lived in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. In the days of Elizabeth ſir Francis Rodes, one the Judges of the court of Common Pleas, built the preſent manſion, where he and his poſterity have ſince reſided. Barle.

According to Dugdale, (I. 259,) Robert Ferrers was created earl of Derby 1138 by king Stephen, for the battle of the Standard, which he won; but as he died next year, the title ſeems to have laid dormant till king John revived it in the perſon of his great grandſon William in his firſt year. The charter by which that prince gave him livery and reſtitution of his earldom is printed in Selden's Titles of Honour, Part II. c. 5. p. 153. He died of the gout 31 Henry III. as did his ſon and ſucceſſor William 1254, of a fall from his chariot, to which he was confined by it. He was buried at Merevale[s]. His ſon Robert died about the end of Henry III.[t] His deſcendants remained without a title till Walter was ſummoned to parliament as lord Ferrers of Chartley, from whom the late earl of Eſſex and the late viſcount Hereford deſcended[u]. Earl of Derby.

Thomas Stanley, who joined Henry VII. and ſet the crown on his head at Boſworth, was by him created earl of Derby in the firſt year of his reign, and died 1504, 19 Henry VII. and was buried in Burſcough priory. His ſon George died 3 Henry VII. and was buried in St. James Garlikehythe, London. The title fell to his grandſon Thomas, who dying 1521, 13 Henry VIII. was buried at Sion abbey, and ſucceeded by his ſon Edward. He died 1572, 14 Elizabeth, and was buried at Ormſkirk, as have been all his ſucceſſors. His immediate ſucceſſor was his ſon Henry, 1594, and his ſon Ferdinand 1595. He was ſucceeded by his brother William, and he, 1642, by his ſon James, whoſe diſtinguiſhed loyalty and baſe execution at Bolton, 1651, have rendered his name illuſtrious, as the defence of his caſtle at Latham, 1644, have immortalized his lady, who was daughter of Claude duke of Tremouille. His ſucceſſor was his ſon Charles, who died 1672, and was ſucceeded by his ſon William[x]. He died 1702 without iſſue male, and was ſucceeded by his brother James, and he dying 1735-6, the title devolved on ſir Edward Stanley of Bickerſtaff, c. Lancaſter, deſcended from a younger ſon of George ſon of Thomas the firſt earl. He died 1776, æt. 86, and is ſucceeded by his grandſon Edward, 12th and preſent earl.

[p] Eray, 255. [q] Ib. p. 239. [r] Tan. 83.

[s] Dugd. Bar. I. 262, 263. Mat. Paris, p. 884.

[t] Dugd. Ib. 264. In Mr. Charles' Collections MS. Cotton. Julius. C. VII. is depicted his ſeal with his figure on horſeback, the capariſons of his horſe charged with his arms, circumſcribed Robert de Ferrars filius & hæres Domni Willi de Ferrars quondam comitis Derb. Conntерſeal an eſcutcheon of his arms.

[u] Ib. 266. Search being made in the Exchequer for the reliefs due from Henry earl of Lancaſter, ſon and heir of Henry earl of Lancaſter, it was found that his father had been charged inter alia with £. 100. pro comitatu Derby integro, and therefore he was now charged with the like. Com. Hill. 25 E. III. Rot. 4, ex parte Rem. Theſ. and Hill, 6 E. III. Fines.

[x] Dugd. Bar. II. 247—254.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Derbyſhire.

Alchemilla vulgaris. Common Ladies Mantle or Bear's-foot; in mountainous meadows and paſtures: common.

Arenaria verna. Mountain Chickweed; in the Peak about Wirkeſworth, and elſewhere.

Bryum hypnoides. Wooly Bryum; on mountainous heaths: at Matlock bath.

—— hypnoides ζ. A variety of the laſt; on the mountains in the Peak.

Byſſus ſaxatilis. Stone Byſſus; on limeſtone rocks.

Campanula latifolia. Giant Throatwort; in the mountainous paſtures by the hedge ſides, plentifully.

Cardamine hirſuta. Hairy Ladies-ſmock; about the mouth of Pool's hole, plentifully.

—— impatiens. Impatient Ladies-ſmock; by brooks in mountainous meadows and on moiſt rocks and ſtones.

Cochlearea officinalis. Common or Garden Scurvy-graſs; on the mountains at Caſtleton in the Peak about the great ſubterraneous vault or cavern called Peak's hole.

—— officinalis γ Grœnlandica. Grœnland Scurvy-graſs; at the entrance ihto Peak's hole.

Comarum paluſtre. Purple Marſh Cinquefoil; near the ebbing and flowing well at Tideſwell.

Draba muralis. Speedwell-leaved Whitlow-graſs; in the fiſſures of rocks, and in mountainous and ſtoney paſtures, eſpecially of a chalky ſoil.

Empetrum nigrum. Black-berried Heath, Crow or Crake-Berries; on the mountains in the Peak, common.

Erica cinerea. Fine-leaved Heath; on the mountains near Hatherſedge in the Peak.

Eryſimum chierantboides. Treacle Wormſeed; near Aſhburn in the Peak.

Geranium lucidum. Shining Dove's-foot Crane's-bill; about the entrance into Peak's hole.

Lichen jubatus. Fennel Liverwort; on the rocks near Darwent in the Peak.

—— omphalodes. Purple Liverwort; on the rocks in the Peak.

Lycopodium clavatum. Common Club Moſs or Wolves-claw; —— Selago. Fir Club Moſs; on rocks and } on the mountains near Darwent in the Peak.

Polypodium Filix fœmina. Female Polypody; in marſhy and ſhady places: about Wingerworth common.

—— fragile. Brittle Polypody; about Peak's hole.

—— marginale. Marginal Polypody; about Buxton: this plant has not been long known to be a native of England.

Polytrichum commune. Common Polytrichum, or Golden Maidenhair; in the Peak.

Prenanthes muralis. Ivy-leaved Wild Lettuce; on old walls, and about the entrance into Peak's hole.

Rubus idæus. Raſpberry Buſh, Framboiſe or Hindberry; in the hedges in the Peak.

Rumex maritimus. Golden Dock; in the meadows by the road ſide leading to Swarſton bridge, which in floods are overthrown by the Trent.

Saxifraga hypnoides. Trifid Sengreen; on the mountains.

Thalictrum minus. Leſſer Meadow-Rue; about the entrance into Peak's hole.

Thlaſpi montanum. Mountain Mithridate-Muſtard; in the Peak.

Tremella utriculata. Bladder Tremella; on ſtones in rivulets: near Tideſwell.

Vaccinium Oxycoccus. Cranberries, Moſsberries, or Moorberries; on boggy places in the Peak.

—— Vitis idæa. Red Whorts, or Whortleberries; in the mountains of the Peak, plentifully.

Valeriania officinalis β. Mountain Valerian; near Buxton well, above a ſtoney and thorny place called Aſhwood.

Viola grandiflora. Yellow Violet or Panſies; about Pool's hole and Elden hole, and in the Peak.

—— tricolor. Panſies or Heart's-eaſe; in the mountains among the corn, and upon the mud-walls and fences of ſtone.

LEICESTERSHIRE
WARWICKSHIRE
STAFFORDSHIRE
Derby Shire from Litchfield 6 Miles from Wolverhampton from Thomas port Hinckley
Burbach
Leicester Grange
Sherford
Copston Parva
Copston Magna
Wolvey
Smockington
High Cross
Withibrook
Hopsford
Monks Kirby
Over Smite
Newbold Revel
Brinklow
Willey
Lodge
Lutterworth Land Watling Street
Newham Paddox
Cesterover
Church Over
Harborow Magna
Harborow Parva
Coton
Stanford
Shawell
Calthorpe
Tripontium or Dove Bridge
Lilburn
Newbold upon Avon
Brownsover
Clifton
Hill Morton
Rugby
Bilton
Ecenhill
Lawford Hall
Church Lawford
Newnham Regis
The Stade
Burton Hastings
Shilton
Bramcot
Wibtenhill
Bulkington
Ribton
Nuneaton
Bede
Horton
Sheriton
Bedworth
Coal Pits
Fire Engine
Anty
Longford
Exhall
Wiken
Sow
Wiken in Arden
Holly Hurst
Barnacle
Binley
Combs Abbey
Bretford
Brandon
Wolston
Wappenbury
Wappenbury Hall
Weston
Broome Bridge
Bagington
Finham
Coventry
Allesley
Allesley Hall
Whoburley Chap.
Fleetchamfield Chap.
Canley
Hurst
Kenilworth
Hill Farm
Milburn Grange
Frogshall
Dunsmore Heath
Seckington
Newton Regis
Austrey
Shuttington
Bramcote
Priory
Warton
Polesworth
Hermitage
Ortons on the Hill
Morebarn
Newhouse
Grendon
Hall End
Birch Coppice
Whittington
Badesley Ensor
Fenton Br.
Witherley
Manduessedum a Roman Camp
Atherstone
Mancester
Oldbury
Caldecot
Higham
Wedington
Nuneaton
Ridge Lane
Harkshill
Ansley Hall
Ansley
Arley
Arley Street
Whitacre Heath
Shustoke
Maxstoke Hall
Maxstoke Priory
Old Fillongley
Fillongley
Goat Yard
Corley
Corley Hall
Birchley Place
Birchley Hall
Master land
Allon End
Newland
Exhall
Caroley
Smercote
Arbury
Temple House
Arbury Street
Whitacre Priory
Whitacre Low
Whitacre Heath
Hollyhall
Bentley Chap
Bentley Hall
Flandershall
Hallaton
Meriden
Packington Magna
Packington Parva
Allgrath Hall
Kinwaldsey
White House
Hawkesweed
Duke End
Blythe Hall
Blythe Bridge
Marston Jabbet
Stone fm
Church Bickenhill
Hampton in Arden
Berkswell
Morcroft Hall
Balsall
Balsall Street
Barton
Knoll
Heywood Estate
Packington Park
Chapel Yard
Marston Green
Water Orton
Castle
Park Hall
Middleton
Drayton Basset
Drayton Manor
Bourne River
Tame
Tamworth Castle
Lady Bridge Mile Oak
Amington
Bole Br
Bramcote Priory
Pooley
Hermitage
Polesworth
Wilnecote
Hall End
Birch Coppice
Whittington
Badesley Ensor
Freasley
Baxterley Hall
Baxterley
Azenbeley Hall
Merevale Hall
Merevale
Witherley
Fenton Br.
Sence Riv.

A MAP of WARWICKSHIRE from the best AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS.

1. Hemlingford
2. Coventry County
3. Knightlow
4. Barlichway
5. Kineton

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude

E. Noble delin.t et curavit

C

HAVING CORNABI
the words to dif
the inhabitants, counties, which Worceſterſhire, remains though later emperors

W

THE count as by us a the eaſt by thoſ the military wa
Oxford and Gl moſt part by W fordſhire, is div land, or the Fei each other by through the mid north-weſt.

The Feldon
champain count and yielding a called Edge hill
Warmington I ſa which, like oth been originally invaſion. Fro Rodley[b], take the valley itſelf the ſhape of an red hill near this part are S ſheep, the oth whence alſo th hole, ſo called under the hills.
its pleaſures, an name, of whic
'zabeth, 1572, Wormleighton, eminent ſince k
John Spencer
Shugbury, whe ſtones, which

[a] ſaenungreyne.

CORNAVII.

HAVING ſurveyed the countries of the Coritani who lived neareſt the weſt, I come next to the Cornabii, or Cornavii. The etymology of their name I leave to others: I might, indeed, twiſt the words to different meanings; but, as none of them anſwer to the nature of the ſoil, or the character of the inhabitants, I ſhall not croud my deſcription with them. My preſent deſign is to deſcribe ſeparately thoſe counties, which, by Ptolomy's account, ſeem to have been occupied by the Cornavii, viz. Warwickſhire, Worceſterſhire, Staffordſhire, Shropſhire, and Cheſhire: in which not the leaſt traces of their antient name remains though this name ſeems to have continued to the decline of the Roman empire. For under the later emperors numeri and turmæ of Cornavii ſerved, as appears from the Notitia.

WARWICKSHIRE.

THE county of Warwick, called by the Saxons as by us at preſent Warwickſhire [a], bounded on the eaſt by thoſe of Northampton and Leiceſter, and the military way before-mentioned; on the ſouth by Oxford and Glouceſter ſhires, on the weſt for the moſt part by Worceſter, and on the north by Staffordſhire, is divided into two parts, Feldon and Woodland, or the Feild and Woody Country, parted from each other by the river Avon running obliquely through the middle of the county from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt.

The Feldon lies on this ſide the Avon, being a champain country, diverſified with corn and graſs, and yielding a moſt delightful view from the hill called Edge hill. At the extremity of this hill by Warmington I ſaw a very large circular entrenchment, which, like others of the ſame kind, I take to have been originally made for preſent defence upon ſome invaſion. From the red ſoil hereabout Rodway, Rodley [b], take their names, and the greateſt part of the valley itſelf is called the Vale of Red Horſe, from the ſhape of an horſe cut by the country people on a red hill near Pillerton. The remarkable places in this part are Shipſton and Kinton, one a market for ſheep, the other for cows, for a long time back, whence alſo they had their names: Compton in the hole, ſo called from its being concealed in a valley under the hills. This laſt place is not, however, without its pleaſures, and from it an illuſtrious family takes its name, of which Henry Compton was by queen Elizabeth, 1572, advanced to the degree of baron. Wormleighton, famous for feeding ſheep, but more eminent ſince king James created the moſt illuſtrious John Spencer before-mentioned baron Wormleighton; Shugbury, where they find the Aſtroites or Starſtones, which the Shugburies, lords of the place, have adopted for their arms: Southam, a well-known and frequented market; alſo Leamington, ſo called from the little river Leam, which waters this part of the country, where is a ſalt ſpring. Vehindon, now Long Ichindon and Harbury. Theſe two laſt are memorable only for the death of Fremund, ſon of king Offa, baſely ſlain by ſurprize between them: a perſon of great renown and ſingular piety, envied only becauſe in a moſt unhappy criſis his good fortune had given the enemy a check. But this his undeſerved fate turned to his greater glory. For being buried at his father Offa's palace, now called Off-church, he ſtill ſurvives to poſterity, having been ranked among the ſaints, and had divine honours paid him by the common people, and his life was written in tolerably elegant verſe by an antient author, from which I may, without offence, ſubjoin theſe few lines on the murderer, whoſe ambition to reign prompted him to this deed:

Southam.
Leamington.
Off church.

Non ſperans vivo Fremundo regis honore
Optato ſe poſſe frui, molitur in ejus
Immeritam tacito mortem, gladioque profanus
Irruit exerto ſervus, dominique jacentis
Tale nihil veritum ſævo caput amputat ictu.
Talis apud Wydford Fremundum palma coronat,*
Dum ſimul & fontes occidit & occidit inſons.

Hopeleſs to reign, while Fremund lives, he frames
Secret deſigns againſt his guiltleſs life; his ſword
The daſtard ſlave forth draws againſt his lord,
And, as ſecure he ſlept, ſtrikes off his head:
Such crown at Wydford waits on Fremund dead,
The guilty wretches ſlain his guiltleſs ſoul is fled.

Theſe are the places in Feldon or the plain country. I muſt not forget to obſerve that the antient Foſſe way croſſes it, whoſe ridge appears in paſture

* Some copies read more truly Radford.

[a] Jaenungreyne. Sax. Chr. 147. Warrewicana provincia. Flor. Worc.

[b] Radway, Ratley, [Rottelsic Domeſd.]

grounds

Cheſterton. grounds, now out of the road near Cheſterton, the reſidence of the very antient family of the Peitos, of which was that William Peito of the Franciſcan order whom Pope Paul IV. out of pique to Cardinal Pole ſuch) reſentments harbour in heavenly minds) in vain created Cardinal and Legate in England, having cited Pole to Rome on a charge of hereſy. But queen Mary, though moſt devoted to the church of Rome, interpoſed, or rather oppoſed, ſo that Peito was forbid to come into England, and the legatine authority was left intire to Pole. I know not whether it is worth while to mention here that certain writers in the reign of Edward IV. complained that the avarice of aſſembling great flocks of ſheep like armies beſet populous town, drove away the huſbandmen, and made ſuch havoc that one of them, a learned man in that age, exclaimed with the poet, Quid facerent hoſtes captâ crudelius urbe!

What worſe than this could we from foes expect!*

Rugby. But on the river Avon, where it enters this county ſoon after its firſt riſe, Rugby firſt preſents itſelf, a great market for butchers: then Newenham Regis on the other ſide the river, where riſe three ſprings that ſeem to have paſſed through alom mines, whoſe water, of a milky colour and taſte, is accounted good againſt the ſtone: it certainly is extremely diuretic, heals and cloſes up wounds preſently, taken with ſalt purges, with ſugar binds. Then Baggington, which has a caſtle, and once belonged to the Bagots, a very illuſtrious family. Not far from it is Stoneley, where king Henry II. founded a ſmall monaſtery;† and oppoſite to it was formerly a caſtle on the Avon called Stonely holme, built on Holmehull, and deſtroyed while the Danes ravaged England under Canute.

Newenham Regis Medicinal ſprings.

Baggington.

Stoneley.

Stoneley holme.

WARWICK. The Avon now paſſes by the chief town of this county, which we call WARWICK, the Saxons Wappyngpyc, Ninnius and the Britans Caer Guarvic and Caer Leon, all which names ſeeming to be derived from the Britiſh word Guarth, which ſignifies a garriſon, or from the Legions quartered for the defence of places, in ſome ſort perſuade us (though I confeſs myſelf rather a ſceptic than a critic in etymologies), that this is the town called by the Romans in Britain PRÆSIDIUM, where the Notitia places a captain of Dalmatian horſe, under the command of the Dux Britanniarum. This cohort was raiſed in Dalmatia, and I ſhall here obſerve by the way that ſuch was the prudent foreſight of the Romans, that they ſtationed foreign ſoldiers in garriſons in the provinces, who, by the difference in their manners and language were prevented from caballing with the natives. For, as Florus obſerves[c], "Nations not accuſtomed to ſlavery, "would otherwiſe be forward enough to ſhake off the "yoke." Hence we find among the Roman armies in Britain, Moors from Africa, Aſtures and Vettones from Spain, Batavi, Nervii, Tungri, Turnacenſes from Germany, Lingones, Morini from Gaul, and from other parts Dalmatians, Thracians, Alans, &c. as will be mentioned in their place. But to return. We are not to ſuppoſe the Britans had that word Guarth from the Franks, ſince, if we may believe Lazius, it is of Hebrew extraction, and uſed by many nations. But that this was a garriſon both the authority of our own annals ſhews, aſſerting that the Roman legions were ſettled here, and the ſituation of it almoſt in the heart of the province implies; for it is equally diſtant from the eaſt coaſt of Norfolk one way, and the weſt coaſt of Wales the other, and Præſidium a town of Corſica has the ſame ſituation in the centre of the iſland. Nor is it to be wondered that the Romans had a garriſon and ſtation of ſoldiers here, as it ſtands on the river Avon on a ſteep rock, and all the approaches to it are hewn out of the rock. It appears to have been well defended by a wall and ditches; and the caſtle ſtrong both by nature and art, formerly the ſeat of the earls of Warwick, faces the ſouth-weſt. The town itſelf is adorned with handſome buildings, and owes much to Edelfleda lady of the Mercians, who repaired it A.D. 911. At the Norman invaſion it was in a very flouriſhing condition, and had many burgeſſes (as they were called), 12 of whom were bound to attend the kings of England in time of war, as appears by Domeſday book[d]. "He that failed to attend on ſummons, paid 100 ſhillings to the king: but if the king went by ſea againſt his enemies, it ſent either four Boteſuenes[e], or £. 4. of money[f]. In this town the king has in demeſne 113 burgeſſes[g], and the king's barons have 112." Roger, ſecond earl of Warwick of Norman race, built in the middle of the town a moſt beautiful church to the Virgin Mary, which the Beauchamps his ſucceſſors honoured with their burial places, particularly Richard the laſt of the Beauchamps earl of Warwick, and governor of Normandy, who died at Rouen 1439, and was buried here with a moſt magnificent funeral.

PRÆSIDIUM.

Foreign ſoldiers in garriſons.

Near Warwick to the north is Blacklow hill, where Piers Gaveſton‡, whom king Edward II. advanced from low rank to the earldom of Cornwall, was beheaded by the nobles of the realm. By the prince's favour, and the indulgence of fortune, he had aſſumed ſuch a liberty, that having poiſoned the king's mind, he diſdained every man of worth, inſolently ſeized the property of every individual, and being an artful and cunning man, fomented diviſions between the king and the nobility.

Below this on the Avon, ſtands Guy cliffe, or, as others write it, Gib-cliffe, now the reſidence of Thomas de Beaufoe, of an antient Norman family, and itſelf the ſeat of pleaſantneſs. There is a ſmall ſhady grove, clear and cryſtal ſtreams, moſſy caves, evergreen meadows, a gentle murmuring rivulet running among the rocks, and to crown all, Solitude and Quiet the friend of the Muſes§. Here fame reports Guy of Warwic, that celebrated hero, after all his labours, built a chapel, led the life of an hermit, and was at laſt buried here. Perſons better informed think the place had its name from Guido de Beauchamp, a much later perſon; and it is certain Richard de Beauchamp earl of Warwic built here a chapel in honour of St. Margaret, and erected a gigantic figure of the famous Guy.

The Avon runs down from hence with a fuller ſtream by Charlcott, the ſeat of the noble and knightly family of the Lucies, which came antiently by inheritance from the Charlcots to them, who piouſly founded a religious houſe for the reception of poor and ſtrangers at Thellisford. Thelley was the name of a little rivulet which runs through Compton Murdac, formerly belonging to the Murdacs, now to the * Roſs & T. B. contra villarum deſtructores.

† Stoneley abbey regiſter.
‡ or Gaverſden.
§ Roſs of Warwick.
[c] IV. c. ult.
[d] fol. 238.
[e] Batſuteins.
[f] libræ denariorum.
[g] The original is domus, houſes.

knightly family of the Verneys, and through this Thellisford to the Avon, which afterwards paſſes by Stratford, a handſome ſmall market town, which owes all its conſequence to two natives of it, John de Stratford, archbiſhop of Canterbury, who built the church, and Hugh Clopton, mayor of London, who, at great expence, laid a ſtone bridge of 14 arches acroſs the Avon. He was a younger brother of an antient family, who derived their ſurname from the adjoining manor of Clopton, ever ſince Walter de Cokesfeld, named the Knight Marſhall, had ſettled himſelf and his poſterity at Clopton. Their eſtate fell in my time to two ſiſters, coheireſſes, one of whom married the illuſtrious ſir George Carew, vice-chamberlain to our moſt gracious queen Anne, on whom king James conferred the title of baron Carew of Clopton, and I mention him on this further account becauſe he is a great admirer of venerable antiquity. The Avon now approaching Worceſterſhire, has nothing elſe remarkable on its banks except Bilford a market town, and ſome ſmall country villages.

Let us now take a view of the Woodland, which lies north beyond the Avon, occupying a larger extent, being the moſt part covered with woods, though not without paſtures, corn-fields, and iron mines. As it is at preſent called the Woodland ſo it had antiently the much older name of Arden, but, as I take it, to the ſame purport; for Arden ſeems to have ſignified a foreſt among the antient Britans and Gauls, the largeſt foreſt in Gaul being called Arden, a town in Flanders near another foreſt Ardenburgh, and that famous foreſt in England we ſee is called by abbreviation Den; not to mention that Diana in antient inſcriptions is ſtyled ARDUENNA and ARDOINA[h], i. e. if I miſtake not Sylvan, and was the ſame who, in the inſcriptions found in Italy, is called NEMORENSIS. From this tract Turkill de Arden, who lived here in great honor under Henry I.[i] took his name, and his poſterity ſpread themſelves over England in great credit in after times. The weſt ſide of this country is waſhed by the river Arrow, haſtening to join the Avon by Studly caſtle, once belonging to J. Fitz Corbution. Whether this river has its name from its rapidity as antiently the Tigris in Meſopotamia (which ſignifies an arrow in Perſic), or, on the contrary, from its ſlow courſe, which is the meaning of Arra among the old Gauls and Britans, let others determine. On it ſtands Coughton, the principal reſidence of the knightly family of the Throckmortons, a very numerous, illuſtrious family, productive of many bright geniuſes, and ſettled here ever ſince their marriage with the heireſs of Speney. Not far from hence is Ouſley, famous alſo for lords of its own, the Butlers, barons Wem, from whom it deſcended by inheritance to the Ferrars, called from it of Ouſley. Their eſtates were ſoon divided between J. lord of Greſtocke and Ralph Nevill. Lower on the Arrow ſtands Beauchamp's Court, ſo called from baron Beauchamp of Powike, from whom it came by the only daughter of Edward Willughby, ſon of Robert Willughby, baron Broke, to Fulke Grevill, diſtinguiſhed as well by the order of knighthood as by his affable diſpoſition, whoſe only ſon, of the ſame name, has ſo devoted himſelf to true virtue and genuine nobility, that the nobleneſs of his mind far ſurpaſſes that of his birth. My great obligations to him I ſhall ever moſt gratefully acknowledge, whether I utter them or them or not, although I can neither diſplay nor enhance them ſufficiently.

Alne r. Below this the Arrow receives the Alne or Alen, which, running among the woods, waſhes Henley, a Henley. ſmall market-town, adjoining to which the noble family of Montfort had a caſtle, which from its pleaſant ſituation in the middle of the foreſt they called by the French name of Bel deſert; but it is now buried in its ruins. They derive their deſcent not from the Montforts of Almaria, but from Turſtan of Baſtenburgh a Norman. The eſtate came at laſt by two daughters to the barons Sudley and the Frevilles. At the conflux of the Arrow and Alen, I ſaw Aulceſter, called by Matthew Paris[k] more properly Aulceſter. Allenceſter, which the inhabitants affirm to have been a moſt famous and antient town, whence they will have it to have been called Ouldceſter. "This was" (as appears by an antient inquiſition[l]) "the free "burgh of our lord Henry I. and the king gave it to "Robert Corbet[m] for his ſervice; and when the ſaid "Robert died, it went by deſcent to ſir William de "Botereux and ſir Peter Fitz Herbert; and William de "Botereux dying, that moiety of the town fell into "the hands of ſir Reginald de Botereux by deſcent "as heir, who now holds it; and when Peter Fitz "Herbert died that moiety deſcended to Herbert Fitz "Peter, which Herbert gave it to Robert de Chaundays." Now from a great town it has ſunk into a ſmall market-town, but is ſtill very famous for its wheat fair. Higher up, among woods, now gradually growing thinner, are Wroxhall, where Hugh de Hat- Wroxhall. ton built a ſmall monaſtery or priory[n]; Badſley, for- Badſley. merly the ſeat of the Clintons, now of the Ferrars'; and Balſhall, once a preceptory of Templars*, given Balſhall. them by Roger de Mowbray, who was ſo munificent to their order that they unanimouſly decreed in chapter that he ſhould have power to remit and pardon the offences of any of their brethren againſt the rules of the order, upon his confeſſing it before him. The knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, to whom the eſtates of the Templars in England were aſſigned, (our anceſtors at that time thinking it a ſin to apply what had been dedicated to God to profane uſes) granted out of gratitude to John Mowbray of Axholme, ſucceſſor to this Roger, that he and his ſucceſſors ſhould in all their aſſemblies have the next place of honor after the knights †.

More to the north-eaſt where a number of ſmall ſtreams uniting among parks form a lake, which ſoon after being confined in banks makes a canal, ſtands Kenelworth, antiently called Kenelworda, Kenelworth though now corruptly Killingworth, which gives vulgo Killing- name to a large beautiful and ſtrong caſtle, ſur- worth. rounded by parks, not built by Kenulphus, Kenelmus, or Kinegilſus, as ſome dream, but as can be made appear from records by Galfridus Clinton, chamberlain to Henry I. and his ſon, after he had founded here a church for canons regular. But his

* Reg. of the Templars and order of St. John of Jeruſalem. † V. Statuta de Templariis.

[h] Grüter. XL. 9. CCCXIV. 3.

[i] William I. Lib. Abingdon MS. n. Gale.

[k]

[l] In the Exchequer.

[m] Whoſe daughter he had debauched, and married her to his chamberlain Fitz Herbert, by whom ſhe had lord Peter Fitz Herbert. (Vincent ap. Dugd. War. 568.) Her ſiſter married William Botreux. Reginald, the king's baſtard, was created earl of Cornwall, and kept the Fitz Herberts out of this eſtate till his ſon's forfeiture of it in the reign of John. Dugd. 568.

[n] A Benedictine nunnery, founded t. Henry I. or Stephen, valued at 72*l. per ann.* Tan. 577.

great grandſon Henry having no iſſue ſold it to king Henry III. who beſtowed it in dower with his ſiſter Eleanor on Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter. The king and earl ſoon after falling out and differing, and the latter being ſlain in the barons' wars after moſt unhappy diſturbances, it held out a ſix months ſiege, and at laſt ſurrendered to Henry III. who united this caſtle to the eſtates of the houſe of Lancaſter. At this time was publiſhed here that edict which our lawyers call Dictum de Kenelworth, enacting, that all who took up arms againſt the king, "ſhould pay him the value of their lands for five "years," &c. a ſalutary ſeverity without bloodſhed againſt rebels who diſturbed the public peace, having no hopes but in confuſion. Lately by the bounty of queen Elizabeth it was the reſidence of Robert Dudley earl of Leiceſter, who omitted nothing to enlarge and beautify it, ſo that whether we regard the beauty of the buildings or the extent of the parks, it ſcorns to rank lower than with the ſecond caſtles in England.

Solybill. To proceed hence as I took my own route I came next to Solyhill, which has nothing remarkable but its church: then to Bremicham, full of inhabitants and echoing with forges, moſt of the inhabitants being iron manufacturers. The lower part of it is very wet, the upper adorned with handſome buildings. I conſider it as a circumſtance not a little to its honor that the noble and warlike family of the Bremichams [o] in Ireland derive their deſcent and name from hence. Bremicham.

Sutton Colfield. Next on the northern edge of the county ſtands Sutton Colfield, in a woody and barren ſituation, boaſting for its native John Voiſy, biſhop of Exeter, who in the reign of Henry III. raiſed the town from its declining ſtate by buildings, privileges, and a grammar-ſchool.

Coleſhull. Going down from hence ſouthward I came to Coleſhull, formerly belonging to the Clintons; and near it Maxſtoke caſtle, which owned for its lords, almoſt by uninterrupted ſucceſſion, the Limſeys, who were lords of Wolverley, the Odingſells of Flemiſh extraction, and the Clintons, who have been very famous in this county. Maxſtoke [p].

Coventry. Lower down in the centre of this woodland ſtands Coventrey, as I ſuppoſe, named from Conventus, which is called in our language Covent and Covenn, and in our hiſtories and the papal decrees it is often named Conventria; as in that of Honorius III.* "either the biſhop "of Conventrey is out of his ſenſes, or he ſeems to have "too great a contempt for learning [r]." Some indeed derive it from the little river running through it, now called Shireburn, but in an antient charter of the priory Cuentford [q]. Whatever occaſioned the name, its wealth ariſing in the laſt age from the woollen and camblet manufacture made it the only mart of this part, and more reſorted to than could be expected from its midland ſituation. The city is very conveniently placed, large and neat, defended with ſtrong walls, and adorned with very handſome buildings, among which are two churches of rare workmanſhip, contiguous to, and as it were, rivaling each other, one dedicated to Holy Trinity, the other to St. Michael. It has nothing very antient about it except the monaſtery or priory, whoſe ruins I ſaw near thoſe churches. It was founded by king Canute for nuns, who being ſoon after turned out, Leofric earl of Mercia A. D. 1040, enlarged, and in a manner rebuilt it "with ſuch a profuſion of gold and ſilver that (to borrow the words of Malmeſbury [r]) the walls of the church ſeem too confined to contain the treaſures which ſtrike all beholders with aſtoniſhment, no leſs than 50 [s] marks of ſilver being ſcraped off one ſingle beam." He endowed it with ſuch revenues that Robert de Limſey biſhop of Lichfield and Cheſter transferred the epiſcopal ſee hither as to the golden ſands of Pactolus, that (as Malmeſbury goes on) "he might filch from the church's treaſures enough to fill the king's coffers, deceive the Pope, and gratify the avarice of the court of Rome." But this ſee a few years after returned to Lichfeld: yet ſo as that the ſame biſhop is ſtyled biſhop of Coventry and Lichfeld. The firſt lord of this city I have met with was Leofric, who being angry with the citizens, oppreſſed them with heavy taxes, which he reſolved not to leſſen on any other terms than that his wife Godiva, who interceded earneſtly with him for their relief, ſhould ride naked through the moſt frequented part of the city, which, if we may credit the common report, ſhe did, covered up in her very long hair, unſeen of any, and delivered her citizens of Coventry from ſuch a number of taxes for ever †. From Leofric it came by Lucia, his ſon Algar's [t] daughter, to the earls of Cheſter, by her marriage with Ranulph, firſt of that name, and third of that family, earl of Cheſter, who allowed the inhabitants the ſame privileges as thoſe of Lincoln enjoyed, gave great part of the city to the monks, reſerving the reſt to himſelf and his heirs, with Chilmore, a manor in demeſne [u], out of the city. On their death without iſſue male the eſtate was parcelled out among ſiſters. Conventry fell to Roger de Monthault immediately by the earls of Arundel. His daughter's ſon Robert gave up all his right "for want of heirs male of his body, to queen Iſabel the king's [Edward III's] mother, to hold during her life, and after her death to remain to John of Eltham the king's brother, and the heirs of his body begotten, and in failure thereof to remain to Edward king of England, &c." So it runs in the fine 2 Edward III. John of Eltham was afterwards created earl of Cornwall, and this place annexed to the earldom of Cornwall. From that time it became conſiderable. Our kings beſtowed on it various privileges, eſpecially Edward III. who gave them leave to chooſe a mayor and two bailiffs [x], and Henry VI. who annexed to it ſeveral ſmall villages adjoining, granted it power to be a county corporate (ſuch are the words of the charter) of itſelf, in reality and name, and diſtinct from the county of Warwick." At the ſame time he ſubſtituted to the two bailiffs two ſheriffs, and the citizens began to incloſe their city with ſtout walls; in which are very handſome gates, and at that called Gosford, the huge blade bone of a monſtrous boar, which you may ſuppoſe Guy earl of Warwick, or Diana Nemorenſis, killed in hunting, after he had with his ſnout dug that * Honorius III. c. 14. Decret. † Florilegus, p. 423.

[o] Earls of Louth in Ireland. Holland.

[p] This ſeems to relate to biſhop Alexander de Savenſby, conſecrated 1224, in the time of Pope Honorius III. who was a learned man, but pretended to incredible viſions and apparitions. Godwin. G.

[q] As Conway, Coway, Conventiæ, Covennæ, MS. Gale. Cunc. Dugd. 34.

[r] De geſt. pont. IV. 165. [s] 500.

[t] Leofric and Algar are both reckoned earls of Cheſter and Mercia. Dugd. 135.

[u] The earls had a caſtle here. Dugd. 139.

[x] and to build and embattle a wall about it. Holland.

pit

pit or pool now called Swaneſwell Poole, but anti-ently Swineſwell, as appears by antient charters.

This city ſtands in longitude 25° 52″ in latitude 52° 25′.

So much for Coventry, for the account of which my readers are not ſo much obliged to me as (that I may acknowledge my information) to Henry Ferrars of Badſley, a perſon deſervedly illuſtrious both for his family and for his knowledge of antiquity, and my worthy friend, who often guided me in my wanderings and allowed me to borrow light from him.

Near Coventry to the north is Anſley caſtle, formerly belonging to the Haſtings who were lords of Abergavenny; and Brand formerly the habitation of the Verdons. To the eaſt Caloughdon, commonly called Caledon, the antient ſeat of the barons Segrave, from whom it came to the barons Berkeley by one of the daughters of Thomas Mowbray duke of Norfolk. Theſe Segraves ever ſince Stephen Segrave was Chief Juſtice of England bore the title of barons, and came to the eſtate of the Chaucumbs, whoſe arms they have ever ſince born, S. a lion rampant Arg. crowned Or. The laſt of them John married Margaret ducheſs of Norfolk, daughter of Thomas de Brotherton, and had a daughter Elizabeth, who carried the rank of marſhal of England, and title of duke of Norfolk into the Mowbray family*. Not far from hence alſo is Brinklo, where was an old caſtle of the Mowbrays, which had many eſtates in the neighbourhood belonging to it: but time has almoſt deſtroyed its very ruins; as alſo thoſe of Combe abbey, endowed by the Camvills and Mowbrays, and out of whoſe aſhes aroſe the fine houſe of the Harringtons in this place. As we go eaſt we meet with Ceſter Over, the property of the *Greville*s before mentioned, near which the Roman military way Watlingſtreet dividing this county from Leiceſter runs north by High Croſs already deſcribed, near Nun Eaton, antiently called Eaton; but when Amicia, wife of Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, as Henry Knighton writes[y], "founded a houſe for "nuns, in which ſhe herſelf took the veil," it came to be called from the nuns Nun Eaton. It was in great repute in former ages for the ſanctity of theſe holy virgins, who by their devotion ſet an example of a good life.

Below this was Aſteley caſtle, once the principal reſidence of the family of Aſteley[z], whoſe heireſs was the ſecond wife of Reginald Grey lord of Ruthin, from whom deſcend the Greys marquiſſes of Dorſet, ſome of whom are buried in the neat collegiate church here[a].

A little above on Watling-ſtreet (for ſo I call the Roman way in compliance with common practice) where is a ſtone bridge over the river Anker ſtood MANDUESSEDUM, a very antient town mentioned by Antoninus, which has not totally loſt its name, but it ſtill called Manceſter, in Ninnius' catalogue Caer Mancegued. This name I ſuſpect it had from the ſtones dug out of the adjoining quarry fit for building. The Gloſſaries of the Britiſh language tell us that Main ſignifies a ſtone, and Foſſewade in the language of the county digging, which united ſeem to make the old name MANDUESSEDUM. How great and conſiderable ſoever it once was, it is at preſent only a little village of ſcarce fourteen houſes, and ſhews no marks of antiquity but an antient earthwork called Oldbury or the Old Burgh. For Oldbury. on one ſide Atherſtone, a conſiderable market-town, Atherſton. where was a houſe of Friars Minors[b], converted into a chapel, ſtill, however, acknowledging the church of Manceſter for the mother church, and on the other Nun Eaton, have reduced Manceſter to its preſent condition. Contiguous to Atherſton is Meri- Merivale. vall, q. d. the chearful vale, where Robert de Ferrars erected a monaſtery in honor of God and the Bleſſed Virgin, in which he was buried in a bull's hide[c]. Beyond this to the north is Polleſworth, Polleſworth. where Modwena, an Iriſh virgin of great ſanctity, founded a nunnery, repaired by R. Marmion, a noble perſonage, who had his caſtle in the neighbourhood at Stipperſhull. Near it flouriſhed in the Saxon Stipperſhull. times, though now it is almoſt gone, Secandunum, now Seckington, where Ethelbald king of Mercia Seckington. was aſſaſſinated by Beared in the civil war A. D. 749. Beared himſelf was ſoon after put to death by Offa, and thus ſuddenly loſt the kingdom he had acquired by guilt.

Now follow the earls of Warwick; for, not to Earls of Warwick. mention Guar, Morind, Guy, with whoſe acts all England reſounds[d], and ſuch like men the offſpring of a fruitful invention; Henry, ſon of Roger de Bellomont brother of Robert earl of Mellent, was the firſt earl of Norman extraction[e], who married Margaret daughter of Ærnulphus[f] de Heſdin earl of Perche, a powerful nobleman. Of this family this honour was enjoyed by Roger[g] ſon of Henry, William ſon of Roger, who died 30 Henry II.[h] Walleran[i] his brother, Henry[k] ſon of Walleran, Thomas his ſon, who died 26 Henry III.[l] without iſſue, leaving his ſiſter Margery, who died counteſs of Warwick without children, and whoſe two huſbands firſt John Marſhall, next John de Placetis[m] in right of their wife, and by favour of their ſovereign, roſe to the title of earls of Warwick. They dying without iſſue by the ſaid Margery, Walleran her uncle ſucceeded them. On his death without iſſue his ſiſter[n] Adelicia had the eſtate; afterwards her ſon Maledoctus, Malduit, and Mauduit, ſurnamed de Hanſlap, who died without iſſue. But Iſabel, ſiſter of William Maledoctus, marrying William de Beauchamp, baron Elmeſley, brought the title of Warwick into the Beauchamp family[o], who (if I miſtake not) becauſe they are ſprung from a daughter of Urſo d'Abetot took a bear for their arms and left it to their poſterity. Of this family were ſix earls and one duke; William ſon of Iſabel, John[p], Guy, Thomas, Thomas jun. Richard and Henry, to whom by a new example Henry VI. granted† that he ſhould be premier of all England, and take this title, "Henry y P. 2346. z Out of which flouriſhed barons in the time of Edward I. II. and III. Holland.

* Plac. Ed. III. rot. 234. † Rot. Parl. 23 Hen. VI.

a In a moſt fine and fair collegiate church which Thomas lord Aſtley founded with a dean and ſecular canons. Id.

b Auguſtine friars. Id. c Reg. de Merivale, Dugd. 1090.

d Angliæ tympanum, the echo of England. Gibſon—with whoſe acts all England reſoundeth. Holland.

e t. William the Conqueror. Dugd. Bar. I. 68, 69. He died 1123, and is buried in Preaux abbey.

f Rotrede. Ib.

g He conquered Gowerland in Wales, and died 1153. Ib. 69, 70. h He died 1184. Ib. 71.

i He died 6 John. Ib. k He died 13 Hen. III. Ib. l 1242, buried at Warwick. Ib.

m He died 47 H. III. buried at Miſſenden abbey. Ib. 773. n daughter. Ib. 399.

o See Leland, It. VI. 71. p A miſtake, not mentioned by Dugdale in his Baronage or Warwickſhire, 381; or by Brooke.

24 H. VI.

Præcomes of all England and earl of Warwick." He made him alſo king of Wight, and afterwards created him duke of Warwick, and granted by the expreſs words of the patent, "that he ſhould take his "ſeat in parliament and elſewhere next to the duke "of Norfolk, and before the duke of Buckingham." He had an only daughter Anne, who is ſtyled in the inquiſitions "counteſs of Warwick," and died young. She was ſucceeded by Richard Nevill (who married a ſiſter[q] of the duke of Warwick aforeſaid) a man of an invincible ſpirit but wavering loyalty, and the very ball of fortune. Though not a king, he gave law to kings, having dethroned his moſt gracious ſovereign Henry VI. and placed Edward IV. on the throne, afterwards pulled him down, and ſet up Henry VI. again, and involved England in all the calamities of civil war, which his own blood hardly extinguiſhed[r]. Edward his grandſon by one of his daughters, and George duke of Clarence ſucceeded him, and was, though a harmleſs child, put to death by Henry VII. for the ſecurity of himſelf and family. The title lay dormant being an object of fear to Henry VIII. on account of the diſturbances raiſed by Richard Nevill that ſcourge of kings, till Edward VI. conferred it on John Dudley, deſcended from the Beauchamps, who, like Richard aforeſaid, endeavouring to alter the ſucceſſion under queen Mary, paid the forfeit of his boundleſs ambition with his head. His ſons, firſt John while his father was duke of Northumberland by the courteſy of England bore this title a little while; and afterwards Ambroſe, a perſon of diſtinguiſhed bravery and courteſy by favour of queen Elizabeth recovered his father's title in our time[s], bore it with great honour, and died without children[t].

In this county are 158 pariſh churches.

[q] Daughter. Holland and Gibſon.

[r] After his death, Anne his wife, by act of parliament, was excluded and debarred from all his lands for ever, and his two daughters, heirs to him, and heirs apparent to their mother, being married to George duke of Clarence and Richard duke of Gloceſter, were enabled to enjoy all the ſaid lands in ſuch wiſe as if the ſaid Anne their mother was naturally dead. Whereupon the name, ſtyle, and title of earl of Warwick and Saliſbury was granted to George duke of Clarence, who ſoon after was unnaturally diſpatched by a ſweet death in a butt of malveſey, by his ſuſpicious brother king Edward IV. His young ſon Edward was ſtyled earl of Warwick; and being but a very child was beheaded by king Henry VII. to ſecure himſelf and his poſterity. The death of this Edward our anceſtors accounted to be the full period and final end of the long laſting war between the two royal houſes of Lancaſter and York, wherein as they reckoned from the 28th year of Henry VI. unto this, being the 15th of Henry VII, there were thirteen fields fought, three kings of England, one prince of Wales, twelve dukes, one marquis, eighteen earls, with one viſcount and twenty-three barons, beſides knights and gentlemen, loſt their lives. Holland.

[s] It was reſtored to him and his heirs male, and for defect of them to Robert his brother and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten. Id.

[t] 1589, ſhortly after his brother Robert earl of Leiceſter. Id.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Warwick, antiently part of Mercia, is in circumference about 150 miles; in length from north to ſouth, 49 miles; in breadth, from eaſt to weſt 35 miles; containing 5 hundreds, 670,000 acres, 13 market towns, and 158 pariſhes [a].

The principal landholders in this county at the Conqueſt were the king, the biſhops of Cheſter, Worceſter, Bayeux, and Coutance; the abbies of Coventry, Abingdon, Burton, Malmeſbury, Winchelcombe, Eveſham; earls Roger, Hugh, Aubrey, Mellent; counteſs Godeva; Turchil de Warwick, Hugh Grentmeſnail, Henry de Ferrars, Roger de Ivri, Robert Doili, Robert de Stratford, Robert Deſpenſer, Robert de Veci, Ralph Mortimer, Ralph de Limeſi, William Fitz Auſculf, William Fitz Corbucion, William Buenvaſleth, Geofrey de Mandeville, Geofrey de Wirce, Gilbert de Gand, Gilbert Fitz Turold, Gerin, Urſo de Abetot, Stephen, Oſbern Fitz Richard, Herald Fitz Ralph, Haſcoit Muſard, &c. &c.

That the Feldon was once exceeding populous may be inferred from the number of villages in Domeſday, whoſe ſites are now known only by their ruins, or at moſt by a cottage or two of a ſhepherd who ranges over and manages as much ground as would have employed twelve teams, and maintained forty or fifty families. John Rous [b] recites the villages depopulated in his time. The reaſon of converting ſo much tillage into paſture here ſeems to have been the great progreſs in agriculture in the woodland, by which means the county began to want paſture. The iron works in the ſurrounding counties deſtroyed ſuch prodigious quantities of wood that they laid the country more open, and by degrees made room for the plough. This occaſioned the inhabitants of the woodland by induſtry and marl to convert ſo much of wood and heath land into arable and paſture, that they can ſupply not only themſelves but other counties with corn, cattle, cheeſe, and butter, which before they derived from the Feldon [c].

Mr. Bray has recorded a melancholy inſtance of the depopulation occaſioned by great farms in this county. At Chadſunt near Kineton was a manſion-houſe the ſeat of Mr. Newſam, and ten farm-houſes on as many farms, let all together at about £.800 a year. Not long ſince this eſtate was ſold to lord Catherlogh, and the ten farm-houſes pulled down, and all the lands and the manſion-houſe let at 1000*l.* a year to one farmer, who manages the buſineſs as a grazier with two or three ſervants. One effect of this monopoly of farms has been to more than double the price of proviſions [d].

At Kineton or Keinton, antiently Chinton, by which name Henry I. gave it to the canons of Kenelworth [e], was antiently a caſtle, where tradition ſays king John reſided and left his name to a well at the foot of the hill [f]. Its being a royal reſidence may have given it its name. Henry IV. granted a market here.

Near Keinton, which gives name to the hundred, in the valley or plain under Edgehill, a ridge of hills running about four miles between this county and Oxford, was fought one of the moſt ſignal battles between the king and parliament, Sept. 2, 1642, in which our hiſtorians make the number of the ſlain 5 or 6000, but by a ſurvey taken by Mr. Fiſher, vicar of Kineton, by order of the earl of Eſſex, it was found not to be much above 1300, and among the reſt ſeveral of the nobility. Night prevented greater ſlaughter, and both armies kept the field. The king took Banbury caſtle, and though his way was opened to London, retreated to Oxford, and the parliament voted a thankſgiving [g]. Kineton field was at that time common. In a ploughed field about one mile weſt of the town is a kind of tumulus over a pit wherein 500 of the ſlain were buried planted with trees by Dr. Bentley, whoſe anceſtor held the manor at the time. A gold ring was found in harrowing Kineton field, and bodies are frequently found. Nearly in the center ridge of the hills is a good lone inn. On the road within a few miles of the inn are found great quantities of Cornua Ammonis and Vertebræ. A mile weſt of it is a mock ruin on the ſpot where the royaliſts encamped the night before the fight. On Queynton hill, I ſuppoſe miſ-ſpelling for Keinton, c. Warwick, Aubrey puts a camp with treble works [h].

At Upton is a hunting ſeat of the late Mr. Child's the banker. Upton.

The Red Horſe is about a mile from the inn cut in the ſide of a hill fronting Tyſoe church, and is of the following dimenſions and form. From the croup to the cheſt 34 feet; from the ſhoulder to the ears 14; from the ear to the noſe 7½; from the under jaw to the bottom of the cheſt 10; from the ſhoulder to the ground 16 feet or 57 hands. Length of the off fore leg 12 feet, near one 9, hind legs 10, belly 19½, ſheath 8, and tail, which is more like a lion's, 18; width of each leg one foot; diameter of the eye one foot two inches; ſaddle 11 feet long. A farm of £.60. per annum, called Red Horſe farm, belonging to lord Northampton, is ſubject on pain of forfeiture to the charge of ſcouring it anew, at which time the people who aſſiſt are treated with cakes and ale. Mr. Wiſe ſuppoſes it a memorial of the famous Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick, whoſe caſtle of Fulbrook, now intirely demoliſhed, ſtood 8 or 9 miles off facing this hill. He juſt before the battle of Towton killed his horſe with his own hand on the field. This battle was fought on Palm Sunday, which is the anniverſary of ſcouring the horſe. It is in the manor of Temple Tyſoe, which formerly belonged to the Knights Templars, and with Over Tyſoe forms the pariſh of Tyſoe [i]. Red Horſe. Fulbrook c. Tyſoe.

Warmington had a Benedictine abbey ſubject to that of Preaux in Normandy [k]. The camp, called in the maps Nadbury, is ſquare but rounded at the corners, containing about 12 acres, and near it was found a braſs ſword and a battle ax [l]. Here Salmon places TRIPONTIUM. Warmington.

Between Wormleighton and Stanton was found in a pit a trunk of a tree hewn into a coffin, with bones in it, and many coins, particularly of Conſtantine [m].

At Wolfhamcote on the Leam in ſinking a well they came to a vault with urns and coins [n]. Wolfhamcote.

Chadſhunt, near Kineton, was one of the 24 towns given by Leofric earl of Mercia to the monaſtery of Coventry; and is called in his charter Chaddeſleyhunt, Chadſhunt.

[a] Mag. Brit. V. 581.
[b] MS. Hiſt. p. 144. ap. Dugd. Warwickſh. 2d edit. 568.
[c] Tour, p. 46, 2d ed.
[d] Wife's farther obſervations on the Vale of White Horſe, p. 49.
[e] Reg. de Kenelworth, p. 143.
[f] Monumenta Britannica.
[g] Dugd. 560.
[h] Dugd. 422.
[i] Stuk. II. 21.
[k] Ib.
[l] Tan. 571.
[m] G.
[n] G.

and in Domeſday Cedeſlehunte, and might be named from Cedda, a Saxon owner, or an image of St. Chad, which ſtood in the antient chapel, and was an object of pilgrimage, which by the inquiſition, 4 Elizabeth was worth to the prieſt £. 16. per annum [l]. Here was alſo a well called St. Chad's.

Nether Eatendon. Nether Eatendon was held at the Conqueſt by Henry de Ferrers, and continues in the hands of his poſterity of the male line to this day, which is ſuch an unterrupted ſucceſſion of owners as we ſeldom meet with. Till the time of Henry III. it was their principal ſeat. Then removing into Derbyſhire, they took the name of Shirley, and are now earls of Ferrars [m].

Idlecote. At Idlecote is a ſeat of Mr. Ladbroke, purchaſed by the late ſir Robert, of the heirs of baron Legge.

Ladbroke. The family of Ladbroke had been ſeated at a village of their name near Southam from the time of Henry II. to that of Henry VII. [n]

Compton Murdak. Compton belonged till the reign of Edward III. to the Murdaks, who gave it their name. It came afterwards to the Verneys, of whom ſir Richard Verney being deſcended through an heireſs of Grevil from Robert Willoughby baron Brooke took that title. His ſon George lord Willoughby de Broke built the houſe in the laſt century [o]. Out of a bank near it on the eſtate of ſir Charles Mordaunt were dug up 1774 three ſculls lying in a row, and with them two Saxon jewels ſet in gold, which were probably once hung round the necks of two of the parties to whom theſe ſcuils belonged. One of them was ſet with an opal and two rubies: the other was adorned on both ſides with a croſs between two rude human figures, with a ſword or lance at the outer hand of each, and an inſcription, which Mr. Pegge [p] explains, Mary & Oſwald, and refers to St. Oſwald the patron of Worceſter as if ſtruck by Wulſtan biſhop of that ſee about 1088. He compares it with a ſimilar piece engraved by him in his diſſertation on ſome Anglo-Saxon remains 1736, p. 23, with St. Mary and St. Peter mentioned by St. Wulſtan II. archbiſhop of York about the ſame time. See Pl. IX. fig. 8, 9.

Little Compton. Little Compton or Compton Wynyate, called by Mr. Camden Compton in the hole, was the ſeat of the Comptons from t. Edward I. Sir William, t. Henry VIII. built in a bottom ſurrounded by hills the preſent irregular houſe with the materials of Fulbrook caſtle, with a handſome chapel and beautiful painted eaſt window [q]. It is moated round, and narrowly eſcaped demolition for its owner's loyalty by drawing up the bridges, and by Cromwell's want of artillery. Some muſket balls are ſtill to be ſeen in the front door. Spenſer then earl and great grandſon of the firſt earl was ſlain at Hopton-heath. His father William was created earl of Northampton 15 James I. ſucceeded 1630 by his ſon Spenſer; he 1642 by his ſon James; he 1681 by his ſon George; he 1727 by his ſons James and George; and the latter 1758 by his ſons Charles and Spenſer, the latter preſent and 8th earl, 5th in deſcent from the firſt. The church, with the fine monuments of the firſt and third earl, was totally deſtroyed in the civil war, but ſince rebuilt [r]. Of this family was Dr. Henry Compton the amiable biſhop of London, born 1632, died 1713. Over the gateway are the arms of France and England under a crown, ſupported by the greyhound and griffin, and ſided by a roſe and crown, probably in memory of Henry VIII's viſit here, whoſe gilt bed was ſold with every thing elſe in the late wreck of this fine eſtate by parliamentary influence and gaming [s].

Com Scor At Compton Scorfen was born ſir Thomas Overbury 1581, who fell a martyr to the intrigues of Carr earl of Somerſet, and the counteſs of Eſſex 1613 [t].

Lon Com Wel At Long Compton is Weſton, the ſeat of the Sheldons of Beoly, c. Worceſter, ever ſince the time of Henry VIII. Ralph, who died 1613, built the preſent houſe, and being a great encourager of the Flemiſh weavers, had the oldeſt maps of England woven in tapeſtry [u], which, at the ſale of the library and furniture 1781, were purchaſed by Mr. Walpole, who preſented them to the earl of Harcourt. Three large pieces of tapeſtry near 80 feet ſquare covering two ſides of a large room, were intituled maps of the counties of Warwick, Oxford, and Worceſter, but comprehended all the reſt in different parcels as borderers. The firſt had in the corner an abſtract of Mr. Camden's introduction to this county and deſcription of Warwick. At the corners were the arms of Sheldon and England, and the names of Francis and Richard Hickes, as the improvers of theſe maps, the orthography of which favours of Flemiſh artiſts. I have the pleaſure to ſay that the preſent noble proprietor of theſe ſpecimens of the introduction of a double art among us has had them completely reſtored, and intends to erect a Gothic tower at Newnham on purpoſe to receive them.

Wo Henry, grandſon of lord Spenſer, baron Wormleighton, was created earl of Sunderland by Charles I. in whoſe cauſe he loſt his life at the battle of Newbury 1642. His ſon and ſucceſſor Charles married Anne ſecond daughter of John duke of Marlborough, and their 3d ſon John enjoyed the title, which deſcended to his ſon John, created viſcount and baron Spencer of Althorpe, in the county of Northampton, 1761, and earl Spencer viſcount Althorp 1765, who died 1783, and is ſucceeded by his only ſon George John.

Sh ro The Shuckboroughs were created baronets by Charles II. and ſtill continue here. Their arms are S. a chevron between three mullets, G. [x]

So Southam was another of Leofric's 24 manors above-mentioned, and is ſtill a market town [y].

L "Palmer of Lemington in the very edge of "Gloceſtre a three miles from Rolleriche ſtones, "cummith out of the eldeſt houſe of the Palmers "of Warwickſhire. He began firſt with a very "ſmaul portion of lande, and beinge a galant "felow, and clothed yn migtie colours, got a riche "widow of Lemington town to wife a 80 years or "more hens: and ſins there hath planted themſelves "and buildid a fair houſe and bought faire landes to "it. He that now hath it married one of the "Gravilles daughter of Milcot, where a late as at "a newer, fairer, and more commodious houſe they "uſed to ly at. He that is now the chief heire "of the Gravilles hath a brother called Fulco "Graville: he married one of the daughters and "heirs of the lord Brooke's ſon [z].

"There is a bigge ſtone, a three miles weſt from "Rollerich ſtones, and ſtandith yn a hethe bering "the name of Barton, a village therby longing to "Mr. Palmer. This ſtone is a very marke or limes "of Gloceſtre, Wiceſter, Warwickſhire, and Ox-

[l] Dugd. 351. G.
[m] Archaeol. III. 373.
[n] Bray's Tour, 37, 38.
[o] Dugd 584.
[p] G. Dugd. 618.
[q] Dugd. 548.
[r] See Extracts from ſir S. D'Ewes's Journal, Bibl. Top. Brit. No. XV. p. 3—11.
[s] Dugd. 310.
[t] Dugd. 331.
[u] Dugd. 548. 50.
[x] G. Dugd. 563.
[y] Dugd. 338.
[z] Lel. VI. 19.

"fordſhire.

"fordſhire. And Palmer's ſon told me that this "ſtone of certente is the marke, and not Rolleriche "ſtones [a]."

Leamington Haſtings, ſo called from its lords till t. Edward III. came ſince to ſir Thomas Trevor and his nephew ſir Charles Wheler, whoſe deſcendants ſtill enjoy it. His wife founded here an almſhouſe, and another was founded in the reign of James I. by Humphrey Davis [b].

Leamington Priors belonged to the canons of Kenilworth. The ſalt ſpring is uſed by the inhabitants for ſeaſoning their bread, and by ſtrangers medicinally [c].

Sir William Dugdale does not notice the antient name of Long Itchington to have been Vchindon [d], nor the death of Fremund between it and Great Harborough [e]; nor is Fremund mentioned by Math. Paris in his life of Offa. Long Itchington takes its name from the river Ichene, on which it ſtands, and is written in Domeſday [f] book Icentone. It gave birth to Wolſtan biſhop of Worceſter, who was educated in Peterborough abbey, and ſhorn a monk at Worceſter, to which ſee he ſucceeded on the tranſlation of Aldred to York 1060. This town was formerly one of the chief in the county, and at the Conqueſt contained not leſs than 24 hides, and was ranked among the ſeveral which 15 Henry II. were put under the title de auxilio villarum & burgorum ad maritandam filiam regis, whereto its inhabitants paid 100 ſhillings [g].

The family de Peito, or Pictavia, is as antient at Cheſterton as 28 Edward I. Sir William rebuilt the manor houſe here t. Edward IV. and his ſon Peter, confeſſor to queen Mary, was the cardinal mentioned by Mr. Camden when the Pope would have recalled Pole on the queen's declaring war againſt France 1557 [h]. There is a ſquare fort, within which Roman coins have been found.

Ros of Warwick in his "Hiſtoria regum Angliæ," printed by Hearne at Oxford, 1716, ſpends 20 8vo pages in declamation againſt the deſtruction of the villages in this country, and reckons above 60 nearly deſolated in his time, comparing the preſent ſtate of many with that in Domeſday [i].

"There appere certain diches at Rugby, the mar-"ket town in Warwickſhire, where the Rugbys, "gentlemen of fame, dwellid; among whom one ſir "Henry Rugby was much ſpoken of. The place "thus dichid is yet caullid the haule place. The "duke of Buckingham a late was lord of Rugby "town [k]."

Rugby, written in Domeſday Rocheberie, q. d. the caſtle or manſion on the rock, had a little caſtle, whoſe earthworks remain near the church, which Dugdale thinks one of thoſe that Stephen, fearing an invaſion from Maud, permitted every one of his nobles to build on his own eſtate, as we are told by John Tinmouth [l]. Here is a celebrated and flouriſhing freeſchool, endowed with a moſt ample eſtate; and four almſhouſes. Brounſover adjoining is ſingled out by biſhop Gibſon to correct ſir William Dugdale's explanation of Over to mean ſupra, or ſuperior, which the biſhop ſays it never does unleſs oppoſed to Nether, which is not the caſe here. But ſir William only means that it implies a hilly ſituation; though after all this with Church over and Cheſterover in its neighbourhood are in Domeſday written Gaure, or Waure, and only by modern pronunciation Over [m].

In Newbold pariſh near Rugby, is Lawford hall, the ſeat of the Boughtons from the reign of Henry VI. of whom William was created a baronet 1641 [n]. His lineal deſcendant Edward was poiſoned by his brother-in-law capt. Donnellan, 1780, and with him the title became extinct.

Stretton ſuper Dunſmore takes its name from the Foſsway on which it ſtands, and which paſſes over Dunſmore heath [o]. Stretton.

A little further on the ſame ſtreet is Monk's Kirby, where have been found near the church foundations of old walls and Roman bricks, and in an adjoining paſture are three or four tumuli. Here Dugdale places the Lyncbimg built by Elfreda the Mercian; but biſhop Gibſon with more probability removes it to Chirbury in Shropſhire, on the frontiers of Mercia, and not far from the Severn [p]. Here was a Benedictine priory, cell to St. Nicholas' abbey at Angiers, founded about 1077, valued 1 Richard II. at £. 220. per annum [q]. Monk's Kirby.

Newnham Regis was in the King's hands 13 Edward I. as appears by the Quo Warranto roll [r]. The waters here are but a weak chalybeat [s]. They are in three wells near Mr. Liſter's houſe. Dr. Baily, phyſician to queen Elizabeth, wrote about it 1582, ſoon after its diſcovery by a labouring man, who found a ſpeedy cure for a grievous wound in his hand by lopping trees juſt by [t]. Newnham Regis.

Baggington belonged to the Bagots from Richard II. to Henry V. and ſince to the Bromleys. Only the earthworks of its caſtle remain. Henry duke of Hereford lodged here previous to his combat with Thomas duke of Norfolk 21 Richard II. [u] Baggington.

Henry II. 1154 tranſlated the Ciſtertians from Radmore, c. Stafford, to Stoneley, where there ſtill remains the gate-houſe with his arms built by abbot Hockele before 1349 [x]. It was valued at £. 151 per annum [y]. Here is an hoſpital founded for ten poor perſons by Alice lady Leigh, wife of ſir Thomas Leigh, lord mayor of London, 1 Elizabeth, whoſe great grandſon Thomas was by Charles I. 1643, created baron Leigh of Stoneley, whoſe fifth lineal deſcendant Edward is the 5th and preſent lord. Stoneley.

WARWICK is called in the Saxon Chronicle [z], and by Brompton Pæpingpic from Pæping agger, though Baxter [a] renders it alſo Præſidium Huicciorum, and a charter of Burthwulf king of Mercia in the Textus Roſſenſis is dated from "villa regalis Werburgewic [b]." WARWICK.

Mr. Ward takes PRÆSIDIUM to be the Prætorium of the Itinerary, and places it at Broughton in Lincolnſhire. So that Warwickſhire has not a ſingle ſtation [c]. Salmon, indeed, gives five, and transfers hither BENONES [d], which Baxter tranſlates Caput inſulæ. "The toun of Warwicke hath been right "ſtrongly defended, and walled, having the compaſs "of a good mile within the wall. The dike is moſt "manifeſtly perceived from the caſtle to the weſt gate, "and there is a great creſt of earth that the wall "ſtood on. The magnificent and ſtrong caſtle "being at the weſt-ſouth-weſt end of the town, PRÆSIDIUM.

[a] Lel. VI. 20.
[b] Dugd. 318. 20.
[c] Dugd. 367.
[d] Dugd. 343.
[e] Dugd. 92.
[f] Dugd. 345.
[g] Dugd. 477.
[h] Ib. 470.
[i] f. 103—123. Q. who is T. B.
[k] Lel. VI. 62.
[l] Dugd. 22.
[m] Ib. 11.
[n] Ib. 99.
[o] Ib. 40.
[p] G. Dugd. 75.
[q] Tan. 569.
[r] Dugd. 101.
[s] Short's Hiſt. of mineral waters, II. 42.
[t] Dugd. 228. 237.
[u] Dugd. 257.
[x] Tan. 578.
[y] P. 104.
[z] Gloſſar. 21. 75. 198. Ly.
[a] MS. Gale.
[b] New Survey, p. 498.
[c] Horſl. 407. 481. 494.
[d] Dugd. 257.

" hard by the right ripe of Avon, is ſet upon an " huge rock of ſtone, and hath three goodly towers " in the eaſt front of it. There is a fair tower on " the north ſide of it, and in this part of the caſtle " king Richard III. pulled down a piece of the " wall, and began and half finiſhed a mighty tower " to ſhoot out great guns, which remaineth un- " finiſhed as he left it. The dungeon, now in ruins, " ſtands in the weſt north-weſt part of the caſtle[d]." It is now a delightful manſion. The rock on which it ſtands is 40 feet from the river, which falls in a caſcade under the windows of the great hall, but on the north the caſtle is level with the town [e], and the park on the other ſide the river flat and low. The entrance to the caſtle is by a gateway between Guy's tower on the right, which is twelve angled, and Cæſar's tower on the left, which is of three circular ſegments. The magnificent hall is 62 feet by 37, wainſcoted with the original oak, but ſince painted. In the dreſſing room, among a variety of ſmall antient portraits, is an original one of ſir Philip Sidney. Near the caſtle to the north-eaſt was a place fenced with ſtrong ſtone walls, called the Vineyard t. Henry IV. Dr. Stukeley[g] thought he ſaw ſigns of a camp on the eaſt ſide of the river overagainſt the caſtle in a cloſe where is an old chapel, now a barn. " The town ſtands on a main " rokky hill riſing from eaſt to weſt. The beauty " and glory of it is in two ſtreets, whereof the High " ſtreet goes from eaſt to weſt, having a right goodly " croſs in the middle of it, and the other croſſith the " middle of it, making a quadrivium, and goeth from " north to ſouth [f]." The approach to the town is by four roads leading by as many religious houſes through a rock over a current of water. The wells and cellars are all made in the rock, and the deſcent every way keeps it clean, and ſince the fire it has ariſen fairer [g]. £. 110,000. was collected by brief, and queen Anne added £. 1000. more. The tower of the church alone coſt £. 1600. " Within the precinct of the " town is but one paroche church dedicated to St. " Mary ſtanding in the middle of the town, fair and " large. Roger de Bellomont tranſlated the college " in the caſtle to this church, endowing it with fair " poſſeſſions. Thomas de Bello Campo earl of War- " wick, grandfather to Richard earl of Warwick, " lieutenant to Henry VI. in France commanded by " teſtament that his executors ſhould reedify the chancel " or eaſt part of St. Mary's church, ſo they did, and he " is buried there with his wife [h]. Earl Richard of " Warwick, lieutenant of France, deviſed a right " fayre large and ſumptuous chapel on the ſouth " ſide of the choir. This ſtately piece of work " was afterwards made by his executors, and ther " he is intombed right princely, and portrayed " with an image of copper gilt, hooped over " with ſtaves of copper [i]."

This earl had a ſumptuous funeral ſolemnized in this church, and his magnificent tomb has this inſcription:

" Preieth devoutly for the ſowel whom God aſſoile, " of one of the mooſt worſhipfull knightes in his dayes " of manhode and conning Richard Beauchamp, late " eorle of Warrewik, lord Deſpenſer of Bergevenny, " and of many other grete lordſhips, whos body " reſteth here under this tumbe in a ful feire vout " of ſtone ſet on the bare roochs, the which viſited " with longe ſikneſs in the caſtel of Roan thereinne " deceſſed full criſtenly the laſt day of April the " yer of oure Lord God A. M. ccccxxxix. he " being at that tyme lieutenant-generall and go- " verner of the roialme of Fraunce and of the " duchie of Normandie by ſufficient autorite of " our ſoveraine lorde the kyng Harry the VI. " the which body with grete deliberacon and ful " worſhipful conduit bi ſee and by lond was broght " to Warrewik the IIII day of October the yer above " ſaide, and was leide with ful ſolenne exequies in a " feir cheeſt made of ſtone in this chirche afore the " weſt dore of this chapel, according to his laſt wille " and teſtament, therein to reſte til this chapel " by him deviſed in his lief were made. Al " the whiche chapel founded on the rooch and alle " the membres therof his executours dede fully " make and apparaille by the auctorite of his ſeide " laſt wille and teſtament, and thereafter by the ſame " auctorite they dide tranſlate ful worſhipfully the " ſeid body into the vout above ſaide. Honired be " God therefore [k]." Bears and ragged ſtaves are interſperſed.

Here is alſo the monument of earl Thomas, father of Richard, and ſon of Thomas above-mentioned. The charge of this chapel, and the founder's tomb, inferior to none in England but that of Henry VII. came to £. 2481. 4s. 7¼. by indenture [l].

The body of the church was burnt, with the greateſt part of the town, 1694; but the beautiful choir eſcaped with the portraits of the Beauchamp family, and the monuments of Ambroſe Dudley earl of Warwick, his brother Robert earl of Leiceſter, and his counteſs and ſon, ſir Thomas Puckering, and Fulk Greville lord Brook. In this church were alſo buried Henry Parr marquiſs of Northampton, father of queen Catherine Parr, whoſe body was found intire and dry 1626; John Rous the hiſtorian a native; Thomas Cartwright, firſt maſter of the earl of Leiceſter's hoſpital, whom Mr. Camden in his hiſtory of Elizabeth ſtyles inter Puritanos anteſignanus, who firſt introduced extempore prayer before ſermon; deans Berkſwell and Aleſtre, the one executor of earl Richard's will, who finiſhed this building, as the other removed the earl's body into it, and dean Haſeley ſchoolmaſter to Henry VII.[l] Henry Newburgh, firſt Norman earl of Warwick, intended to make this church collegiate, but his ſon Roger finiſhed it after 1123, eſtabliſhing a dean and ſecular canons, whoſe revenues and buildings were increaſed by ſucceeding earls. At the diſſolution here was a dean and five prebends or canons, ten prieſts, and ſix choriſters, whoſe poſſeſſions amounted to £. 247. per annum [m].

Rous mentions ſeveral religious houſes, and even an epiſcopal ſee here in the ſixth century, and the Saxon times [n]; but thoſe which remained at the diſſolution were the priory of Auſtin canons, founded by the Newburghs earls of Warwick, t. Henry I. valued at £. 41. per annum [o], granted by Henry VIII. to Thomas Hawkins, alias Fiſher, who pulled down the old building, and erected a very fair houſe, which he talled Hawk's neſt. His ſon ſold it to ſir John Puckering, ſince which it has paſſed to the family of Wiſe[p]. Dr. Stukeley ſays that two galleries of the original building remain[q]. Black friars, founded by the Botelers lords Sudley and the Montforts t. Henry III. valued at £. 4. 18*s*. 6*d*. per annum[r]. White friars, ſaid to be founded by John Peyto, jun. 18 Edward III.[s] An houſe of Templars, founded by Richard earl of Warwick[t]. A college of St. James, begun t. Richard II.[u] St. Michael's hoſpital, founded for lepers by Roger earl of Warwick t. Henry I. or Stephen, ſubſiſting for eight poor women[x]. Another of St. John Baptiſt, founded by William earl of Warwick t. Henry II. for ſtrangers and poor, valued at £. 19. per annum[y]. Warwick was incorporated by Charles II. and has three charity-ſchools and two more hoſpitals. The bridge is of ſtone of 12 arches.

[d] Lel. IV. 162, 163. [e] G. [f] Leland, Ib. [g] It. II. 20. [h] Lel. IV. 163. [i] G. [k] Dugd. 397. [l] Lel. IV. 164. Holland. Dugd. 410. [m] Tan. 570. [n] Tan. 568, 569. ex Dugdale. [o] Tan. 571. Dugd. 454.

Guy de Beauchamp earl of Warwick, with the earl of Lancaſter, ſurprized Gaveſton at Walingford or Dedington, and forcing him from the reſt of the barons who were carrying him to London, brought him to Blacklow hill, and on its top beheaded him without any further proceſs. On the ſpot was erected a croſs called Gaveſton's croſs, and on the ſouth ſide of the hill near the top is cut in a rock among other letters this inſcription:

1311 P. Gaveſton earl of Cornwall beheaded here[z].

He was buried at the friars preachers at Oxford, and two years after removed to King's Langley, c. Herts, where Edward II. founded a priory for him.

"There is a right goodly chapel of St. Mary "Magdalen upon Avon river, ripa dextra, ſcant a "mile above Warwicke. This place of ſome is "called Gibcliffe, of ſome Guy cliffe, and old fame "remainith with the people there, that Guido earl "of Warwike in king Athelſtan's days had a great "devotion to this place, and made an oratory there. "Some add unto it that after he had done great vic"tories in outward parts, and had been ſo long "abſent that he was thought to have been dead, he "came and lived at this place like a hermit, un"known to his wife Felice, untill at the article of "his death he ſhewed what he was. Men ſhew a "cave there in a rock hard on Avon ripe, where "they ſay that he uſed to ſleep. Men alſo yet ſhew "fayre ſprings in a fair meadow thereby, where they "ſay earl Guido was wont to drink. This place had "before the time of Richard earl of Warwick, only "a ſmall chapel and a cottage wherein an hermit "dwelt. Earl Richard bearing a great devotion to "the place made there a goodly new chapel dedi"cated to St. Mary Magdalen, and founded two "chantry prieſts there to ſerve God. He ſet up "there an image of earl Guido giant like, and en"cloſed the ſilver welles in the medow with pure "white flicke ſtones like marble, and there ſet up a "praty houſe open like a cage, covered only to keep "comers thither from the rain. He alſo made there "a pretty houſe of ſtone for the chantry prieſts by "the chapel. The lands that he gave to it lie about "the houſe. It is a houſe of pleaſure, a place meet "for the muſes. There is ſylence, a praty wood, "antra in vivo ſaxo, the river rolling over the ſtones "with a praty noiſe, nemuſculum ibidem opacum, fontes "liquidi & gemmei, prata floridâ, antra muſcoſa, rivi "levis & per ſaxa diſcurſus, necnon ſolitudo & quies "muſis amiciſſima[a]." Sir William Dugdale adds[b], a place this of ſo great delight in reſpect of the river gliding below the rock, the dry and wholeſome ſituation, and the fair grove of lofty elms overſhadowing it, that to one who deſireth a retired life either for his devotions or ſtudy the like is hardly to be found. One of the caves is ſaid to have been made by Guy when hermit there. Within the precinct is only a mill. But this romantic place is now ſacrificed to modern taſte, the chapel converted to a carpenter's ſhop, and the figure of Guy miſerably defaced and mutilated[c]. On the edge of the cliff the late Mr. Greethead built a houſe.

John Roſs, who was chantry prieſt here, wrote the Antiquities of Warwick and of Guycliff, on the Britiſh univerſity, a roll of the earls of Warwick, with their portraits and arms, in the Cotton library, and the Hiſtory of England, to the time of Edward IV. publiſhed by Hearne 1716. He founded a library over the ſouth porch of St. Mary's church, Warwick, and dying 1491, was buried in the ſaid church[d].

The ſtory of Guy is ſo obſcured with fable, that it is difficult to aſcertain its authenticity. He was the hero of ſucceeding earls of Warwick. William Beauchamp called his eldeſt ſon after him. Thomas by his laſt will bequeathed the ſword and coat of mail of this worthy to his ſon. Another chriſtened a younger ſon after him, and dedicated to him a noble tower, whoſe walls are ten feet thick, the circumference 126, and the height 113 feet from the bottom of the ditch. Another left as an heir-loom to his family a ſuit of arras wrought with his ſtory. His ſword and armour now to be ſeen in Warwick caſtle were by patent 1 Henry VIII. granted to William Hoggeſon yeoman of the buttery with a fee of 2*d*. per day[e]. In the porter's lodge at the caſtle they ſtill ſhew his porridge-pot, fleſh-fork, iron ſhield, breaſt-plate and ſword, horſe-furniture, walking-ſtaff nine feet high, and even a rib of the dun cow which he pretended to have killed on Dunſmore heath. In ſhort his fame and ſpirit ſeem to have inſpired his ſucceſſors: for from the Conqueſt to the death of Ambroſe Dudley there was ſcarce a ſcene of action in which the earls of Warwick did not make a conſiderable figure[f]. I ſhall make no apology for inſerting an abſtract of an elucidation of his legend by my learned friend the rev. Mr. Pegge, read to the Society of Antiquaries, 1767, and communicated by him to Mr. Nichols, for inſertion in his Bibliotheca Britannica Topographica, N° XVII.

"Some authors of great note[g] having eſpouſed the ſtory of Guy earl of Warwick, and his ſingle combat with the giant Colbrand, conceiving it to be a genuine and real matter of fact, it may be worth while [p] Dugd. 454. [q] It. II. 21. [r] Tan. 583. Dugd. 461. Lel. IV. 165.

[s] Tan. 585. [t] Tan. 575. Dugd. 467. [u] Tan. 586. Dugd. 462. by earl Richard; Lel. 165.
[x] Lel. Ib. Tan. 575. Dugd. 451. [y] Tan. 581. Dugd. 459. [z] Dugd. 273.
[a] Lel. IV. 165. [b] P. 275.
[c] See a print of it in its preſent ſtate in N° XVII. of the Bibliotheca Britannica Topographica.
[d] Dugd. ib. Lel. Tan.
[e] Afterwards to John Thoroughgood, and on his death to Edward Creſswell, 33 Henry VIII. Rymer XIV. 745. [f] G.
[g] As John Leland, Itin. vol. IV. p. 63. Mr. Camden, Brit. col. 143. Dr. Heylin, Hiſt. of St. George, p. 63. Coſmogr. I. p. 270. Sir William Dugdale, Ant. of Warw. p. 183. 298, 299. and others.

to examine the truth of this ſingular portion of our hiſtory in few words. It is true the great names I have mentioned may deſerve the higheſt regard, and exact from us a very particular and accurate diſcuſſion, on account of the high rank which they hold amongſt our Britiſh antiquaries; but enough may be ſaid in a ſhort compaſs to diſcredit the ſtory.

"That there might be ſuch a perſon as Guy in the Saxon times, and a ſoldier of eminence, I ſhall not deny; but that he was earl of Warwick, and fought a duel with Colbrand for the crown of England, is extremely improbable, for certain reaſons to be aſſigned below. As to the earldom, it is ſuppoſed that Rohand earl of Warwick, who flouriſhed in the reigns of king Elfred and king Edward the Elder, left iſſue only one daughter, named Felicia, who married Guy, ſon of Siward, baron of Wallingford, which Guy, who is the perſon here in queſtion, became, in her right, earl of Warwick [g].

"The account of this duel by Rous the famous Warwick antiquary is briefly this: that it was fought at Wincheſter, A. D. 926. IIII id. Julii pro jure Angliæ between Guy earl of Warwick and Collibrand an African giant, and conſequently a pagan, who was defeated by the Engliſh champion. For this he cites Henry Knyghton, Thomas Rudburn, Giraldus Cambrenſis, John Strench, John Hardyng, John Greſley, John Poutrel, and others.

"All this ſir William Dugdale implicitly ſwallows. After which this great man proceeds to give us the ſtory of the monomachy at large, from Rudburn, Gerard de Cornubiâ [h], and Knighton; authors, as he ſtyles them, of good credit.

Rous cites various authors, and indeed he tells us, p. 54, that many books had been written on the ſubject of this pretended champion's life. The oldeſt of theſe he mentions, I preſume, are Henry Knighton and Giraldus Cambrenſis [i]. Knighton flouriſned in the reign of Richard II. and has left us a very full and ample account of the combat; and it is certain that Chaucer, who was ſomething older than Knighton, mentions the romance of ſir Gie [k]. Beſides, there was a tradition of ſir Guy in the time of king Edward I. for it is ſuppoſed that William Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who died A. D. 1298, or 26 Edward I. called his eldeſt ſon Guy, in memory of this famous Guy earl of Warwick, ſo renowned for his valour in the Saxon times [l]. Dugdale alſo tells us, in his Baronage, II. p. 76, that Thomas Holland, duke of Surrey, in 21 Richard II. had a grant from the king of thoſe pieces of arras hangings at Warwick caſtle, which did concern the ſtory of Guy of Warwick. All this ſhews that the legend of ſir Guy was of great antiquity. Indeed it may be carried up much higher than the times here ſpecified. Giraldus Cambrenſis is ſaid to have been 70 years of age anno 1210 [m]; and he is quoted by Rous: and John Hardyng in his Chronicle names Colman as the author followed by him; now this muſt be either Colman Sapiens, or Colman the monk of Worceſter, who died A. D. 1113 [n]. However, theſe are the moſt ancient authorities [o] I can find concerning this affair. The combat was fought A. D. 926, and yet ſuppoſing Colman to be the firſt perſon that recorded it, we have no account of it till almoſt 200 years after.

"Guy could not be earl of Warwick at this time. According to Dugdale's narrative [p], Rohand, earl of Warwick, whoſe daughter Guy had married, was living when Guy ſet out on his pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, for Guy did not know of his death till his return from thence and his arrival at Portſmouth; and yet Guy in that page is ſaid to have been earl of Warwick before his embarkation for Jeruſalem, which is a flat contradiction. But, paſſing this, the earldoms in theſe days were not titular honours, as now, but provincial offices. Now Warwick was part of the province of Mercia, which before Ethelſtan's reign had been governed by earl Ethelred and his wife, the great heroine Æthelfleda, daughter of king Ælfred and ſiſter of Edward the Elder. To Æthelfleda ſucceeded her daughter, and then Elfere, who died anno 983, long after king Athelſtan, in whoſe reign the combat was fought; ſo that in king Athelſtan's time there could be no ſuch title as earl of Warwick; or, if there was, it muſt be in the hands either of Æthelfleda's daughter, or of earl Elfere. But here perhaps it may be ſaid the earl was called earl of Warwick becauſe he chiefly reſided at Warwick, according to an obſervation of ſir William Dugdale, who tells us in the Baronage, tom. I. p. 9. that though they were earls of counties, yet they were ſometimes named from the places of their principal abode. But this could not be the caſe here, becauſe Guy is no where ſtyled earl of Mercia, but is always called earl of Warwick. It is pretended again by our authors that Rohand, Guy's father-in-law, was earl of Warwick; but this aſſertion is attended with the ſame difficulty. In ſhort, the earldoms of Rohand and Guy ſtand both upon the ſame bottom, which appears to me to be a falſe one; and ſir William Dugdale ſeems to give it us himſelf, when he ſays, 'The earls of 'Warwick in the Saxon times, or before the Nor-'man conqueſt, were but ſubſtitutes or lieutenants 'to the earls of Mercia, or elſe had the cuſtody of 'the county to the king's immediate uſe [q].' And one cannot but obſerve that he is cautious enough not to name theſe earls in his Baronage amongſt thoſe that preceded the Norman æra.

"It cannot be ſuppoſed that earldoms at this time deſcended in this manner from a father to a daughter, and ſhe to carry the honour to her huſband?

"Knighton and Rous pretend, that Colbrand was a Pagan or Saracenical giant of Africa; and Dugdale calls him a Saracen. But how ſhould an African, [g] Dugdale's Antiq. of Warw. p. 299.

[h] This author, I imagine, is the ſame with Giraldus Cambrenſis above; for ſee Tanner's Bibl. p. 326; however, his narrative is printed by Hearne in Append. ad Annal. Dunſtapl. p. 825. See Warton's Hiſtory of Engliſh Poetry, I. 87. n.

[i] Some of the authors he cites are not now known.

[k] The Romance (which I ſuppoſe was what John Skelton had read, ſee him, p. 233) was firſt printed, as I take it, by William Copland about 1560, Ames' Typogr. Antiq. p. 153. See Urry's Chaucer, p. 146. Copland's I imagine to be the metrical Romance. See Warton's Hiſt. of Engl. Poetry, I. 169—175.

[l] Dugd. Baron. I. p. 229. Mr. Baxter, in his Gloſſary, p. 58, would deduce his name from the Britiſh Kei, or Caius; but I take it to be a foreign name. See Alcuin's book below.

[m] Tanner, Biblioth. p. 325. not. [n] Ibid. p. 191.

[o] This indeed is running up the matter very high; but it ſeems the Romance of Guy is one of our oldeſt. See Dr. Percy's Reliques of Engl. Poetry, III. p. vii. This author thinks it may have been the invention of ſome Engliſh minſtrels; but query, ſince one of the Colmans was rather the inventor.

[p] P. 300. [q] Warw. p. 298. of of any ſize, come to England with the Danes? What communication could that northern nation have with the Saracens? One may venture to ſay, they had not ſo much as heard of the name. Beſides, Colbrand[r] is evidently a Daniſh, and not a Mooriſh, name. This appears plainly from the Saxon coins, Colbrand being one of the mint-maſters of king Sihtric[s].

"A fifth objection ariſes from the unſuitable age of earl Guy; for as he died anno 929[t], æt. 70, he was not leſs than 67 at the time of the combat, 68 according to Mr. Hearne; rather too old to be engaged in ſuch a perilous affair, and wherein ſo much was at ſtake, as the right to the crown of England.

"6thly, great exception is to be taken to this duel on account of the place and the occaſion of it. Rous ſays it was at Wincheſter; and Knighton adds, that king Athelſtan had been beſieged two years in that city by the Danes, after which a truce for a year enſued, wherein Athelſtan was to find a champion to encounter Colbrand. But it does not appear that the Danes ever beſieged Wincheſter, or ever had it in their power to conteſt king Athelſtan's title to the crown. The Danes at this time were ſeated chiefly in the northern parts of the iſland, where they raiſed frequent diſturbances; but they were never capable of marching an army into Weſſex, or ſitting down before Wincheſter. Athelſtan, inſtead of being ſhut up by Anlaf at Wincheſter, was actually in a capacity of doing what he pleaſed in Northumberland, forcing at once Anlaf and Godfrid and Regnald to fly. And when Anlaf, in league with Conſtantine king of Scotland, returned from thence with a great armed force, Athelſtan marched into the north, and giving him battle, worſted him at Brunanburgh. Knighton and Rous are therefore ſtrangely miſtaken in placing the ſcene of the monomachy at Wincheſter. Hardyng has much more reaſon to lay it at Brunanburgh or Burneſburgh. But ſtill no antient author relates any ſuch combat at that place; and it is a ſtrong preſumption, when authors diſagree ſo much about the ſcene, that the whole affair is a fiction.

"But to conſider the time of this action. John Rous is very preciſe in this; for he fixes on the 12th of July, in the third year of king Athelſtan's reign, or 926. Now the nature of theſe ſingle combats, wherein the right and title to a kingdom was to be tried, is this: The two armies are ſuppoſed to be in the field ready to engage; wherefore, to ſave the effuſion of blood, the deciſion of the matter is agreed to be left to a pair of combatants, by the fate of whoſe arms the quarrel is to be finally determined. But king Athelſtan was in no ſuch ſituation 12th July, A.D. 926. And Knighton moreover varies greatly from Rous in this. Olavus, he ſays, ſat down before Wincheſter in the fifth year after Hugh, the French king, had made his preſents on account of the princeſs Hilda; that he kept Athelſtan ſhut up there two years; that Athelſtan was allowed, by a truce, one year for the finding of a champion; and that he reigned ſeven years after the duel. This agrees well enough with the term of king Athelſtan's life, who acceded to the crown anno 925, and died anno 941; but the misfortune is, it accords but ill with hiſtory. According to this the duel happened anno 954, a year very different from that ſpecified by Rous, and even poſterior to Guy's death. But what is as bad, Anlaf was then in Ireland, and the battle of Brunanburgh, which was moſt likely to be the time of the combat, was not fought till 938, and the affair there was actually determined by a general engagement; ſo that though John Rous is ſo accurate as to note the day of the month, there is no finding any probable year of our Lord.

"Another very improbable thing is, that Knighton ſays earl Guy was gone at the time the city of Wincheſter was beſieged upon a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. Our Saxon anceſtors went often to Rome on theſe religious errands, but never to Jeruſalem; ſuch voyages not coming in vogue till about the Norman conqueſt; and ſo we read that earl Swane, eldeſt ſon of earl Godwin, went thither by way of penance for a vile murder he had committed. This is the firſt inſtance of any pilgrimage to Jeruſalem performed by the Saxons; for as to Arcuulphus, whoſe voyage thither is mentioned by Bede, p. 200, and 324, he was a French biſhop. John Rous, who was a limner and a herald, as well as an eccleſiaſtic and hiſtorian, has given us the figure of earl Guy in complete armour, with his ſhield and coat of arms, whereas we had no ſuch things as coats of arms in Athelſtan's reign. The arms are chequé Azure and Argent, a bend ſiniſter Ermine, a coat evidently formed upon that of Thomas de Bellomonte, the 7th earl of Warwick, as may be ſeen in Brook.

"There might be a great warrior of the name of Guy; and Colman or ſome other genius, to ingratiate themſelves with the powerful earls of Warwick, were pleaſed to give him that title, and to embelliſh his ſtory with this combat, after the model of that of David and Goliah[u]; and as the ſtory was invented after the Norman conqueſt, it is from thence that we hear of Jeruſalem and the Saracens, the introduction of both which cannot eaſily be accounted for upon any other ſuppoſition. The inventor, whoever he was, effectually gained his ends; for it appears from this ſhort account, that Guy afterwards became a chriſtian name of the Beauchamps earls of Warwick, in honour of the champion, and that his ſtory was pourtrayed in the old hangings at Warwick caſtle. Richard Nevill, earl of Warwick, was alſo induced to believe the fame[x], as likewiſe were the town's people of Warwick, for they had his ſtatue in ſtone[y], as the citizens of Wincheſter preſerved Colebrand's axe[z]; to which I may add, that the tablet formerly hanging at the high altar at Wincheſter, tranſcribed from Girardus Cornubienſis[a], ſhews how generally the legend of Guy and Colbrand was received in England; but, as rightly

[r] Colbrondus and Colebrandus, Annal. Dunſtapl. II. p. 827, 828. Collibrundus, Rous above. In the extracts by Mr. Warton, from the Romance of Guy, Guy is upbraided by the ſoldan with having killed his couſin Coldran, and then follows the relation of his combat with the Daniſh giant Colbronde. Ubi ſup. p. 173, 174.

[s] Sir A. Fountaine IX. tab. of the Anglo-Saxon coins.

[t] Dr. Percy, III. p. 105, is miſtaken in ſaying Dugdale fixes the date of the combat anno 929, æt. 70 of Guy, for according to Dugdale it happened anno 926. Guy dies in Dugdale anno 929, and this was the occaſion of Dr. Percy's error. Hearne would read 927 inſtead of 926. Annal. Dunſtapl. p. 825.

[u] Girardus Cornubienſis in Hearne's Annals of Dunſtaple, II. p. 827, expreſsly alludes to the ſtory of David and Goliah on the occaſion.

[x] Lel. Itin. IV. p. 63. [y] Percy, vol. III. p. 3.

[z] Girardus Cornub. p. 828. [a] Ibid. p. 830.

is

is obſerved by Dr. Percy, 'many of our antient hiſtorians have recorded the fictions of Romance [b].'

Barford. Two miles S. below Warwick is Barford, where one Samuel Fairfax, born 1647, when he was 12 years old lived under the ſame roof and eat at the ſame table with his father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, great grandfather and great grandmother, who all lived very happily together, and none of the three generations of either ſex had been twice married [g].

The following epigram was made on the birth of Samuel Fairfax by Durand:

Quartus in ætheream Fairfaxius editur auram,
Patris, avi, proavi gaudia magna ſui:
Hos tegit una domus cum terna uxore maritos,
Unaque alit lautis menſa benigna cibis.
Non magis unanimes norunt hæc ſecula mentes;
Eſt bis corporibus mens velut una tribus.
Totque ex conjugibus bis vincla jugalia nemo
Nexuit, & nemo nexa ſoluta cupit.
More columbarum lætatur conjuge conjux,
Deſeruit rugas nec juvenilis amor;
Hiſce tribus paribus Barfordia jure ſuperbit;
Nam par his paribus quis locus alter habet!

Engliſhed thus:

Fairfax the fourth is born a gallant boy,
Father's, grandfather's, great-grandfather's joy.
Under one roof dwell theſe with their three wives,
And at one well-ſpread board ſupport their lives.
Our times a ſweeter harmony have not known;
They are ſix perſons, yet their hearts but one.
And of theſe ſix, as none has hitherto Known marriage twice, ſo none deſire to do.
Mate is to mate what deareſt dove to dove,
Nor Age's trace has frighted away love.
In theſe three pairs Barford may juſtly glory:
What other place can parallel this ſtory!

" Beuforde bridge, of eight faire arches over " Avon [d].

Charlcot. Charlcot belongs ſtill to the Lucy family, of whom Thomas built the preſent houſe t. Elizabeth [e]; and by driving Shakeſpear to London for ſtealing his deer made his fortune, at leaſt his fame.

Thelesford. " At Talesford " was a priory of Maturines, otherwiſe called ordi- " nis Sctæ Trinitatis. It was a houſe of very ſmall " poſſeſſions, and they ſay about them the Lucies " were founders of this priory, and divers of them " lay there. From Telesford to Charlcot a mile. " Here Mr. Lucy hath an antient manor place on " the left ripe of Avon. There cometh in hard at " the very manor place of the Lucies a little brook " on the left ripe into Avon from Wellesburne a " mile off [f]."

William de Lucy, ſon of Walter de Charlcot, was the firſt who aſſumed the name of Lucy t. Henry III. or John, and founded the Maturine priory of Thelesford, valued at £.23 per ann. [g]

Stratford. " The town of Stratford ſtandeth on a plain ground " on the right hand of Avon. The biſhop of Wor- " ceſter is lord of it. It hath two or three very large " ſtreets, and a fair on Holyrood day. The town is " reaſonably well builded of timber. The pariſh church " is a fair large piece of work, renewed in building as " it is ſuppoſed by John de Stratford archbiſhop " of Canterbury in the beginning of Edward III. " who was born at Stratford, whereof he took his " name, and made this church collegiate for a guar- " dian, four prieſts, three clerks, four choriſters; " and their manſion place is an antient piece of work " of ſquare ſtone hard by the cemitary [h]. The quire " was a late reedified by one Dr. Thomas Balſhall, guar- " dian of the college, who died 1491, and lies in a " fair tomb on the north ſide of the preſbytery. " There is a right goodly chapel in the ſouth end " of the town, dedicated to the Trinity, and newly " reedified by Hugh Clopton mayor of London, " who built a praty houſe of brick and timber on its " north ſide, where he lived and died. There is a " grammar ſchool on the ſouth ſide of this chapel, " of the foundation of one Mr. Jolepe, M. A. born " in Stratford, whereabout he had ſome patrimony, " which he gave to this ſchool. There is alſo a " almſhouſe of 10 poor folks at the ſide of the " chapel maintained by the fraternity of the Holy " Croſs. Hugh Clopton made all the great and " ſumptuous bridge upon Avon at the eaſt end of " the town which hath fourteen great arches of " ſtone, and a long cauſey made of ſtone. He was " a gentleman born at Clopton village half a mile " north of Stratford, where yet one of the name " dwellith, whoſe houſe he much advanced [i]." His executors rebuilt the tranſepts of the church [i]. Stratford was given by Ethelard petty prince of Wiccia to the church of Worceſter 300 years before the Conqueſt.

This town has derived honour ſince Mr. Camden's time from a third native, the immortal Shakſpear, who, with his wife and daughter and their daughter's huſband are buried all together before the altar. Juſt above him lies the uſurer and object of his ſatire John Coombes [k]. The houſe in which "Nature's Darling" lived, and the mulberry-tree planted by his own hand, remained till within theſe few years, when they were made to give place to an unmeaning modern houſe; but the houſe in which conſtant tradition has uniformly affirmed he firſt drew breath remains unaltered, being built of timber and plaiſter like moſt in the town. The only epitaph over the author of forty-eight plays are theſe artleſs lines:

Good friend, for Jeſus ſake forbear
To dig the duſt encloſed here.
Bleſt be the man who ſpares theſe ſtones,
But curſt be he who moves my bones.

He was born 1564, and died 1616.

The Cloptons had Clopton for four generations before Walter de Clopton aſſumed the name of Cokfield from his eſtate in Eſſex. Hugh was 5th in deſcent from him, and by marriage with the 6th from Hugh's elder brother Thomas the eſtate came to the Carews: of whom ſir George here mentioned was created earl of Totnes 1 Charles I. and dying 1629, was buried in Stratford church under a ſumptuous monument [l].

Peter de Corbiſon or Studley removed to Studley t. Henry II. the Auſtin Canons, whom he had ſettled

[b] Percy, vol. III. p. 10, [g] G.
[c] Lel. IV. 166. [f] Tan. 582. Dugd. 498.
[h] Lel. VI. 166. 167. [i] Dugd. 684.
[k] On the epigram here alluded to ſee Malone's Supplement to Shakſpeare, 1780. I. 654.
[d] Lel. IV. 166. [e] Dugd. 506.
[g] He rebuilt the ſouth iſle. Dugd. 684.
[l] Dugd. 700.

at Wicton c. Worceſter. Their houſe was valued at £. 117. per annum [m]. The ſite of the caſtle belongs to the Hunts [n].

"The lord Corpeſſun that was founder of Stud-"ley abbey, and had a fair maner place half a mile "thens, gave a lordſhip of his in Stafordſhire called "Chillington in frank marriage with his daughter to "one of the Giffards [o]."

"Mr. Throgmorton hath a fayre mannour place "at Coughton. The paroch church is very faire, "exceedingly well glazed, partly by ſir George "Throgmorton, partly by his father. There is a "goodly tomb [a plain altar tomb, Dugd. 753.] in "the body of the church, made by ſir George his fa-"ther that died in peregrination going to Jeruſa-"lem [p]." Sir George built only the gate of the houſe [q].

"Aulceſter is a praty market town. The town "hath been a great thing. Some ſay there hath "been three pariſh churches in it, and that the "priory now a little without the town by eaſt north-"eaſt was in the middle of it. Many tokens of "buildings and bones of men be found in places "without the town eſpecially in Black field. The "priory was of antient time a great monaſtery, ſince "impropriate to Eveſham. Aulceſter as it is now "ſtandeth on the ripe of Arrowe water, yet ſeeing "that it beareth the name of Aulne it is an evident "token that the old town ſtood moſt by Aulne [r]." The priory was founded by Ralph le Boteler of Overſley 1140, for Benedictines, valued at £. 65. per annum [s]. Alceſter takes its name of Allenceſter from the river Alne, to which Leland probably enough conjectured it once extended. It has now two handſome ſtone bridges over this river and the Arrow. Roman coins of all metals and other antiquities have been diſcovered in great abundance in the town and the environs called Black fields. Lately in making the turnpike road to Stratford were found ſeveral entire ſkeletons with Roman coins in a bed of gravel. In the church is a monument of ſir Foulke Grevil lord of Beauchamp's Court in this neighbourhood, and grandfather to ſir P. Sidney's friend lord Brook [t]. Here Salmon [u] places MANDUESSEDUM.

"Arden dwelleth at .....[x] by Alceſtre in Wir-"ceſterſhire is of a very antient ſtok ruined by Ro-"bert Dudley earl of Leiceſter [y]."

"The Beauchamps were lords of Aulceſter, and "had a houſe by the priory called Beauchamp's "hall. It came by marriage to the lord Brooke, "and now by marriage to Fouk Grevill, who now "buildeth at Beauchamp's hall and taketh ſtones "from Aulceſter priory, the which he alſo hath [z]."

Sir Fulke Greville was one of thoſe heroes of the Elizabethan age who panted after opportunities of ſignalizing their valour and virtues in foreign courts, or under famous generals, or on diſcoveries and conqueſts. The queen having checked his genius, he gave himſelf up, with his loving and beloved Achates ſir Philip Sidney, to learned retirement, and to the patronage of the arts. Sir Fulke never ceaſed ſoliciting the queen till ſhe promoted Mr. Camden to the office of Clarencieux king at arms, in gratitude for which Mr. Camden left him in his laſt will a piece of plate, beſides immortalizing him in his Britannia. Speed in his Theatre of Great Britain, p. 53, ſpeaking of Warwick caſtle, expreſſes himſelf thus. "The right worthy knight ſir Fulk Greville, in "whoſe perſon ſhineth all true virtue and high no-"bility, whoſe goodneſs to me ward I do acknow-"ledge in ſetting this hand free from the daily em-"ployments of a manual trade, and giving it full "liberty thus to expreſs the inclination of my mind, "himſelf being the procurer of my preſent eſtate."

Sir Fulke had the office of the ſignet at the council in the marches of Wales, and that of treaſurer to the navy, and a grant of Wedgenock park under queen Elizabeth. At the coronation of James I. he was made knight of the bath, chancellor of the Exchequer, and one of the privy council. He obtained a grant of Warwick caſtle, and laid out above £.20,000. in repairing it, and making it fit for his own reſidence, beſides purchaſing and planting the Temple grounds adjoining, with an intention of putting in execution a deſign which George duke of Clarence had formed of making a park of them under his windows, and which George the preſent earl Brooke and earl of Warwick ſince he became lord of the manor has been able to accompliſh. Sir Fulke had in his own perſon the hereditary right of a peerage, being by his grandmother heir at law to Robert Willoughby lord Brook. But it probably being not then a clear point in law, that after an honour had been ſome time in abeyance of the female line, it could afterwards be claimed by the heir at law (as indeed this queſtion was firſt determined in this very caſe decided on in the Houſe of Lords, 8 William III. on the petition of Richard Verney of Compton Murdoch beforementioned), Sir Fulke accepted of letters patent, 18 James I. creating him lord Brooke, baron Brooke of Beauchamp's court, in this county, with reverſion to his couſin Robert Greville, on whom he ſettled all his eſtates, which he had cleared from all intails and other incumbrances. He executed his will Feb. 18, 1627-8, and added a codicil of annuities to ſeveral gentlemen in his ſervice: but, omitting one of them, whoſe name was Haywood, he reſented it ſo highly, that being one day alone with him in his bed-chamber at Brookhouſe, Holborne, he, after warm expoſtulations, ſtabbed him in the back, and eſcaping into another room, which he locked, murdered himſelf before he could be ſeized. His lordſhip, after languiſhing a few days, died Sept. 30, 1628, in the 75th year of his age, and was buried with great ſolemnity in his vault in Warwick church under a monument erected by himſelf, with this remarkable inſcription:

Fulke Greville,
Servant to Queen Elizabeth,
Councellor to King James,
And Friend to Sir Philip Sidney.
Trophæum Peccati.

His couſin Robert ſucceeded to his eſtate and title, and, being ſlain at the ſiege of Lichfield cloſe, was ſucceeded by his three ſons, and by the deſcendants of the youngeſt of them, whoſe grandſon Francis was created earl of Warwick, 1759, and is ſucceeded by his ſon George, preſent and ſecond earl Brooke, and earl of Warwick.

Alceſter hath for a near neighbour Arrow, whoſe lord, for his dependance upon George duke of Clarence, words unadviſedly uttered and hardly conſtrued through the iniquity of the time, loſt his Arrow.

[m] Tan. 570. Dugd. 744.
[n] Dugd. 751.
[o] P. 503.
[p] Ib. 742.
[q] Lel. IV. 168.
[r] Lel. VI. 74.
[s] Tan. 575. Dugd. 771.
[t] Ib. IV. 167. Dugd. 751.
[u] Dugd. 761. G.
[x] q. if Parkhall in Warwickſhire.
[y] Lel. VI. 20.
[z] Lel. IV. 168.

life. But by his grandfather marrying to Edward Conway, brother to ſir Hugh Conway of Wales, a gracious favourite of king Henry VII, the knightly family of the Conways have ever ſince flouriſhed and laudably followed the profeſſion of arms [a].

Ouſley. Ragley.

Ouſley or Overſley is in Arrow pariſh, as is alſo Ragley the magnificent ſeat of the earl of Hertford, baron of Ragley [b].

Fulbroke.

"Half a mile lower than Bereford on the river "Avon, I ſaw on the right ripe a fayre park called "Fulbroke. In this park was a praty caſtle made of "ſtone and bricke, and as one told me a duke of "Bereford lay in it. There is a litle lodge or piece "of building in this park called Bargeiny, made as "I conjecture by ſome lord or lady Bargeiny. This "caſtle of Fulbroke was an eyeſore to the earls that "lay in Warwick caſtle, and was cauſe of diſpleaſure "between each lord. Sir William Compton, keeper "of Fulbroke parke and caſtle, ſeeing it go to ruin, "helped it forward, taking part of it as ſome ſay "for the buildings of his park at Compton by "Brayles in Warwick, and gave or permitted others "to take it down [c].

Aulne r Henley.

"Aulne runneth by Henley a market towne five "miles above its confluence with Arrowe at the eaſt "end of Aulceſter [d]."

Ullenhale. Pinley.

In Ullenhale pariſh at Pinley Robert de Pilardington founded a Ciſtertian nunnery, valued at £. 22. per ann. [e]

Wotton Waveney.

At Wotton Wawen near Henley was a Benedictine priory cell to the abbey of Caſtellion or Conches in Normandy [f]. Lord Catherlough, ſon of the famous Mr. Knight, caſhier of the South Sea Company, has a ſeat at Barrels green, about three miles off, and built a tower in his grounds for his own burial and that of his family who were removed from their vault [g]. Charles Smith, created baron Carrington of Wotton by Charles I. 1643, had a good houſe at Wotton, but the two wings have been pulled down. His ſon Francis married Anne, third daughter of William Herbert, marquis of Powis but the title became extinct 1705.

Balſhall.

Roger de Mowbray gave Balſhall to Knights Templars t. Stephen, and it became a preceptory of that order and of the Knights Hoſpitallers [h]. The tenants of this manor could not marry their daughters, nor their daughters or widows marry themſelves without leave of the knights to whom they were ſubjected in other inſtances. Lady Catherine Leveſon founded here an hoſpital for 20 poor women 1677, ſince increaſed to 27. On the kitchen chimney-piece is cut in wood a chevron ingrailed between 3 fermaux, in chief a Jeruſalem croſs; motto Sane Baro [i]. Here is a large barn 140 feet long, 40 wide, 38 high, and 90 tiles deep [k].

Kenilworth.

Kenilworth is a long ſcattering town, having in a ſingle houſe a manufactory of horn combs and lanterns. The priory founded about 1122 was valued at £. 538. per ann. [l] Three of the Tankervilles, father, ſon, and grandſon, were buried in the chapel here [m].

The caſtle, whoſe ſiege make ſo conſiderable a figure in the hiſtory of Henry III. was granted to his younger ſon Edmund earl of Lancaſter, who 7 Edward I. held here a famous tournament called the Round Table. His ſon Thomas enlarged the park: but on his death forfeited the whole. His brother Henry confined here Edward II. whom he had taken priſoner in Wales, and from hence ſoon after hurried to death at Berkeley caſtle. John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaſter, began all the buildings here except Cæſar's tower about the end of Richard II's reign, and his ſon Henry brought it to the crown. Henry V. built here. "Henry VIII. did of late yeares great "coſt in repayre of the caſtle. Among theſe repa- "rations the pretty banketing houſe of timbre that "ſtood in the mere and bore the name of pleaſant "was taken down, and part of it is ſet up in the "baſe court of the caſtle [n]." Robert Dudley earl of Leiceſter built the magnificent gatehouſe to the north, where formerly having been the back of the caſtle he made the front, filling up much of the deep and wide ditch. The ſtately buildings on the ſouth-eaſt bear his name, and he raiſed the Gallery tower and Mortimer's tower at each end of the Tilt-yard, and enlarged the chace, laying out not leſs in all than £. 60,000. Here in 1575, he entertained his royal miſtreſs 17 days with all the fanciful and coſtly pageantry of the times, deſcribed in a particular pamphlet called "The princely Pleaſures of Kenilworth caſtle;" on which occaſion no leſs than 320 hogſheads of ordinary beer were conſumed. He left it to his natural ſon Robert, who having in vain attempted to prove his legitimacy, ſold it to prince Henry for 14,500*l.* of which no part ever came to his hands. Prince Charles had it next, and committed the cuſtody of it to Robert Carey earl of Monmouth, Henry lord Carey his eldeſt ſon, and Thomas Carey, eſq. Cromwell granted it to his officers, who ruined the caſtle, cut down the woods, and drained the pool. At the Reſtoration the crown renewed the leaſes to the daughter of Henry Carey earl of Monmouth, and granted the reverſion to Lawrence lord Hyde, created baron of Kenilworth caſtle and earl of Rocheſter, and his ſon Henry held it 1720 [o], and Henry earl of Clarendon and Rocheſter 1729. In this family it ſtill remains, and the preſent earl is particularly attentive to the preſervation of its ruins. The gateway is inhabited by a farmer.

The earl of Denbigh has a draught with MS. references of Kenelworth caſtle as entire as when it belonged to the earl of Leiceſter taken 1620; a painting on the whole ſide of a room, a copy of which was taken at the expence of the late John Ludford, eſq; of Anſley, in this county; a beautiful large finiſhed drawing, which he deſigned to have had engraved for Mrs. Beighton's benefit had ſhe lived.

At Solybull is a handſome church and a ſmall market and three fairs.

"I came through a praty ſtreet or ever I entered "Bermingham. This ſtreet as I remember is called "Dirtey [Deritend]. In it dwell ſmithes and cutlers, "and there is a brooke that divideth this ſtrete from "Bermingham, and is an hamlet or member belong- "ing to the pariſh thereby. There is at the end of "Dirtey a proper chapel and manſion houſe of tim- "ber hard on the ripe as the brooke runneth down, "and as I went through the ford by the bridge" [rebuilt of ſtone, with five arches, 1750] [p], "the "water ranne downe on the right hand, and a fewe "miles lower goeth into Tame ripa dextra. This "brooke above Dertey breaketh in two armes that "a litle below the bridge cloſe againe. This brooke "riſith as ſome ſay four or five miles above Berming-

[a] Holland. [b] Dugd. 254. 257. [c] Lel. IV. 266. Dugdale. [d] Lel. IV. 168.
[e] Tan. 574. Dugd. 821. [f] Tan. 572. [g] Bray, 40. [h] Tan. 577. Dugd. 965.
[i] Q. if Any Boro on the Weſton arms at Clerkenwell church.
[k] Dugd. 964-5.
[l] Tan. 572. [m] Lel. VI. 73. [n] Lel. IV. 191.
[o] Dugd. 248. 252. [p] Hutton's Hiſt. of Birmingham, p. 270.

"ham towards Black hilles. The beauty of Ber-
"mingham, a good market town in the extreame
"parts of Warwickſhire, is one ſtreet going up
"alonge almoſt from the left ripe of the brooke up
"a meane hill by the length of a quarter of a mile.
"There is one paroch church in the town. There "be many ſmithes in the towne that uſe to make "knives and all manner of cutting tooles, and many "loriners that make bittes, and a great many "naylours: ſo that a great part of the towne is "maintained by ſmithes who have their iron and ſea
"cole out of Staffordſhire [q]."

"Birmingham began with the productions of the anvil, and probably will end with them. The ſons of the hammer were once her chief inhabitants, but that great croud of artiſts is now loſt in a greater [r]." Part of the riches, extenſion, and improvement of this town is owing to the late Mr. John Taylor, who firſt introduced the manufacture of gilt buttons, japanned and gilt ſnuff boxes, and the variety of enamel works. The toy trades firſt made their appearance here in the beginning of the reign of Charles II. Gun making and braſs foundery in that of William III. Hackney coaches were introduced here 1775, and a bank eſtabliſhed ten years before. The town is governed by two bailiffs and two conſtables. The great increaſe of this town from its trade occaſioned another church to be built 1711, and four chapels of late years. Heae are ſix meeting houſes, and a theatre. Here was a market and fair before Henry III.

The lordſhip of Birmingham was given up to the crown 28 Henry VIII. by the baſe act of lord Dudley, who obtained it nine years after, and ſoon forfeited it with his life. It now belongs to the dowager lady Archer. Two old monuments of the Birminghams, lords here from 1154 to 1500, remain in the old church. The moat of their manſion houſe may be ſeen about 60 yards ſouth from the church. The old or lower part of the town is called Deretend. Digbeth was formerly inhabited by tanners [s]. The navigation, canal, and wharf eſtabliſhed here, have greatly contributed to the increaſe of trade, which has extended the town to the north-eaſt. Between 1741 and the preſent year Birmingham has received an augmentation of 72 ſtreets, 4172 houſes, and 25032 inhabitants [t]. Here is a freeſchool, founded by Edward VI. a charity ſchool and a general hoſpital. Here was an hoſpital or priory, founded by ſome of the lords, valued at £. 8. 5s. 3d. [u] The ſite is now the ſquare. This town gives title of baron to lord Dudley and Ward.

Icknield ſtreet paſſes by the extremity of Birmingham, about five furlongs north of the navigation bridge in Great Charles ſtreet. The foundations of a Roman bridge may be felt nearly level with the bottom of the river. Joining the water are the veſtiges of a caſtle, probably built by ſir John de Birmingham in the 14th century, now an orchard. Roman coins are frequently diſcovered. In 1765 Mr. Hutton recovered one of Veſpaſian. In breaking up this old road to make a new turnpike one, the ſoil appeared to have been taken out for about twenty yards wide, and one deep, and filled up with ſtones of all ſizes brought from Duffield, four miles up the river, and cemented with coarſe mortar. It enters Birmingham pariſh at the obſervatory in Ladywood lane croſſing the Dudley road at the ſand pits; along Worſtone lane, through the little pool and Hockley brook, where it quits the pariſh. It proceeds thence over Handſworth heath, and croſſes the Tame at Offord mill directly to Sutton Coldfield. It paſſes the Ridgeway a few yards eaſt of King's Standing, a little artificial mount where Charles I. is ſaid to have ſtood when he harangued the troops he brought out of Shropſhire at the beginning of the civil war 1642. From thence the road proceeds through Sutton park and the remainder of the Coldfield over Radley moor; from thence to Wall, a Roman ſtation, where it meets the Watling ſtreet: leaving Lichfield a mile to the left it leads through Street-hay, over Fradley heath, thence through Alderwas hays, croſſing the river Trent at Wichnor bridge to Branſon turnpike, over Burton moor, leaving the town half a mile to the river, thence to Monk's bridge upon the river Dove, along Egington heath, Littleover, the Rue dyches, Stepping lane, Nun green, and Darley ſlade to the river Derwent, a mile above Derby, on the eaſtern banks of which ſtands Little Cheſter, built by the Romans. It then proceeds over Morley moor through Scarſdale, by Cheſterfield, Bolſover, through Yorkſhire and Northumberland to Tinmouth [x].

By act of parliament, 1766, a navigable canal was opened between Birmingham and the coal delphs about Wedneſbury, 22 miles to the Staffordſhire canal, at the expence of £. 70,000. divided into ſhares of £. 140. which now or lately ſold for about £. 370 [y].

Two miles from Birmingham in Staffordſhire is a manufactory of buttons, &c. erected 1758 by Meſſ. Boulton and Fothergill, and called Soho [z].

About five miles ſouth of Birmingham, and five furlongs from Solihull lodge, on an eminence, is a Daniſh camp containing about nine acres, nearly triangular, the ditch 20 feet wide, having only one entrance [a].

Upon King's wood, five miles from Birmingham, and 200 yards eaſt of the Alceſter road, runs Mortimer's bank, near a mile in length, thrown up by the famous earl of that name in the reign of Edward II. to incloſe the wood. The pariſhioners of King's Norton, Solihull, and Yardley, threw it down, and murdered the earl's bailiff, for which the earl recovered £. 300 damages againſt them, but did not live to receive it [b].

The veſtiges of a camp, occupied by the parliament's forces 1643, may be ſeen in the angle formed by the Stratford and Warwick roads on Camp hill. Prince Rupert fired the town, and William Fielding earl of Denbigh loſt his life here by a random ſhot from an officer whom he was purſuing [c].

About two miles to the ſouth-weſt is Edgebaſton, the ſeat of ſir Henry Gough, bart. formerly of the Middlemores, a family now reduced to poverty. The houſe was rebuilt ſince the civil wars. Edgebaſton.

To the north of Birmingham at Aſton is the ſeat of ſir Charles Holt, bart. whoſe family have been ſettled there from the reign of Edward III. Thomas was created a baronet 1612 to James I. and died in his 83d year 1654, having founded an hoſpital for five poor men and as many women [d]. Aſton.

Caſtle Bromwich was purchaſed about 1657 of the Devereux family, by John Bridgeman, ſon of ſir Orlando Bridgeman, keeper of the great ſeal, and is now the ſeat of ſir Henry Bridgeman, bart. [e] Caſtle Bromwich.

Biſhop Veſey alias Harman, who died 1555, aged 103, is buried at Sutton Coldfield, where he built a Sutton Coldfield.

[q] Lel. IV. 186.
[r] Hutton, p. 73.
[s] Ib. p. 79.
[t] Ib. p. 46.
[u] Tan. 583.
[x] Hutton, p. 140—145.
[y] Ib. 266.
[z] Ib. 271.
[a] Ib. 272.
[b] Ib. 274.
[c] Ib. 37, 38.
[d] Dugd. 873, where is a view of the houſe.
[e] Ib. 887.

market-

market-houſe, moot-hall, and priſon, ſchool, and two bridges, and 50 houſes for kerſey manufacturers, and converted the chace into a common for the poor. He was a very learned man, educated at Magdalen college, Oxford, tutor to the princeſs Mary, preſident of Wales; but he oppoſed the progreſs of reformation too warmly, and parted with almoſt all the eſtates and houſes of the ſee of Exeter, to which he was advanced 1519, ſo that he reduced it from £.1560. per ann. to 500, and was obliged to reſign it 1551. He was reinſtated by queen Mary, but ſoon after quitted it, and retired to his native town rich with the plunder of his ſee [f]. This chace belonged to the earl of Warwick, who alſo obtained the market now almoſt diſuſed [g]. Four Oaks in this pariſh was the ſeat of lord Foliot, who died 1719 [h], and was ſon and heir of Thomas lord Foliot of Lich-hill, c. Worceſter, baron of Bally-ſhannon in Ireland, and deſcended from the famous houſe of Fenwicks and Folliots of Yorkſhire. He married Elizabeth daughter and coheireſs of Henry Pudſey of Langley in this county, but by her had no iſſue.

Coleſhill. "Coleſhill town a pretty thoroughfare lying by "north and ſouth upon a hill. It has but one long "ſtreet and a pariſh church at the end of it [k]." It ſeems to have had a caſtle, and in certain old foundations was found a copper coin of Trajan. It paſſed by marriage from the Clintons to the Mountforts, and on the attainder of Simon Mountfort 12 Henry VII. to the Digbys, whoſe deſcendant the preſent lord has a ſeat here, now deſerted [i]. In the church are monuments for Simon Digby 1519, his ſon Reginald 1549, grandſon John 1558, and great grandſon George 1586; for Kildare lord Digby of Geaſhil in the kingdom of Ireland 1661, and his lady 1692; for John Clinton t. Henry III. 1241, and for another of the ſame family [k]. Aubrey places a camp near Coleſhill.

Moxhull. In Wiſhaw pariſh is Moxhull the ſeat of Mr. Hacket, deſcended from the biſhop of Lichfield, whoſe ſon by marriage had it from the De Liſles [l].

Omberſlade. Omberſlade, in the pariſh of Tanworth, has been from the reign of Henry II. the ſeat of the Archers, one of the moſt antient families in this county [m], of whom Thomas was created 1747, 21 George II. lord Archer, baron of Omberſlade, and dying 1768, was ſucceeded by his ſon Andrew, who, dying 1778 without iſſue male, the title is extinct.

Henwood. Six miles ſouth of Coleſhill at Henwood was a Benedictine nunnery, founded t. Henry II. valued at £.21. 2s. [n]

Meriden. Meriden, ſix miles ſouth-eaſt of Coleſhill, had a ſeat of the late earl of Aylesbury, now an inn.

Blithe hall. Not far from Coleſhill in Shuſtock pariſh is Blithe hall, the ſeat of the grear antiquary ſir William Dugdale [o], who was born here 1605, and bought Blithe manor of ſir Walter Aſton 1625, and dying 1675, was buried here with his wife, his father and mother and his ſon. It belongs now to his great grandaughter's ſon Richard Geaſt, eſq. who had formed the laudable deſign of republiſhing all his works, but the plates of his hiſtory of this county have been deſtroyed [p]. The compiler of theſe additions boaſts a diſtant alliance with this great antiquary by the marriage of a paternal great aunt with ſir William's grandſon John.

Maxſtoke caſtle came from the Clintons to Humphry Stafford duke of Bucks, who plated the gates richly with iron ſtill remaining, as is the caſtle itſelf very intire. On his attainder it was given to the Comptons, and now belongs to William Dilke, eſq. [q] William Clinton earl of Huntingdon, founded 1336 a priory of Auſtin canons, valued at £.87. [r] The priory houſe remained in Dugdale's time [s]. The ruins of the church drawn by Buck 1729 belonged to lord Leigh.

At Great Packingdon is the ſeat of the earl of Ailesford. It was parcel of the priory of Kenelworth, purchaſed at the diſſolution by John Fiſher, eſq; gentleman penſioner to Henry VIII. and four ſucceeding monarchs. It paſſed by marriage of Mary daughter and heireſs of ſir Clement Fiſher, bart. with Heneage ſecond earl of Aileford [t].

"The town of Coventrye by weſt is ſet on a low "ground, but by eaſt it ſomewhat condeſcendeth. "It was begun to be wallid t. Edward II. and has ſix "gates, and many fair towers. It is but a late ago "ſince the walls were finiſhed. The privilege and "dignite of a mair were given to it but 180 years "ago. There be many fair ſtreets well builded "with timber. There were three ſtatelie churches "in the heart and midle of the towne and all in one "cemitery. The abbey church where king Canute "the Dane made an houſe of nunnes. Leofric earl "of Merches turned it in Edward Confeſſor's time "to an houſe of monkes, and adorned it with gold "and ſilver incredibly. It is now ſuppreſſed. St. "Michael a pariſh church an exceeding goodly and "ample piece of worke. There is a church or col-"lege of St. John Baptiſt in the town, and there was "a maſter and brethren profeſſed, and an hoſpital. "The church yet ſtandeth. There is alſo a collegi-"ate church [now parochial ſince 1734, and rebuilt "ſince [u]] at Bablake hard within the weſt gate of the "foundation of the burgeſſes, and there is a great "privilege, guild, or fraternity, with a maſter and "eight miniſters and lately 12 miniſters [valued at "£.45. [x]] One Bonde a rich merchant of Coventry "annexed to it an hoſpital builded for 10 poor men "and women," augmented by the city of late years [y], and maintaining 18 poor [z]. Part of the building is allotted for chatity children [a]. "The White friars, "founded by ſir John Poultney, four times mayor "of London 1342, 17 Edward III." valued at £.7. 13s. [b] The weſt gate with his arms on it, the refectory and dormitory, and other offices, and part of the cloiſters remain [c], and the houſe is let to weavers. The Grey friars built 1234 [d]. Their ſteeple remains an ornament to the city; and near it a fine gate called the Grey friar's gate, the moſt beautiful of any left ſtanding [e]. In this houſe were acted the Corpus Chriſti plays remaining in the Cottonian library, Veſpaſian D. IX. "The Carthuſians without "the town by a queen, or John of Norbury, a Car-"thuſian friar." This is now the ſeat of Mr. Inge [f], but only the precinct wall remains. William lord Zouche 1381 intended to build it, but being prevented by death, Richard II. at the requeſt of his queen Anne, completed and endowed it with many alien priories. It was valued at £.131. 6s. 4d. [g]

[f] Godw. ed. Richardſon, p. 415. [g] G. [h] Dugd. 909.
[i] Lel. IV. 190. [k] Dugd. 1006. Pennant's Tour from Cheſter to Lond. 129—131.
[l] Dugd. 1016, 1017. [m] Tan. 580. [n] Pennant, 127. [o] Dugd. 780.
[p] Pennant, ib. 134. [q] Pennant, ib. 131—134. [r] See Brit. Top. II. 300.
[s] Tan. 583. [t] Pennant, ib. 135, 136.
[u] Ib. 148. [x] Tan. 585. [y] P. 1000. [z] Tan. 587.
[a] Pennant, 148. [b] Tan. 584. [c] Dugd. 186. Pennant, 165. [d] Dugd. 182. Tan. 581.
[e] Pennant, ib. 564. where both are engraved. [f] Pennant, 181. [g] Tanner, 536.

The beautiful croſs 57 feet high was built by ſir William Hollis, lord-mayor of London between 1541 and 1544, at the expence of £.200. It coſt £.323. to repair it 1629[h]; but it ſuffered ſo much in the civil war that only the lower ſtory and one figure of the ſecond remained 1760, and theſe have been ſince removed.

The Benedictine priory, founded by earl Leofric, who with his counteſs were buried in its porches, was valued at £.731[i], and the prior had ſummons to parliament. It was converted into a biſhopric ſoon after the Conqueſt, Peter being the firſt biſhop of Cheſter, Coventry, and Lichfield united, and ſucceeded by John de Limſey, who removed hither, and had five ſucceſſors, who ſtyled themſelves biſhops of Coventry only; and ſince its union here have been five biſhops including the preſent. The cathedral and the monaſtic buildings are all gone except the lower part of the weſtern towers, from whence ſome idea of the grandeur of the church may be formed. The biſhop's palace retains only the name.

St. Michael's church, rebuilt 1434, has a beautiful ſteeple 136 feet high, begun 1372, 23 years building, finiſhed 1395, and with the ſpire 300 feet high. The ſteeple, one of the moſt ſtriking inſtances of Gothic art and elegance, was erected by two mayors of Coventry named Botoner, who ſpent upon it more than £.100. a year for upwards of 22 years. Two ladies of the ſame family finiſhed the ſpire 1434, and built the middle aile.

In Trinity church lies Dr. PHILEMON HOLLAND, ſchoolmaſter and phyſician in this city, the great tranſlator, who firſt tranſlated Mr. CAMDEN'S BRITANNIA, and died 1636, the year of his ſecond edition, aged 85[k]. His epitaph here is of his own compoſing.

St. John's hoſpital, founded by Laurence prior of Coventry t. Henry II. valued at £.67.[l] converted into a freeſchool by John Hales clerk of the Hanaper t. Henry VIII.[m] Mr. Hales intended to found here a college for education like thoſe at Weſtminſter and Eton. He reſided in the houſe of the White friars, and maintained a ſchool in the choir of the church; but ſome of the magiſtrates finding that the church was not included in his patent, obtained licence of queen Mary to make it a pariſh church, and he was obliged to remove the ſcholars to St. John's hoſpital. They diſturbed him again in poſſeſſion of theſe lands, but he kept up the ſchool while he lived, and by his will left to it an eſtate there worth £. 43. per annum, now advanced to £. 153.[n]

Grey friars hoſpital, founded 1529, for poor men and women, ſtill ſubſiſts[o].

St. Mary's hall belonging to the gild of St. Catherine in Bablake chapel, and built t. Henry VI. 1413, is adorned with portraits in glaſs of nine kings and earls of Warwick, and others of its noble members, now much defaced[p], ſome curious old tapeſtry, and couplets of Engliſh and Latin verſes. Sponne hoſpital, founded by Hugh Cyvelioc earl of Cheſter t. Henry II.[q] The chapel and gateway remain, but the gate of the city called from it has been taken down[r].

"There be divers fair ſuburbs without the walls. "The king hath a palace there, now ſomewhat in "ruin[s]."

At Cheleyſmore is part of the manſion houſe, a wooden building, which, or ſome other on its ſite, was the reſidence of the lords of the place, and of the kings and earls of Mercia and of Cheſter, and falling to the crown when that earldom was reſumed, belongs, with the park, about three miles in circumference, to the prince of Wales as earl of Cheſter. The caſtle ſtood not far from it[t].

There was a parliament, held in the chapter-houſe 38 Henry VI. and called the Deviliſh parliament from the many attainders[u]. Another 6 Henry IV. from the excluſion of the lawyers called the unlearned parliament[10]. "There was a mint of coinage in Co- "ventry [in which groats and perhaps ſmaller pieces "were coined[x]. The biſhop hath alſo a palace here. "The town roſe by making of cloth and cappes, "which now decaying the glory of the city alſo de- "cayeth[y]."

Sir Thomas White, 1542, gave the corporation £. 1400. which was laid out in purchaſe of lands of the yearly value of £. 70. ſettled in truſt, to give £. 24. a year to 12 poor men, and to lend £. 40 a year to induſtrious young men of Coventry, to enable them to ſet up in trade. After 30 years the towns of Northampton, Leiceſter, Nottingham, and Warwick were to have the ſum of £. 40. for the like purpoſe in rotation, which was duly received. A quarrel among the corporation 1692 diſcovered a great improvement of the eſtate, and a bill in chancery was filed againſt them. In 1705 it was diſcovered that the rents of the eſtate amounted to near £. 800. a year, beſides fines for renewals, and four years after to £. 930. a year clear; and a decree was made, that they ſhould account for more than £. 2000. which they had received. The corporation tampered with the ſeveral towns to put an end to the ſuit, on receiving a ſmall proportion of what was due. But it being found that they let long leaſes to their own members and families at ſmall rents, ſeveral public ſpirited gentlemen filed an information on behalf of the poor, and to ſet aſide the private agreement, and it was decreed, that inſtead of £. 24. annually divided between 12 men, £. 243. 3s. ſhould be divided between 61 men, £. 4. apiece to 60, and £. 3. 3s. to the odd one. The corporation refuſing to refund the £. 2000. the court ordered that the eſtate ſhould be conveyed to the honourable William Bromley, eſq; and other gentlemen of the neighbourhood, and a ſequeſtration iſſued againſt the corporation eſtates (upwards of £. 700. per annum), to levy the above ſum, which was at laſt raiſed by ſale of part of their eſtate, and then in 1722 they applied to the court of chancery, to have the truſt eſtates reconveyed to them. This was oppoſed by the new truſtees, and the towns of Leiceſter, Northampton, and Warwick. The chancellor, however, in 1725, thought fit to order a reconveyance, the ſeveral charities being augmented as by the former decree, and the corporation are now in poſſeſſion of the eſtate[z]. Sir Thomas White gave this town a further ſum to pay £. 40. a year to two

[h] Dugd. 142-6.
[i] Tan. 566. Pennant, 150. 154.
[k] Dugd. 166. 176.
[l] Tan. 581.
[m] Dugd. 180. Pennant, 149.
[n] Account of Charities given to Coventry, p. 72. Bray, p. 61.
[o] Dugd. 184. Tan. 587.
[p] Dugd. 190. where they are engraved, and ſome of them by J. Carter in his IV^th number of Engliſh Antiquities, with buſts and a chair there.
[q] Dugd. 197. Tan. 582.
[r] Pennant, Ib. 146.
[s] Leland. ubi ſup.
[t] Pennant, 164.
[u] Dugd. 143.
[10] G.
[x] Lel. IV. 190.
[y] Bray, 62. 65.

fellows of St. John's college, Oxford, ſons of freemen of this city. Mr. Jeſſon gave the town £.2000. with which an eſtate in Glouceſterſhire was purchaſed, the rents to be applied in putting out apprentice and charitable doles, and a loan of £. 20. per annum to poor tradeſmen. Other charities to a conſiderable amount may be ſeen in an account of the charities of Coventry, printed 1733, 8vo.

In 1768 an act paſſed for making a navigable canal from Coventry to communicate with that which was carrying on to join the Trent and Merſey, and next year another paſſed to make a canal from hence to Oxford. The former is carried no further than about Atherſtone, but it is expected will proceed further in another year. The latter has reached Banbury, but it is feared will prove too expenſive to be completed [z].

Edward IV. for the diſloyalty of the citizens, took away their liberties and franchiſes, which they redeemed with 500 marks. The walls were demoliſhed by order of Charles II. ſo that only a ſmall part remains [a] complete between Cookſtreet gate and the Priory gate. On the outſide was a paved road [a]. This city gave title of earl to George Villiers duke of Bucks 21 James I. which ended with his ſon and nameſake. It was conferred 9 William III. on Thomas lord Coventry, of Alleſborough, who died 1699, as did his ſon Thomas 1710, who was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas, and he 1711 by his uncle Gilbert, and he 1719 by his nephew William, whoſe great grandſon George William is the ſixth and preſent earl.

In Coventry great park is a chalybeate water [b].

Tradition ſays the privilege of cutting wood in the Herdnolls by the pariſhioners of St. Briavel's caſtle, c. Glouceſter, was obtained of ſome earl of Hereford then lord of Dean foreſt, at the inſtance of his lady, on the ſame hard terms that lady Godiva obtained the privileges for the citizens of Coventry [c].

The remiſſion of the tolls by Godiva's unremitted interceſſion was commemorated in the portraits of herſelf and her huſband ſet up in the ſouth window of Trinity church t. Richard II. with this inſcription:

I Luricke for the love of thee
Doe make Coventre tol free.

My learned friend Mr. Pegge has ſuggeſted the following doubts concerning the truth of that indecent tranſaction.

"Leofric, the great earl of Mercia, flouriſhed in the reigns of Ethelred II. Canute, Harold, Hardicnut, and Edward the Confeſſor, and left a moſt excellent character behind him. He married Godiva, ſiſter of Thorold de Bukenhale, a lady whoſe qualifications were not at all inferior to his, and ſhe was equally pious, as the great foundation at Coventry was ſet on foot chiefly at her inſtigation. The ſtory of her riding naked through the town of Coventry, is that ſhe intreated her huſband, 'that for the love of God he would make Coventry toll free [d],' which he would comply with on no other terms. It is added by Monſ. Rapin [e], that the counteſs, previous to her riding, commanded all perſons to keep within doors and from their windows on pain of death: but notwithſtanding this ſevere penalty, there was one perſon who could not forbear giving a look, out of curioſity, but it coſt him his life. And 'in memory of this event: there is a ſtatue of a man looking out of a window, always kept in a certain houſe in Coventry.' And the annotator further adds, 'There is a proceſſion or cavalcade ſtill made here every year, in memory of Godiva, with a figure repreſenting a naked woman, riding through the city.' Nobody hath hitherto thought fit to diſpute the fact, and yet it is a ſtrange and moſt improbable ſtory.

"It is extremely legendary at firſt ſight, and Matthew of Weſtminſter, who firſt mentions it, hints, there was a miracle in the caſe, that though the people were aſſembled, Godiva was not ſeen by any one. This is very inconſiſtent with the relation of others, who tell us that Godiva commanded all perſons to keep within doors and from their windows on pain of death.

"It is highly improbable a lady of Godiva's rank and exemplary piety ſhould have ſubmitted to an action ſo ſhameful, or that Leofric ſhould ſuffer his wife, had ſhe been inclined to it, to expoſe herſelf in ſuch a meretricious manner. He might, in jeſt, make the propoſal to her, as a condition impoſſible for her to comply with, but he never would have permitted her to put it into execution; and he was ſufficiently inclined to favour the town of Coventry, without ſuch prepoſterous terms as theſe, as we learn from the magnificent monaſtery he erected at this place.

"But what is moſt material, Leofric died 1057, and yet the ſtory is not mentioned by any writer older than Matthew of Weſtminſter, who did not flouriſh till 1307, 250 years after the fact. The more ancient authors, though they ſpeak of Leofric's foundation at Coventry, and of Godiva's concurrence and benefactions to it, yet they take not the leaſt notice of this fact: as the author of the Saxon Chronicle, Ingulfus, Ordericus Vitalis, Henry of Huntingdon, Simeon Dunelmenſis, Chron. Mailros, Florence of Worceſter, John Abbas de Burgo, and William of Malmſbury, which laſt particularly treating of the monaſtery at Coventry, had a fair opportunity of recording a circumſtance ſo ſingular. As to Matthew of Weſtminſter he tranſcribes Hoveden who flouriſhed A. 1204, as appears by his words and expreſſions. Hoveden, however, has not a ſyllable of Godiva's exploit, but Matthew, 100 years after, has added it at large; whence it follows, that he was the firſt reporter from ſome vulgar or legendary tradition. It may be alledged perhaps in his favour, that the tranſaction was repreſented in a window of Trinity church at Coventry, the effigies of Godiva and her huſband, with an epigraphe expreſſing that the earl freed the town from tolls at the requeſt of his wife. But ſuppoſing it to exhibit all the particulars included in Matthew's legend, yet as it was not made till Richard II's time, it might be grounded on the teſtimony of Matthew of Weſtminſter or Brompton, who all lived before Richard II. The ſame may be ſaid of the proceſſions or cavalcades, which now for ſome centuries have been uſed annually at Coventry in commemoration of this event, ſince in all appearance they ſtand upon no better

[z] Bray, 66 67. 11 G. [a] Pennant, 150. [b] Short's Hiſtory of mineral waters, II. 42.
[c] Rudder's Hiſtory of Glouceſter, p. 307.
[d] Dugd. Warw. p. 86. and Baron. I. p. 10.
[e] Rapin, I. p. 135. This man is commonly called Peeping Tom.

ground,

ground, but have been taken up by the inhabitants without examination from authors of little credit.

"I pretend not to decide peremptorily, yet I cannot but conſider this hiſtorical occurrence as very queſtionable in every view, and particularly inconſiſtent with the amiable portrait given of this lady by the hiſtorians in point of accompliſhments, virtue, and piety."

At Whitley ſouth of Coventry is a large old houſe, in which Charles I. reſided during his attempt on Coventry. Mr. Pennant was told, many of his actions had been painted on the wainſcot[f].

Goſford green is memorable for the duel that was to have been fought there 1398, between the duke of Hereford, afterwards Henry IV. and Thomas Mowbray duke of Warwick earl Marſhal, on a charge brought againſt the former for betraying private converſation. The king came in perſon to Coventry, every thing was prepared on the field, a French nobleman had actually come over poſt to be a ſpectator of the combat, and the champions had entered the liſts, when the king commanded them to deſiſt, and ordered both parties to quit the kingdom, and bound them both by an oath never to come into each others company willingly[g].

Hanſley, mentioned by Mr. Camden is Anſley in Fillougbley pariſh, where are the ruins of two caſtles; one north-eaſt of the church about a quarter of a mile, ſtill called the Caſtle hills; the other ſcarce half ſo far ſouth of the church called the Caſtle yard, whoſe caſtle was ſtanding 18 Edward II. and had a large park. Here the family of Haſtings were ſeated t. Henry I.[h]

Brandon came from the Verdons to the Willoughbies and Yelvertons[i].

The keep of Brinklow caſtle remains, which ſir William Dugdale concludes from its ſituation on the Foſſe way was of Roman origin[k]. Salmon[l] deſcribes it as a camp of about 25 acres, of an oblong form, adjoining to the Foſſe way. The north part is a precipice on one ſide. Hence the name low ſignifying a hill. On this point has been a fortreſs of more antient date than the Norman Conqueſt. This town once gave name to the hundred, though now it is included in that of Knightlow. In Edward III's time here was held a court called Leta de Brinklow, and 45 towns and villages were under it. The fortreſs is much like that deſcribed, vol. I. p. 328. at Kaynoe in Bedfordſhire; the keep on the north ſide fenced by a precipice; without the ſouth ditch are three other works, which altogether ſeem to take up ſix acres. The ditches of all three are drawn into a point at the precipice, as thoſe at Kaynoe are at the moor. Here Salmon places RATÆ.

Richard de Camville founded Combe abbey for Ciſtertians, 1150, valued at £.311. per annum[m]. It came from the heirs of John lord Harrington by purchaſe to the Cravens, and is now the ſeat of lord Craven; a venerable manſion, with a cloiſter on three ſides of the court glazed as antiently. Mr. Pennant deſcribes ſome capital portraits here[n].

Ceſter Over, or more properly Theſter Over, q. d. The Eaſtern Over, denoting its ſituation from Monks Kirby, the family ſeat of the antient family of Waver, of whom ſir Henry built the houſe t. Edward IV. afterwards by marriage of the Browns, and by purchaſe t. Henry VIII. of the Grevilles, from whom the Brookes now have it. In the ſame pariſh of Monks Kirby is Cloudeley buſh, a tumulus with a beacon, perhaps the grave of ſome Roman of the name of Claudius[o]. Ceſter Over.

Near Bedworth is a ſeat of ſir Roger Newdigate, bart. and a coal mine, from which he has made a cut to communicate with the navigation. He has here a wheel of 36 feet diameter, which throws out the water and draws up the coals at the ſame time. In the mines here, it is ſaid, that large toads have been often found in the ſolid coal[p]. Bedworth.

Nun Eaton was a nunnery of the order of Font Evraud, where was a prior as well as a prioreſs, as uſual in the foreign houſes of this order. It was valued at £. 253. 14s. per annum[q]. The ruins are to be ſeen at the north-weſt end of the town[r]. One arch lately fell, and one remains. The town has a market and fair, a freeſchool and ribbon manufactory. Nun Eaton.

Not far from this place is The Hyde, a depopulated hamlet of Hinckley, memorable for the fate of the manor, one of its lords being murdered, and another cheated out of it. It now belongs to the earl of Stamford[s]. The Hyde.

North-weſt of Nun Eaton is Caldecote, the ſeat of the Purefoys, memorable for the defence of it with eight men, againſt princes Rupert and Maurice with 13 troops of horſe and dragoons, in 1642, recorded on the tomb of George Abbot, who married a Purefoy. In the neat church here are many good monuments of the Purefoys; from which family Caldecote was purchaſed by ſir Nathan Wright, lord keeper of the great ſeal, whoſe ſon (William recorder of Leiceſter) ſold it to —— Prinſeps, eſq; and his ſon conveyed it to Thomas Fiſher, eſq; who has built an elegant modern manſion, without deſtroying the convenience of the venerable manor houſe[t]. Caldecote.

In Chilverſcoton church is buried, with a ſmall mural monument, which does not record his merit, Mr. Henry Beighton, who aſſiſted a ſmall income here of £.100. a year by ſurveying, in which, for elegance, accuracy, and expedition he had few equals. He began his excellent ſurvey of this county 1725, and finiſhed it 1729, but failed of encouragement to publiſh it by ſubſcription, which was done for the benefit of his widow, 1750[u], with the ſeveral emendations left by him. Chilverſcoton

In Chilverſcoton was Erdbury, an Auſtin priory, founded by Ralph de Sudley t. Henry II. valued at £. 94. per annum[w]. Erdbury.

Sir Thomas de Aſtley founded at Aſtley a collegiate church for a dean and ſecular canons 17 Edward III. valued at £.46 per ann.[x] building a beautiful church with a tall ſpire. The eſtate came by marriage to the Greys, of whom Thomas was created marquis of Dorſet 15 Edward IV. and with his ſon buried here. Their deſcendant Henry duke of Suffolk, father of Aſtley.

[f] P. 182.
[g] Pennant, 166---173. & aut. ibi citati.
[h] Dugd. 1024.
[i] Dugd. 43.
[k] Dugd. 218.
[l] New Surv. 493.
[m] Tan. 576.
[n] Pennant, 175---181.
[o] Dugd. 90. 92.
[p] Bray, 68. Stukeley, It. II. 19.
[q] Tan. 578.
[r] Dugd. 1067. Bray, 69.
[s] Nichols's Hiſt. of Hinckley, p. 105, 106.
[t] Dugd. 1097. Nichols's Hiſtory of Hinckley, p. 236. Gent. Mag. 1783, p. 225.
[u] Pennant, 184.
[w] Tan. 580. Dugd. 1074.
[x] Tan. 584.

Jane Grey, was betrayed by his park keeper here and beheaded. His widow Frances remarried Andrew Stokes, who, by taking down the leaded ſpire called the lantern of Arden, a way mark, and the ailes, occaſioned the fall of the ſteeple, which was rebuilt 1607, when the reſt of the church except the choir was taken away with the Dorſet tombs, and the body of the firſt marquis taken out of the coffin. It was afterwards buried, but the monuments caſt by into the belfrey, &c. A ſouth chapel was removed to the eaſt end, and now ſerves as a chancel, the original chancel being made the nave. The Aſtley monuments and the arms in the windows deſcribed by Dugdale are all gone [y].

Manceſter. Dugdale derives the name of Manceſter from Man little and ceſter, and ſays, coins of ſilver and braſs are frequently brought to light there. The church ſtands on an eminence, which Dr. Stukeley ſays ſeems to have been a camp, having been intrenched very deeply. Near it is a neat hoſpital. To the left of the church is Oldbury, an oblong fort of about ſeven acres, with large ramparts; the proprietor, Mr. Okeover, building a manſion houſe in the centre will alter the entrance. On the north ſide have been found flint axes about four inches and a half long, wrought into an oval form, one of which is in the Aſhmolean Muſeum, and engraved in Dugdale [z]. The nuns of Poleſworth retiring here in the reign of William the Conqueror, when they returned left a cell [a].

That part of the old Roman city which lies on the north-weſt ſide of the Watling-ſtreet is in Warwickſhire, called Caſtle banks, and that on the ſouth-eaſt in Leiceſterſhire Oldfield banks. It is 600 feet long and 200 broad on each ſide the road: the ditch and bank very perfect. Great ſtones, mortar, Roman bricks, pieces of iron, and many coins of braſs and ſilver and ſome of gold, have been dug up there. There is a ſpring at the north-eaſt gate. The bridge over the river Anker is lately rebuilt [b]. Here Dr. Salmon [c] places PENNOCRUCIUM.

Atherſton. At Atherſton was a houſe of friers hermits of St. Auſtin, founded by Ralf lord Baſſet of Draiton 49 Edward III. The Repingtons built a houſe on the ſite [d]. Atherſton chapel [e] belonging to the monks of Bec, was ſubjected to Manceſtre church [f]. The church of the friars yet remains and is kept in good repair, the nave or weſtern part being uſed as a chapel of eaſe for the inhabitants every Sunday. The antient chapel, founded by the monks of Bec, has been ſo long demoliſhed that not the leaſt trace of its ſituation can be found. Here is a freeſchool, founded by ſir William Devereux and others, which is kept in the chancel or eaſtern part of the friars church.

Here in 1661 was born Dr. Nehemiah Grew the naturaliſt, his father the rev. Obediah Grew being then maſter of the freeſchool. Nehemiah died 1711: and in the adjacent hamlet of Hartſhill was born Michael Drayton [g].

Merivale. Merivale was founded 1148 for Ciſtertians from Bordſley, valued at £. 254. 18*s*. per annum [h].

Poleſwo th nunnery was founded by king Egbert or his ſon at the inſtance of Modwenna, repaired t. Stephen by the Marmions, who had diſpoſſeſſed them, valued at £. 109. per annum [i]. It was granted to Francis Goodwin, whoſe ſon-in-law ſir Francis Netherſol, public orator of Cambridge, founded a freeſchool here at the deſire of his lady, and rebuilt the vicarage houſe [k].

At Stipperſhal are ſome works of a ſmall fortification [l].

At Sekindon near the church, on a hill, is a circular fort, whoſe outer ditch is 20 feet at top and 10 at bottom, and 12 deep, the diameter within the bank 297 feet. On the north ſide oppoſite the entrance is an artificial round hill, 42 feet high, and 23 broad at top. A battle was fought here A. D. 757 between Cuthred king of the Weſt Saxons, and Ethelbald king of Mercia, when the latter was ſlain by Burgred one of his own officers, and buried at Repton, c. Derby. William Burdet founded at Aucote here a ſmall Benedictine priory, cell to Great Malvern, 1159, valued at £. 34. 8*s*. per annum [m].

At the confluence of Anker and Tame ſtands Tamworth, Saxon Tama ƿeoꝛðize, q. d. a manſion in an iſland in Tame, ƿeoꝛð prædium, ize inſula, & Tame; in Heming's Chartulary Tome ƿeoꝛðinz: Tomoꝛðis, Tompoꝛðie, Tomopoꝛðin & Tomanpoꝛðiz; a market town, where Robert Marmion, to whom the Conqueror gave it, built a caſtle. It came afterwards to the Ferrars, whoſe monuments are in the collegiate church here [n]. The church is in Staffordſhire. Here was an hoſpital founded by Philip Marmion 15 Edward I. [o] This town was the ſeat of the Mercian kings till deſtroyed by the Danes. It lay in ruins till 914, when Ethelfleda reſtored it, and built its caſtle [p]. See more of it in Staffordſhire. Aubrey places near Tamworth in Warwickſhire two camps of Vortigern and Hengiſt, for which he refers to Holinſhed's chonicle, once called Colemore, now Blackmore. Spearheads and a braſs key have been found there [q].

William de Beauchamp, firſt of the name earl of Warwick, figured in Edward I's Welſh wars, and died 1298, 26 Edward I. He bore G. ſeme of croſs croſslets, with a feſs, O. which croſſes were an addition to his coat [r]. His ſon Guy was in Edward II's Scotch wars, ſurprized and beheaded Gaveſton, and dying 1315 was buried in Bordeſley abbey [s]. His ſon Thomas figured in Edward III's French wars, and dying of the plague near Calais 43 Edward III. was buried at Warwick. His eldeſt ſon Guy died 11 years before him 1351, and was buried at Vendoſme in France. His ſecond ſon Thomas ſucceeded, who was in Edward III's French wars, was appointed by parliament governor to Richard II. and retiring to his caſtle at Warwick, built the ſtately north-eaſt tower there. He narrowly eſcaped death after the murder of the duke of Glouceſter, and was baniſhed into the Iſle of Man, and his caſtle and eſtate given to Thomas Holland earl of Kent. He had his lands reſtored by Henry IV. rebuilt the church at Warwick, and dying 1401. 2 Henry IV. was buried in it [t]. His ſon

[y] Dugd. 106. 119. Burton's Leiceſterſh. 51.
[z] 2081. [a] Tan. 570. [b] Stukeley, Itin. II. 20. Bray, 70. [c] P. 507.
[d] Dugd. 1085-6. Tan. 585. [e] Not the friary church as Camden.
[f] Dugd. 1084. [g] Ib. 1086. [h] Tan. 575. [i] Tan. 566.
[k] Dugd. 1106-14. [l] Dugd. 1121. [m] Tan. 581. Dugd. 1126.
[n] Dugd. 1130. Tan. 489. [o] Tan. 502. [p] Dugd. 1131. [q] Mon. Brit.
[r] Dugd. Bar. I. 229. [s] Ib. 230. [t] Ib. 231—238.

Richard ſucceeded, and was appointed governor to Henry VI. in his minority, and on the death of the duke of Bedford lieutenant of France, and dying at Rouen in France 1439, was buried in the chapel in Warwick church built by his executors. His ſecond wife Iſabel has a handſome tomb at Tewkſbury [u]. His ſon Henry ſucceeded, and by the precedency granted him by Henry VI. gave ſo much offence to Humphry duke of Buckingham, that the king was forced to appoint that they ſhould take place of each other by turns every year, Warwick to have the firſt year. He died in his 22d year 1445, and was buried at Tewksbury at the head of prince Edward, about the midſt of the choir. He was ſucceeded in the title by his ſiſter's husband Richard Nevill earl of Saliſbury, whoſe ſiſter he had married [x], and who was ſlain at the battle of Barnet 1471 on the ſide of king Henry, and buried at Biſham abbey. Comines [y] ſays he loſt his life by fighting on foot at the inſtigation of his brother the marquis Montacute contrary to his uſual practice; and Stow [z] ſays, ſuch was his hoſpitality that at his houſe in London, ſix oxen were uſually eaten at a breakfaſt, and every man had as much meat as he could carry away on the point of his dagger. His eldeſt daughter Iſabella married George duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV. and his youngeſt Anne Edward prince of Wales ſon of Henry VI. and after Richard duke of Glouceſter, afterwards Richard III. [a] Brook ſays, p. 583, that George duke of Clarence bore the title of earl of Warwick in right of his wife. His ſon Edward was beheaded on a charge of favouring Warbeck, being only 24 years old, 15 Henry VII.

Dudley lord Liſle, ſon of Edmund Dudley, Henry VII's miniſter, and by his mother deſcended from Margaret eldeſt daughter and coheir to Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, was by Edward VI. created earl of Warwick, and in his fifth year duke of Northumberland. He was beheaded by Mary for favouring lady Jane 1553, and buried in the Tower chapel. His eldeſt ſon John died in priſon, but Elizabeth reſtored his brother Ambroſe to the title, who died 1589, and was buried in the chapel at Warwick [b]. James I. conferred the title on Robert lord Rich of Leigh c. Eſſex 1618, who dying the ſame year, was buried at Felſted, and ſucceeded by his ſon and nameſake, who died 1658, and was buried at Felſted; and he by his ſon and nameſake, who died 1659, and was buried at Felſted [c]. His ſucceſſor was his brother Charles, who dying 1673, left the honor to his neareſt kinſman of the male line Edward earl of Warwick and Holland, grandſon of Robert Rich earl of Holland, who was beheaded 1648, and ſucceeded in his honors by his ſon Robert, who died 1658. Edward dying 1701 was buried at Kenſington, and ſucceeded by his ſon Edward Henry, and he 1721 by Edward ſon of Cope Rich 4th ſon of Henry Rich earl of Holland, with whom the title became extinct after 1759. It was once more revived in Francis Greville, earl Brooke, (a lineal deſcendant of Fulke lord Brooke) who was created earl Brooke 1746, and earl of Warwick 1759, and whoſe ſon George now enjoys theſe titles [d].

[u] Ib. 247. It is engraved in his Warwickſhire, p. 413.
[x] Dugd. Bar. 248.
[y] B. III. c. 6.
[z] P. 421.
[a] Dugd. Bar. I. 307.
[b] Ib. II. 217—220.
[c] Ib. 388.
[d] See before, p. 341.

Rare Plants found in Warwickſhire.

Atropa Belladonna. Deadly Nightſhade or Dwale; in hedges and on rubbiſh: at Sutton Coldfield.

Cardamine amara. Bitter Creſſes or Ladies-ſmock; in damp meadows and paſtures: at Middleton.

Carex veſicaria β. A variety of greater Bladder Carex; in ſeveral pools about Middleton.

Equiſetum hyemale. Rough Horſe-tail or Shave-graſs; in a moiſt ditch at Middleton towards Drayton.

——— ſylvaticum. Wood Horſe-tail; in moiſt places, and by the watery ditches by the wood ſide on the right hand as you go from Middleton to Sutton a little before you come to the heath.

Hydnum imbricatum. Common Hydnum; in a wood near Middleton.

Hypochæris glabra. Smooth Hawk-weed; on the gravelly grounds near Middleton.

Malva Alcea. Vervain Mallow; in hedges, and at the ſides of fields.

Narciſſus Pſeudonarciſſus. Wild Engliſh Daffodil; in ſome paſtures about Sutton Coldfield on the eaſt ſide of the town, plentifully.

Oſmunda Lunaria. Moonwort; found in ſeveral cloſes about Sutton Coldfield; on the weſt ſide of the town.

Oſmunda regalis. Flowering Fern, or Oſmund Royal; on the moiſt banks by the New Park at Middleton; on that ſide next the London road.

Polygonum Biſtorta. The Greater Biſtort, or Snake-weed; in the meadows at Tamworth and Faſely.

Ribes nigrum. Black Currants, or Squinancy-berries; in damp woods, and on banks of rivers.

Scirpus ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus-graſs; frequently by the river Tame ſide near Tamworth, and elſewhere.

Schoenus mariſcus. Long-rooted Baſtard Cyperus; in boggy places by the river Tame near Tamworth.

Turritis glabra. Great Tower Muſtard; on Dorſthill hill near Tamworth.

Vaccinium Vitis idæa. Red Whorts, or Whortle berries; on the black boggy heaths between Middleton and Sutton.

——— Oxycoccus. Cranberries, Moſs-berries, or Moor-berries; in the mooriſh grounds and quagmires in Sutton Coldfield park, plentifully.

A

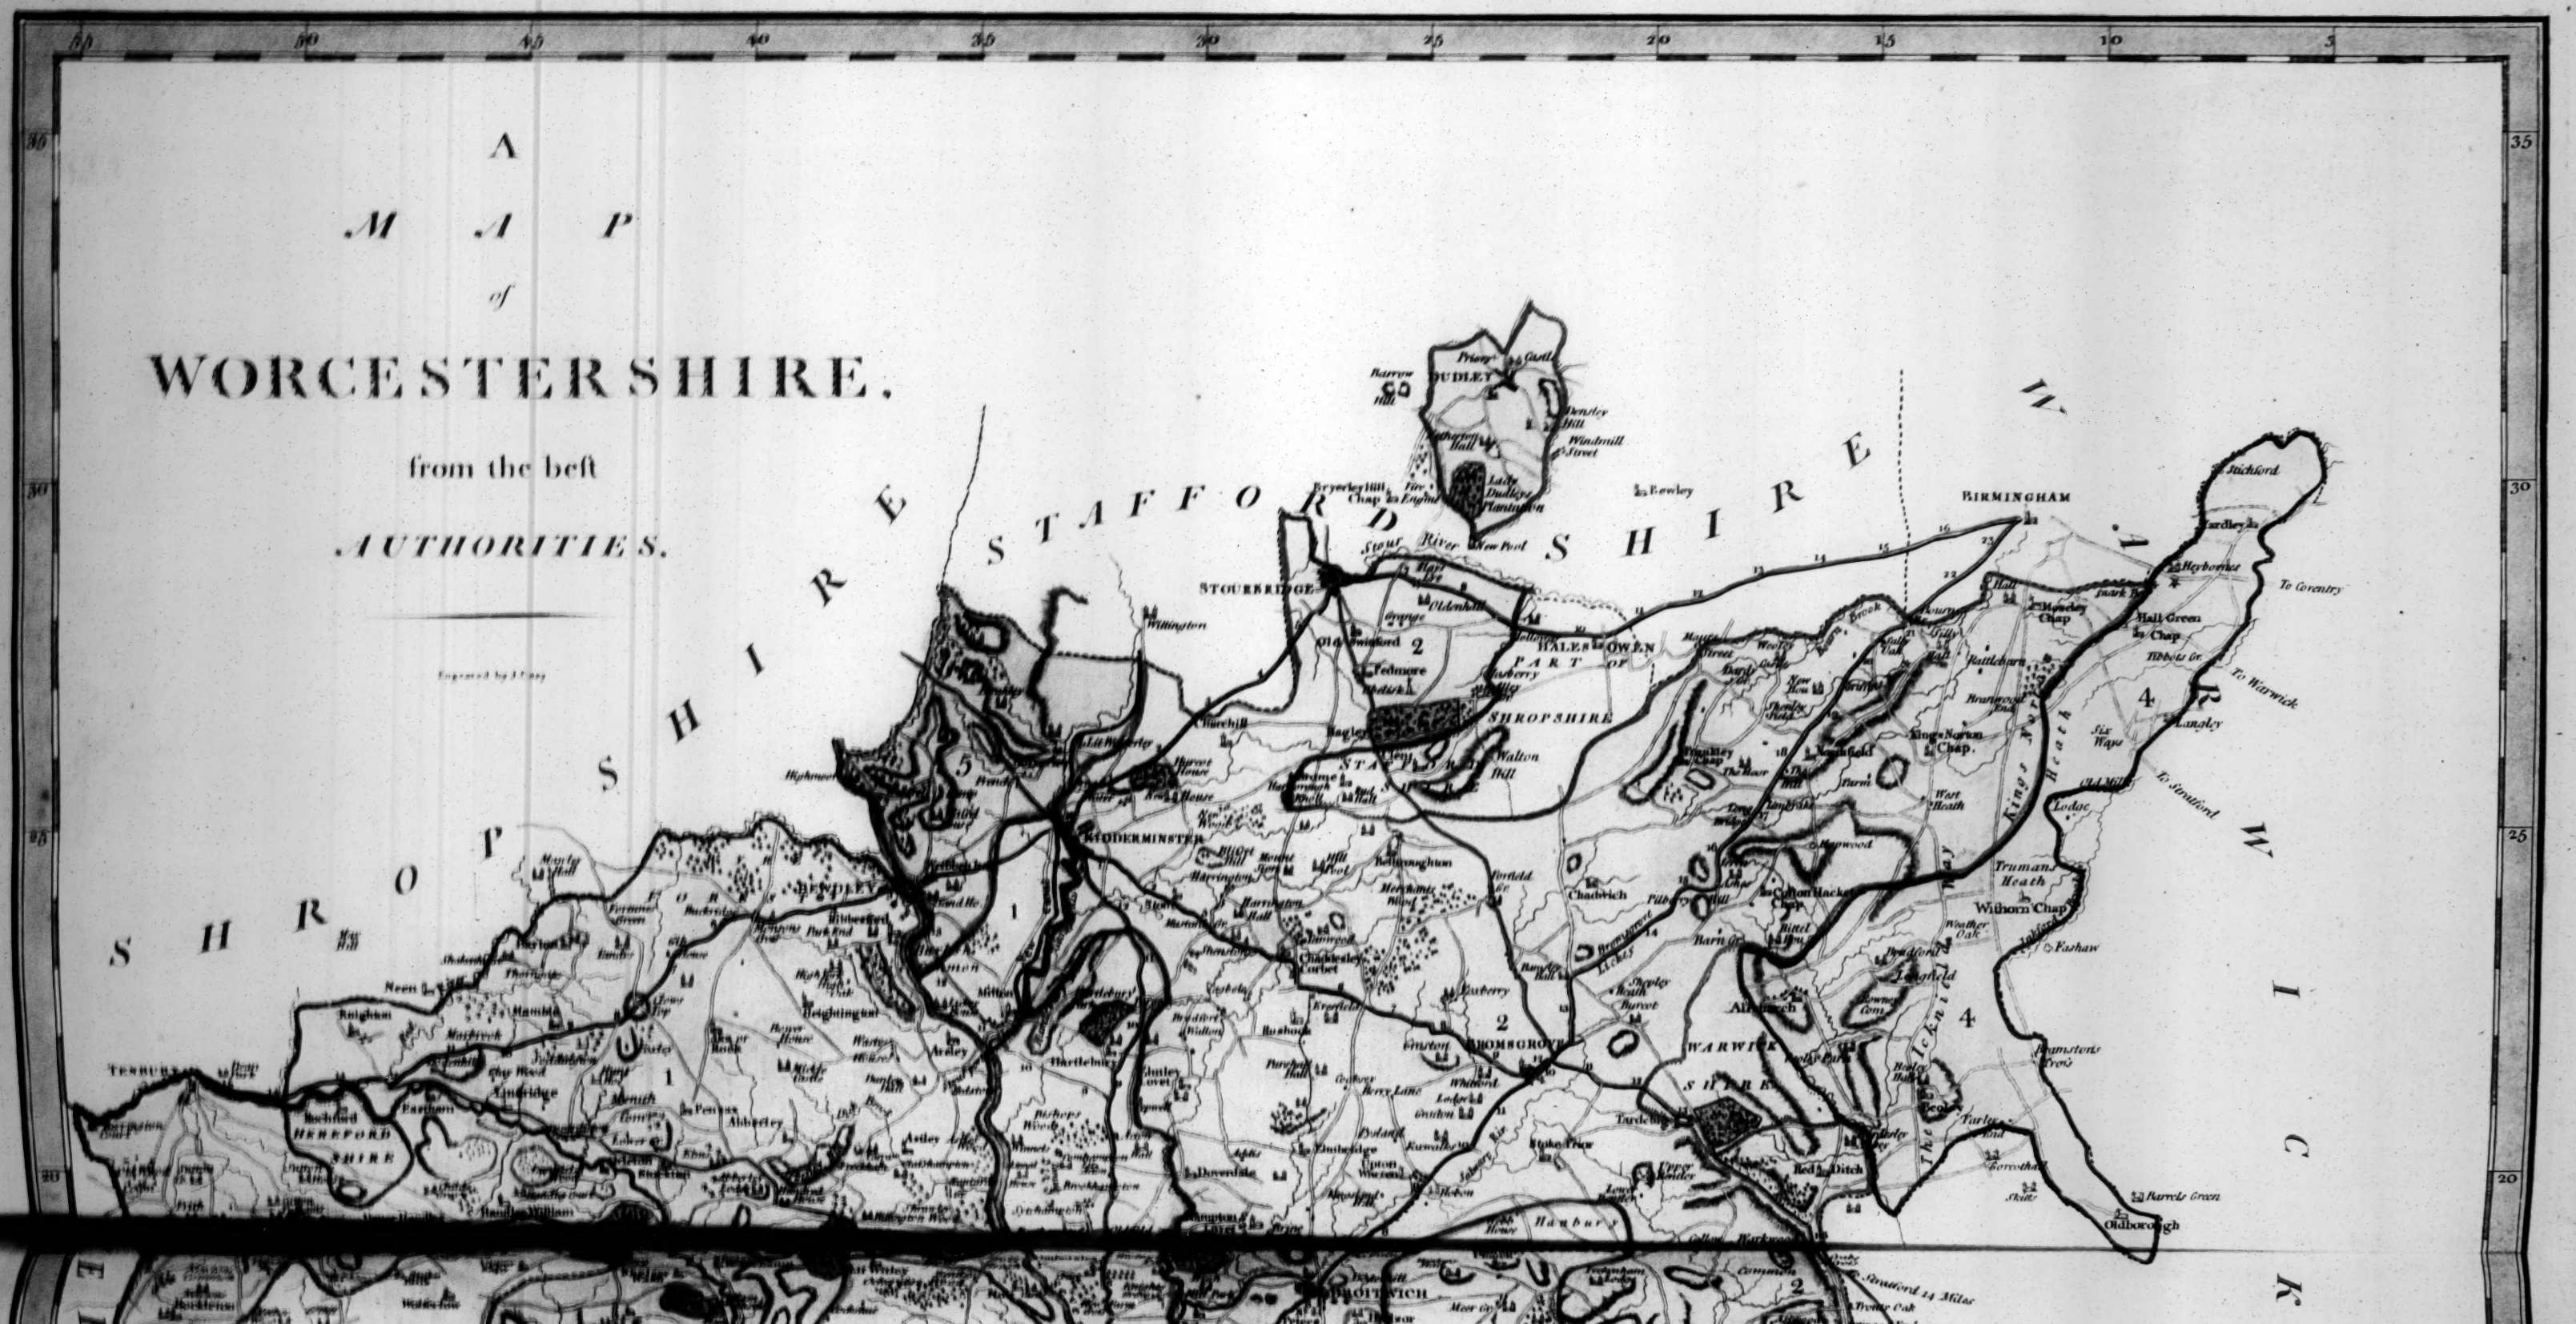
M A P

of

WORCESTERSHIRE.

from the best

AUTHORITIES.



STAFFORDSHIRE
SHROPSHIRE
WARWICKSHIRE
HEREFORDSHIRE
DUDLEY
STOURBRIDGE
HALESOWEN
BIRMINGHAM
KIDDERMINSTER
BEWDLEY
BROMSGROVE
PERSHORE
EVESHAM
TENBURY
Priory
Castle
Barrow Hill
Bryerley Hill Chap.
Fire Engine
Lady Dudley's Plantation
Bowley
Stour River
New Pool
Oldbury
Wollaston
Wilmington
Old Swinford
Pedmore
Churchill
Walton Hill
Harvest Home
Hyde House
Wribbenhall
Habberley
Blakeshall
Chaddesley Corbett
Harvington
Kidderminster Common
Mitton
Hartlebury
Bellbroughton
Heightington
Arley
Upton Warren
Bittell
Barnt Green
Alvechurch
Redditch
Tardebigge
Stoke Prior
Hanbury
Upton upon Severn
Eldersfield
Ripple
Tewkesbury
Ashchurch
Pershore
Abberley
Martley
Knightwick
Hanley William
Hanley Castle
Upton
Malvern
Ledbury
Bromyard
Tenbury
Rochford
Ludlow
Bridgnorth
Wolverhampton
Dudley
Birmingham
Coventry
Warwick
Worcester
Gloucester
Hereford
Shrewsbury
Stafford
Kidderminster
Bewdley
Stourbridge
Halesowen
Bromsgrove
Evesham
Tenbury
Leominster
Ross
Monmouth
Abergavenny
Brecon
Builth
Llandrindod
Newtown
Welshpool
Oswestry
Whitchurch
Wem
Shifnal
Wellington
Newport
Lichfield
Tamworth
Atherstone
Nuneaton
Rugby
Daventry
Banbury
Stratford upon Avon
Henley in Arden
Solihull
Sutton Coldfield
Walsall
West Bromwich
Smethwick
Oldbury
Halesowen
Stourbridge
Kidderminster
Bewdley
Worcester
Droitwich
Evesham
Pershore
Tewkesbury
Cheltenham
Gloucester
Ross
Hereford
Leominster
Tenbury
Bromyard
Ledbury
Malvern
Upton
Ashchurch
Alcester
Redditch
Bromsgrove
Droitwich
Worcester
Kidderminster
Bewdley
Stourbridge
Halesowen
Dudley
Birmingham
Coventry
Warwick
Stratford upon Avon
Banbury
Daventry
Rugby
Nuneaton
Atherstone
Tamworth
Lichfield
Wolverhampton
Walsall
West Bromwich
Smethwick
Oldbury
Wellington
Shifnal
Bridgnorth
Ludlow
Shrewsbury
Stafford
Newport
Whitchurch
Wem
Oswestry
Welshpool
Newtown
Llandrindod
Builth
Brecon
Abergavenny
Monmouth
Ross
Hereford
Leominster
Tenbury
Bromyard
Ledbury
Malvern
Upton
Ashchurch
Tewkesbury
Cheltenham
Gloucester
Pershore
Evesham

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS

1. Doddingtree
2. Halfshire
3. Oswaldslow
4. Pershore
5. Upton
6. Blakenhurst

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

1 2 3 4 5 6

W 30 West Longitude from 23 London

E A S T E R S H I R E

W A R W I C K S H I R E

H E R E F O R D S H I R E

G L O U C E S T E R S H I R E

W O R C E S T E R S H I R E

Cotsdean Shire

Cuddesden

Worcester Shire

W O

THE ſecond pa vii has now ſhire, called by the whoſe inhabitants, called in Bede's[a] tim into counties, Wiccii.
from the winding r
(the creeks of a rive
Wic, as was before o the ſalt pits, which are called Wiches.
many ſalt ſprings up again becauſe it from old writings) th place, for the better is not extraordinary names from ſalt-pits, different countries,
Tacitus[b] reports, th proaching to Heave were never ſo favou any others.

This county is wick, on the ſouth
Hereford and Shrop fordſhire. To give ſoil are ſo favoural neighbouring count
It particularly abou pleaſing to nicer pa a kind of wine m
Pyrry, in great dem of liquors cold and the article of wa rivers yielding ple of leſs note, the n lizing courſe throu north to ſouth, an Avon coming fro
Severn.

The Severn ent
ſter and Beawdley. its beautiful ſituat river to the weſt it Wyre foreſt, r its trees which a our antiquarian p

Delicium rerú
Fronde corona

Fair ſeated B Whom Wyr

This little town i ſituation and bea

[a] Hiſt. Ecc. c. 22.
[c] and in one part
[d] Q. which of the [e] partibus is omitte

WORCESTERSHIRE.

THE ſecond part of the country of the Cornavii has now changed its name to Worceſter-ire, called by the Saxons Wiꝛe-ceaꝛtep-ꝛcyꝛe, oſe inhabitants, with others round about, were ed in Bede's[a] time, before England was divided counties, Wiccii. If this name does not come n the winding river whoſe banks they inhabit e creeks of a river being called by the Saxons , as was before obſerved) it ſeems derived from ſalt pits, which in the old Engliſh language called Wiches. Here are moſt noble ones, and ny ſalt ſprings are often fouud, but ſtopped again becauſe it has been provided (as appears m old writings) that ſalt ſhall be made but in one ce, for the better preſervation of the woods. It not extraordinary that places ſhould take their mes from ſalt-pits, as there are many inſtances in ferent countries, and our German anceſtors, as citus[b] reports, thought ſuch places neareſt approaching to Heaven, and that the prayers of men ere never ſo favourably received by the gods from y others.

This county is bounded on the eaſt on Warick, on the ſouth on Gloceſter, on the weſt on ereford and Shropſhires, and on the north on Staffordſhire. To give a brief idea of it, the air and il are ſo favourable that it yields to none of the eighbouring counties for healthfulneſs and plenty[c]. t particularly abounds in pears, which, though leſs leaſing to nicer palates, and not keeping well, have kind of wine made of their winey juice, called Pyrry, in great demand, though like all thoſe kinds f liquors cold and flatulent. Nor is it leſs happy in the article of water, having every where pleaſant rivers yielding plenty of delicate fiſh. To omit thoſe of leſs note, the noble river Severn directs its fertilizing courſe through the middle of the county from north to ſouth, and the ſouth part is watered by the Avon coming from Warwickſhire and haſting to the Severn.

The Severn enters the county between Kidderminſter and Beawdley. This laſt, juſtly denominated from its beautiful ſituation, moſt pleaſantly overhangs the river to the weſt on the ſide of a hill, having near it Wyre foreſt, remarkable lately for the tallneſs of its trees which are now almoſt all gone. Whence our antiquarian poet Leland:

Delicium rerum Bellus locus undique floret
Fronde coronatus Virianæ tempora ſylvæ.

Fair ſeated Bewdley, moſt delightful town,
Whom Wyre's tall oaks with lofty leafage crown.

This little town is now remarable only for its pleaſant ſituation and beauty, and for Tikenhall, a palace built there by king Henry VII. as a retreat for Prince Arthur. The other town Kidderminſter, called alſo Kidelminſter, ſtands oppoſite to it to the eaſt, but farther from the river; a very neat town with a good market, divided by the little river Stoure. Its greateſt ornament at preſent is a handſome church, in which ſeveral of the famous family of the Cockſeys are buried, and the beautiful houſe of the knightly family of the Blounts, deſcended from thoſe of Kinlett. This place was antiently very conſiderable for the Biſſets its lords, perſons of great eminence in their time, whoſe fine eſtates were at laſt divided among ſiſters, and came partly to the barons Abergavenny, and partly to the hoſpital of leprous women in Wiltſhire, built by one of the ſiſters, who was herſelf afflicted with that diſtemper, and endowed it with her fortune. It had afterwards a baron of its own, John de Beauchamp, created by Richard II. to whom he was "ſteward of the houſhold," by patent baron Beauchamp of Kidderminſter, and afterwards, with other illuſtrious perſonages, condemned and beheaded by the barons rioting with the commons in contempt of the king's authority, and calling all the king's favourites to account for maladminiſtration.

Kidderminſter.

Baron Beauchamp of Kidderminſter.

The Severn directing its courſe more obliquely from hence, paſſes by Hertelbury, a caſtle of the biſhops of Worceſter not far from it, and runs to *Holt, ſo called from the thick foreſt, formerly a caſtle of the Abetots, afterwards of the Beauchamps, who deſcended from William Beauchamp, ſurnamed "the Blind Baron[d]," and roſe to a moſt honourable family, whoſe inheritance came at laſt by females to Gyſe and Peniſton. From hence the Severn runs down feeding ſo many river lampreys that nature ſeems to have formed a ſtew for them here, ſuch as the antient Romans in the height of their luxury invented. We call them lampreys from the Latin name Lampetra, as if from lambendis petris their licking the rocks. They are like eels, ſlippery and blackiſh, but their bellies ſomewhat blue, having on each ſide of the throat ſeven parallel holes[e], at which they take in the water, having no gills. They are found to be beſt and ſweeteſt in ſpring, for in ſummer the interior nerve which ſerves them for a backbone grows hard. The Italians heighten the flavour by a particular pickle; for they kill them with Malmeſey[f], ſtop their mouths with nutmegs, and the holes with cloves, and roll them round with pounded filbuds, crumb bread, oil, Malmſey and ſpices, and ſtew them in a pan over a gentle fire for a few minutes. But what have I to do with culinary matters and good eating?

Hertlebury.

Lampreys.

Below Holt the Severn opens her eaſtern bank for the river Salwarp, which flowing from the north Salwarp r.

* Holt, old Engliſh for a foreſt or wood.

[a] Hiſt. Ecc. c. 22. [b] An. XIII. c. 57.
[c] and in one part for dainty cheeſe ſurpaſſeth them. Holland.
[d] Q. which of the William Beauchamps mentioned by Dugdale Bar. I. 226, 7, 8.
[e] ſuribus is omitted by Gibſon. [f] Vinum Creticum.

part

Bromſgrove. Graſton. part of the county paſſes by Bromeſgrove, no contemptible market town, not far from Graſton, the ſeat of the famous family of the Talbots, which Henry VII. gave to Gilbert Talbot, younger ſon of John ſecond earl of Shrewſbury, and for his bravery and conſummate prudence made a knight of the garter and governor of Calais in France. From hence the Salwarp runs down to Droitwich (called by ſome Durtwich, from the ſalt-pits and moiſt ſituation, as Hyetus in Bœotia had its name from its clayey ſituation [g]) where three plentiful ſprings, divided by a freſh ſtream by a peculiar favour of nature yield plenty of brine, from which the pureſt and whiteſt ſalt is made every year for ſix months; from the ſummer to the winter ſolſtice, in a number of furnaces built round the ſpot. What a prodigious quantity of wood this conſumes Fekenham foreſt, once exceeding thick, and the adjoining woods, ſufficiently declare. If I ſay that Richard de la Wich, biſhop of Chicheſter, native of this place, procured theſe ſprings by his prayers, I fear I ſhould be thought injurious to Providence, and too credulous of old wives tales. But ſuch was the pious credulity of our anceſtors, that they not only firmly believed and recorded this, but paid him a ſort of divine worſhip on this very account; Urban IV. having ſolemnly canonized him for his knowledge in the canon law and his good life. But Gervaſe of Tilbury, before this Richard was born, gives this account of theſe ſprings, though not altogether true. "In the biſhopric of Worceſter is a ſmall "village[h] called Wich, in which the ſweeteſt water "iſſues from the foot of a hill. On the bank of this "ſtream are a few wells of moderate depth, and very "ſalt water. When this water is boiled in kettles "it thickens to the whiteſt ſalt, and it is affirmed "by the whole province, that from Chriſtmas to "Michaelmas the water is ſalteſt. The reſt of the "year it is rather freſh and unfit to make ſalt; and, "which I think the moſt extraordinary circumſtance, "though the water iſſues out for the purpoſes of ſalt "during part of the year[i], it ſcarce ever overflows "the pits, and when the ſeaſon comes for it to be "ſalt, it is never affected by the neighbouring river "water, nor is it found any where near the ſea."

Droitwich.

Fekenham foreſt.

Richard de la Wich.

In the royal ſurvey called Domeſday[k] we read, "In "Wich are eight ſalt-pits belonging to the king and "the earl, which the week they are boiled and worked[l] "pay every Friday ſixteen bulliones, &c."

WORCESTER. The Severn has not flowed five miles from hence when it approaches in a gentle manner as if admiring WORCESTER, the chief city of the county, ſituate on it, and deſerving admiration whether we regard its antiquity or beauty. Antoninus mentions it under the name of BRANONIUM, and Ptolemy, in whom by the fault of tranſcribers it is out of its place, gives it that of BRANOGENIUM[m], by which name it paſſes as Caer Wrangon among the Britans, and in Ninnius' catalogue Caer Guorangon[n] and Caer Guorcon. The Saxons afterwards called it Weogaпe-ceaſtep, Wegeopna-ceaſtep, and Wiре-ceaſtep, perhaps from the thick foreſt of Wire adjoining. Its Latin name is Wigornia, which name was firſt uſed, if I miſtake not, by Joſeph of Exeter, a moſt elegant poet for that time, who paſſes under the name of Cornelius Nepos, in theſe lines to Baldwin archbiſhop of Canterbury:

In numerum jam creſcit honor, te tertia poſcit
Inſula, jam meminit Wigornia, Cantia diſcit,
Romanus meditatur apex, & naufraga Petri
Ductorem in mediis expectat cymba procellis.

Succeſſive honours thicken round thee now,
And a third mitre waits thy ſacred brow:
Worceſter and Kent record thy gentle ſway,
The Roman mitre's thine without delay;
And Peter's ſhatter'd veſſel aſks thy hand
To ſteer her ſafe thro' raging ſtorms to land.

It was probably founded by the Romans when they built cities at proper intervals on the eaſt ſide of the river, to check the Britans on the other ſide that river, as they did on the ſouth ſide of the Rhine. It ſtands on a gentle deſcent to the Severn, over which it has a bridge with towers, and "formerly (as an old parchment MS. has it) boaſted Roman walls[o]." It has now a tolerably ſtrong wall. But its glory ariſes from its inhabitants, who are numerous and polite, and poſſeſſed of great wealth by the woollen manufacture; from the luſtre of its buildings, the number of its churches, and eſpecially from the epiſcopal ſee ſettled here by Sexulphus biſhop of the Mercians A. D. 680, building a cathedral in the ſouth part of the city, which has been frequently repaired, and by the biſhops and monks gradually lengthened to the weſt almoſt to the banks of the Severn. It is a beautiful and magnificent building, ennobled by the monuments of king John, Arthur Prince of Wales, and ſome of the Beauchamps: and the college is no leſs eminent for its very learned prebendaries, than was antiently the monaſtery of monks or convent of prieſts. For in this, immediately upon its foundation, were placed as in the other monaſteries in England, married prieſts, who long governed the churches with great reputation for ſanctity; till Dunſtan, archbiſhop of Canterbury, decreed in a council, that, from thenceforth, all the religious in England ſhould lead a ſingle life. Then Oſwald, biſhop of this city, a moſt zealous promoter of monkery, removed the prieſts, and introduced monks. This king Edgar ſets forth in the following words: "The houſes both of monks and "nuns were deſtroyed and utterly neglected in Eng-"land, which I determined to repair them for the "honor of God and the welfare of my own ſoul, "and to increaſe the number of ſervants and hand-"maids of God. I have already founded 47 houſes for "monks and nuns, and if Chriſt grant me life I am "reſolved to proceed in the offering of my devout "munificence to God, as far as 50, for the remiſſion "of my ſins. For this reaſon the reverend biſhop "Oſwald having enlarged the monaſtery in the epiſ-"copal ſee at Wiре-ceaſtep, in honor of Mary the "holy mother of God, aboliſhing all the chanting "clerks[p] by my conſent and approbation, I "by my royal authority confirm to theſe religious [g] So Stephanus Byzantinus, but Pauſanias (Bœot. c. 9.) from Hyettus an Argive exile who ſettled here. G.

[h] villa ſuburbana, a village not far from that city, ſc. Worceſter. G. Holland.

[i] oportuni partem, a corruption in the MS. Biſhop G. reads opportuna parum. Holland; "when the ſalt water is run ſufficiently for the "uſe of the country." Perhaps per anni partem, and ſo I tranſlate it.

[k] Not in the printed Domeſday.

[l] bulliebant & exercebant, day of wealling. G. literally of boiling and working, and ſo Holland tranſlates it.

[m] quaſi Bara gonium. MS. n. Gale.

[n] q. d. a frontier town garriſoned with the perſons called by the Britons Barangi, or Guarangi, whence the city itſelf had the name of Wrangon, Gorongus, Gerongus, Guorongus, cuſtos, oſtiarius. So Camden in Kent, vol. I. p. 210. ſays Vortigern appeared a Guorong, or Viceroy over that province. MS. n. Gale. See Spelman Gloſſar. v. Baro, Barongus.

[o] Compare a MS. cited by Dugdale, Mon. Angl. I. 137.

[p] clericorum nænia.

[*] Regiſt. eccl. Wigorn. Spelm. Concil. p. 433.

"men their monaſtic rules, eſtabliſhing, conſigning, "&c. by the advice and concurrence of my princes "and nobles." A long while after the church being ruined and reduced by the inroads of the Danes and civil commotions ſo low that ſcarce twelve perſons remained of the numerous flock of religious placed here by Oſwald, Wulſtan, who was biſhop here about A. D. 1090, releived it, augmented them to 50, and built a new church. He was even for thoſe times a man of no great learning, but of unfeigned ſimplicity and ſincerity, and of ſuch auſterity of life, that he was a terror to the wicked, the delight of the good, and canonized by the church after his deceaſe. But theſe monks, after living as ſovereigns in the greateſt affluence above 500 years, were turned out by Henry VIII. who ſubſtituted to them a dean and prebendaries, and eſtabliſhed a grammar ſchool for the inſtruction of youth. Cloſe by this church remain the bare ſite and name of a caſtle, which, as we read in William of Malmeſbury's lives of the biſhops [q], was "built by Urſo, who was appointed ſheriff of Worceſter by William, in the mouth of the monks, ſo that the ditch cut off part of the church-yard." But this caſtle by length of time and accidental fire has been long deſtroyed. The city itſelf has been burnt more than once *. A. D. 1041, it was fired by Hardicnute in reſentment for the citizens having killed his Huſcarles (ſo the Danes called the officers who collected the Danegelt), and all the inhabitants maſſacred except thoſe that ſaved themſelves in Beuepleȝ, a ſmall iſland in the river. Notwithſtanding this, we find in Domeſday book [r], that in the Confeſſor's time it had many burgeſſes, and defended itſelf for 15 hides, and on a new coinage [s] each mintmaſter paid 20ſ. to London for dies." A. D. 1113, an accidental fire that conſumed the caſtle deſtroyed the roof of the cathedral alſo. In Stephen's reign the city was more than once ſet on fire in the civil wars, but ſuffered moſt when king Stephen, who had unadviſedly given this city to Walleran earl of Mellent, ſeized upon it, at which time he could not force the caſtle. It roſe, however, every time more beautiful out of its aſhes, and is governed by an excellent form by two bailiffs elected out of 24 citizens, two aldermen, and two chamberlains, with a common council of 48 citizens. It ſtands in longitude 21° 52″, in latitude 52° 12″.

From Worceſter the river proceeds ſouthward, paſſing by Powick, antiently the ſeat of John Beauchamp, advanced to the dignity of baron by Henry VI. and in a ſhort time [t] the eſtate paſſed by females to the Willoughbies of Broke, the Reads and Lygons. Thence it goes through moſt pleaſant and fragrant meadows to Hanley, once a caſtle of the earls of Glouceſter; and Upton, a conſiderable market town, where Roman coins are frequently dug up. Not far from hence, on its right bank, the Severn views Malvern hills, or rather high and ſteep mountains, riſing like ſteps for near ſeven miles, and parting this county from Herefordſhire. On their brow Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, antiently drew a ditch to divide his poſſeſſions from thoſe of the church of Worceſter, which is ſtill viewed with aſtoniſhment. Oppoſite to theſe, almoſt at the ſame diſtance from the oppoſite bank, Bredon hills, much lower, riſe as it were emulating the others, and among them ſtands Elmeley, formerly a caſtle of Urſe, or Urſo d'Abetot, by whoſe daughter and heireſs Emeline it came by inheritance to the Beauchamps. At their foot lies the town of Bredon, of whoſe monaſtery Offa, king of the Mercians, ſays thus: "I Offa, "king of the Mercians, will give land containing "five times ſeven acres of tributaries [u] to the mo- "naſtery called Bradun in the province of the "Wiccii, and to the church of St. Peter chief of the "Apoſtles, ſituate in the ſaid place, which Eanwulf "my grandfather erected to the praiſe and glory of "that God who liveth for ever †."

Bredon hills

Elmeley.

Bredon.

Below theſe Bredon hills to the ſouth are the two little villages of Waſhborn, which give name to a very antient and illuſtrious family in theſe parts, in a part of the county ſeparated as it were from the reſt, as are ſeveral other parts up and down. The reaſon of this I cannot tell, unleſs thoſe who antiently governed it annexed their own eſtates which lay near to the county they governed. The river Avon runs above in its way to the Severn, and waters in this county Eoveſham, which the monks pretend takes its name from Eoves, ſwineherd to Egwin biſhop of Worceſter, being before called Eath-home and Heathfield. It is a very handſome town ſtanding on an hill riſing from the river, in whoſe ſuburb, if I may ſo call it, was antiently Bengeworth caſtle, "at the head "of the bridge, which caſtle abbot William de Aude- "ville gained from William de Beauchamp, razed it, "and conſecrated its ſite for a burial place ‡." This town is remarkable for this monaſtery founded by Egwin aforeſaid, by the aſſiſtance of king Kenred, ſon of Wulpher king of Mercia about A. D. 700. and alſo for the valley below, called from it the Vale of Eveſham, which, for its fruitfulneſs, deſerves to be called the Granary of theſe parts, ſuch is the richneſs of the ſoil in producing plenty of the fineſt grain. But it was antiently more noted for the ſlaughter of the barons and our Catiline Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter. That abandoned traitor verified the aſſertion [x] that favours were well beſtowed no longer than they ſeem capable of a return. For when Henry III. had heaped on him all the favours he poſſibly could, and given him his ſiſter to wife, he received no other return than an inveterate hatred. He ſtirred up a moſt perplexing war, ravaged in a moſt violent manner great part of England, under pretence of reforming the government, and aſſerting the liberty of the ſubject, and did all he could to reſtrain the king's authority [y], change the government, and turn a monarchy into an oligarchy. But, after a little ſucceſs, he was ſlain here with many more in a pitched battle by the bravery of prince Edward; and the ſink of evils being thus emptied out of the government, joyful peace, which he had ſhut out, beamed on all ſides. On the ſame river, in this neighbourhood, ſtands Charleton, formerly the ſeat of the famous knightly family of Hanſacre, but now of the Dinleys or Dingley, who deſcended from the antient family of the Dinleys in Lancaſter, and poſ-

Waſhborne.

Parts of ſhires ſeparated from the body.

Eoveſham.

Bengeworth caſtle.

About 1154

Vale of Eveſham.

Simon Montfort.

1265.

Charleton.

seſſed

* Marianus. † Liber Wigorn. ‡ Lib. Mon. Eveſham.

[q] Fol. 172. a. [r] [s] quando moneta vertebatur, when the Mint went. H. and G.

[t] Edward IV. Mag. Brit. VI. 266.

[u] terram ſeptiesquinos tributariorum jugera continentem; 35 acres of tributary land. G. Holland as I.

[x] quod alter vere dixit, that ſaying what another truly ſaid. H. The ſaying is Tiberius's in Tacitus, An. IV. 18. but in different words from thoſe cited by Mr. Camden. Tiberius ſays, Beneficia eo uſque læta ſunt dum videntur exſolvi poſſe. Camden, Beneficia eo uſque grata eſſe dum compenſari poſſint. It follows, that favours might be heaped on a perſon till they loſt their effect, and inſtead of attaching him to his benefactor, produced a deep inveteracy.

[y] ut regem in ordinem redigeret, bring the king under. H. depoſe the king. G.

ſeſſed this eſtate by inheritance. Lower down in the early times of the Saxon church was another place occupied by religious, then called Fleodanbyrig, now Flatbury, and near it Perſhor, Saxon Peopreopan, from the pears, which place, as that excellent hiſtorian William of Malmſbury [z] writes, "was founded and finiſhed in the reign of king Eadgar by Egelward duke of Dorſet, a man of a generous ſpirit, but profuſely bountiful. But what has it ſuffered? Part of it has been ſeized by the ambition of the rich, part loſt in oblivion, the greater part given by the kings Edward and William to Weſtminſter." From thence Avon glides gently by Strenſham, the ſeat of the knightly and antient family of the Ruſſels, and afterwards empties its waters into the Severn.

Flatbury. Perſhore.

Strenſham.

Oſwaldſlaw hundred.

Near this, to the ſouth, is the hundred of Oſwaldſlaw, ſo called from Oſwald, biſhop of Worceſter, who obtained it of king Edgar; the privilege of which, when William the Conqueror made his ſurvey of England, was thus entered in the record [a]. "The church of St. Mary at Worceſter has the "hundred called Oſwaldſlaw, in which lie 300 hides, "of which the biſhop of this church, by antient "conſtitution, had all the revenues of the ſocs and "other cuſtoms therein belonging to the lord's "maintenance and the king's ſervice and his own, "ſo that no ſheriff can have any claim there, neither "in any plea nor any other cauſe. This is atteſted "by the whole county."

There is a place whoſe ſituation is not exactly known in this county called Auzurtyneſ ace, Auguſtine's oak, where Auguſtine the Apoſtle of the Engliſh and the Britiſh biſhops met, and after ſome ſquabbling about the obſervance of Eaſter, the preaching of the Goſpel, and adminiſtration of baptiſm according to the ritual of the Romiſh church, ſeparated with as little agreement as before.

Auſtin's Oak.

A. D. 603.

This county in the Norman times had for its firſt ſheriff Urſo d'Abetot, or d'Abtot, to whom and his heirs king William I. gave land with that title. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Roger [b], who, as William of Malmſbury informs us [c], "after he had got poſſeſſion "of his father's eſtate, was turned out of it by the "heavy reſentment of king Henry I. for having in a "violent paſſion commanded one of that prince's ſervants to be ſlain." But this ſheriffdom paſſed with Emeline his ſiſter to the family of Beauchamp by inheritance. She married Walter de Beauchamp, whom king Stephen, after turning out Milo of Glouceſter, made conſtable of England. A few years after king Stephen created Walleran earl of Mellent, brother to Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, firſt earl of Worceſter [d], granting him the city of Worceſter *. He afterwards turned monk, and died at Preaux in Normandy 1166. His ſon Robert, who had married the daughter of Reginald earl of Cornwall, and ſet up the ſtandard of rebellion againſt Henry II. and Robert's ſon Peter, 1023, who rebelled and revolted to France, uſed only the title of earl of Mellent, not of Worceſter, that I can yet find. Henry II. who ſucceeded Stephen, did not eaſily conſent that any ſhould bear under him honours received from his enemy. "He (as we read in the Annals of Waverley abbey [e]) put down all falſe earls to whom king Stephen had too eaſily given the crown lands." Till Richard II. I find none that bore the title of earl of Worceſter. He conferred it on Thomas Percy [f], who, being ſlain in the civil war by Henry IV. Richard de Beauchamp, deſcended from the Abtots, received this honour from king Henry V. [g] Upon his death without iſſue male Henry VI. [h] created John Tipteſt deputy of Ireland earl of Worceſter, but he immediately taking part with Edward IV. and prepoſterouſly ſubmitting to be the executioner of all Edward IV.'s ſentences, was himſelf beheaded by the executioner upon the reſtoration of Henry VI. King Edward recovering the crown again completely reſtored his ſon, who, dying without iſſue [i], and the eſtate being divided among the ſiſters of the aforeſaid John Tiptoft earl of Worceſter, who were married to the lords Roos and Dudley and Edmund Ingoldeſthorp, Charles Somerſet, natural ſon of Henry duke of Somerſet, was by Henry VIII. † honoured with this title [k]. His lineal ſucceſſors were Henry [l], William [m], and Edward [n], now living, an eſpecial encourager of learning among his virtues and honours.

Earls of Worceſter.

This county has 152 pariſh churches.

* Robert de Monte. † Orig. 1 Henry VII. rot. 36.

[z] De geſt. pont. IV. 162. [a] Fol. 172. b. [b] not in Dugd. I. 462.

[c] [d] Dugdale does not reckon him as earl of Worceſter, but Brooke and Vincent do.

[e] p. 158. ſub an. 1155.

[f] 1397, 21 R. II. He was taken at the battle of Shrewſbury, and beheaded at Shrewſbury 1405. Dugd. I. 286.

[g] 8 Henry V. He was ſlain next year, at Meux in Berri. (Brook) at Mewlenbury in France, and buried in Tewkſbury choir. (Dugd. I. 242). where ſee his monument.

[h] 27 Henry VI. He was beheaded 1470, and buried in the Black friars, London. Dugd. II. 41. [i] He was buried at Ely.

[k] 5 Henry VIII. he died 17 Henry VIII. buried at Windſor. Dugd. II. 294.

[l] He died 3 Edward VI. and was buried at Ragland. Ib. [m] He died 1587, and was buried at Ragland. Ib.

[n] He died 1627, and was buried at Ragland. Ib.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Worceſter was in the Roman times probably included in the diſtrict belonging to the Cornavii, or perhaps to the Dobuni. It was a low woody country, and therefore very little known to that cautious and warlike people. We do not find it mentioned in Ptolemy or Antonine, the Notitia or Anonymus Ravennas. The ſecond Iter leaves it to the weſt, the 12th to the eaſt, the 13th to the north; for it is probable that Branonium does not mean Worceſter, but ſome place beyond Ludlow; for Worceſter could never belong to the Ordovices, or inhabitants of North Wales. Of the four great Roman roads only Iknield ſtreet comes near Worceſterſhire, and touches it lightly. Some have ſuppoſed it to paſs from Bidford in Warwickſhire through S. Littleton, ſomewhat to the eaſt of Eveſham, by Hinton in Glouceſterſhire, near Sedgebarrow in Worceſterſhire, ſo to Aſhton under hill, Beckford, Aſhchurch, all in Glouceſterſhire, and a little eaſt of Tewkſbury; but, as this is a deep clay ſoil, a Roman road would probably have been thrown up very high, and obvious marks ſtill left. It is more eaſily traced from Bidford northward to Alceſter, then running near Coughton, Studley, Hippiſley, all in Warwickſhire, it enters Beoley (being the extremity of Worceſterſhire), ſo to Edgbaſton in Warwickſhire, leaving Birmingham a little to the weſt. This courſe lies upon high land, and the road may in many places be clearly traced [a].

The late biſhop Lyttelton was of a different opinion both with reſpect to the Romanity of Worceſter and the road leading to it.

"If any credit, ſays he, may be given to an old writer, R. Higden, cited in Gale's Eſſay on the Roman Roads [b], the Ykenild ſtreet paſſed through Worceſter from Maridunum in South Wales to Droitwich, Edgbaſton, Wall near Litchfield, Little Cheſter near Derby, and ſo on to Tinmouth in Northumberland: but, though I cannot ſubſcribe to this, as the Ykenild undoubtedly enters this county at Beoley in its courſe from Alceſter in Warwickſhire, and paſſes by Bordeſley park in Alvechurch, and ſo goes to Edgbaſton and Wall, yet I have myſelf often obſerved a high raiſed road on the Lickey pointing directly to Bromeſgrove; from whence I make no doubt but it proceeded to Wich, the ſuppoſed Salinæ of Ravennas, and thence to Worceſter. Another Roman road called the Portway, and in Wulfrune's Saxon grant of Over Arley to the canons of Wolverhampton [c] denominated the ꝑꝑæte or ꝑꝑeet, (by which the Saxons generally meant the Roman ſtreet or highway) lies now in the direct road between Worceſter and Shrewſbury, and I am perſuaded was the Roman road between Worceſter and Wroxeter, the town of Shrewſbury having riſen out of the old ruins of Wroxeter [d]. A third Roman road comes out of Salop or Staffordſhire, and paſſes over the heath near Stourbridge (where, by a place called Green's Forge, is a vaſt camp called the Church-yard, and mentioned by Dr. Plott in his Natural Hiſtory of Staffordſhire) which proceeds through Hagley Common, and is known by the name of the King's Head land; and not far diſtant is a great Roman camp on Whichbury-hill, and three lows or tumuli on the common very near it; and I ſuſpect this road alſo leads by Clent and Chaddeſley towards Worceſter.

"As to the argument againſt there being any Roman roads leading to Worceſter, from the county being all a foreſt between the Severn, the Stour, and the Avon, including alſo the great foreſt of Arden in Warwickſhire; I can ſee no force in it, ſince it is paſt a diſpute, that from Aulceſter to Edgbaſton runs a Roman road, known at this day by the name of the Ickle or Ikenyld ſtreet, and likewiſe the other road I mentioned above, croſſing the Licky towards Bromſgrove, and the two laſt deſcribed, viz. the Portway in Over Arley, and the King's Head land in Hagley; all which were within the antient bounds either of the foreſts of Arden, Feckenham, or Kinvar; and to theſe I muſt add, a lane leading from the Lickey towards Tardebig and Alvechurch, commonly called Twatling ſtreet, which no doubt is a corruption from Watling ſtreet, a name common to Roman roads, as ſome writers have obſerved, there being one in Scotland, and two or three in England [e].

"The eaſtern ſuburb of Worceſter is named Sudbury, and a huge tumulus or barrow, about a mile diſtant, called Cruckbarrow, ſtill remains; both which it is probable derive their origin from the Romans; the former its name, and the latter its exiſtence; the Saxons naming thoſe places burys or boroughs, which had been fortified by the Romans; hence Woodbury-hill above Great Witley, Whichbury-hill in Hagley, Membury near Dorcheſter, Woodbury caſtle near Exeter [f]."

The principal landholders here at the making of Domeſday, were the king, the biſhop and church of Worceſter, the biſhops of Hereford and Bayeux, the abbies of St. Denys, Coventry, Cormielles, Glouceſter, Weſtminſter, Perſhore, Eveſham; the collegiate church of Wolverhamton; earl Roger; Ralph Todeni, Ralph Mortimer, Robert de Statford, Roger Laci, Osbert Fitz Richard, Gilbert Fitz Turold, Drogo Fitz Pons, Herald ſon of earl Ralph, William Fitz Auſculf, William Fitz Corbucion, &c.

Under the heptarchy Worceſter was included in Mercia. All the camps we find here were thrown up after the Roman times during the Daniſh invaſions, and this county was frequently the ſcene of ſharp and bloody conflicts [g].

Worceſterſhire lies near the middle of the kingdom, rather inclining to the weſt. It is rich in grain and [a] Nash, Worceſterſhire, Pref. iii. iv. See before, p. 343.

[b] Dugdale Mon. Ang. Tom. I. fol. 988.
[c] In Arley wood near this footway yet remaining is a vaſt Roman camp, ſquare and treble ditched.
[d] See the Index to Gibſon's edit. of Camden's Britannia.
[e] Nash, pref. Ib.
[f] MS. Lyttelton in Nash's Appendix, p. cvii. cviii.
[g] Leland, Itin. vol. VI. p. 109.

fruit,

fruit, having fine paſtures, all the neceſſaries of life, with many articles tending to promote an extenſive trade, and various manufactures, which the induſtrious inhabitants are enabled to carry on by means of different rivers, ſome proper for the working of mills, and others for the conveyance of goods. The air is ſoft, warm, and healthy, there being but few lakes, and little boggy land. The ſoil ſouth of Worceſter, is moſtly a rich clay, or marle; north of the city it is chiefly gravel or ſand.

The county is of a very irregular ſhape, having on every ſide detached parts ſurrounded by other counties; ſuch are Dudley, Oldborough, Tredington, Elmload, Icomb, Daylesford, Yedſen Loges; and the following places though not ſurrounded by other counties yet run out into narrow peninſulas; Stourbridge, Yardley, Blockley, Cuttſdean, Chaſeley, Teddington, Alſton, Waſhborne, Sedgborough, Mathon, Broadway, Church Honeybourne, Acton Beauchamp, Bockleton, Tenbury, &c. It is bounded on the eaſt by Warwickſhire; on the weſt by Herefordſhire and part of Shropſhire; on the north by Staffordſhire; and on the ſouth by Gloncеſterſhire. The length of the county from Chaſeley in the ſouth-weſt to Yardley in the north-eaſt part may be about 43 miles. The ſhorteſt line along the Severn is about 30 miles. We will therefore call the mean length of the county about 36 miles. The extreme breadth from Oldbarrow eaſt to Berrington in Tenbury weſt is 34 miles. The ſhorteſt line from Atch Lench to Malvern about 18. The mean breadth then we may ſuppoſe about 26 miles. The circumference of the county, not allowing for irregularities, is about 124 miles; but if we follow the boundary line, it may be double. The body of the county contains about 936 miles, or 599040 acres, to which if we add the detached parts 19,200 acres, the total will be 618240. If we take the round number of 600,000 acres, at 10*s. per* acre, the value of the county is £. 300,000. excluſive of the houſes in the ſeveral market towns. From this we muſt deduct Tardebig in Warwickſhire, and Rochford in Herefordſhord, about 5000 acres lying within this county. The principal detached parts of Worceſterſhire are,

Dudley about —	3900 acres.
Edwin Loch, and Warley Wigorn,	2000
Tredington, Aldermaſton, &c.	8300
Elmlode, Daylesford, and Icomb,	5000
	19200

The county contains 152 pariſhes, and ten market towns, beſides the city, and returns 9 members to parliament, including the repreſentatives of the city. The number of inhabitants as calculated by the window-tax and militia returns may be eſtimated at about 70,000 in county and city, and the number of acres about 500,000 [b]. The huſbandry of Worceſterſhire has nothing peculiar. The general rent of paſture land is under 20*s* an acre, of meadow under 30*s*. It has no breed of cattle peculiar to itſelf, moſt of the land being ſuppoſed too rich to carry a breeding ſtock. The ploughed grounds are a ſtiff clay frequently with marle underneath, or a light ſoil with gravel under it. The quantity of cherries brought to Worceſter market in a plentiful year is amazing; two or three tons are often ſold on a Saturday before 5 o'clock in the morning. The produce of hops is not near ſo great as in other counties, nor does Dr. Naſh wiſh it ever ſhould, as it is a ſpecies of farming if conſidered for a number of years injurious both to landlord and tenant. Incloſures are as much the faſhion here as in other counties, though of their general benefit he alſo expreſſes his doubts [i].

The principal rivers of this county are the Severn, Avon, Teme, and Stour; and of the ſecond ſort the Salewarpe, Arrow, Ledden, and Rea [k].

After the Britans were driven out by the Saxons, they retired beyond the Severn, and defended their new territories againſt the encroaching conquerors; ſo that this county, with the others through which that large river runs, were for a long time the frontier between the two people, and, as Mr. Twine obſerves [l] moſt of the great cities on the eaſt ſide of the Severn and Dee were built by the Romans or Saxons, or both, againſt the Britans. The Wiccii ſeem to have inhabited all that tract that was antiently ſubject to the biſhop of Worceſter, i. e. all Glouceſterſhire eaſt of the Severn, with the city of Briſtol; all Worceſterſhire, except 16 pariſhes in the north-weſt part lying beyond Aberley hills and the river Teme, and near the ſouth half of Warwickſhire, with the town of Warwick. For, as under the heptarchy at firſt there was but one biſhop in each kingdom, and the whole realm was in his dioceſe, ſo on the ſubdiviſion of the kingdom of Mercia were five biſhoprics, A. D. 679, of which Florence of Worceſter ſays Wiccia was the firſt. The biſhop undoubtedly had the whole province under his juriſdiction, and was actually ſtiled biſhop of the Wiccians, not of Worceſter. This will appear ſtill more probable from Florence of Worceſter [m], who ſays that Oſhere viceroy of the Wiccians perſuaded Etheldred king of Mercia to make this diviſion out of a deſire that the province of Wiccia, which he governed with a kind of regal power, might have the honour of a biſhop of its own. His ſee was thus at Worceſter the metropolis of the province, which, according to Bede [n], bordered on that of the Weſt Saxons, Wilts, and Somerſet; and Coteſwold hills lay in it, which in Edgar's charter to Oſwald, are called Mons Wicciſca [o], though Spelman [p] reads it Mons Wittiſca, and the Monaſticon [q] more corruptly Wibiſca. Sceorſtan, or the Shireſtone, beyond theſe hills, is ſaid by Florence [r] to be in Wiccia [s].

In the very north-weſt point of the county lies Stourbridge, ſo called from the bridge over the river Stour, on which it ſtands; a well built populous market town, of late much enriched by iron and glaſs works. Edward VI. founded a grammar ſchool here. Thomas Foley, eſq; great grandfather of the preſent lord, erected and endowed with an eſtate now worth £. 800. a year, at Old Swinford adjoining, in which pariſh Stourbridge ſtands, a noble hoſpital for 60 poor children out of this and the neighbouring pariſhes, to be qualified for and apprenticed to trades. Their habit and diſcipline much reſemble that of Chriſt's hoſpital, London [t].

Much has been ſaid about the extraordinary death of a young man of 22 years of age in this pariſh, who, after a vicious courſe of life, and imprecating

[b] Naſh, pref. p. vii. viii. [i] Ib. ix---xi. [k] Ib. lxxxiii.
[l] Breviarie of Britain, p. 26. [m] P. 559. Ed. Lond. 4to. [n] Hiſt. Eccl. II. 2.
[o] Wicciſa, orig. Cotton libr. Vit. IX. 2. Hearne's Heming, p. 520. [p] Conc. tom. I. 433. [q] I. 140.
[r] P. 383. [s] G. [t] G. Naſh II. 207---212.

God's vengeance on himſelf, and that his hands might rot off if he had committed a theft with which he was charged, died in the courſe of four months in a ſtate of perfect mortification and neglect of cure[t].

Near Stourbridge is Hagley, the ſeat of lord Lyttelton, rebuilt by the late lord, who laid out the ground in an elegant and pleaſant manner.

"The faire and chief part of Kidderminſter is on "the left ripe of Stowre ſtanding on an hilly piece "of ground. Ther is a pretty croſs in the market-"place environed with ſix pillars about and arches "of ſtone, with the 7th pillar in the middle. The "church is very fair, and one ——— Conye, a "knight, richly buried in the quire. The towne "ſtandeth by cloathing. In times paſt this town "longid to the Biſets, antient gentlemen. After it "came to the three heires generall of Biſet, "whereof one being a Lazer buildid an hoſpital at "Maiden Bradley, Wiltſhire, to a priory of canons, "ſhe gave her part here in pios uſus, and the per-"ſonage of Kidderminſtre was impropriate to Maiden "Bradley. The other two parts came to the lord "Abergavenny, and in that family it yet remainith[u]." The bridge over the Stour has been lately rebuilt, and the ſauxbourg mentioned by Leland, is called Millſtreet, and has ſeveral handſome houſes. In the church, an antient handſome building, are monuments for ſir John Phelip, who ſignalized himſelf at the ſiege of Harfleur t. Henry V. and died 1405, ſir Edward Blount 1630, and wives, Thomas Blount, eſq. and wife 1569, and Walter Cookſey, 1410. At the eaſt end is a freeſchool, founded by ſir Edward Blount. In the churchyard is a neat croſs, near which is a ruined monument aſcribed to the grandfather of lord Somers, and another croſs on the Worceſter road. The town is a corporation and was antiently a borough. It has a carpet manufactory, and lord Foley in 1758 built 300 new houſes to accommodate the workmen. His anceſtor bought it of Waller the poet, who bought it of the earl of Newport, and he of the Blounts[x]. The Biſet eſtate did not come to females till many years after Maiden Bradley lazar-houſe was built[y]. The rectory of Kidderminſter was, however, appropriated to Maiden Bradley lazar houſe[z]. John Beauchamp baron Kidderminſter, was the firſt baron created by parliament[a]. This title was conferred 1711, on Thomas lord Foley of Whitley court in this county, and ended with his ſon Thomas 1766.

Mr. Wiſe ſuppoſed Sture in Uſmerum given by king Ethelbert to earl Cynebert to be the preſent Kidderminſter, which other derive from Cynebart's minſter. It is an extenſive town with 23 hamlets, containing in 1772 near 6000 inhabitants, and near 1200 houſes. It has probably been a manufacturing place of woollen and ſtuff both of ſilk and worſted near two centuries and a half. The carpet manufactory began 1735. In 1772 the carpet looms were 250, and the ſilk and worſted looms 1700; the former employing in various branches near 3000 hands, and the latter, firſt introduced in the beginning of this century, near 10,000. The linſey woolſey ſtuffs, called Keddermiſter, for hangings and beds, continued in uſe till the cloſe of the laſt century, and were ſucceeded by the cloathing trade. Mr. Baxter's miniſtry here was attended with the happieſt effects in reforming the manners of the inhabitants, and promoting induſtry. Here are two charity ſchools ſupported by private contributions.

The river Stour, which riſes in the celebrated groves of the Leaſowes, paſſes through this town, and divides it ſo as to leave one third on the weſt ſide, and two thirds on the eaſt. The courſe of this river is about twenty miles, and it has upon it upwards of thirty works; ſlitting-mills, forges, a wire-mill, corn-mill, and other mills of leſſer note. It is well known that an attempt was made to render this river navigable, and joining it with other rivers, make a communication with the Trent, under the direction of a pnblic ſpirited and well meaning projector Mr. Yarranton[b], who was born in a neighbouring pariſh. This project at that time proved abortive. Stour r.

It is not long ſince ſome of the boats made uſe of in Yarranton's navigation were found. Neither tradition nor our projector's account of the matter perfectly ſatisfy us why this navigation was neglected, ſince a navigable communication between Stourbridge and Kidderminſter would now very well ſupport itſelf. We muſt therefore conclude, that the numerous iron works and glaſs-houſes upon the Stour and in the neighbourhood of Stourbridge did not then exiſt, A. D. 1666. And as the navigable communication did not extend to any coal pit, the difference of carriage was not ſo much lower than the whole carriage by land as to compenſate for the expence incurred by executing the navigation, and keeping it in repair.

The navigable communication which now connects Trent and Severn, and which runs the courſe of Yarranton's project, is already of general uſe, and is likely not only to indemnify but to reward the proprietors and undertakers of it for their publick ſpirit.

The canal ſince executed under the inſpection of Mr. Brindley, running parallell with the river, and ſupplied with water from thence, which will remain with encreaſing advantages to poſterity, coſt the proprietors the ſum of 105,000*l*. Coals are now brought to Kidderminſter and other towns of a better quality, and nearly twenty per cent. cheaper than formerly, and carriage of all ſorts is now more certain and cheaper.

The baſon, &c. at Stourport was begun about 1768, and finiſhed ſo as to be convenient for boats in 1771.

The bridge over Severn at Stourport was begun March 1773-4, and made paſſable in September 1775. It coſt about 5000*l*. has three arches over the river, and forty-nine upon land to make the approaches. The centre arch is forty-eight feet wide at the wall, and the ſide ones forty-two each: the two piers

[t] Dr. Ford rector here, his Diſcourſe on God's judgements, 1678, 12mo, reprinted with Mr. William Whiſton's account of the fact. Nash, II. 213.
[u] Lel. It. IV. 182.
[x] Nash, II. 37.
[y] Tan. 601. See in Wilts.
[z] Nash, II. 36.
[a] Dugd. II. 195.
[b] Andrew Yarranton was born in Aſtley pariſh in Worceſterſhire, and encouraged by many gentlemen of this and the neighbouring counties, at whoſe expence he travelled through Holland, Germany, and many foreign countries, to bring home from thence any thing that might improve our manufactures. He publiſhed in two parts "England's Improvement by Sea and Land, to outdo the Dutch "without fighting, and pay debts without money." The firſt part was publiſhed 1677, and the ſecond in 1698. His favourite ſchemes were a publick regiſter for lands, making rivers navigable, employing the poor, preventing fires in London, improving the Britiſh navy, &c.

between the arches are eight feet each; ſo that the bridge over the river is in length one hundred and forty-eight feet, and the road over theſe arches is eighteen feet wide in the clear. The dry arches on each ſide the above bridge are in length ſix hundred ſeventy-two feet, and the road over them twenty-two feet eight inches wide in the clear.

In Kidderminſter pariſh are ſeveral chalybeat ſprings, and the Dropping well on Burliſh common is celebrated for curing ſore eyes[c].

Bewdley. "Bewdley, a market and ſanctuary town, hath "hard by it the king's maner of Tikile ſtanding "on a hill[d]. The towne ſelf of Beaudley is ſett "on the ſide of a hille ſo comely a man cannot wiſh "to ſee a town better. It riſeth from Severne bank "by eaſt upon the hill by weſt, ſo that a man "ſtanding on the hille trans pontem by eaſt may "diſcerne almoſt every houſe in the towne, and at "the riſing of the ſunne from eaſt the whole towne "glittereth being all of new building as it were "of gould[e]." By the diſtance of the paroch church "I gather that Beaudley is but a very newe towne, "and that of ould tyme there was but ſome poore "hamlett, and that upon the building of a bridge "there upon Severne and reſort of people to it "and commodity of the pleaſant ſite men began "to inhabit there, and becauſe that the plot of "it ſeemed fayer to the lookers it tooke a French "name Beaudley quaſi Bellus locus. I aſked a "merchant there of the antientneſſe of the towne, "and he anſwered me that it was but a new "towne, adding that they had liberties granted by "king Edward. There is a fayre mannour place "weſt of the towne ſtandinge in a goodly parke "well wooded on the very knappe of an hille that "the towne ſtandeth on. This place is called Ti-"kenhill. Whether there were an antient houſe "in tymes paſt or noe I am not aſſured: but this that "now is there is ſomething new, and as I heard "was in a manner totally erected by king Henry "VII. for prince Arthur. It was repayred for the "lady Marye. Since I heard that Richard earl of "Marche and duke of Yorke builded there. It "was Mortimer's earl of Marches land. There was "a priviledge of ſanctuary given to this towne that "now is abrogated[f]." The antient name of the whole town was Ticcen-hill, q. d. Goats hill, from ticce a kid, ſince confined to the ſpot where the palace ſtood till deſtroyed with the park in the civil war[g]. Bewdley is a corporation and borough town, chapel of eaſe to Ribbesford. "There be but three ſtreets "memorable in the town. One from north to ſouth "all alonge Severne banke: the ſecond in the mar-"ket place a fayre large thinge and well buildid; "the third runneth from north to ſouth on the hyll "ſide as the firſt doth in the valley of Severne[h]. "The market-place is a fayre large thing and well "buildid. In the towne is but a chapel of eaſe of "timber, in the heart of the towne the pariſh church "ſtandeth, a mile lower at Ripley." It was rebuilt of ſtone 1746.

The ſituation of Bewdley in the midſt of a populous and manufacturing country has made it long a flouriſhing town. Several trades are exerciſed here. Tannery has been long an eſtabliſhed buſineſs. The Dutch and failors caps made here are valued for the excellence of the napping. They ſeem to have been worn all over England by all ranks of people till the introduction of fur hats by the French refugees 1685. Horning in all its articles employs a great number of the inhabitants. Richard Willis biſhop of Glouceſter, Saliſbury, and Wincheſter, where he died 1734, was ſon of a capper here. Bewdley is in the pariſh of Ribbesford, where is an antient moated houſe, in which was found a copy of the life of lord Herbert of Cherbury, publiſhed by Mr. Walpole[i]. Rib Bewdley belonged to the Beauchamps before the reign of Edward I. and was ſold by them in that of Edward IV. to the Sheldons, to whom it ſtill belongs. The manor houſe was burnt in the civil wars by the royaliſts. Here was antiently a caſtle, of which the ruins are now ſcarcely to be ſeen[k].

On Waſſal hill, about half a mile from the banks of the Severn, are the remains of a ſmall ſtation or camp. It lies about four or five miles weſt of a larger camp on Kinver edge. About the ſame diſtance eaſt from Kinver edge on Whitchbury hill there was another. Theſe probably were the poſts of Henry IV. when he blocked up Owen Glendwr after the burning of Worceſter 1405. See Monſtrelet, c. 15, and Hall's Chronicle, p. 18, 19.

The antient hermitage cut in Blackſtone rock, between Stourport and Bewdley, is a curious ſubterraneous vault, divided into a cell for the habitation of the hermit, and a chapel for his religious worſhip. He had a fine view of the Severn, and of the woods which overhung its banks: a ſituation very fit for one diſpoſed to lead a life ſequeſtered from the ways and buſy haunts of men. It is now profanely turned into a cyder-mill and cellar, and belongs to Wilſon Ayleſbury, eſq. in right of his wife. A view and ground plan of it is engraved in Stukeley's Itinerarium Curioſum, I. plate 13 and 14.

Tikenhill is now veſted in the crown, and with the manor of Bewdley leaſed to ſir Edward Winnington, bart. who has lately built a houſe here at Winterdyne. Part of the antient foreſt of Wire, remarkable for its great quantity of timber, is within the precincts of this borough. A gold coin of Tiberius in high preſervation was found in the foreſt 1770. The court for the marches of Winterdyne was kept alternately here and at Ludlow caſtle. Prince Henry's phyſicians thought this healthier than Ludlow; he therefore repaired the houſe for his own reſidence, but ſoon after died in his way from Ludlow hither[l]. When the old palace of Tikenhall was pulled down within the ſolid ſtones were found ſeveral rude maſſes, conſiderably larger than muſket balls, probably concretions of gritty matter formed by a continued rolling motion before the ſtone, of which they made part, was hardened. Their great weight ſhews they have ſome ſlight mixture of iron in their compoſition[m]. Such have been found in quarries in Wilts.

Holland ſays Henry VII. when he built Tikenhall, granted ſome privileges to Bewdley. Biſhop Gibſon, on the ſtricteſt enquiry, could find no ground for this aſſertion. The town ſeems to have been firſt incorporated by Edward IV. whoſe charter grants them great privileges both by ſea and land, which ſhews that in thoſe days they had improved the advantage

[c] Naſh, II. 34—56.
[d] Leland, IV. 183, b.
[e] Leland, Ib.
[f] It. II. 274. 277.
[g] Ib. V. 183.
[h] Naſh, II. 271.
[i] Leland, It. VII. 23.
[k] G. Mag. Brit. 224.
[l] Ib.
[m] Naſh in errata, II. 30.

of the river for traffick. Theſe immunities were twice confirmed by Henry VIII. and by act of parliament, 34 and 35 of his reign, Bewdley was annexed to the county of Worceſter. James I. granted them a charter by the name of the bailiffs and burgeſſes of Bewdley, and gave them one burgeſs to repreſent them in parliament.

Through Alvechurch near Bewdley, of which Dr. Hickes was rector, the Ikening ſtreet paſſes in its way from Alcheſter to Wall near Lichfield. It is mentioned as a boundary within this pariſh in a deed 30 Henry VIII.[n] Here is an hoſpital or almſhouſe, founded by Nicholas Lewknor of Hadzor, eſq. 1580, for 12 poor perſons, reduced to nine by diſputes about the foundation t. Elizabeth[o].

"The caſtle of Hertlebury belongeth to the biſhop "of Worceſter by the acts of ſeveral biſhops. Ther "is a park and warren and fayre pools. There is "a parke and deere, a warren for coneys, and faire "pooles; but the ſoile about the caſtle is barren[p]." It is ſtill the biſhop's reſidence; and Dr. Hurd the preſent worthy ornament of that dioceſe, after having had the honour in 1783 of declining to accept the primacy of England, has built a noble room for a library, and is furniſhing it with a ſelect and well-choſen collection of books (amongſt which is the principal part of Mr. Pope's and of the late biſhop Warburton's) for the uſe of his ſucceſſors.

Hartlebury was given to the ſee of Worceſter by Burhred king of Mercia about A. D. 850, and has belonged to it ever ſince. The caſtle was begun by biſhop Cantelupe. Biſhop Giffard obtained leave of Henry III. to embattle it. The gate houſe was added in the reign of Henry by biſhop Carpenter. It was taken by the parliament troops 1646, and ſold to Thomas Weſtrow for £.3133. The chapel was elegantly fitted up by biſhop Madox, at the expence of £.1200, and the windows painted by Price after ſome deſigns by Dr. Wall of Worceſter. Here is a freeſchool refounded by queen Elizabeth[q].

At Aſtley was a Benedictine priory, cell to St. Ebroix in Normandy, founded by R. de Todeni before 1160, annexed by Edward IV. to Wiſbury college, Glouceſterſhire[r].

Where Aſtley joins to Areley, at Redſtone ferry, is a very high rock ſo near the Severn that the floods ſometimes waſh it. Here out of the ſtone was formerly hewn an hermitage, conſiſting of a chapel with an altar in it, and other rooms. Over the altar was painted an archbiſhop ſaying maſs before all the inſtruments of our Saviour's paſſion; and above, certain lines now eraſed, declaring ſome indulgence to ſuch as frequented this place with devotion. It appears that hermits were buried here, although the ſtone is hard, ſeven or eight bodies having been found about the year 1736.

Here was born the hiſtorian Lazimon, a prieſt, who wrote the hiſtory of England from Brute to Cadwallader, or, as ſome think, only tranſlated Geoffrey of Monmouth into Norman Engliſh, though he ſays he had it from one Walter a French clergyman[s].

Of Holt caſtle remains only a tower and ſome old embattled walls. Sir John Beauchamp of Holt, knt. and baron of Kidderminſter, is ſaid to have been the firſt peer created by the king's letters patent[t]. Their eſtate here was purchaſed by ſir Thomas Bromley, knt. lord chancellor t. Elizabeth, in whoſe deſcendants it continued till one of them created baron Montfort ſold it to lord Foley. The church is the completeſt remain of Saxon architecture in the county[u].

The barons Beauchamp of Holt ended 8 Henry V.[x] In the reign of Elizabeth Holt belonged to the Bourns, of whom it was bought by ſir Thomas Bromley lord chancellor in that reign, whoſe heirs enjoyed it till on the extinction of the elder branch it came to another family of the ſame name in Cambridgeſhire[y], ſince created lord Montfort baron Horſeheath there.

Lampreys are found at certain ſeaſons of the year in ſeveral of the rivers of this county. But the Severn is moſt noted for them. They are ſea fiſh, but come into the rivers about the end of winter or beginning of ſpring. The beſt ſeaſon for them is from March to May. They are firm when juſt come from the ſalt water, but afterwards waſte and grow flabby in hot weather. They are reckoned a great delicacy potted or ſtewed, but are a ſurfeiting food, and Henry I. got his death by eating too plentifully of them. The mouth is round and the edges jagged, which enables them to adhere more firmly to the ſtones, ſo that they are not drawn off without ſome difficulty, whence their name Lampetra and Petromyzon, from licking the rocks. They have a ſmall orifice on the top of the head to diſcharge the water like the cetaceous fiſh. Their colour is duſky, irregularly marked with dirty yellow. The leſſer lamprey is ſilver-bellied, which is probably the blueiſh colour of Mr. Camden, who miſtakes in making the fiſh the Muræna of the Romans, which is unknown to and wants a name among us[z]. Lampreys.

Salwarp river riſes out of the Lickey hill[a].

An act of parliament paſſed 14 Charles II.[b] for making the river Salwarp navigable, together with the neighbouring Stour[c]. It makes many fruitful meads about Bromſgrove.

"At a village called Salop [Salwarp], the brooke "is callid Salop-brooke [Salwarp][d]." This hath its firſt riſe out of the veins of the Lickey hill moſt eminent in the north-eaſt part of this ſhire[d]. At the manor houſe of Salwarp was born 1381, Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, who died 1439, of whom before in Warwickſhire. It came from the Beauchamps to the Talbots of Lacocke[e]. Salwarp.

"The towne of Bromeſgrove is all in a manner "of one ſtreet, very long, ſtanding in a plaine "ground. There is once a week a meetly good mar-"ket. The heart of the town is meetly well paved. "The town ſtandeth ſomething by clothing[f]." It was a borough 23 Edward I. and a corporation, and has a charity ſchool founded by Edward VI. and a market. Its chief trade now is coarſe linens and nail making, and it has ſeveral good inns. The church has a beautiful ſtone tower and ſpire, and monuments for judge Lyttelton 1600, biſhop Hall of Briſtol 1710. Sir Humphrey Stafford killed at Sevenoake in Cade's Bromeſgrove.

[n] Naſh, I. 17.
[o] Ib. p. 26.
[p] Lel. IV. 183.
[q] Naſh, I. 568—573.
[r] Tan. 623.
[s] Naſh, I. 41. Nicolſon, E. H. L. p. 31. MS. of his Hiſtory Cotton lib. Calig. A. IX. Tanner takes no notice of him.
[t] 11 R. II. Dugd. I. 251.
[u] Naſh, I. 593—546.
[x] Dugd. I. 251.
[y] G. Mag. Brit. 264.
[z] Pennant, Zool. III. 58.
[a] Holland.
[b] n. 46.
[c] G.
[d] Lel. IV. 183.
[e] Holland.
[f] Naſh, II. 336. Lel. IV. 186.

rebellion

rebellion 28 Henry VI. and his lady, ſir John Talbot of Grafton, who died 1550, and his two wives, a tomb of Elizabeth wife of ſir Gilbert Talbot, knt. ſecond ſon of John ſecond earl of Shrewſbury, and another aſcribed to a daughter of Henry VII.

Bromeſgrove was part of the poſſeſſions of John Scot earl of Cheſter, Huntingdon, &c. on whoſe death Henry III. aſſumed them all into his own hands and gave his three coheireſſes an equivalent. At Kingſnorton. Kingſnorton, a chapelry, a market was granted by James I. Hawkeſley houſe there belonging to the Midlemores, was taken and burnt by the royaliſts 1645[s].

Dodford. At Dodford near Bromeſgrove was a ſmall priory of Premonſtratenſian Canons as old as the reign of John, valued only at £.7.[h] per ann. founded by Henry I.[i] Part of its walls make a farm houſe.

Grafton. "Grafton longid before Boſworth field to the Staf-"fords, noble knights. Since by attainder it came to "the king, and was given by king Henry VII. to ſir "Gilbert Talbot, and in that name it yet remaineth. "In this parke is a fair manor place, and one Talbot "at this preſent dwelleth in it[k]." On the death of Edward earl of Shrewſbury 1617, laſt heir male of John third earl of this family, the honour came to the houſe of Graſton, which was the ſeat of Charles earl of Shrewſbury, next lineal heir of ſir Gilbert Talbot before-mentioned[l], and both are enjoyed by the ſame noble family. The old ſeat here was burnt 1710, except the doorway and hall, now converted into a chapel, the chapel being a ſhell. In this pariſh are ſeveral mills and a petrifying ſpring[m].

Bordeſley. At Bordeſley in Tardebig pariſh between Bromeſgrove and Bewdley, the empreſs Maud founded a Ciſtertian abbey, valued at £.388 9*s*. 10*d*.[n]

Waleran de Beaumont, earl of Mellent and Worceſter, having laid the foundation ſtone about 1138, has by many been accounted founder. From this place Edward III. directed his writ of privy ſeal 1328 to reſtore the famous ſtone of Scone. The ſite and foundations occupy eight acres of ground. Henry VIII. gave it to Andrew lord Windſor in a forced exchange for the manor of Stanwell, and it is ſtill in his family. St. Stephen's chapel is the only en-Tardebig. tire building. The church of Tardebig being rebuilt 1774, the Windſor monuments with that of ſir Thomas Cooke founder of Worceſter college, Oxford, and his lady who was of that family, were much damaged. Sir Thomas was buried by his own direction 1702, with a gold chain and locket round his neck and two diamond rings of no great value on his fingers, all which were taken away by the heir of the family 1750[o].

Cokefield. "The nonery of Cookefield ſtood about a mile by "ſouth-weſt out of Aulcheſter[p]."

Cokehill. At Cokehill near Alceſter was a nunnery founded by Iſabella counteſs of Warwick, who became a nun here, valued at £.35. per ann. Little remains of the houſe. The ſite belonged to the lineal deſcendants of Richard Forteſcue, to whom it was granted[q], now to Mr. Bearcroft[r].

Hewell grange. Hewell grange, the ſeat of the earl of Plymouth, was begun 1712, and improved 1758, ſituated in a pleaſant park with gentle hills and a lake of 30 acres[s].

Droitwich is a large rich market and borough Droi town with four churches and a corporation granted by king John. The making of ſalt here is prior to the Conqueſt: at which time and in the reign of Henry VII. here were five ſalt ſprings. In 816 Kenulph king of Mercia gave the ſaltworks to Worceſter church, and it appears from Domeſday that ſhares in them were annexed to many eſtates in this county, diſtant from Worceſter 15 miles from hence, and the ſalt works occur in grants of the Saxon kings[t]. They were much favoured by Henry III. and other princes. James I. in his firſt year granted them a charter.

"The Wich (ſo Leland calls Droitwich) ſtandeth "ſomwhat in a valley or lowe ground betwixt two "ſmall hills on the left ſide of a pretty river. The "beauty of the town in a manner ſtandeth of one "ſtreet. There is a meane church, and once a week "a meetly celebrated market. The town itſelf is "ſomewhat foule and dirty when any rain falleth "with much carriage through the ſtreets being ill "paved or not paved. The great advancement of "the town is by making ſalt. There be at preſent "three ſalt ſpringes in the towne, whereof the prin-"cipal near the right ripe of the river is double as "profitable in yielding the ſault liquor as both the "other be. Some ſay that this ſpring did fayl in "the time of Richard de la Wych biſhop of Chi-"cheſter, and that after by his interceſſion it was "reſtored to the profit of the ould courſe; ſuch is "the ſuperſtition of the people. In token whereof "or for the honour that the Wich men and ſaulters "bear unto this Richard their countryman, they uſed "of late tymes on his daye to hange about this ſault "ſpring once a year with tapeſtry, and to have drink-"ing, games, and revels at it. Ther be a great num-"ber of ſault coates or furnaces about this well "wherein the ſault water is decoct and brought to "the perfection of pure white ſault. The other "two ſault ſprings be on the left ripe of the river, "and at theſe be divers furnaces to make ſault. A "ſaulter numbred them to an 18 ſcore, that is "360, ſaying that every one of them paid yearly "to the king 6*s*. 8*d*. Of old they had liberty given "them for 300 furnaces or more, and they give a fee "farm or vectigal of £.100 yearly, which remains as "it was, but the furnaces are increaſed to 400. The "Wych men uſe the commodity of their ſault ſprings "in drawing and decocting the water of them only "by ſix months in the year, viz. from Midſummer "to Chriſtmas, as I gues, to maintain the price of "their ſault or for ſaving wood, the which I hold to "be the principal reaſon. The lack of wood is now "perceived in places near the Wyche. A ſaulter told "me there were 6000 lodes ſpent yearly. The juſt "rate of every furnace is to make four loads of ſault "yearly. If the furnace men make more than four "loads in one furnace it is as it is ſaid their own "avayle[u]." If Mr. Camden had more faithfully copied Leland, he would not have lain open to biſhop Gibſon's correction about the period of ſalt making.

[s] Naſh, I. 150—166.
[h] Tan. 625.
[i] Naſh, I. 153.
[k] Lel. IV. 186.
[l] G. ex Brooke's Cat. of Nob. by Vincent 471. Dugd. I. 334.
[m] Naſh, I. 150—166.
[n] Tan. 622.
[o] Naſh. II. 402—409.
[p] Lel. IV. 168. a.
[q] Tan. 624.
[r] Naſh, II. 8, 9.
[s] Ib. 403.
[t] G. Mag. Brit. 230.
[u] Lel. It. IV. 184, 185.

They obſerve no fixed ſeaſon of wealling, nor leave off from any failure of ſtrength in the brine which never varies, but to avoid overſtocking the markets, to ſupply which they frequently work all the year round. The quantity here made may be gathered from the revenue paid to the crown, about £.50,000 a year at the rate or 3*s*. 6*d*. per buſhel[z]. The number of pits are greatly increaſed, and many more might be made. They now burn coal inſtead of wood in their ſeales[a]. A wake is annually kept here in honour of biſhop de la Wich, more properly called Richard de Burford, probably on the credit of the legend recited by Mr. Camden[4]. He died 1253[b]. Godwin ſays nothing of his miracles here. Spelman has not the word Bullio, and Du Cange has not explained it. Gibſon probably enough ſuppoſes it the ſame with Bullitio in Cheſhire, where nine pits belonging to the king and earl at Nantwich paid every Friday 16 bullitiones[c], and it follows that 15 of theſe made one ſumma, or ſeam, or horſe load, or eight buſhels[d]. Four ſums are ſaid to contain 40 bullions, which Gibſon conceives to be barrows, the ſize whereof has differed in different places and times. Perhaps they were the quantity of a pan or boiler either during or after boiling.

The following account of the ſalt works is extracted from Dr. Naſh's Parochial Collections for Worceſterſhire, I. 298—302.

"In the reign of James I. here were only three brine pits, one at Upwich, and two at Netherwich: Middlewich preſented nothing but a waſte piece of ground. The pit at Upwich contained more than four hundred phats; but thoſe at Netherwich only an inconſiderable number. Each phat conſiſted of two hundred and ſixteen large veſſels of brine. As the brine was not all of the ſame quality, it was neceſſary to take great care in the diſtribution of it. Accordingly ſworn officers, named magiſtri de la beadin or ties men, were appointed to ſuperintend this buſineſs. Every perſon employed in making ſalt, ſome time before the day fixed for beginning to make it, (for then alſo it was made one half of the year only) gave notice to the ties men of the number of phats he occupied. For each phat theſe officers delivered to him 18 veſſels of brine; ſix from the bottom of the pit where the brine was ſtrongeſt, ſix from the middle where it was weaker, and ſix from the top of the weakeſt brine. He received theſe in the ſpace of 14 or 15 days, and then one wicken brine was ended. And when 12 of theſe wicken brines were ended, then he had received 216 veſſels of brine, the whole of the phat, or the half year's walling.

"In the reign of Charles II. the thanks of the corporation were given to Winter Harris, for extending the trade of ſalt; and Oct. 4, 32 Charles II. one Gardiner was encouraged to ſell Wich ſalt at Berkeley in Glouceſterſhire, none having been ſent before to ſo great a diſtance[e].

"About this time there were in Upwich 387 phats, one quarter and two parts: in Netherwich beſt pit 20 phats; and in the worſt pit eleven phats and two quarters. The proprietors of the phats in Upwich were 127 perſons; in Netherwich beſt pit 12; and in Netherwich worſt pit 10, The value of theſe phats varied at different times. The trade was then a monopoly, and the proprietors of the pits ſet what price they pleaſed upon them; they were now worth about 10*l*. per phat, and the price of ſalt was from 1*s*. 4*d*. to 2*s*. 8*d*. per buſhel.

"In the firſt year of king William and queen Mary an act was paſſed for the better regulating the ſalt works in Droitwich. Under this act, and ſeveral former grants from the crown, the governors and proprietors of the ſalt works prevented every one from ſinking new pits; until Robert Steynor, eſq. a man of conſiderable fortune, and of an enterprizing and undaunted ſpirit, diſcovered and ſunk two pits upon his own freehold ground, about the year 1690. The corporation ſued him; he defended himſelf at the expence of about 6000*l*. and after various trials both in Chancery and the King's-bench, it was finally determined Jan. 24, 1695, before the lord keeper, that Mr. Steynor might lawfully ſink the two pits on his own freehold land, draw brine thereout, make ſalt thereof, and diſpoſe of the ſalt.

"Mr. Steynor argued that king John's grant did not convey the whole town and all the ſalt works, but only ſuch part as he was poſſeſſed of; that a pit called Sheriffs-Pit, and Lench's-Lands wherein Mr. Steynor ſunk one of his pits, were never in the crown; and that many private perſons had lands and brine pits, which were not included in king John's grant.

"In conſequence of this determination, many perſons ſunk upon their own lands, and found brine as good as the old pit. The monopoly was deſtroyed, the trade greatly extended, and the price of ſalt reduced from 2*s*. a buſhel to 4*d*.

"The proprietors of the old pit now finding that the value of their property was very much decreaſed, and that they were charged with a fee farm rent of 100*l*. per ann. and other heavy expences, brought a bill into the Houſe of Commons in the year 1708, intituled, 'A bill for the better preſerving the antient ſalt ſprings in Droitwich, and the rights of the proprietors thereof.' The plan of this bill was, to enable the old proprietors to bring the brine in pipes from Droitwich to Hawford, in the pariſh of Claines; to empower the biſhop of Worceſter to convey to them in fee, in exchange for other lands, about 20 acres at and near Mytam hill and pit, whereon they might erect ſalt works; and to ſubject the owners of the free pits to a portion of the fee farm and all expences attending this project. Here again Mr. Steynor, and the owners of the new pits, with the landholders in the neighbourhood, exerted themſelves, and the bill was thrown out[f].

"In this ſtate the pits continued till 1725, the old proprietors working their pit, though to very little advantage, and the different freeholders their ſeveral works. But in that year, ſir Richard Lane, ſometime mayor of Worceſter, and repreſentative in parliament for that city, being informed by ſome perſons

[z] G. Phil. Tranſ. N° 142. 156. [a] Ib. [4] G. [b] Godw. 505.
[c] Leiceſter's Antiquities, p 427. [d] Spelm. in Summa, and in Mon. Ang. II. 256.
[e] Records of the Corporation.
[f] Mr. Steynor ſhared the fate of many other projectors and perſons engaged in law-ſuits; he ſpent an eſtate of above 1000*l*. a year, and for ſeveral years before his death received weekly pay from the pariſhes of St. Andrew and St. Nicholas; they allowing him 1*s*. a week, in conſideration of his former ſervices.
In the more fortunate part of his life he lived in the weſtern ſkirts of the town, in a houſe with wreathed and ornamented chimnies, of the time of queen Elizabeth. In the reign of James I. they made plainer ſhafts to their chimnies.
A daughter of this Mr. Steynor was living in 1773, and received pay from Claines pariſh.

concerned in the ſalt works of Cheſhire, that the ſtrongeſt brine there lay lower than the pits at Droitwich were commonly ſunk, ordered the talc which was at the bottom of the pits to be ſunk through. Upon this the ſtrong brine broke out with ſuch violence, and in ſuch abundance, that two men who were at work in the pit were thrown to the ſurface and killed. Soon after every one ſunk his pit through the talc, and obtained ſuch a profuſion of ſtrong brine, that not one tenth part of it hath ever been uſed, but ran to waſte.

"From henceforth the old pit became of no value at all, which ſome years before was worth near 5000*l.* per ann. and eſteemed the ſureſt property a man could enjoy. Charities, deſigned to be perpetual, were funded in it; many women were jointured upon it; and ſuch an eſtate was in every reſpect judged far preferable to land. The confuſion and diſtreſs which enſued in the town and neighbourhood cannot eaſily be deſcribed; near 200 perſons had loſt their property; many of them their whole fortune; many ſchools, hoſpitals, and alms-houſes, their whole eſtabliſhment. Mr. Philpot, of the Herriots, loſt above 700*l.* a year, and this event happened the day he came to what he thought an ample poſſeſſion: Dr. Nath's father loſt above 200*l.* a year.

"This is a revolution in the hiſtory of the ſalt pits which I do not find noticed by any author. Indeed the printed information doth not ſeem to come ſo low as the year 1725.

"September 16, 1773, Joſeph Priddey, of Droitwich, informed me, that he had ſunk ſeveral pits, and generally found it about 35 feet to the talc; through the ſtratum of talc 150 feet; under the talc a river of brine 22 inches deep; under this river a hard rock of ſalt. When the hole is bored through the talc, the brine burſts up with amazing violence to the ſurface of the ground.

"In the year 1774, he ſunk another pit, and found it to the talc 53 feet thick; through the talc 102 feet; the brine river 22 inches deep; then a rock of ſalt. He bored two feet and a half into this rock, and found it ſtill the ſame.

"In 1779, an hole was bored previous to a brine pit's being ſunk in the yard of Richard Norris, eſq. The ſtrata were, mould five feet; marl 35; talc 40; a river of brine, 22 inches: under the brine, talc, 75 feet, and a rock of ſalt, into which the workmen bored five feet.

"I have been informed likewiſe by perſons employed in ſinking theſe pits, that immediately above the river of brine is a thin cruſt eaſily perforated, and next to that a very ſoft ſubſtance, perhaps two feet thick, and then the talc.

"This talc, or rather gypſum or alabaſter, is a ſhining ſquamous fiſſile ſpecies of ſtone, of a whitiſh colour, compoſed of a gypſeous earth, which does not ferment with acids. It readily falls into powder in the fire. If burnt without being red hot its powder ſoon concretes with water into a hard maſs. Hence its great utility in making images, floors for houſes and barns, &c. It is ſo hard that the workmen never ſink the pit through it. They bore a hole four inches in diameter, through which the brine riſes and fills the pit.

"A perſon that has land may ſink a pit at the expence of about 40*l.* from whence he may get brine ſufficient to ſerve the kingdom; but it is hardly worth while, as from ſeveral of the pits already ſunk any one for the yearly rent of 3*l.* may have as much brine as he pleaſes.

"Since the year 1725, the trade of this town hath very much increaſed. The profits to the proprietors are but ſmall; the price of ſalt, excluſive of the duty, being about 5*d.* a buſhel.

"The quantity of ſalt made at Droitwich from November 11, 1769, excluſive, to Auguſt 4, 1770, incluſive, amounted to 480,340 buſhels; for 371,078 buſhels of which the proprietors paid the duty; and the remaining 109,262 buſhels were ſold on bond.

"A duty of 3*s.* 4*d.* a buſhel is laid on white ſalt; but if the proprietor of the ſalt pays his duty immediately on the delivery of it from the works, or on the firſt pay-day, he has an abatement of 3*d.* a buſhel. If he ſends it coaſt-ways, or from one part of England to another, he has an allowance of 3*d.* a buſhel more. But if the proprietor exports his ſalt beyond the ſea, he then only gives ſecurity by bond for the duty of 3*s.* 4*d.* a buſhel, which bond is diſcharged on his producing a certificate, that all the ſalt for which the bond was given was really exported to parts beyond the ſea, and not relanded in Great Britain.

"In 1771, there were 15 proprietors of the ſalt works; and they occupied 40 ſeals or pans for boiling the brine.

"In 1772, there were eight pits, from which 45 iron[g] pans were ſupplied with brine. One of theſe pans contained 6000 gallons; it has, however, been found to be much too large; the reſt contained 800 gallons each, ale meaſure.

"The ſalt made in theſe pans, and ſold, from April 5, 1771, to April 5, 1772, was no leſs than 604,579 buſhels; of which 110,120 buſhels were exported to foreign markets. 61,457*l.* was paid into the ſalt office in London. This ſum is nearly one third of the whole produce of the ſalt revenue collected in England.

"The duty paid from April 5, 1772, to April 5, 1773, aroſe to 72,169*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* The quantity of ſalt made in 1774 exceeded that of any former year; but in 1775 it decreaſed on account of the American war.

"The general proceſs of making ſalt is, firſt to put a little common water into the pan to keep the brine from burning to the bottom: the pan is then filled with brine, and a piece of reſin about the ſize of a pea thrown into it to make it granulate fine. I doubted the reſin's having any ſuch power; but am aſſured by Mr. Romney, a principal and obſerving proprietor, that the more reſin they uſe the finer will be the grain of the ſalt; and if a lump the ſize of two walnuts were put into the pan, the grain would be ſo fine as not to ſubſide at all.

"When the brine is boiling, the ſalt firſt incruſts at the top, and then ſubſides to the bottom. When it is ſubſided, the wallers or perſons employed in the ſeals, lade it out with an iron ſkimmer, and put it into wicker barrows, each containing about half a buſhel, in the ſhape of a ſugar-loaf, and let them ſtand at the ſide of the pan for ſome minutes to drain. They then drop the ſalt out of the barrow, and place it in the ſtove to harden.

[g] In 1691, Mr. John Pedmore recommended the uſe of iron pans. Near the ſame time the proprietors directed coals to be tried; and they were found to anſwer very well.

"The

"The wallers boil a pan full of brine in about 24 hours. The drawing out all the ſalt from a pan they call a lade. Fourteen or 15 hundred weight of the beſt coals will with great care boil only a ton of ſalt, or 40 buſhels, each buſhel weighing 56 pounds.

"They uſually boil the brine very faſt, the conſequence of which, aſſiſted by the reſin, is, that the ſalt will be weak, and leſs uſeful for curing meat, though of a very fine grain; for the violent coction deprives the ſalt of that acid ſpirit which is neceſſary to preſerve animal bodies from corruption. The Dutch when they make their beſt ſalt for pickling uſe a heat not much greater than ſolar heat.

"In 1779, a projector came to Wich, and undertook to make a ſalt more fit for curing proviſions for long voyages than the ſalt obtained by the common proceſs. To every two buſhels of the broad ſalt he added a buſhel of well-burnt lime, mixed it together, and with a little water made it into balls, which balls he baked hard, then ground them in a mill, and with a quantity of freſh water diſſolved the powder to a brine, which he again boiled with a gentle fire.

"On diſſolving the ſalt thus made, a part of the lime ſettles in the bottom of the veſſel, and if the water be gradually evaporated, the ſalt regularly cryſtallizes into cubes, and the reſt of the lime ſeparates from it during the proceſs: it ſhould ſeem therefore that ſalt thus made will not be ſo good as ſalt made in the common way.

"Dr. Liſter, in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, N° 156, p. 489, Lowthorp's Abridgement, v. II. p. 363, ſays, "the brine of the Droitwich pits ſtinks "like rotten eggs, and will, if fleſh be pickled with "it, make it ſtink in twelve hours." I do not know by what means Dr. Liſter was led into this miſtake; the brine is perfectly ſweet and clear, and if properly boiled would make as good a pickle for meat as any in the world.

"It is obſerved in Dr. Plot's Hiſtory of Staffordſhire, p. 96, that in the brine of that country, by the aſſiſtance of a good microſcope, was diſcovered "a "great multitude of very minute animals, much "ſmaller than thoſe in pepper-water, ſwimming about "it; and withal very many ſmall tranſparent plates, "ſome of them a little bigger and ſome leſs than the "inſects, and all of them of a rectangular oblong "figure."

"I examined the Droitwich brine in a very good double microſcope and greateſt magnifier, and could find no ſuch animals or plates. Indeed I much doubt their exiſtence in any brine; eſpecially as Dr. Plot doth not aſſert it of his own knowledge.

"Upon further examination, I believe what the Doctor's friend miſtook for animals, was nothing more than the ſhootings of the ſalt, which may almoſt inſtantly be perceived if the brine be laid upon a glaſs and held in the ſun.

"For the following deſcription and analyſis of the Droitwich brine I am obliged to Dr. Johnſton, phyſician at Worceſter:

"November 1775, I weighed a bottle of Droit-"wich brine, and found the brine only weigh one "pound 11 ounces and a quarter. The ſame bottle "filled with pump water was found to contain one "pound ſeven ounces and a quarter of that water.

"The brine being evaporated in a heat of 70 de-"grees of Fahrenheit's thermometer, left ſix ounces "of dry ſea ſalt: no bittern or other heterogenous "matter being obſerved in it.

"February 12, 1776, I weighed another bottle of "Droitwich brine, which with the bottle weighed "four pounds three ounces and one quarter. The "ſame bottle emptied of its brine and filled with "Malvern water was equal to three pounds twelve "ounces and a quarter.

"At the ſame time I placed four pounds ſeven "ounces and a quarter of brine in the ſame degree "of heat, viz. 70 of Farenheit's thermometer; and "the ſalt obtained when dried weighed one pound "three ounces and a half, that is, ſomewhat more "than one fourth of the whole weight of the brine. "This ſalt was likewiſe perfectly free from bittern, "and from every foreign admixture.

"In theſe evaporations the ſalt which was firſt de-"poſited formed itſelf into cryſtals exactly cubical, "many of which concreted into a pyramidal form. "This regular cryſtallization continued till more than "half the water was evaporated. After this a thick "pellicle of ſalt covered he ſurface of the water, "and prevented the progreſs of evaporation. The "remaining brine, therefore, was poured into an-"other veſſel, where the evaporation was compleated; "and the ſalt which now remained appeared in thin "laminæ and very ſmall grains.

"A conſiderable difference was obſerved between "the well-formed cryſtals procured in the beginning "of the evaporation and the ſmall granules pro-"duced at the end. The latter were much more de-"liqueſcent than the former. I ſuſpected that this "might be owing to a ſuperabundance of alkali; and "therefore I diſſolved a portion of each kind of the "ſalt in freſh water, and afterwards added a ſmall "quantity of ſyrup of violets to each ſolution.

"The purple colour of the ſyrup was not viſibly "altered in either, from whence it appears that both "were entirely neutral.

"The ſtrength of the Droitwich brine exceeds that "of any other pits we are informed of, excepting, ac-"cording to Dr. Brownrigg, that at Barton in Lan-"caſhire, and ſome of the pits at Northwich.

"From the united obſervations of Dr. Hales and "Mr. Boyle, and the information received from the "ſalt-boilers on the coaſt of Cumberland, Northum-"berland, and Durham, it appears that the ſea water "on the Britiſh coaſts ſeldom contains more than one-"thirtieth, or leſs than one-fiftieth of ſea ſalt. The "ſprings at Nantwich and moſt of thoſe at North-"wich, yield one-ſixth. That of Weſton in Staf-"fordſhire one-ninth part of ſalt.

"In ſome parts of Germany ſalt is extracted from "waters more weakly impregnated than any of theſe.

"The Droitwich brine certainly exceeds all others "in purity. It is entirely free from bittern, and from "that light calcareous earth called ſcratch, which "abounds in moſt other ſalt ſprings; and is perhaps "one of the richeſt ſources of ſea ſalt in the world."

"Much has been ſaid by writers on agriculture concerning the uſefulneſs of Droitwich ſalt as a manure. I have known experiments tried upon it for more than 20 years, and am firmly of opinion that it is neither a manure in itſelf, nor capable of exciting any vegetative principles in the ground, as animal or vegetable ſalts, or lime, may do. It produces ſome bad effects on ploughed lands, by increaſing their dryneſs in hot weather, and by making them greaſy, and what the farmers call raw when the weather is damp.

"I have found it ſerviceable to ſcatter foul ſalt upon large heaps of manure; not to increaſe the richneſs of it, but to kill the weeds, and deſtroy the ſeeds of every kind which are latent in compoſt. Care muſt be taken that it be not laid near the roots of trees, as it will certainly deſtroy them.

" If put at the bottom of pools it enables them to hold the water better than otherwiſe they would do.

" It has been obſerved, that ſalt is wholeſome to all granivorous and graminivorous animals, but prejudicial to carnivorous ones.

" About the year 1765, a duty of 4*d.* a buſhel was laid upon foul ſalt. Before that time any farmer might have had it, on paying a moderate gratuity to the officer, who attended to ſee that it was ſcattered on the ground, and not uſed for other purpoſes. This duty brings a very trifling revenue to government, and at the ſame time gives room for many frauds: for, of the quantity bought, not a tenth part, I believe, is uſed for manure; but it is illegally employed in the glaſs, ſoap, and many other trades."

Soon after the Reſtoration, 12 Charles II. lord Windſor, anceſtor to the preſent earl of Plymouth, renewed the attempt of making the Salwarp navigable. He propoſed to erect ſix locks; for which he was to receive 199*l.* in hand, or, what was ſuppoſed to be the ſame thing, to have ſeven phats in Upwich, for three twelve wicken brines: 80*l.* more was to be given when he ſhould have finiſhed the firſt lock; and 100*l.* each for the five others. And to raiſe theſe ſums, eight phats and a half in Upwich, and one phat in Netherwich, were to have been laid on for 21 years. When five locks were compleated the plan was found not to anſwer, and the ſixth lock was never built.

" Going out of the townes end I ſaw a fayre tymbre " houſe belonging to Mr. Newport, on the right " hand[h]." Now the George inn[i]. There was an houſe of Auſtin friars or hermits, founded by Thomas Beauchamp earl of Warwick before 4 Edward III. and an hoſpital as old as Edward II.[k]

In St. Peter's pariſh is an hoſpital endowed by the will of the right hon. Henry Coventry 1688[l]. There was formerly dependant on this church a chapel, erected on the bridge in Droitwich, and through the middle of the chapel paſſed the high road leading to Bromeſgrove: the reading deſk and pulpit being on one ſide, and the congregation ſitting on the other. The commiſſioners of the turnpike obtained leave from the patron and incumbent of St. Peter to remove it on condition of building a new one on ſome adjoining ſpot. This they did about 1763, but the building was ſo ill executed that it is almoſt in ruins already[m].

Fekenham. At Fekenham in the foreſt was born John Fekenham, the laſt abbot of Weſtminſter, chaplain to biſhop Bonner, but a more moderate champion of Popery. He died in Wiſbech caſtle 1685[n].

Hanbury. Adjoining to Fekenham is Hanbury (Þeanbyrig), given with Bredon (Bnebune), to Peterborough, by king Ethelwald A. D. 675[o], unleſs Hembury in Glouceſterſhire be there meant. It has been the ſeat of the Vernons ever ſince the middle of the laſt century. The houſe was built by counſellor Vernon 1710, whoſe heireſs married, 1780, Henry Cecil, nephew to the preſent earl of Exeter[p].

At Upton Snodſbury lived Mrs. Palmer, who was murdered with her maid ſervant 1707, and the houſe fired, by a deſperate gang, headed by her only ſon and his brother-in-law Symonds, who were both executed and hanged in chains with two of their accomplices. They were ſuppoſed to have committed ſimilar outrages in other parts of the county. Part of Mr. Palmer's eſtate being forfeited to biſhop Lloyd of Worceſter, he generouſly ſettled it in charitable uſes which ſtill ſubſiſt; but the leaſe of the tithes of Sheriffs Linch expiring about 1770, biſhop Johnſon ſuffered the charity to be extinguiſhed, and granted a new leaſe[q]. Upton-bury.

Between Droitwich and Worceſter, at no great diſtance from the Severn, is Henlip, a fair ſeat of the Abingdons, remarkable for the taking of Garnet and Oldcorn, two eminent Jeſuits concerned in the Powder Plot, who after many days fruitleſs ſearch were found in the cavity of a wall over a chimney. The houſe ſuppoſed to have been built by John Abingdon, cofferer to queen Elizabeth, the date in the parlour being 1572, is uncommonly conſtructed both within and without, and admirably calculated to carry on intrigues and conceal the plotters near a fortnight[r]. In the ſame houſe was written that obſcure letter to lord Monteagle by Mrs. Abingdon his ſiſter, which firſt led to the unravelling of the horrid deſign. Her huſband Thomas Abingdon, eſq. being concerned in this plot and in Eſſex's meaſures againſt queen Elizabeth, for which he actually received received ſentence of death, was reprieved by the queen in conſideration of being her godſon, but condemned to paſs the remainder of his life within this county, whoſe hiſtory he amuſed himſelf in compiling. His large and valuable collections, duly methodiſed and continued, have been lately publiſhed with improvements, under the modeſt title of " Parochial Collections for the county of Worceſter," by the rev. Dr. Treadway Naſh of Bevereye, in 2 volumes, folio[s]. Hen Frankley near Droitwich was the ſeat of ſir Thomas Lyttleton, that learned ſerjeant, author of the Tenures, on which lord Coke wrote notes, to which treatiſe, ſays Holland, the ſtudents of our Common Law are no leſs beholden than the Civilians to Juſtinian's Inſtitutes. His deſcendant ſir Thomas was created a baronet 1618, and his deſcendant George baron of Frankley and lord Lyttelton 1757, 31 George II. which titles ended 1779 in his ſon Thomas ſecond lord. The fine ſeat here being burnt by prince Rupert to prevent the parliament uſing it as a garriſon, and never rebuilt, the reſidence of the family is now at Hagley in this county before deſcribed, where they bury[t]. Fr

Salway having now entertained a ſmall brook deſcending from Chedeſley, where antiently the family of Foliot flouriſhed, as after at Longdon [in which pariſh are both Chedeſley and Caſtle Morton, or Morton Foliot[u]], makes haſte to Severn[x].

[h] Ib. IV. 186. [i] Naſh, I. 305. [k] Tan. 626. Naſh, 331.
[l] Naſh, I. 328. [m] Ib. 359, 503.
[n] Mag. Brit. 235, Naſh, I. 441. Camden's An. of Elizabeth, p. 29. [o] Saxon Chron. p. 43.
[p] Naſh, I. 547. [q] Ib. II. 438, 439. [r] Ib. 585.
[s] The MSS. were tranſcribed by the author's ſon John, and luckily fell into the hands of Dr. William Thomas the induſtrious antiquary of Worceſter, and the republiſher of Sir William Dugdale's Warwickſhire. He collated the regiſters of the biſhops and dean and chapter of Worceſter, and made many other valuable additions to the MSS. After his death, 1738, they were purchaſed by biſhop Lyttelton, who enlarged them and bequeathed them to the Society of Antiquaries, who permitted Dr. Naſh to take a tranſcript of them.
[t] Naſh, I. 460, &c. [u] Ib II. 109. [x] Holland.

Ombersley on the Severn near the Stour, the ſeat and barony of lord Sandys, deſcended from Edwin Sandys archbiſhop of York t. Elizabeth, the fourth male deſcendant from whom, James, was ſo created 1743, 17 George II. He built the houſe here, which is furniſhed with many good portraits, and dying 1770, was ſucceeded by his ſon Edwin, ſecond and preſent lord[y].

To Ombersley adjoins Claines, where at Whiſton was a Benedictine nunnery, founded by William de Cantalupe biſhop of Worceſter, valued at £.53. The ſite ſtill retains the name of White ladies, and is held under the governors of a blue coat ſchool founded by queen Elizabeth in Worceſter[z].

At Wicton near Wych, Peter de Corbezon alias Studley, founded in the reign of Henry I. or Stephen, a priory of Canons Auſtin, removed to Studley in Warwickſhire[a].

At Weſtwood near Droitwich, Euſtacia de Say and her ſon, founded a ſmall nunnery, valued at £.75.[b] It ſtood where is now the kitchen garden, where in digging they find foundations and coffins[c].

Weſtwood has been the property of the Pakingtons from the diſſolution, but their reſidence only ſince the civil war, when their houſe at Hampton Lovet being too much damaged to be inhabited, they enlarged the houſe here which had been built in the reign of Elizabeth as a lodge or banqueting houſe. It now conſiſts of a ſquare building, from each corner of which projects a wing in the form of a parallelogram turreted. It ſtands on a riſing ground encircled with about 200 acres of oak timber. A lake deſigned to cover 100 and now extending itſelf over 60 acres is a great ornament to the eaſt ſide of the park. Weſtwood afforded an aſylum to Dr. Hammond, biſhops Morley, Fell, Gunning, &c. in concert with whom the good lady Pakington, as ſhe was called, wife of ſir John, is ſuppoſed to have written the "Whole Duty of Man," and the "Decay of Chriſtian Piety." At the Revolution it was the retreat of Dr. Hickes, who wrote here great part of his "Theſaurus linguarum ſeptentrionalium," and dedicates his Anglo-Saxon grammar to ſir John Packington from hence[d].

"Pakington hath a very goodly new houſe of "brike called Hampton court, a ſix mile off from "Wiceſtre, ſomewhat northward[e]." The learned Dr. Hammond was buried and has a monument among the Packingtons in Hampton Lovet church[f].

From a view of the map formed upon Antoninus' Itinerary one may venture to pronounce that the county of Worceſter had no ſhare in Roman tranſactions: conſequently that its capital can hardly be Brannogenium, which Ptolomy places among the Ordovices, but rather as profeſſor Ward inclines to place it with the Branonium[g], or Bravinium of Antoninus at Ludlow[h], where he finds traces of the ſecond name in the river Onney[i]. Ravennas gives it the ſame name as Ptolomy. Mr. Salmon, indeed, ſeems to make Worceſter the centre of four or five Roman roads[k], and Baxter has no doubt of its being Brannogenium, &c. But a later writer thinks it is to be ſought for on the river Tame at Brandon near Lantwardine, where the Roman way croſſes that river, and where ſquare intrenchments ſtill appear[l]. Dr. Gale ſettles it at Ruſhbury, in Shropſhire, deriving it from the Welſh Brwyners, a ruſh[m]. There is no ſuch name as Brannonium in Antoninus, but one MS. has Bravonio[n], which probably miſled Mr. Camden. Burton diſputes its title to Ninnius' name[o]. Uſher[p] allows it to Caer Guarongon, but transfers Caer Guercon to Warwick or Wroxceſter. Dr. Gale[q] tranſlates the former name the City of ſoldiers, called by the Britans Barongs or Guarongs, and Camden in Kent mentions an officer called Gaorong[r]. Dr. Naſh[s] removes it beyond Ludlow. Its Saxon name could not be derived from Wire foreſt, which is 12 miles off, and as much in Shropſhire as this county. Pinecerten muſt be a corruption of Pigora or Pigpaceſtep, its name under the Conqueror and his ſons, and Pigpacerten, a contraction of Pic-para-ceſtep, the city of the men of Wiccia, as Canterbury of Cant-para-byrig, the burgh of the men of Kent. The different ſpelling of Peogopa, Peogopena, Peogopna, and Pigpaceſtep, is of no moment, for the Saxons uſed eo and i indifferently; and the different terminations are as immaterial, for as we have here Peogopa and Peogopenaceſtep, we have in Bede Cantpari and Cantparena byrig. The preſent name Worceſter is either derived from Wirceſter by changing a vowel, or by ſinking the g in Peogopceſtep. The name of Wigornia occurs in Florence of Worceſter, who died above 60 years before Joſeph of Exeter wrote[t]. Abingdon derives the Saxon name from the Wears on the river[u].

The firſt biſhop of Worceſter was Boſel, conſecrated A. D. 680, and the church dedicated to St. Peter. The ſeculars being expelled by king Edgar 963, biſhop Oſwald founded a new cathedral in the old church-yard, and in the conventual church of St. Mary[x], in which he placed a prior and 12 monks; who, ſoon after the Conqueſt, increaſed to 50 Benedictines, when biſhop Wulſtan built them a new monaſtery, A. D. 1088. Its revenues amounted to near £. 1300. per annum, and, at the ſuppreſſion Henry VIII. endowed there with a dean, 10 prebends, 10 minor canors, 10 lay clerks, 10 choriſters, 40 king's ſcholars, &c. The temporalities of the biſhoprick, then valued at £. 1049. per annum, are now ſettled at £. 944.[x] St. Peter's church was ſtanding in Wulſtan's time, and we know not when it was demoliſhed[y]. Oſwald's church was burnt by Hardicnute's ſoldiers, 1041, and ſeems to have been ſucceeded by St. Michael's; for Wulſtan's ſtood a little ſouth of the other, whoſe nave ſeems to be the preſent great tranſept[z]. It was damaged by fire 1113 and 1202, and not conſecrated anew till 1218 to the Virgin Mary, St. Peter, and St. Oſwald, and Wulſtan, whoſe ſhrines were lodged in it. Biſhop Blois began to lengthen the nave 1224, and built a noble crypt and chapel over it for the bones diſturbed by his work. This chapel forming the court of Mr. Bromley's houſe and the vault below 58 feet by 22, and 14 high, is intire, with a vaſt aſſortment of bones[a]. Biſhop Cantelupe raiſed the pavement of the choir ſo as to admit a crypt below 72 feet long, as broad as the church, and 11 feet high, divided into ailes. Biſhop Giffard his ſuc-[f] Ib II. 216--224. [z] Tan. 623. Naſh, I. 269. [a] Tan. 622. [b] Ib. 624.

[c] Naſh, I. 351. [d] Naſh, I. 351—353. [e] Lel. VII. 1. 26. [f] Naſh, I. 537, 538.
[g] quaſi Barangonium. MS. n. G. [h] Horſley, p. 365. [i] Weſſeling. Antonin. 460.
[k] P. 686. 699 [l] Green's Survey of Worceſter, p. 9. [m] P. 127.
[n] Simler. Wſſeling. [o] P. 252. [p] Primord. c. 5.
[q] Ant. & aut. ibi cit. [r] See before, p. 352. note n.
[s] Pref. p. iii. [t] Naſh, pref. cix. [u] Green, 26. [x] Tan. 613.
[y] Green, 30. [z] Ib. 31. [a] Ib. 31. 35.

ceſſor added little columns of grey marble faſtened by gilt copper rings to the pillars of the choir. About this time the building was extended eaſtward [b]. Mr. Green ſuppoſes the choir brought weſtward, and not the lady chapel added [c]. The Norman caſtle having encroached on the church-yard, the earl of Pembroke and the Pope's legate recovered the depredations after king John's death, and encloſed it with an embattled wall [d]. Notwithſtanding the grant of Henry III. it was ſtill claimed by the ſheriffs who were earls of Warwick, till in 1276 they relinquiſhed all claim to it in due form of law in conſideration of £. 100. paid by the monks [e]. Great additions were made to the monaſtery at the cloſe of the 14th century; the great tower of the church, 162 feet high, was finiſhed 1374, the choir new vaulted 1376, as the nave had been 1337: the latter lengthened by two arches, and a ſtately weſt window by biſhop Wakefield 1380, and a new porch to the north aile, erected 1386 [f]. The church is in length 514 feet by 78 broad, and 68 high [g]. The cloiſters, built 1372, are 125 and 120 feet long, and in Abingdon's time the windows were full of arms and St. Wulſtan's miracles. The chapter-houſe is a decagon with a central pillar of the ſame date [h]. The refectory 120 feet by 64 is now the college hall: the dormitory 120 by 60 inches, two kitchen gardens. The infirmary is made into prebendal houſes; and the Gueſten hall built 1320 by Wolſtan de Braunsford then prior afterwards biſhop, is the audit hall [i]. In the church are monuments for king John the oldeſt royal monument remaining in England. He was buried in the choir between two biſhops, Oſwald who died 992, and Wulſtan 1095, and, on its demolition 1095, the tombs were brought forward without the bodies [k]. Other biſhops buried here and having monuments are de Conſtantiis 1198, Giffard 1301, Cobham 1327, Hemenhale 1338, Bryan 1361, Bullingham 1576, Parry 1616, Thornborough 1627, Gauden 1662, Blandford 1675, Fleetwood 1683, Thomas 1689, Stillingfleet 1699, Hough 1743, Maddox 1759; John prior of Eveſham 1370; beſides Philip Hawford, laſt prior of Eveſham, 1557, ſir James and ſir John Beauchamp, ſir Griffith Rice 1522, ſir Simon Harcourt , a counteſs of Surrey, or rather by the arms a Verdon, ſir Thomas Lyttleton, juſtice of the common pleas. Here is a capital monument for prince Arthur 1502 [l].

Edgar's charter to the church of Worceſter fixes the ſynod in which Dunſtan enjoined the celibacy of the clergy to A.D. 969, which date though extremely particular, having the indiction, year of the king's reign, day of the month, and week [m], is manifeſtly falſe; for Florence of Worceſter, and other monuments, unanimouſly fix the expulſion of the prieſts to 969, and ſome of them add that Winſy, who is ſtyled prior in the above charter, was not elected till A. D. 971 [n].

"The towne of Worceſter, called in Welſh Caer "Argo [o], ſtandeth on the left ripe of Severne, upon "a ground ſomewhat condeſcending from the river. "It is reaſonably well wodded and well maintained. "In the wall be ſix gates. The caſtle ſtood hard "on the ſouth part of the cathedral church, almoſt "on Severn: it is now cleane downe, and half the "baſe court or area of it is now within the wall, in "the cloſe of the cathedral church. The dungeon "hille is a great thynge, at this time overgrown "with bruſh wood. This caſtle fell to ruin ſoon "after the conqueſt, and half the ground of it was "given to the augmenting of the cloſe of the priorey. "There be divers faire ſtreets in the towne well "builded with timber, and two market places, but "the faireſt and moſt celebrate ſtrete of the town is "from the biſhop's palace gate along the fore gate "by N. There be eight pariſh churches in the towne, "whereof St. Helen is counted the moſt antient, "and it was a prebend before king Edgar's days to "the cathedral church of Worceſter, and Bloxham "in Worceſter was another. The Black Fryer houſe, "of the foundation of the Beauchamps of Powik, ſtood "in the north part of the town [p]. There is a faire "ſuburb beyond the bridge, which is a royal piece of "work, high and ſtrong, and hath ſix great arches "of ſtone. In the north ſuburb is an antient and "fair large chapel of St. Oſwald, firſt erected for "leprous monks, after changed to an hoſpital of a "maſter, fellows, and poor," [valued at £. 13. per annum [q]], and laſt a free chapel. "Here were wont "corſes to be buried in time of peſtilence as a public "cemetary for Worceſter," [by grant of biſhop Thoreſby 1349 [r], valued at £. 53. per annum [s]. The hoſpital was demoliſhed at the ſiege [t]. The eſtate reinſtated 1681 [u].] "There was a place or "nunnery called Whileſtan, now ſuppreſſed, and the "church raſed, and in the ſuburb without Sidbury "gate Wolſtan's hoſpital, for a maſter, prieſts, and "poor men, founded by the queen, renewed by one "Carter, a merchant of Worceſter, for poor mer-"chants, [valued at £. 56. per annum [w],] now ſup-"preſſed. Some call it a commandery." It is now a private houſe. A fine hall and great part of the antient building remains ſtill intire [x]. Duke Hamilton died here of his wound received at the deciſive battle fought here between Charles II. and Cromwell, 1651. "Without St. Martin's gate was a houſe of Grey "Friars, founded by the earls of Warwick [y]. The "wealth of the town ſtandith moſtly by drapering, "and no town of England at this preſent time "maketh ſo many cloathes yearly as this town doth [z]." The friars de Penitentia Jeſu ſettled here t. Henry III. [a] A portal that belonged to the Saxon citadel remains, called Edgar's tower, adorned with the ſtatue of that king and his two queens, and under him a date 9[7]8 1000 (altered in late repairs to 957) when the rich chequerwork of the gate was chipt off, which fixes its erection to his ſon Ethelred [b]. A mean gaol occupies the ſite of the caſtle: the ſteep keep and the ſouth rampart and ditch are all its remains [c].

James I. a. r. 19, granted a charter for a mayor, ſix aldermen, who are juſtices of peace, and choſen out of the 24 capital citizens, as is the ſheriff; 48 common council, two chamberlains, a recorder, townclerk, coroner, &c. The city is a county of itſelf [d]. It is [b] Green, 36, 37. [c] P. 68. [d] Ib. 41. [e] G. [f] Green, 42, 43. [g] Ib. 51.

[h] Ib. 60, 61. [i] Ib 64, 65. [k] Dr. Naſh.
[l] Green, 67. 83. [m] Reg. Wigorn. ſub eod. an.
[n] Flor. Wig. A. 969. Ang. Sac. I. 472. 542. 543. Chron. Mailros, Hoved. A. D. 969. Antiq. Brit. in vit. Dunſtani. G.
[o] q. Guergon.
[p] Tan. 627. The ſite was called Belaſſes. [q] Tan. 625. [r] Naſh, I. 224.
[s] Tan. 625. [t] Naſh, Appendix. [u] Naſh, I. 227. [w] Tan. 625.
[x] Naſh, II. 331. [y] Lel. IV. 184. Tan. 626. [z] Lel. IV. 184. [a] Tan. 626. Green, 168.
[b] Green, 18, 19. 174. [c] Ib. 184. [d] G. Green, 213.

large,

large, populous, and well built, four miles round, returns two members, has four fairs, and three weekly markets, and a very conſiderable one for hops. Here are 10 pariſhes. Nine pariſh churches within the liberties, and two without. The biſhop's palace, begun by Giffard 1270, was improved by later biſhops. A handſome Guildhall was built about 1719 by Mr. Thomas White, a native, aſſiſtant to ſir Chriſtopher Wren[e]. St. Oſwald's hoſpital was pulled down by ſir John Bourn of Holt t. Elizabeth, refounded by dean Fell for 12 poor men. Another erected near it was by Mr. Haynes 1682; Inglethorp's 1730, and Berkeley's by the judge of that name. A new bridge was erected 1769, and a new ſtreet intended on the city ſide. The city workhouſe, for the maintenance of poor children built by the corporation, incorporated 2 Ann, and ſeveral leſſer hoſpitals, a freeſchool founded by Elizabeth, and an infirmary eſtabliſhed by voluntary contributions 1745, under the patronage of biſhop Madox[f]. The cloathing trade eſtabliſhed here early in Henry VIII's reign is entirely gone[g]: the principal trade is gloves. The porcelain manufactory near the Severn here is a uſeful and flouriſhing branch of trade[h].

Florence the hiſtorian was a monk of Worceſter cathedral priory. His work is an abridgement of Marianus Scotus, from the beginning of the world to the laſt year of his life 1118, interſperſed with extracts from the Saxon Chronicle, and other writers. The ſimplicity of his ſtyle, and his fidelity are praiſed by other monkiſh writers, and by Leland. His hiſtory, with the continuation by another monk of Worceſter to 1141, was publiſhed from a faulty MS. by William Howard earl of Northampton; Lond. 1592. 4to. and with Matthew of Weſtminſter, Francfort 1601[i].

Senatus Bravonius, prior of Worceſter, 1189, which place he reſigned 1196, and died 1207, was an ornament to his ſociety, and wrote the lives of Oſwald and Wulſtan in Anglia Sacra II. 15[k]. Heming, a ſubprior about 1100, compiled a chartulary of the church of Worceſter, publiſhed by Hearne at Oxford, 1723, 2 vol.[l]

This city gave birth 1652 to the illuſtrious Lord Somers, who died 1716[m].

Spechley was the ſeat of the Lytteltons, Sheldons, and Berkleys. The houſe was burnt by the royaliſts juſt before the battle of Worceſter, and ſir Robert Berkeley converted the ſtables into a houſe. In the church are monuments for him who was judge in the King's Bench 1656, his father Rowland 1671, and his grandſon Robert 1703, &c. This family ſtill enjoy it[n].

North of Spetchley is Hodington, the ſeat of the Wintors, of whom Robert and his brother Thomas were concerned in the gunpowder-plot: the manſion is moated round but very ruinous, though the matches of the family are ſtill preſerved in the windows[o].

Oſwaldſlow hundred lies diſperſed in different parts of the county, and conſiſts of three diviſions, upper, middle, and lower, comprehending all the lands that belonged to biſhop Oſwald and the monks of St. Mary at Worceſter, conſiſting of three hundreds in different parts of the county, and being united into one contained 300 hides[p]. It was granted to the biſhop with many immunities, that he ſhould have therein and certain pariſhes ſeparated from the reſt of the county, all ſocage ſervices, all cuſtomary duties belonging to the lord's purveyance, the king's ſervice, and his own, ſo that no ſheriff ſhould hold a court there on any plea whatever. This at the Conqueror's ſurvey was atteſted by the whole county and ſo regiſtered. Theſe liberties were confirmed to the biſhop by Henry I. and II. and augmented by Henry III. on account of his father king John being buried at Worceſter. The bailiwic conſiſted of a three weeks court; ſeven court leets belonged to the hundred, held on great commons, in fields, or on hills under trees. The biſhop choſe and ſtill chooſes his own bailiff, which office has been executed by ſome of the principal gentlemen of the county, but as the expence of holding the courts exceeds the profit they are not regularly held[q].

Oſwald's Law.

Between Worceſter and Spechley, on a riſing ground, is probably the old Oſwald's Law, which Spelman miſ-tranſlates Lex Oſwaldi[r], or the decree againſt married prieſts: but it is more properly Oſwald's Diſtrict, or juriſdiction, a hundred of 300 hides given A. D. 964 by Edgar to Oſwald about A. D. 970 tax-free[s], which gave name to the low or hill, where the hundred court was and is kept[t]. This hundred is not one continued tract, but conſiſts of townſhips ſcattered through the county, where the biſhop and church of Worceſter had lands at the granting that charter[u]. It is eſteemed a full third of the county, but not a third of that hundred now. This charter mentions Ulferes law and Cuthburg law hundreds, now ſwallowed up in this: and in other counties the names of hundreds often terminate in law, as in Herefordſhire, Radlaw and Wormlaw[v].

Aſton.

With an eſtate at Aſton Epiſcopi, or White Ladies Aſton, near Spetchley, biſhop Lloyd founded 1713 at Worceſter two ſchools, called the biſhop's charity ſchools, in which 24 children of different pariſhes are educated[x].

Powick.

Powick gives name to a deanry. Here was Beauchamp's court, the antient ſeat of the Beauchamp family. A battle was fought here 1642, in which the royaliſts were victorious[y].

At Powick was born, 1708, the learned phyſician Dr. Martin Wall, who died 1776.

Kemſey.

Below Powick, on the eaſt ſide of the Severn, ſtands Kemſey, an antient manor of the biſhops of Worceſter, who had before and ſince the Conqueſt a noble palace long ſince ſo completely demoliſhed that the ruins are not diſcernable, but they ſtill hold the manor[z]. The barons under Montfort lodged their priſoner Henry III here awhile before Eveſham battle[a]. Here are ſome traces of a large ſquare camp, ſingle trenched[b]. Here was a monaſtery in the 8th century ſoon united to Worceſter[c].

Leigh.

Leigh, near Powick, was the ſeat of the Devereux family. The manſion houſe at Cowleigh is ſaid to ſe-

[e] Naſh, pref. cxvi. [f] Green, 216, 217. 222. 227. 239, 246. [g] Naſh, pref. cxiv.
[h] Green, 231. [i] Tan. Brit. Bib. 289. [k] Ib. 661. [l] Ib. 391.
[m] Green, 249. [n] Naſh, II. 356. 362. [o] Holland. Naſh, I. 592.
[p] A part of which may be ſeen in Heming's Chartulary, p. 313. 517.
[q] Naſh's Introduct. lx—lxii. [r] Conc. I. 434.
[s] Hickes, Ep. diſſ. p. 87. Lambard Dict. Manning's Dict. in v. [t] Edgar's charter.
[u] See Spelman's Conc. p. 433. and Mon. Ang. I. 140. [v] G. [x] Naſh, I. 50.
[y] Ib. II. 262—4. [z] Ib. II. 28.
[a] Mag. Brit. 264. [b] G. ex Aubrey MS. [c] Tan. 620.

parate the counties of Worceſter and Hereford. It now belongs to Edward Lechmere, eſq.[d]

Cromb d'Abetot.

Three miles ſouth is Cromb d'Abetot, ſo named from Urſo d'Abetot its antient lord, now the ſeat of the earl of Coventry, whoſe anceſtor ſir Thomas purchaſed it 1535, and whoſe family are buried in the church[e]. Their manſion here was deſigned by Mr. Browne[e].

Malvern chace.

Two miles off, on the weſt ſide of the Severn, is Malvern chace and hills, "ſtretching a great way "from ſouth to north; the north-eaſt be the higheſt. "Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter cauſed a foſſe "to be made in the creſtes of Malvern hills in the "prejudice of the limits and liberty of the biſhops of "Hereford and Worceſter[f]." Others ſay only the church of Hereford was conſidered, there being a diſpute between biſhop Cantelupe and the earl about lands held by the former in this Chaſe, and the judges who decided it ſat in the chace[g]. It is a bare ſtoney ridge with a few alders on the ſides[g]. "Thechaſe is bigger than Wire or Fekenham, and "occupiethe a greate parte of Malvernhil les, but "not al, and is in length in ſome places 20 miles, "but doth not occupy all Malvern hill[h]." William of Malmeſbury calls it a wilderneſs[i]. It extended in length from the river Teme north to Cors foreſt ſouth, and from Severn eaſt to the top of Malvern hills weſt, where is ſtill to be ſeen remains of a trench, drawn 1287, on the narrow ridge of this ſteep hill to divide the poſſeſſions of the biſhop of Hereford from the chace, and to limit the two counties, on occaſion of a great diſpute between that biſhop and Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter, ſoon after the foreſt had been given to the latter. This foreſt thus falling from the king to a ſubject was firſt called a chace. It followed the earl of Glouceſter's deſcendants till on the attainder of George duke of Clarence it became forfeited to the crown, and in the reign of Charles II. it was diſafforeſted. The lord of Hanley was chief lord of this chaſe, and held a court[k].

"It is beyond the powers of an antiquary to deſcribe the beautiful proſpects from Malvern hill. In diſtant proſpect one ſees the counties of Monmouth, Hereford, Radnor, Brecknock, Salop, Worceſter, Glouceſter, Stafford, Warwick, and the three cathedrals of Worceſter, Hereford, and Glouceſter, with many market towns. In nearer view the pear trees of Worceſterſhire when in bloſſom furniſh ſuch a ſcene as the world cannot equal, while on the weſt ſide the apple trees of Herefordſhire with their purple hue make an agreeable variety. Add to this the varied ground, the beautiful little hills and rich woods which improve the Herefordſhire proſpect. If to the beauty of the ſcene we add the ſalubrity and pureneſs of the air, we may venture to affirm that at leaſt for the ſummer months Malvern is as deſireable a reſidence as any in England[l]."

Great Malvern.

"Great and Little Malvern are ſet in this chace[m]." At the former was a religious houſe, endowed by the Confeſſor, made a Benedictine priory 1083, by Aldwin chief of the place, and afterwards a cell to Weſtminſter, valued at £. 308. per annum[n]. The priory church was bought by the pariſh at the diſſolution, and, except the Lady chapel at the eaſt end, and one on the north ſide, is entire, with beautiful painted windows miſerably defaced, but the ſcripture hiſtories and arms particularized by Dr. Thomas in his Antiquities of the place 1725, and Dr. Naſh[o]; and ſcarce any proviſion is left for the miniſter[10]. The handſome gate is alſo entire. Here are two ſprings, one chalybeat, the other called Hobwell, bituminous, much reſorted to in ſcrophulous caſes[p].

In the link, in the pariſh of Great Malvern, was lately found many feet under ground a celt weighing ten ounces, about five inches and a half long, of a mixed metal between braſs and copper, with a beautiful patina upon it, and a ſmall ring or loop. Antiquaries are not agreed whether the celts are Gauliſh, or Roman inſtruments, or for what purpoſes deſigned, whether as chiſels to cut ſtone, or weapons of war. Dr. Stukeley, a great admirer of the Druids, ſuppoſes them druidical, and that they were the golden or rather brazen hooks with which they cut the Miſletoe: but, as they are often found in great quantities in or near Roman camps or ſtations, they probably belonged to the Romans or their Gauliſh auxiliaries. The learned and ingenious Dr. Lort, in his obſervations on celts in the fifth volume of the Archaeologia, p. 106, mentions ſome that were found in Herculaneum, and gives engravings of many different ſorts. This comes neareſt to fig. 3. Pl. VIII. there.

At Little Malvern, which ſtands in a diſmal cavity of the hill, was founded 1171 by two brothers, Joceline and Edred, ſucceſſively priors, a Benedictine priory augmented by biſhop Blois, and made a cell to Worceſter, valued at £. 98. 10s. 9*d*. per annum[q], and granted to the Ruſſels, whoſe heireſs married William. It is now moſtly in ruins, only part of the nave remaining, and in its windows conſiderable fragments of painting and ſeveral antient monuments.

Little Malvern is a retired romantic ſpot on the eaſt ſide of an hill, and running up to its ſummit, where is a camp, treble ditched, of which a view and plan may be ſeen Pl. X. fig. 1. Some have imagined it Roman, becauſe of the prætorium or centre part and the name of the pariſh in which it is ſituated, Colwall, c. Hereford, q. d. collis vallum. But this is contradicted by its ſhape. It is certainly prior to the trench beforementioned for part of which its outward trench ſerves. Within muſket ſhot of this camp was found by Thomas Taylor near Burſtners croſs, as he was digging a ditch round his cottage, a coronet or bracelet of gold ſet with precious ſtones, which he ſold to Mr. Hill goldſmith in Glouceſter for £. 37, and Hill to the London jewellers for £. 250. who ſold the jewels for £. 500[r]. This may have belonged to ſome unfortunate Britiſh or Anglo-Saxon prince, to whom the fortification alſo belonged.

"Hamley is from Upton a mile in dextra ripa Sa- "brinæ, a mile above Upton, and a ſlite ſhotte from "Severn. It is an uplandiſch towne. The caſtelle "ſtandeth in a park at the weſt parte of the towne. "Sir John Savage, and his father and grauntfather "lay much about Hamley and Theokeſbyri, as "keepers of Hamley. The erles of Glouceſter were [d] Naſh, II. 73, 74.

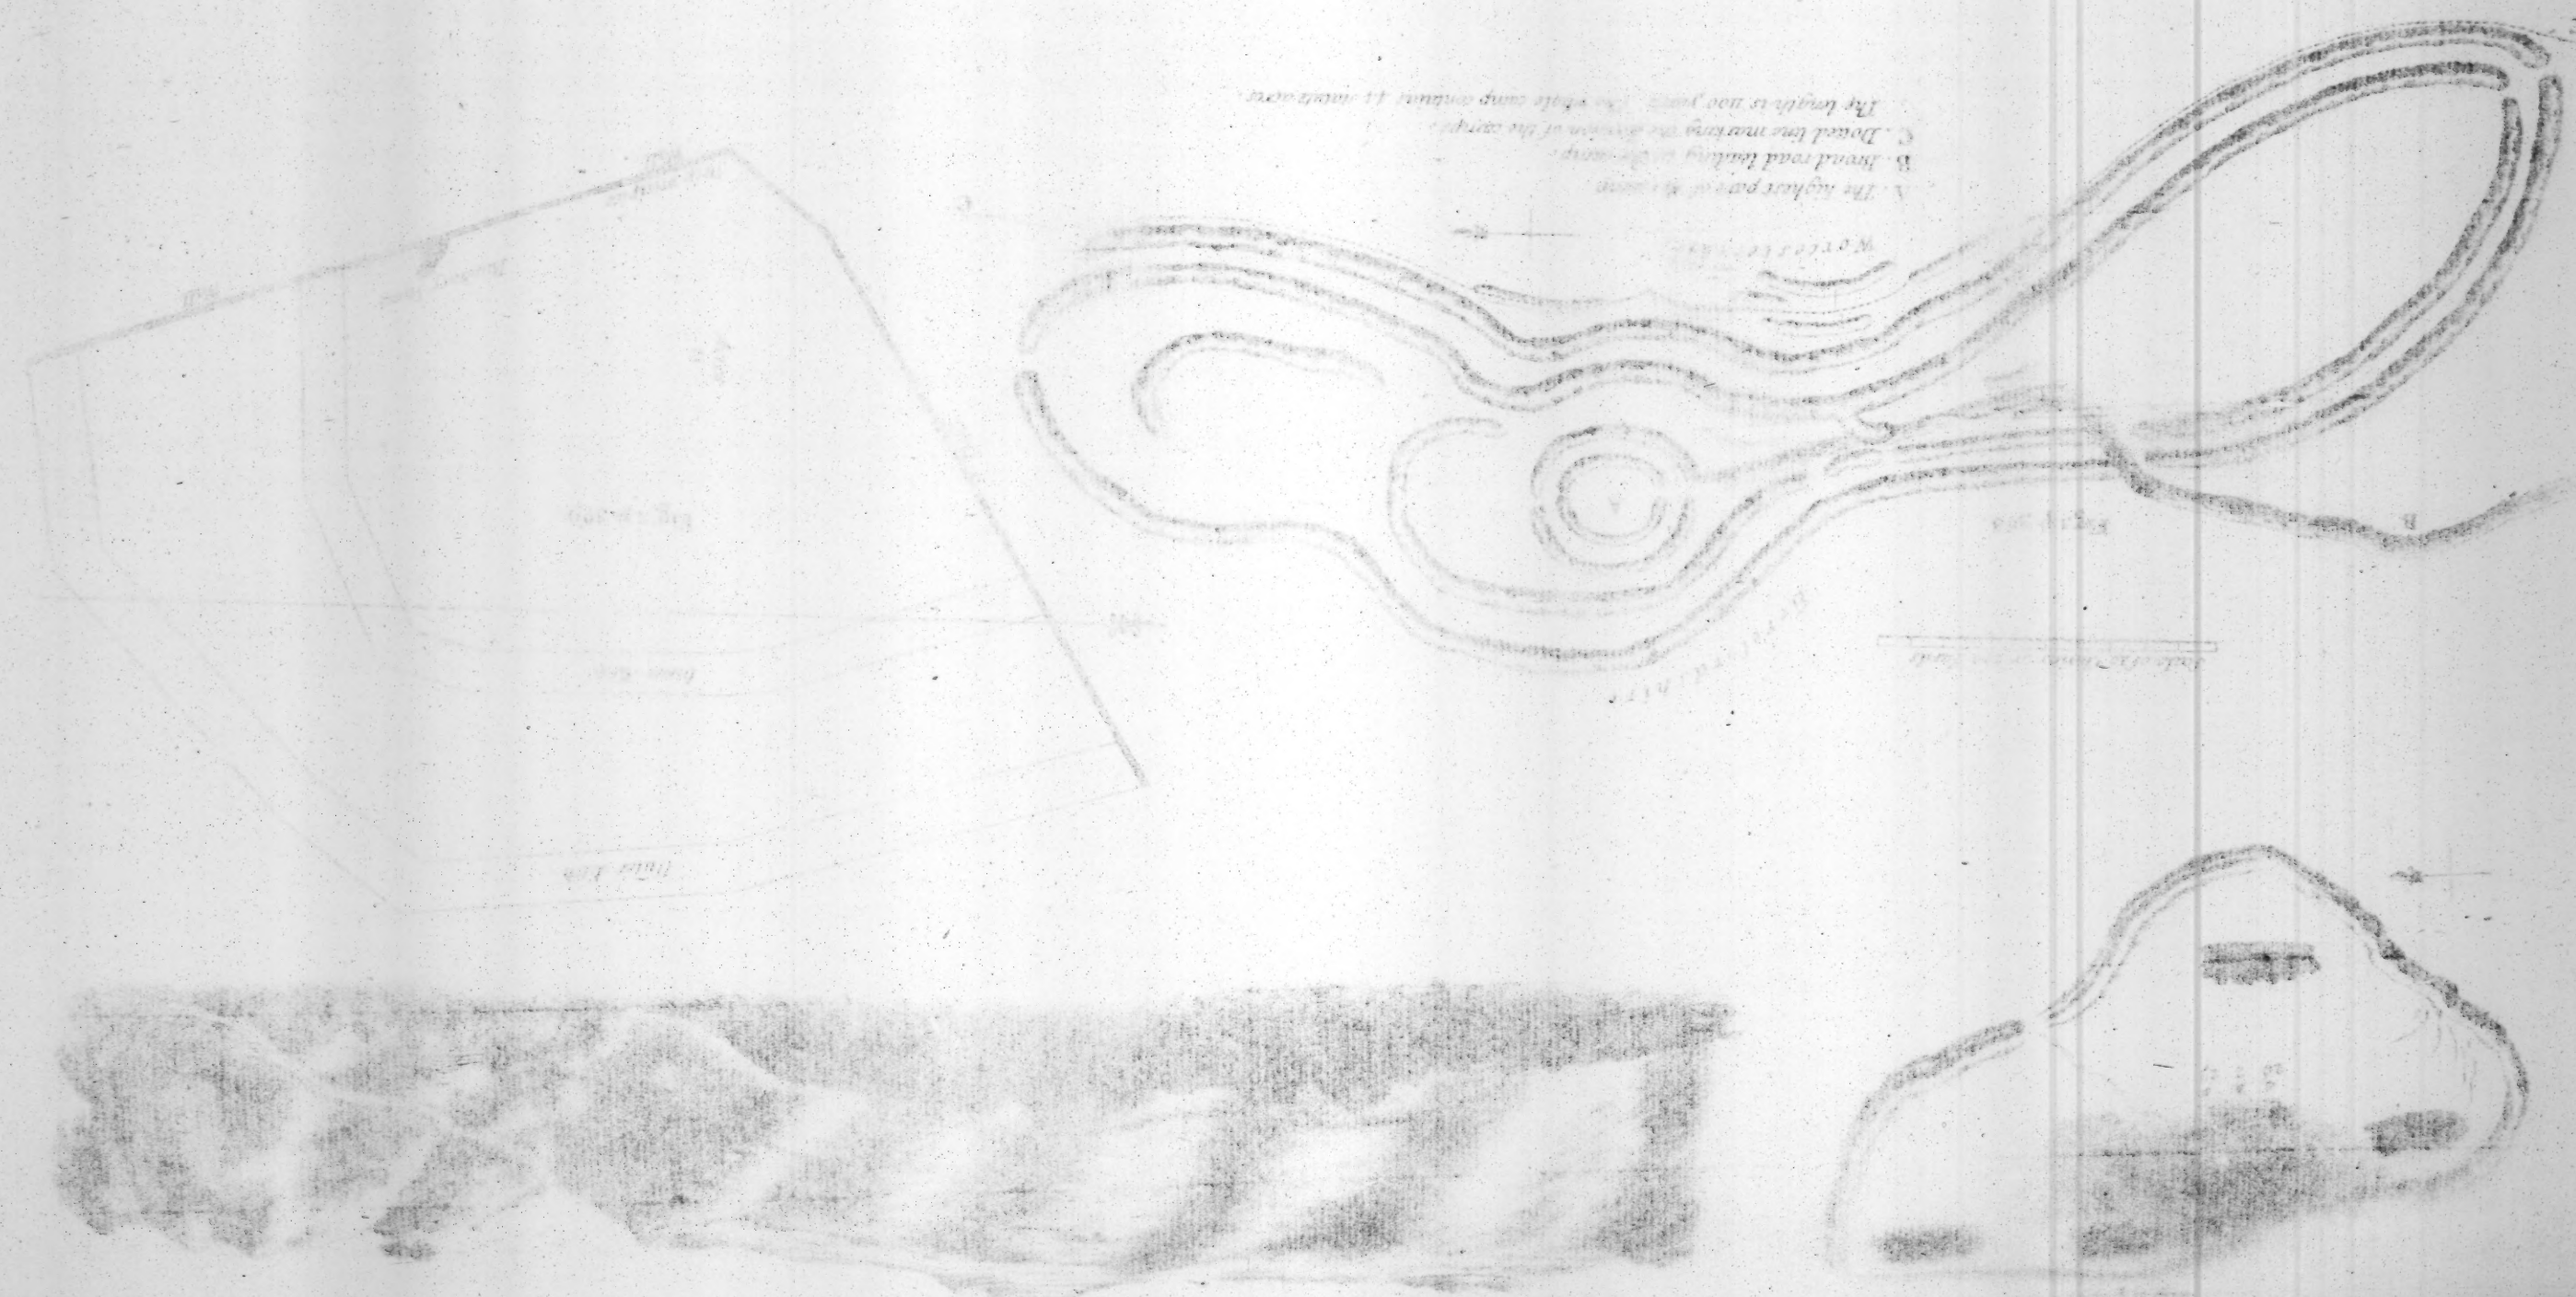
[e] Lel. IV. 184. b. [f] G. [g] Naſh, Intr. lxix. lxxi. [h] II. 129. 132. [i] G. [k] Tan. 623. G. Naſh, II. 140—143. [l] Naſh, I. 260—262. [m] Leland Ib. VII. 25. [n] Tan. 621. [o] Thomas, Antiq. Malvern. [p] Leland Ib. [q] Naſh, II. 127. [r] Wall in Phil. Tranſ. XLIX. p. 459. L. p. 23. and pamphlet 1756, 8vo. [s] Naſh, II. 142.



Croom d'Abetot.

parate the counties of Worcester and Hereford, it now belongs to Edward Lechmere, esq.

Three miles south is Croom d'Abetot, so named from Urso d'Abetot, an antient lord, [illegible] the seat of the earl of Coventry, whose ancestor Mr. Thomas purchased it 1535, and whole family are interred in the church[a]. Their mansion here was designed by Mr. Browne[b].

Malvern chace.

Two miles off, on the west side of the Severn, is Malvern chace and hills[c]. Stretching a great way "from south to north, and such as shall be the highest. "Gilbert de Clare earl of Gloucester caused a forest "to be made on the confines of Malvern hills, to the "prejudice of the rights and liberty of the bishops of "Hereford and Worcester[d]." Others say only the church of Hereford was considered, there being a dispute between bishop Cantilupe and the earl about lands held by the former in this Chase. And the judges who decided it for the bishop, "gave sentence, "that the earl should have free chase in Malvern, "but that the bishop and his successors should have "free warren in the same[e]." The chase is bounded on the east by the Severn, and from Severn end to the top of Malvern hills west, where is still to be seen remains of a trench, drawn 1287, on the narrow ridge of this steep hill to divide the possessions of the bishop of Worcester from the chase, and to settle the two contests, or action of a great dispute between that bishop and Gilbert de Clare earl of Gloucester, soon after the forest had been given to the latter. This forest then taking from the king to a subject was first called a chace. It followed the earl of Gloucester's possessions on on the accession of George I. of course it became reduced to the crown, and in the reign of Charles II. it was disforested.

It is [illegible] the beauties of [illegible] scribe the beautiful prospects from Malvern hills. Indultans prospect one sees the counties of Worcester, Hereford, Radnor, Brecknock, Salop, Worcester, Gloucester, Stafford, Warwick, and the three cathedrals of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, with many market towns. In nearer view the pear trees of Worcestershire when in blossom furnish such a scene as the world cannot equal, while on the west side the apple trees of Herefordshire with their purple hue make an agreeable variety. Add to this the varied ground, the beautiful [illegible] rich woods which improve the Herefordshire prospect. If to the beauty of the scene we add the salubrity and pureness of the air, we may venture to affirm that at least for the summer season Malvern is as desireable a residence as any in England[f].

Great Malvern.

Great and Little Malvern are [illegible] At the former was a religious house, [illegible] the Confessor, made a Benedictine [illegible] by Aldwin chief of the place, and afterwards to Westminster, valued at £. 308. per annum. The priory church was bought by the [illegible]

[a] Nash. II. 73. 74.
[b] Lel. IV. 134. b. [illegible] [c] Nash. [illegible] [d] Leland IV. [illegible]
[e] II. 129. 132. [f] Tour. 6vo. 6. Nash II. [illegible] and passim.

Fig. 1. P. 368.

Fig. 3. P. 372.

Fig. 3. p. 372.

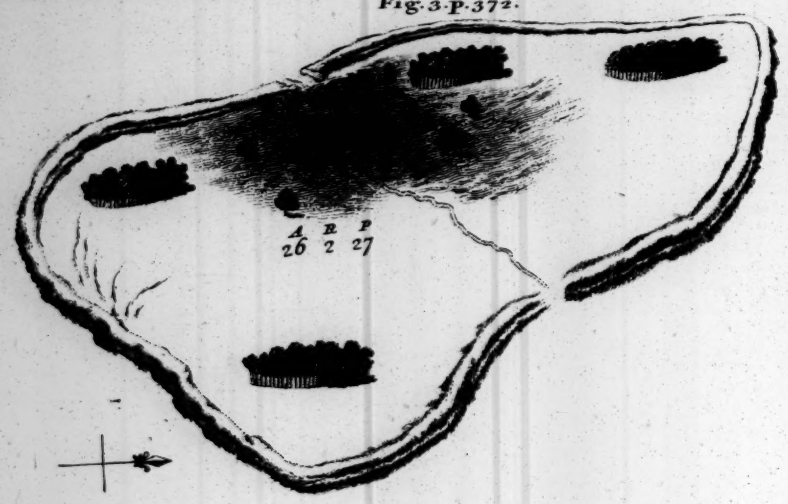


Fig. 1. p. 368.

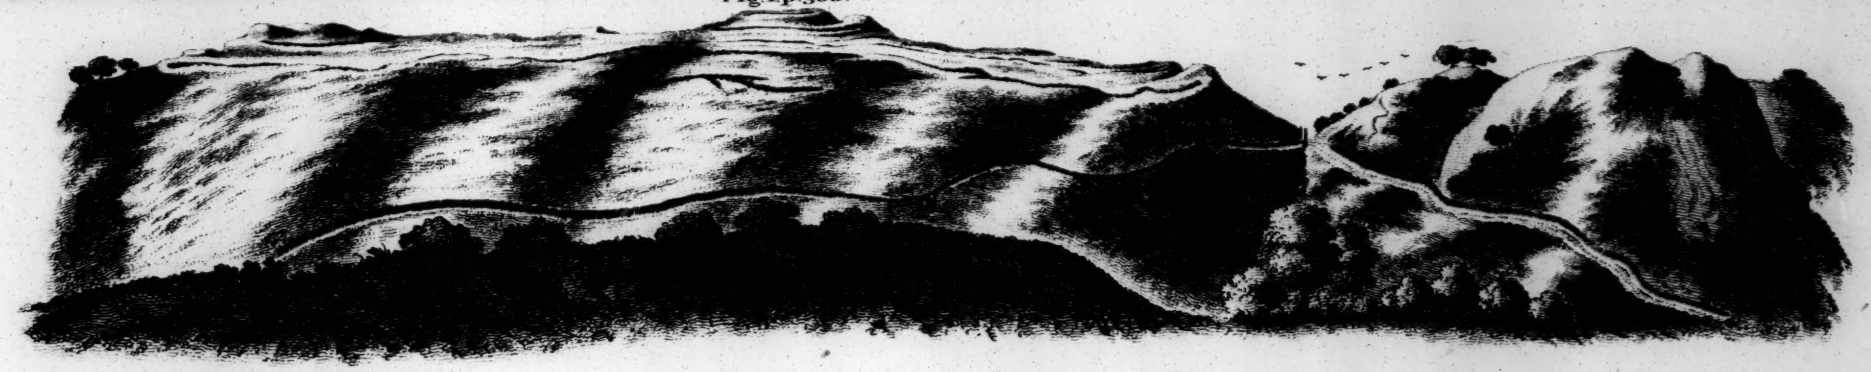

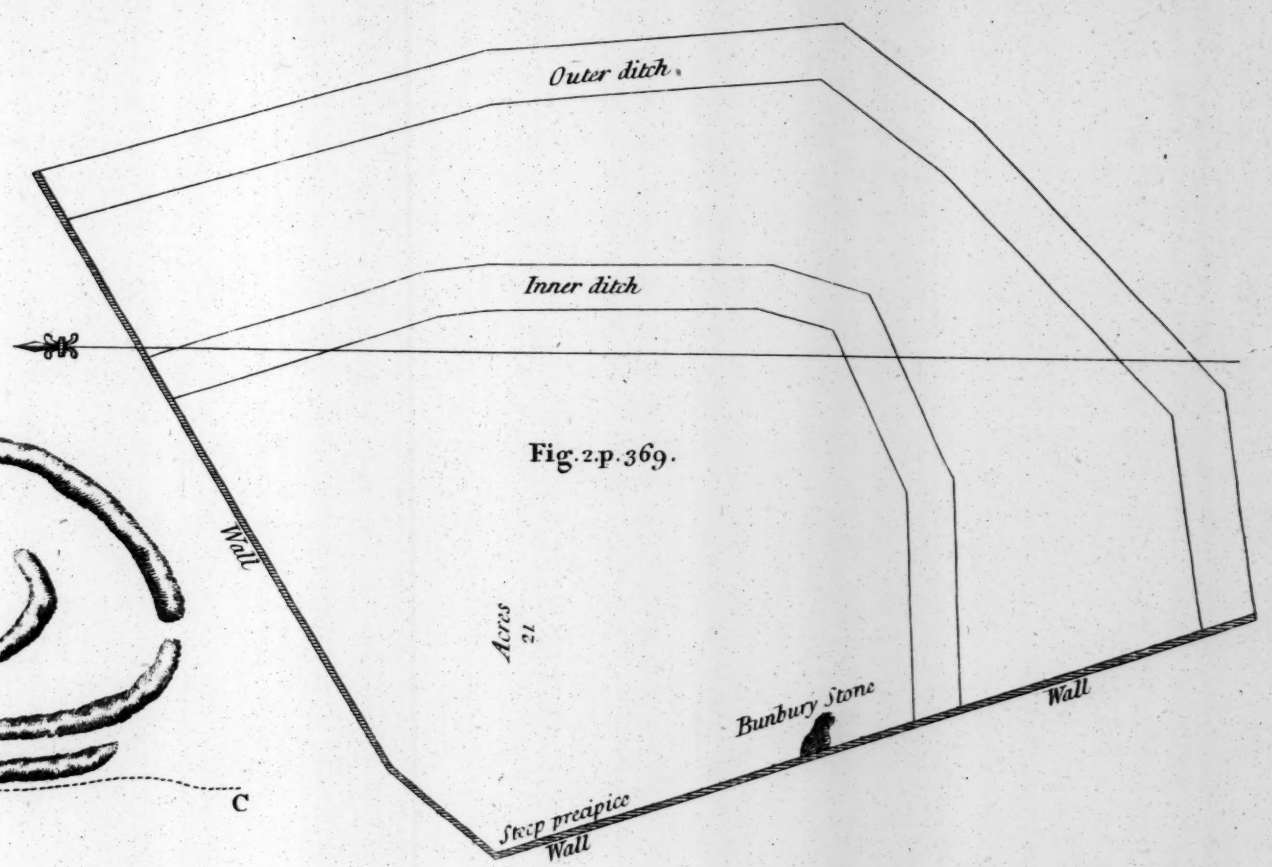

Fig. 2. p. 369.

Scale of 10 Chains or 220 Yards

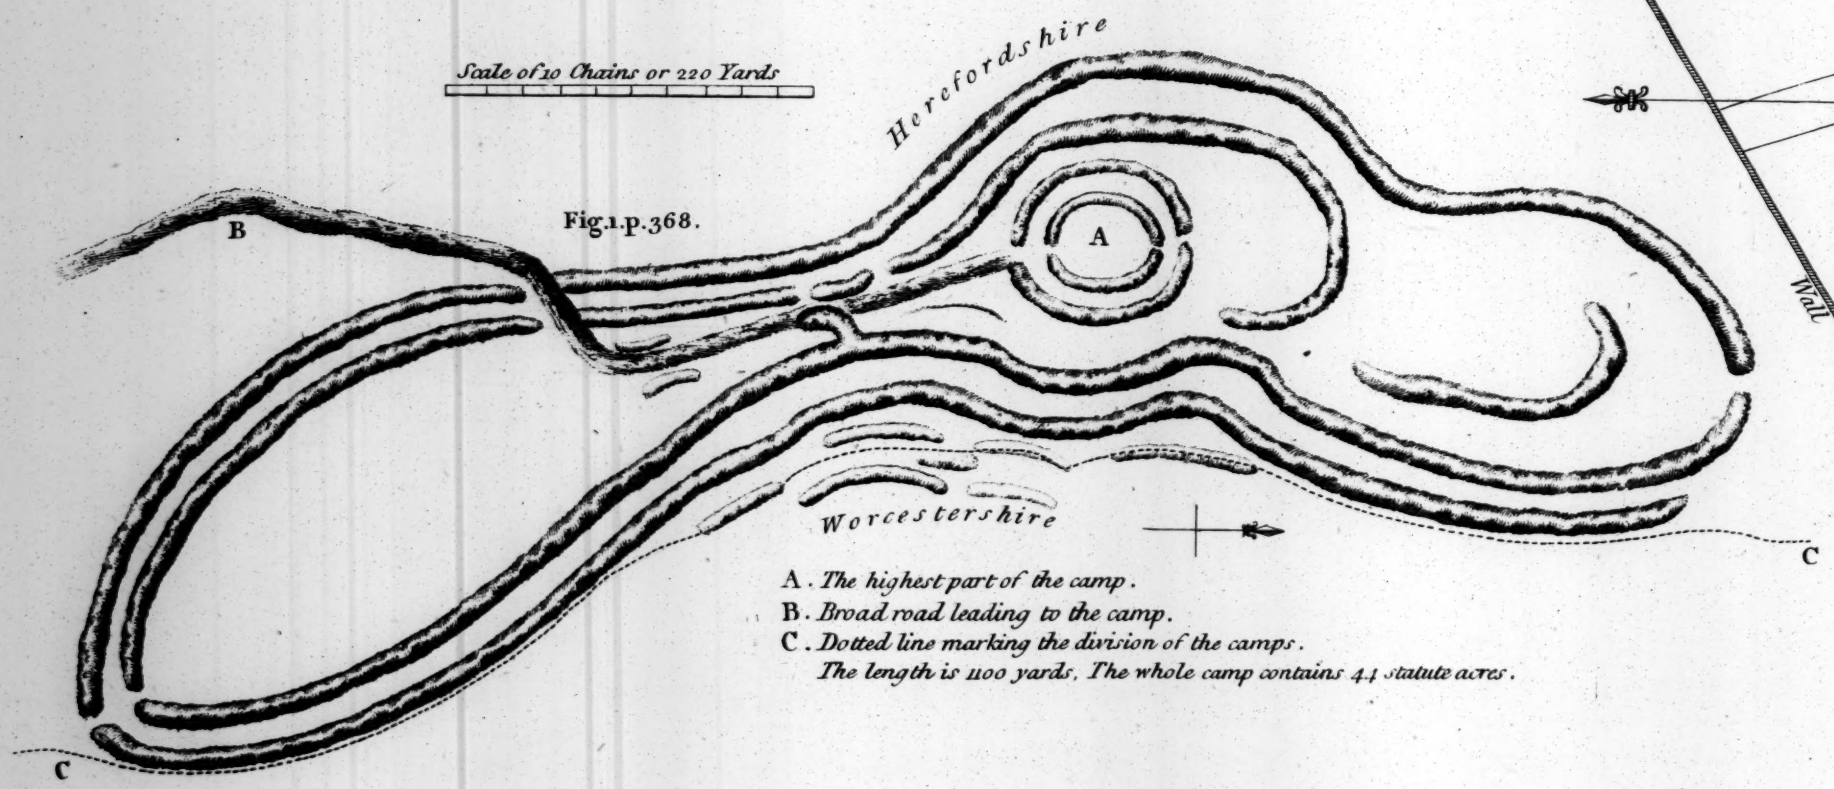

Fig. 1. p. 368.

A. The highest part of the camp.
B. Broad road leading to the camp.
C. Dotted line marking the division of the camps.
The length is 1100 yards. The whole camp contains 4.4 statute acres.

F. Cary sculp.

[h] owners of this caſtel and lay much there. Mr. "Cometon clene defacid it yn his time, being keper "of it after Savage[s]." Hanley caſtle belonged to the Spencers and Mortimers, and in the reign of Henry VIII. to the Comptons[t]. Malvern well is in this pariſh[u].

"Upton ſtands in ripa dextra Sabrinæ on a cluſter "four miles above Theokeſbyri, and here is a bridge "of wood on Sabrine, and a grete ſtable of the "king's, a late occupied for great horſes[x]." A ſtone bridge over the Severn, one arch broke down againſt Oliver. It has a market and charity ſchool, and four fairs. Dr. Stukeley ſuppoſes it the Ypoceſſa of Ravennas[y], and ſays a road went along the Severn from Worceſter to Upton, where antiquities have been dug up, to Tewkſbury, and joined Rickning ſtreet.

Upton gave birth to John Dee, a perſon of extenſive learning, particularly in mathematics, but vain, credulous, and enthuſiaſtic, by turns a dupe, and a cheat. The black ſtone, which he pretended was brought to him by angels, is now in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Walpole. He died very poor at Mortlake, 1608, aged 87.

In Langdon pariſh was Morton caſtle, whoſe keep remains near the chapel yard. It was the ſeat of the Foliots, who gave it their name[z].

Madreſfield has been the ſeat of the Lygons for ſome centuries[a].

At Severn end in this pariſh, is the pleaſant ſeat of the Lechmeres before the time of Edward II. of whom Nicholas, born 1613, died 1701, was baron of the Exchequer at the Revolution, and his grandſon and nameſake created baron Lechmere of Eveſham 1721, which title ended with him 1727.

Notwithſtanding what has been ſaid by Wood in his MSS. now in the Aſhmolean Muſeum, lord Lechmere aſſured Mr. Strype that Bonner was certainly legitimately begotten and born at Hanley of one Bonner an honeſt poor man in a houſe called Bonner's place now belonging to the Lechmeres, and that his lordſhip's great grandfather was intimately acquainted with him, and received favours from him in gratitude for Bonner's receiving ſome from the Lechmeres in his childhood, particularly in their putting him to ſchool[b]."

Hamcourt, the ſeat of the Bromleys, of which family was the chancellor, is by marriage the ſeat of John Martin, eſq; of Overbury, lord of this manor[c].

Ebnley caſtle gave birth to Edmund Bonnor biſhop of Hereford and London, who died in the Marſhalſea 1569. It was given by the Conqueror to William Fitz Oſborn earl of Hereford. His ſon rebelling againſt Richard I. his eſtate remained in the crown[d].

"Bredon, a great ſparkelid uplandiſch toune, "ſtondeth on the lifte ripe of Severne about the "midway betwixt Perſore and Theokeſbyri, and a "great hill called Bredon lyith by the town ſtat "eſte, and almoſt by the botom of it lyith Elmeley "caſtle, as clyving on the hille a two mile from Bredon "town, and under lyith the vale of Eveſham. Dr. "Guente was perſon of Bredon. Peradventure here "was the noble monaſterie of Bredon that Bede "ſpekith of[e]," whence Tatwi archbiſhop of Canterbury came[f], or from Bredon monaſtery near Peterborough[g]. "The ſoile of Bredon ſelf is not woddy. "Bredon longith, and alſo Clive, to the biſhop of "Worceſter[h]." Ethelbald king of Mercia, before A.D. 716, gave this town to his kinſman Eanulf, grandfather to king Offa, to found a monaſtery, which he dedicated to St. Peter. It was united to Worceſter before the Conqueror[i].

"Bredon, a very celebrate chirche and pariſh, "having many villages and hammelettes longing unto "it, but it is now no market town. It ſtondith on the "left ripe of Avon, two miles and a half above "Theokeſbyri. There is a little brook called Suliet "cumming down from Clive and enterith into Avon "at Holme caſtle[k] by the left ripe of it. This at "ſodayne raines is a very wylde brooke, and is fedde "with water faulling from hills therby. There be "three ſtreetes in the towne meeting at the market "croſs. There was no other pariſh church but the "weſt end of the abbey church[l]."

Bredon is one of the moſt valuable rectories of the dioceſe, and in its church lies buried John Prideaux the ſequeſtred biſhop of Worceſter, who died 1650[m].

On Kemerton hill, c. Glouceſter, though only a few yards diſtance from Worceſterſhire, is a large camp of a triangular figure. The north and weſt ſides defended by two ſteep precipices of Bredon hill, the ſouth and eaſt by two ditches, each about 20 yards wide, the area 21 acres ploughed up three years ago, when ſome rude irons were found[n]. See the plan Pl. X. fig. 2. Kemerton hill.

Little Waſhburne lies two miles eaſt from Overbury, and is called Knight's Waſhborne from the knightly family of that name ſettled here before the reign of Edward III. They married in the 15th century into the family of Poher at Wickenford in this county, to which they removed[o]. Little or Knight's Waſhborne. Wickenford.

Charleton is a hamlet of Cropthorn belonging to the Charletons till the reign of Richard II. when it was in Hanſacre, whoſe heireſs conveyed it by marriage to Dineley, but after the murder of ſir John Dineley Goodyere, bart. it was ſold out of the family[p]. Charleton. Cropthorn.

Mathon, and thoſe parts of the county which adjoin to Hereford and Glouceſter, are the moſt famous for producing cyder and perry. The plantations for that purpoſe ought, in Dr. Naſh's opinion, to be leſſened one half or two thirds, whereby much idleneſs and drunkenneſs would be prevented, and more corn raiſed[q]. Mathon.

In Tredington pariſh, which, with ſeveral others now in different counties, made the hundred of Wynboretre in the Saxon times, is Shipſton on Stour, a conſiderable market town, though only a chapelry two miles ſouth from its mother church, but much reduced ſince the decay of the ſhagg manufactory eſtabliſhed here by one Mr. Haſt. The living was one of the moſt valuable in the county, being a peculiar[r]. Tredington. Shipſton on Stour.

In Iccumbe pariſh, on the edge of Glouceſterſhire, is a camp ſuppoſed Daniſh, ſingle ditched[s]. Here are Iccumbe.

[a] Leland, VI. 80. [b] Mag Brit. 228. [c] Naſh, I. 559. [d] Leland Ib. [e] Stukeley Itin. I. 65.
[f] Naſh, II. 109. See before, p. 364. [g] Naſh, II. 117.
[h] Strype's Annals of the Reformation, I. 575. Naſh, II. 386. [i] Naſh, II. 444. 446.
[k] Naſh, I. 381. [l] Lel. VI. 80. [m] Lel. Ib. [n] Tan. 620. [o] See before, I. 269.
[p] Tan. 873. [q] Lel. Ib. [r] Naſh, I. 131, 132. [s] Naſh, II. 234.
[t] Lel. VI. 95. [u] Naſh, II. 233. 459. [x] Ib. II. 171. 173. [y] Naſh, II. 427. 430. [z] Ib. II. 2.

chalybeat and petrifying ſprings, and five ſilk mills. The priory was founded by Gervaiſe Paganel for Benedictines, a cell to Wenlock, valued at £.36. 3s. granted to the Dudleys[t].

It is worthy obſervation, that all the diſmembered parts of this county, except Dudley, were originally church lands. Old Barrow environed by Warwickſhire belonged to Eveſham abbey, and Alderminſter to Perſhore. All the reſt were the lands of the biſhop and church of Worceſter before the diviſion of England into counties; and though ſeveral have been alienated many ages, they are all in Oſwaldſlow hundred, as Oldbarrow is in that of Blackenhurſt, Alderminſter in that of Perſhore; but this laſt abbey was founded ſince the diviſion of ſhires.

Dudley. As for Dudley, the caſtle ſtands in Staffordſhire, but the church and town in this county. The caſtle was relieved by the royaliſts 1642. Before the Conqueſt, Edwin of Mercia had both town and caſtle, which were given to William Fitz Auſculf, from whom by ſeveral hands they came to lord Ward, deſcended from William Ward, jeweller, to Charles I's queen, whoſe wife, by the death of her grandfather, became baroneſs Dudley. Her huſband was created lord Ward of Birmingham, and dying 1697, was ſucceeded by his ſon Edward, and he by his ſon and grandſon, both of the ſame name, and by his great grandſon William, whoſe ſiſter's ſon Ferdinando was the laſt lord Dudley, and died unmarried. The barony of Ward devolved to the male heir of the firſt lord Ward, whoſe deſcendant John was 1763 created viſcount Dudley and Ward, and ſucceeded 1774 by his eldeſt ſon John. Dudley was once a borough, and ſent members to parliament 23 Edward I. Here are two churches, a market, a manufactory of nails and other iron works, and three charity ſchools. The foſſil called the Dudley foſſil found in limeſtone quarries near the town is a petrification of a loſt ſpecies of the monoculus. It appears that above 450 years ago the town and caſtle were under different civil juriſdiction as at preſent, and the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction was ſettled by the pope's mandate between the biſhops of Worceſter and Lichfield according to the limits of the two counties[u].

Blockley. Of theſe diſmembered places one is Blockley, a palace of the biſhops of Worceſter before the Reformation, where they frequently reſided, but now intirely demoliſhed. A hill oppoſite the vicarage retains the name of the Parks[x]. The rev. Mr. Miles of Worceſter had a denarius of Severus, and braſs coins of Criſpus, Etruſcilla, Carauſius, Allectus. The Foſſe-way runs out of Glouceſterſhire through a village in this pariſh called Dorn, which the tradition of the country ſays was once a city, and the many old foundations dug up, with the abundance of Britiſh and Roman coins found here by the huſbandmen, and the lines of the ſtreets ſtill diſcernable are evident marks of its antiquity[y]. Mr. Hughes, attorney at Stretton, c. Warwick, has many Roman coins found at Dorn, which now contains only three farm houſes.

Eveſham. "The town of Eveſham is meetly large, and well "builded with timbre; the marketſted fair and large, "and the market very celebrate. The abbey was of "the foundation of Kenredus king of the Merches, "and Egwinus biſhop of Worceſter. Ther was no "town at Eveſham before the foundation of the "abbey. The place wher the town now ſtandith "was of the old Saxons called Hethholme. Clement "Lichfield, the laſt abbot ſave one, did very much "coſt in building the abbey and other places be-"longing to it. He made a right ſumptuouſe and "high ſquare towre of ſtone in the cemitery, which "had a great bell and a goodlye clock, and was as a "gatehouſe to one part of the abbey. Ther be "within the abbey precinct two pariſh churches. "The vale of Eveſham is as it were for ſuch an angle "the horreum of Worceſterſhire, it is ſo plentiful of "corne. It lieth from the ripe of Avon to the "rootes of Coteſwold hills[z]." The tower mentioned by Leland is a very beautiful regular ſtructure, about 22 feet ſquare, and 117 feet high, and is perhaps the laſt building erected by Popery in England. It ſtill ſerves the original purpoſe of a bell and clock tower. Its date is carved on a wreath on the point of the eaſt arch ſurrounding a pendant anchor, but defaced. The abbey church, which was thrice rebuilt, is now ſo entirely demoliſhed, with all the offices, that no traces remain of its ſite except it is occupied by a ſtone houſe belonging to Mr. Philips, who, digging the foundation of a wall, found a ſkeleton in armour, probably of one of the heroes ſlain in battle, which he left undiſturbed, and built the wall on it. Here were buried Simon Montfort, earl of Leiceſter, and his eldeſt ſon Henry and others of their party ſlain at the battle of Eveſham, fought about a mile north of the town not far from the Alceſter road. The principal gate of the abbey, with rich but mutilated imagery, ſerves as an entrance to the garden of the manſion-houſe. No ſituation can be more luxurious or beautiful than that of this abbey, placed in the centre of a curve formed by the river Avon, and on a regular aſcent from the river. It was valued at £.1183 per annum[a]. There yet remains the track of a great wall extending acroſs the peninſula from one ſide of the river to the other ſeparating the abbey from the town. Here are two churches of St. Laurence and All Saints, and a third at Bengworth. The town is an antient borough enjoying many privileges by preſcription and charter. It was governed by two bailiffs till 3 James I. who at the requeſt of prince Henry granted a new charter for a mayor, ſeven aldermen, twelve capital burgeſſes, a recorder and chamberlain, who are all of the common council, and twenty-four aſſiſtant burgeſſes, and extending their juriſdiction over the adjoining pariſh of Bengworth, with power to try and execute felony within the borough. It ſends two members to parliament, has a bridge of ſeven arches over Avon, and a grammar and charity ſchool. Natives were Lewes Bayly biſhop of Bangor 1616, who died 1637; Major Bernardi who died 1736 after four years impriſonment in Newgate; Elizabeth Elſtob the Saxoniſt born 1683, died 1756; Dr. Hopkins born 1647, died 1711, another Saxoniſt, who communicated much information reſpecting this county to biſhop Gibſon.

In 1697 ſir John Somers was created lord Somers, baron of Eveſham. Having early diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his abilities in the law, he was choſen with other eminent council to plead the cauſe of the biſhops impriſoned by James II. and at the Revolu-

[t] Tan. 497.
[u] Naſh, I. 98.
[x] Lel. IV. 168.
[y] See Ann. Wig. A. D. 1238. Ang. Sac. I. 490. Naſh, I. 258—362.
[z] G. Naſh, I. 101.
[a] Tan. 618. Groſe.

tion was made ſucceſſively Solicitor and Attorney General, lord keeper and lord chancellor of England, being beſides his extraordinary abilities as a lawyer and great knowledge in polite literature, univerſally eſteemed and acknowledged the ableſt ſtateſman of the age [b]. In Severnſtoke church is a monument erected by lord Somers to his father and mother [c].

Near North Littleton on Harrow hill is a medicinal ſpring, good for ſore eyes, yet of a petrifying nature.

At Cleve or Windleſcleve, was an antient monaſtery, dedicated to St. Michael in Offa's time, about 790, but which ſeems to have been annexed to the biſhopric or church of Worceſter before 888 [d].

"There was of old time an abbey at Fleodam "bridge, three miles below Eveſham on Avon ripa "dextra appropriated in Egwin's time to Eveſham. "It is commonly called Fladbury. The parſonage "of Fladbury is now worth £.80 by the yeare [e]." The manor was leaſed to the late baron Perrot. Mr. William Sandys of this place was an ingenious hydrauliſt. William Lloyd rector here and biſhop of St. Aſaph, Lichfield, and Worceſter, was buried here 1717 [f].

Fladbury, antiently Fledenbyrig, had a monaſtery, founded by Oſtfore biſhop of Worceſter about A.D. 691, and belongs ſtill to the ſee of Worceſter [g]. Below it runs into the Avon a little ſtream, at whoſe head is Abberton, where are wells of a bitter purging water, little inferior if not equal to Epſom. It was part of the poſſeſſions of Perſhore abbey, afterwards and ſtill the inheritance of the antient family of Sheldon [h].

Rous Lench, not far from Fladbury, was the ſeat of the Rouſes, a family as antient as Edward II. and who were the chief ſupport of Cromwell's cauſe in this county, by which they were almoſt ruined. Great part of the quadrangle is now pulled down [i].

Perſhore is an antient market town and extenſive pariſh giving name to the hundred [k].

Oſwald, nephew to Etheldred king of Mercia, is ſaid to have founded a religious houſe at Perſhore A.D. 689, firſt of ſeculars then of monks, then ſeculars or nuns; but king Edgar and biſhop Oſwald, A.D. 984, made it a Benedictine monaſtery, valued at £.643. per ann. Egelward was ſo great a benefactor as to be accounted founder by ſome authors [l]. Only the eaſt end of the church remains with a rebus of abbot Newton 1434: and a private houſe called the abbey houſe.

About four miles north-weſt of Perſhore adjoining to Woodborough is Abbots wood or Naſh's plantations. The eſtate and manor were purchaſed about 1720 by Richard Naſh, eſq. and conſiſt of 220 acres, laid out in regular rides and walks. About 50,000 timber trees have been planted, of which about 30,000 are growing. It is now the property of the rev. Dr. Naſh who has incloſed and finiſhed the plantation [m].

Near it is Aleſborough, which gave title of baron to ſir Thomas Coventry lord keeper 1628, but when the family were made earls, and a new entail created this title was omitted [n].

At Stowton was born 1657, the learned William Derham rector of Upminſter, Eſſex, author of ſeveral Philoſophical pieces, who died 1735. Stowton.

The family of Ruſſel of Strenſham ended with ſir Francis 1705, who built and endowed here an hoſpital for ſix poor widows, as did his widow a charity ſchool [11]. One of his daughters married Dr. Richard Naſh, who left two ſhares of the eſtate to his brother Dr. Treadway Naſh, who purchaſed the third 1775 [o]. Strenſham.

At Strenſham was born 1612 Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras, the character of whom was drawn from ſir Samuel Luke, an Oliverian, with whom he lived. He died 1680, and was buried in Covent garden church.

Spelman thought he found Auſtin's oak at Auſric, a village bordering on Herefordſhire, which, as he explains Bede [p] and Henry of Huntingdon [q] lies in the confines of the Wiccii and Weſt Saxons, and may be a contraction of Auſtinſric, b. d. Auſtin's territory [r]. But not to mention that the true name of this village in writings is Aulfric and Alfredeſwic, he makes Herefordſhire a province of the Weſt Saxons, and probably the oak was a tree and not a village in any age. Tomkins's letter in Fulman's collections at Corpus Chriſti college, Oxford, places it at a pariſh called the Rock,: but this borders on Shropſhire, and is too remote from the Weſt Saxon kingdom. Bede, the only writer who mentions this congreſs within 400 years of the fact, does not ſay it was in Wiccia, but on the confines of the Wiccians and Weſt Saxons, on which laſt Worceſterſhire no where borders; ſo that if it ſtood in Wiccia it muſt have been in that part of Glouceſterſhire which bounds the county of Wilts and Somerſet, provinces of the Weſt Saxons [12], perhaps near Tutbury [s]. Hammond places it at Oſſentree [t]. The iſſue of the meeting was not only as fruitleſs as Mr. Camden repreſents, but followed by the maſſacre of the Britans and their biſhops in the true ſpirit of popery, becauſe they would not admit innovations on pure original Chriſtianity. Mr. Carte by miſtake ſays Mr. Camden in Glouceſterſhire puts the place near Auſtclive on the Severn [u]. There was an old oak at Ack called the Apoſtles oak [x]. Auſtin's oak.

The river Teme watering the north-weſt part of the county, takes its courſe through rich meadows into the Severn, the banks on both ſides producing plenty of excellent cyder and hops. On the edge of Shropſhire it gives name to Tembury, vulgarly Tenbury, a ſmall but well frequented market town, and having three fairs. This town with moſt of the lands between Teme and Herefordſhire was held by Robert Fitz Richard lord of Richard's caſtle, whoſe ſon Hugh marrying Euſtathia de Say a great heireſs, their iſſue took the name of Say. Theſe lands by Margaret an heir female came in the reign of John to Robert Mortimer, and the iſſue male of his family failing t. Edward I. they were divided between two daughters; the elder married Geofrey de Cornwall, and part of the eſtate continues in their poſſeſſion; but the reſt has often changed its lords [13]. Teme r. Tenbury.

a G. Naſh, I. 346. 418.
b Tan. 620.
c Tan. 617.
d Mag. Brit. 242. Naſh, I. 243—253.
e Ib II. 345.
f Lel. IV. 169.
g Naſh, I. 444—454. h G. Hopkins. Naſh, I. 6.
i Ib. 84.
k Tan. 616.
l G.
m Naſh, II. 249.
n Ib. II. 249.
o Naſh, II. 391.
p II. 2.
q III. 325.
r Conc. I. 107.
s Naſh, II. 315.
t Smith in Bed. II. 2. u Carte I. 224.
x Naſh, I. 10
12 G.
13 G.

Dr.

Dr. Nash[y] gives a different account of the antient proprietors. The church of St. Mary de Cormeille in France held it at the making of Domesday of the gift of earl William, probably Fitz Osborne earl of Hereford, whose son Robert forfeited it by conspiring against king John. The king gave it to Robert de Mortimer, as part of the dower of his wife, daughter of Hugh de Saye. The Cliffords held it from about this period to the reign of Henry V. or VI. It came through several purchasers to sir Thomas Cornwall nephew of Edward Cornwall baron of Burford and lord Clifford.

Woodbury hill.

About seven miles below Tembury the Tame runs under Woodbury hill, in Great Witley parish, on which is an old camp called Owen Glendowr's, but probably of more antient date. It is single trenched, and the area within the ditch contains near 27 acres[z]. This hill is distant from Walsal camp in Kidderminstre parish, about eight miles, and from Kenvar edge about eleven. These stations seem too far distant from the armies of Glendwr and Henry IV. to have much incommoded one another, but the advanced guard might probably approach the Severn on each side, and skirmish for eight days, there being killed on both sides about 200 men, when the king followed the Welsh, who with their French auxiliaries having plundered Worcester retreated into Wales 1405, and Henry after an unsuccessful expedition into the mountains returned to Worcester. The march of Glendwr and his French auxiliaries is thus traced by Monstrelet. The French landed at Hareford [Haverford], marched to Toury [Tenby], and through the Pais de Linterguie [perhaps the district of Lacharn or rather Glamorganshire.] The king lay on Abberley hill about a mile of Woodbury[a]. Hence runs a continued ridge of hills almost to the Severn, which seems to have been the boundary of the Wiccian province. At the foot of Woodbury hill, which is nine miles from Worcester, stands

Great Witley.

Great Witley, a fair new-built house, the chief seat of the Foleys, who bought it of the Russels, to whom it came in the reign of Henry VII. by marriage with one of the coheirs of Cassy, who had married the heir general of the Cokesey its more antient lords[14].

The present church was built by the first lord Foley and Mary his widow, for whom a handsome monument has been erected in it: the windows painted by Price 1719, and the cieling by Verrio, were brought from the chapel at Canons when that magnificent mansion of the duke of Chandos was sold by piece-meal. The Foley family were raised within four generations by an extensive trade conducted on the fairest principles to a height of opulence, crowned by nobility in the fourth generation, in the seventh how changed[b]!

Lindridge.

In Lindridge somewhat east of Tenbury, was Lowe, the seat of an antient family of that name from the reign of Henry III. who after losing all their other possessions, continued to enjoy this their original estate, at last reduced to a single farm, down to the beginning of this century, when their last lineal descendant in the male line Arthur, dying 1724, without issue male, it passed to his two grandaughters, of whom Elizabeth brought it the rev. William Cleiveland, M. A. of Worcester, of the same antient family with the poet of that name[c].

In the adjoining parish of Mamble is Sodington, the seat of the Blounts, burnt in the civil wars, moated round, and approached by four draw-bridges[d].

Under the west side of Woodbury hill lies Shelsley Beauchamp, so called from the Beauchamps of Holt who held it, and over against it Shelsley Walsh, where lived sir Richard Walsh, the famous sheriff of this county at the time of the Powder Plot, and very active in apprehending the conspirators, whom he pursued into Staffordshire, and took them there[e]. Sir William Walsh was the person who apprehended Wolsey, who submitted to him without a warrant as a gentleman of the bedchamber[f]. On the east side of the hill now all together called Abberley hill, and near its tops stands Abberley lodge, the seat of another branch of the antient family of the Walshes, descended from sir Henry le Walsh, knt. in the reign of Henry III, which branch ended in William Walsh, esq. a writer, master of the horse to queen Anne, and the friend of Pope, who died unmarried 1707, and left only sisters[g].

In Ack or Rock an adjoining parish in the middle of a thick wood is a very uncommon tree, the Sorbus sativa pyriformis, or Quick Pear, described by Mr. Pitt in the Philosophical Transactions, N° 139, p. 978. and Dr. Nash, I. p. 11.

A little lower in Clifton parish stood Hamme castle, the seat of the antient family of Jefferys for above 200 years, now of sir Edward Winnington, bart. It was damaged by fire 1605, and destroyed in the civil wars. Mr. Jefferys found a treasure here in a vault in an iron chest 1649 in the middle of a half moon. Hence by Martley belonging to the Mortimers now to the Foleys[h], Teme passes under Cotheridge, a manor of the Berkleys, formerly of the Actons, and before that belonging to the Mortimers and Says[i].

On the opposite bank is Leigh a manor of viscount Hereford, now of sir Charles Cocks, bart.[k] Hence the river hasting to Powick falls into the Severn.

To Sheldon Beauchamp adjoins Stanford, the seat of sir Edward Winnington, bart. whose ancestor had it by marriage with the heiress of Salway. Near the old church was a hermitage called Sourhstone, on a steep ascent in the bosom of great hills. Within the rock are some rooms hewn out of the hard stone. On the top was a chapel dedicated to St. John Baptist, on whose festival was a solemn offering in the chapel, after which the people went and drank at a place well known for curing many disorders[l]. The offering bason with its singular inscription is engraved in Dr. Nash's book, II. 366. and has been paralleled with another in the Gentleman's Magazine.

Kyre near Tenbury has been the seat of the Pytts for three centuries. Mr. Habingdon says the park "is adorned with so many tall and mighty oaks as "scarce any ground in England within that quantity "of acres can shew so many." Several now standing are thought to be coeval with the first inclosure of the park[m]. Great quantities of wild saffron grow in the parish, but it is no where met with in this neighbourhood[n].

[y] II. 412. [z] See Pennant's Wales I. 355. [a] Nash, II. 465, 466. Pennant's Wales, I. 351. [14] G.
[b] Nash, II. 464. [c] Ib. II. 92. [d] Ib. II. 159.
[e] See Nash, II. 349. [f] Ib. [g] G. Nash, I. 3. [h] Ib. II. 167.
[i] G. Nash, I. 258. [k] Ib. II. 74. [l] Ib. 366. [m] Ib. II. 70. [n] Ib. 72.

At Wolverley north of Kidderminſter and on the edge of the county was born 1706, John Baſkerville. This extraordinary man was originally a ſtonecutter at Birmingham, which profeſſion he changed for that of a ſchoolmaſter. He diſcovered the method of japanning now purſued to ſo much advantage by Mr. Clay, of the ſame place: and, laſt of all, invented and caſt a new type, and opened his preſs with an edition of Virgil. By this occupation he acquired a fortune of 10 or 12,000*l.* which he left to his widow, who ſold the ſtock ſoon after her huſband's death, and now lives on her fortune in a handſome houſe which he built at the upper end of the new town. She was the widow of a perſon who having been guilty of ſome fraudulent practices in regard to a relation's will, was obliged to quit the kingdom, having firſt made over his property to an attorney at Birmingham, who after his return refuſed to reſign it. His ſon reduced to drive waggons for his livelihood, by the aſſiſtance and ſupport of Mr. Baſkerville (to whom his mother retired, and who afterwards married her) recovered his eſtate, and made a handſome proviſion for his two ſiſters. Mr. Baſkerville died Jan. 8, 1775; and, agreeably to the ſingularity of his opinions, was buried under a windmill in his garden, on whoſe top after it fell into diſuſe he had erected an urn. His types have been purchaſed in France, and are now employed in a ſplendid edition of Voltaire's works.

Earls of Worceſter.

Earls of Worceſter before the Conqueſt called here Subreguli, were Oſric, to whom king Ethelred, A. D. 681, gave lands in Glouceſter[o]. Huctred, dux Wicciorum, A. D. 756, and his brother Eanbert and Uhtred about A. D. 778[p].

Edward Somerſet earl of Worceſter died 1627, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry, created marquis of Worceſter 18 Charles I. and dying 1647 was ſucceeded by his ſon Edward. He 1667 by his ſon Henry[q], who was created duke of Beaufort 34 Charles II. (the title of marquis being enjoyed by the eldeſt ſon), and died 1699. He was ſucceeded by his grandſon Henry (eldeſt ſon of his ſecond ſon Charles), who died 1714, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry. He dying 1745-6 without iſſue was ſucceeded by his only brother Charles Noel, and he 1756 by his ſon Henry 5th and preſent duke.

[o] Dugd. Bar. I. 2. Mon. I. 107. [p] Ib. ex eod. [q] Dugd. Bar. II. 295.

Rare Plants found in Worceſterſhire.

Anagallis arvenſis β. Blue Pimpernell: in a corn field at the top of Overbury wood, and on Bredon hill.

Aſtragalus arenareus. Mountain Milk Vetch; on the ſide of Bredon hill, below the camp.

Campanula patula. Spreading Bell Flower; in hedges by wood ſides, near Worceſter, Malvern, and elſewhere.

Cardamine amara. Bitter Creſs, or Bitter Ladies Smock; ——— hirſuta. Hairy Ladies Smock; } on the banks of the Avon, below Comberton, plentifully.

Carduus eriophorus. Woolly-headed Thiſtle; on Bredon hill.

Chlora perfoliata. Perfoliate Yellow Gentian: in paſtures of a ſtiff clay ſoil; about Great Comberton, and elſewhere.

Colchicum autumnale. Autumnal Meadow Saffron: in paſtures and low meadows, frequent about Great Comberton, Great Malvern, Kyre, and elſewhere.

Comarum paluſtre. Purple Marſh Cinquefoil; on boggy places: on the Licky near Bromſgrove.

Cynogloſſum officinale β. var. (fol. virenti). Green-leaved Hound's Tongue; near the three mile ſtone going from Worceſter to Perſhore.

Daphne Laureola. Spurge Laurel; in woods and hedges near Perſhore.

Dianthus Armeria. Deptford Pink; on banks, under hedges in a clay ſoil, about Perſhore, Eckington, Great Comberton, and elſewhere.

Feſtuca pinnata. Spiked Feſcue Graſs; in meadows of a clay ſoil, about Comberton and Perſhore, plentifully.

Fumaria claviculata. White Climbing Fumitory; in rough ſtoney places: by the ſide of Malvern hill above Great Malvern town.

Galanthus Nivalis. Snowdrop; at the foot of Malvern hills.

Geranium pratenſe. Meadow Cranes-bill, with a large blue flower; in moiſt meadows, and among buſhes.

Hippocrepis comoſa. Tufted Horſe-ſhoe Vetch; on the ſouth ſide of Bredon hills below the camp.

Hyoſeris minima. Swines Succory; in Penſham field near Perſhore; in barren and gravelly places.

Hypericum montanum. Mountain St. John's Wort; on banks, under hedges, and by wood ſides: about Perſhore and Breedon hill.

Hypochæris glabra. Smooth Hypochæris; in Penſham field.

Iberis nudicaulis. Rock Creſs; in ſome old gravel pits by the ſide of Penſham field.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; plentifully on that ſide of Bredon hill in the aſcent from Great Comberton.

Iris fœtidiſſima. Stinking Iris or Gladwyn: in woods; about Great Comberton and elſewhere in the neighbourhood of Perſhore.

——— Xiphium. Blue flowered Iris or Flower de Luce; by the ſides of rivers near Fladbury, and ſome other places in this county; lately diſcovered to be a native of England by the Ducheſs of Portland. Dr. Naſh's Hiſt. of Worceſterſhire.

Lathyrus Nyſſolia. Crimſon Graſs Vetch; ——— ſylveſtris. Narrow leaved Peaſe Everlaſting; } on banks, by the ſides of woods between Perſhore and Cokington.

Malva moſchata. Muſk Mallow; in moiſt meadows among buſhes.

Meliſſa Calamintha. Wood Calamint; in woods and hedges near Malvern, and elſewhere.

Oenanthe Crocata. Hemlock Dropwort; by the ſides of rivers and ditches.

——— pimpinelloides. Water Dropwort with Burnet ſaxifrage leaves: by the ſides of rills; on the north ſide of Bredon hill.

Ophris Apifera. Bee Orchis: in rough paſtures of a clay ſoil; on the ſide of Great Comberton towards Woolerſhill, frequent.

Oſmunda Lunaria. Moonwort; on the north ſide of Bredon hill in many places, but particularly above Woolerſhill in rough grounds among the Pteris Aquilina.

Paris quadrifolia. Herb Paris True Love, or One-berry; in woods and thickets on the ſides of Bredon hill.

Parnaſſia paluſtris. Graſs of Parnaſſus: in ſome low boggy meadows on the ſouth ſide of Bredon hill, and eaſtward of Overbury.

Satyrium viride. Frog Orchis; in meadows and paſtures about Great Comberton towards Woolerſhill, frequent.

Scabioſa columbaria. Leſſer field Scabious; on Bredon hill.

Sedum album. White Stone Crop; on the rocks by the ſide of Malvern hill above Malvern town.

Scirpus romanus. Single headed Club-ruſh; in marſhy places near Throgmorton.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders; between Comberton and Woolerſhill; under ſome hedges of ſome incloſures near the Avon.

Spiræa Filipendula. Dropwort; on Bredon hills above Overbury, plentifully.

Vaccinium Oxycocus. Cranberries; in the boggy parts of the Lickey near Bromeſgrove.

Vicia ſylvatica. Striated Wood Vetch; in a thicket on the north ſide of Bredon hill.

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS.
1 Totmanslow
2 Pyrehill
3 Cudleston
4 Offelow
5 Seasdon
A MAP
OF STAFFORDSHIRE
FROM THE BEST
AUTHORITIES
Engraved by I.Cary.
CHESHIRE
DERBYSHIRE
STAFFORDSHIRE
To Buxton
Road from Buxton to Derby
To Manchester
Dane Riv.
LONGNOR
LEEK
ASHBORN
UTTOXETER
STONE
NEWCASTLE under Lyne
CHEADLE
DRAYTON
Trent R.
Dove R.

WARWICKSHIRE.

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

Longitude West 35 from London 40 45

WORCESTER SH.

SHROP SHI.

STAFFORD SHIRE

to London to Birmingham to Kiddermin.

From Bridgenorth

River Severn

Cannock Chase

Needwood Forest

Bromley Park

Beggars Park

Dyrley Park

Hagley Park

Hamstall Ridware Park

Weston Park

Patshull Park

Tettenhall Wood

Kinver Edge

Wombourn Park

Himley Park

Sedgley Park

Dudley Castle

Aldridge

Sutton Coldfield

Wednesbury

Walsall

Darlaston

Bilston

Wolverhampton

Willenhall

Wednesfield

Tettenhall

Penkridge

Brewood

Stafford

Eccleshall

Lichfield

Tamworth

Burton

Uttoxeter

Rugeley

Cannock

Rugeley

Penkridge

Stone

Newport

Drayton

Market Drayton

Wellington

Bridgnorth

Kidderminster

Stourbridge

Halesowen

Birmingham

Coleshill

Tamworth

Lichfield

Burton

Uttoxeter

Ashbourne

Dove

Trent

Tame

Blythe

Anker

Sow

Penk

Stour

Severn

Worfe

Meese

Roden

Tern

Perry

Rea

Hatherton

Chillington

Patshull

Tettenhall

Wightwick

Bushbury

Barr Beacon

Sandwell

Hamstead

Perry Barr

Handsworth

Aston

Duddeston

Deritend

Bordesley

Edgbaston

Harborne

Smethwick

Oldbury

Halesowen

Dudley

Swinford

Old Swinford

Stourbridge

Kinver

Enville

Kinfare

Shatterford

Bobbington

Himley

Wombourn

Trescott

Pattingham

Patshull

Weston

Shareshill

Brewood

Penkridge

Teddesley

Hatherton

Acton Trussel

Wheaton Aston

Bednall

Coppenhall

Gayton

Milwich

Standon

Eccleshall

Sandon

Chebsey

Ellenhall

Ranton

Haughton

Castle Church

Stafford

Forebridge

Baswich

Walton

Creswell

Colwich

Great Haywood

Shugborough

Tixall

Ingestre

Weston

Stowe

Hopton

Coton

Milford

Great Bridgford

Rugeley

Brereton

Armitage

Handsacre

Longdon

Whittington

Elmhurst

Lynn

Packington

Canwell

Drayton Bassett

Fazeley

Hints

Wishaw

Middleton

Sutton Park

Erdington

Castle Bromwich

Water Orton

Curdworth

Minworth

Sheldon

Yardley

Solihull

Knowle

Hampton in Arden

Meriden

Berkswell

Balsall

Packwood

Temple Balsall

Hockley

Ashow

Baginton

Stoneleigh

Kenilworth

Leamington

Warwick

Hatton

Wroxall

Shrewley

Haseley

Beaudesert

Henley in Arden

Wootton Wawen

Alcester

Bidford

Broom

Salford

Pebworth

Long Marston

Welford

Binton

Bidford

Alcester

Ragley

Arrow

Studley

Astwood

Feckenham

Redditch

Bromsgrove

Alvechurch

Hagley

Clent

Romsley

Halesowen

Frankley

Northfield

Kings Norton

Moseley

Harborne

Edgbaston

Aston

Handsworth

Smethwick

Oldbury

Rowley

Tipton

Sedgley

Wednesbury

Darlaston

Willenhall

Wednesfield

Bushbury

Tettenhall

Codsall

Pattingham

Bobbington

Himley

Kinver

Enville

Kinfare

Shatterford

Kiddermin.

Bridgnorth

Quatford

Morfe

Claverley

Worfield

Ackleton

Albrighton

Shifnal

Cosford

Boscobel

Whiteladies

Brewood

Penkridge

Teddesley

Hatherton

Cannock

Rugeley

Colwich

Great Haywood

Shugborough

Tixall

Ingestre

Weston

Stowe

Hopton

Coton

Milford

Great Bridgford

S

TH E
is whose in of Englan bounded fouth by ning in a broadeſt
The nort middle r covered and mead coal and advantag bitants.

In thi caſtle fir Dodo, a him. In ſurvey[b], wards it ſir Richa the Some title of family.
is Chellin antient a the time
Giffard, queror c Ireland. woman, called E corruptl nence is prebend hall of Daniſh
now W
Lady of market riſing a and ma Baſſet, one Tu formed from a Wiccomb Draitor married and die

The which Saxon ſo ſitua of it

[b] Hiſt

STAFFORDSHIRE.

THE third part of the country of the Cornavii is now called Staffordſhire, Staꝺꝼoꝛꝺſcyꝛe, whoſe inhabitants from inhabiting the midland parts of England, are called by Bede[a] the Midland Angles; bounded on the eaſt by Warwick and Derby, on the ſouth by Worceſter, on the weſt by Shropſhire, running in an irregular oval form from ſouth to weſt, broadeſt in the middle, and narrower at the ends. The north part is mountainous and unpleaſant, the middle rendered more agreeable by the river Trent, covered with woods and diverſified with cornfields and meadows: as is the ſouth, which has alſo pit coal and iron mines; whether to its advantage or diſadvantage can beſt be determined by the inhabitants.

In this ſouth part, near Worceſterſhire, Dudley caſtle firſt exalts its head. It was built by Dudo, or Dodo, a Saxon, about A. D. 700, and called after him. In the time of William I. as appears by his ſurvey[b], William Fitz Auſculph poſſeſſed it. Afterwards it came to the family of Somery, till at length ſir Richard Sutton had it with his wife the heireſs of the Somerys, whoſe poſterity from that time had the title of barons Dudley, and became an illuſtrious family. The next remarkable place in theſe parts is Chellington, the beautiful houſe and manor of the antient and famous family of the Giffards, which, in the time of Henry II. Peter Corbuchin gave to Peter Giffard, to whom alſo Richard Strongbow the conqueror of Ireland gave Tachmelin, and other places in Ireland. Vulfrunes hampton, from Vulfruna a devout woman, who built a monaſtery in the town before called Hampton, whence for Vulfrunes-hampton it is corruptly called Wolverhampton. Its greateſt eminence is owing to its college annexed to the dean and prebendaries of Windſor. Theoten-hall, q. d. the hall of nations or pagans, now Tetnall, dyed with Daniſh blood 911 by Edward the elder. Weadeſburg, now Weddſborow, antiently fortified by Æthelfleda, Lady of the Mercians: and Walſall, no inconſiderable market town. Near this laſt glides the river Tame, riſing a few miles off in the eaſt edge of this county, and making towards Trent, it wanders near Drailon Baſſet, the ſeat of the Baſſets, who, ſpringing from one Turſtin, lord of this place in the time of Henry I. formed a numerous and illuſtrious family. Hence, as from a common ſtock, came the Baſſets of Welleden, Wiccomb, Sapcot, Chedle, and others. Of theſe at Drailon the laſt was Ralph, a famous baron, who married the ſiſter of John Montfort, duke of Bretagne, and died without iſſue t. Richard II.

The Tame, paſſing the bridge at Falkeſley, over which runs the antient Roman road, waſhes Tamworth, Saxon Tamaꝛeoꝛꝺ, called by Marianus Tamawordina, ſo ſituate on the edge of the counties that that part of it which belonged to the Marmions is in Warwickſhire, the other belonging to the Haſtings in this county. It has its name from the Tame which runs by it, and the Saxon word Weoꝛꝺ, which ſignifies both a court or eſtate, and a river-iſland, or place furrounded with water, as Keyſers-weort, and Bomel's weort, in Germany ſignify Cæſar's and Bomel's iſland. In the time of the Mercians this was a royal village, and, as we find in the book of Worceſter, "a very famous place." Being afterwards ruined in the Daniſh wars, it was rebuilt by Ethelfleda the Mercian; and Editha, daughter of king Edgar, who, conceiving an averſion to marriage, was for her reputation for chaſtity inrolled among the ſaints, built here a ſmall nunnery, which, a few years after, the Marmions, a Norman family, to whom William the Conqueror gave this town, tranſferred to Poleſworth, having there erected a collegiate church, in which are ſome of their tombs, and an elegant caſtle which came from them by the Frevilles to the Ferrars family, deſcended from a younger brother of the barons Ferrars of Groby. Hiſtory informs us that theſe Marmions were hereditary champions to the king of England. For, as often as a new king of England was crowned, the heir of this family was bound to come on horſeback, armed at all points, into the king's palace, and give a ſet challenge to all that dared call the king's right in queſtion. Certain it is we find in the public records that Alexander Frevill under Edward III. held this caſtle by this ſervice*. But the Frevilles loſt their honour at the coronation of Richard II. and the family of Dimoc in Lincolnſhire obtained it by marriage †.

To return. At Falkeſley bridge before-mentioned, the Roman military way ſo often ſpoken, and of which more hereafter, enters this county, and croſſing it almoſt in a ſtrait line, runs weſt into Shropſhire. I have ſurveyed it with particular atttention to find ETOCETUM the next ſtation in Antoninus after Manduеſſedum, and I have now by good luck found it, and acknowledge myſelf to have been totally wide of it before. For, at the ſame diſtance which Antoninus makes between Manduеſſedum and Etocetum, I ſtumbled upon the ruins of a ſmall antient city by the road ſide, ſcarce a mile to the ſouth from Lichfeld a famous epiſcopal ſee. The common name of the place now is Wall, from the pieces of walls remaining there, and including about two acres called Caſtle Croft, q. d. Caſtle field, to which the antient city is ſaid to have adjoined on the other ſide the road deſtroyed before the Conqueſt according to the old tradition of the inhabitants. They ſhew a place where, by the great foundations, they ſuppoſe ſtood a temple, and produce the moſt certain evidences of its antiquity and Roman coins. But the ſtrongeſt proof is the military way running from hence with a fair bold and uninterrupted ridge till it comes to

ETOCETUM.

Wall.

[a] Hiſt. Ecc. IV. 3.

* Inq. 2 E. III.

† See in Lincolnſhire, p. 268.

[b] Fol. 177. a.

the

Penck r. PENNOCRUCIUM.

the river Penck, which has a ſtone bridge at PENNOCRUCIUM, which takes its name from the river at the ſame diſtance laid down by Antoninus. Nor has it yet loſt its name, being called inſtead of Pennocrucium Penkridge, though now only a ſmall village famous for its horſe fair obtained of of king Edward II. by Henry Blunt [c], or Flavus. Nothing more occurs remarkable on this road in this county, except near Weſton, a clear and large lake; thence it runs ſtrait on to Oken-yate, in Shropſhire.

Penkridge.

Weſton.

I come now to the middle part of the county, which is watered by the Trent, in deſcribing which I ſhall follow the courſe and windings of the river from its ſource.

Trent r.

The Trent, which juſtly ranks as the third river in England, riſes in the upper part of this county towards the weſt from two ſprings cloſe to each other. Some unſkilful pretenders to learning derive it from the French word Trente, and pretend that 30 rivers run into it, and that as many ſorts of fiſh are found it, whoſe names the inhabitants rehearſe in Engliſh rhyme: nor do they ſcruple to aſcribe to it what the Hungarians do to their Teiſs, that it is two parts water and one part fiſh. From its ſource it runs ſouth firſt with many windings not far from New Caſtle under Lyme, ſo called in reſpect to an older caſtle antiently ſituated near it at Cheſterton under Lyme, where I ſaw many walls of a half ruined caſtle, which at firſt, by the gift of king John, belonged to Ralph earl of Cheſter, afterwards by favour of king Henry III. to the houſe of Lancaſter. Thence by Trentham, antiently Tricingham, a ſmall religious foundation of that holy and royal virgin Werburga, it haſtens to Stone, a market town, which ſprung up in the Saxon times, and took its name from the ſtones which our anceſtors in a ſolemn manner piled up to mark the place where Wulpher the pagan king of Mercia cruelly murdered his ſons Wulfold and Rufinus for embracing Chriſtianity. In this place poſterity having erected a ſmall church in memory of them, a town ſoon grew up, which, according to the Hiſtory of Peterborough, took the name of Stone from thoſe ſtones. After this Trent gently glides by Sandon, once the ſeat of the illuſtrious knights Staffords, but lately the eſtate of the celebrated Sampſon Erdeſwick, an eminent encourager of venerable antiquity, and no leſs conſiderable on this account than for his deſcent by the male line from Hugh de Vernon, baron of Shipbroc, changing the name with the reſidence, firſt to Holgrave, and afterwards to Erdeſwicke.

New Caſtle under Lyme.

Cheſterton under Lyme.

Trentham.

Stone.

Sandon.

Names varied with reſidence.

Trent at this place turns eaſt, and on the ſouth leaves Canoc, commonly called Cank wood, of great extent, and then receives on the left the river Sow, which riſes near Healy, a caſtle built by the barons Aldeleigh, or Awdlege, to whom Hervey de Stafford gave this place, as Theobald de Verdun did Aldelegh itſelf, and from them deſcended the family of the Stanleys earls of Derby; but the eſtate and the name went to the Touchetts, in whoſe deſcendants and name that dignity ſtill ſhines. Nor muſt I here forget the houſe called Gerard's Bromley, both for its magnificence and for its being the principal reſidence of Thomas Gerard, created by king James in the firſt year of his reign baron Gerard of Gerard's Bromley.

Cank wood.

Sow r.

Healy caſtle.

Barons Audley.

Gerard's Bromley.

The Sow runs parallel and equidiſtant to the Trent by Chebſey, which had antiently its own lords the Haſtings; and not far from Eccleſhall the ſeat of the biſhop of Lichfield; and Ellenhall, formerly the reſidence of the famous family of the Noels, who here founded a monaſtery at Raunton, and from whom it came by inheritance to the Harcourts of antient Norman nobility, who lived long here in great ſplendor. Of the male line of the Noëls Andrew Noël of Dalby an illuſtrious knight, the Noëls of Welleſborow, in the county of Leiceſter, and others, are ſtill living. From thence the Sow paſſes by Stafford, antiently Statford, but firſt by Betheney, where Berthelin formerly led the life of a hermit with the reputation of great ſanctity *. Edward the elder built a caſtle on the north bank of the river, A. D. 914. When William the Conqueror took a ſurvey of England, it appears by it [d] that "the king "had in this town 18 burgeſſes in demeſne, and 20 [e] "manſions of the honor of the earls. It paid for "all cuſtoms £. 9. libras denariorum in money;" and in the ſame book [f], "the king ordered a caſtle to be "built which is now deſtroyed." Then as well as now it was the head of the whole county, but derives its greateſt glory from the adjoining caſtle of Stafford, which the barons Stafford built for their reſidence. Under it the little river Penk joins the Sow, giving name to the antient city Pennocrucium before-mentioned. Near the confluence of the Sow and Trent ſtands Ticks hall, the ſeat of the family of Aſton, of great eminence in theſe parts for its antiquity and alliances.

Trent having received theſe waters gently croſſes the county eaſtward, in ſight of Chartley caſtle about two miles from its left bank, which came from Ranulph earl of Cheſter, who brought it to the Ferrars by his ſiſter Agnes, who was married to William de Ferrars earl of Derby, from whom ſprung the lords Ferrars of Chartley, and Anne daughter of the laſt brought this honour as it were in dower to her huſband Walter D'Eureux, from whom Robert D'Eureux earl of Eſſex, and lord Ferrars of Chartley are deſcended. Almoſt at the ſame diſtance from the right bank ſtands pleaſantly among the woods Beaudeſert, once the ſeat of the biſhops of Lichfield, afterwards of the barons Paget: for William Paget, who, for his conſummate prudence both at home and abroad, was in great favour with Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and obtained large eſtates, was created by Edward VI. baron Paget of Beaudeſert. His grandſon William, the 4th baron, is now living, who, by his virtue and literary accompliſhments, is a great ornament to his family, and on this account deſerves the higheſt encomiums.

We come next to LICHFIELD, ſcarce four miles from this ſide of the Trent, called by Bede Licidfeld [g], which Roſs of Warwick tranſlates the field of carcaſes, and ſays that many Chriſtians there ſuffered martyrdom under Diocleſian. The city ſtands low, but is tolerably large and neat, divided into two parts by a pool of clear water of no great depth; but theſe two parts are united by two banks with vents [h] under them. The ſouth or hither part is much the largeſt, conſiſting of ſeveral ſtreets, with a ſchool, and a tolerably large hoſpital of St. John for the relief of the [c] Blond.

[d] Fol. 246. a.
[e] 22.
[f] Quære.
[g] Lyccidfelth. Hiſt. Eccl. IV. 3. Licitfelo, Alfred.
[h] emiſſaria, arches of ſtone for the water to iſſue into the ſecond poole. Lel.

* Capgrave.

poor. The further part is leſs, but remarkable for a moſt noble church ſurrounded by a fair wall like a caſtle, incircled with very handſome houſes of prebends and the biſhop's palace. It has three beautiful and lofty ſtone ſpires, and was for many ages paſt the ſeat of a biſhop. For A. D. 606[i] Oſwi, king of Northumberland, having defeated the pagan Mercians, for the better propagating the Chriſtian religion founded a church here, and appointed Duina[k] firſt biſhop, whoſe ſucceſſors found that favour with their princes as not only to take precedence of all the Mercian biſhops, and had the moſt conſiderable revenues, being endowed with the great wood called Cank or Canoc, and other lage eſtates; but it had alſo an archbiſhop Eadulphus, to whom pope Adrian gave the pall, ſubjecting to him all the biſhops of the Mercians and Eaſt Angles, being prevailed on with golden arguments by Offa king of Mercia, out of pique to Icambert or Lambert archbiſhop of Canterbury, who offered his aſſiſtance to Charlemagne if he would invade England. But this archiepiſcopal dignity expired with Offa and Eadulphus. The moſt famous of the biſhops was Ceadda, canonized for his ſanctity, who, as Bede[l] ſays, before luxury had infected the biſhops, "made himſelf a lodge not far from the church, where privately with a few, about ſeven or eight brethren, "when he had time to ſpare from labour and the "miniſtry of the word he uſed to read and pray." At that time Lichfeld "was a ſmall village, far inferior in populouſneſs to a city. The country round "about it woody, a ſmall rivulet running near it. The "church ſtood in a confined place expreſſive of the "humility and temperance of the antients[m]." When the council in 1075 ordained that epiſcopal ſees ſhould no longer remain in obſcure towns, Peter, biſhop of Licedfeld, transferred his ſee to Cheſter. But his ſucceſſor Robert de Limſey removed it to Coventry. Soon after Roger Clinton brought it back to Lichfeld, and began a moſt beautiful church A. D. 1148, in honour of the Virgin Mary and St. Cead, and repaired the caſtle now utterly deſtroyed and vaniſhed. The town was firſt incorporated in the laſt age by Edward VI. by the name of bailiffs and burgeſſes. It ſtands in latitude 52° 42″, and in longitude 21° 20′.

This pool at Lichfield being at firſt confined within its banks, and then ſpreading itſelf and again collecting its waters into a channel, continues its courſe eaſt till it meets the Tame from the ſouth with which the Trent joining directs its courſe northward through grounds yielding plenty of alabaſter in order to receive the Dove, and almoſt ſurrounds Burton, a town famous for its alabaſter works, a caſtle of the Ferrars', an antient monaſtery founded by Ulfric Spot earl of Mercia, and once remarkable for the retreat of Modwena or Mowenna an Iriſh woman. Of this monaſtery we have the following account in the book of Abingdon. "A ſervant of king Ethelred, named Ultric Spot, built "the abbey at Burton, and gave it all his paternal "eſtate worth £.700. and that the ratification of "this gift might ſtand, he gave king Ethelred 300 "mancs of gold for his confirmation, to each biſhop "5 mancs, and to Alfric archbiſhop of Canterbury "over and above the town of Dumbleton." From hence alone we may learn that there was a golden age then, and that gold was not without its weight in religious tranſactions. In this monaſtery Modwena, whoſe ſanctity was renowned in theſe parts, was buried, with theſe lines on her tomb by way of epitaph:

Ortum Modwennæ dat Hibernia, Scotia finem,
Anglia dat tumulum, dat Deus aſtra poli.
Prima dedit vitam, ſed mortem terra ſecunda,
Et terram terræ tertia terra dedit.
Aufert Lanfortin quam terra Conallea prefert,
Felix Burtonium virginis oſſa tenet.

Ireland gave Modwen birth, England a grave,
As Scotland death, and God her ſoul ſhall ſave,
The firſt land life, the ſecond death did give,
The third in earth her earthly part receive;
Lanfortin takes whom Connel's* country owns,
And happy Burton holds the virgin's bones.

*Tir Connel.

Near this between the roads Dove, Trent, and Blithe (which laſt waters and gives name to Blithfeld, a handſome houſe of the antient and famous family of the Bagotts), Needwood, a ſpacious foreſt and full of parks, extends itſelf, in which the neighbouring nobility eagerly purſued the chearful ſport of hunting. So much for the midland part of the county. Blithfield. Needwood foreſt.

The north part riſes gently in ſmall hills, which beginning here run through the heart of England like the Apennines in Italy in a continued ridge, riſing gradually higher and higher into Scotland under different names; ſometimes as here under that of Moorland, then Peake, then Blackſtone edge, then Craven, then Stanmore, and then parting into two horns are called Cheviot. This Moreland, ſo named becauſe it riſes into hills and mountains, and is barren like the places we call Moores, is a rough dreary cold tract, the ſnow lying long on it; and the neighbours have this rhyme of a country village hereabouts called Wotton under Wever hill, as if God had never viſited the place: Moorland.

Wotton under Wever
Where God came never.

The people here obſerve that the weſt wind always brings rain, but the eaſt and ſouth, which in other places are rainy winds, make fair weather here, unleſs the wind turns about from the weſt to the ſouth; and this they aſcribe to its nearneſs to the Iriſh channel. From theſe mountains riſe many of the rivers of this county, the principal of which are the Dove, Hanſe, Churnet, Teyn, Blith, and Trent, which laſt receives all of them, and conveys them to the ſea. The Dove, whoſe banks are formed of a ſolid chalk, which being burnt to lime is uſed for manure, glides ſwiftly on the eaſt edge of the county for the moſt part, ſeparating it from Derbyſhire with a clayey channel without any muddy bed through a ſoil of that kind of chalk here called limeſtone, whence it derives ſuch a fertilizing quality that in the midſt of winter the meads on each ſide wear a moſt agreeable aſpect[n], and if it overflows its banks, and floods the meadows in April it fertilizes them like another Nile, ſo that the inhabitants gratefully of it ſay, Dover.

In April Dove's flood
Is worth a king's good.

[i] 636. Whart. Ang. Sac. I. 423. Godw. 307.
[k] Dwina or Diuma. Wharton, Godwin.
[l] ubi ſup. [m] Malmeſb. de geſtis pontif. IV. p. 164. a.
[n] Plot, p. 106. aſcribes it to the ſheep's dung. See Drayton's Poly Olbion.

This river riſes ſo high in twelve hours time as to carry off ſheep and cattle to the great alarm of the inhabitants, but in as many hours abates and keeps itſelf within its banks: while the Trent when once it riſes and overflows its banks remains upon the country four or five days. But to return to the Hanſe r. rivers that fall into it. The firſt is the Hans, which ſinks into the ground, and after three miles riſes

Churnet r. again. Afterwards it receives the river Churnett

Dolacres ab. flowing by the monaſtery of De-la-Cres, founded by Leike. Ranulph third of that name earl of Cheſter, Leike a Aulton. conſiderable market town, and Aulton antiently the caſtle of the barons Verdon, from whom it came by the Furnivalls to the Talbots earls of Shrewſbury.

Tein. r. The little river Tein falls ſomewhat lower into the Cheddle. Dove, which riſing not far from Cheddle, the antient ſeat of the Baſſets, deſcended from the Baſſets of Draiton, winds away in ſo many meanders that I croſſed it four times in a mile. Near this in the Checkley. church-yard at Checkley ſtand three ſtones like pyramids, two of them adorned with figures, but the middlemoſt is higheſt. The inhabitants ſay here was fought a battle between two armies, one armed, the other not, and that three biſhops fell in it, in memory of whom theſe ſtones were erected. The hiſtorical truth concealed under this tradition I have not yet been able to trace.

Uttoxeter. The Dove runs hence under a ſtout ſtone bridge under Utceſter, Saxon Vttok-ceaten, ſtanding on a gently riſing hill, rather rich in flowery meads and cattle than handſomely built. I once thought this Etocetum. place might be Etocetum, amuſed by miſtaken conjecture from the name till I had been on the ſpot; but time has now better informed me. Afterwards as the Dove gets nearer Trent it comes in ſight of Tutbury c. Tutbury, formerly a very large caſtle called alſo Stuteſbury, as it were overawing the country below from its alabaſter hill. It was built together with a ſmall monaſtery by Henry de Ferrars a noble Norman, to whom William I. gave fine eſtates in this county, all which were forfeited by Robert de Ferrars earl of Derby on his ſecond revolt from Henry III. For though after the many diſturbances he had raiſed in the barons' wars, he had made his peace with the king, and ſworn in the moſt ſolemn manner to continue in his allegiance, this reſtleſs ſpirit ſoon after, as if reſolved to force that fortune which he could not turn, took up arms againſt his ſovereign, and being afterwards made priſoner, "according to the tenor of his obligation" as the record expreſſes it, ſuffered the loſs of his fortune and dignity. Here is ſomewhere in this county, if Neckham* does not miſinform us, a lake into which no beaſt will on any terms enter; but as both the place and the fact are uncertain, I ſhall only inſert Neckham's verſes, intituled, De lacu in Staffordia.

Rugitu lacus eſt eventus præco futuri,
Cujus aquis fera ſe credere nulla ſolet.
Inſtet odora canum virtus, mors inſtet acerba,
Non tamen intrabit exagitata lacum.

On a lake in Staffordſhire.

There is a lake of moſt prophetic roar,
No beaſt will change its waters for its ſhore:
Nor eager hounds nor inſtant death compel
To truſt the lake whoſe pow'r is known ſo well.

Of another lake in this county Gervaſe of Tilbury writes thus in his Otia Imperialia addreſſed to the emperor Otho IV. "In the biſhopric of Coventry "and county of Stafford, at the foot of a mountain "called by the natives Mahull, there is a water extended like a lake in the territory of the village "called Magdalea. The water of this lake, which "is ſkirted by almoſt endleſs woods, has ſuch an "invigorating virtue that as often as the huntſmen "tire their horſes in hunting down deer or other "game, if in the greateſt heat they but taſte this "water or give it to their horſes, they recover their "ſtrength as if they had never been ſpent."

The title of Stafford has continued to our time in the family of Robert de Stafford, whom William the Norman loaded with eſtates; a family of high renown and antiquity, but ſubject to many revolutions of fortune, having been firſt barons, afterwards earls Stafford, then dukes of Buckingham and earls of Stafford. Now by a fate peculiar to themſelves they have returned to the original rank of barons, the large eſtates they acquired by honourable matches are almoſt vaniſhed, and in their room has ſucceeded a more pleaſing ſecurity which ſeldom reſides with proſperity in the dwellings of the noble.

In this county are 130 pariſhes.

* In libro de laud. divinæ Sapientiæ.

ADDI-

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Stafford is in length 62 miles, in breadth 33, in circumference 180, containing 18 market towns, and 150 pariſhes. The Trent divides it into the north-eaſt and ſouth-weſt parts, the former of which is ſubdivided into the Moorlands and Woodlands. Two Roman roads run through it. Watling ſtreet enters it from Warwick at Faſeley bridge near Tamworth, and croſſes the county a little way from Lichfield into Shropſhire, and Ikenield ſtreet entering at Stretton near Tutbury goes by Burton and Lichfield into Warwickſhire near Handſworth.

On the partition of the kingdom between Edmund Ironſide and Canute, this county as part of Mercia fell to the latter. The Conqueror divided the large poſſeſſions of the Mercian earls here [a] between four of his partizans, Hugh de Montgomery earl of Arundel, Robert de Stafford, Henry de Ferrars, and William Fitz Auſculph, which laſt poſſeſſed twenty-five manors in this county. The other landholders beſides the king were the biſhop of Cheſter, the abbies of Weſtminſter and Burton, the church of Rheims, the canons of Stafford and Wolverhampton, earl Roger, &c. [b] Robert de Beleſme, earl of Shrewſbury, ravaged this county in favour of Curthoſe in the reign of Henry I. In the late civil war this county aſſociated in favour of the Parliament [c].

Dr. Plot ſpeaks of a breed of ſheep with four horns in the parks of Gnoſall, Blore, Ingeſtre, and Knightley [d]. Sir Simon Degge ſays they came all firſt out of the duke of Newcaſtle's park at Blore. The ſheep in the north parts of Staffordſhire have not only black noſes but black faces, and are for the moſt part horned, whoſe fleſh for goodneſs much exceeds a whitefaced ſheep, approaching nearer veniſon, and the lean of it very red [e].

Sir Simon Degge [f] obſerves the names of Ralph and Randal have been little uſed in this county among the gentry. Antiently Hugh was a great name among them, by reaſon of the earls of Cheſter of that name, who had great eſtates in the neighbouring county; but in the middle age the name of Robert was ſo much uſed here that there was hardly an antient family but had ſome of the name, ſeveral of the lords and earls of Stafford giving reputation to it; but ſince that time Walter has carried the bell, by reaſon of Walter viſcount Hereford and after Walter earl of Eſſex, who were men of the greateſt power and eſtate in this county.

Trent riſes in the Morelands near Biddulph out of Newpool and two ſprings near Moorcop. At this place it is an inconſiderable ſtream, but becomes navigable at Burton, and after flowing through this county, which it divides almoſt equally, thoſe of Derby, Nottingham and Lincoln, falls into the Humber [g]. In Gent. Mag. vol. XXX. p. 65, it is ſuggeſted that the Roman name of this river might have implied that it was the third river in Britain.

After the river Dove divides Staffordſhire and the Peak country of Derbyſhire, there is great difference; Derbyſhire being for many miles excellent lime-ſtone hills, and the other ſide of the river in Staffordſhire rotten, beggarly, black ground [h].

Staffordſhire Clogg.

The original calendar of the Norwegians and Danes ſtill obtains in this county by the name of the Staffordſhire Clogg, which evidently ſignifies no more than a ſtick or piece of wood, as in Worceſterſhire and other neighbouring counties the Yule Clogg is a large ſocial log of wood laid on the fire at Chriſtmas time. This almanack is a ſquare piece of wood, box, fir, or oak, containing three months on each of the four edges. The number of days in them are expreſſed by notches; the firſt day by a notch with a patulous ſtroke turned up from it, and every 7th by a large ſized notch. Overagainſt many of the notches are placed on the left hand ſeveral marks or ſymbols denoting the golden number or cycle of the moon: if under 5 by ſo many points, but if 5 by a hooked line drawn from the notch repreſenting the antient ſigle of v. If the golden number be above 5 and under 10 the hooked line or v has one or more points; and a ſtroke croſſes it for 10: when above 5, the points are continued over the v; and when 19 the line is croſſed by two ſtrokes anſwering to 20. The feſtivals are marked by ſymbols of the ſeveral ſaints iſſuing from the notches [i]. The inſtrument engraved by Olaus Wormius in his Faſti Danici, II. c. 2. p. 87. is hexagonal, and has an intermixture of Runic letters. He gives another c. 3. p. 90. flat, but divided into ſix columns, beſides other varieties. A ſimilar one, but ruder, was found in a caſtle in Bretagne [k] with two ſides in ſix diviſions. We have in Plate XI. engraved one ſomewhat different from Plot's, with an explanation of the ſymbols.

Dudley caſtle.

"Dudley caſtle, hard on the borders of Wyrceſtre-"ſhire, but the caſtle itſelf ſtandith yn Stafordſhir [l]." It is an antient extenſive building, on a beautifully-wooded rock of lime-ſtone, out of which its trenches are hewn, and has an extenſive proſpect into five ſhires and part of Wales. In the reign of Stephen it belonged to the Paganels, whoſe heireſs brought it to the Somerys t. Henry III. and they to the Suttons t. Edward II. Roger de Somery refuſing to appear when ſummoned to receive the honor of knighthood 17 Henry III. the king ſeized the honor as it was then called of Dudley [m]. The Suttons are deſcended from thoſe of Nottingham, and by marriage with an heireſs of Somery ſucceeded, t. Edward II. to their

[a] The earls of Mercland. Selden, Titles of Honor, p. 678. This is the honor comitum in Domeſday, f. 246. a.
[b] Domeſd. fol. 246. a. [c] Mag. Brit. V. 1. [d] P. 257. [e] Degge MS. note on Plot, 109.
[f] MS. n. Degge in a copy of Plot's Nat. Hiſt. of Staffordſhire in the library of Trinity college, Cambridge.
[g] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, p. 49. [h] Degge MS. n. Plott, 135.
[i] Plot, p. 420. Pl. XXXV. [k] Hiſt. de l'acad. des Inſc. vol. V. p. 364.
[l] Leland, It. VII. 26. 36. [m] Madox, Hiſt. of the Exchcq. 354.

barony of Dudley[n]. They were firſt ſummoned to parliament t. Henry VI.[o] John lord Dudley, a weak neceſſitous man, parted with this caſtle to John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, ſon of Henry VII's extortioner, who was ſaid to have been ſon of a carpenter of this place, educated by the abbot of Lewes, for whom his father worked, and placed at one of the inns of court, and made ſolicitor to the monaſtery, in which office his abilities recommended him to the king. The duke much improved and enlarged this caſtle, but forfeiting it by oppoſing Mary's acceſſion to the crown, that queen granted it to ſir Edward Sutton, ſon and heir of that lord Dudley from whom he had obtained it. Frances the heireſs of his grandſon ſir Ferdinando Sutton, ſon and heir of the laſt lord Dudley, brought it to the Wards, being married to Humble ſon of William Ward, jeweller to Charles I. He was created lord Ward of Birmingham 1643, and died 1670, and their ſon ſucceeded to the titles of Ward and that of Dudley 1701. His grandſon William, lord Dudley and Ward, 5th lord, dying unmarried 1740, the title of Dudley devolved to his ſiſter's great-grandſon Ferdinand Lea, who dying unmarried 1757, the barony of Dudley is now in abeyance. The title of Ward went to the iſſue of the third ſon of Humble firſt lord[p]. John was created viſcount Dudley and Ward of Dudley 1763, and dying 1774, was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon and nameſake. The caſtle ſtood a ſiege of three weeks againſt the Parliament 1644. The wall and gate are in Worceſterſhire. St. Edmund's church, demoliſhed in the civil wars 1646 by its nearneſs to the caſtle, contained the monuments of the Suttons and Dudleys[q]. Here was a Cluniac priory, founded by Gervaſe Painell before 1161, valued at £. 36. 3s.[r]

Pattingham.

At Pattingham, the eſtate of the earls of Cheſter and the Baſſets, was found, 1700, a large torquis of gold 3lb. 2 oz. weight, about two feet long, curiouſly twiſted, and wreathed with two hooks at each end cut even but not twiſted. The metal was fine and bright, and ſo flexible that it would wrap round the hat or arm, and eaſily extend again to its own ſhape which reſembled the bow of a kettle[s]. In the circumſtance of reſembling the bow or handle of a kettle it correſponds with the gold inſtruments found in Ireland[t].

King's Swinford.

King's Swinford is remarkable for what befel a profane ſwearer, 1677, who, imprecating the divine vengeance on himſelf, had his limbs rotted off, &c. &c. which by miſtake was before ſaid to have happened at Old Swinford c. Worceſter. On Aſhwood heath in this pariſh is a large Roman camp, 140 paces over, commonly called Wolverhampton churchyard. At Barrow hill are two barrows[u].

Wolverhampton.

"Ullerhampton, a very good market town. In "it is a free ſchole made by ſyr Stephane Jen- "ning, maire of London 1505, the college of Win- "deſor give the prebendes of Wulnerhampton, and "the deane of Wyndeſor is deane there[x]."

Hampton was a large pariſh, including 17 large villages, with only three ſmall chapels, till Wulfruna, or her brother king Edgar 996, founded here a college of ſecular canons[y]. The famous Petrus Bleſenſis, who was dean, ſurrendered it 1200 into the hands of Hubert archbiſhop of Canterbury, in order to his founding a Ciſtertian abbey; but this failing, the deanry of Wolverhampton with the collation of the prebendaries was united to that of Windſor by Edward IV. and ſo continued till the diſſolution, after which Mary refounded it, and James I. confirmed her act, and made the celebrated archbiſhop of Spalatro dean of Windſor and Wolverhampton. So it ſtill continues, but the colleges are diſtinct. It is now a curacy, with four chapels in the gift of the dean and chapter of Windſor[z]. A new church was built here under the ſanction of an act of parliament, and conſecrated 26th June 1760. It is called the chapel of St. John in Wolverhampton, and the preſentation is in the earl of Stamford. Henry III. granted this town a market and fair. It ſtands on high ground, and is famous for its lockſmiths.

At Wednesfield A.D. 911, Edward the elder defeated the Danes in a pitched battle, in which two of their kings, two earls, and nine other chiefs were ſlain. A barrow remains in South Low field, but that in North Low field is levelled[a].

"Tetenhaul, a village and a college about a myle "from Wulnerhampton[b]." Here was a collegiate church, founded before the Conqueſt, which had a dean and five[c] prebends till the diſſolution. Here Edward the elder defeated the Danes in a pitched battle 907, as Hoveden[d], 911, as Huntingdon[e], and others.

In the pariſh of Tettenhall is Wightwick, a village formerly the ſeat and ſtill the property of a family which takes its name from it. To the preſent poſſeſſor John Wightwick, eſq; his friend and kinſman the editor is much obliged for many particulars relative to this county.

At Wrotteſley, an adjoining village, are veſtiges of a city, with ſtreets running in different directions. Hinges, a dagger, and prodigious large ſquared ſtones have been dug up within its circuit, which is three or four miles. Dr. Plot thought it a Britiſh work[f] and the only one in the county: for as to Wilbrighton, nine or ten miles from Wrotteſley, though in a high ſituation it ſhews no traces of fortification. He afterwards, however, altered his opinion, and ſuppoſed it the true remains of the old Theoten haul of the Danes[g]. That the Romans had ſome action hereabouts ſeems however proboble from a Roman work at Morton ſouth of it, and he queſtions not but the large meer juſt below had the name of Aqualat, q. d. Aqua lata, from them and the bank on the N. N. E. ſide that of Anc's hills, from ſome Roman captain of the name of Ancus. Not to mention that all theſe are in or near the pariſh of Forton, which as well as a village not far off called Warton, is ſuppoſed to derive the name from ſome action thereabouts[h]. Dr. Salmon[i] more probably ſuppoſes it Roman, and here he places Urioconium. One of the ſtones dug up here, Dr. Plot ſays, made 100 loads; another, after 10 loads were ſtruck off it, required 36 yoke [n] Dugd. Bar. II. 214.

[o] Holland.
[p] See before, p. 369.
[q] Naſh's Worc. I. 361. where ſee an account of the monuments.
[r] Tan. 497.
[s] G. Mag. Brit. V. 43. Dr. Leigh, p. 64. Of the torques, ſee Wales, in Merionethſhire.
[t] Archæol. II. 40.
[u] G. Plot, 406. Mag. Brit. 46, 35.
[x] Lel. VII. 36.
[y] Mag. Brit. 33. Tan. 490.
[z] Ecton, 84.
[a] Plot, 415.
[b] Lel. Ib.
[c] not four, as Tan. 493.
[d] P. 242, 2.
[e] P. 203. b.
[f] P. 394. G.
[g] 415.
[h] Ib. 395.
[i] P. 522.

		St Giles.
		Nativitas Virginis.
		Exaltatio Crucis.
		St Matthew.
		St Michael. A pair of Stocks.
		Translatio Edwardi Confessoris.
		St Luke.
		St Crispin. A pair of Shoes.
		St Simon and St Jude.
		All Saints.
		All Souls.
		St Leonard.
		St Martin.
		St Edmund
		St Thomas.
		St Katherine. A Wheel.
		St Andrew.
		St Nicholas
		Conceptio Virginis.
		St Lucy.
		St Thomas. A Spear.
		Christmas day
		St Stephen.

barony of Dudley[a]. They were [illegible] parliament 1. Henry VI.[b] John lord Dudley necessitous man, served with this [illegible] ley, duke of Northumberland, [illegible] fortioner, who was said to have [illegible] of this place; educated by the [illegible] whom his father worked, and [illegible] of the inns of court, and made solicitor [illegible] office his abilities recommended [illegible]. The duke much improved [illegible] forfeitings [illegible] crown, that [illegible] ion and heir of [illegible] obtained it. [illegible] Ferdinando Baron, [illegible] Dudley, brought it to the Wards, being married to Humble son of William Ward, jeweller to Charles I. He was created lord Ward of Birmingham 1643, and died 1670, and their son succeeded to the titles of Ward and lord Dudley. [illegible] grandson William, lord Dudley and Ward of Dudley 1763, dying unmarried [illegible] to his father's [illegible] unmarried [illegible] abeyance. The [illegible] of Ward went to the nine of the [illegible] Humble first lord [illegible]. John was created viscount Dudley and Ward of Dudley 1763; and dying 1774, was succeeded by his eldest son and namesake. The castle stood a siege of three days against the Parliament 1644. The walls and [illegible] are in Worcestershire. St. Edmund's church, demolished in the civil wars 1646 by its governor [illegible] castle, contained the monuments of the Somervile and Dudleys[c]. Here was a Cluniac priory, [illegible] Gervase Powell before 1168, valued at [illegible].

Pattingham. At Pattingham, the estate of the earls of Chester and the Bishops, was found, 1700, a large torquis of gold 3lb. 4oz. weight, about two feet long, curiously twisted, and wreathed with two hooks at each end cut even, but not twisted. The metal was fine and bright, and so flexible that it would wrap round the bar or arm and easily extend again to its own shape, which resembled the bow of a kettle[d]. In the circumstance of resembling the bow of a kettle, in the manner it corresponds with the gold bullæ[e] found in Ireland[f].

King's Swinford. King's Swinford is remarkable for [illegible] profane swearer, 1677, who, imprecating the divine vengeance on himself, had his limbs [illegible] &c. which he within was before said to have [illegible] paired at Old Swinford[g]. Worcester. On Afford heath in this parish is a large Roman camp, 140 paces over, commonly called Weiwood-burch-yard. At Barrow hill are two barrows[h].

Wolverhampton. "Ulfrhampton, a very good market town. In "it is a free schole made by Sr. Stephane Jen- "ning, maire of London 1505, the college of Win- "desor give the prebendes of Wulfrichampton, and "the deane of Wyndesor is deane there[i]."

Hampton was a large parish, including [illegible] villages, with only three small chapels, in W. [illegible] [illegible] Edgar 996, founded here a [illegible]

[illegible] Nash's Worc. [illegible]
[illegible] Dr. Leigh, p. 64. [illegible]
[illegible] G. Mag. 1787. V. 1. [illegible] G. Plot. 3
[illegible] Archæol. II. 46. [illegible] Mag. II.
[illegible] Led. VII. 36.
[illegible] Led. ib.
[illegible] P. 142. 2.
[illegible] 415.

[illegible] Tan. 1
[illegible] Plot. 315

New years day. a Ring. in fese volvitur Annus.	17 May 1	A Green Branch for May Day.	35 Sept.r 1 S.t Gyles.
Epiphany. a Star.	18 3	Inventio Sanctæ Crucis.	36 8 Nativitas Virginis.
S.t Hilary. a Bishop's Crosse.	19 19	S.t Dunstan. A pair of Tongs.	37 14 Exaltatio Crucis.
an Axe or Hatchet. S.t Paul was beheaded.			38 21 S.t Matthew.
An Heart. All y.e 6 Feasts of y.e B. Virgin have this Symbol or Hieroglyphick, the Purification is Feb. 2.	20 June 11	S.t Barnabas A Rake. Hay time comes in.	39 29 S.t Michael. A pair of Scales.
S.t Blase. B. y.e initial Letter of his name.	21 24	A Sword. S.t John, who was beheaded in prison	40 Oct.r 13 Translatio Edwardi Confesoris,
A True Love Knot. S.t Valentine.	22 29	S.t Peter. with his 2 Keys.	41 18 S.t Luke.
A Leg. S.t Matthias.	23 July 2	Visitatio Mariæ.	42 25 S.t Crispin A pair of Shoes,
A Leek. S.t David.	24 7	S.t Thomas Becket. a T. cryst. his Translation.	43 28 S.t Simon and S.t Jude.
A Branch. S.t Chad.	25 15	S.t Swythin. A shower of rain, I suppose.	44 Nov.r 1 All Saints.
S.t Gregory.	26 20	S.t Margaret.	45 2 All Souls.
An Heart. y.e Annuntiation.	27 22	S.t Mary Magdalen.	46 6 S.t Leonard.
	28 25	S.t James.	47 11 S.t Martin.
S.t Richard B.p & Confessor.	29 26	S.t Anne.	48 16 S.t Edmund.
S.t Ambrose.	30 Aug.t 1	Lammas.	49 20 S.t Edmund y.e King.
S.t George. a Spear.	31 6	Tranfiguration.	50 23 S.t Clement.
S.t Mark.	32 10	S.t Lawrence. a Gridiron.	51 25 S.t Katherine. A Wheel.
	33 15	Assumptio Virginis.	52 30 S.t Andrew.
	34 24	S.t Bartholomew.	53 Dec.r 6 S.t Nicholas.
			54 8 Conceptio Virginis.
			55 13 S.t Lucy.
			56 21 S.t Thomas. A Spear.
			57 25 Christmas day.
			58 26 S.t Stephen.

Old Calendars we have mention of quinque dies Nativitatis; and they are C Christmas ϒ S.t Stephen.

) Childermas. ♂ S.t Thomas of Canterbury. Dec.r 29 on the other side opposite to y.e days & holy days are y.e Golden N.o which is still 19 and yet varies 8. thus, of oxen to draw it, and made a great ciſtern in a malt-houſe at Wrotteſley, which though very thick both at bottom and ſides wets 37 ſtrikes of barley. An antient family who took their name from it have made this place their ſeat from the Conqueſt, and Walter was created bart. 1642 [k]. Sir Hugh de Wrotteſley was one of the firſt knights of the garter.

6 ∫ 7 ∫ 8 † 10 † 11 † 12 ∫ 13. being ∫ & † added.

Near Seaſdon, on the edge of Shropſhire, is Abbots, or Apewood caſtle, an antient fortification on a lofty round promontory, with a ſteep ridge for a mile together with hollows cut in the ground ſuppoſed for tents. The hills at each end like baſtions make it probable that it was once all one fortification, whether Roman or Britiſh uncertain [l]. The lows on Womborn heath probably belong to it.

At the utmoſt ſouth border of the county lies Clent, formerly within the county of Worceſter, and giving name to one of its hundreds [m], though now reckoned within this county, famous for the martyrdom of St. Kenelm, king of Mercia, ſlain at ſeven years old by the contrivance of his ſiſter Quendrida A. D. 819. His body was diſcovered by a cow, and buried at Winchelcomb abbey. Cowbach is a paſture ground half a mile off, at Hales Owen c. Salop, ſtill called from her, and in it, or rather at the eaſt end of the yard of St. Kenelm's chapel an antient Saxon building, is a fine ſpring of water ſaid to have guſhed out on the diſcovery of the royal infant's body, and much reſorted to both before and ſince the Reformation for the cure of ſore eyes and other maladies. Half a mile north north-eaſt of Clent church is a liſt of graſs called St. Kenelm's furrow, from certain oxen that ploughing on his feſtival run away for ever [n]. Clent manor was granted by king John to the Someries, and after paſſing through the hands of the Buttetourts, Burnells, Beauchamps, Butlers, Staffords, and Wrotteſleys, came to the Lyttelton family, whoſe heirs enjoy it. Three fairs are held in the pariſh, and the inhabitants enjoy exemptions from toll in markets, and other petty immunities [o]. On Clent heath are three lows or barrows raiſed after ſome battle hereabout, when the fortifications of Whichbury hill adjoining in Worceſterſhire were raiſed [p]. The conſtant tradition of the inhabitants aſcribes them to the Romans, and biſhop Lyttelton opening one found a conſiderable quantity of burnt wood and aſhes at the depth of 14 feet. Two others have been ſince opened, in one of which exactly in the centre at about the depth of two feet was found an urn of coarſe ill-burnt clay with ſmall human bones, very white, to the quantity of two quarts. Two feet lower on the weſt ſide of the tumulus was a pretty large quantity of bones, aſhes, and burnt wood, lying promiſcuouſly together. The laſt that was opened contained no urn, but at two yards deep in the centre was a cavity a foot diameter and depth, filled wholly with human bones and burnt wood. The biſhop ſuppoſed the urn contained the remains of the Roman general, and that the bones of his officers lay by him, but thoſe of the ſoldiers in the other lows. Tradition mentions a battle between the Romans and Britans here, the former being encamped on Wichbury, the latter on Clent hill. Harbarow, an adjoining farm, carries ſomething military in its name, and Hereſtone, a neighbouring brook, might be denominated from ſome ſtone or rude pillar of victory erected by the Britans, as Dr. Plot imagined [q] of Baſton in Kinfare pariſh. The Roman road paſſing through Hagley pariſh, now called the King's head land, was probably the Portway mentioned in a court roll t. Elizabeth, and at a conſiderable depth in a rag ſtone quarry in Hagley park, was found, 1752, a very rude ſtone term. Several coins of the lower empire have been found in the fields adjoinlng to Wichbury, and an earthen pot full of them was taken out of a pool on the ſouth edge of the hill not many years ſince. In 1738 a farmer ſtubbing up an old tree diſcovered an old iron chain almoſt conſumed by ruſt, in which hung a large round ſtone big as a man's head having a groove in it to receive the chain [r].

Not far hence is Kinfare, where is an old fortification of an oblong ſquare, about 300 yards by 200, with a deep ditch on two ſides, the others defended by the hill; aſcribed to the Danes [s]. Here is alſo a barrow, and a large ſquariſh ſtone, two yards high, and near four yards about, with two notches at the top like the Devil's arrows in Yorkſhire, and called Baſton, Battleſtone, or Bolſtone [t]. On the heath between Kinfare and the Comptons are ſeveral lows [u]. Kinfare.

Over Arley, "a good uplandiſh town in læva ripa Sabrinæ about five miles above Bewdley [x]," in the extremeſt weſtern point of the county, on the river Severn. Its warm ſituation in a rich clay and loam produced great quantities of cyder apples, particularly the jennetmoyle in Dr. Plot's time [y], but neglected ſince. A vein of good pit coal has been diſcovered here, but lying very deep and near the Severn, cannot be worked without too great expence. At Hexton in this pariſh are dug excellent grindſtones. On the eaſtern limits we meet with the vicinal way called the Portway, which probably led from Branogenium (Worceſter) to Uriconium (Wroxeter), and is ſtill the poſt road from Worceſter to Shrewſbury. In Arley wood is a large Roman camp, nearly ſquare, double and on one ſide treble trenched, perhaps one of Oſtorius' camps along Severn. Caſtle field, within this manor, on the weſt ſide of the river, may be a Roman work. Wulfruna gave Arley, by the name of Earmlie, or Earnlege, to her collegiate church at Wolverhampton, from which it was alienated before the Conqueſt, and in the reign of Henry II. was in the family of Port; Adam de Port being outlawed for aſpiring againſt Henry II. it fell to the crown, and was by Henry III. given to Hubert de Burgh earl of Kent. His ſon alienated it to Robert Burnell, biſhop of Bath and Wells, who alienated it to Edward I. who gave it to his ſervant Letard de Henyn, and he ſold it to the Mortimers, a daughter of whom conveyed it to Hugh de Aldithley, but on her death it reverted to her family, with whom it remained till ſold to William Boerley 1450, whoſe Over Arley.

[k] Holland. Johanna, widow of William de Wrotteſley, by her charter dated 4 Edward II. grants reſtitution to the abbot and convent of Evetham of the manor of Wrotteſley unjuſtly detained from them. Ex autog. tranſcribed into Madox's Collections in the Brit. Muſ. vol. II.

[l] Plot, 397. G. Mag. Brit. 34.
[m] Domeſd. fol. 172. b.
[n] Plot, 413.
[o] Bp. Lyttelton's account of this pariſh in Naſh's Worc. II. Appen. p. x—xviii.
[p] Plot, 413. See before, p. 358.
[q] P. 397.
[r] Bp. Lyttelton in Naſh's Worc. I. 485, 486.
[s] Plot, 413.
[t] Plot, 397. Mag. Brit. 33, 34. G.
[u] Id.
[x] Lel. VI. 80.
[y] P. 226.

daughter married Thomas Lyttelton, in whoſe family it ſtill remains, and ſeveral of their monuments are in its church [z].

Stourton. At Stourton caſtle on the river Stour in this pariſh, was born cardinal Pole 1500, who died 1558[a]. "Sturſeley or Sturton caſtel without fayle is in Sta- "fordſhir, and I hard that there was a lord Stor- "ton a baron of this Storton. It is the kinges. Pole "lay at it by licens, and there cardinal Pole was "born[b]."

Bilſon. Bilſon is memorable for the impoſture of one William Perry, a lad of 13, who practiſed a variety of grimaces and contorſions, vomited rags and pins, and made inky water, either from an habit of idleneſs, or to ſerve the turn of the Popiſh exorciſts, till biſhop Moreton made him confeſs the cheat[c].

Buſhbury. At Buſhbury is a low, and in a wood here was found a celt which Dr. Plot[d] calls a braſs head of a catapulta. He mentions another found a little below the road to the ſouth near Fetherſtone in Breewood pariſh, a third in the largeſt of the lows on the Morridge, and a fouth at Handſworth; all nearly alike[e].

Envile. Envile, or Enfield, is the ſeat of the earl of Stamford, being purchaſed by his anceſtor ſir Henry Grey, of Pirgo, knt. lord Grey of Groby, whoſe grandſon Henry was created earl of Stamford 1628. The family have monuments in the church. The houſe is engraved in Plot, Pl. VII. The ſpits in the kitchen were turned by water of a little overſhot mill. Sir S. Degge had the ſame at his houſe Blithebridge. at Blithebridge, but he complains that the water damaged the chimnies[f]. The lid of a ſtone coffin with a croſs and ROLGERVS DE MORF inſcribed on it was dug up below the foundation of the weſt end of Envile church 1762[g]; whence it is ſuppoſed the Morfe extended hither, ſince a ſmall village in this pariſh ſtill retains the name of Morfe town. A like ornamented ſtone lies at the entrance of the porch[h].

Himley. Swindon. At Himley and Swindon are noted blade mills, where the blades of ſcythes, ſickles, axes, &c. are ground to a fine edge.

Penſneth chace. Penſneth chace was in former times better ſtored with game than at preſent, where are found many coal pits, in which Holland was told, there then continued a fire begun by a candle long ſince by the negligence of a certain grover or digger. The ſmoak and ſometimes the flame was ſeen, but the ſcent oftener ſmelt, and in other places not far off the like was ſhewed to him.

Weſton. On the weſt edge of the county, weſt of Brewood, is Weſton under Lizard, which gave name to a family ſeated here 1188, from whom it came to the Peſhalls, and from them to the Muttons or Myttons, then to the Harpsfields, whoſe heirs took the foregoing name. From them it paſſed to the Wilbrahams, of Woodhay, c. Cheſter, and from them to the noble family of Newport, earl of Bradford, whoſe manſion houſe, now the ſeat of ſir Henry Bridgeman, bart. (having deſcended to him at the death of the late earl of Bradford, whoſe ſiſter Anne married his father), ſtands near the church, wherein are monuments of that family and their maternal anceſtors, as well as of the Weſtons[i].

Patteſhull. Patteſhull, the ſeat of the Aſtleys, of whom John was knighted by Henry VI. for his valour in ſingle combat. It was ſold by the laſt ſir John, who died 1772, to lord Pigot. It probably gave birth and name to Hugh de Patteſhall biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry from 1240 to 1243. Sir Richard Aſtley rebuilt the church of ſtone.

Wedneſbury, a village in Leland's time, five miles w from Lichfield by weſt ſouth-weſt, now 13 ſtatute miles. "Se coles there[k]," which Dr. Plot ſays[l] are the beſt in the county with thoſe of Dudley and Sedgeley. Egelfleda fortified it againſt the Danes in the reign of Edward the elder[m]. It gave birth to William lord Paget, who ſprung from a family of no note here, his father being only ſerjeant at mace in London. He ſo recommended himſelf to Henry VIII. that he appointed him one of his executors, and of the council to his ſon Edward VI. in whoſe reign he was knighted, made comptroller of the houſhold, chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaſter, lord Paget of Beaudeſert in this county. He was involved in the duke of Somerſet's diſgrace, but reſtored with accumulated honours by Mary, and died 1564, as did his ſons and ſucceſſors Henry and Thomas 1568 and 1589: the latter under attainder for correſponding with the queen of Scots. His ſon William was reſtored 1 James I. and died 1628[n]. His ſon William died 1678, and his ſon William the 6th lord was ambaſſador to the Porte, for concluding the peace of Carlowitz 1698, and dying 1712 was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry, the 7th lord, who was created baron Burton 1711, and earl of Uxbridge 1714; both which titles ending in his grandſon 1769, the title of Paget of Beaudeſert went to Henry Bayley, eſq; great grandſon to William 5th lord Paget, who took the name of Paget, and was in 1784 advanced to the title of earl of Uxbridge.

"At Walleſhall be pittes of ſecole, pittes of lyme, "that ſerve alſo South town four miles off. There "is alſo yren owre."

"Walleſhall, a little market towne, a mile by "north from Weddeſbyri. Ther be many ſmithes "and bytte makers in the towne. It longgith now "to the king, and there is a parke of that name ſcant "half a mile from the towne in the way to Wolner- "hampton[o]." It came to the crown from the widow of Richard Neville, earl of Warwick, is ſtill famous for iron works, and is a market and corporation[p].

Between Walſall and Drayton Baſſet, we croſs the Icknield ſtreet, which enters the county a little to the weſt of ſir Charles Holt's park, runs a little beyond Shenſtone, where it croſſes Watling ſtreet, and then bearing away north-eaſt and by north enters Derbyſhire over Dove at Monk's bridge[q]. On the ſouth ſide of the laſt ſtreet at Hints, near the church, is a very large tumulus, or, as Dr. Plot called it, a rocky round hill, agreeable to his idea that barrows of earth could be turned into ſtone[r]. On Hint common was found 1772, a pig of lead, weigh 150lb. 22 inches and an half long, with the followin inſcription in bas relief, ſurrounded by a border o equal height[s], referring to A. D. 76. AU. 828. This is now the muſeum of Mr. Greene at Lichfield.

IMP. VESP. VII. T. IMP. V. COS.

[z] Account of this pariſh by the late biſhop Lyttelton at the end of Naſh's Worceſterſh. App. i—ix.
[a] Plot, 151. [b] Lel. VII. 36. [c] Plot, 289. Mag. Brit. 36.
[d] P. 403. [e] Ib. Pl. 33. f. 5. [f] MS. n. on Plot, p. 337.
[g] See it in Gent. Mag. LIII. p 481, 1783. [h] Ib. p. 767. [i] Gent. Mag. XXXIII. p. 445.
[k] Lel. VII. 39. [l] P. 127. [m] See Hoveden, ut ſup.
[n] Dugd. Bar. I. 390. [o] Lel. ubi ſup. [p] Mag. Brit. 10.
[q] Plot, 400. [r] P. 402. [s] See Gent. Mag. 1772, XLII. p. 558. 1773, XLIII. 61.

Hi

Hints, called by the Saxons Hendon or Old town, is a pleaſant village, whoſe lofty ſituation commands a very extenſive proſpect of the counties of Staffordſhire, Leiceſter, and Derby, about four miles from Lichfield and three from Tamworth. The church is prebendal.

There are other tumuli on this ſtreet, one at Cats hill, two on Calve's heath, and one near Great Surden[t]. The moſt eminent on this ſtreet is that called Offlow, giving name to the hundred, and by Dr. Plot referred to the Saxons. Others in this county, to recite them once for all, are Harlow greave, a mile north-weſt of Mathfield; another in a field near the left hand of the way between that town and Ellaſton near Colwich common, and a third larger oppoſite to it called Rowlow at the other end of the common. To theſe add the low in Arbourcloſe, two or three bowſhot north-weſt from Okeover chapel; the three on the Weever hills, three others called Queen low, Gallow hills, and Caſtlow croſs; thoſe on Ribden, Reeden, and Cauldon hills; Cocklow and the reſt near Leeke; thoſe on the hills near Warſlow, on Elton hill, and between that and Oncot: others on the Morridge. All theſe are moſtly made of ſtones; but in that near Elford when examined by Dr. Plot was found level with the ſurface of the ground moiſt blackiſh earth, about two yards diameter and one foot and a half deep in the middle and on its edge containing aſhes and charcoal, and ſome friable pieces of bones[u].

Weſt Bromwich gave birth to James I's gigantic porter William Parſons, whoſe picture is or was at Whitehall[x], and a bas relief of him with Jeffery Hudſon the dwarf before-mentioned[y] is fixed in the front of a houſe near the end of Bagnio-court, Newgate-ſtreet, probably as a ſign[z]. Here at Sandwell was a ſmall Benedictine priory founded t. Henry II. or Richard I. by William de Opheni, ſuppreſſed for Wolſey, valued at £.38. 8*s*. 7*d*.[a] It is now the ſeat of William Legge earl of Dartmouth.

Handſworth was the ſeat of the Wirleys, an antient family of this county, which of late years ended in an heireſs married into the family of Birch of Birch co. Lancaſter, who have ſince ſold their paternal eſtate there, and reſide at Handſworth, having aſſumed the name and arms of Wirley. William Wirley, Rouge Croix purſuivant 1604, was of this family, and died 1617-18, and publiſhed "The true uſe of Armoury ſhewed by hiſtory, 1592," 4to. His collections and church notes for Leiceſterſhire, &c. are now in the Heralds college. In Handſworth pariſh is Perry hall, which was in the reign of king John the ſeat of a family of the name of Piry, in Erdeſwicke's time of the Stamfords, and from the reign of Charles II. of the Goughs. It was purchaſed after 1669, when Beſt had it, by ſir Henry Gough, knt. He married Mary daughter of ſir Edward Littleton of Pillaton hall in this county, bart. by whom he had iſſue three ſons and four daughters. His eldeſt ſon Walter, who alſo had an eſtate at Old fallings near Wolverhampton, left a ſon of his own name who left two ſons, of whom John, the younger, by the death of his elder brother is now poſſeſſor of Perry hall. Sir Richard, younger brother of ſir Henry, from the ſmall ſtock of a younger brother's fortune, raiſed a conſiderable eſtate by the Eaſt India and China trade, in which he was no leſs diſtinguiſhed for his knowledge than for his integrity. He was brought up under that eminent merchant ſir James Houblon, and had the advice and aſſiſtance of the great ſir Joſiah Child, and made four voyages to India and China, beſides travelling through moſt of the trading towns in the Mediterranean and Levant. He was knighted by George I. and in 1717, purchaſed of lord viſcount Falconbridge and lady Bridget his wife, one of the daughters and coheirs of ——— Midlemore, eſq. Edgbaſton, c. Warwick, now the ſeat of his grandſon ſir Henry. Under this ſir Richard his elder brother's ſecond ſon Harry, whom the Editor of this work will ever glory in calling father, acquired, with equal ability and integrity, a decent competency, the reſult of many hardſhips and voyages in the Eaſt India company's ſervice, to which his whole life was devoted while he preſided among their directors, wherewith he purchaſed of the other coheireſs wife of ſir John Shelley, bart. the other moiety of the Midlemore eſtate at Solihull in the ſame county, now enjoyed by his ſon.

Salve, ſancte parens, iterum ſalvete recepti
Necquicquam cineres, animæque umbræque paternæ.

" From Tamworth to Faſeley village about a mile. Faſeley.
" Then I paſſed over Faſeley bridge of 16 arches of " ſtone over Tame[b]."

" The towne of Tamworth having a celebrate mar- Tamworth.
" ket, is of antient memory, and after the Danes
" raſed and defaced it, Ethelthleda, lady of the " Merches, and ſiſter to king Edward ſenior repayred
" it. The north part and ſyde of the principall
" ſtreet is in Staffordſhire, and on this ſyde is the " pariſh church. The ſouth ſyde and part of this " ſtreet lying toward the right ripe of Anker is in " Warwickſhire, and the caſtle alſoe, which ſtandeth
" at the very poynt of the confluence of the Anker
" and Tame. I ſaw but three notable things in the " town: the paroche church, the caſtle and the " bridge. The collegiate church having a deane and
" ſix prebendaries: ſome thinke it was a college before
" the conqueſt, others that it was of the foundation
" of Marmion, and that opinion is more likely to be " true. The king at this preſent is taken as patron
" of the college. There be divers fair tombes of no" ble men and women in the eaſt part of the church
" of the Frevilles, of Baldwinus de Frevile lord of " the caſtle. There lyeth alſo the grandfather and " grandmother and father and mother of Ferrers now
" owner of Tamworth caſtle. There is a gild of St.
" George, and to it belonged £. 5 land per annum,
" and of late one John Bailie gave other £. 5. land
" to it, and therewith is now erected a grammar
" ſchool. The caſtle ſtandeth on a meetly high " ground at the ſouth part of the towne; the baſe
" court and great ward is cleane decayid, and the " wall fallen downe, and therein be now but houſes
" of office of noe notable building. The dungeon
" hill yet ſtandith, and a great round tower of ſtone,
" wherein Mr. Ferrars dwelleth, and now repaireth
" it. The Marmions, Frevils, and Ferrars, have " been lords of it ſince the Conqueſt[c]. The towne is " all builded of tymbre[d]." There be two falres
" yearly. There be two bridges, the fairer is Bow-
" bridge, though it ſtandeth on Anker a leſs river

[t] G. Plot, 403.
[u] Plot, 405.
[x] Mag. Brit. 13.
[y] P. 222.
[z] Walpole's Anecd. of Painting, II. 10.
[a] Tan. 499.
[b] Lel. IV. 190.
[c] Ib. 189. b.
[d] Ib. 190.

" than Tame towards the north end of the town, " the other called St. Mary bridge, having 12 arches, " leadeth to Coventry over Tame, and as it ſhould " ſeem by a great ſtone on it bearing the arms of " Baſſet was built by the lord Baſſet of Drayton [e]." The Mercian kings had a palace here, as appears by grants of Offa and others dated hence. A vaſt ditch, 45 feet broad, called King's ditch, in a manner encompaſſes the whole town, beginning weſt of Lady bridge on the Tame, running north-weſt of the church, where ſeems to have been a high mount in an angle, whence it runs on north-eaſt of the church to another angle with a mount, thence to the Anker; thus defending the weſt, north, and eaſt ſides of the town, and the Tame the ſouth [f]. Ethelfleda died here 918 [g]. Bones of men and horſes, and ſpearheads, have been found here of late years.

When Baldwin Frevile exhibited his petition for the office of champion, it was adjudged from this family to ſir John Dymock his competitor, deſcended alſo from Marmion, and exhibiting more authentic record and evidence [h]. Sir Baldwin Frevile dying childleſs, Thomas de Ferrars, eldeſt ſon of William lord Ferrars, probably became poſſeſſed of it in right of Elizabeth his wife, eldeſt of the three ſiſters of ſir Baldwin. The Ferrars held it till the beginning of the preſent century, when it paſſed into the family of the Comptoms by marriage of James earl of Northampton with Elizabeth ſiſter to Robert Shirley, viſcount Tamworth, grandſon and heir apparent to Robert earl Ferrars, whoſe eldeſt ſon Robert obtained it by marriage 1688, with Anne daughter of ſir Humphrey Ferrars of this place. Lady Charlotte Compton, ſole ſurviving daughter of the match, baroneſs Ferrars of Chartley in right of her mother, married the preſent viſcount Townſhend, whoſe ſon George lord de Ferrars in her right, ſince created earl of Leiceſter, now enjoys the place. The dining-room of the caſtle is adorned with the arms of the Ferrars family and its alliances, and their arms are on the drawing-room chimney.

The town is large and well built, ſituated part in this county and part in Warwickſhire, ſo that its repreſentatives are returned by the ſheriffs of both counties, It firſt ſent repreſentatives 5 Elizabeth, and was incorporated two years before. The church is large. Dr. Plot celebrates the double ſtaircaſe of the tower, the floor of one being roof to the other, having two entrances, one within the church, the other in the church-yard, and two exits at the top [i]. In the chancel are two great round arches with zigzag mouldings, and a number of monuments of the Freviles and Ferrars, of John Ferrars, eſq. 1680, and his ſon ſir Humphrey 1678. There ſtill remain ſeveral lay prebendaries of Tamworth, but no dean. The living was only a curacy till about 10 years ago the Houſe of Lords ſettled it to be a vicarage. Philip Marmion founded here an hoſpital 1286 [k], ſucceeded by one founded by Mr. Guy [l].

Barton. Barton under Needwood foreſt gave birth to Dr. John Taylor, Maſter of the Rolls to Henry VIII. who built here a chapel ſomewhat like Henry VIIth's at Weſtminſter [m].

Elford. Elford paſſed rapidly through the families of Arderne, Stanley, Stanton, Smith, Huddleſton, and Bowes, of whom the two firſt and fourth have monuments in its church. It continued with the laſt four or five generations, but paſſed about the cloſe of the laſt century by marriage of the heireſs of Bowes of Elford to the hon. Craven Howard, and on the death of the late earl of Suffolk devolved to his ſiſter Frances Howard [n].

Streethay near Lichfield, and Stretton near Burton, by their names and diſtance from each other 12 miles, ſhew that they ſtand on the Ikenield ſtreet [o]. A celt was found at the latter [p]. Street. Street.

No antiquary has diſputed the claim of Wall to ETOCETUM, except Salmon, and he places it at Barr Beacon in Aldridge pariſh ſouth of Lichfield, where are lines drawn round the hill on one ſide, encloſing a large camp up to the military way in form of a half moon, and ſeveral other ſubdiviſions have been made, which works may have been altered by the Danes or Saxons [q]. But Watling ſtreet does not come within ſix miles of Barr Beacon, Ikenield about one mile and a half. Some copies of Antoninus read Erocetum, whence Mr. Gale [r] was for deducing it from heath, whence the neighbouring Thickbroom, King's Bromley, and Ereford. He adds a gold Otho was dug up here 1690. Dr. Plot ſaw coins of Nero and Domitian found here, part of a wall, whence the preſent name, and two Roman pavements of lime and rubble and of pebble and gravel, both laid on Roman bricks. On the other ſide of the way in a ground belonging to Cheſterfield, on the bank of the Tame, were found the pedeſtal of a pillar [s], and other antiquities [t]. Wall. Etoc. Che

Plot [u], Stukeley, and Horſley remove PENNOCRUCIUM to Stretton, becauſe nearer the Roman road from which Penkridge is two miles diſtance [x]. Baxter [y] ſhews that both names ſignify the head of the Grug river, or heath, and finds Cank heath, the heath of the Ceanes. Salmon [z] transfers Pennocrucium to Oldbury in Warwickſhire, of which before, p. 348. Pe cru

" A little weſt of where the Rigning croſſes the Watling ſtreet, ſouth-weſt of Lichfield, ſtands a little village, called Wall; ſouth of that a quarter of a mile is Cheſterfield. This is ſaid by the inhabitants to be the oldeſt city in England; and the Watling ſtreet the oldeſt road. The Itinerary of Antoninus ſufficiently evinces the place to be Etocetum. Part of the Rigning-way northward hence is very fair, with a high ſtrait bank; part very mirely and bad. The country ſandy, is clayey, and full of round coggles, of which the road was compoſed. The Watling ſtreet eaſtward hence about half a mile is encloſed in fields; but weſtward it appears very ſtrait and broad. They call the Rigning the Hickling ſtreet at this place, and likewiſe Port Lane. It goes to Burton upon Trent. Many Roman coins are found here, both great and ſmall. Mr. Quintin living here has many. He owns the field called the Butts, where I ſaw great ruins of walls, equidiſtant twelve foot, and twelve high, like ſquare cellars. I ſaw there bits of pavement, Iriſh ſlate, Roman bricks, ſome pieces thus marked ※. The walls are a yard thick, of ſtrong mortar, rubble ſtone, &c. The Watling ſtreet parts the two villages, Cheſterfield ſouth and Wall north. By the ſide of a road going northward from thence to Pipe Hill I immediately eſpied the Roman walls, notorious by the manner of their ſtructure, of ragſtone; a courſe laid ſloping this way, a courſe that way, [e] Ib. 189. [f] Plot, 410. [g] Dugd. Warw. 1130—1140. [h] Holland. Dugd. Warwick, 1130—1135.

[i] P. 369. [k] Tan. 502. [l] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, 122—126. [m] Plot, 296.
[n] Plot, 405. [o] Pennant, 117—119. [p] G. Plot, 402. [q] Archæol. V. p. 113. pl. VIII. 1.
[r] P. 530. [s] MS. n. [t] Plot, 401. Tab. 32. f. 4. [u] Ib.
[x] P. 401. [y] G. Horſl. 19. [z] in voc. [a] P. 529.

with very ſtrong and white mortar. This lies under a hedge, and the roots of old oak trees for the length of an hundred yards, till intercepted by a dwelling-houſe. They ſay the building in Butts cloſe, was a temple; and probably they are not miſtaken. The Watling ſtreet at this old city goes preciſely from eaſt to weſt. Some mile ſtones have been found by the brook running weſt of the city; a pretty ſpring there; ruins upon digging all the fields round. The brook has a broad marſh along it weſtward. A little below the temple we ſaw the crown of a ſubterraneous arch in the hedge. They ſhewed me where the Rigning way went through a corn field ſouth of the caſtle, and paſſed the river weſt of Shenſtone. It is a field way ſtill ſouth, and an open road north. The caſtle ſtood in the north-weſt angle between the Watling and another road going to Litchfield upon a gentle ſouthern declivity. The old walls are founded upon a ſolid rock, and much more of them was left within memory; now they pull them down to build withal. There is a gate croſſes the Watling ſtreet at the caſtle end, by the ſide of the road. That called the Temple is upon the weſtern declivity, much lower in elevation than the caſtle, which is upon the higheſt ground in the neighbourhood, and ſomewhat raiſed above the common level by heaps of rubbiſh and foundations, which I could diſcern above ground in the orchard. The place of this old city is an elevation, and has a good proſpect, eſpecially ſouthwards. Oldbury caſtle and Manceter are in view. William Milner, at the Swan, is an antiquary, and knows the old name of the place. He ſhewed me a Roman wall in his cellar, and ſays it goes far backward by the garden. No doubt there were houſes all the way on both ſides the road from the caſtle to the brook, which is a ſweet deſcent weſtward. There was a Roman coin of gold found near Hales Owen. Many flower pots and other antiquities found on the ſouth ſide of Watling ſtreet in the ploughed fields called Cheſterfield Crofts; and a very fine red earthen ware with figures of bucks upon them. The circumference of the caſtle is hardly to be found; the ground has not been dug in the yards hereabouts. The Rigning-way goes by Lyn-Lane, and ſo paſſes the river weſt of Shenſtone, at Shenſtone Nether town. This country lies upon a rock here and there interſperſed, but not a good ſtone; but there is a quarry of good free-ſtone, of a brown colour, by Swinfen. I ſaw a Nero of Corinthian braſs, and ſome ſquare Roman pavements found there. The Rigning runs on the eaſt ſide of an eminence called Mawcop hill, as it paſſes northward hence. The building in Butts cloſe is level at top with the paſture, except towards the declivity, where they have dug away the earth, and the great wall that ran along it. Two miles beyond Etocetum, on the top of a hill, is Knaves caſtle, on the ſouth ſide of Watling ſtreet; a ſmall tumulus incloſed within three ditches; an entrance on the ſouth ſide. It has been hollowed on the top. This is in a vaſt moor or common, full of heath, as the nature of the ſoil is all the way. The Watling is very fair and ſtrait, and in many places the ridge is perfect for a great length. A little weſt of the bridge, under which the river Penk croſſes the Watling, are a few houſes belonging to Stretton on an eminence. This is thought to be Pennocrucium. And no doubt it was hereabout to anſwer the miles in the Itinerary. The village of Stretton lies a little to the north of the road, and a mile ſouth is Brewood, another village on the Penk, which they ſay has been an old city. On ploughing the fields they frequently find Roman coins and other antiquities. In that great old city king John kept his court. A little brook called Horſebrook runs a paſture or two below the road, and parallel to it, into the Penk. It is a very full river, and the bridge it runs through is broad. The Watling ſtreet is here eaſt and weſt. Three large ſtone bridges croſs the river in two miles. The old Roman city no doubt was by the road ſide ſomewhat near here, and perhaps by Horſebrook. Brewood may have been a Roman town, but it is too far out of the road for the convenience of travellers, and Penkridge is two miles and a half off, ſo that it can put in no claim. This town muſt have borrowed its name from the river, as that from the Roman city. Penkridge ſtands by the ſide of a large marſh made by the river. The church is built of good ſtone. A remarkable ſtone croſs in the ſtreet. The heathineſs of this county favours Mr. Baxter's derivation of Pennocrucium[a]."

Penkridge. At Penkridge was a collegiate church belonging t. John to the archbiſhop of Dublin, who was always dean, with 13 prebends, valued at £. 100. 15s.[b] It is now a curacy belonging to the Littletons[c]. It has a market and two fairs.

Lapley. At Lapley an alien priory of black friars, cell to St. Remigius at Rheims t. Edward the Confeſſor[d]. It was diſſolved by the parliament held at Leiceſter t. Henry V. and was given by that king to the college of Tong in Shropſhire[e]. The lands here and at Alrewas are held by Borough Engliſh[f].

Eſſingdon. Eſſingdon was held of the manor of Hilton near Penkridge by the ſingular tenure of driving a gooſe three times round the fire blown by Jack of Hilton, a little braſs image operating like an Eolipile[g]. Mr. Vernon, being poſſeſſed of both manors, extinguiſhed the tenure[h].

Breewood. Breewood is a market town, and has a freeſchool. The biſhop of the dioceſe had a ſeat here before the Conqueſt[i]. Here was t. Richard I. a ſmall Benedictine nunnery, valued at £. 11. 15. 6d.[k]

Overſtonall. About a quarter of a mile weſt of Overſtonall is an old fortification on a hill called in old writings Caſtle old ford or fort, double trenched, diameter 160 paces between the entrances which ſeems to have been on S. E. and N. W.[l]

Newcaſtle under Lyme. Newcaſtle under Lyme is a market and borough town, and was incorporated 19 Henry III. The caſtle of Cheſterton built by the earl of Lancaſter t. Henry III. was all gone in Plot's time. It had four churches, reduced to one ſince the barons wars[m]. It gave 1756 title of duke to Thomas Holles duke of Newcaſtle on Tyne, which on his death 1768 by limitation of the patent devolved to Henry earl of Lincoln, who married his niece.

"Newcaſtle under Line ſo caullid of a brooke "renning thereby or of a hille or wodde thereby ſo "cawlid. It longid to the duke of Lancaſter. "The paroche is at Stok on Trent a good mile off. "The town uſith to come to a chapel of St Saviour's

[a] Stukeley It. II. 21—23. [b] Plot, 446. Tan. 494. [c] Ecton.
[d] Tan. 492. [e] Parochial Antiq. of Staffordſh. MS. [f] Plot, 278.
[g] Plot, 433. Mr. Gale ſays this was the Saxon idol Pouſter. Stuk. It. II. 24. [h] Degge's MS. n. on Plot.
[i] Holland. [k] Tan. 500. [l] Plot, 396.
[m] Plot, 434.

" by the caſtle. " Al the caſtelle is down ſave one " great toure. Ther was a houſe of blak freres yn " the ſouth ſide of the town [n]."

Burſlem. At Burſlem near Newcaſtle is the greateſt manufactory of ſtone ware in England, and another of porcelain.

Stoke on Trent. At Stoke on Trent near Newcaſtle was born in the rectory-houſe 1602, the learned Dr. John Lightfoot, who died in his parſonage-houſe at Great Munden c. Herts, 1675, where he was buried with his two wives. He left his valuable library of Oriental and Hebrew and Rabbinical learning to Harvard college in America, where it was burnt 1764. His father died vicar of Uttoxeter 1651, aged 81.

Etruria. A ſpot in this pariſh called Ridgehouſe, by a fortunate accident purchaſed by Mr. Wedgwood, has under the direction of his inventive genius furniſhed an aſtoniſhing profuſion of the moſt elegant vaſes of every uſe and form, and deſerved the name of Etruria given to it by its ingenious proprietor.

Biddulph. In the pariſh of Biddulph, in the north-weſt corner of the county, on a riſing ground in the break or opening between the Cloud and Woof Lowe, which are two of the chain of hills that run through the counties of Stafford, Cheſter, Derby, and York, into Scotland, are the Brideſtones, a ſemicircle of ſix upright freeſtones, from three to ſix feet broad, of various height, about ſix feet aſuuder, and two more within them, where the earth is very black, mixed with aſhes and oak charcoal. It is ſuppoſed the circle was originally compleat, and 27 feet in diameter, for there is the appearance of holes where ſtones have formerly ſtood, and alſo of two ſingle ſtones, one ſtanding above five or ſix yards from the circle, and the other at the ſame diſtance from that. On the weſt ſide are two rough ſquare tapering ſtones, four feet two inches broad, and two feet thick. One on the north ſide is broken off, as part of the other. Weſt of theſe is the pavement of a kind of artificial cave compoſed of broken pieces of ſtone, about two inches and an half thick, and laid on pounded white ſtones about ſix inches deep: two inches of the upper part tinged with black, ſuppoſed from the aſhes falling through the pavement, which was covered with oak charcoal about two inches thick. Several ſmall bits of bone were alſo found. The ſides of this cave or cell were compoſed of two unhewn free ſtones about 18 feet long, ſix feet high, and 18 inches thick, each now broken in two. It was divided by a ſtone about five feet and an half high, and ſix inches thick, having a circular hole cut through it about 19 inches and a half in diameter. The whole was covered with long unhewn flat free ſtones ſince taken away. The height from the pavement to this covering was five feet ten inches. The entrance was filled up with ſtones and earth. About 55 yards from hence was another place of the ſame conſtruction, but ſmaller, and without any inward partition, two yards and an half long, two feet and an half broad, and three feet and an half high. Alſo part of a third. A large heap of ſtones covered the whole, 120 yards long, and 12 broad. Theſe ſtones have been taken away from time to time by maſons and other people for various purpoſes, and in 1764 ſeveral hundred loads were carried away to make a turnpike road about 60 yards from this place, which laid it open for examination [o].

Trentham. Trentham nunnery, where St. Werburg died abbeſs, was refounded for Auguſtin canons by Randal earl of Cheſter t. Henry I. and valued at the diſſolution at £.121. 3s. 2d.[p] It gave 1746 title of viſcount to John Leveſon Gower, earl Gower, whoſe grandfather inherited the eſtate of the Leveſons here, and whoſe ſon Granville Leveſon is the ſecond and preſent earl. Lady Leveſon gave great benefactions to the poor and the children of this place. The family ſeat contains many ſpacious and convenient apartments which have been lately fitted up and ornamented by the preſent earl, who has alſo made great improvements throughout the whole place, under the direction of Meſſrs Brown and Holland. The river Trent runs through the park.

Elijah Fenton, the poet, was born at Shelton.

At Berry bank in Darleſton on the top of an hill are ruins of a large caſtle, fortified with a double vallum and entrenchments about 250 yards diameter. This according to tradition was the ſeat of Wulpher king of Mercia, who murdered his two ſons for embracing Chriſtianity[q], and the barrow near it his tomb. " Not veri far from Stone priori appereth the place " where king Woulpher's caſtel or maner place was. " This Byri hill ſtode on a rok by a broke ſide. " Ther appere great dikes and ſquarid ſtones [r]."

At Careſwell was a caſtle built in the latter end of the reign of Edward II. by ſir William de Careſwell who is buried in the church. It has great ponds, whoſe heads are made of ſquared ſtones [s]. Dr. Plot, Pl. 37, and Mr. Groſe have engraved a fair houſe built on the ſite of the caſtle by Mathew Cradock ſon of George Cradock of Stafford a wool merchant, who was clerk of aſſize of this circuit [t]. It is now the property of William viſcount Vane of the kingdom of Ireland, in right of his mother the daughter and coheir of William Jolliffe of Caverſwell caſtle, eſq;

" The caſtel or preti pile of Cawſewell [Careſwell] " four miles by north from Stone, a late a priori of " chanons ſumtyme belonging to the Montgomerikes, " now the Giffards [u]."

The canons of Stone being diſperſed in the Daniſh wars, a few nuns ſeem to have been here at the Conqueſt. Robert de Stafford changed it t. Henry I. to canons regular from Kenelworth. It was valued at £.129.[x] In the church were the monuments of the Stafford family, removed at the diſſolution of it to the friars Auſtins at Stafford [y], but deſtroyed with that church [z]. Here is a market, free and charity ſchool, and four fairs. On rebuilding the church was found on a piece of oak plank in the roof the annexed inſcription, the centre word of which is Jeſus [a]:

[n] Lel. VII. 36.
[o] Letter from the rev. Mr. Malbon, rector of Congleton, to Dr. Owen, at the end of Rowland's Mona Antiqua, 1766, p. 319.
[p] Tan. 489. [q] Erdeſwicke. Plot, 406. [r] Lel. VII. 36. [s] Plot, 448.
[t] Holland. Degge MS. n. on Plot, p. 448. Erdeſwick, p. 86. [u] Lel. VII. 36.
[x] Tan. 488. [y] Lel. VII. 37. [z] Fuller. Mag. Brit. 72. [a] Gent. Mag. 1770, XL. p. 221.

A little

A little out of Stone to the right is a large houſe called Aſton, antiently the property of a branch of the Heveninghams of Suffolk. Walter the laſt of the line left two daughters, of whom the ſecond conveyed the eſtate by marriage to ſir James Simeon, of Brightwell c. Oxon, bart. t. Charles II. who rebuilt the houſe and built a mauſoleum in his garden, in which I think he is interred [b]. It now belongs to Thomas Weld, eſq; of Lulworth caſtle, Dorſet, whoſe grandmother was heireſs of the Simeons.

At Burſton, about three miles from Stone, was a chapel erected on the ſpot where Rufin, ſecond ſon of Wulpher, was ſuppoſed to be murdered [c].

Sandon came to Thomas de Erdeſwike t. Edward III. and continued in that family till the reign of James I. when Richard Erdeſwick ſold it to his half brother George Digby, groom of the ſtole. Charles lord Gerard of Bromley became poſſeſſed of it by marriage with Mr. Digby's daughter, whoſe grandaughter marrying William duke of Hamilton conveyed it to lord Archibald Hamilton, who rebuilt the houſe 1776, and ſold it to lord Harrowby. A law ſuit concerning this place gave riſe to the fatal duel between James duke of Hamilton and lord Mohun 1712, in which both combatants loſt their lives [d].

Sampſon Erdeſwicke wrote the hiſtory of this county, never yet correctly printed. He was buried at Sandon 1603, where he has a monument with his effigies in full proportion, and thoſe of his two wives, cut to the life, erected by himſelf in his life time [e]; and there is another of George Digby, eſq. The houſe is engraved in Plot, pl. IV.

"Cank foreſte, a great thing merely belongging "to the biſhopric of Lichefeld [f]." This curacy in the gift of the dean and chapter of Lichfield was the firſt preferment of the celebrated Dr. Henry Sacheverell.

"The wodde or foreſt in Staffordſhire, communly "caullid Cank wood, yn olde writinges is caullid "Cannok [g]." "It ſtandeth within four miles of "Lichfield, and thence ſtretcheth wit hina mile of "Stafford [h]." Near Cannok church is a large ſingle ſtone [i].

This vaſt tract was once covered with oaks, but for ſome centuries paſt has been deprived of its honours.

"Sow rennith by Staford per cœnobium S. Tho-"mæ a good mile of by Shutborow, and at Heywood "bridge into Trent [k]."

The priory of St. Thomas juxta Stafford was founded about 1180 by Richard Peche biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry, and valued at £.198 per ann. [l]

Strange it is to read what lands Henry III. confirmed to Henry Audeley, which were beſtowed on him through the bounty of the peers and even of private gentlemen, not only in England, but alſo in Ireland, where Hugh Lacy, earl of Ulſter, gave him lands, together with the conſtableſhip of Ulſter, ſo that without doubt he was either a perſon of ſingular virtue, or a very great favourite, or an able lawyer, or perhaps was endued with all theſe qualifications. His poſterity were allied in marriage with the heirs of the lord Giffard of Brimsfield, of baron Martin lord of Keimeis and Barnſtaple, as alſo a younger brother of this houſe, with one of the heirs of the earl of Glouceſter, who was by king Edward III. created earl of Glouceſter. About which time James lord Audley acquired a very great reputation on account of his valour and ſkill in warlike affairs, who, as it is related by the French hiſtorians, being dangerouſly wounded in the battle of Poitiers, when the Black Prince with many high commendations had given to him a penſion of 400 marks per annum, beſtowed it immediately on his four eſquires that always valiantly attended him, and ſatisfied the prince, doubting that his gift might be too little for ſo great ſervice, with this anſwer, gratefully acknowledging his bounty: "Theſe my eſquires ſaved my "life amidſt my enemies, and, God be thanked, "my anceſtors have left me ſufficient revenues to "maintain me in your ſervice." Whereupon the prince, approving this prudent liberality, both confirmed this donation to his eſquires, and beſides aſſigned to him lands to the value of 600 marks yearly. By his eldeſt daughter, one of the coheirs to her brother, and wife of John lord Touchet, the title of lord Audley came afterwards to the Touchets, and in them continueth [m].

Swinerton.

North-weſt of Stone is Swinerton, the eſtate of a family of its name from the Conqueſt to the reign of Henry VIII. when it paſſed to the Fitz Herberts of Norbury in Derbyſhire, by marriage with the heireſs of Swinnerton, to whom it now belongs [n]. It was antiently a royal ſeat, and had a market now diſuſed.

Navigable Canal.

Parallel with the London road from Stone runs the canal for the junction of the ſouthern and weſtern oceans, begun 1766 near the ſouth end of Harecaſtle hill. Its length thence to Wilden ferry, c. Derby, on the ſouth ſide of the hill is 61 miles two furlongs, and to the duke of Bridgewater's canal at Preſton on the hill in Cheſhire on the north ſide of the hill 31, 6. in all 93 miles: its breadth at top 29 feet, at bottom 16, depth four feet and a half. There are 40 locks on the ſouth ſide, having 316 feet fall, and on the north ſide 35, with 326 feet fall. It is carried over the river Dove in an aqueduct of 23 arches, over the Trent in one of ſix arches, and over the Dane in Cheſhire in three, beſides 160 leſſer aqueducts and culvetts for the conveyance of brooks and ſtreams under the canal. The undertakers have built 189 cart bridges and 11 foot bridges to join lands which they cut through. The moſt ſouthern tunnel, as it is called, is at Hermitage, commonly called Armitage, where a work is carried through a hill for 130 yards, with a haling way for horſes on one ſide. That through Harecaſtle hill paſſes under ground for the length of 2880 yards, 9 feet wide, and 12 high, lined and arched with brick. At Barnton in Great Budworth pariſh, Cheſhire, is another tunnel 560 yards long, at Saltenford in the ſame pariſh another 350 yards, and at Preſton on the hill a third 1241 yards long. Each of theſe are 17 feet high, and 13 and a half wide. The proprietors alone employ 50 boats on this canal, excluſive of as many more belonging to other perſons. They are calculated to carry 25 tons each, and drawn by one horſe, for which the proprietors receive per mile $1d\frac{1}{4}$ per ton. The whole was contrived by Mr. James Brindley, who was born 1716 at Tunſted in Wormhill pariſh, c. Derby, and died 1772 at Tumhurſt, in the pariſh of Wolſtanton. in this county. What remained unfiniſhed at his death was completed under the direction of Mr.

[a] Pennant, p. 58. [b] Ib IV. 189. [c] Holland. [d] Ib. [e] Plot, 397. [f] Ib. 59. [g] Lel. VII. 38. [h] Lel. VII. 37. [i] VI. 22. [k] Pennant, ubi ſup. p. 48. [l] Tan. 499.

Henſhall[p]. Dr. Congreve of Wolverhampton propoſed a junction of the Trent and Severn [p].

Bloreheath. About the head of this river near Drayton, Salop, is Bloreheath, where James Touchet lord Audley was ſlain fighting againſt the earl of Saliſbury, in the cauſe of Henry VI. and with him 2400 men. Another James was beheaded for joining the Corniſh inſurgents 12 Henry VIII. Mervin 9th lord was beheaded 1631, for high crimes and miſdemeanors. His ſon James was created earl of Caſtlehaven 1616. His brother's great grandſon James dying 1740, was ſucceeded by his ſon John, and he 1777 by his nephew George Thickneſs-Touchet, who is the preſent and 16th lord, the earldom ending with his uncle. Of this family was Edmund biſhop of Rocheſter, Hereford, and Saliſbury, in which laſt he died and was buried 1624.

"At Blorehethe, a mile above Drayton be northe, "was a feelde faught bytwene king Edwarde's men "and Henry the VIth. The erle of Sareſbyri and "Northern men on king Edward's parte overcam "lordes Audeley (ſlain) and Dudeley (wounded), "with quene Margaret, wife to Henry VI. and Cheſ-"ſterſhir men loſt the feld. She came to Eccleſhall. "Hauls, biſhop of Cheſter, her chapeleyn, cauſyd "the quene to ly ther [q]."

Blore heath was once a large common, but much of it is now incloſed. The account hiſtorians give of this battle is, that, in the 37th of Henry VI. James Touchet, ſecond lord Audley of that houſe, was ſent to encounter Richard Nevill, earl of Saliſbury, who had aſſembled forces to ſupport the houſe of York, in their pretenſions to the crown. Lord Audley, having raiſed about 10,000 men, approached near to the earl, in a plain called Blore heath, in order to prevent his march to London: whereupon the earl, finding it impoſſible to avoid an engagement, encouraged his men, and encamped on the ſide of a deep brook, the night before the day of St. Thecle, when the battle was fought. The lord Audley, with the van-guard of his army, paſſed the water; but the earl and his men, being deſperate, behaved with ſuch valour, that, after a ſharp encounter, the lord Audley, with moſt of his men, were ſlain, before the reſt of the forces could come to his or the van-guard's aſſiſtance. It appears, from a view of the place, that the earl was encamped on the north-eaſt of the brook, and lord Audley on the ſouth-weſt; and, as the brook is very ſhallow, the defeat was more probably occaſioned by the difficulty of aſcending the hill, than by the rear of the Lancaſtrian army not being able to paſs the water to ſupport their van-guard. The neighbouring inhabitants have a tradition, that during and after the battle the brook ran with blood. A croſs of wood was erected on the field of battle, which being thrown down ſome years ſince by a cow rubbing againſt it, the lord of the manor ordered a ſtone pedeſtal to be placed there, and the old croſs fixed upon it. The height of the pedeſtal, and the croſs, is about three yards. On the eaſt front of the pedeſtal is this inſcription:

On this ſpot
Was fought the battle of Blore heath,
In 1459:
Lord Audley,
Who commanded for the ſide of Lancaſter,
Was defeated and ſlain.
To perpetuate the memory
Of the action and the place,
This antient monument
Was repaired in 1765,
At the charge of the lord of the manor,
Charles Boothby Skrymſher.

The earl of Saliſbury enjoyed his victory but a ſhort time, being made priſoner by the Lancaſtrians at Wakefield, 1460, and there beheaded after the battle. Of his three ſons, the ſecond ſon, ſir Thomas Neville, was ſlain in the ſame battle: the eldeſt, Richard earl of Saliſbury and Warwick, and the third, John marquis Montacute, were killed at the battle of Barnet, 1470 [r].

"Hely a caſtel of the lord Audeleys, and a two He "mile of is Audeley village, wherby ſum think that "it is caled Hely caſtel for Audeley caſtel. The "tenauntes of Audeley come to this caſtle [s]."

At Hilton or Milton near Heleigh, Henry de Au- Hil deley 1223, erected a Ciſtertian abbey, valued at £.89. 10s. in which church the family buried [t].

Gerard's Bromley houſe was built by ſir Thomas Ge Gerard maſter of the Rolls t. Elizabeth. His ſon Bro
Thomas being knight marſhal of the king's houſhold, was by James I. created lord Gerard, which title continued in his family for four deſcents, and the younger branch had that of lord Gerard of Brandon, c. Suffolk, and earl of Macclesfield t. Charles II. now extinct [u]. Their great eſtate was claimed by the ducheſs of Hamilton 1720, who appealed to the Houſe of Lords againſt Thomas Fleetwood, eſq. but it was determined in favour of the latter.

Chebſey came from the Haſtings to the Staffords Ch and Harcourts. It is a large pariſh, and in the church-yard is a tall pyramidal ſtone, either the ſhaft of a croſs, or, like the three in Checkley church-yard, a funeral monument, perhaps Daniſh [x].

Eccleſhall is a very large manor called ſometimes a Ec barony, and belonged to the biſhop of Lichfield at the Conqueſt. Biſhop Durdent obtained a market and fair for it before 1161, and about 1200 biſhop Muſchamp had licence from king John to make a park here, and embattle the caſtle, which was rebuilt by biſhop Langton 1310 [y]. The value of this eſtate 1534 was, including the caſtle and manor, £. 57. 7s. per annum. The biſhops having other palaces in this county at Heywood, Brewood, Beaudeſert, &c. beſides Lichfield houſe in the Strand, London, do not appear to have reſided much here. In the civil war the caſtle was held for the king, and taken by the parliament before 1646, when it was ſo damaged that the biſhop could not reſide in it at the Reſtoration. The manor was ſold 1650 for £. 14,224. Biſhop Lloyd about 1695 rebuilt of brick all the ſouth front of the palace, which conſtitutes the beſt part of the houſe, and connected it with what before ſerved only for a farm houſe. Since his time it has been the conſtant reſidence of the biſhops. Biſhop Hough planted the grove, now converted into an elegant ſhrubbery; and the preſent biſhop Dr. James Cornwallis, by draining the grounds about the caſtle, has rendered the ſituation perfectly healthy [z].

[p] Pennant Ib. 50—55.
[q] Gent. Mag. XLII. p. 417.
[r] Dugd. II. 417. Mag. Brit. 81.
[s] Cheſterfield in Angl. Sac. I. 442. Whitlocke. Ib. 447.
[t] See his plan printed at the end of Erdeſwicke.
[u] Lel. VII. 36.
[x] Plot. 432.
[y] Tan. 501. Dugd. Bar. I. 747-50.
[z] Mr. Pegge's Antiquities of Eccleſhall. Bibl. Top. Brit. N° XXI.

Eccleſhall is a pretty market town, and in its church queen Margaret after the battle of Blore-heath was ſheltered by biſhop Hales[a]. Thomas Bentham biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry was buried in the church 1578. "Eccleſhaul caſtel longging to the "biſhop of Cheſter. Langton biſhop of Lichfield "made it[b]."

Pelſall, in the pariſh of Eccleſhall, was the ſeat and manor of Robert ſon of Gilbert younger ſon of R. de Corboil in Normandy, who came in with the Conqueror, and held it A. D. 1088, of Robert de Stafford with its appurtenances, by ſervice of a knight's fee. Gilbert married Iſabel ſiſter and co-heir of Hugh Lupus earl of Cheſter, whoſe arms they aſſumed in a canton. Az. John Peſhall of Horſley in this ſame pariſh was created a baronet 10 James I. 1612.

Near this is Wotton, where is a high paved way which Dr. Plot[c] took for a via vicinalis.

From the Noels of Ellenhall are likewiſe deſcended thoſe of Hilcote in this county, of Kirkby Mallory in Leiceſterſhire, and of Brook in Rutlandſhire, of whom Edward was created lord Noel of Ridlington by James I. and by Charles I. viſcount Campden, in default of iſſue male of Baptiſt Hicks lord Hicks viſcount Campden, whoſe eldeſt daughter and co-heir Julian he married, and his grandſon was created earl of Gainſborough by Charles II.[d].

Raunton alias De ſartis or Eſſars abbey, was founded for black monks by Robert Fitz Noel t. Henry II. ſubordinate to Haghmon priory, Salop, valued at £.102. 11s.[e]

"Stafforde caſtel not far from Stafford town on "the river of Sow[f]." Ethelfleda the Mercian built a caſtle here, whereof nothing now remains. A little church ſtands near the ſite called the Caſtle church. The caſtle on the hill a mile from the town was built long after by Ranulph firſt earl of Stafford. Erdeſwicke indeed from a certain deed dated from the caſtle near Stafford long before his time, concludes he only rebuilt it. Dr. Plot[g] thinks the caſtle there mentioned rather ſtood within the entrenchment at Billington, which may be only the remains of it, the lands wherein theſe works are being near to and ſtill remaining part of the demeſne land of the barony of Stafford. Mr. Pennant pronounces this a Britiſh poſt. Sir Simon Degge's MS. note on Plot ſays, there was a caſtle within the town near the broad Eye, and, in his time, a bank called the Caſtle bank. This may be the ſame noticed in Speed's map, now called Bully hill.

The Conqueror built a caſtle here, making Robert de Tony governor of it, who thence took the name of Stafford, and the deſcendants of his great grandaughter became barons and earls of Stafford. The barony had 60 knights fees, and was diſſolved by the death of Henry Stafford laſt duke of Buckingham. The moated ſite of their manſion houſe remains before the caſtle. Stafford was a principal town in this county under the Heptarchy, as it is now the county town, the aſſizes and ſeſſions being eſtabliſhed here by act of parliament 1 Elizabeth. That princeſs was here in her progreſs 1575, and aſking what was the cauſe of the decay of the town, was anſwered that the decay of capping was one cauſe, and another, that the aſſizes were taken away from the town. To which her majeſty replied, that ſhe would renew and eſtabliſh better the ſtatute for capping, and for the aſſizes ſhe gave her promiſe that the ſame ſhould ever after be kept at Stafford[h]. The town is well ſituate on the river Sow, over which it has a fair bridge, rebuilt 1782, ſhews foundations of walls, is well built, and is a corporation and borough containing above 5000 inhabitants. It was made a borough by king John at the requeſt of the Staffords, who alſo walled it[i]. It had a priory of black canons, founded by Peche biſhop of Lichfield 1180, value £.198.[k] Another of Franciſcans or Grey friars, founded before 10 Edward I. value £.35.13s.10d. a third of friars Auſtins, founded by Ralph lord Stafford about 1344, whoſe family monuments were removed hither from Stone, but not preſerved[l], and two hoſpitals of St. John and St. Leonard[m], the dean's houſe now the ſchool, founded by Edward VI. and endowed with the revenues of the two hoſpitals[n]. It has now two churches, one antiently collegiate for a dean and thirteen prebends, The deanry was valued at £.35 13s. 10d. and all the prebends at not above 38£. per ann.[o] This latter church has an octagon tower, which had a lofty ſpire, blown down 1593, to the great damage of the church, repaired the next year[p]. There is a county hoſpital, finiſhed 1772, ſupported by annual ſubſcription of between 8 and 9000*l.*[q] The town early gave title of baron to a family of its own name, whoſe deſcendant by the female line Henry Howard was created by James I. earl of Stafford, whoſe nephew John Paul Stafford was the 4th and laſt earl, dying 1762.

St. Berthelin was ſcholar to St. Guthlac, after whoſe death he retired to the iſland where Stafford now ſtands, then called Bethnie, which he afterwards quitted for the woods[r]. Edmund Stafford biſhop of Exeter 1395—1419, and John Stafford a Franciſcan writer, were born here[s]. Bethnie.

Two miles eaſt of Stafford is Beacon hill, a large parcel of rocks laid on a level eminence, and covered with graſs, having a ſteep aſcent on every ſide like a camp. Upon St. Amor heath under this hill a battle was fought in the civil war[t]. Beacon hill.

At Gnoſhall was a church of ſecular canons, valued at £.47 6s. 8d.[u] In this pariſh the miniſter and churchwardens annually chuſe a jury of twelve men or more, who not only join with them and the ſidemen in making the preſentments to the official (it being a peculiar), but are impanelled, and bring in their verdict in all eccleſiaſtical cauſes that fall out amongſt them for the year following[x]. Gnoſhall.

Tixall ſtands about four miles eaſt of Stafford. Roger earl of Montgomery held it at the Conqueſt, and Henry de Ferrers under him. It was in the Lytteltons in the reign of Edward IV. and Henry VI. a daughter of whom brought it in marriage to ſir John Aſton of Haywood, knt. whoſe eldeſt ſon Edward was ſheriff of this county 1528, 1540, and 1556, and built the manſion-houſe here, on a ſill of the windows there being this inſcription: Tixall.

William Yates made this houſe MDLV.

[a] Lel. VII. 32. Plot, 449. Mag. Brit. 63.
[b] Lel. VII. 36, 37.
[c] P. 402. G.
[d] Mag. Brit. 80.
[e] Tan. 499.
[f] Lel. VII. 36.
[g] P. 416.
[h] MS. Dearle.
[i] Holland.
[k] Tan. 499.
[l] Ib. 502.
[m] Ib. 503.
[n] Dearle's MS.
[o] Tan. 495.
[p] Plot, 369.
[q] G. Pennant, 73—78.
[r] Plot, 409.
[s] Mag. Brit. 70.
[t] Stuk. It. II. 24.
[u] Tan. 495.
[x] Plot, 313.

It was a handſome building, the firſt ſtory of ſtone, the reſt of timber and plaſter, and is engraved in Plot Pl. XXIX. It is taken down, and another manſion built near it, ſtill remaining. Sir Walter Aſton, ſheriff 1569 and 1574, built the Gretian gate-houſe, and died 1590. Sir Walter Aſton the patron of Michael Drayton, married Gertrude ſiſter of Mr. Sadler of Standon c. Herts, was made knight of the bath at the coronation of James I. baronet 1611, and for his ſervices in the Spaniſh match created baron Forfar. There is a portrait of him at Blithfield in this county. His ſecond ſon Walter, ſecond lord Aſton, married Mary daughter of Richard Weſton earl of Portland lord treaſurer, and defended Lichfield for the king, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and grandſon, both of his name, and a great grandſon James, who died 1755, leaving a ſon Walter who died 177 , and two daughters coheireſſes, of whom the younger married the hon. Thomas Clifford, now proprietor of this eſtate, and the eldeſt Mary ſir Walter Blount of Sodington c. Worceſter, bart.[y] Among the family pictures, &c. removed hither from Standon on the death of the laſt lord is the marriage of prince Arthur in tapeſtry, mentioned by Mr. Walpole[z].

Tixall gave birth to Edward Wetenhall biſhop of Cork[a].

On Tixall heath are two barrows called the King's and Queen's low[b]. Two urns found on this heath in the laſt century were lately in the cuſtody of Walter lord Aſton[c].

Shutborough. Near Tixall is Shutborow the ſeat of George Anſon, eſq. whoſe uncle, elder brother of the late lord Anſon, beautifully improved this eſtate of Shukborough with the long beard, who was reported in Leland's time to have given it to the mitre of Lichfield[d]. The choragic monument of Lyſicrates, the tower of Andronicus Cyrrheſtes, and the arch of Adrian at Athens, are imitated here among other antient and modern monuments of equal taſte. Some remains of the old manſion are behind the preſent[e]. By the road ſide is a ſarcophagus placed upon a wall to the memory of lord Anſon.

Ingeſtre. Not far from Tixall is Ingeſtre, a reſpectable manſion of the Elizabethan age, the body brick and the bows ſtone, the antient ſeat of the Chetwynds, of whom the laſt male owner Walter Chetwynd, eſq. who died without iſſue 1693, was a gentleman not more eminent for his antient family and great hoſpitality than for his ſkill in antiquities and for his encouragement of Erdeſwicke's reſearches. He rebuilt his pariſh church in a handſome manner 1677, and gave up a portion of tythes worth £.50. a year to it[f]. This eſtate now belongs to John Chetwynd Talbot in right of his mother the heir of John viſcount Chetwynd.

Hopton heath. Hopton heath on the ſide of Ingeſtre pariſh is noted for a ſkirmiſh between the king's forces, under the earl of Northampton and the parliament's under ſir William Brereton and ſir John Gill, in which the former were victorious, but from a too eager purſuit left their gallant leader to be killed by the enemy.

Chartley. "Chartely, the olde caſtel is now yn ruine: but "olde yerle Randol as ſum ſay lay in it when he "buildid Deulencres abbay. This caſtel ſtondith a "good flite ſhot from the building and goodly manor "place that now is ther as the principal houſe of the "Ferrars, and cam to them be ſimilitude by mar-"riage. Ther is a mighty large parke[g]." The Ferrars family here are as old as the Conqueſt, and were barons Chartley from 1298. Their greateſt property was in Derbyſhire, for in this county they had only Chartley and Tutbury[h]. Their heireſs Anne brought the barony by marriage to the Devereuxes. Robert D'Eureux ſon of Robert, mentioned by Mr. Camden, laſt earl of Eſſex and lord Ferrars of that name, dying without iſſue, Charles II. declared ſir Robert Shirley his heir general lord Ferrars of Chartley, who was afterwards advanced by queen Anne to the titles of viſcount Tamworth and earl of Ferrars, which are both enjoyed by his grandſon Waſhington 5th and preſent earl. The barony of Ferrars of Chartley devolved 1754 to Charlotte wife of George viſcount Townſhend[i], (daughter and heir of James Compton earl of Northampton by Elizabeth Shirley his wife,) by whom ſhe had iſſue George, now, on her death 1770, baron de Ferrars of Chartley, elected preſident of the Society of Antiquaries on St. George's day April 23, 1784, on the death of Dr. Jeremiah Milles, dean of Exeter, and the ſame year advanced to the antient title of earl of Leiceſter. Queen Elizabeth was at Chartley Aug. 1575, in her progreſs to Stafford[k]. This venerable pile, engraved in Plot, Pl. V. built great part of wood, round a court, was adorned with the arms and devices of the ſeveral proprietors, the initials of the builder Walter Devereux, and a bed wrought by the queen of Scots who was confined here. It was deſtroyed by fire 1781. At a ſmall diſtance on a knoll are the remains of the caſtle built by Ralph earl of Cheſter, from whom it paſſed to the Ferrars and Devereuxes, earls of Eſſex. In Stow church adjoining is a monument for Walter Devereux firſt viſcount Hereford, grandſon of the firſt lord Ferrars, and founder of the houſe of Chartley, who died 1558, with his own figure, and thoſe of his two wives[l].

The caſtle of Beaudeſert ſtood on a very high hill commanding a view of nine counties. It was wreſted with ſix other manors from the ſee of Lichfield in the reign of Edward VI. when biſhop Sampſon accepted in exchange from ſir William Paget baron Beaudeſert certain impropriations of the value of £. 183. a year, now reduced to poor vicarages or curacies annexed to the ſee. The houſe was rebuilt by Thomas lord Paget in the reign of Elizabeth, and has been much improved by the preſent owner[m]. In the drawing room is a fine portrait by Holbein of the firſt lord Paget. His monument in Lichfield cathedral was deſtroyed in the civil wars[n]. He was, as may be collected from his epitaph, ſecretary and privy counſellor to Henry VIII. and conſtituted by his will counſellor and adjutant to Edward VI. during his minority, to whom he was alſo chancellor of the duchy of Lancaſter, comptroller of the houſhold, and by him y Groſe. Pennant, 69. Salmon's Hertfordſh. 238. Douglas' Peerage of Scotland, 268.

z Aneed. of Painting, II. 68. a Parochial Antiq. MS. b Pennant, 71. c Paroch. Antiq. MS.
d It. VII. 38. e Pennant, 67, 68. f G. Pennant, 72. The houſe is engraved in Plot pl. 26.
g Lel. VII. 40. h Degge MS. n. i See before, p. 383.
k Life of Sir Thomas Smith, p. 190. l Pennant, p. 65.
m See the view of it Plot, pl. VIII. The gate-way is removed. Pennant, p. 96, 97. n Ib. 108. The antient finger ſtocks from this houſe, deſcribed and engraved by Plot, Pl. XXXII. fig. 11. p. 390, a puniſhment formerly inflicted by the Lord of Miſrule on ſuch ſervants as committed miſdemeanors during Chriſtmas, are now in Mr. Greene's Muſeum at Lichfield.

created created baron and knight of the garter, and by queen Mary lord privy ſeal. His grandſon William was 4th baron Paget[o]. In the park is a large fortification called Caſtlehill, double trenched, and almoſt circular except on the ſouth-eaſt ſide, having two entrances, and before the eaſtern one ſeveral advanced works. It probably was made by Canute when he ravaged theſe parts[p]. Mr. Pennant refers it to the Britans. Coal is dug in this park which will bear carving as ſtone. The choir of Lichfield cathedral is floored with this coal and alabaſter in alternate ſquares.

"The towne of Lichfield, for all the ſubſtance of "it ſtandith upon a low and equal ground, only the "cloſe and cathedrall church, with a long ſtreet that "lyith north on the bridge of the town is ſomewhat "upon high ground. Ther is no token that it ever "was walled. Ther hath bene a caſtle in the ſouth "ende, but no part of it ſtondeth: the plott with the "dikes is yet called the Caſtle field. In the mayne "town that is a fayre large thing, are three paroche "churches: St. Maries, a right beautiful piece of "worke in the very market place: St. Michael in "the ſouth-eaſt end of the town, and Stowe church "in the eaſt end, where is St. Chad's well, where is "ſeen a ſtone in the bottom of it, on which ſome "ſay St. Chadde was wont to ſtand naked in the "water and pray. At this ſtone he had his oratory "in the time of Wulpher king of Mercia. The ca-"thedral church was firſt dedicated to St. Mary and "St. Peter, and a biſhopric there erected [865] "by Oſwy king of Northumberland, and of the "Marches after he had ſlain Penda the pagan "king of Mercia. After the death of Oſwy Pen-"da's ſons falling to the faith were ſetters forth "of the ſame church, and favorers to Cedde, to "whom it was afterwards dedicated. The whole "cloſe was newly dyked and walled by biſhop "Langton, who made a gate at the weſt part, a "leſſer at the ſouth-eaſt part, and the biſhop's palace "at the eaſt end. The glory of the cathedral church "is the work at the weſt end exceeding coſtly and "fair. There be three ſtone pyramids, two in the "weſt end, and one in the middle. The library at "the weſt end was erected by Thomas Heywood, "dean. The prebendaries houſes in the cloſe, "builded by divers men, be very fayre. The cho-"riſters have a goodly houſe lately builded by biſhop "Blithe[q]." The cathedral is 411 feet long from eaſt to weſt, 66 broad from north to ſouth, the middle ſpire 258 feet and an half high, the weſt ſteeples 188 feet. Biſhop Clinton t. Henry I. built good part of it. Langton built the Lady chapel, t. Edward I. made a ſumptuous ſhrine for St. Chad, which coſt £.2000. and in his new palace hall cauſed the hiſtory of Edward I. to be painted, which remained to Erdeſwicke's time, though much decayed. He was buried in this chapel 1321, but his monument is now in the ſouth aile of the chancel, with thoſe of biſhops Patteſhull 1245, Blithe 1530, and Hacket 1670, and deans Heywood 1492, and Addiſon 1683. Over the weſt door were three rows of large whole length ſtatues of kings and Old Teſtament worthies, two rows of which were taken down about 42 years ago by dean Penny. The great weſt window in form of a Catharine wheel was given by James II. when duke of York, and over it without is a ſtatue of Charles II. The ſcreen behind the high altar is compoſed of rich fretwork, once whited over, but now cleaned and well repaired by the preſent dean Proby, in the niches of which were formerly ſtatues. The church was ſo completely ruined in the civil wars, the royaliſts having ſtood a formal ſiege in the cloſe, which was regularly fortified and ditched, that biſhop Hacket laid out £. 20,000. on repairing it. The library was burnt with all the records, and the middle ſpire beat down. The palace was rebuilt by biſhop Wood 1687. Near it is the choriſter's ſchool houſe, and an old gate to the ſchool in the Flemiſh ſtyle lately taken down.

Over the great weſt door of the cathedral, within the church, is the following inſcription:

Oſwyus eſt Lichfeild fundator, ſed reparator
Offa fuit: Regum fama perennis erit.
Rex Stephanus, Rex Henricus, primuſque Richardus,
Rex et Ioannes plurima dona dabant.

Supra hæc millenos Eccleſia floruit annos;
Duret ad extremum nobilis uſque diem.
Daque Deus longum ut hæc ſacra floreat ædes,
Et celebrent nomen plebs ibi ſancta tuum.

Fundata eſt Eccleſia Mercienſis
Quæ nunc Lichfeldia dicitur.
Facta Cathedralis Anno Domini
D C LVII.

An organ built originally for the uſe of this cathedral by father Smith, after the havoc of the civil war, when no part of that goodly fabric was left fit for divine ſervice but the chapter houſe, was at the reſtoration of the church by biſhop Hacket removed and placed in a loft in the Lady chapel, where it ſtood uſeleſs till its removal 1740 to the Vicar's hall. In 1745, a great number of ſoldiers being quartered in that room, broke it open, and burnt moſt of the wooden pipes. In this condition it was by the late dean Penny given to Mr. John Alcock the then organiſt, who, having for many years uſed it as a cloaths preſs, ſold it 1760 to Mr. Greene of Lichfield, who, by the aſſiſtance of the late Mr. Adcock of Leiceſter-fields, has reſtored it. It has a ſtop diapaſon and principal of wood, a twelfth and fifteenth of metal.

Higbert was ordained biſhop here A. D. 785 by the council of Chalcluith, which took away great part of the archbiſhop of Canterbury's juriſdiction[r]. King Offa procured this ſee to be made archiepiſcopal A. D. 789, which continued only ten years, when the act of Pope Adrian was revoked by Pope Leo III. his ſucceſſor, at the inſtance of king Kenulph. When Eadulf was archbiſhop of Lichfield 789, he had for ſuffragans the biſhops of Worceſter, Hereford, Leiceſter, Sidnaceſter, Elmham, and Dunwich. He was at the council of Cloveſho 803, which reſtored the rights of the ſee of Canterbury, and died 812[s]. The ſee was tranſlated to Cheſter on account of the meanneſs of the town 1075, and thence to Coventry 1102: but the biſhops ſoon returned hither, and Clinton built the cathedral about 1140, and augmented the chapter. Here are now a biſhop, dean, precentor, chancellor, treaſurer, four archdeacons, 27 prebendaries and 12 minor canons. The revenues of the ſee were valued 26 Henry VIII. at £.795. 17s. 6d. and of the chapter at £.436 10s.[t] Here was a houſe of Grey friars, or friars minors, founded by biſhop Alexander 1229[u], ſeveral parts of it are yet ſtanding, and greatly [o] Holland.

[p] G. Plot, 418.
[q] Lel. IV. 187, 188, 189.
[r] Sax. Chron. Flor. Wig.
[s] Godw. 310.
[t] Tan. 485.
[u] Lel. IV. 188. Tan. 501.

improved

improved by the leſſee William Inge, eſq. 1783; its revenues ſupport an hoſpital at Seal, c. Leiceſter. Here was alſo founded an hoſpital of St. John by biſhop Roger t. Henry III. refounded by biſhop Smith t. Henry VII. conſiſting of a maſter, 2 prieſts and 20 poor men, and another by Dr. Milley 1424[x]. St. Michael's church is remarkable only for its large yard of ſix or ſeven acres[y]. This with St. Chad's are chapels to St. Mary's in foro[z], which was rebuilt 1716, and its fine ſpire unneceſſarily pulled down.

Geffrey Muſchamp, biſhop of Coventry, in conſideration of the great kindneſs of king John to the church of Lichfield, appointed by deed three chaplains to celebrate maſs for his ſoul and the ſouls of his father, brother, and relations, with a ſufficient ſtipend. See the charter and its confirmation by the dean and chapter, printed in Liber Niger Scaccarii, p. 375.

This city was incorporated 1 Edward VI. by the ſtyle of bailiffs, burgeſſes, citizens, and the commonalty of the ſame. The ſenior bailiff is elected by the biſhop, the other by the corporation. They have power of life and death within their juriſdiction, a court of record and of piepoudre[a]. The caſtle in which Richard II. kept his Chriſtmas 1397, and was two years after confined, the city walls, and biſhop Clinton's coſtly tower are all gone. The caſtle ſtood on an eminence on the ſouth ſide of Tamworth ſtreet; the ſite is now converted into ſeveral ſmall gardens.

Lichfield gave birth 1617 to Richard Whittington the grammarian; to Mr. Camden's father; to Elias Aſhmole the antiquary, chymiſt, and herald, to Richard Weſton judge of the Common Pleas, grandfather to the earl of Portland of that name; 1663 to Dr. George Smalridge, conſecrated biſhop of Briſtol 1714, who died 1719; to Thomas Newton biſhop of Briſtol, who died 1782; and to Samuel Johnſon, LL. D. It gave title of earl to Charles lord d'Aubigny, ſo created and baron Newbury 1646, with whom expired theſe titles intended for his uncle Bernard Steward, ſlain at Rowton heath. Sir Edward Henry Lee, bart. of Ditchley, Oxfordſhire, was advanced to this earldom 1674, and ſucceeded 1716 by his ſixth ſon George Henry, and he 174$\frac{2}{3}$ by his ſon and nameſake, who dying 1772 without iſſue was ſucceeded by his uncle Robert (13th ſon of the 3d earl) who dying without iſſue 1776, the title is extinct.

"The north part of Lichfield is divided from the "ſouth by three pooles or lakes, whereof both the "two firſt lye by weſt, and nothing ſoe great as the "third that lyeth by eaſt. The firſt weſterne poole "is divided from the ſecond by a great maine long "cauſey, wherein be arches of ſtone for the water to "iſſue into the ſecond poole, and this cauſey ſerveth to "come out of the ſouth part of the town into the "north. This cauſey was laſt made with great ex-"pences by Walter de Langton biſhop of Lich-"field[b]." At preſent theſe three pools are reduced to Stow pool and Minſter pool. Lichfield is ſuppoſed to have its name, q. d. field of carcaſes, from the 1000 converts made by Amphibalus at Stichbrook and martyred here[c].

Between Streethay and Burton at Eddinghall is a raiſed way or via vicinalis pointing towards Lullington in Derbyſhire, and near it a barrow[d].

"Burton upon Trent hath but one paroch chirch "and a chapel at the bridge end. Trent cumpaſith "a great peace of the towne. Many marbelers "working in alabaſter[e]." It is a market town, and has a woollen manufactory. It has a handſome ſtone bridge of 36 arches over Trent, above a quarter of a mile long[f], built t. Henry II. or earlier. The caſtle was built by the Ferrars in the Conqueror's time[g]. The pariſh church adjoins to the abbey which was founded 1004, for Benedictines, by Wulfric Spot, valued at £.501 7s. Henry VIII. founded in it at the diſſolution a college of a dean and canons which ſubſiſted but four years. Modwenna lived here retired in an iſland called Andredſy, where ſhe was buried[h]. The abbot of Burton having a vaſt rough hilly ground about a mile from the abbey called it Sinai, and it is ſtill called Sinai park[i]. The annals of this houſe from A.D. 1004 to 1263, were printed among Gale's Scriptores Angliæ, Ox. 1684, p. 246.

Blithfield came to the Bagots by marriage of ſir Ralph with Elizabeth daughter and heireſs of Richard Blithfield t. Edward II. Before that they were ſituated at the neighbouring village of Bagots Bromley. From a younger branch of this family deſcended the antient barons Staffords afterwards dukes of Buckingham, Milliſent heireſs of Robert lord Stafford having married Harvey Bagot. Sir William Bagot was created lord Bagot of Bagot's Bromley, 1780. The houſe is built round a court. The park at ſome diſtance from the houſe abounds with large oaks, and in the church are the family monuments[k].

On the confines of Cank wood is Heywood park another houſe belonging to lord Paget, remarkable for the beautiful woody dingles that wind into the ſides of the foreſt. Here Mr. Pennant[l] ſuppoſes was the park of red deer which Leland[m] ſays the biſhop of Lichfield had in his manor of Shugborow. "Some call Shokeſborow Heywood becauſe it ſtand-"ith by it." The bridge is the longeſt in England, having once 42 arches, now reduced, as well as the manor barn[n].

Colwich adjoining belonged to a family of that name from the reign of Henry III. to that of Elizabeth, when it paſſed into that of Leiceſter of Tabley c. Cheſhire. The church is a prebend of Lichfield. Here is the burial-place of the Anſons, a columbarium, and the monument of ſir William Wolſeley, bart. 1728, who was drowned in his chariot by the accidental breaking of a mill-dam in Longdon village by a thunder-ſhower[o]. This family is of great antiquity at Wolſeley in this pariſh. Beaudeſert and a great piece of Cank foreſt are in Longdon pariſh[p]. This laſt village was antiently full of gentlemen's ſeats, now reduced to one belonging to Francis Cobb, eſq. The manor is of great extent[q].

Colton hall belonged to the Gaſtenoys, and by marriage with their heireſs to the Drakelows and Grieſ-

[x] Tan. 502, 503. [y] Mag. Brit. 5.
[z] Ecton. [a] Pennant, 115.
[b] Lel. IV. 188. [c] Plot, 399. Mag. Brit. 156. [d] G. Plot, 402. Mag. Brit. 16.
[e] Lel. VII. 36. [f] See Gent. Mag. XXI. p. 296. 407. [g] Holland.
[h] Tan. 491. Capgrave. [i] Burton, Leiceſterſh. 119.
[k] G. Mag. Brit. 77. Pennant, p. 81—86. [l] P. 79.
[m] It. VII. 38. [n] Pennant, p. 66. [o] Ib. 80. [p] Lel. VII. 38.
[q] Pennant, p. 95.

leys, and in the reign of Charles I. to lord Aſton, when it was burnt by the careleſsneſs of a ſervant. Near the bridge over the Trent here is ſometimes taken the burbot, or eel pout, from its reſemblance to an eel, though ſhorter, a fiſh of a diſguſting appearance, but of a delicate flavour and very firm[r], found in greater plenty in the river Witham, and the great eaſt fen in Lincolnſhire. Between Colton and Blithfield the country alters for the worſe and becomes wet and mirey.

At Abbot's, or Paget's Bromley, was within memory of Dr. Plot's time a ſport on Chriſtmas, New Year's, and Twelfth Day, called the Hobby horſe dance. A perſon carried between his legs the figure of an horſe made of thin boards, and in his hand a bow and arrow, which, paſſing through a hole in the bow, and ſtopping on a ſhoulder in it, made a ſnapping noiſe as he drew it to and fro, keeping time with the muſic. With this man danced five or ſix others carrying on their ſhoulders as many rein deer's heads, three of them painted white, and three red, with the arms of the chief families Paget, Bagot, and Welles, to whom the chief revenues of the town belonged, painted on the palms of them, with which they danced the hays and other country dances. To this hobby horſe dance there alſo belonged a pot which was kept by turns by four or five of the chief of the town, whom they called Reeves, who provided cakes and ale to put into this pot: all people who had any kindneſs for the good intent of the inſtitution of the ſport giving pence apiece for themſelves and families, and ſo did foreigners who came to ſee it, with which money, after defraying the charge of the cakes and ale, they not only repaired their church, but kept their poor too: which charges are not now ſo chearfully borne[s]. Hobby horſe money is mentioned in the old pariſh books of Stafford and Seighford[t]. This cuſtom was continued till the civil war, and ſir Simon Degge ſaw it often practiſed. He ſays they had ſomething of the kind to get money to repair the church at Stafford, every common council collecting money of his friends, and he that could bring in moſt money to the hobby horſe was looked on as a man of beſt credit, ſo that they ſtrove who ſhould moſt improve his intereſt, and, as he remembered, it was accounted for at Chriſtmas[u].

At Blithbury, in Abbot's Bromley, was a ſmall Benedictine monaſtery, afterwards nunnery, founded in the 12th century by Hugh Malveyſin, ſuppreſſed by Wolſey[x].

Radgely is a market town with a great annual horſe fair. The ſeat of the Weſtons belongs now to Aſhton Curzon, eſq.[y]

At Hermitage, commonly called Armitage, is the ſeat of Mr. Liſter, and on the oppoſite ſide of Trent Maveſyn Ridvare, the property of the Maveſyns from the reign of Edward I. to that of Henry IV. when ſir Robert Maveſyn and ſir William Handſacre meeting with their followers near their reſpective eſtates in the oppoſite cauſes of the houſes of York and Lancaſter, the latter was ſlain, and the daughter and coheireſs of the former married his heir, and carried her eſtate into that family. The monument of ſir Robert has this inſcription:

Hic jacet dñs Robertus de Mauveſine miles dñs de Mauveſine Ridware, qui occubuit juxta Salopiam 1403, ſtans cum rege dimicans ex parte ſua uſque ad mortem: cujus aiæ propitietur Deus.

Near the church is the gateway of the antient manſion of the Mauveſins, and on the other ſide Trent beyond High bridge is a moated fragment of the rival houſe of Hanſacre[z].

Mauveſyn Ridware deſcended through the heirs of Maveſyn, Cawardin, and Chadwick, to Charles Sacheverel Chadwick, eſq, who died lately ſeiſed thereof.

King's Bromley belonged to the earls of Cheſter, and earl Leofric died here 1057[a]. It is now the property of lady Holte of Aſton, and Mrs. Elizabeth Newton, ſiſters and coheireſſes of the late John Newton, eſq.[b] The abbot of Burton on Trent gave two palfreys to have a market and fair here till the king (Henry III.) came to full age[c]. King's Bromley.

Fairwell was a houſe of canons regular, afterwards of Benedictine nuns, founded by Roger Clinton, biſhop of Cheſter or Lichfield, about 1140, ſuppreſſed by Wolſey, and annexed to Lichfield for the choriſters[d]. Fairwell.

In taking down this church, which undoubtedly was the nunnery chapel, to rebuild it about 1747, were found in the ſouth wall ſix feet from the ground, and ſome feet from each other and ſeveral feet between the rows three ranges of coarſe earthen veſſels of different ſizes, the ſmaller ſix inches and a quarter high, three 1-8th over at the mouth, ſixteen and a half round; the larger 11 inches and a half high, four and a half at the mouth, 24 round, laid on their ſides, the mouths to the inſide of the church covered with thin coat of plaiſter[e]. One of them is preſerved in Mr. Greene's muſeum at Lichfield.

At Yoxall in levelling a piece of ground near Mr. Wright's houſe were found near 40 veſſels of coarſe brown ſoft earth almoſt full of the aſhes and fragments of human bones. Moſt of the veſſels were broken in taking them up, but one of them preſented to Mr. Greene of Lichfield, and engraved in Gent. Mag. XLIV. p. 358, is copied in our plate of urns. Yoxall.

Whichenour is remarkable for the tenure whereby it was held by ſir Philip de Somervile 1. Edward III. with other manors in this county of the earl of Lancaſter, lord of the manor of Tutbury, to pay but half a knight's fee and half the eſcuage uſually aſſeſſed, but to find a flitch of bacon at all times of the year except Lent for every man or woman after the firſt year of their marriage, and for every religious of every rank after the firſt year of their profeſſion, on the party making oath, and two of his neighbours anſwering for him, that he hath not once in that time repented of his marriage. The party being a freeman was to have beſides the flitch, half a quarter of wheat and a cheeſe; if a villan only half a quarter of rye[f]. The oath extends only to married perſons, omitting religious: but the prize does not appear to have been often claimed by either. The Somervils held the manor from the Conqueſt till it fell by marriage to the Griffiths, and is now the property of John Levet, eſq.[g] purchaſed from the late John Ofley, eſq. Whichenour.

[r] Pennant, ubi ſup. p. 80, 81. Brit. Zool. III. p. 175, 4to. Plot, 241.
[s] Plot, 434.
[t] Paroch. Antiq. of Staffordſhire, MS. in Seighford.
[u] MS. n. on Plot ubi ſup.
[x] Tan. 494.
[y] Pennant, p. 94.
[z] Pennant, p. 87 ex Erdeſwicke.
[a] Dugd. Bar. I. 10.
[b] Pennant, 89.
[c] Mag. Rot. 5 H. III. rot. 9. 6. Madox Hiſt. of Exch. 286.
[d] Mag. Brit. 150. Tan. 496.
[e] Mr. Green in Gent. Mag. XLI. 59. Biſhop Lyttelton in A. S. min.
[f] Plot, 440. Mag. Brit. 27. Blount's Jocular Tenures.
[g] Pennant, 90—94.

Fiſherwick.

Fiſherwick park, north-eaſt of Lichfield, is a fine ſeat of the earl of Donnegal, built from a deſign of Mr. Brown [h]. In Plot's time it was the ſeat of lord Maſſareen, in whoſe family of Skeffington a younger branch of that antient houſe in Leiceſterſhire it had long been, and of whoſe heir the earl of Donnegal purchaſed it [i].

My worthy friend Mr. Pennant [k] ſought in vain for ſeven tumuli near Lichfield in this county, for they are expreſsly ſaid in Archæol. I. 57, which he cites, to be near Lichfield in Hants, and ſo Mr. Camden had ſaid before.

Clifton-Camville.

The church of Clifton-Campville, which took its name from the Camvilles who held it from 1200 to 1315, has an elegant ſpire, and a monument for ſir John Vernon of Harleſton and his lady 1545 [l]. Richard de Canville acknowledged that Hugh late earl of Cheſter enfeoffed Geffrey Marmion of the manor of Clifton, which Geffrey left one daughter Aldreda, married to William de Campville, by whom ſhe had a ſon Geffrey de Campville, father of the ſaid Richard, that William de Campville and Geffrey de Campville held the ſaid fee of the earls of Cheſter, from heir to heir, that, on the deceaſe of Ralph earl of Cheſter, earl de Ferrariis had the ſaid fee as his purparty in right of his wife Agnes, ſiſter to the ſaid earl Ralph, and therefore that he holds his fee of the ſaid earl Ferrars, and not of the king [m].

Thorpe Conſtantine.

Thorpe Conſtantine is the ſeat of William Inge, eſq.

Needwood.

Needwood foreſt or chace is the richeſt foreſt land in England [n]. This was a part of the eſtate of the de Ferrars earls of Derby. It was granted to Edward II. ſon of king Henry III. and belongs to the king as duke of Lancaſter.

Hanbury.

Hanbury belonged to a family of that name, whoſe monuments are in the church.

Morelands.

The Morelands however externally barren yield plenty of coal, lead, copper, marble and mill ſtones [o], and Wotton in ſo hard a ſoil brings forth and feeds beaſts of a large ſize [p]. The common people all over the Morelands make uſe of oat malt without any barley at all [q].

Dove r. Churnet r. Blith r.

The Dove and Churnet rivers are juſt mentioned by Leland VII. p. 37. Of Blith river he ſays it ſpringeth at Whetle Moor, and runneth be Draicote and Teyne villages, and about Rokceſter goes into Dove [r].

Dieulacres abbey.

Dieulacres abbey half a mile from Leek was founded for Ciſtertians 1214 by Randolph 3d ſurnamed de Blundeville, earl of Cheſter, who tranſlated the monks of Pulton in Cheſhire hither by order of the ghoſt of his grandfather. Upon relating the viſion to his wife, ſhe ſaid, Dieu l'encres, "God increaſe it," which became the name of the place now corrupted to Dieulacres. It was valued at £.227 5*s. per annum* [s].

Cotton Clanford.

At Coton Clanford was born 1659, William Wollaſton, author of "The Religion of Nature delineated." He was aſſiſtant maſter of Birmingham ſchool 1682, but ſoon after had a large eſtate left him by his kinſman Mr. Wollaſton of Shenton c. Leiceſter, and dying 1724, was buried at Finborough c. Suffolk, where he had alſo a good eſtate.

Leek.

Leek belonged to the earls of Cheſter, and is a market town. In the church-yard is a tall pyramidal ſtone, adorned with imagery and fretwork. There are ſeveral ſuch in the church-yards of Draycot, Chebſey, Ilam, and Checkly, ſerving where ſingle as croſſes, where more as ſepulchral monuments, probably of the Danes. The Naked field a little diſtant eaſt north-eaſt from Checkley church is ſuppoſed to have been a field of battle [t]. Leek rocks and Henclouds in this pariſh are ſtupendous bare rocks [u].

Seven miles eaſt of Leek is Ecton hill, remarkable for a fine copper mine belonging to the duke of Devonſhire. The hill where the mine lies is conical, and its perpendicular height from the Dove, which runs cloſe under it, is 700 feet, and its diameter from that river quite through about half a mile. This mine was known before Dr. Plot's time, for he ſays it was worked ſeveral years by lord Devonſhire himſelf, ſir Richard Fleetwood, and ſome Dutchmen, but they had all left it off before he came into the country as not worth their while [x]. It was re-opened about 30 years ago by a Corniſh miner, and ſome adventurers at Aſhborne took a leaſe of the preſent duke's grandfather to ſearch for copper here. £. 13000. were expended without ſucceſs; at laſt, after ſinking a ſhaft above 200 yards deep, immenſe quantities of copper were found, and the leaſe is now fallen in. It clears now annually between £. 8. and 10,000. and might produce double. More than 300 perſons, men, women, and children, are annually employed. The miners work ſix hours at 2*d. per* hour; women by taſk earn from 4*d.* to 8*d. per* day, and are paid by meaſure, according to the quantity of ore they can break or pulverize. On the oppoſite ſide of the hill has been diſcovered a lead mine which is likely to turn out to great advantage. Nine miles north of Leek the county ends in a point where there are three ſhireſtones near this county, and thoſe of Derby and Cheſter [y].

The church at Dilhorne has an octangular ſteeple [z].

Cheadle is a ſmall market town with a freeſchool [a].

At Alton three miles eaſt of Cheadle are the ruins of a caſtle which belonged 22 Henry II. to Bertram de Verdon, whoſe male line failing it came by marriage to the Furnivals, and afterwards to the Nevills, and belongs at preſent to the earl of Shrewſbury's family.

Not far from Checkley, by a ſmall brook called Peak, are the ſtately ruins of Croxden abbey. Bertram de Verdon gave the monks of Aulney in Normandy a piece of ground at Chotes or Chotene 1176, to build an abbey of their order, which was the Ciſtertian. This was in three years removed to Crokeſden or Croxden; where all his family were buried [b], and alſo king John's heart. It belongs now or lately to the earl of Macclesfield [c]. It was valued at £.90. 5*s.* 11*d. per ann.*

Uttoxeter, though much reduced by fire ſince Mr. Camden's time, is ſtill a market town. It gave birth 1542, to that eminent ſcholar and mathematician of the Elizabethan age Thomas Allen, whoſe father was lord of the manor of Buckenhall in this county. He was fellow of Trinity college Oxford, and re-

[h] Pennant, 117. See it in Plot, pl. XV. [i] P. 209. [k] ubi ſup. p. 117. 119.
[l] Ib. 120. [m] Record. 27 H. III. rot. 11. a. [n] Plot, 108.
[o] Mag. Brit. 106. [p] Holland.
[q] Degge. MS. n. [r] VII. 37. [s] Tan. 500.
[t] Plot, 432. [u] Plot, 171. Mag. Brit. 94, 95. [x] P. 165.
[y] Mr. Efford in Gent. Mag. XXXIX. 59. [z] Plot, 369. [a] Mag. Brit. 94.
[b] Tan. 498. Mag. Brit. 148. Dr. Rawlinſon engraved the foundation charter of this abbey in his poſſeſſion.
[c] Mag. Brit. 96.

moved

moved to Glouceſter hall, where he died at a great age 1632, leaving his valuable library and collection of MSS. to ſir Kenelm Digby, who depoſited it in the Bodleian library [d].

"Uttok Ceſtre one paroch chirch. The menne of "the towne uſith graſing, for there be wonderful paſ- "tures upon Dove. It longith to the erledom of "Lancaſter. A freſcole foundid by a prieſt Tho- "mas Allen. He founded another at Stone in the "reign of queen Mary [e]."

Uttoxeter is remarkable for the longevity of its inhabitants. Sir Simon Degge, who was born there, and died at the age of 92, in a letter dated Aug. 27, 1726, writes, "In the three weeks I have been at Uttoxeter there have been buried four men, and two women, one woman aged 94, the other 83: one man 91, another 87, another 82, and one young man of 68. Yeſterday I talked with a man of 90, who has all his ſenſes, and walks without a ſtaff. About a month ſince he had a fever, and was ſpeech- leſs two days. His daughter is 60, and about ſix months ſince he buried his wife who had lived 63 years with him, and was aged 85. In this town are now living three men and their wives, who have had 53 children, and each hath the ſame wife by which he had his children now alive. They are all young men, the oldeſt not being above 60. I will only tell you that in 1702 there died here three women, their years as follows: one 103, the ſecond 126, the third 87." Sir Simon ſays he had ſeven brothers and ſiſters, all living together not long ſince, and the youngeſt 60 years of age [f]. The Minors family of Hollingbury hall in this pariſh were particu- larly addicted to the ſea. William ſailed 11 times to the Eaſt Indies, whither he had been followed by capt. Richard Minors, proprietor of the ſeat in Plot's time, diſtinguiſhed in the Dutch wars, and againſt the rebels at Colcheſter; but the eſtate was ſquan- dered, and belonged to James Wood in Degge's time [g].

"Tutburi a ſmaul market, the caſtel longging to "the king now by the duke of Lancaſter. It was "afore Ferrares caſtel erle of Darby [h]." John of Gaunt built the gatehouſe and walls about the caſtle; of whom certain manors were held by ſervice of carving for him when he kept his Chriſtmas here, and hunting his greeſe or wild ſwine in Auguſt [i]. Dr. Plot mentions an extraordinary timber bridge over the caſtle ditch, the pieces whereof were not above a yard long, yet it was not ſupported by pillars, archwork, or any other prop. Sir Simon Degge ſays it was above 30 yards long, but the arches that bore up the bridge and planks were of conſi- derable length. They affirm that the more weight was upon it the ſtronger it was, and may be if well loaded it would not quake ſo much as he had made it with his weight [k].

Here was another extraordinary ceremony of elect- ing a king of the Minſtrels, and turning out a bull by the prior of Tutbury, which being ſoaped and made as mad as poſſible was to be purſued by them, and when taken within the county and before ſunſet to be brought to the market croſs and there baited. By this bull as a tenure the duke of Devonſhire holds the priory [l], but of late years has commuted for it, and gives the minſtrels four marks whether they get the bull or not. The king of muſic and the bailiff have alſo of late compounded: the bailiff giving the king five nobles in lieu of his right to the bull, and then ſends him to the earl of Devon's manor of Hardwick to be fed, and given to the poor at Chriſt- mas. Sir Simon Degge was ſteward here ſeveral years, but there was no going to the church in his nor his predeceſſor's time, but it might be ſo in the time of Popery, and diſcontinued ſince [m]. This priory was of the Benedictine order, founded 1080, and valued at £.244. 16*s.* 8*d. per ann.* [n] R. de Ferrars' eſtate, which was moſt conſiderable in Derbyſhire, was made over to his ſureties for their ſatisfaction [o].

Dr. Plot has recorded in the parſonage yard at Leigh an apple tree whoſe branches ſpred 17 or 18 yards. It was planted by Mr. Palmer the rector, and he lived to gather 46 ſtrikes of apples from it one year [p]. Leigh.

In the moſſes about Kingſton have been found both firs and alders, the firs firm and ſound, but the alders ſoft, yet the bark perfectly retaining its colour and ſhape, that it appears plainly what wood it is [q]. Kingſton.

Madeley in Pirehill hundred near Newcaſtle ſeems to be the Magdaba of Tilbury, and Dr. Plot [r] thinks the lake under Heley caſtle agrees with the de- ſcription, though the property is common to many other waters. Madeley.

Meare in the ſame hundred and contiguous takes its name from an adjoining meer or lake, and having an old fortification called the Bruff or Burgh, a ſtrong irregular fortreſs, its rampart compoſed chiefly of ſtones, two of the corners projecting as baſtions, op- poſite to which on the heath is Camp hill, which has no ſign of a camp, only two round and many other barrows. A round conical hill here is called Coplow. Theſe works may regard Oſrid king of Northumber- land, ſlain in battle at Mere, perhaps invading the territory of Kenred king of Mercia A. D. 705 [s], who probably caſt up Camp hill, and Oſrid Bruff. Meare.

Near Meere at Willowbridge is a medicinal water found out by lady Bromley, and recommended in a tract by Samuel Gilbert, 1676, formerly much fre- quented, now quite deſerted. Willough- bridge.

At Mathfield are two barrows, one called Rowlow, and Roman coins in an urn were found in Dale-cloſe between this and Okeover [t]. Mathfield.

At Okeover adjoining, the eſtate of the antient family of Okeover, is a ſquare entrenchment called Hallſteds, and certain lows and barrows in Arbour- cloſe [u]. Theſe barrows, as moſt others in this county, to mention it once for all, are of ſtones piled up together. Dr. Plot would fain perſuade himſelf the earth was grown to ſtone; but the truth is, the county abounds ſo much in ſtone, that, without having recourſe to any peculiarity in nature or cuſtom, one may eaſily account for its barrows being of that ma- terial preferably to any other. Okeover.

At Rowceſter was an abbey for black canons, founded by Richard Bacoun 1146, valued at £.100. per ann. [x] Rowceſter.

[d] Biog. Brit. ſup. p. 192. art. Wheare.
[e] Lel. VII. 36.
[f] MS. n. on Plot's Staffordſh.
[g] MS. n. on Plot, 275.
[h] Lel. ubi ſup.
[i] Mag. Brit. 9, 10.
[k] MS. n. on Plot, 383.
[l] Plot, 436—439. Pegge on it, Archæol. III. 86. See a proclamation for putting off the fair and of the minſtrels court 1536 in San- derſon's Acta Publica, XX. 46, 47. Pat. 12 C. I.
[m] Degge's MS. n. on Plot. Blount's Jocular Tenures, p. ult.
[n] Tan. 493.
[o] Dugd. Bar. I. 264.
[p] Plot, 225, and MS. n. Degge.
[q] Degge MS. n. on Plot, 214.
[r] Plot, 44.
[s] H. Huntingdon, IV. 4. Plot, 409.
[t] Pennant, 46.
[u] Plot, 449.
[x] Tan. 496.

and

and in the church are divers monuments of the Staffords [y].

Stanton. Stanton in Ellaſton pariſh gave birth, 1598, to archbiſhop Sheldon, who died 1677.

Calwich. Calwich, in the ſame pariſh, a ſmall convent of Black canons, founded before 1148 [z].

Canwell. Canwell, near Lichfield, a Benedictine priory, founded by Geva Ridell, daughter of Hugh earl of Cheſter about 1142, and ſuppreſſed by Wolſey [a]. It is now the ſeat of ſir Robert Lawley, bart.

Earls of Stafford. Ralph Stafford was created earl of Stafford by Edward III. and married the heireſs of Hugh Audley earl of Glouceſter. Hugh his ſon and ſucceſſor died on pilgrimage at Rhodes, and was ſucceeded ſucceſſively by his ſons Thomas and Edmund, which laſt married the daughter and heireſs of Thomas of Woodſtock duke of Buckingham, and had no iſſue [b]. After Edward Stafford, laſt duke of Buckingham of that name, who was beheaded by Henry VIII. 1521, as his father Henry had been by Richard III. three of the family enjoyed the title of lords Stafford, viz. Henry his ſon, Edward his grandſon, and Henry his great-grandſon. The only daughter of this laſt being married to ſir William Howard, knt. younger ſon of Thomas earl of Arundel and Surrey, was advanced with him to the title of baron and baroneſs Stafford by Charles I. and her huſband afterwards to that of viſcount Stafford 1640 [c]. He was beheaded on Tower-hill 1680 for the part he took, or was ſuppoſed to have taken, in the Popiſh plot, but Henry his eldeſt ſon was created earl of Stafford 4 James II. His nephew John-Paul Stafford Howard the 4th earl dying 1762 without iſſue, the title was extinct.

[y] Mag. Brit. 108. [z] Tan. 497. [a] Tan. 496.
[b] Holland. Dugd. Bar. I. 160.—172. [c] Dugd. Ib. II. 277.

Rare Plants found in Staffordſhire.

After Tripolium. Sea Starwort; at Ingeſtre, in a place called the Marſh, within two miles of Stafford, near the place where the brine of itſelf breaks out above ground.

Avena nuda. Naked oats or Pilcorn; in corn fields.

Campanula latifolia. Giant Throatwort; in the mountainous part of this county.

Euphorbia Characias. Red Spurge; on the paper-mill pool-dam in Heywood park.

Fumaria claviculata. Climbing Fumitory; on the banks of the river Trent not far from Wolſeley.

Lichen pyxidatus ; cocciferus. Red Liverwort or Scarlet headed Chalice-moſs; on mole hills in Cank wood and in Fair Oak and Wolſeley park.

Lycopodium clavatum. Club-moſs, or Wolves-claw; on the mountains.

Phallus impudicus. Stinking Morel, or Stinkhorns; in the park at Bentley, and lanes thereabout; at Oldfallings, and elſewhere, near Wolverhampton.

Sambucus nigra β. White-berried Elder; in the hedges near Combridge, in Roceſter pariſh, plentifully.

Sorbus domeſtica. The True Service, or Sorb; in the Moorlands.

Vaccinium Vitis idæa. Red Whorts or Whortle-berries; on the mountains.

MAP OF SHROPSHIRE

FROM THE BEST AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

STAFFORDSHIRE

CHESHIRE

DENBIGHSHIRE

MONTGOMERYSHIRE

Shropshire

WORCESTER SHIRE

STAFFORD SHIRE

SALOP SHIRE

RADNOR SHIRE

HEREFORD SHIRE

MONTGOMERY SHIRE

BEWDLEY FOREST

WYRE FOREST

LONGMOOR FOREST

CLEEBURY FOREST

CLEE HILL

MALVERN HILLS

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

Worcester Road

SEVERN RIVER

Bridgnorth

Kidderminster

Stourbridge

Dudley

Halesowen

Bromsgrove

Droitwich

Worcester

Evesham

Pershore

Tewkesbury

Upton

Malvern

Great Malvern

Ledbury

Tenbury

Bewdley

Cleobury Mortimer

Clee Hill

Ludlow

Richards Castle

Leominster

Bromyard

Knighton

Presteigne

Kington

Hereford

Ross

Monmouth

Abergavenny

Pontypool

Newport

Usk

Chepstow

Caerleon

Caerwent

Caldicot

Magor

Llanvaches

Llanvair

Llanvihangel

Llanvihangel Crucorney

Llanvihangel Ystern Llewern

Llanvihangel Rogiet

Llanvihangel Tor y Mynydd

Llanvihangel Pontymoile

Llanvihangel Gobion

Llanvihangel Gwernesney

Llanvihangel Llantarnam

Llanvihangel Ty Uwch Gwent

Llanvihangel Ty Coch

Llanvihangel Ty Isaf

Llanvihangel Ty Mawr

Llanvihangel Ty Rhiw

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Dafen

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ddu

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Fedw

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Fron

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Gaer

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Gelli

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Graig

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Lan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Llan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Llwyn

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Nant

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Pant

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Rhos

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Waun

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan Fawr

Llanvihangel Ty Gwyn ar Ystrad Fechan F

SHROPSHIRE.

THE fourth of thoſe counties which are ſuppoſed to have been antiently inhabited by the CORNAVII, was called by the Saxons Scipyp-ſcype and Shpobbe-ſcype, and by us Shropſhire. It is much larger than the reſt, and not inferior to them in fertility or pleaſantneſs; bounded on the eaſt by Stafford, on the weſt by Montgomery and Denbigh, on the ſouth by Worceſter, Hereford, and Radnorſhires, and on the north by Cheſhire. It is thick ſet with towns and caſtles, having been a bordering county, or, as Siculus Flaccus expreſſes it, Ager Arciſinius againſt the neighbouring Welſh, whence our anceſtors by a Saxon word called the borders of this county towards Wales the Marches, having been the boundary between England and Wales; and ſome of the nobility in this county were called Lords Marchers or lords of the borders, who had a kind of Palatine juriſdiction [a] in their reſpective territory, and adminiſtered juſtice to the inhabitants in their own courts, and were poſſeſſed of various privileges and immunities; among others, an exemption from the king's writs in certain cauſes. Notwithſtanding this, if any diſpute aroſe about the barony or its boundaries, it was to be referred to the king's courts. Theſe were formerly called Marquiſſes of the Marches of Wales, as appears from the Red Book of the Exchequer, where we read that at the coronation of Eleanor wife of Henry III. "the Marchiones Wal-"lie, to wit, John Fitz Alan, Ralph de Mortimer, "John de Monmouth, and Walter de Clifford, in "the name of the Marches ſay that the Marches have "a right to find ſilver ſpears, and bring them to ſup-"port the ſquare canopy of purple ſilk at the coro-"nation of the kings and queens of England [b]." But theſe particular rights of the lords Marchers by the calm of peace and by the royal authority have gradually been brought into diſuſe.

I muſt juſt premiſe that I do not conceive this whole county to have belonged to the Cornavii, but only ſo much of it as lies on this ſide the Severn. The part on the other ſide belonged to the ORDOVICES, who ſpread themſelves to a great extent here; part of which, as alſo on this ſide Severn certain ſmall territories which belonged to the Lords Marchers, were not long ſince by act of parliament 27 Henry VIII. united to this county. The whole may be properly divided into thoſe two parts, as the Severn interſects it from ſouth-weſt to north eaſt.

In the part beyond the Severn the ſouth boundary is formed by the river Temd, Britiſh Teſidiauc, into which afterwards falls the Colun, Britiſh Colunwy, and by contraction Clun. This riſing more inland not far from a populous little town called Biſhops Caſtle, becauſe it belonged to the biſhops of Hereford, whoſe dioceſe extends over great part of this county, gives name to Colun Caſtle, commonly called Clune Caſtle, built by the Fitz Alans, deſcendants of Alan ſon of Flaold the Norman, afterwards earls of Arundel, when they had the care of the borders againſt the Welch, and harraſſed them by their frequent inroads. But where it joins the Temd among uncertain ſhallows riſes a hill famous in antient times, called Caer Caradoc, becauſe about A. D. 53, Caratacus the renowned Britiſh king fortified it with a rampart of ſtone, and held it out obſtinately with his ſubjects againſt Oſtorius and the Roman legions, till the Romans breaking down that rude maſs of ſtones, whoſe remains ſtill ſubſiſt, forced their way in, and obliged the unarmed Britans to retreat to the heights of the mountains *. The king, after his wife, daughter, and brothers, were made priſoners, eſcaped by flight, but afterwards (ſuch is the inſecurity of adverſity) was betrayed to Oſtorius by queen Cartiſmandua, in whoſe honour he confided, and was carried to Rome; and though he had engaged the Romans in a long and difficult war [c], obtained his and his adherents' pardon from the emperor Claudius, not by a mean ſupplication, but by a generous freedom of ſpeech †. For forcing this hill, and taking the king priſoner, the honours of a triumph were decreed to Oſtorius; the ſenate accounting the taking of Caratacus as conſiderable as the exhibition of Syphax by P. Scipio, and of Perſes by L. Paulus to the Roman people. Though the wretched compiler [d] of our hiſtory ſays nothing of this war or of this prince, the memory of it is not totally loſt among the common people, who ſay a king was defeated on this hill; and the poem called Triades mentions as chief among the three moſt renowned Britiſh warriors, Caradauc Urichfras or with the ſtrong arm, who I have not the leaſt doubt was Caratacus himſelf.

Colune or Clune Caſtle.

Caer Caradoc. K. Caratacus.

The next town is Ludlow, Britiſh Dinan and Lyſtwyſoc, q. d. the Prince's Palace, riſing on a hill at the confluence of the Temd and Corve, and of greater beauty than antiquity. Roger de Montgomery firſt built the beautiful and ſtrong caſtle overhanging the Corve, and afterwards added walls, which include near a mile in extent. On the attainder of his ſon Robert, Henry I. kept the caſtle for himſelf. It was afterwards beſieged, and gallantly withſtood [e] the attacks of king Stephen, who preſſed it cloſely; and Henry, ſon of the king of Scots, being pulled off his horſe with an iron hook, narrowly eſcaped being hoiſted into the caſtle, had not Stephen come up and by his ſingular courage reſcued him from this iminent danger ‡. Afterwards king Henry II. be- 1139

Ludlow.

* Tac. An. XII. 33. Humph. Lluyd Deſc. Brit. p. 45. † See before, v. I. p. xxxii. xxxiii. ‡ Mat. Paris.

[a] Which they inſolently exerciſed over the poor inhabitants of the Marches. Holland.

[b] This claim has been ſince transferred to the barons of the Cinque Ports.

[c] Nine years. Tac.

[d] Q. who this is? Mag. Brit. IV. 659. takes it for H. Lluid, but he is very particular about it. Deſc. Brit 45. 40.

[e] Paganel defended it. Mag. Brit. IV. 696. Gibſon miſ-tranſlates it, Henry himſelf defended it.

ſtowed this caſtle, with the valley below it along the Corve, commonly called Corveſdale, on Fulk [f] de Dinan. It afterwards belonged to the Laciés [g] of Ireland, and came by a daughter of Geofrey de Jenevile, of Poitou, or as ſome ſay from a family of Lorrain, from whoſe deſcendants it paſſed again by a daughter to the Mortimers, and from thence became part of the royal demeſne. The inhabitants afterwards built in the heart of the town on the higheſt ground a very beautiful and their only church. From that time it became reſpectable, and began to outſhine its neighbours; and though king Stephen, Simon de Montfort, and Henry VI. harraſſed it in the civil wars, it always recovered itſelf, and now eſpecially ſince Henry VIII. eſtabliſhed a council of the Marches, ſomewhat reſembling the French parliaments, whoſe preſident keeps his court here for the moſt part, which you ſhall hardly ever ſee unemployed, either from the extent of authority here or from the amazing fondneſs of the Welſh for litigation. This council conſiſts of the lord preſident, as many counſellors as the king pleaſes, a ſecretary, attorney, ſolicitor, and four juſtices of the Welſh counties.

Jenevile.

Burford.

Cornwall.

Lower on the Temd appears Burford, which came from the poſterity of Theodoric Say to Robert de Mortimer, and from his poſterity to Jeofrey de Cornwaile, deſcended from Richard earl of Cornwall and king of the Romans, and his family have to this preſent time enjoyed the name of barons, but not their rank in parliament. "Burford," ſays the Inquiſition 40 Edw. III. "is held of the king to find five men for "the army in Wales and by the ſervice of a ba-"rony." I muſt obſerve here, that thoſe who held an intire barony were commonly accounted barons, and according to the opinions of ſome of our learned common lawyers, baron and barony were connected like earl and earldom, duke and dukedom, king and kingdom.

Baron and barony conjugates.

Cleehill.

Cleybury.

Kinlet.

Blunt [Bloud.] Norman for yellow hair.

Bridgenorth.

The Temd now quits Shropſhire, and almoſt on its banks towards the north riſe the gentle hills called Cleehill, famed for producing excellent barley [h], and ſome veins of iron. On a branch of them, at the little village of Cleybury, Hugh de Mortimer built a caſtle, which was preſently after ſo completely deſtroyed by Henry II. as a nurſery of rebellion that ſcarce any traces of it now remain: and Kinlet, where the Blunts flouriſhed, an antient, illuſtrious, and numerous family in theſe parts, who have extended their branches a great way, and who certainly have their name from their yellow hair. Next I ſaw Brugmorf, commonly called Bridgenorth, on the right bank of the Severn, called ſo from Burgh and Morfe an adjoining foreſt, having been antiently named only Burgh, defended by walls, a ditch, a large caſtle, and the Severn (which runs among the rocks in a channel of unuſual depth), and ſituate on a rock, out of which the ways leading to the upper part of the town are hewn. It was firſt built by Ethelfleda lady of the Mercians. Robert de Beleſme earl of Shrewſbury walled it round, and truſting to the natural ſtrength of the place, revolted from Henry I. as did afterwards Roger Mortimer from Henry II. but both with ill ſucceſs, being obliged to ſurrender and make their ſubmiſſion. At the ſiege of this place, as we read in our chronicles, Henry II. was aimed at with an arrow, and would have been killed had not Hubert de St. Clare, a nobleman devoted to the king's intereſts, interpoſing, met both the arrow and death for his prince. Before this time Ralph de Pichford had behaved himſelf ſo valiantly here, that Henry I. gave him little Brug in this neighbourhood, "by "the ſervice of finding dry wood for the chamber "in Brug caſtle when the king came hither*." A little way from hence is Willeley [i], antiently the ſeat of Warner de Willeley, from whoſe deſcendants it paſſed by the Harleys and Peſhall to the famous family of Lacon, enriched by marrying the heireſs of Paſſelew, and lately by the eſtates of ſir J. Blunt of Kinlet.

In theſe parts are interſperſed ſeveral other towns and caſtles, viz. Newcaſtle, Hopton Caſtle, Shipton, and on the river Corve, Corveſham, held by Walter de Clifford by the gift of king Henry II.† Brancroft, and Holgot, commonly called Howgate, formerly belonging to the Mandutes, afterwards to Robert Burnell biſhop of Bath, and afterwards to the Lovells.

Higher up are Wenlocke, now noted for lime-ſtone as t. Richard II. for a copper mine: but much more noted in the Saxon times for a moſt antient ſettlement of nuns‡, where the moſt holy virgin Milburga [k] ſpent her life, and found a burial-place. It was rebuilt and filled with monks by E. Roger de Montgomery. Acton Burnell, a caſtle of the Burnells, afterwards of the Lovells, rendered famous by a parliament held there t. Edward I. This family of the Burnells was famous and antient, and greatly enriched by the biſhop before-mentioned. It ended t. Edward II. when the heireſs of it Matilda was married to John Lovell, and a ſecond time to John [l] Handlow [m] whoſe ſon Nicholas aſſumed the name of Burnell, and from him [n] the Ratcliffes earls of Suſſex are deſcended. Scarce a mile hence is Langley, lying low in a woody park, the habitation of the family of Lea, which ranks amongſt the moſt famous and antient in theſe parts [o]. Near theſe places is Condover, once a manor of the Lovells, but lately of Thomas Owen, juſtice of the common pleas, and a great encourager of literature, lately deceaſed, leaving his ſon ſir Roger by his various learning worthy ſuch a father. This manor, as appears by the records, "was "held of the king in capite to find two foot-ſoldiers "for one day for the army during the Welch wars." I would here once for all give the reader to underſtand, that the nobility in theſe parts held fiefs of the kings of England, on condition of being ready with ſoldiers to defend the borders whenever war broke out between the Engliſh and Welſh. Near this is the little village of Pitchford [p], which formerly gave name to the antient family of Pitchford, but is now the property of R. Oteley. Our anceſtors gave Bridgenorth.

* Lib. Inq. † Lib. Inq.

‡ William Malmeſbury de geſt. Pont. IV. 164.

[f] Fulk Fitzwarine, ſurnamed de Dinan.

[g] Walter de Laci was impriſoned in it ſoon after it was built. Dugd. Bar. I. 95. ex Lel. Coll.

[h] Biſhop Gibſon ſays Camden miſtakes barley for pit coal.

[i] Willey in the maps and Index Villaris. Adams makes it the ſeat of a knight. Q. if Walley; Eſquire Foreſter's in Bowen's map.

[k] daughter of king Merwald and niece to Wulpher king of Mercia. [l] Handlou. Dugd.

[m] Hugh. Dugd. Bar. I. 139. the ſame as had Clebury caſtle.

[n] by Catharine his great grandaughter married to ſir John Ratcliffe. Dugd. Bar. II. 62. [o] now extinct. Gibſon.

[p] Guntanarius de Pitchford. Lib. Rub. Scaccarii. MS. n. Gale.

it this name from a ſpring of pitch which they did not diſtinguiſh from bitumen. This ſpring is in the court-yard of a private perſon: on the ſurface of it bitumen floats every day, and is moſt carefully ſcummed off as in the lake Aſphaltites in Judea, in the pool at Samoſata, and in the fountain at Agrigentum in Sicily; but the inhabitants uſe it only as pitch. Whether it is good againſt the falling ſickneſs, and has an attractive power of drawing, cloſing up wounds, &c. like that in Judea, I have not heard of any body who has yet tried. More to the weſt is Pouderbache caſtle, now in ruins, formerly called Purlebache, the ſeat of Ralph Butler, younger ſon of Ralph Butler of Wem, from whom the Butlers of Woodhall in Hertfordſhire are deſcended. Below this is Huckſtow foreſt, extending a great way among the mountains, where at Stipperſton's hill riſe ſeveral great heaps of ſtones like rocks cloſe together, called by the Britans Carneddau tewion. I do not preſume to gueſs, as ſome have done, whether theſe were ſome of thoſe alluded to by Giraldus Cambrenſis in theſe words: "The laſt "Harald on foot with a company of foot ſoldiers "lightly armed, and furniſhed with ſuch proviſions "as the country produced for him[p], went over all "Wales, and made his way through it in ſo brave a "manner that he left very few alive. In token and "perpetual memorial of this victory, you will find "in Wales many heaps of ſtones according to the "antient cuſtom in the places where he gained any "advantage with theſe letters inſcribed on them,

"Hic fuit victor Haraldus.
"Here Harald was victorious."

More to the north ſtands Caurſe caſtle, once the barony of Peter Corbett, from whom it came[q] to the barons Stafford; and near it Routon, a moſt antient caſtle on the weſtern edge of the county, not far from the Severn, formerly belonging to the Corbetts, now to the antient family of the Liſters. Before that it was the property of John le Strange of Knocking, out of reſentment to whom Llewellin prince of Wales levelled it with the ground[r], as we find in the life[s] of Fulk Fitz Warine. In the Roman times it was conſiderable under a ſimilar name in Antoninus, RUTUNIUM; nor can we poſſibly miſtake in this, ſince both the name and diſtance which he aſſigns between it and the eminent ſtation Uriconum, a well known town, exactly agree. Near it are Abberbury caſtle, and Watleſbury[t]; which laſt came from the Corbetts to the noble and knightly family of the Leightons. It ſeems to have taken its name from that conſular high road Watling-ſtreet, leading hence to the extremity of Wales, as Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis informs us, by two towns called from that public ſtreet Stretton, between which in a vale are ſtill remaining the ruins of an antient caſtle called Brocard's caſtle, ſurrounded by verdant meads, which antiently were fiſh-ponds. But theſe caſtles, and others, which I can hardly enumerate, do for the moſt part owe their deſtruction not to the rage of war but to the ſecurity of peace and length of time.

Let us now croſs the river to that part of the county which is on this ſide Severn, which I before obſerved properly belonged to the Cornavii. This is again in ſome ſort divided into two parts by the river Tern[u] running north and ſouth, and ſo called from its riſing in Staffordſhire out of a ſpacious lake, ſuch as we call Tearnes[v]. In the hithermoſt or eaſtern of theſe parts where the Tern joins the Severn ſtood URICONIUM[x] as Antoninus calls it, but Ptolemy VIROCONIUM, Ninnius Caer Vruach, the Saxons Wpeken-ceaſtep, we Wreckceter and Wroxceter. This chief city of the Cornavii ſeems to have been founded by the Romans when they fortified this bank of the Severn where the river is fordable, which it is not lower down towards its mouth. But, after ſuffering greatly in the Saxon wars, it was totally ruined in the Daniſh, and is now a very ſmall country village, where the plough frequently turns up Roman coins, evidences of its antiquity. I ſaw nothing here beſides a few pieces of walls (commonly called the old work of Wroxceter), built of hewn ſtone, divided by ſeven rows of Britiſh brick[y] and arched on the inſide. Where theſe ſtand I ſuſpect has been a caſtle, from the inequality of the ground, the banks and ruins of walls ſcattered up and down. Where the city ſtood occupying no ſmall extent, the ſoil is blacker than elſewhere, and yields plenty of excellent barley. Below this place, I am told, ran the Roman military road called Watling-ſtreet, either through a ford or over a bridge, whoſe foundations were lately uncovered[z] a little higher up in making a fiſhing dam, which we call a Weare, in the river ſtrait to the forementioned Strattons, q. d. Street towns, though its ridge is not now conſpicuous. The antient name of this Viroconium appears more ſtrongly in the neighbouring hill called Wreken hill, by others Gilbert's[a] hill, from whoſe top a moſt delightful plain is a moſt agreeable proſpect all round over the country below. This hill runs on a great way covered with trees, and under it on the Severn is Buldewas, commonly called Bildas, where was a monaſtery once famous for being the burial-place of the antient family of the Burnells, patrons of it. Higher up is an houſe which has its name from the public Street or military way called Watling-ſtreet. Near it are to be ſeen the remains of Dalaley caſtle, which on the attainder of Richard earl of Arundel, king Richard II. by act of parliament annexed to the principality of Cheſter juſt erected by him. Not far from the foot of this mountain in a deep vale on the Roman way ſtands Okenyate, a ſmall village noted for its rich coal mines; ſo exactly agreeing in the diſtance aſſigned by Antoninus to USOCONA from Viriconium and Pennocrucium that we cannot in the leaſt doubt that Okenyate is Uſocona. Nor is the name

Tern r.

URICONIUM.

Wroxceſter.

Wreken hill.

Buldewas.

Dalaley caſtle.

Okenyate.

[p] victu patriæ conformi. Q. Such fare as he had been uſed to in his own country, viz. Norway.
[q] 1. Ed. III. Dugd. Bar. I. 160. It belongs now to lord Weymouth. Gibſon.
[r] 1. Hen. III. Dugd. Bar. I. 665.
[s] I ſuppoſe the Geſtes of Guarine and his ſons cited by Leland, Coll. I. 252. and which Holland calls Poems compoſed upon his good fortune.
[t] So many names hereabouts whoſe names terminate in bury or borough, beſpeak the reſidence of the Romans and their fortifications.
[u] Terne is to ſay a lake or poole. Lel. It. VIII. 33.
[x] Some copies of Antoninus have Urioconium and Viroconium. Weſſeling. p. 469.
[y] Camden's words are, "Septemplici Britannicorum ordine," which Mr. Gale MS. n. explains, "opere lateritio & lapide interjecto "(ut Eboraci & Colaniæ) diatonico." Like all the Roman buildings in Britain.
[z] and are ſtill to be ſeen at low water. G.
[a] St. Gilbert's hill. Baxter.

againſt us, ſince Ys, which in Britiſh ſignifies lower, ſeems to have been added to expreſs its lower ſituation. On the other ſide under this hill appears Charleton caſtle, formerly the ſeat of the Charletons, who were alſo lords of Powis; and more to the eaſt, near Staffordſhire, Tong caſtle, antiently Toang, not long ſince repaired by the Vernons, as was alſo a college in the town, which I have read was firſt founded by the Penbriges. The inhabitants here have nothing to boaſt of ſo much as a bell famed all over the neighbourhood for its ſize. To this place adjoins Albrighton, the eſtate of Radulfus de Pitchford t. Edward I. now of the Talbots, deſcended from the family of the earls of Shrewsbury.

Charleton caſtle.

Tong caſtle.

Albrighton.

Draiton.

Beyond the Terne on its bank is Draiton, where, in the heat of the civil wars between the houſes of Lancaſter and York, was fought a battle very fatal to the Cheſhire gentry. For, though it was almoſt a drawn battle on both ſides, yet they being divided, and adhering to their reſpective parties with ſuch animoſity, were ſlain in great numbers. Lower down, very near the Terne, is Hodnet, which had antiently noble inhabitants of its own name, from whom it came by inheritance by the Ludlows to the Vernons. "It was held antiently of the honor of "Montgomery by the ſervice of being ſeneſchal of "the ſaid honor *." From hence the Terne paſſing by a few country villages, receives the little river Rodan, and, after proceeding a few miles near Uriconium before-mentioned, falls into the Severn. On this Rodan, not far from its riſe, ſtands Wem, where are to be ſeen marks of a caſtle formerly begun. This was in the early Norman times the barony of William Pantulph, from whoſe poſterity it came at laſt to the Butlers, from them by the Ferrars of Ouſley, and barons Greyſtock, to the barons Dacre of Gilleſland. A little way from hence, on a woody hill, or rather rock, antiently called Radcliffe, is a lofty conſpicuous caſtle, named from the red rock Redcaſtle, and by the Normans Caſtle Rous, formerly the ſeat of the Audleys, by the bounty of Matilda L'Eſtrange. But nothing of it now remains ſave the ruined walls. Scarce a mile off lies the ſite of a ruined little city almoſt decayed. Its antiquity and founders, however, are evidenced by the Roman coins and the bricks uſed by the Romans. The neighbours call it Bery from Burgh, and ſay it was very famous in Arthur's time [b].

1457.

Hodnet.

Rodan r.

Wem.

Red caſtle.

Bery.

Proceeding thence on the ſame river we ſee Morton Corbet, a caſtle of the Corbets, where, within memory, Robert Corbet, who had a paſſion for building, began a magnificent houſe [c] that he might live more ſplendidly, and at his eaſe; when preſently death obliged him to depart and leave his work unfiniſhed [d]. The Corbets are of antient rank in this county, and held large eſtates under Roger Montgomery earl thereof at the Norman invaſion. Roger Fitz Corbet held Huelebec, Hundeſlit, Actun, Fernleg, &c. Robert Fitz Corbet in Uleſtanſton, Rotlinghop, Branten, Udecot [e].

Morton Corbet.

More to the ſouth lies Arcoll, the ſeat of the knightly family of the Newports [f], and near it Haghmond abbey, which, if not founded, was handſomely endowed by the Fitz Alans.

Arcoll.

Haghmond.

Not much lower, on the Severn, is pleaſantly ſituated the chief town of this county, riſen out of the ruins of old Uriconium, which we now call Shrewſbury and Shrowſbury, ſoftening the name of Scpobbebyrig, given it by our Saxon anceſtors, becauſe the hill was covered with ſhrubs or trees. In which ſenſe the Greeks had their Beſſa [g], and the Britans called this city Pengwerne, q. d. the Head or Brow of the Alder-grove, on which account here was alſo a noble palace of the ſame name. But whence they now call it Ynwithig, and the Normans Scropeſberi, Sloppeſbury, and Salop, and in Latin Salopia, I am at a loſs to diſcover, unleſs derived by many different corruptions of the antient name of Scrobbes-berig. Some perſons ſkilled in the Britiſh tongue ſuppoſe it called Ynwithig as equivalent to Placentia, from the Britiſh word Mwithan, and that the Bards gave it that name becauſe the antient princes of Wales took a particular pleaſure in it. It ſtands on a reddiſh hill, having two beautiful bridges over the Severn, which forms almoſt a circle round it, making it an iſland all but a very ſmall iſthmus [h]. Whence our Antiquarian poet Leland,

Edita Penguerni late faſtigia ſplendent:
Urbs ſita lunato veluti mediamnis in orbe
Colle tumet modico, duplici quoque ponte ſuperbit;
Accipiens patria ſibi lingua nomen ab alnis.

Pengwern its diſtant lofty ſummits ſhows,
Which Severn's ſemicircling ſtreams encloſe.
Its gentle ſlope and bridges give it fame;
From alder grove derived its antient name.

Nor is it fortified by nature only, but alſo by art. For Roger de Montgomery, to whom it fell by gift from the Conqueror, built a caſtle on a riſing cliff facing the north, for which purpoſe he pulled down near 50 houſes; and his ſon Robert revolting from Henry I. walled round the ſide where it is not defended by the river. But theſe walls never that I know of felt the attacks of an enemy except in the barons' wars againſt king John. In the early Norman times it was ſufficiently inhabited and frequented. According to the ſurvey of England [i] it paid a yearly tax of £. 7. 16*s*. [10*d*.] and had 252 citizens, of whom 12 were bound to keep guard before the kings of England when they were in this city, and as many to attend them when they went a hunting. The origin of this cuſtom I take to have been when, not many years before [k], Edric Streon, duke of Mercia, a conſummate villain, had here privately aſſaſſinated king Athelm as he was hunting. At the ſame time it was the cuſtom, according to the ſame ſurvey, "that a "woman, on whatever terms ſhe married, if a widow, "ſhould pay to the king 20 ſhillings, if a maid 10."

But to return. This earl Roger not only erected its fortifications, but many other buildings both public and private, and founded a fair monaſtery in honour of St. Peter and St. Paul, which he endowed with large poſſeſſions, and, among the reſt, the church of St. Gregory, "on condition (according to the re-"giſter of the monaſtery), that, when the canons "who held prebends in it died off, the prebends "ſhould return to the monks." This occaſioned no ſmall diſpute, the ſons of the canons ſuing the monks

* Inq. 10 Ed. II.

[b] As the common ſort aſcribe whatever is antient and ſtrange to king Arthur's glory. Holland.

[c] In a barren place after the Italian model. Ib. [d] and the old caſtle defaced. Ib.

[e] And in later ages this family far and fairly propagated, received increaſe both of revenue and great alliance by the marriage of an heir of Hopton. Ib.

[f] Knights of great worſhip, deſcended from the barons Grey of Codnor and lords of Mothwy. Ib.

[g] in Locris. Βησσα τι ωιδιον. Καλεσι δ'αυτως απο τε συμβεβηκοτος, δρυμοδης γαρ τοπος εστιν. Strabo, ix, 652. Stephanus Βησσα, ταπεινα. Heſych. Βησσαι, τοποι χειμαροι.

[h] This paragraph is a tranſlation of Leland, It. IV. 180.

[i] Fol. 252. In the Confeſſor's time it paid geld according to 100 hides. Ib. [k] About A. D. 1006.

for the prebends held by their fathers. For at this time canons and prieſts in England were not obliged to celibacy, and it was become a cuſtom that eccleſiaſtical benefices ſhould deſcend to the next of kin by inheritance. But this diſpute was ended in the reign of Henry I. when it was ordained that the heir ſhould not ſucceed to eccleſiaſtical benefices, and laws were enacted at the ſame time about the celibacy of the clergy. In proceſs of time other churches were built here: for, not to mention the houſes of Dominican, Franciſcan, and Auguſtine friars, founded by the Charltons, Jenevilles, and Staffords, two collegiate churches were erected, one dedicated to St. Cead, with a dean and 10 prebendaries, the other to the Virgin Mary, with a dean and nine minor canons.

The city is at preſent well built and populous, carries on a conſiderable trade, and is grown rich by the induſtry of its inhabitants, by the cloth manufacture, and by the trade with the Welſh. For hither almoſt all the commodities of Wales are brought as to one common market, it being inhabited both by Welſh and Engliſh, who ſpeak each other's language; and, among other things greatly to their praiſe, is the grammar ſchool founded by them, the beſt filled in all England, whoſe flouriſhing ſtate is owing to proviſion made by its head maſter the excellent and worthy Thomas Aſhton. At this city H. Percy the younger rebelling againſt Henry IV.[l] and being on the point of attacking its walls, was ſuddenly thwarted in all his well-concerted meaſures by a turn of fortune. The king was unexpectedly at his back with an army, which the young chief eagerly attacking, after a long and hot diſpute[m], deſpairing of victory, ruſhed upon his fate. The place is ſtill called Battlefield, in which the victorious monarch founded a chapel, and appointed a prieſt or two to pray for the ſouls of thoſe ſlain in that battle.

Shrewſbury is in 20° 37″, longitude from the Azores, and 52°. 53″ latitude.

I know not whether it may not ſeem foreign to my deſign to obſerve, that in this city firſt broke out, A. D. 1551, that mortal diſtemper called the ſweating ſickneſs, which ſoon ſpread all over the kingdom, being particularly fatal to perſons in the prime of life, who were ſeized with a violent ſweating, and died or recovered in a day's time. The beſt remedy diſcovered was, that thoſe who were ſeized with this ſweating in the day time ſhould go to bed directly in their cloaths; but if they were taken in the night, and in bed, ſhould lie ſtill without ſtirring for 24 hours, and ſhould be kept without ſleeping. The moſt learned phyſicians differ about the origin of this diſtemper. Some aſcribe it to the chalky ſoil of England, though this is by no means general. They ſay * "that in certain moiſt conſtitutions the ſubtle, and at the ſame time very corrupt vapours which ariſe from ſuch ſoils, convey a ſubtle contagion to the ſpirits or fine ſerum of the blood. Whatever is the cauſe of it, it is certain the contagion affects the finer particles of the blood, ſo that one ſingle day puts an end both to the diſorder and to the patient." But, leaving this to the examination of others, I ſhall only obſerve, that this diſtemper made its appearance in England three times in the laſt century, and I have no doubts of its having viſited us formerly, though not taken notice of. It appeared firſt A. D. 1485, when Henry VII. began his reign, a little after the great conjunction of the ſuperior planets in Scorpio. A ſecond time, but with leſs violence, though attended with the plague, 33 years after, A. D. 1518, after the great oppoſition of the ſame planets in Scorpio and Taurus, at which time it alſo viſited Flanders, and the upper part of Germany. Laſtly, the third time, in the aforementioned year 1551, when another conjunction of the ſame planets exerted its influence. But this may more than ſuffice on this ſubject, which will appear trifling to thoſe who pay no regard to the experience of the learned[n].

Near this city the Severn takes many windings, eſpecially at Roſſal, where it fetches a compaſs, and returns almoſt back again: and hereabouts they uſe that moſt antient kind of veſſel called floats, made of rough boards and beams faſtened together, which carry their goods down the river. Their uſe and name comes to us from Germany and the Rhine. On the river ſide ſtand Shrawarden, formerly a caſtle of the earls of Arundel, afterwards of the moſt honourable Thomas Bromley late chancellor of England; Knockirg built by the lords L'Eſtrange, from whom it came by inheritance to the Stanleys, earls of Derby; and near it Neſſe (commanded by a craggy rock, with a famous cavern), which, with Cheſwarden, king Henry II. gave to John L'Eſtrange, from whom ſprung the extenſive families of L'Eſtrange of Knocking, Auindelegh, Elleſmer, Blackmere, Luthebam, and Hunſtanton, in Norfolk. From thoſe of Knocking, on the death of the laſt without iſſue male, the eſtate came by Joan an only daughter, wife of George Stanley, to the earls of Derby. Further from the river on the weſtern edge of the county lies Oſweſtre, or Oſwaldſtre, Britiſh Croix Oſwalde, a ſmall town ſurrounded with a ditch and wall, and defended with a ſmall caſtle, but a place of great trade, eſpecially in fine thin Welſh cottons, of which large quantities are vended here every week. It has its name from Oſwald, king of Northumberland (having before been called Maſerfield), whom Penda the pagan king of Mercia overthrew and ſlew here in a great battle, and cauſed his dead body to be torn in pieces with the moſt barbarous cruelty. Whence a very antient Chriſtian poet ſings thus of him:

Roſſal.

Floats.

Shrawarden.

Knocking.

Neſſe.

Cheſwarden.

Barons L'Eſtrange 20 E. IV.

Oſweſtre.

A. D. 642. Oſwald ſlain.

Cujus & abſciſſum caput abſciſſoſque lacertos
Et tribus affixos palis pendere cruentus
Penda jubet; per quod reliquis exempla relinquat
Terroris manifeſta ſui, regemque beatum
Eſſe probet miſerum; ſed cauſam fallat utramque.
Ultor enim fratris minime timet Oſwius illum;
Imo timere facit, nec Rex miſer, imo beatus
Eſt, qui fonte boni fruitur ſemel & ſine fine.

The bloody victor Penda ſtrait commands
Cut off the Monarch's head and both his hands,
And each be fixed upon a lofty ſtake,
That all beholders thence might warning take
Of Penda's power, and deem the holy king
A wretch forlorn; but fails in either thing.
Avenging Oſwy, fearleſs of his hate,
Approaches faſt, nor dreads his brother's fate;
Alarms the Conqueror, and this leſſon gives;
The king who at the fount of bleſſings lives
In endleſs joy, howe'er in pieces torn
By tyrant's power, is not a wretch forlorn.

* H. Fracaſtorius.

[l] In order to advance to the crown Edmund Mortimer earl of March, as the undoubtful and right heir, whoſe father king Richard II. had alſo declared heir apparent. Holland.

[m] Wherein the Scotiſh men who followed him ſhewed very manly valour, when the earl of Worceſter, his uncle, and the earl of Dunbar were taken, he deſpairing of victory, &c. Ib.

[n] Such as attribute nothing at all to celeſtial influence and learned experience. Ib.

This

This town ſeems to owe its origin to religion; the Chriſtians of that age accounting it ſacred, and Bede relates that miracles were wrought on the ſpot where Oſwald fell*. According to Carodoc of Lancarvon, Madoc, brother of Mereduc, repaired it, and the Fitz Alans, afterwards its Norman lords and earls of Arundel, walled it round. It has twice experienced the fatal effects of eclipſes of the Sun in Aries, 1542 and 1567; both being followed by dreadful fires. That which happened upon the laſt eclipſe ſpread ſo far, that near 200 houſes were deſtroyed in the town and ſuburbs. Below it to the north-weſt is an hill triple trenched called Hen-Dinas, q. d. the old palace, ſaid by the neighbours to have been a city, though others° think it was a camp of Penda or Oſwald.

Whittington.

Scarce three miles from it is Whittington, not long ſince a caſtle of the Fitz Warins, deſcendants of Warin de Metz, a Lorrainer, who married the heireſs of William Peverell, who is ſaid to have built Whittington, and by her had Fulk, father of that famous Fulk Fitz Warin, whoſe various and uncertain fortunes in war were the aſtoniſhment of our forefathers†. In the reign of Henry III. licence was granted to Fulk Fitz Warin "to fortify in a ſufficient manner "the caſtle of Whittington," as appears from the Cloſe Rolls, 5 Henry III. This barony ended at laſt in a female, and in the laſt age went by Hancford to the Bourchiers now earls of Bath. Under this caſtle were held ſome lands by Wrenoc, "ſon of Meuric, "by the ſervice of being Latimer[p]," q. d. Interpreter, between the Engliſh and Welſh: which I mention from an old inquiſition to ſhew the meaning of the word Latimer, which ſo few are acquainted with though ſo famous in this kingdom.

Barons Fitz Warin.

Latimer, what it means.

Shenton.

Whitchurch.

On the north edge of the county we have firſt Shenton, the ſeat of the famous family of the Needhams, and then Whitchurch, or Album Monaſterium, famous for ſome monuments of the Talbots, but eſpecially of that Engliſh Achilles John Talbot, firſt of this family earl of Shrewſbury, whoſe epitaph I ſhall here ſubjoin, though unworthy ſo great a hero, to give my readers an idea of the ſtyle of funeral inſcriptions in different ages:

> Orate pro anima prænobilis domini, domini Joannis Talbott, quondam comitis Salopiæ, domini Talbott, domini Furnivall, domini Verdon, domini Strange de Blackmere, & mareſcalli Franciæ, qui obiit in bello apud Burdews 7 Julii, MCCCCLIII.
>
> Pray for the ſoul of the moſt noble lord, lord John Talbott, late earl of Shrewſbury, lord Talbott, lord Furnivall, lord Verdon, lord Strange of Blackmere, and marſhall of France, who died in the battle at Burdeaux, 7 July, 1453.

Theſe Talbots many years before acquired by marriage the eſtate of the barons L'Eſtrange of Blackmere in this place. Theſe laſt had been lords Marchers in this county, and their houſe above half ruined called Blackmere, from the black coloured lake, is ſtill to be ſeen in the neighbourhood. The Stranges owed much of their honour as well as wealth to marriage with a daughter and coheireſs of John Giffard of Brimsfield, a perſon of antient nobility in Glouceſterſhire, who had married Matilda only daughter of the 3d Walter Clifford.

More to the weſt lies Elleſmere, a ſmall fruitful tract, which, according to the Chronicle of Cheſter, John king of England gave with the caſtle in dower to Lewellin, prince of North Wales, when he beſtowed on him his natural daughter [Joan]. It came afterwards [t. H. III.] to the family of the L'Eſtranges, and has now a baron of its own, Thomas Egerton, who, for his conſummate prudence and ſtrict integrity, was choſen by queen Elizabeth to be keeper of her great ſeal, and by king James appointed chancellor, advancing him to the higheſt dignity in the law, and conferring on him the title and honor of baron Elleſmere.

It remains now that I give a ſhort account of the earls of Shrewsbury. Roger de Beleſme, or Montgomery, was created firſt earl by William I. who gave him the largeſt part of this track. He was ſucceeded[q] by his eldeſt ſon Hugh, killed in Wales‡, without leaving iſſue[r]; then by Robert his ſecond ſon, a man of ſavage cruelty both to his own children and to his hoſtages, whom he deprived of their eyes and teſticles with his own hands; but being at laſt convicted of high treaſon, was condemned to perpetual impriſonment by Henry I. and ſuffered the puniſhment due to his atrocious crimes[s], and his earldom was made part of queen Adeliza's dower. Many ages after Henry VI. in the 20th year of his reign, conferred this title on John lord Talbot, who by nature and inclination ſeemed to have been an accompliſhed hero. In the 24th year of his reign the ſame prince added to his titles of earl of Shrewſbury and Weisford, thoſe of earl of Waterford, baron of Dongarvan, and ſteward or ſeneſchal of Ireland[t]§. He being ſlain in battle[u] at Chaſtilion in Aquitaine, with his younger ſon John viſcount L'Iſle, after having overrun the greateſt part of France with his victorious arms for 24 years, John his ſon by a daughter and coheireſs of Thomas Nevill lord Furnivall ſucceeded him, and taking part with the houſe of Lancaſter, was ſlain in the battle of Northampton[x]. He left iſſue[y] John 3d earl of Shrewsbury[z], and Gilbert[a], from whom are deſcended the Talbots of Gifford. John III. was ſucceeded by George, and he[b] by Francis[c] his ſon, father of George[d] Talbot earl of Shrewsbury, a nobleman of unſullied honour and tried experience in affairs of ſtate, whoſe ſon Gilbert now holds the rank tranſmitted to him by his anceſtors with the moſt conſummate virtue and ſplendor.

In this county are about 170 pariſhes.

* See in Northumberland.

‡ H. Huntindon de miſeriis vitæ.

† See his life written in French.

§ See in Ireland.

° Leland V. 40.

p q. d. Latinarius, or Latiner, it being preſumed that a man who underſtood Latin was a learned man.

q 1094. r 1098.

s He ſtarved himſelf to death in priſon, and his ſon was not permitted to enjoy any of his poſſeſſions in England. Dugd. Bar. I. 31.

t Dugdale's word is Steward. u 31 Henry VI. Dugd. I. 330. upon Dordan near Bourdeaux; Holland; and ſo his epitaph.

x 1460. Ib. 331. buried at Wyrkſop. y by a daughter of the earl of Ormond. Holland.

z died 13 Edward IV. 332. He had by his wife Catherine daughter to Henry duke of Buckingham, George, the 4th earl, who ſerved king Henry VII. valiantly and conſtantly at the battle of Stoke, and he by Anne his wife daughter of William lord Haſtings, had Francis the 5th earl, who by Mary daughter of Thomas lord Dacre of Gilleſland, had George the 6th earl, a man of approved fidelity in weighty affairs of ſtate, whoſe ſon Gilbert by his wife Gertrude daughter to Thomas earl of Rutland 7th earl, now holds, &c. Holland.

a Captain of Calais. Holland.

b He died 29 Henry VIII. buried at Sheffield. Dugd. Ib.

c He died 2 Elizabeth, Ib. 333. d He died 1590, buried at Sheffield. Ib.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Salop is of an oval form, 40 miles long by 35 broad, 160 in circuit, and reckoned one of the largeſt of the inland counties. It contains 15 hundreds, and is ſubject to the dioceſes of Hereford, Lichfield, and St. Aſaph. The air is healthy, the ſoil in many parts of a red ſand and clay: the ſouth and weſt parts hilly and leaſt fruitful. It produces plenty of wheat and barley, and abounds with coal pits. It has alſo mines of copper, lead, iron, ſtone, and lime-ſtone. By the Severn are rich meadows, and the hill country bordering on Wales, affords excellent paſturage for ſheep. Leland[a] mentions fir trees found in moors and moſſes ſeven miles from Shrewſbury and elſewhere. They are ſtill found, particularly on Whixall moſs near Wem. They are very reſinous, and the chips of them, called here Spills, are uſed as candles for ſhort occaſions, ſuch as going down into a cellar, &c. and, as Leland ſays, "In brenning they ſmel "wel."

The landholders here at the making of Domeſday were the king, the biſhops of Cheſter and Hereford, the church of St. Remigius, Oſbern Fitz Richard, Ralph Mortimer, Roger Lacy, Hugh Laſne, and Nigel the phyſician.

While this county was a frontier againſt Wales we are not to wonder that it was divided from it, as Fuller ſays, with a wall of continued caſtles. Speed, who allows but 186 in all England, puts no leſs than 32 in Shropſhire.

The origin of the lordſhips marcher on the frontiers of Wales is to be deduced from the conqueſts made in that principality by the different Engliſh and Norman lords, to whom the kings of England, finding it difficult to reduce it, granted, to them and their heirs, the tracts they could reduce to hold of them as lands purchaſed by conqueſt. They were ſuffered to take on them ſuch prerogative and authority as were fit for the quiet government of the country, and execute laws over the people they ſubdued. They executed the Engliſh laws for the moſt part within their lordſhips, and brought them to be of Engliſh tenure, but ſuch parts as they left to the antient inhabitants to poſſeſs were by the ſame lords ſuffered to be held after the old laws of Hoel Dha. For this reaſon there was in many lordſhips a Welſh court for the Welſhmen called Welſhire, and another for the Engliſh called Engleſhire. The lords marchers increaſed till Llewellin ap Gryffyd laſt prince of Wales being ſlain 11 Edward I. that king took the principality into his own hands, and the Welſh in general ſubmitted to the kings of England. From that time no lord marcher could claim any new liberty or prerogative without a grant[b].

The privileges of the marches were erected in imitation of the juriſdiction which the great men who came over with the Conqueror and ſettled in theſe parts held before in Normandy. For this reaſon the terms of Engleſchera[c] and Waleſchiria[d] are ſo frequently in the pleadings of the aſſizes and pleas of the crown held for this county in the reign of Henry III. and Edward I. and ſome time afterwards. Placit. Coron. Salop. 40 Henry III. rot. 9 tit. Chyrabir teſtifies that three ſervants of Thomas Corbett, father of Peter Corbett, lord of Caux, diſtrained two ſteers for debt, and drove them out of the village of Cherabyr, and ea duxerunt in Waleſhir: to which Thomas Corbett makes anſwer, that the cuſtom of the Marches between Edward and Wales was, that if either a Welſhman were indebted to an Engliſhman, or an Engliſhman to a Welſhman, the creditor might diſtrain and carry the diſtreſs into his own liberties till ſatisfaction were obtained. Iſabel relict of John Fitz Alan impleaded the abbot of Haughmon for dower in a meſſuage and watermill in Hideſond in Oſweſtry hundred. The abbot anſwers, that the premiſes lie out of the body of the county in Waleſcheria, and therefore he could not be ſummoned by virtue of the proceſs then depending, and calls the ſheriffs and his bailiffs and the knights (milites) to teſtify the ſame, which Iſabel did not contradict. Peter Corbett had a quo warranto brought againſt him for compelling the inhabitants of Sillmere, Legh, Aſton Pygott, &c. and of Worthyn to do ſuit at his court of the caſtle of Caux, which they ought to have done at the county court as members of the hundred of Ford and Cherbury, &c. And among other reaſons which the king's counſel argued for ſupporting the writ one was, "quod Dom. Rex per predict. breve intendebat prædictas villas de juriſdictione eximere predicti Petri in Engliſheria quas dictus Petrus ſubtraxit in Walcheria;" ſo that in ſome caſes when the lords marchers oppreſſed their tenants within the Engliſh pale the cry was Walleſheria, i. e. You uſe us as if we were Welſhmen, and not intitled to the liberties of the place. Beſides, it ſeems the Welſhmen had ſuffered ſome hardſhips at the hands of their neighbours, on the account that the laws of Engleſcire and Walleſcheria were not mutually obſerved. For they petitioned king Edward II. that they might enjoy the benefit of contracts made and of ſuits entered in Walecheria, which was accordingly granted. Theſe cuſtoms are produced out of a great variety to ſhew that antiently the juriſdiction of the hundreds in this county was different from the common acceptation of a hundred in thoſe days, and reſembled ſo many franchiſes exempted from the ſheriffs turne as the hundreds at this time held by [a] It. VII. 34.

[b] MS. cited in Mr. Pennant's Appendix to Wales, II.

[c] Engleſcheria, or the right of an Engliſhman. Preſentment of Engleſcheria aboliſhed 14 Edward III.

[d] Waleſcheria, or the rights of the Welſh, which were the ſame in Wales as thoſe of the Engliſh in England. In a ſtrict ſenſe both theſe terms were applied to any man that came to an untimely end, and if the perſon was not known, nor the manner of his death, then it was to be proved that he was an Engliſhman or a Welſhman, or elſe an alien, and then the coroner ſat not on his body.

particular perſons in ſeveral parts of the kingdom, and that by reaſon of the laws of the marches; but how by the ſtatute of 27 Henry VIII. the marches of Wales, which were comprehended in Shropſhire, according to Domeſday, and perhaps always ſo ſince the making the famous boundary Offa's dyke, ſuch as the lordſhips, towns, pariſhes, commots, hundreds, and cantreds of Oſweſtry, Whittington, Maeſbrook, Knocking, Elleſmere, Down, and Cherbury, are made guildable, and annexed to the county of Salop, but, ſays the act, no otherwiſe privileged than as other hundreds within the ſaid county[e]. By a ſubſequent ſtatute 34 and 35 of the ſame reign the town and hundred of Aberton till then called parcel of Merionethſhire was alſo annexed to this county, and all offences committed in that county were to be inquired of in this.

The lords marchers procured their ſeignories by right of conqueſt, having authority from the king for that purpoſe, and the chief officer for the government of the marches was a lord Warden, whoſe juriſdiction in king John's reign was military. 9 Richard I. we find archbiſhop Hubert chief juſtice of England, though but a civil magiſtrate, exerciſing ſuch power, whence we may conjecture that the warden of the marches was in ſome reſpects veſted with a power of lord juſticiary. On the reducing of Wales to the ſubjection of England, the ſtatute of Rutland enacted 12 Edward I. that the Engliſh laws ſhould for the future be uſed in Wales, but ſays nothing of the marches, which were left in the ſame ſtate as before. By ſtatute 28 Edward III. all the lords marchers were to be perpetually attending and annexed to the crown of England, as they and their anceſtors had been at all times paſt, and not to the principality of Wales, into whoſe hands ſoever it ſhould hereafter come; ſo that we never hear it ſaid of theſe counties, that they were the marches of England but of Wales. The ſovereignty of the crown of England ever extended to Wales itſelf. By ſtatute, 27 Henry VIII. for incorporating Wales with England all lords marchers were to enjoy ſuch liberties, miſes, and profits, as they had or uſed to have at the firſt entry into their lands in times paſt notwithſtanding that act. The court of the preſident and council of the marches was erected by Edward IV. in honour of the earl of March, from whom he was deſcended, as the court of the dutchy of Lancaſter had been before by Henry IV. in honour of the houſe of Lancaſter, and owed its firſt inſtitution to the prerogative royal, tranſacting matters and acting judicially by virtue of that authority to the intire ſatisfaction of the ſubjects for about 60 years, till 34 Henry VIII. that court was confirmed by act of parliament, which was thought convenient to be done by reaſon of the other laws relating to Wales, which at that time were further explained and enlarged. The act concerning the court of Ludlow runs thus; that there ſhall be and remain a reſident and council in the dominion of Wales and the marches of the ſame, with all officers, clerks, and incidents to the ſame in manner and form as it hath been heretofore uſed and accuſtomed, which reſident and council ſhall have power and authority to hear and determine ſuch cauſes and matters as be or hereafter ſhall be aſſigned to them by the king's majeſty, as heretofore hath been accuſtomed and uſed. It is to be obſerved that before this ſtatute the lord preſident always kept his court in ſome place within the Engliſh pale, and not in Wales, which gave the court a color of extending its juriſdiction into the four next Engliſh counties, viz. Worceſter, Glouceſter, Hereford, and Salop, ſo that in James I.'s reign it was diſputed how far the four Engliſh counties were under the juriſdiction of the lord preſident of Wales and the marches thereof; for, by the ſtatute 34 Henry VIII. they were to be excluded out of the juriſdiction, and by 27 Henry VIII. ſeveral lordſhips marchers were annexed to England, and others annexed to Wales, and thoſe laſt were properly Wales, and the marches thereof, within the words of the ſtatute; beſides the king's writ always running in thoſe four Engliſh counties, it is not to be ſuppoſed that they ſhould be comprehended in the juriſdiction of the court of the marches then newly eſtabliſhed without expreſs words. In the courſe of the argument an objection was ſtarted what might properly be reputed the Marches of Wales upon inference that the word Marches ſhould never have been put into the ſtatute of 38 Henry VIII. unleſs it had imported ſomewhere. The ſolution was that the words dominion and principality of Wales were not extenſive enough to comprehend the ſhires of Brecknock, Radnor, Montgomery, and Denbigh, which were wholly compoſed of lordſhips marchers only, and either or both of the former terms Principality and Dominion would ſtretch themſelves no farther than the eight counties of Wales, ſo that the word Marchers in that ſtatute muſt be only provincial, ſince by 27 Henry VIII. all was made to be either of Wales or England, but if there was a neceſſity that ſomething might be ſtill reputed marches, then thoſe lordſhip marches could only be the marches that were made counties of themſelves, and not thoſe that were annexed to either antient Engliſh or Welſh counties, for they were to be reputed of the ſame nation with thoſe counties to which they were annexed. The argument for the juriſdiction of the lord preſident over the four Engliſh counties was in ſubſtance that the court of the preſident and council of the marches was not erected but confirmed by act of parliament; for there was a preſident and council in Edward IV's time, as is evident from the words of the ſtatute, which referreth twice to the uſage (which heretofore hath been uſed); therefore, whatſoever was the king's intention in the firſt erection of this court, was likewiſe the intention of the parliament in the eſtabliſhing thereof. The lord preſident's exerciſing his juriſdiction in the lordſhips marches of the antient Engliſh counties, nay in the counties themſelves, was confirmed by the conſtant practice of all times ſupported by many caſes, as for example, 17 Henry VIII. a bill of complaint concerning the title of ſome lands in Shropſhire ſent by the king to the lord preſident and council, incloſed in his majeſty's letters under his privy ſignet, recited the juriſdiction of the court in the following words. "We, conſidering the authority we have committed "unto you in thoſe parts, and that alſo the ſame "matter is within the precinct of your rule and com- "miſſions there do will and deſire, etc." 20 July, 18 Henry VIII's inſtructions were ſent to the preſident and council requiring them to call before them at ſuch time and place as they ſhould think convenient all and ſingular ſuch perſons, both ſpiritual and temporal, as pretended to hold lordſhips royal, and to bind them by indenture after ſuch form and manner as divers lords and perſons having ſuch lordſhips were bound in the king's days of bleſſed memory that dead was. Thus much for the juriſdiction of that court, which was aboliſhed by act of parliament 1 William III. and Mary at the humble ſuit of all the gentlemen and inhabitants within the principality of Wales. The Welſh chancery office is now kept in Lincoln's-inn. The firſt lord preſident was earl Rivers, 18 Edward IV. and the laſt the earl of Macclesfield, whoſe commiſſion afterwards ran as lord lieutenant of North and South Wales. There was likewiſe the ſeal of the Marches, as appears from the cloſe of a charter of the manumiſſion of a villain in Orleton, c. Hereford, t. Edward IV. has literas noſtras ſub ſigillo noſtro comitatus noſtri Marchiæ fieri fecimus patentes, 26 Apr. a. r. n. 8o. which ſeal was laid aſide by ſtatute 4 Henry VII. whereby it was enacted that all grants and writings of lands or things pertaining to the earldom of March ſhould be under the broad ſeal, and not under a ſpecial ſeal; for this had been a privilege annexed to the eſtate and poſſeſſions of the Mortimers earls of March from whom Edward IV. was deſcended, and then abrogated. Beſides the officers of the court there is extant a liſt of the names of the knights and eſquires appointed by the king's majeſty's grace in the marches of Wales, to give attendance with ſuch number of able perſons defenſibly as they could make to aſſiſt the king's commiſſion at Ludlow from time to time, and to have ſuch fees as hereafter enſueth. For the county of Salop ſir Robert Corbet, ſir Thomas Cornwall, ſir Thomas Leighton, and ſir Thomas Blount: the fee of each of theſe was £.6. 13*s.* 4*d.* Thomas Shreven, Thomas Mutton, George Manwaring, Thomas Kynaſton, and William Leighton; the fee of each of theſe was 100*s.* each: and then follows, "Be it remembered, that the book whereof this copy is taken forth, was aſſigned with the hand above and under of the late ſovereign lord king Henry VII." 44 Elizabeth Edward lord Zouche, lord preſident of Wales, among other inſtructions, had in charge as follows: "And further her majeſty pleaſis, that there ſhall be "one learned miniſter allowed being a graduate in "divinity, or a maſter of arts, and not having any "benefice with cure of ſouls to preach and to uſe "the common prayer for the lord preſident and his "whole houſehold, and ſhall have the yearly fee of "50*l.* with diet for himſelf and one ſervant in the "houſehold, and ſhall be always reſident with the "ſaid council, and not be abſent to ſerve any other "cure or function." The lord preſident had an allowance to live in great ſtate and grandeur, and had a numerous houſehold to attend him and the reſt of the officers of the court, with fees and ſalaries ſuitable to their ſeveral ranks. We may eaſily form an idea of the ſplendor of the preceding preſidents from the order wherein his grace the duke of Beaufort, lord preſident of Wales, made his entry into Ludlow on Thurſday July 17, 1684[f].

[e] MS. Hiſt. of Salop, by Edward Lloyd of Treneweth.

As the Severn was the antient boundary between Wales and England a doubt has ariſen why all the land beyond that river, viz. all Hereford, and ſo much as is part of Glouceſter, Worceſter, and Shropſhires, had not been lordſhips marchers, as the reſt of Wales was that was won ſince the Conqueſt. The reaſon is, that this tract being won by the Saxon kings was annexed to the crown, whereas the Conqueror, contenting himſelf with the realm of England, thought it better policy to give to his nobility ſuch parts of Wales as they could conquer. Edward I. ſoon after his conqueſt of Wales, wrote to the officers of all the good towns and countries in South Wales that were ſubdued by the lords marchers to furniſh his army with proviſion. So did Edward II. for their quota of men to the Scottiſh war, and Edward III. to guard their coaſts from invaſion. The king did not write for men out of the principality, but the prince of Wales wrote for them to ſerve his father, and the records of this are not in the Tower but among the prince's records[g].

Chirbury.

Chirbury caſtle on the Severn ſeems to have been one of the firſt ſort. Ethelfleda, lady of the Mercians, is ſaid to have built at Cyricbyrig. Dugdale takes Cyricbyrig for Monks Kirby in Warwickſhire. Charles I. conferred the title of baron Chirbury on Edward Herbert, that ſingular character and writer, ſon of the great grandſon of ſir Richard Herbert, of Colbrook, who was beheaded with his elder brother William firſt earl of Pembroke, at Northampton, 9 Edward IV. The title became extinct on the death of his grandſon Edward 1678[h]. Florentia, daughter of Richard ſecond lord Herbert, married Richard Herbert of Oakeley park, c. Montgomery, whoſe grandſon Henry Arthur Herbert was created lord Herbert of Chirbury 1743, and ſucceeded as earl of Powis 1747.

"Chirbiri hundred was annexed to Montgomerie "as a help to have men out of it for defence[i]." It is called in Domeſday Wikentre from Guire an angle, and Tre a town, from its ſituation in a flat angle among the mountains. Edward III. granted it to Roger Mortimer as annexed to Montgomery caſtle. Edward IV. granted it to the prince of Wales, and Edward VI. to ſir Edward Herbert, and Charles I. gave ſir Edward Herbert leave to alienate it[k].

Snede.

To Chirbury was transferred a priory of black canons, founded by Robert de Boulers t. Henry III. at Snede or Snet, valued at £.66. 8*s.* 7*d.*[l] 9 Edward III. they removed back to their original[m]. The rectory was given to augment the freeſchool of Shrewſbury 13 Elizabeth.

Biſhops Caſtle.

The county ſouth of the Severn is in the dioceſe of Hereford, whoſe biſhops had a caſtle at Biſhops Caſtle, the ſite of which is now the caſtle inn, and the keep a bowling green, and part of the walls and vaults remaining. A mile from hence towards the borders of Montgomeryſhire on a high hill is Biſhops Mote, an entrenchment of near an acre, with a keep at the weſt end. This is ſuppoſed a remain of the Roman wars, but more probably of much later date.

"Biſhops Caſtel well maintained is ſet on a ſtronge "rock, but not very high[n]." "Biſhops caſtelle a "very celebrate market[o]." "The biſhop of He-"reford hath a caſtle of good ſtrength in the marches "towards Shrewſbury, here called Biſhops Caſtel, "and thereto lieth a town called Biſhops town, wher "is mekely a good market[p]."

Clun.

"Clune was a praty market towne, and yet ſome-"tyme they keep market there. Clun alias Colun-

[f] MS. Lloyd. Of the duke of Beaufort's progreſs ſee Brit. Top. II. 488.
[g] MS. cited by Mr. Pennant ubi ſup.
[h] Dugd. Bar. II. 261.
[i] Lel. VII. 32.
[k] MS. Lloyd.
[l] Tan. 453.
[m] Phillips' Hiſt. of Shrewſbury, appen. p. 134.
[n] Lel. VII, 33.
[o] Ib. 32.
[p] Ib. V. 10.

"wye.

" wye. Clunne caſtell longing to the erle of Arun-
" del, ſumhwhat ruinus. It hath been both ſtronge
" and well builded. Clune was a lordſhip marched
" by itſelf afore the new act. By Clune is a grete
" foreſt of red deere and roes longing to the lord of " Arundel, and ſtanding in the lordſhip of Teme-
" ceſter, through the which Teime river cummeth
" longing alſo to the lord of Arundel. Clunne foreſt
" very faire and good game [q]." A court called Wood plea court is held twice a year in this foreſt for determining all matters of wood and agiſtment there. The hundred of Clun was reputed part of Wales, and out of this county all the ſuit and ſervice done to the honor was in Walleſheria, or according to the Welſh laws [r]. The church with its five chapels was given by Iſabel de Say to Wenlok abbey.

The manor of Clun was originally in the Says, and came to William Fitz Alan grandſon of Flaold by marriage with Iſabel daughter of Helias de Say. Their ſon William built the caſtle 24 Henry III. His ſon John was captain general of the forces for guarding the marches [s]. In this family, afterwards earls of Arundel, it continued till queen Elizabeth's time, when the laſt earl died. About 1549 Mary Fitz Alan being married to Philip Howard ſon of Thomas duke of Norfolk, it came to that noble family, and from them to the Walcots, from whom it was purchaſed by the late lord Clive.

Henry Howard, earl of Northampton, founded here t. James I. an hoſpital for twelve poor men and a maſter [t].

Teme r. " Teme riſith in Melennith hilles, five or ſix " miles from Knighton, half a mile above a chapel " called as I remember Boſtel [u].

CaerCaradoc. Caer Caradoc or the Gaer two miles ſouth of Clun and three from Coxal on the left of the road to Knighton and near to where the river Clun meets the Temd among ſeveral dangerous fords, if not the royal ſeat of Caractacus was probably his fortreſs during the war with the Romans. It is a very large camp three times as long as it is broad, on the point of a hill, acceſſible only one way, and defended on the north ſide by very deep double ditches dug in the ſolid rock. On the eaſt the ſteepneſs of the ground renders it impregnable, and on the ſouth it has only one ditch for the ſame reaſon. The weſt ſide where is the entrance is fenced with double works, and to the ſouth-weſt with treble. There is alſo a narrow paſſage out of its eaſt ſide down the pitch of the hill [x]. The ramparts are of ſtone, now covered with earth. Tacitus' deſcription [y] ſets this camp before our eyes. " Montibus arduis, & " ſi qua clementer accedi poterat, in modum valli " ſaxa præſtruit; & præfluebat amnis vado incerto, " catervaque armatorum pro munimentis conſtite- " rant."

An annual feaſt called the Caractacan meeting, was held at Longnor not far from the foot of Cardoc, a hill ſuppoſed to be named from Caractacus, and the verſes by Dr. Davies were read before dinner. Mr. Pennant thus deſcribes this place; " After a ride " of about three miles from Longnor, ſays he, I " fell accidentally on the ſteepeſt aſcent, and after a " laborious clamber up a green and ſmooth aſcent, " now and then mixed with ſmall fragments of lava, " I reached the ſummit, impeded a little by the firſt " ditch and rampart, in a place where from the ex- " ceeding ſteepneſs they ſeemed totally unneceſſary. " A little higher is the ſecond ditch with a vaſt " agger of ſtones, now ſodded over. The area is " irregular, of pretty conſiderable extent. On the " more acceſſible ſides are three foſſes and a ram- " part. The entrance and approach are very con- " ſpicuous, and may even at preſent be eaſily tra- " velled on horſeback. The area ſlopes upwards, " and ends in a peak. Notwithſtanding this place " is ſtyled Caer Carodoc it certainly was not that " which was attacked by Oſtorius. It agrees only " with the firſt part of Tacitus' admirable deſcription, " which is common to moſt Britiſh poſts, but it wants " the river as deſcribed by him. The learned Editor " of Camden places it at Gaer ditches about three " miles ſouth of Clun on the left of the road to " Knighton, and gives, as I am informed, a faithful " deſcription of the trenches and ramparts. I never " ſaw the place, therefore am uncertain on which " river it ſtood, the fords of which were ſo difficult. " No ſuch river is to be ſeen near the parts aſcended; " it could not therefore have been the ſpot on which " our hero was defended, yet it is highly probable " that it had been a poſt occupied by and named " from him. It has been from very remote times " conſidered as a ſtrong hold of his [z]."

Biſhop Gibſon by Caer Caradoc and the Gaer means the ſame place, referring to Aubrey and Dugdale's Viſitation of Shropſhire for both: and the tradition of the country confirms it as well as the vicinity of the Roman camp at Brandon on the other ſide of the river Teme, the paſſage of which river might very probably have been diſputed by the Romans. The place near Longnor called Caer Caradoc by Mr. Pennant in Saxton and Morden's maps is placed a few miles ſouth of Longnor and a little north-eaſt of the market town of Church Stretton. Saxton calls it Cardok hill, Morden Cradock. From Shrewſbury it appears a high ſugar-loaf hill, and its name is now pronounced Querdock. This is at leaſt 15 miles north-eaſt of Mr. Camden's Caer Caradock. Mr. Pennant was ſenſible this was not the place attacked by Oſtorius becauſe it wants the river as deſcribed by Tacitus. If he had attended to Mr. Camden's poſition of Caer Caradoc " where Clun meets Temd among uncertain ſhallows," he would have been at no loſs for the place of Tacitus' " amnis vado incerto." The place deſcribed by Mr. Pennant is that near which the feſtival above-mentioned was annually held, and their advertiſements uſed to announce their meeting and oration on the top of Caer Caradoc, whence they adjourned to dinner at the Bowling-green houſe in Longnor. But theſe meetings have now ceaſed.

The camps at Brandon and Coxhall in Herefordſhire, the firſt ſuppoſed Roman, the other Britiſh, and the two barrows near Lantwardine in the ſame county, in which were found an urn with aſhes and burnt bones, have all a connection with this place and its tranſactions.

Borough hill between Purſlow and Basford gate takes in the whole ſummit of the hill, which is not unlike the form of a heart, and, like all the other camps hereabouts, is fortified with a ſingle foſs in [q] Lel. Ib. 28, 29.

[r] MS. Lloyd.
[s] Dugd. Bar. I. 314.
[t] See the ſtatutes at the end of Leland's Coll. IV. 1770.
[u] Lel. V. 3.
[x] Aubrey Mon. Brit. Dugdale's viſitation of Shropſh. 1663, whence the draught Pl. XII. is taken. Lloyd. Defer. Brit. p. 44. 4° makes three ſides ſteep and three entrances not oppoſite to each other.
[y] Ann. XII. 33.
[z] Wales, II. 421.

ſome

Fig. 6.

P. 413.

Fig. 8.

P. 413.

Vol. II. Pl. XII. p. 404

Fig. 3. p. 413.

Fig. 10. P. 413.

Fig. 4. P. 413.

Fig. 7.

P. 413.

P. 413.

Fig. 1. p. 410.

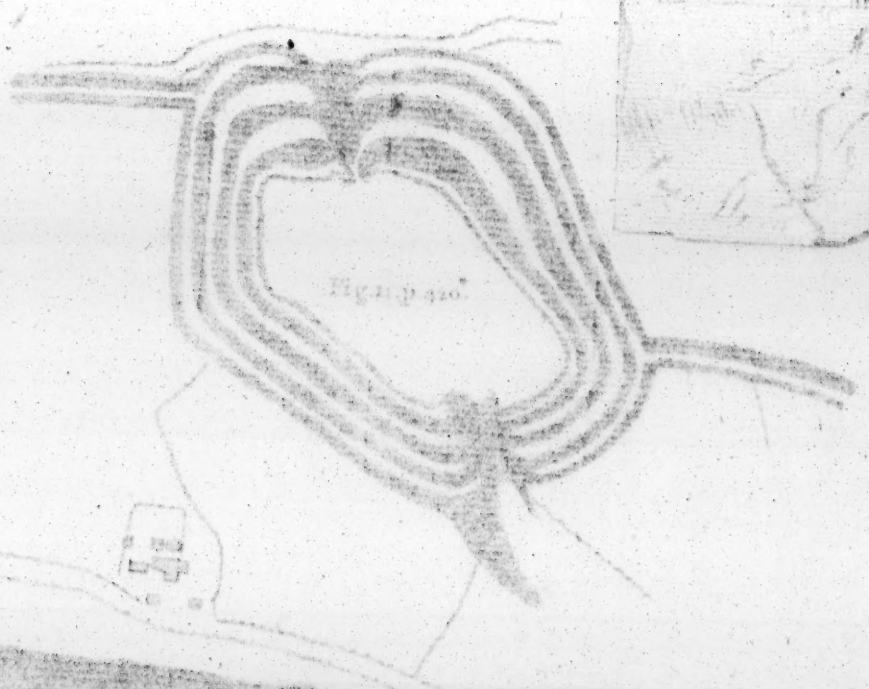

Fig. 5. p. 413.

" wc. Clunne riſeth on the eaſt ſide of Dene-
" del, fumbwhat ſwift. It hath been both longe
" and well builded. Clune was a biſhop ſeated
" by itſelf afore the nor. By Clune is a greate
" foreſt of red deere and roes longing to the lord of " Arundel, and lying in the ſirdhire of Teme-
" celler, through the which Clune rivelet runneth
" longing alſo to the lord of Arundel. Clune foreſt
" very faire and good game. A court called Hand- piea court is held twice a year in this town for determining all matters of wood and inſtinent there.
The hundred of Clun was reputed part of Wales, and out of this county all the ſuit and ſervice done to the honor was in Walleſheria, or according to the Welſh laws[1]. The church with its five chapels was given by Iſabel de Say to Wenlok abbey.

The manor of Clun was originally in the Says, and came to William Fitz Alan grandſon of Flaold by marriage with Iſabel daughter of Helias de Say.
Their ſon William built the caſtle, a fine ruin.
His ſon John was [illegible] for guarding the marches earls of Arundel pronounced till queen Elizabeth's time, when the laſt earl died. About 1549 Mary Fitz Alan being married to Philip Howard ſon of Thomas duke of Norfolk, it came to that noble family, and from them to the Walcots, from whom it was purchaſed by the late lord Clive.

Henry Howard, earl of Northampton, founded here t. James I. an hoſpital for twelve inner men and a maſter[2].

Teme. " Teme riſith in Melennith hilles, five or ſix
" miles from Knighton, half a mile above a chapel
" called as I remember Boſſel[3].

CaerCaradoc. Caer Caradoc or the Caer two miles ſouth of Clun and three from Coxal on the left of the road to Knighton and near to where the river Clun meets the Teme among ſeveral dangerous fords, if not the royal ſeat of Caractacus was probably his fortreſs during the war with the Romans. It is a very large camp three times as long as it is broad, on the point of a hill, acceſſible only one way, and defended on the north ſide by very deep double ditches dug in the ſolid rock. On the eaſt the ſteepneſs of the ground renders it impregnable, and on the ſouth it has only one ditch for the ſame reaſon. The weſt ſide where is the entrance is fenced with double works, and to the ſouth-weſt with treble. There is alſo a narrow paſſage out of its eaſt ſide down the pitch of the hill. The ramparts are of ſtone, now covered with earth. Tacitus' deſcription ſuits this camp before our eyes. " Montibus arduis, &
" ſi qua clementer accedi poterat, in modum val-
" laxa præfruit; & præſultabat ampla vallo ſpecus,
" catervaque armatorum pro minacibus conſiſte-
" rant."

An annual feaſt called the Caractacus meeting, was held at Longnor not far from the foot of Caer a hill ſuppoſed to be named from Caractacus, and the verſes by ſchool boys were read before dinner. Mr.
Pennant alſo viſitches this place; " After a ride
" of about three miles from Longnor, [illegible]
" left accidentally on the ſteepeſt aſcent, I
" laboriouſly clamber up a green and ſlippery
" now and then [illegible] with ſmall ſtraggling

[1] Leſ. lib. 2. 29.
[2] Pugl. Ba.
[3] Aubrey Mon. [illegible] make three [illegible]

Fig. 6.

p. 413.

Fig. 8.

p. 413.

Fig. 3. p. 413.

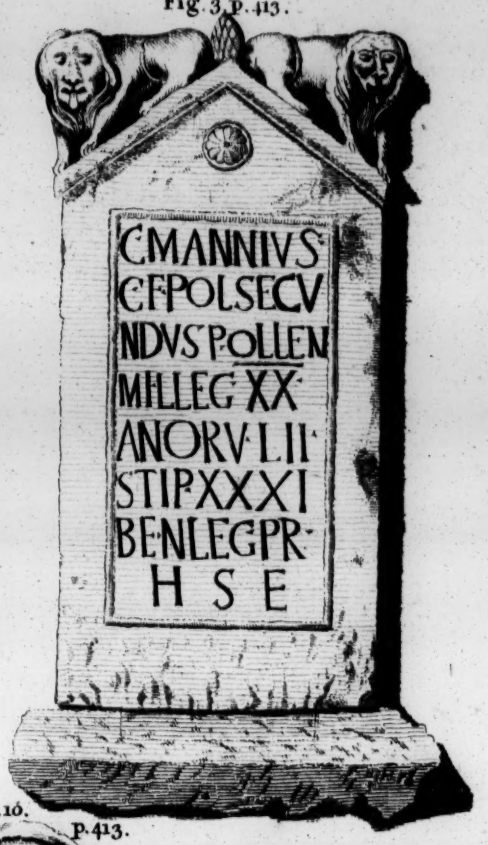

Fig. 1. p. 534

Fig. 10. p. 413.

Fig. 4. p. 413.

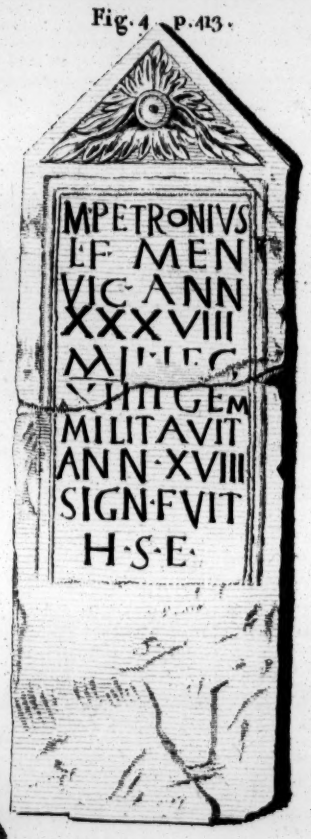

Fig. 9.

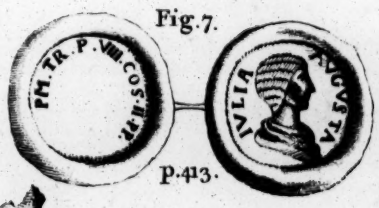
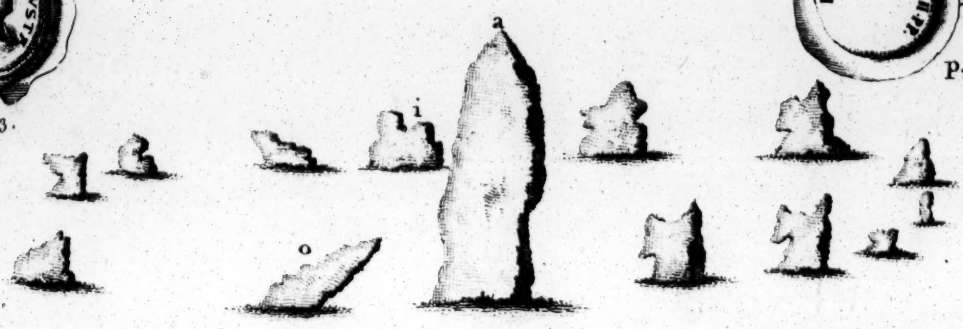
p. 413.

Fig. 7.



p. 413.



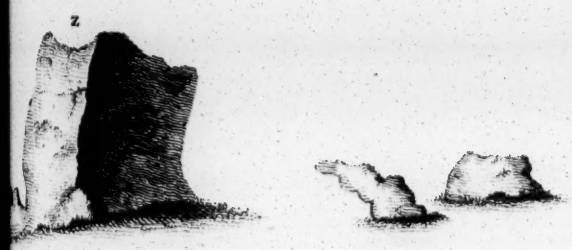


Fig. 11. p. 420.

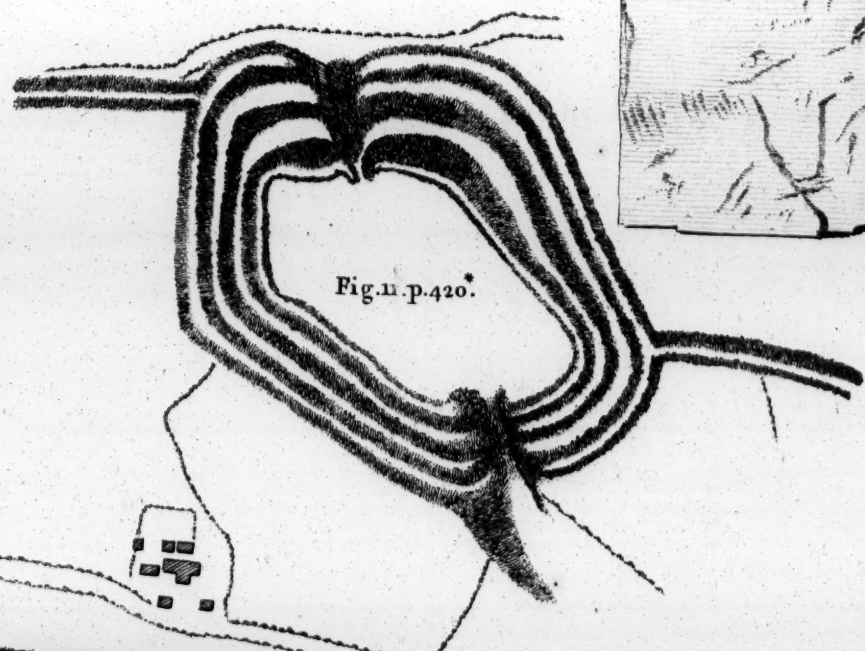

Fig. 2. p. 404

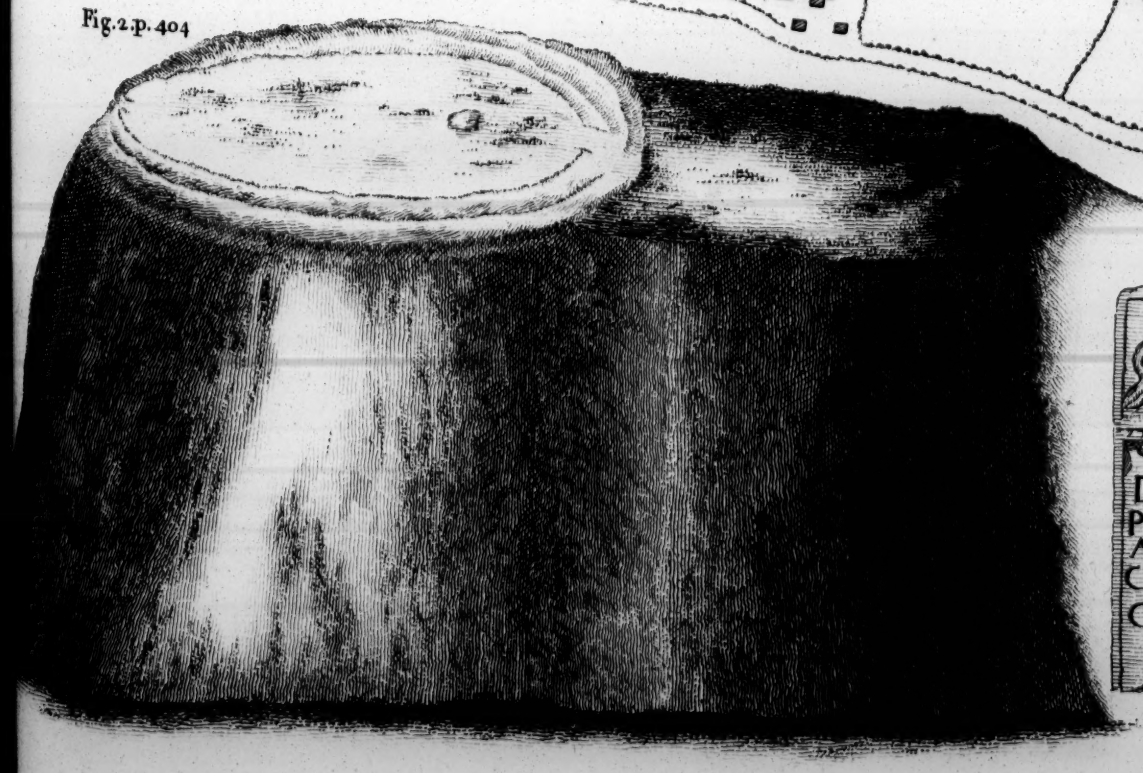

Fig. 5. p. 413

F. Cary sculp.

ſome parts, in others with a double or treble area according as the ground is more or leſs acceſſible, and where there is the advantage of a precipice there is neither ditch nor rampart. The ramparts in all theſe camps are formed of heaped ſtones covered with earth: the foſs here as alſo at Norton walls and Coxall knowl is grown over with trees. There is another large camp quite circular called Bury ditches on Tongley hill a mile north of Clun and three miles north of Caer Caradoc, fenced with treble deep trenches[a]. This camp is of greater area than any other in the neighbourhood. Another likewiſe circular called Norton walls or Whettleton hill is a little to the north of Onibury. In their march from the ſquare camp near Brompton Brian called Brandon camp to attack any of theſe ports the Romans muſt have croſſed the Terne a very rapid river, which though uſually very ſhallow in theſe parts may after heavy rains be ſufficiently formidable to paſs in the face of an enemy. If we could ſuppoſe the camp on Borough hill to have been that which Oſtorius ſtormed, he had in that caſe the river Clun likewiſe to croſs, and this is all which this county affords to illuſtrate Tacitus' præfluebat amnis vado incerto; but the circumſtances before obſerved connecting the fortification of theſe camps are a ſufficient comment on his ſi qua clementer accedi poterunt.

At Bromfield, in Munſlow hundred, was a college of prebends or ſecular canons, who, 1155, turned Benedictine monks, and became a cell to Glouceſter abbey, valued at £.78. 19*s*. and granted 5 Philip and Mary to Charles Fox[b].

"The town of Ludlo is very propre, welle walled "and gated, and ſtandeth every way eminent from a "bottom. In the ſide of the towne as a peece of "encloſing of the waulle is a fair caſtel. Withyn "the town even yn the myddle is one paroche "chyrch. Without the waulles be aliquot ſacella "and two houſes of freres Auguſtines and Carmelites. "Among other gates of the town there is Corne "[Corve] gate and Galford gate The bridge "of Teme at Ludlowe dividith with the ſtreame "downe alonge Herefordſhire from Shropſhire. The "towne of Ludlowe being in Shropſhire on the left "ripe of Teme river is ſet upon an hill; ſo that "a man coming to it any way conſcend. It is well "walled, and by eſtimation it is a mile in cumpaſs. "There be in the wall five gates. Broad gate, and "that leadeth to Broad ſtreet, the faireſt part of the "town. Old gate is alſo towards Teme as Broad "gate is, but not ſo near. Galfride gate, Corne "gate towards the left ripe of Corne river; Mille "gate. The caſtel hemmeth in a part of the towne, "and ſtandith on a ſtrong rock well dichid betwixt "Corne gate and Mille gate. Ther is but one pa-"roche church in the towne, but that is very fayre "and large, and richely adorned, and taken for the "fayreſt in all thoſe quarters. It ſtandeth even in the "middeſt of the towne, and is in the higheſt ground "of it. This church hath been much advanced by "a brotherhood therein founded in the name of "St. John the Evangeliſt. The originall thereof "was (as the people ſay there) in the tyme of king "Edward the Confeſſor, and it is conſtantly affirmed "there that the pilgrims that brought the rynge "from beyond the ſea as a token from St. John the "Evangeliſt to king Edward were the inhabitants "of Ludlowe. This fraternity hath a guardian "choſen yearly among the burgeſſes, and to this "colledge belonge nowe a tenne prieſts, partly "founded by endowment of landes, partly by ga-"thering of the devotion of people thereabout. "And theſe prieſts have a fayre houſe at the weſt "end of the pariſh church-yard; and by it is an "hoſpital or alſmhouſe of 30 poore folkes for the "moſt part, and ſometimes more maintained partly "by the fraternity and partly by money given for "obiits of men buried there in the church. There "was a very rich merchant in Ludlow not long "ſince, called Hoſier, buried in the paroche church, "who founded a cantuarie in a part of the aforeſaid "colledge, endowed it with £.10 or 12 land by the "year. This ſtipend is now given to a ſchool-"maſter. The town wall encloſith the north ſide "of the cemetry of the pariſh church. There be "two caſtels for conduit water in the town, ſerved "both from one ſpring or head. There were two "fair colleges of friers in Ludlow. The White "Grey friers [Carmelites[c]] was a faird and coſtly "thing and ſtood without Corve gate by north al-"moſt at the end of that ſuburb. One ——— "Ludlow, a knight, lord of Stoke caſtel or pile to-"wards Biſhops Caſtel, was original founder of it. "Vernon by an heir general is now owner of Stoke, "and of late was taken as founder of this houſe. "The Auguſtine friers ſtood without Galford gate[d]. "I ſaw ſuburbs without all the gates of Ludlow "ſaving that I was not at Mill gate. The ſuburb "over Teme bridge by ſouth is called Ludford, and "in it is a little paroch church. There is on the north "ſide of the bridge in ripa ſiniſtra Teme a church "of St. John ſtanding without Broad gate, ſometime "a colledge, with a dean and fellows, of one Jordan's "foundation[e]. Peter Undergod a gentleman long-"ging to an Engliſh prince of Wales did build St. "John's hoſpital without Broad gate," t. John or Henry III. valued at £.27. 16*s*. 10*d*.[f] "There be "3 faire arches in this bridge over Teme, and a "pratie chapel upon it of St. Catherine. It is about "100 years ſince this ſtone bridge was erected. "Men paſſed afore by a ford a little beneth the "bridge[g]." It is probably now ſucceeded by the handſome almſhouſes, firſt built 1486, rebuilt 1758 3 Geo. II. by the corporation, for 38 decayed tradeſ-people of both ſexes, at 16*d*. per week. Here was a gilda palmariorum B. Mariæ before 3 Edward III. whoſe lands at the diſſolution were granted to the corporation. Ludlow gives title of viſcount to the earl of Powis, whoſe eſtate at Oakley park was lately ſold (176) to the lord Clive.

Horſley[h] thinks Ludlow the Bravinium or Bravonium of Antonine, and that part of its antient name remains in that part of the river Onny which runs into the Teme near Ludlow. This, he ſays, is more remarkable if Bravonium or Branonium be the true reading as in the copy of the Itinerary prefixed to the Britannia, and in the book itſelf, p. 22. This ſtation is now conjectured to have been at Ruſhbury between Wenlok and Church Stretton. It is called by the Welſh Brwynen, of which the Engliſh name is a tranſlation Brwynen ſignifying a ruſh. Coins, &c. of the Romans have been found here.

Ludlow is well built, neat, and beautifully ſituated on a hill commanding an extenſive proſpect of a fer-

[a] Aubrey.
[b] Tan. 451.
[c] Tan. 455.
[d] Tan. 454.
[e] Lel. V. 10.
[f] Tan. 454.
[g] Lel. IX. 178, 179.
[h] Brit. Rom. 466.

tile and plentiful vale. Its Welſh name ſignifies the prince's palace, and a princely ſituation it is. It has four open clean ſtreets nearly interſecting each other, and five gates. At the north-weſt corner of the town overhanging the Corve ſtands the caſtle. The antiquity of Ludlow appears from its Welſh name Dinan, though it be not mentioned by either name in Domeſday. 5 Richard I. Gilbert Talbot had lands given him for the cuſtody of Ludlow caſtle, and four years after Hubert archbiſhop of Canterbury ſeized it for the king to whom it belonged in the reign of John. In the 8th of his reign Philip de Albini was governor, but in the 16th year of his reign he granted it to William de Lacy. He died 1241, leaving his eſtates between the daughters of his ſon Gilbert who died in his life time. Of theſe Maud wife of Peter de Geneva had Ludlow for his purparty. Their grandſon Peter's eldeſt daughter Joan marrying Roger Mortimer earl of March it paſſed by that family to the crown. But one moiety of the manor on the diviſion of William de Lacy's eſtate fell to Margaret another daughter of Edward before-mentioned who married John de Verdon, with whoſe daughter Iſabel it paſſed to William de Ferrers of Okham. The inheritance of Ludlow being by exchange with the heirs of Verdon united in one perſon, this town was preferred to the caſtle of Wigmore the antient ſeat of the Mortimers: for the tranſactions of that illuſtrious houſe from the firſt earl of March to the acceſſion of the family to the crown have relation chiefly to Ludlow caſtle. Roger Mortimer having made his eſcape from the Tower in the reign of Edward II. built a chapel in the outer ward of Ludlow caſtle, and on his attainder 4 Edward III. only his furniture here eſcaped confiſcation[i]. The large tower at the entrance, now the fives court, retains his name. During the troubles between Henry II. and his barons it was taken and burnt by Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter and Llewelin prince of Wales. 30 Henry VI. it belonged to Richard duke of York, who there drew up and ſigned his declaration of allegiance to the king, pretending his army of 10,000 men aſſembled in the Marches of Wales was for the "public wealth of the realme[k]." A like declaration was dated by him hence eight years after, when lord Audley had been defeated at Bloreheath, and others of his party had withdrawn themſelves. On his attainder the town was robbed to the bare walls, and the caſtle likewiſe ſpoiled[l]. When it came again to the crown in the reign of Edward IV. his eldeſt ſon Edward for a time held his court here, was proclaimed king here, and was ſent for hence with his brother by Richard III. Prince Arthur reſided here in the reign of Henry VII. and died here. From the reign of Henry VIII. when the court of the marches of Wales was inſtituted the court was held in this caſtle, and the old preſidents of the marches reſided here. In the reign of Charles I. it was inhabited by the earl of Bridgewater. Sir Gilbert Gerard, brother to lord Brandon Gerard afterwards earl of Macleſfield, was ſlain here in a ſkirmiſh with the parliament's forces. During the civil war it was for a while held for the king, but on June 9, 1646, delivered to the parliament. At preſent it belongs to the crown and a ſort of governor is appointed to it. Time and neglect have made greater ravages in it than hoſtile violence. The outer gate where Butler wrote the firſt part of Hudibras, the chapel painted with the arms of all the lords preſidents, and a round ſteeple, the noble hall with ſpacious vaults below, the room where Prince Arthur died, the apartments where ſir Henry Sidney lord preſident, held his court, and in which Milton's maſk of Comus was acted by the duke of Bridgewater's children: the deep well and the lofty oven are reduced to ſhells, whole floors fall in by gradual rottenneſs. Upon the gate of the inward ward is this inſcription in Roman capitals:

Anno mileſimo quinge nteſimo octogeſimo cōpleto illuſtriſſimæ ac
.....mæ reginæ
Elizabethæ vicesio tertio curre .....

Below the arms of Sidney in a garter with ſupporters and creſt, and under them the following inſcription:

Ingratis hominibus loquimini lapides. an. regni regine Elizabethæ 23. the 22d year cōplet of the preſidency of ſir Henri Sidney, knight of the moſt noble order of the garter et c. 38.

In the vaults under the hall ſtill remain painted on the plaſter, Edmond Facall yeman of the wineſeller 1622. Under a beacon crowned W. N.

In the church are monuments for ſeveral lords wardens: ſir Robert Townſend, knt. chief juſtice of the council of the marches; Edmund Walter another 1592, and ſir John Bridgeman a 3d 1637; Mary wife of Ralph lord Eure lord preſident, Ambroſia daughter of ſir Henry Sidney 1574. The memorial of Prince Arthur's heart in the chancel is effaced. The windows of the choir are full of paintings. The upper ſeats are hung with velvet embroidered with gold from the caſtle with the initials R. H. The organ and altar piece were given by Henry Arthur earl of Powis, and the font is elegant made of Clee hill marble.

Leland's two conduits are ſtill remaining. Another in the market-place was built by ſubſcription 1706. At the bottom of Tower ſtreet is the ſhell of a ruined church with a weſt tower cloſe to the weſt window. Above it are four almſhouſes, founded 1590 by Charles Fox, whoſe arms are on the front for four poor women, who are allowed 16*d.* per week, and endowed with rents of houſes in St. John's pariſh at Worceſter, paid by the corporation of its city. Above theſe is a ruined gate-way, with 1598 and the initials T. P, or B, in a knot. In Sill ſtreet is a freeſchool with two maſters at £.60. per ann. each and ſix boys on the foundation with gowns.

The corporation eſtabliſhed by Edward IV. have a power of life and death. The principal trade of the town is glovemaking. A fair was granted to Roger de Mortimer 3 Edward II. and another by queen Elizabeth. The town was walled 15 Edward I. One of the gates is called Dynham gate, from the antient Welſh name of the town, near which is a chapel rebuilt by Mr. Merric who has a handſome houſe near it. The ſtone bridge over Corve conſiſts of ſeven arches. The river juſt below the caſtle has a conſiderable ſhelf in it, and is commanded by the double terrace of the caſtle hill planted with trees.

[i] MS. E. Lloyd. [k] Stowe. [l] Ib. Hall. The

The following original letter from Richard duke of York, father of king Edward IV. who was afterwards killed at Wakefield, t. Henry VI. is taken from the town archives:

"Right worſhipful friends. I recommend me unto you, and I ſuppoſe it is well known unto you as well by experience as by common language ſaid and reported throughout all Chriſtendom, what land, what worſhip, honour, and manhood, was aſcribed of all nations unto the people of this realm, whilſt the kingdom's ſovereign lord ſtood poſſeſſed of his lordſhip in the realm of France and dutchie of Normandy, and what derogation, loſs of merchandize, leſion de honeur, and villany is ſaid and reported generally unto the Engliſh nation, for loſs of the ſame; namely unto the duke of Somerſet, when he had the commandance and cherge thereof: the which loſs hath cauſed and encouraged the king's enemies for to conquer and get Gaſcony and Gyenne, and now daily they make their advance for to lay ſiege unto Calais, and to other places in the marches there, for to apply them to their obeiſance, and ſo for to come into the lands with great puiſſance, to the final deſtruction thereof, if they might prevail, and to put the land in their ſubjection, which God defend. And on the other part it is to be ſuppoſed it is not unknown unto you, how that after my coming out of Ireland, I, as the king's true liegeman and ſervant, and ever ſhall be to my life's end, and for my true acquital perceiving the inconvenience afore rehearſed, adviſed his royal majeſtie of certain articles concerning the weal and ſafeguard, as well of his moſt royal perſon, as the tranquillity and conſervation of all this his realm. The which advertiſements, how be it that it was thought that they were full neceſſary, were laid apart, and to be of none effect, through the envy, malice, and untruth of the ſaid duke of Somerſet, which for my truth, faith, and allegiance that I owe unto the king, and the good will and favour that I have to all the realm, laboureth continually about the king's highneſs for my undoing, and to corrupt my blood, and to diſinherit me and my heirs and ſuch perſons as be about me, without any deſert, or cauſe done, or attempted on my part, or theirs, I make our Lord judge. Wherefore worſhipful friends, to the intent that every man ſhall know my purpoſe, and deſire for to declare me ſuch as I am, I ſignify unto you, that with the help and ſupportation of Almighty God, and of our lady and of all the company of Heaven, I, after long ſufferance and delays, not my will or intent to diſpleaſe my ſovereign lord, ſaying that the ſaid duke euer prevaileth and ruleth about the king's perſon, that by his means the land is likely to be deſtroyed, am fully concluded to proceed in all haſte againſt him, with the help of my kynſmen and friends, in ſuch wiſe, that it ſhall prove to promote eaſe, peace, tranquillity, and ſafeguard of all this land; and more, keeping me within the bounds of my liegeance, as it pertaineth to my duty, praying and exhorting you to fortifie, enforce, and aſſiſt me, and to come to me with all deligence, whereſoever I ſhall be, or draw, with as many goodly and likely men as ye may make to execute the intent aforeſaid. Written under my ſignet at my caſtle of Ludlow the 3d day of February. Furthermore I pray you, that ſuch ſtraight appointment and ordinance be made, that the people which ſhall come in your fellowſhip, or be ſent unto me by your agreement, be demeaned in ſuch wiſe by the way, that they do no offence, nor robbery, nor oppreſſion upon the people, in leſion of juſtice. Written as above, &c.

"Youre good friend, R. York.

Directed on the back

"To my right worſhipful friends, the bailiffs, burgeſſes, and commons of the good town of Shrewſbury."

"Cle hills be holy in Shropſhire. Tende river "dividith them from ſome parte of Worceſterſhire, "but from Shropſhire by the more parte of the "ripe. No great plenty of wood in Clehills, yet "there is ſufficient bruſhwood. Plenty of coal, "yerthe, ſtone, nether exceeding good for lime, "whereof there they make much, and ſerve the "country about. Cle hills come within a three "good miles of Ludlow[m]." Though Mr. Camden calls theſe gentle hills they are high enough to be ſeen 60 miles round and diſtinctly from Bardon hill not far from Leiceſter. Theſe hills ſtill produce coal, iron, and lime. Not a twig of wood on either of them at preſent. Snitton manor in Bitterley pariſh four miles from Ludlow comprehends the whole of that townſhip, in which is a waſte tract called the Clee hill, under 150 acres of which it is believed and clearly proved that there is a good vein of coal five feet thick with iron and ſtone of great value: the cottages and incloſures on this waſte are a very conſiderable and increaſing property. Clee hills.

"The village of Cleberi ſtandeth in the rootes by "eſt of Cle hills ſeven miles from Ludlow in the way "to Beaudeley. There was a caſtel in Cleberi nigh "the church by north; the plot is yet called Caſtle "dyke. There be no market towns in Cle hills. "The higheſt parte of Cle hills is called Tyderſtone. "In it is a fair plain green, and a fountain in it. "There is another hill a three mile diſtance from it "called the Brown Cle. There is a chace for deer: "there is another called Caderton's Cle, and there be "many hethecocks and a broket callid Mill broket "ſpringith in it, and after goith into a broket callid "Rhe, and Rhe into Tend byneth Tend bridge. "There be ſome blo ſhops to make yren upon the "ripes or banks of Mill broke coming out of Ca"derton cle or Caſſet wood[n]." Clebiry in Leland's time a poor village[o] is now a market town. The caſtle built by Hugh ſon of Roger de Montgomery was deſtroyed by Henry II. Clebury.

Robert Langland alias John Malverne, author of "Viſions of Pierce Plowman," that ſevere ſatire on the clergy of his age in the 14th century, is generally allowed to have been a native of Mortimer's Clebury on the river Rea a branch of the Temd which Mr. Camden means here. There is alſo North Clebury and St. Margaret's Clee. On the Clee hill Salmon[p] finds another camp, and ſays coals called Kenel from their kindling like thoſe from Wigan were formerly dug in theſe hills. There is a camp on Titterſtone Cle and another on the Wrekin.

Burford was one of the nine manors in this county held by Hugh Fitz Oſborne who had married Euſtacia heireſs of Theodoric de Say. Their ſon Hugh aſſumed the name of Say, and his great grandaughter Margaret carried the eſtate by marriage to Robert Mortimer of Ricard's caſtle, related to the Mortimers of Wigmore. Robert Mortimer's great grandſon's daughter Margaret married Jeffery de Cornwail[q]. "The baron of Burford's chief houſe is a "little above Tembury ripa ſiniſtra in Shropſhire[r]." Burford.

[a] Lel. VIII. 89.
[b] Lel. VII. 24.
[c] F. 675.
[d] Dugd. Bar. I. 453. 25 2.
[e] Ib.
[f] Lel. IV. 179.

Stepulton

Stepulton caſtle in Legharneſſe in the marches of Wales belonged to the barons Burford.

On the north ſide of the church of Burford is a monument of Edmund Cornwall baron of Burford, deſcended from Geffry abovementioned, whoſe ſingular character by Mr. Abingdon may be ſeen in Dr. Naſh's Worceſterſh. II. p. 417. His portrait on board in a large wooden frame in compleat armour, hands joined, ſword by his ſide, helmet and feather on the ground. Under him another figure in a ſhroud: his father and mother at full length in black furred garments praying. A little book hangs almoſt to the former's feet and a gold chain about his neck. On the inſide of folding doors made to preſerve theſe portraits are painted the twelve apoſtles in ſmall and other decorations. On the outſide of the pediment the reſurrection in fine taſte with many other decorations. The whole is the work of Melchior Solabaſs 1585, perhaps alſo called Ghirardino Milaneſe[s]. Among many other monuments of the family in the ſame church is one of wood to ſir John Cornwall, who died 1443, having diſtinguiſhed himſelf in Henry IV's French wars; on which account he was created baron Fanhope 11 Henry VI. and 20 of the ſame reign baron Milbrooke c. Bedford, in which county and Cornwall his property lay. He married Eliſabeth daughter of John of Gaunt and own ſiſter to Henry IV. firſt wife of John Holland earl of Huntingdon and duke of Exeter, who died 4 Henry VI. 1426, and has an alabaſter monument here. Her portrait and her huſband's are copied from a window in Ampthill church c. Bedford in Sandford's Genealogical Hiſtory, p. 259.

Bridgenorth. The town of Bridgenorth ſtandeth upon an emi- "nent ground on the right ripe of Severne ut aqua "deſinit. It hath been ſtrongly wallid, but the "walles of it be all in ruine. There be — gates in "the walles. There is a dike for the walles, ſavinge "where Severne runneth nature hath made a terri- "ble dyke, Severn running on a deepe valley be- "twixt two ſteepe hilles. The name of Bridge- "north is but of late tymes uſurped. It is called in "all antient recordes Bridge. Some thinke that "this terme ſhould come of a forreſt called Morſe, "thereby right againſt the town trans Sabrinam. "The towne is ſcant a mile in compaſſe. The caſ- "tle ſtandeth on the ſouth part of the towne, and is "fortified by eaſt with the profound valley inſtead "of a ditch. The walles of it be of a great height. "There were two or three ſtronge wardes in the "caſtle that now goe totally to ruine. I count the "caſtel to be more in compaſſe than the thirde part "of the towne. There is one mighty gate by north "in it, now ſtopt up, and a litle poſterne made of "forcd thereby through the wall to enter into the "caſtle. The caſtle ground and eſpecially the baſe "court hath now many dwellynge houſes of tymbre "in it newly erected. Ther is but one paroche "church in the towne a very fayre one and dedi- "cated to St. Leonard. There is one very fayre "ſtreet goinge from north to ſouth, and on each ſyde "this ſtreet the houſes be gallered; ſo that men may "paſſe drye by them if it raine, according to ſome "ſtreets in Cheſter citye. The town ſtood by "cloathing, and that now decayed the tonne ſorely "decayeth therewith. There is a colledge church "of St. Mary Magdalene of a deane and ſix pre- "bendaries within the caſtle. The church itſelf is "nowe a rude thing. It was firſt made by Robert "de Beleſmo, for a chappell only for the caſtle, and "he endowed it with lands, and afore that this chap- "pell was eſtabliſhed in the caſtle there was a like "foundation made at Quateford of a chappell of St. "Mary Magdalen by Robert [Roger] de Beleſmo "earl of Schrobbeſbury, [or Robert 2d ſon of Roger "de Montgomery earl of Shrewſbury] at the deſyre "of his wyfe that made a vow thereof in a tempeſt "of the ſea. This Quateford is by north-eaſt from "Bridgenorth on Severne, whereas yet appeare great "tokens of a pyle or mannour place longing that "time to Robert de Beleſmo. There be in the bridge "of Bridgenorth ſtanding eaſt in reſpect of the towne "eight great arches and a chapel of St. Sythe upon "it. There is a pretty ſtreet of meane building "trans pontem, and this is called the Lowe towne. "In it is a chappell of St. John [founded t. Richard "I. by Ralph le Strange[t]]. The glory of the walls "of Bridgenorth and the ſtrength of the caſtle there "have decayed ſince ſuch time as one of the Mor- "timers in a rebellion kept it by force[u]." An houſe of Grey friars was founded here by John Talbot earl of Shrewſbury t. Henry VI. value £.4.[x]

Bridgenorth is ſuppoſed by biſhop Gibſon to be the Eadbrygge of the Saxon Chronicle, where the Danes built a caſtle A. D. 896. Our author and Mr. Somner place that caſtle at Cambridge in Glouceſterſhire. The Chronicle places it on the Severn, from which Cambridge is two miles diſtant, and the Canterbury MS. reads Bryggc, and ſo Bridgenorth is ſtill commonly called; not to mention that Quat and Quatford are villages within a mile or two of this town. 10 Richard II. lord Badleſmere was conſtituted governor of Brugenorth caſtle, and had lands in the town: but the manor remained in the crown till John Sutton lord Dudley obtained a grant of it for himſelf and heirs, but his ſon being weak and extravagant was tricked out of it by uſurers. It is a large market town and antient borough, conſiſting of two towns ſeparated by the Severn, but united by a fair ſtone bridge of eight arches with a gate. The upper town is ſituated on a hill or rock of red ſand, in which the cellars and many mean houſes are hewn. It has been walled round, and two of the gates remain at the ends of the High ſtreet. The part without South Gate belonged to the caſtle, which, as Leland obſerves, was more in compaſs than the third of the town. Within its precincts was the collegiate church of St. Mary Magdalen, called the Low church, which being the magazine for the garriſon was ſo much injured in the civil wars that it was obliged to be rebuilt. In this part are two churches both in the gift of ſir Thomas Whitmore being a peculiar exempt from the archdeacon and governed by an official. In the high church-yard is a freeſchool. All that remains of the caſtle is an angle of one of the towers, which by undermining was made to incline ſo as to make nearly an angle of 73 degrees with the horizon or 17 from the perpendicular. The governor for the king burnt the greateſt part of the town with St. Leonard's church for its defence againſt the parliament's forces, who beſieged it a whole month. The royaliſts marched hither from Shrewſbury to meet the parliament's troops; an engagement happened near St. Leonard's church: the former were defeated, and the caſtle demoliſhed. A mount to the ſouth of the caſtle, called Old Caſtle, is ſaid to have been raiſed for a battery, but by others is thought a Roman camp. There is a pleaſant walk round the caſtle hill and on Morſe. The lower town, probably Mr. Camden's Little Brug, is pleaſantly ſituated and well built on the banks of the river. The high town is on the weſt bank of the Severn riſing from the end of the bridge. The air of this place is exceedingly healthy and favourable to long life. Bridgenorth may have taken its name both from its bridge and caſtle, thoſe records mentioned by Leland that call it Bridge with the Saxon Chronicle referring to the former, and thoſe hiſtorians that write it Brugge and Bruggenorth deriving it either from that or the Burgh or fortification. So that Mr. Camden may not be abſolutely wrong in calling it *Burg*morſe, which he had from Leland[y]. In a charter of king John it is called Bruges: in another of Edward III. Brugg and Bruggnorth, and in a third of Charles I. Bridgenorth alias Bruggnorth, alias Bruges. Both Brugg and Bruges ſignify bridges, and the termination North, whether it be as ſome will have it a corruption of the word Morſe or not, was certainly added with relation to its ſituation[z]. It was antiently a cloathing town; at preſent the chief manufacture is ſtockings. It has a market and four fairs. It is governed by two bailiffs and burgeſſes. The bailiffs are choſen out of 24 aldermen on St. Matthew's day. The court being met, the names of 12 ſenior aldermen written on ſcrolls of paper rolled up by the town clerk are thrown into a large purſe, which being well ſhaken and toſt by the two chamberlains ſtanding on the chequer, a large table in the midſt of the court encompaſſed with ſeats, is held open between them before the bailiffs: each bailiff takes a ſcroll by which the callers are fixed, who immediately mount the chequer, and alternately call out a jury of 14 burgeſſes then preſent, who are ſworn not to eat or drink till they have choſen two fit perſons[a]. On the weſt ſide of the river is the priory, now converted into an alehouſe; its chapel a cellar by the river ſide below the hill. Here were two hoſpitals of St. John and St. James, the latter a dwelling houſe[b].

[s] Tan. 251. [t] Lel. IV. 182. b. [u] Minutes of Spalding Society. [x] Speed. Tan. 15[9]

Little Bruge was long held by the Pichfords by a double tenure; that mentioned by Mr. Camden of finding dry wood for the caſtle when the king was there, which their tenants performed, and that of finding an horſeman with his furniture (habergerium) in Wales, to be paid by the king, which it was allowed at the aſſizes 20 Edward I. that the lord might perform. Mr. E. Lloyd ſuppoſes Little Bridgenorth and Southbridge to be the ſame[c].

Morfield (q. now Morvil) is a village between Wenlok and Bridgenorth, "with a little cell or "priory[d]," cell to Shrewſbury abbey, valued at £.15.[e]

Morſe was in Leland's time[f] "a hilly ground, well wooded; a foreſt or chace having deer, but now it hath none." It has not at preſent a ſingle tree. It had its foreſter and ſteward from the time of Edward I. to Elizabeth[g]. In it king Athelſtan's brother was ſaid to have led an hermit's life in a rock. The place is ſtill called the Hermitage, and is a cave in the rock[h]. On Morſe are five tumuli in quincunx. In the middlemoſt at about nine yards over in the depth of one foot to the ſolid rock was found only an iron ſhell of the ſize of a ſmall egg, and ſuppoſed the boſs of a ſword, and in a hollow in the gravel ſome of the larger vertebræ and other human bones as in the other tumuli[i].

At Billingſley near Bridgenorth was born 1636, the learned Orientaliſt Dr. Thomas Hyde, who died 1702. Billingſley.

Kinlet near Bridgenorth was once in the family of the Blounts, but is now the property of William Childe, eſq. Kinlet.

Near Bridgenorth is Quatford, where Robert de Montgomery firſt founded the church of St. Mary Magdalen, and ruins of his manor-place were to be ſeen in Leland's time. On rebuilding the church of Quat 1763 were found a number of figures painted on the walls, repreſenting the ſeven charities and the day of judgement, and on a piece of vellum nailed to an oak board the figure of Chriſt riſing from the ſepulchre, and theſe lines under him: Quatford. Quat.

Saynt Gregory and other popes and byſchops grantes ſex and twenty thouſand zere of pardon z thritti dayes to alle that ſaies devoutelye knelyng afor yⁱˢ ymage ſiſe paternoſters, fyfe aves, & a Cred.

Over his head,

ihs is my lorde & lyff.

Mr. Brereton ſhewed the Society of Antiquaries 1776, a ſword found in the Severn by this place, the only ford on that river for ſeveral miles, and ſuppoſed the only ſword of the ſort yet found in Great Britain, the metal agreeing with thoſe found in Ireland and engraved in Archæologia, III. pl. XIX. and with thoſe brought by ſir William Hamilton from Cannæ; but the ſize and ſhape different, this being from end to end including the gripe and allowing for a piece of the point broken off 21 inches long and one inch $\frac{6}{10}$ in the broadeſt part.

In coming to Bridgenorth, a few fields out of the road near Stockton is the moſt noble terrace perhaps in Europe, not to be paſſed over in ſilence. It is above a mile in length, ſtands very high, and is wide enough for ſix carriages to go a-breaſt, entirely open. On one ſide it commands the river Severn for ſome miles and the ſtupendous hanging rocks over it down to Bridgenorth bridge at the eaſt end, with the many riſing mountains on the ſouth ſide of that river: on the other ſide the whole country is open to it to a vaſt diſtance, with the Wreken about 15 miles off bounding the view at the weſt end. It is part of the airing pleaſure-ground of Thomas Whitmore, eſq. whoſe ſeat is at Apley adjoining. Apley.

A few miles north-eaſtward from hence ſtood the very antient manſion of one of the oldeſt families in England, the Gatacres of Gatacre; the walls of which were very particular on account of their being built of a dark grey free-ſtone, coated with a thin greeniſh vitrified ſubſtance about the thickneſs of a crown-piece, a moſt effectual preſervative againſt all bad weather, without the leaſt appearance of any joint or cement to unite the ſeveral parts, ſo that it ſeemed but one intire piece. The hall was nearly an exact ſquare, and moſt remarkably conſtructed. At each corner, in the middle of each ſide, and in the centre was an immenſe oak tree, hewed nearly ſquare, and without branches, ſet with their heads on large ſtones, laid about a foot deep in the ground, and Gatacre.

[y] Lel. IV. 182.
[z] Mr. Cornes in Phil. Tranſ. N° 464, p. 127.
[a] Ib.
[b] Gent. Mag. XXXIV. p. 262.
[c] MS. E. Lloyd.
[d] Lel. ubi ſup.
[e] Tan. 447.
[f] Ubi ſup.
[g] MS. E. Lloyd.
[h] Lel. ubi ſup.
[i] Corne ubi ſup.

with their roots uppermoſt, which róots, with a few rafters, formed a compleat arched roof: the floor was of oak boards three inches thick, not ſawed, but plainly chipped [k]. The whole is now entirely pulled down, and a new houſe built at a little diſtance.

The Walls.

The Walls is a Roman camp, about four miles eaſt of Bridgenorth in Worvill pariſh, cloſe by a little village called Cheſterton that joins to it on the north ſide. The form of it is neareſt to a ſquare. There have been four gates or entrances into it: one in the middle of the north front from Cheſterton, another in the middle of the weſt, a third in the ſouth-eaſt, and a fourth in the north-eaſt corner. The odd poſition of the two laſt take advantage of declivities in the rock, the whole face of which is every where except on the north-eaſt a precipice of 50 or 60 yards perpendicular. On the eaſt ſide a paſſage leads down to a rivulet below called Stratford. Beſides theſe a ſloping way is cut through the bank and down the rock in the middle of the ſouth face to the water, which ſurrounds part of the weſt, all the ſouth and eaſt, and part of the north ſides of the camp, rendering it ſtrong and inacceſſible. The weſt ſide has been doubly fortified with a deep trench cut out of the ſolid rock between two ramparts. To the north it has only one bank of the height of the innermoſt on the weſt. Its outer bank may have been levelled for the farm buildings at Cheſterton. Twenty-four acres are incloſed and plouged within the walls. No coins or antiquities have been found there. It was probably æſtiva to Uriconium and Pennocrucium, which are within a day's march from it [l]. A camp in Wilts bears the ſame name.

Hales Owen.

"The tounelet of Hales Owen had a priory [m]" of Premonſtratenſians, valued at £.280. 13*s*. 2*d*. [n] In its church were buried John lord Botetourt, baron of Weoleigh t. Richard II. ſir Hugh Burnell, who married his heireſs, and ſucceeded to the barony t. Henry V. and ſir William Lyttelton of Frankley, t. Henry VII. This town gave birth 1624 to Dr. Adam Littleton, author of the Latin dictionary, &c. prebendary and ſubdean of Weſtminſter, chaplain to Charles II. rector of Chelſea, where he died and was buried 1694; and 1714 to William Shenſtone the poet, admitted of Pembroke college, Oxford, from whence he retired to his paternal eſtate here called the Leaſowes, which he cultivated and improved till his death 1763, ſince which a plain elegant houſe has been built on it 1776, by the preſent proprietor Edward Horne, eſq. [o]

The Leaſowes.

The great pariſh of Hales Owen is part in this county and part in Worceſterſhire, and divided into eight townſhips and five ſubordinate manors. The ſoil in general is rich and fertile. Here are noble woods; and the river Stour is ſaid to riſe in Uſmore wood, but really ſprings in Twylands copſe in the manor of Frankley adjoining, and is joined by a rill riſing near the Leaſowes. Coals have been found in the Hill townſhip, and in digging the foundation of a houſe in Hales town 1745, was taken up a vaſt foſſil oak. The Portway, ſuppoſed a branch of Ikenild ſtreet, paſſes through Warley Wigorn in this pariſh. Oldbury another of the hamlets, and a chapelry, indicates ſome antient caſtle, which is ſaid to have been at Caſtle Leaſow, whereabouts tradition places a great town. In Haſbury townſhip was St. Margaret's, an antient holy well. The manor belonged at the Conqueſt to Roger Montgomery, when it comprehended only the Shropſhire part. It was forfeited to the crown by Robert de Beleſme's ſiding with Curthoſe againſt Henry I. John granted it to Peter de Rupibus for the purpoſe of founding an abbey there, to which a market and fair were granted by Henry III. and the town at the ſame time erected into a borough, with a high and low bailiff. A ſchool was ſettled 1672, and a workhouſe erected 1730 for this very populous pariſh. At the diſſolution it was granted to ſir John Dudley, knt. in whoſe family it continued till Robert earl of Leiceſter alienated it to two gentlemen, who ſold it to John Lyttelton of Frankley, eſq; in whoſe repreſentative it ſtill continues. The body of the church is in the Saxon ſtyle.

Watleſburg or Watleſborough caſtle, called in Domeſday Wateſburg, is ſuppoſed to take its name from the Watling ſtreet, which is ſaid to have paſſed this way and through a village called Stretton between this place and Weſtbury. There is alſo a road to this day which paſſes through Church Stretton. Alſo a village called Watling ſtreet, 11 miles from Shrewſbury, on the road to Birmingham. It belonged to the Corbets in the time of Henry V. and now to ſir Robert Leighton, bart. [p]

Willeley, or as others write it Willegh, or Willey, paſſed with other conſiderable lordſhips to the Harleys, by the marriage of ſir Warin de Willegh's grandaughter Burga to Richard de Harley, who alſo united Linlegh to his family. His great grandaughter Alice married ſir Hamond de Peſhall of Staffordſhire, and carried this eſtate among others out of the family. Alice's ſecond huſband was ſir Richard Lacon, from whom deſcended thoſe of this name here, at Linlegh, and other places in this county [q].

"Hopton Corbet, half way betwixt Biſhop's Caſtle "and Wigmore, and three miles from Shepeton" [q. Sibdon [r].] It belonged to the Mortimers of Chirk, and was defended in the civil wars.

"Holgate caſtle ſtandeth under the Cle hilles hard "by Corveſdale, ſix miles from Ludlow, ſome time "longing to the lord Lovel. The duke of Norfolk "exchanged it for other lands with Mr. Dudeley [s]."

King John took Holgate caſtle from Thomas Mauduit then in rebellion againſt him, and gave it to Hugh de Mortimer, but on Mauduit's ſubmiſſion it was reſtored. How it came to the Burnells does not appear: but Philip Burnell had it 19 Edward I. two years before the death of his uncle the biſhop [t], and his ſon Philip died ſeiſed of it 9 Edward II. By the marriage of this laſt Philip's daughter it paſſed to the lord Lovels, of whom the laſt lord being attainted by Henry VII. this caſtle was forfeited, and given to Jaſper duke of Bedford; but he having no legitimate iſſue it reverted to the crown, and was by Henry VIII. given with other eſtates of Burnell to Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk after Flodden fight.

"Shepeton Corbet caſtle, ſix or ſeven miles from "Ludlo in the way to Ludlo and Biſhop's Caſtle [u]."

[k] Obſervations in a Tour through South Wales, Shropſhire, &c. By Owen Saluſbury Brereton, eſq. Archæol. III. p. 111, 112.
[l] R. Gale's letter to Dr. Harwood, Sept. 17, 1719. Reliq. Galeanae, p. 123.
[m] Lel. IV. 182. VIII. 108.
[n] Tan. 452.
[o] Nash's Worc. I. 508—534. Append. p. xix—xlii.
[p] Append. to Philips' Hiſt. of Shrewſbury, p. 235.
[q] Collins' Peer. III. 276. 284.
[r] Lel. VII. 33.
[s] Lel. Ib.
[t] Dugd. Bar. II. 61.
[u] Lel. VII. 33.

Thi

This name is now totally unknown. The ſituation agrees with Sibdon caſtle, now the property of the Flemings.

"Stokeſay longing ſometime to the Ludlows, now "to the Vernons, buildid like a caſtle, five miles out "of Ludlo [x]."

"Stoke, a pretty townlet [y]. Ludlo, a knight, "lord of Stoke caſtle or pyle toward Biſhop's caſ-"tle [z]." It belonged to the Vernons, then to the Ferrars, now to lord Craven. Part of the caſtle is a houſe. In this pariſh was born 1610 Dr. Benjamin Whichcote, who died 1683.

"Kainſham or Kenſham caſtle [Cainſham] clene "down ſtood within two miles of Ludlo on a hill "top [a]." It belonged to the Mortimers, and the church to Wigmore abbey [b].

"Bramſcroſte, a very goodly place like a caſtle "longing to the earl of Shrewſbury, on Cle hills or "them ..... miles from Ludlo [c]." This hamlet was always reputed one of the fees belonging to the caſtle of Corſham, and came by marriage of Joan daughter of William Burley to Thomas Littleton author of the Tenures, whoſe heir the ſpeaker of the Houſe of Commons ſold it [d].

"Cortham caſtle upon Corſe rivulet, unde & Corweſ-"dale, XIII miles from Shrewſbyri by ſouth [e]."

It is now called Corfton, but ſhews no remains. Corſham caſtle belonged to the earls of Saliſbury till the counteſs of William Longeſpe married ſir John Giffard of Brimsfield. It came afterwards to the L'Eſtranges and Talbots [f].

"Corſe riſing on Corveſdale comith into Teme at "Ludlo. Corvedale plentiful of corn ſtretcheth "from about Wenlok to Ludlow [g]."

North-eaſt of this is Ruſhbury, where Dr. Gale [h] places the Bravonium of Antoninus, by others ſuppoſed Worceſter. The Doctor's only reaſon for this removal is a fancied reſemblance of brwynen, the Britiſh word for a bulruſh, which ſuits with Ruſhbury, and its lying on the direct road from Magnis to Urioconium. Mr. Baxter [i] ſhews plainly that Antoninus has corrupted Ptolemy's Brannogenium, which anſwers to Caer Urangon or Worceſter. Profeſſor Ward puts it at Ludlow [k].

"Wenlock, a markett town, where was an ab-"bey of blak monkes, paſſing over an high hille "called Wenlock edge. The towne is invironed with "hilles [l]."

Wenlock gives name to a deanery, and to that part of the hundred which in Domeſday is called Patintune hundred. The Britiſh name is Lhan Meileiu, or St. Milburg's church.

The remains of Wenlock abbey church, built by Roger de Montgomery about 1080, conſiſting of the ſouth tranſept, ſouth aile, and three maſſive round Saxon arches of an adjoining building, ſhew it to have been very magnificent. It was in length from eaſt to weſt about 240 feet, and from north to ſouth including the tranſept about 120. The choir appears to have been terminated by a ſemicircular chapel. The cloiſter makes a farm houſe, and the bottom of the ſouth iſle is converted into ſtabling. Its yearly revenue at the diſſolution was £.401. It belongs now to ſir Watkin Williams Wynne. Leland (Collect. II. 170.) ſays the place was firſt called Wimnicas [m]. The foundreſs of this nunnery 680, was daughter to king Meroald, whoſe body was immured in the church wall [n], and niece to Wulpher king of Mercia [o]. Roger de Montgomery refounded it 14 William the Conqueror for Cluniacs [p]. The abbot was lord of the fee and borough, and had a market and fair. The church of Holy Trinity was a vicarage belonging to the abbey together with the rectory of Little Wenlock. Here was an hoſpital of St. John [q]. The manor of Wenlock was held under Roger de Montgomery by Roger Fitz Corbet. In later times it gave title to John lord Wenlock, ennobled 1 Edward IV. to whom as he came over from the intereſts of Henry VI. ſo he deſerted him for his former ſovereign, in whoſe cauſe he fell at the battle of Tewkſbury, and was buried at Tewkſbury; the firſt and laſt that bore this title, which in our times was offered to the father of the preſent lord of the whole franchiſe of Wenlock. This place was famous in the reign of Richard II. for copper mines, now for nothing but lime.

Broſeley. At Broſeley, five miles from Wenlock on the Severn, was diſcovered 60 yards from the Severn among the coal pits in Tachfield in 1711, a ſmall well or pool of water ſo impregnated with ſulphur that on the application of a candle the ſtream took fire, and boiled a tea kettle in nine minutes, and dreſſed meat ſooner than culinary fire without giving it an offenſive ſmell. By opening freſh pits in its neighbourhood other water was let into the drain, which firing the ſulphur ſtream that remained deſtroyed this ſpring, and nothing remains at preſent but the cavity where it once roſe [r]. The town of Brofeley is famous for its pipes and coals.

Acton Burnell. "Acton Burnell was a goodly manor place or "caſtel four miles from Shrewſbury, where the par-"liament was kept in a grete barn. It longid ons "to the lord Lovel, then to the duke of Norfolk, "and now to ſir John Dudley. Burnel's daughter "was married to the lord Lovel, and thereby the "Lovells' land increaſed, and after was made viſcount "Lovell, and had Acton Burnel [s]."

The family of Burnell is as old as the Conqueſt. Edward was the firſt baron 5 Edward II. and died four years after, leaving his ſiſter Maud mentioned by Mr. Camden his heir. She probably brought this eſtate to her huſband Lovell, though it occurs not in that family till t. Henry VI, and was forfeited by the adherence of Francis lord Lovell to Richard III. Henry VII. gave it to Jaſper earl of Bedford, on whoſe death it reverted with his other eſtates to the crown, and was granted by Henry VIII. to Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk. Maud's ſon Nicholas by her ſecond huſband John de Handlo had a curious diſpute in the court of chivalry with Robert de Morley, who preſumed to bear the Burnell arms becauſe he had been a retainer in the family. Nicholas [x] Lel. VII. 33. [y] Lel. IV. 181. b. [z] Ib. 179. b.

[a] Lel. VII. 33. [b] MS. Lloyd. [c] Lel. VII. 33. [d] Lloyd MS.
[e] Lel. VII. 33. [f] MS. Lloyd. [g] Lel. VII. 33.
[h] P. 127. [i] Gloſſar. in voce. [k] Horſley, p. 466. [l] Lel. V. 182.
[m] Venti locus, or windy place. E. Lloyd. [n] Lel. It. IV. 178.
[o] The bones of St. Milburga were burnt in the market place before the entrance into the church-yard together with the four images of St. John Baptiſt of Hope Bowdler, St. Blaiſe of Staunton Long, St. Mary the virgin mother of Acton Round, and that of the ſaid Virgin of Barrow, by order of the viſitors or commiſſioners in the royal viſitation held at Worceſter, Oct. 1547. Regiſter of ſir Thomas Butler, vicar of Wenlock, t. Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary and Elizabeth. MS. Bowen. William of Malmſbury, in the life of Edward the Confeſſor, relates that on rebuilding the abbey church the tomb of the foundreſs being broken in, ſuch a ſweet odor came from it as among other miracles cured the king's evil; regius morbus medicis ſane incurabilis. De geſt. pontif. IV. p. 164.
[p] Tan. 444. [q] Ib.
[r] Phil. Tranſ. N° 334 and 482, and Gent. Mag. 1755, XXV. p. 302. [s] Leland It. VI. 33.

reſented

reſented it ſo highly that the king was forced to aſk him to let Robert bear them while he lived, which he conſented to, and Robert's banner was after his death 1360 delivered up by his banner bearer. Nicholas died 1382, and was buried in this church, where he has a figure and epitaph in braſs. The parliament which enacted the ſtatute of Acton Burnell for the recovery of debts to merchants met at Acton Burnell in a barn belonging to Shrewsbury abbey ſtill remaining, whoſe gabels ſhew it to have been of extraordinary dimenſions capable of holding the Houſe of Commons, who for want of better accommodation might ſit in it while the Lords met in the hall of the caſtle. The caſtle was the reſidence of Robert Burnell biſhop of Bath and Wells, who was treaſurer and chancellor to Edward I. and died 1292, on his journey to Scotland to demand of the Scots what right they had to object to Edward I's claim over them, and to receive their acknowledgement of it. What now remains of the caſtle is ſuppoſed only the eaſt wing: the gate or centre arch remains within the preſent manſion of ſir Edward Smythe, bart.

Pitchford. About Pitchford and its neighbourhood moſt of the coal pits have for ſome depth an upper ſtratum of blackiſh ſtone, porous, and full of a bituminous matter, which is ſeparated by grinding and boiling, and makes a ſort of pitch and tar. A medicinal oil is alſo extracted from the ſame ſtone[t]. A family of the ſame name held this manor in the reign of Edward I. In the Red book of the Exchequer we find Gunfanarius de Pitchford[u]; but query if not from Gonfanon, a ſtandard or banner. It has been long the ſeat of Ottleys who were here in Leland's time, and came originally from Oteley near Elleſmere; which laſt eſtate has long ſince paſſed to the Kynaſtons. Their manſion houſe on the north ſide of the town is a large regular pile of timber, being the moſt intire in the county, and ſeems to have been built about the reign of Henry VII. The park contains about 230 acres. Of this family was probably Dr. Adam Ottley archdeacon of Salop and biſhop of St. David's from 1712 to 1723, a friend and patron of Dr. Hickes. One of both theſe names was ſince that time rector here.

Among the natural curioſities of this ſmall pariſh may be reckoned ſeven contiguous ſprings, two of which in the hard froſt 1749 did more than ſupply an overſhot mill when all other ſtreams were obſtucted. Great coal works were carried on till the water broke into them, as alſo ſaltworks till diſcontinued for the ſame reaſon. A corn mill was 1712 converted to wire works, ſuppoſed the beſt in England. There is much raddle in the brook, and near the ſide of the water is got the famous pitch ſtone, from which is extracted the Britiſh oil. In a farm yard is the pitch well, a ſmall hole, which, when filled with rain water, will, in ſummer time, produce a bitumen from the rock, which, as the day grows hotter, becomes thicker, and in 12 hours, being ſcummed off, is of the conſiſtence of liquid pitch, and has been made uſe of as ſuch. The Roman road, called Watling ſtreet, runs from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt through the pariſh for near two miles[x].

Harley. At Harley adjoining was born Silas Taylor, alias Domvile, keeper of the ſtores at Harwich, whoſe antiquities he wrote, as alſo on Gavelkind 1663, and collected for Herefordſhire[y].

"Counde a poor village 14 miles from Shrewsbury. "Ther runneth down a praty brooke from ſouth "called Rhe, paſſing through the ſmall village, and "a little lower goeth into Severn[z]."

Mr. Horſley[a] thinks himſelf authoriſed to place Rutunium near Wem on the river Rodan, by the name of this river, and the account given by Mr. Camden of Bery or Burgh near that town, p. 398. Biſhop Stillingfleet puts it at Drayton. Some ſuppoſe Rowton near Alberbury to be the place. Salmon[b] thought the river Rodan a boundary of ſome country prior to the Heptarchy, perhaps between the Cornavii and Ordovices.

"Album Monaſterium by Albertbyri, long ſince ſup- "preſſed[c]." Warine, ſheriff of Shropſhire t. Henry I. and a great warrior againſt the Welſh, or his ſon Fulk, founded t. Henry II. near Abberbury given them by the Conqueror this New abbey for black monks of the order of Grandmont in Limoſin. It was ſuppreſſed among alien priories, and given to archbiſhop Chichele[d]. Fulk, ſon of Fulk, t. Richard I. built the caſtle[e], of which ſome ruins remain. At Winnington in this pariſh, on the borders of Wales, was born 1483 Thomas Parr, who died 1635, at the age of 152 years, nine months, and ſome days. His father was a husbandman, and ſent him at 17 to a neighbouring farmer, with whom he lived till 1518. He held his father's farm 63 years, and at the end of the third leaſe, took a fourth for life. By his wife Jane he had a ſon and daughter, who died young. At 122 he married a Welſh widow, and at 125 did pennance for getting a handſome young girl with child. Thomas earl of Arundel, that great lover of antiquities, brought him to London in a horſelitter, and introduced him to Charles I. being then blind and decrepid. Being aſked by Charles I. what was the moſt remarkable thing he could remember in ſo long a life, he ſingled out the feat himſelf had performed at 125. "Fie, "old man, ſaid the king, can you remember nothing "but your vices." He ended his life ſix weeks after, probably ſhortened by change of air and living, and was buried in Weſtminſter abbey. Upon opening his body he was found capable of living longer had he not changed his manner of life[f]. He was the longeſt lived Engliſhman except Jenkins in Yorkſhire.

Uriconium in the Itinerary 11 miles from Rutunium has with good reaſon been fixed at Wroxeter, notwithſtanding which Mr. Salmon[g] removes it as we have ſeen to Wrotteſley in Staffordſhire, placing Rutunium here. The town has beeen very large, and alſo the fortified ground. It is ſituated on the north or north-eaſt ſide of the Severn, and on the other ſide of the place runs a ſmall rivulet. The city is encompaſſed with a rampart and ditch. The walls three yards thick take in about three miles in circumference. There is a piece of an old wall yet ſtanding, about 8 yards high, and 20 long, which has in it three regular ſtrata of Roman brick. A ſquare ſudatory with four rows of brick flues under its floor was diſcovered but deſtroyed[h]. A very good wooden model of it is preſerved in Shrewsbury ſchool library, and alſo [t] Phil. Tranſ. N° 228. [u] Gale's MS. note. [x] MS. Bowen.

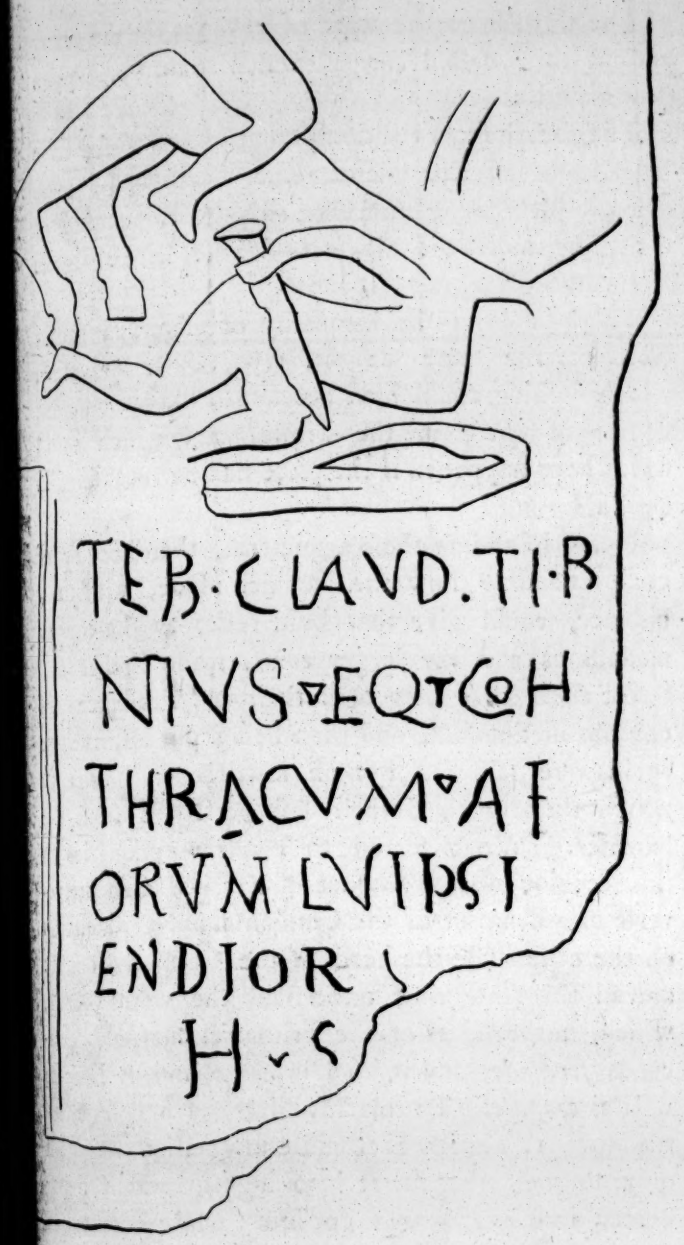
[y] Lloyd MS. [z] Lel. IV. 181. b. [a] P. 418. [b] P. 676.
[c] Lel. VIII. 84. [d] Tan. 449. [e] Dugd. Bar. I. 443.
[f] See Dr. Harvey's Diſſection of him, Gent. Mag. 1769. vol. XXXIX. p. 29. from his works.
[g] New Survey, p. 670. [h] See Phil. Tranſ. N° 306. Baxter, v. Viroconium.

one of the brick flues and part of the teſſelated pavement. The Roman coins found here are chiefly of the lower empire, and called Wroxeter Dynders, perhaps a corruption of Denarii[i]. Here were alſo dug up, 1752, in a field about 200 yards north-eaſt from the old walls the three ſepulchral inſcriptions, Pl. XII. fig. 3, 4, 5. now in the library of Shrewſbury ſchool. Another found ſince and faſtened againſt the wall of the vicarage houſe is here engraved. It is 2 feet wide, 3 and a quarter high, 8 inches thick, the letters 3 inches and ¾ long, thoſe of the laſt line four:

p. 413.



A fragment of a 5th lies at the ſide of the road under the wall of the laſt farm houſe next the church:

p. 413.

Beſides many urns[k], they have found intire human ſkeletons depoſited in red clay ſpread both over and under them[l], and covered over with thin ſlabs of ſtone, over which were heaped five or ſix larger ſtones and clay. Several ſculls have been found in hollows towards the Severn. Here have alſo been found ſeveral moulds for forging Roman money, of which take the following account communicated to the Royal Society by the late Mr. Henry Baker[m], who had five of theſe moulds in his poſſeſſion, which were bought by the editor at his ſale, and are here engraved Pl. XII. fig. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. The preſent ſexton found one mould 20 years ago.

"Four of the five in my poſſeſſion were found in digging ſand at a place called Ryton near Condover (query whether Rutunium), 5 miles from Wroxalter (i. e. Uriconium) in Shropſhire, about a mile from the Watling ſtreet road. Theſe are all of the ſize of a Roman Denarius, and little more than the thickneſs of our halfpenny. They are made of ſmooth pot or rather brick clay, that ſeems to have been well cleanſed from ſand or dirt, and well beat or kneaded, to render it fit for taking a fair impreſſion. Great numbers of theſe were found, but, for want of care, moſt of them were broken in pieces. They are deſcribed N° 1, 2, 3, 4, in the account below. The fifth, which is twice as thick as any of the reſt, was found at Wroxalter; the clay it is made of differs but little from the former; and the impreſſion on it is alſo of the ſize of a Denarius, and of the ſame time with the reſt.

Fig. 6. is probably the reverſe of a Denarius of Severus, mentioned in Mezzobarba, p. 268. from Noris de Vot. X. Figura velata coram ara ſacrificans. VOTA SVSCEPTA. X.

Fig. 7. On one ſide the buſt of Julia Severi. IVLIA AVGVSTA,

On the other ſide is the reverſe of a Denarius of Severus. Mezzob. p. 274. Victoria gradiens cum ſune ſuper ſcuto. P. M. TR. P. VIII. COS. II. P. P.

Fig. 8. A reverſe of Caracalla. Mezzob. p. 286. Trophæum de Parthis cum duobus captivis aſſidentibus. PART. MAX. PON. TR. P. V. COS.

Fig. 9. Caput Juliæ Severi.---IVLIA AVGVSTA.

Fig. 10. Caput Juliæ Severi.---IVLIA AVGVSTA.

"I remember no account of any ſuch kind of moulds being found in other countries, excepting ſome ſaid to have been found at Lyons[n]; but I believe more of them have been diſcovered at different times in England; though I cannot pretend to ſay when or where. I have been informed, that ſome years ago, the earl of Winchelſea had ſeveral impreſſions or moulds of this ſort (all joined together ſide by ſide) on one flat piece of clay, as if for the making many caſts at once: they were all of the emperor Severus. And I have ſeen in the earl of Pembroke's moſt valuable collection a clay mould impreſſed on both ſides, as N° 2. Amongſt theſe alſo is one of the ſides bearing the head of the ſame emperor, and the other ſide a known reverſe of his. Four of the five in my hands are alſo of Severus or his wife Julia, and the other is a reverſe of Caracalla, his ſon and immediate ſucceſſor; ſo that all we know of may be ſaid to be of the ſame time very nearly.

[i] Biſhop Gibſon ſays he had it from an eyewitneſs that none of the coins were Saxon, whence the city is ſuppoſed to have been deſtroyed before the Saxon, and conſequently not in the Daniſh times. Againſt this ſee Baxter's Gloſſary. But his derivation of the Saxon name from ꝓnæcꝺ, wracki or deſtroyed, is very forced, when Wreken hill furniſhes ſo obvious an etymology.

[k] The Annals of Worceſter ſay that, 1287, at a place called Bilbury, near Wroceſtre, a magician conjured up the devil to diſcover to a boy arms, a ſhip, and a houſe-full of treaſure. Ang. Sac. I. 509. Such was the monkiſh idea of antiquarian diſcoveries.

[l] The bodies in the cemetery of Woodbridge priory, Suffolk, now the parſonage houſe, are frequently found ſo bedded.

[m] Phil. Tranſ. N° 483.

[n] Theſe were all for coins of Severus, Julia Pia, and Caracalla. M. Mahudel has determined that they belonged to forgers of money, or coiners, and that the current and genuine Roman money was ſtamped in a die, or hammered, and not caſt in a mould. See Hiſt. de l'Acad. des Inſcript. V. 2. p. 333—342.

"They are ſeemingly intended for the coinage of money; though it is very difficult to conceive in what manner they could be employed to that purpoſe, eſpecially N° 2, which has an impreſſion on both ſides; unleſs we ſuppoſe they coined two pieces at the ſame time, by the help of three moulds, of which this was to be the middle one[o].

"If, by diſpoſing theſe into ſome ſort of iron frame or caſe (as our Letter Founders do the braſs moulds for caſting their types), the melted metal could be poured into them, it would certainly be a very eaſy method of coining, as ſuch moulds require little time or expence to make, and therefore might be ſupplied by new ones as often as they happened to break.

"Theſe moulds ſeem to have been burnt or baked ſufficiently to make them hard, but not ſo as to render them porous like bricks, whereby they would have loſt their ſmooth and even ſurface; which in theſe is plainly ſo cloſe, that whatever metal ſhould be formed in them would have no appearances like the ſand-holes by which counterfeit coins or medals are uſually detected."

In the Philoſophical Tranſactions, N° 234, is an account by Mr. Thoresby of the diſcovery of certain clay moulds for caſting money at Thorp in Yorkſhire. The coins for which all theſe were intended belonged to Severus, his conſort Julia, his ſon Caracalla, Alexander Severus, his mother Mammæa, and Diadumenianus. Such moulds being very frequently found at Lyons, in that part of the city which was moſt inhabited by the Romans, and retains the name of Fourviere, q. d. Forum vetus, M. Mahudel in the year 1716 preſented to the Academy of Inſcriptions and Belles Lettres, of which he was a member, a memoir on their uſe, with obſervations on the Roman coinage, printed in their Memoirs, T. III. p. 218. N° II. 333. 342, of which the following is an abſtract.

Theſe moulds are of whitiſh clay baked, of a circular form, about an inch in diameter, and two lines thick at the edges. Moſt of them have an impreſſion on both ſides, but ſome only on one. Each mould has a ſmall opening or channel at the edge leading to the cavity of the impreſſion, which, when a number of them was laid together, ſerved to receive and conduct the melted metal. The number thus united had at each end a mould hollowed on one ſide only; and by the earth ſtill adhering to ſome of theſe ſingle moulds it is probable they were bedded in to hold them together, and cloſe all openings by which the metal might run out, which being once cold, it was eaſy to ſeparate them again. The heads of the princes fix the date of the introduction of theſe moulds to the time of Severus, whoſe money muſt have been very common at Lyons, where he reſided a long while after the defeat of Albinus, and where his ſon Caracalla was born. An ingot of mixed metal found with them, in which the green ruſt ſhewed there was more copper than ſilver, proves that theſe moulds were more uſed to caſt ſilver than gold. The antient method of caſting appears to be the ſame with the modern, except in the quality of their ſand, which was ſo good and ſo well prepared, that after 1400 years their moulds are ſtill fit for uſe. Their goodneſs, and the number of them found even in the laſt century in a city which was one of the moſt conſiderable mints in the empire, has led ſome antiquaries to think that the Romans ſometimes caſt their ſilver coin. M. Mahudel, perſuaded that their coinage was by the hammer or ſome ſuch machine, produces the ſeveral reaſons of others before him, and adds ſome new ones of his own.

The firſt argument is taken from the words ſo common in the antient writers and codes, and in the legends, mint-marks, and exergues of coins of the earlier and later emperors: cudere, ferire, percutere, ſignare; all expreſſive of their being ſtruck.

The ſecond is drawn from the ſharpneſs of the impreſſion, which could never riſe with ſuch an edge from a mould.

The third from the want of reverſes on the many antient coins called Incuſa, which could not happen in a mould.

The fourth from the double impreſſion of the ſame legend on the ſame ſide of ſome Greek and Roman coins, which could be owing only to ſome motion of the piece under the die, or a double ſtroke of the hammer.

The fifth from the inequality of edge and ſize in coins of the ſame weight, type, date, and mint, which nothing could have occaſioned but the different degree of force in the ſtroke, and which could never have happened if the piece had been confined in a mould.

Notwithſtanding theſe arguments, the difficulty of comprehending how the hammer alone, without a balance, could give that bold relief to the copper medallions and the larger coins, made Freher and Savot aſſert that they took their firſt ſubſtance and contour in a mould, and then being put into the fire again were laid red hot on matrices or blocks in which they received their laſt perfection from the hammer. What ſerved to confirm antiquaries in this opinion was the figure of a crucible on the reverſe of a denarius of the Cariſian family, which has on the other ſide the head of the Goddeſs Moneta: and in this ſenſe they underſtand the words flando, which, in the offices of the Triumviri monetales, precedes feriundo, and is uſed in ſome antient laws as well as conflare. To this M. Mahudel oppoſes three reaſons. 1. That the crucible in queſtion was uſed only to melt the metal into ingots, which being beaten into plates was cut into round pieces called Blanks, which were afterwards ſtamped between two blocks. What elſe is the uſe of thoſe large ſheers which appear with other coining inſtruments on this denarius, but to cut out theſe blanks, a practiſe confirmed by that line of Juvenal[p], who defines money to be metal cut in pieces, and ſtamped with heads and titles;

Conciſum argentum in titulos, facieſque minutas; which entirely excludes caſting in moulds.

2. All the names of the officers of the mint enumerated on inſcriptions (Signatores, Suppoſtores, Malleatores monetæ Cæſaris), relate to hammering and not to caſting.

3. The cracks ſo frequent in coins of all metals and all ſizes are not the effects of caſting, but of the hammer, whoſe ſtrokes would ſooner crack a piece already beaten into a blank, than one caſt before; ſince experience ſhews that ſuch a ſtroke (on ſilver at leaſt) unites the parts of the metal rarified by fuſion.

But the difficulty of this operation, allowed even by the advocates for it, makes ſtrongly againſt their ſyſtem. For how can we conceive the Suppoſitor or Coiner, who was to put the blank between the blocks, adroit enough to place them ſo that each part of the relief already moulded ſhould fit into the correſponding cavity; and even ſuppoſing him ſo clever, how could he do it quick enough to work off the prodigious quantity of large coins which we find ſo numerous even of emperors whoſe reigns were ſhorteſt? Laſtly, how on this principle can we anſwer the objection from the number of plated Greek and Roman coins now remaining? How could the two metals not previouſly united (for the more valuable covers that which is leſs ſo) be caſt before they were brought to the die, however conſiderable the relief, eſpecially in the Greek ſilver medallions, ſome of which are plated? It may be ſaid this plating is a mark of forgery even of the antients: but if the antient forgers had the art of privately ſtriking theſe pieces on a metal harder than copper (for ſome of the plated ones are iron), and could give them ſo much boldneſs and edge without firſt caſting them, much more would the practice have been introduced into the mints, where it was the prince's intereſt to uſe that method which could make the moſt money in the ſhorteſt time.

[o] Moſt of thoſe at Lyons were double.

[p] Sat. XIV. 291.

The true method of coinage among the antients being thus explained, we muſt ſuppoſe theſe moulds belonged to the falſe coiners, who debaſed the coin by increaſing the alloy, as appears by the metal found with them. To theſe refers this law of Theodoſius[q]: Si quis nummum falſa fuſione formaverit, univerſas ejus facultates fiſco addici præcipimus, ut in monetis tantum noſtris cudendæ pecuniæ ſtudium frequentetur. Hence ariſes that remarkable difference of value in many ſilver coins of the ſame reverſe, date, and prince. This practice of debaſing the coin had prevailed over that of plating ſo early as Pliny's time, who obſerves "that it was practiſed "with ſo much art, that it was become a particular "ſcience to diſtinguiſh a piece coined at the mint "from one caſt in a ſand mould, and that the imi-"tations in the latter way were oftentimes ſo well "executed, that the curious would often give many "pieces of good money for one falſe one."

The great decline of engraving under Severus, and the alteration he had introduced into the current coin, rendered theſe counterfeits more eaſy, and the quantity of moulds diſcovered at Lyons ſhews what a number of theſe coiners there muſt have been. They increaſed ſo faſt even in the cities where there were eſtabliſhments (præfecturæ monetarum) and among the officers and workmen employed in the mints, that in the reign of Aurelian they formed a little army, who, for fear of being brought to condign puniſhment, revolted againſt him, and killed 7000 of his troops in a pitched battle[r].

Count Caylus having obſerved ſome of theſe moulds found at Lyons took off their impreſſions in pewter. He faſtened eight of them together back to back, and ſo formed a cylinder, into which he poured melted pewter, and as ſoon as it was cold, ſeparated them with a fine ſaw. The firſt impreſſions were very imperfect, occaſioned by the moulds being filled with dirt; but, on repeating the experiment after carefully cleaning them, the count got the ſeven following coins of Caracalla, Geta, Julia Domna their mother, and Julia Mæſa Auguſta her ſiſter[s], ANTONINVS PIVS AVG. BRIT.

PONTIF. TR. P. XIII. COS. III.

A woman ſitting, holding in her right a patera, in her left a cornucopiæ. Silver; Occo. 290.

ANTONINVS PIVS AVG.
VICT. PART. MAX.

Victory, holding in her right a crown, in her left a palm branch. Silver; Occo. 287.

P. SEPT. GETA PIVS AVG. BRIT.
TR. P. III. COS. II. P. P.

A Janus, holding in his right a lance, in his left thunder. Silver; Occo. 303.

IVLIA AVGVSTA.
PIETAS PVBLICA.

A woman veiled ſtanding, and extending her hands over a flaming altar. Silver; Occo. 282.

IVLIA PIA FELIX AVG.
VENVS GENETRIX.

A woman ſitting, holding in her right a patera, in her left a haſta pura. Silver; Occo. Ib.

IVLIA AVGVSTA.
IVNO.

The goddeſs with her peacock, holding in her right a patera, in her left a haſta pura. Silver; Occ. Ib.

IVLIA MAESA AVG.
PIETAS AVG.

A woman veiled, holding in her left on a pillar an acerra, out of which ſhe throws incenſe on a flaming altar. Silver; Occo. 316.[t]

An eighth mould gave this reverſe of Caracalla:
FELICITAS AVGG.

A woman holding in her right a caduceus, in her left a cornucopiæ. Silver; Occ. 285.

Count Caylus differs from M. Mahudel as to the uſe of theſe moulds. He is of opinion that the Romans, as well as the kings of Egypt, Syria, and Judea, and ſeveral of the Greek cities, uſed both moulds and the hammer in their coinage. None of the Roman moulds that he had ſeen or heard of are anterior to the reign of Severus. They ſeem intended for ſilver coinage, and it was in that emperor's reign that that ſpecies of coinage was debaſed, and continued to be more and more ſo till Dioclefian's time. Theſe ſucceſſive changes muſt have produced two effects. They would have prevented the counterfeiting of ſilver coin, and in fact, if we conſider that the coins of moſt of the ſucceſſors of Severus are of billon, or braſs alloyed with a little ſilver, we ſhall hardly ſuppoſe the coiners would think them worth riſking their lives to counterfeit them; and, 2dly, the officers of the mint would be more careleſs about theſe ſpecies of coin, and take the ſhorteſt and moſt frugal method of marking it, which would be by mould. This mode may account for the number of medals of emperors whoſe reigns were but of a few days. A workman might quickly engrave a head in relief with its legend on its puncheon hard enough to ſtamp an impreſſion on a clay mould, or the head only might be graved, and the legend imprinted on the mould by moveable characters. The confuſion and tranſpoſition of letters on many medals authorize this conjecture; and they might make a cylinder of copper, in which the moulds might be ſet, faſtened together with clay, or by turning hinges, which would direct their motion, and a head and reverſe might be hollowed in them by a tool. But for the reſt of that learned Antiquary's arguments in favour of his ſuppoſition, that many of the coins that have [q] Leg. 3. tit. v.

[r] Aur. Victor in Aureliano.
[s] It has generally been ſuppoſed the coins of Julia Mæſa were ſtruck during the reign of her grandſon Heliogabalus, but the count thinks her coins being found with thoſe of her nephews and ſiſter makes it more probable they were of that age.

come come down to us were not ſtruck with the hammer, we muſt refer to his Recueil, vol. I. 286—291.

In digging in the ruins of the fountain of Niſmes they found two braſs dies of medals of Auguſtus of a conic figure engraved in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inſcriptions XIV. p. 105. One of them being put under the balance was broken and thrown aſide; the other fell into the hands of Count Caylus, who has engraved it in his Recueil I. Pl. CV. f. 1.[t] It is compoſed of equal proportions of copper, zink, pewter, and lead, and by its form is admirably calculated to bear the ſtroke of the hammer.

Liſt of Roman coins found at Wroxeter, communicated by the rev. Mr. Francis Leighton of Shrewſbury:

Silver.

IMP. SER. GALBA AVG.
S.P.Q.R. OB. C.S. in corona civica.

IMP. TRAIANO AVG. GER. DAC. P.M. TRP.
COS. S.P.Q.R. OPTIMO PRINC. Figura ſtolata. ſtans dextra, ... læva cornucopiæ.

ANTONINVS PIVS AVG.
FELICITAS AVGG. Figura muliebris ſtolata ſtans, læva cornucopia dextra . . . .

IVLIA MAESA.
FORTVNA REDVX. Figura ſedens.

Copper.

IMP. CLAVDIVS AVG.
Figura ſedens, dextra haſtam.

IMP. CAES. VESPASIAN. AVG. COS. VIII. P.P.
S. C. Victoria, dextra ſertum.

IMP. CAES. NERVAE TRAIANO AVG. GER. DAC. P.M. TR.P. COS. V. P. P.
S. C. S.P.Q.R. OPTIMO PRINCIPI.
Figura globo inſidens ſub trophæo.

IMP. CAESAR TRAIANVS NERVA AVG.
Figura ſedens.

ANTONINVS PIVS. T. R. . . P.
S. C. Mulier ſtolata ſtans.

DIVUS M. ANTONINVS PIVS.
. . NSECR . . . . S. C. Aquila rogo inſidens.

IMP. L. VERVS AVG.
PROV. DEOR. T. R. P. III. COS. II.
Figura ſtans, dextra globum, læva cornucopiæ.

Severus.

S. S . . . Figura ſtolata ſtans.

IVLIA AVGVSTA.
PIETAS AVGG.
Figura ara adſtans.

IVLIA MAMMAEA AVGVSTA.
S. C. Mulier ſtolata, dextra haſtam.

D.N. CONSTA . . . VS AVG.
FEL. TEMP. REPARATI.
Columba roſtro ramum gerens.

Diocletian.

SACRA MONETA AVGG. ET. CAES.
Dea Moneta.

IMP. CARAVSIVS.

. . . . . .

IMP. C. ALLECTVS P. F. AVG.
Another; rev. a galley.

FL. CONSTA . . .
GLORIA EXERCITVS.

IMP. LICINIVS. P. F. AVG.
SEN. POP. ROM. B. S. TRP.
Genius ſtans, læva cornucopiæ.

CONSTANTINVS P. P. AVG.
SOLI INVICTO COMITI.

FL. IVL. CRISPVS . . . . CAES.
CAES ALVMNO. NOSTRORVM. Sertum in quo VOTVM.

D. N. MAGNENTIVS P. F. AVG.
VICTORIÆ DD. NN. AVG. ET CAES. VOT V MVLT X
Duo figuræ alatæ ſcutum tenentes in quo in exergue TRS.

"The deſtruction of Roxceſter by all likelihood was "the cauſe of the erection of Shrewſbury: for Rox-"ceſter was a goodly walled towne until it was de-"ſtroyed by the Danes[u]." It is impoſſible to look at the ſituation of Wroxeter under the pre-eminent Wreken and not be convinced that its name is to be derived from that natural pyramid, and that the Romans adopted a Britiſh name in their pronunciation of Uriconium, Wriconium, ſynonymous with the preſent Wrekin, q. d. Wrekinceſter, which has been ſucceeded as the capital of the Cornavii by Shrewſbury. Wrocward in S. Bradford hundred has the ſame etymology.

Mr. Carte of Leiceſter gave the Society of Antiquaries the following account of the Old Work at Wroxeter, 1721, with a rude draught.

"The main wall now ſtanding is 30 yards long, and the foundation from it weſtward 40 yards, ſo that the whole was 70 yards long. The middle arch ſix yards high from the ground, but from the floor much higher, ſix yards broad; the other two only four yards broad, but of the ſame height. The hole in the middle arch ſuppoſed to be broken through, and ſo is the other. At each end are ſmooth walls coming out at the end of the arches; the foundations anſwering the main wall and arches ten yards from it. Two rows of tiles go through the wall. The ſtones are laid exactly acroſs each other, in the middle rubbiſh and pebbles. The arches ſeem covered with the ſame as the wall. Some ragged pieces ſtand out a yard and a half from the wall. It is now eight yards from the ground; the north ſide ſmooth, except ſome holes as for ſcaffolds." In Mr. Lloyd's time this piece of wall was 20 feet high and 100 long.

At the bottom of the Severn at low water are ſtill to be ſeen foundations of ſtone probably of a bridge, though the road went through the middle of the city, and through the ford now called Wroxeter ford, as is to be diſcovered by the old Strait [or Street] way, pointing exactly to it on each ſide of the river[x]. The Roman portway ran hence to the Strettons[y].

In the church of Wroxeter is a monument for ſir Thomes Bromley, lord chief juſtice of England, and one of the executors of Henry VIII's will. He died 1555, and his daughter married a Newport. There are alſo monuments for ſir Richard Newport, anceſtor of the earls of Bradford, 1570. Francis, the firſt lord Bradford, 1708, his brother Andrew, 1699, and his ſon Thomas earl of Torrington, 1719.

"The Wreken hill, of ſome called Mount Gilbert, "is the higheſt ground of all the country thereabout, "and ſtandeth as a Pharos, barren of wood. There "is on the top of this hill a delicate plain ground "bearyng fine good graſſe, and in this plaine is a "fayre fountain[z]."

"There is a fayre ſtone long bridge on Severne

[t] P. Moulinet has engraved a third from the cabinet of St. Genevieve (p. 117.) inſcribed as theſe, CAESAR AVGVSTVS DIVI F. PATER PATRIAE. There are alſo in the ſame cabinet two of iron, of Conſtantius.

[u] Lel. IV. 181. b. [x] Gibſon. [y] MS. Lloyd. [z] Lel. IV. 181. b. "to

" to pass over toward Roxceſter at Acham village [a]".

" Terne riſith near Mere village in Staffordſhire. It " goeth by Draiton, Terne hil, Beſteford, and Slepe " village, and cometh into Severn at Acham village, " two miles from Shrewſbyri. I heard otherwiſe " that it came into Severn about Ternebridge, or " between Acham village and Roxceſter [b]." It comes into Severn firſt below Ternbridge.

" At Attington in Glouceſterſhire neere to the ryver " Severne was born Ordericus Vitalis, a worthy reli- " gious man, who did write an eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, " and to whoſe happy diligence we owe the know- " ledge of many matters concerning the Engliſh and " Norman nobility." Thus Mr. Camden in addi- tions to his Britannia in his own hand-writing in the Bodleian library. But from Ordericus's own account of himſelf [c] I rather incline to fix this author's birth- place at Attingham, or Atcham, on the Severn, near Shrewſbury. He was born 1075, and baptized on Eaſter Sunday in the church of St. Eatta [d] at Ettin- geſham or Attingeſham, on the Severn, by a prieſt named Ordericus. After he had been five years inſtructed by Sivad a noble preſbyter in the monaſ- tery at Shrewſbury (afterwards rebuilt by Roger earl of Montgomery, to whom his father Odelerius was principal councellor), he was at 11 years of age car- ried over to Normandy, where he became a monk in the abbey of Uticum or St. Evroul by the name of Vitalis, and continued there 56 years, being 67 years old at the time of finiſhing his ſtory, which he began at the command of his abbot Roger. It treats in 13 books of the eccleſiaſtical affairs of Normandy till the Conqueror came over to England, after which he in- terweaves our affairs to 1141, 6 Stephen.

Attingham or Atcham is now the property of Noel Hill, eſq; knight of the ſhire for the county, and a deſcendant from ſir Rowland's family. He is building a fine ſeat at Terne, to which he has given the name of Attingham, having in 1784 been created baron Berwick of Attingham. The houſe of white ſtone has 11 windows in front; the ground about it flat; Wrekin hill in full view.

" There is a late a new bridge of ſtone made on " Terne by a merchant of London called Rowland " Hill, a little above the confluence of the Terne " and Severn [e]."

The old bridge at Atcham was erected in the reign of king Edward VI. at the ſole expence of Rowland Hill, knt. formerly lord mayor of London, whoſe extraordinary munificence and liberality were diſplayed in many public works in different parts of the kingdom, and particularly in this his native country. For, beſides founding a free grammar ſchool at Drayton, and allotting ſufficient ſtipends for the maintenance of the ſame, he annually cloathed 300 poor people. He contributed moſt bountifully to the repairing Stoke church, and built two ſtone bridges, viz. this at Atcham, and one at Terne, and two others of timber, all at his own coſt and charge during his life-time.

On Thurſday July 27, 1769, ſir Rowland Hill, bart, laid the firſt ſtone of the new bridge here, with this inſcription, erected under the direction of Mr. John Gwynn.

Anno Chriſti MDCCLXIX.
Georg. III. Regis IX.
Joanne Gwyn Architecto.
Hujuſce Pontis
Publico Comitatûs ſumptu extruendi
Primum Lapidem poſuit
Rolandus Hill, Baronettus,
Rolandi Hill Equit. olim Prætoris Londin. Conſanguineus
Qui Pontem jam vetuſtate labentem
Annos abhinc C C. & plures
Sumptu ſuo proprio
Munificentiſſime fundavit.

Coalbrook dale. Iron bridge.

Coalbrook dale is one mile long, and the property of Mr. Reynolds and ſubſcribers. Over the Severn in this dale was laid 1779, a bridge of caſt iron, the whole of which was caſt in open ſand, and a large ſcaffold being previouſly erected, each part of the rib was elevated to a proper height by ſtrong ropes and chains, and then lowered till the ends met in the centre. All the principal parts were erected in three months without any accident to the work or work- men, or the leaſt obſtruction to the navigation of the river. On the abutments of ſtone work are placed iron plates with mortiſes, in which ſtand two upright pillars of the ſame. Againſt the foot of the inner pillar the bottom of the main rib bears on the baſe plate. This rib conſiſts of two pieces connected by a dovetail joint in an iron key, and faſtened with ſcrews. Each piece is 70 feet long. The ſhorter ribs paſs through the pillar at apertures left for that purpoſe, and are mortiſed into the top bearers and into the baſe plate and pillar, the back rib in like manner without coming down to the plate. The croſs ſtays, braces, circle in the ſpandrils, and the brackets connect the larger pieces ſo as to keep the bridge perfectly ſteady, while a diagonal and croſs ſtays and top-plates connect the pillars and ribs together in oppoſite directions. The whole bridge is covered with iron top-plates projecting over the ribs on each ſide, and on this projection ſtands the baluſtrade of caſt iron. The road over the bridge made of clay and iron ſlag is 24 feet wide, one foot deep: toll for carriages 1s. The ſpan of the arch is 100 feet 6 inches, and the height from the baſe line to the centre 40 feet. The weight of iron in the whole is 378 tons 10 cwt: each piece of the long ribs weighs 5 tons 15 cwt. On the largeſt and exterior rib is inſcribed in capitals:

" This bridge was caſt at Coalbrook, and erected in the year 1779."

Madeley.

Madeley a mile off was a market town, but the mar- ket houſe being burnt 100 years ago is ſupplied by a wooden one: a handſome inn is building at the bridge foot.

Stretton.

" Stretton, a pretty uplandiſhe tounlet, the chiefeſt " building that is in Stretton dale, which is incloſid " with great hilles well wooded in ſome places. It " is in length but three miles, and in it be three " Strettons, Little, Great, Ould Stretton. This " Stretton dale longith to the earl of Arundel [f]."

The three Strettons, all within a quarter of a mile of Watling ſtreet, are diſtinguiſhed by the names of Church Stretton, Ald Stretton, and Little Stretton [g];

[a] Lel. IV. 181. [b] Lel. VII. 33. [c] Hiſt. V. p. 548, and 924.
[d] This may ſerve to point out the patron ſaint of this church who had hitherto eſcaped all our antiquaries.
[e] Lel. IV. 181. Terne is to ſay a lake or pool, Ib. vii. 33.
[f] Lel. IV. 180. a. [g] Ib.

the two laſt hamlets to the firſt, which is a miſerable market town in a delightful woody vale. Near Ludlow we have a place called Stretford. The road is very ſtrait to Ludlow, and the remains of the Roman pavement in many parts very viſible. It runs three or four miles between the mountains called Long mount foreſt and Ridgewell[h]. At Church Stretton was born Dr. Roger Mainwaring chaplain to Charles I. and biſhop of St. David's, who died 1653[i].

Bildewas. Bildewas abbey was founded by Roger biſhop of Cheſter 1135, for monks of the order of Savigny, united afterwards to the Ciſtercians. The revenues at the ſuppreſſion were £.110. 19s. per annum. The ſite and poſſeſſions were granted to lord Powis[k], but now belong to Walter Acton Moſeley, eſq; No leſs than ſeven of the Burnells are recorded in the obituary of this abbey[l]. There are very conſiderable remains of its ſolid plain beautiful church; the arches of the nave round on thick round pillars, ſix arches on a ſide, a cloiſter on the north ſide with a central door ſided by two windows, all adorned with zigzag which in the windows reaches below the pillars; the eaſt window of the church three long narrow round arches.

"Matild de Bohun wife to ſir Robert Burnell "founder of Bildevois abbey, though ſome of the "only gift of the ſite of the houſe toke the biſhop of "Cheſter for founder[m]." "There is a ſtone bridge "over Severne [now of three arches] at Buldwas, "where the abbey of White Monks was ripa dex-"tra[n]."

The Birches. In the dead of the night between the 25th and 26th of May, 1773, ſome people in a ſmall houſe at the Birches between Coalbrook dale and Bildwas were alarmed with a tremulous motion of the earth, and a ſmall crack of four or five inches wide in the ground, a field ſown with oats at the ſame time heaving up and rolliug about like water, the trees moving as if blown by a high wind, though the air was calm and ſerene. The river Severn, in which at that time was a conſiderable flood, was very much agitated, and the current ſeemed to run upwards. They then perceived a great crack open, and run very quick up the ground from the river. Immediately 18 acres of land with the hedges and trees moſtly ſtanding moved with great force and ſwiftneſs towards the Severn with a great and uncommon noiſe. That part of the land next the river was a ſmall wood of two acres, in which grew upwards of 20 large oaks, a few of which were left leaning and the reſt upright as if never diſturbed, but all ſince felled. The wood was puſhed with great velocity into the river, which at that place was remarkably deep, and forced the water in large columns a great height, driving the bed of the river on the oppoſite ſhore, where it lodged full 12 feet above the ſurface of low water, and it is ſuppoſed 30 feet perpendicular above the bottom of the old channel: the ſide of the wood likewiſe reſted on the oppoſite banks. The current being inſtantly ſtopped occaſioned a great inundation above, and ſo ſudden a fall below that many fiſhes were left on dry land, and ſeveral barges heeled over, ſome of which before the water returned were ſunk. The river ſoon took its courſe over a large meadow oppoſite to the wood, and in three days made a navigable channel through the ſame. Part of the turnpike road leading through Coalbrook dale to Much Wenlock was removed from 10 to 40 yards. A barn which ſtood near the houſe was carried 35 yards towards the river, and left as a heap of rubbiſh in a large chaſm. The houſe received but little damage though removed about four feet; a hedge facing to the garden was carried near 40 yards, and the land which fell in various directions lay in confuſed heaps, but ſince all righted, full of cracks from four inches to more than a yard wide, and ſeems as if it would never be fit for tillage or paſture. Several very long and deep chaſms were found in the upper part of the land from 10 to more than 40 yards wide, and at firſt were and are in ſome places full 12 yards deep. In the chaſms are many pyramids of earth left ſtanding with the turf on the tops of ſeveral, but moſtly barren or covered with coltsfoot. Hollows are raiſed into mountains, and mountains ſunk into hollows. Leſs than a quarter of an hour completed this dreadful ſcene. On the morning of the 27th the chaſms and cracks were obſerved to be very dry. A ſpring roſe up in a leaſow fronting the houſe for three weeks, and then ſtopped. The ſoil is what the miners call dye earth, free from any mixture of clay, and hard till expoſed to the air. At a houſe on a high bank near the Severn above Bildwas brook more than half a mile from the Birches a conſiderable ſhock was felt in the night between the 25th and 26th; and the houſe, outbuildings, yard, court, and road, continued in motion all that day, the ground opening and cloſing alternately; but many of the openings remain uncloſed extending to the edge of the banks near the Severn parallel thereto. This houſe was at length ſhaken down. The upper tree of a pump was by the violent agitation of the earth heaved out of its ſocket and thrown down, but the brick-work round the well remained undiſturbed. May 28, about 10 at night, a houſe called Adney farm, a mile from the Birches, was violently ſhaken. The watermen affirmed that the water fell ſix feet in ſix minutes at Bridgenorth, which is 12 miles diſtant, and the ſhock was felt very ſeverely at Newport which is 14°, and in the collieries in Coalbrook dale. The effects of this concuſſion of the earth perfectly agree with thoſe occaſioned by the earthquakes in Calabria 1783[p].

"Yerne is made in certen places of Shropſhire, "and eſpecially yn the wooddes between Belvois and "Wenloke[q]."

Mr. Ward, from the ſame argument as Mr. Camden, places Uſacona at Sheriff Hales on the borders of this county and Staffordſhire, though he owns he has no account of remains to ſupport him. Had Mr. Camden ſeen the MSS. which read Uxacona, and are followed by later editors of the Itinerary, he would have thought his hypotheſis irrefragably proved. Mr. Baxter following this reading carries it further from Wroxeter to Newport by Aqualate meer, explaining Uxacona, Uch a coud av. q. d. At the head of the water.

John de Cherlton procured licence of Edward II. to make a caſtle of his houſe at Cherlton. His eſtate [h] Ward in Horſley, 466.

[i] MS Lloyd.
[k] Tan. 449.
[l] Dugd. Bar II. 60.
[m] Lel. VIII. 84. b.
[n] Lel. IV. 181. b. Billevoiſe VII. 32.
[o] Conciſe account of it with a plan by George Young. Fuller account by Mr. Fletcher vicar of Madeley.
[p] See ſir William Hamilton's account in Phil. Tranſ. vol. LXXIII. p. 117. and Gent. Mag. LIII. p. 785.
[q] Lel. VII. 39.

paſſed passed from his family by a daughter to the Grays, who became in her right barons Powis[r].

"Chorleton castle on Terne longing to the lord "Poys, six miles from Shrewsbiri, and a mile from "Terne village[s]." "The hedde howse of the Charl-"tons now is Appley, half a mile from Welington "market, a mile from the Wrekin hilles. Howbeit "Chorleton castle semith in time past to have been "the principal. There be divers of the Chorle-"tons gentlemen of Shropshire. Chorleton of "Chorleton castle married the heyre of the lords "Powis, and Gray sins lord Poys married Chorle-"ton's heyre[t]." Apley castle belongs to ——— Charleton, esq.

Tong belonged before the Conquest to Morkar earl of Northumberland. In the reign of John it was held by Roger la Zouche of Ashby, who seems to have given it to his daughter or her daughters[u].

"Tunge, a little thoroughfare between Ulvor-"hampton and Newport. There is a college and "warden with an almosehouse of the auncient foun-"dation of the Vernons of Haddon in the Peke. "Many or almost al lye there that were famose of "them syns the foundation. There was an old "castle of stone called Tunge castel. It standith "half a mile from the town on a banke, under the "which runneth the broke that cometh from Wes-"ton to Tunge. Sir Henry Vernon a late daies "made the castel new all of bricke[x]." He died 1515. Sir Richard Vernon of Nether Haddon, Derbyshire, obtained it with the daughter of sir Foulk Pembridge, and his descendants enjoyed it a considerable time. It came to sir Thomas Stanley, second son of Edward Stanley, third earl of Derby, who, marrying a daughter of sir George Vernon, became possessed of this estate, which was last the property of the late duke of Kingston, whose family had it in marriage with the daughter and heir of sir Thomas Harris, bart. and here is a handsome antient mansion, built on the old site, the residence of the Veres earls of Oxford, since of George Durant, esq.[y] Sir Foulke's widow, or his daughter Vernon, made the church collegiate for a warden, four priests, and 13 poor people, valued at £.45. 9s.[z] In it are the monuments of Pembridge and Stanley above-mentioned, with their ladies, and five of the Vernons. The great bell weighs 48 cwt. Here are almshouses founded by the Harris's[a].

"Byrwodde (Breerwood) a priory of White Nuns, "lately suppressid in the very marche of Shrop-"shire towards Darbyshire[b]."

Not far from Tonge, on the edge of Staffordshire, in Donnington parish, is Boscobel wood, famous for the oak that sheltered king Charles II. from his pursuers after the battle of Worcester: and Whiteladies, a priory of White or Cistertian nuns as old as the reign of Richard I. or John[c], afterwards the seat of Mr. Giffard, in which his majesty was concealed till, after a dangerous journey under various disguises, he got to the sea side, and so to France. This oak was a fair spreading thriving tree, its boughs lined and covered with ivy; but it has been almost cut away in the middle by travellers. In the thickest part the king sat in the day with col. Carlosse, and at night lodged at Boscobel house. The remains of the oak were fenced in by Basil Fitz Herbert, esq; with a handsome brick wall, and this inscription in gold letters on a blue stone over the gate:

Felicis. arborē, quā in asilū potentis. regis Caī 2di Deus Op. Max. per quem reges regnāt hic crescere voluit, tam in perpet. rei tantæ memoriā quam in specimen firmæ in reges fidei, muro cinctam posteris cōmendant Basilius & Jana Fitzherbert.
Quercus amica Jovi[d].

which remained till the year 1784, when by some ill-disposed persons, it was broken and the wall thrown down.

The ruins of the nunnery of Whiteladies are very considerable, and the church has circular arches in its walls[e].

"Sir John Talbot that married Troutbeke's heire "dwellith in a goodly lodge on the hy toppe of "Albrighton park. It is in the very edge of Shrop- Albrighton. "shire, three miles from Tunge[f]."

Albrighton, according to sir William Dugdale[g], was the property of John Tregoz, 28 Edward I. By his daughter it came to John la Warre 31 Edward I. whose grandson died seized of it 44 Edward III. It passed by entail to Reginald West, created lord de la Warre 5 Henry VI. and George Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury, is the present owner.

"At Drayton, a market town, is a small bridge[h]." Drayton. "Draiton upon Terne river, xiiii miles from "Shrewsbiri[i]."

Henry of Huntingdon renders Ninnius' Caer Daritbou by Draiton. The Corbet family had a seat here.

Horsley by distance places MEDIOLANUM on a slip of land inclosed by the Tern and another river. Salmon[k] puts it at Knightley c. Stafford. MEDIOLANUM.

The battle which Mr. Camden places at Draiton is better known in our history by the name of the battle of Blore heath, 37 Henry VI. Nevil earl of Salisbury commanded 5000 Yorkists, and lord Audley double the number of Lancastrians, principally collected out of Cheshire. Despair gave victory to the Yorkists, lord Audley and most of his officers, and above 2000 soldiers being slain. Salisbury marched from hence to Richard duke of York at Ludlow, where measures were afterwards concerted for the latter's obtaining the crown. See before in Staffordshire, p. 387.

"Hodnet a townlet[l]." It is now a market town. Hodnet. In Domesday it belonged to earl Roger, and gave name to a hundred now called Bradforth North[m].

At Moreton near Draiton is a mineral water not unlike that at Holt in Leicestershire. Moreton.

From the situation of Wem on the river Roden, Horsley[n] inclined to place there the Rutunium of the Itinerary. Wem.

[r] Dugd. Bar. II. 71. 73. 283.
[s] Ib. 35.
[t] Phillips, p. 231.
[u] Lel. VII. 32. Tan. 452. See before in Staffordshire, p. 385.
[x] Phil. Trans. N° 310. Gent. Mag. vol. LIV. p. 237. and vol. LV. May.
[y] Lel. V. 30.
[z] P. 677.
[a] Dugd. I. 689. Mag. Brit. IV. 642.
[b] Tan. 456.
[c] Lel. VII. 31.
[d] Bar. I. 616.
[e] Lel. IV. 181. b.
[f] Lel. VII. 33.
[g] Gent. Mag. 1763. XXX. 162.
[h] Tan. p. 452.
[i] Ib. vol. LV. p. 80.
[k] Lel. IV. 181. b.
[l] Ib VII. 32.
[m] MS Lloyd.
[n] P. 418.

Ralph

Ralph Boteler of Overſley, Warwickſhire, married Maud, heireſs of Pantulf t. Henry III. and had the manor of Wem. An heireſs of Boteler, t. Edward III. married ſir Robert Ferrars, younger ſon of Robert lord Ferrars of Chartley, who was ſummoned to parliament 49 Edward III. as baron Wem, which title was borne by his widow and her 3d husband Thomas Molinton. The eſtate paſſed by females to the lords Greyſtock and from them by marriage to the lords Dacres of Gilleſland; and by an heireſs of that family in like manner to Philip Howard earl of Arundel, by whoſe attainder it went to the crown in the reign of Elizabeth [o]. The title of baron Wem was conferred by James II. on lord chancellor Jefferies, who had the eſtate [p], and with whoſe ſon it ended. Here is a market and a freeſchool, founded by ſir Thomas Adam, lord mayor of London 1645, who was born here, and founded an Arabic profeſſorſhip at Cambridge, and circulated a Perſian tranſlation of the New Teſtament in the Eaſt [q]. At the north-weſt corner of the church-yard is Haly caſtle, an oval mount much levelled, and made a garden.

Red Caſtle. "Redde Caſtel by Whitchirche a late the lord "Audeley's, eight miles playne north from Shrewſ- "bury, now al ruins. It hath been ſtrong, and hath "decayid many a day [r]." Henry de Aldithle had licence 11 Henry III. to build a caſtle on his own demeſnes, known at firſt by the name of Ratcliffe caſtle from its ſituation on a rock of red ſtone. 37 Henry III. James his ſon had grant of free-warren He went on a pilgrimage to St. James of Compoſtella, and after to the Holy Land. Nicholas lord Audley died 15 Richard II. leaving John Finchet ſon of his eldeſt ſiſter Joan, Margaret the wife of ſir Roger Holmes, and lord Fitz Warren his heirs; a fine was levied 16 Richard II. whereby ſir Roger Holmes and Margaret his wife made a ſettlement of their ſhare of this eſtate with remainder to John ſon of John Finchet of Marketon, knt. who bore the title of lord Audeley, and left it to his poſterity. 37 Henry VIII. the king granted this manor to ſir Andrew Corbet, knt. 43 Elizabeth Adolphus Cary and Anne his wife ſettled it on Oliver lord St. John. There are ſtill ſome very ſtriking ruins of this caſtle ſeated among romantic rocks and woods in ſir Richard Hill's park, and near it a ſquare Roman encampment in which coins and arms have been found.

Matilda, or, as Dugdale [s] calls her, Margaret L'Eſtrange was daughter of Guy L'Eſtrange, the firſt of his family t. Henry II.

Morton Corbet. "Morton Corbet in a marras, four miles from Shrewſ- "biri by N. longing to the Corbettes [t]. Corbet "of Morton Corbet, 800 mark land. It lyith round "about the ſhire [u]. A faire caſtel of Mr. Cor- "betts [x]." Some part of the old caſtle remains. The new houſe was never finiſhed. Being made a garriſon for the king in the civil wars 1644, it was ſo much ruined, that only the outſide walls and beautiful front remain, the latter adorned with the ſeveral orders of architecture, and variety of animals and flowers in relief. The fall of chimnies has greatly damaged it. The ruins are carefully preſerved by the preſent proprietor Andrew Corbet of the park, eſq. [y] The principal ſeat of this family was at Caus Caſtle hereafter-mentioned. They had the ſtyle and rank of barons from the reign of Henry III. to that of Edward III. Several of the family are ſtill ſubſiſting here, and in other parts of the county as at Longnor, &c.

Ca "Caurſe Caſtel on a hil v myles from Shrewsbiri "by ſouth-weſt longith to the duke of Buckingham, "now to the lord Staford [z]."

Roger Corbett held of the earl Roger all that tract of land ſince called Forde hundred with part of Chirbury and Condover hundred, the whole conſiſting of 39 manors or hamlets, and for his capital ſeat he built the caſtle of Caux in alluſion to a caſtle of that name probably in Normandy in the pais de Caux. It ſeems likely that he or his ſon forfeited it by ſiding with Robert Beleſme his patron againſt Henry I. who gave it to Paris Fitz John, from whom the Welſh took it. It was reſtored to the original lords, and 1 John Robert Corbet obtained a weekly market. It was again ſeized and reſtored by Henry III. The male line of this family was found to be extinct 21 Edward III. and the moiety of the barony with the caſtle came with a daughter to the Staffords lords and earls of Stafford; on the execution of the laſt of whom, Edward duke of Buckingham, it was forfeited to the crown, but reſtored to his ſon Edward, whoſe ſon Edward alienated it in the reign of Elizabeth to Robert Harcourt, from whom it came to the preſent lord viſcount Weymouth [a]. The heireſs of the Stafford family married ſir William Howard, K. B. who was created viſcount Stafford by Charles I. 1640, who was beheaded 1680. His eldeſt ſon Henry was created earl of Stafford by James II. 1688, and died 1719. The title ended in John his nephew 1762.

Ne Not far from hence is Newton, which has belonged to the Corbets from the Conqueſt to the preſent time. Here was a caſtle called Brow caſtle [b].

"Newport dwillith at a place called Archaule. "It ſtondeth betwixt Roden and Terne rivers to- "wardes their mouthes [c]."

A Arcoll, alias High Arcall, or Ercall, gave title of baron to ſir Richard Newport 18 Charles I. and of viſcount to his ſon Francis, 27 Charles II. who was created earl of Bradford 6 William and Mary. But the title is now extinct. Mr. Newport died inſane March 29, 1783, and the immenſe eſtate is now the property of William Pulteney, eſq.

H Haghmon abbey was founded for Auguſtine canons, A. D. 1110. Its yearly revenue was upwards of £.259. 13s. 7d. [d]

"Haghmon abbey of black canons. William Fitz "Alane founded Haghmon A. D. 1101, 1 William "Rufus. Ther was an hermitage and a chapel be- "fore the erecting of the abbey. The founder, his "wife, &c. buried there [e]."

M "Middle caſtle, three miles from Shrewsbury, "longing to the lord of Darbie very ruinus [f]."

Middle caſtle was another reſidence of lord Strange of Knocking, who probably built it. It was ſquare and moated round. Some conſiderable remains were ſtanding 1640, but it was ſo ruined by an earth-

[o] Dugd. Bar. I. 595, 596.
[p] G.
[q] Fuller, Worth. Shropſh. p. 10.
[r] Lel. VII. 32.
[s] Bar. I. 663. 746.
[t] Lel. ubi ſup.
[u] Lel. V. 30.
[x] Ib. V. 81.
[y] Phillips' Hiſt of Shrewſbury, p. 237.
[z] Lel. VII. 32.
[a] MS. Lloyd.
[b] Philips, 238.
[c] Lel. Ib.
[d] Tan. 448.
[e] Lel. VIII. 113. V. 80.
[f] Ib. VII. 32.

quake

quake 1688, that the reſt is now entirely demoliſhed. It came from the Stranges to the Derby family [g].

"Cortham caſtle, upon Corfe riveret, 14 miles "from Shrewsbury by ſouth [h]."

"The towne of Shrewſbury ſtandeth on a rokky "hill of ſtone of a ſad redde earth, and Severne ſo "girdeth in all the town, that ſavinge a little piece "by..... it were an iſle. It is commonly called "now in Welſh Moythicke[i]. Writers in Welſh called "it Penguerne, i. e. Caput Alneti. Schrobbesbury is "the very Engliſh word truly written not much diſ-"ſonant from Penguerne, and Salopia in Latin go-"eth far from the Welſh name. The towne is "ſtrongly waulled and defended with water, the "which is to be countid in the manner for the towne "dich. The caſtle hath been a ſtrong thing. It is "now much in ruine [k]. It is ſo ſet that it is in the "very place where the town is not defended with "Severne, els the town were totally environed with "water [l]. The towne is more than a mile within the "wall in compaſs. There be four pariſh churches "within the town: the principal is St. Chadde. "There is a deane and 10 prebendaries in a colle-"giate church of the patronage of the biſhop of "Lichfield. There is an hoſpital of St. Chadde. "The ſociety of the Mercers of Shrewsbury maintain "the hoſpital. The ſecond is St. Marie's, a colle-"giate church, with a dean and nine poor prebendes. "One Degory Walter, a merchant of Shrewsbury, "in hominum memoria, made an hoſpital at the weſt "of St. Mary's church. The Grey Friars of the "Charletons' foundatiou, and there lay the lady "Charleton, whom they took as their foundreſs [m]. "And this houſe ſtood upon Severne bank a litle "above the bridge of five arches. One D. Fran-"cis a frere of late dayes re-edified almoſt a great "part of this fryers houſe. The houſe of the black "friars was of the lady Genevile's foundation, and "this ſtood a litle without the wall upon Severn "ſide at the end of Marwell ſtreet. The Auguſ-"tine friars were of the foundation of the Staf-"fordes [n]. It ſtood a litle beneath Welſh bridge. "Many gentlemen killed at Battlefield were buried "here and at the Blacke friars. Owen Glendour "promiſed Henry Percy to have joined with him at "that battle [o]."

Mr. Edward Lloyd explains the name of Ymwythig by Placentia, and derives it from the pleaſant and fruitful ſituation of the town.

Shrewsbury is walled all round. The caſtle ſtanding on the Iſthmus was defended by William Fitz Alan for the empreſs againſt king Stephen, who made himſelf maſter of it by aſſault. Only one part with two round towers remains and the walls on the north-eaſt. The inſide is cleared from buildings, and the keep made a garden with a beautiful view [p]. Robert de Beleſme fortified the town and caſtle againſt Henry I. drawing a wall from each ſide of the caſtle acroſs the iſthmus to the water ſide, one of which ſtill remains. The town walls on the ſouth-eaſt ſides are kept in good repair, and form pleaſant walks. Thoſe on the north-weſt ſide are entirely covered with houſes. The ſtreets are ſpacious, but irregularly built and ſome ſteep.

"There is a ſtone bridge of three arches over "Mele as I entered into Shroſbery hard by the "abbey and hard beneath the bridge is the con-"fluence of Mele and Severn: and here by this bridge "breaketh out an arm of the Severn that at dead lowe "waters in ſommer ſcant fleeteth over the ſtrand. "There is a bridge of eight arches over this arm, and "after that it paſſeth through this bridge it ſtraight "meeteth again with the great ſtream. There be "two great main bridges of ſtone on the whole "river of Severn at Shrewſbury. The greateſt, "fayreſt and higheſt upon the ſtreame is the Welſh "bridge, having ſix great arches of ſtone, ſo called "becauſe it is the way out of the town into Wales. "This bridge ſtandeth on the weſt ſide of the towne, "and hath at the one end of it a great gate to enter "by into the towne, and at the other end towards "Wales a mighty ſtrong tower to prohibit enemies "to enter into the bridge. The ſecond bridge is "lower on Severne at the [eaſt] part of the town, and "this hath four great arches beſides the draw-"bridge [q]."

The eaſt bridge, probably coæval with the abbey and repaired with its ruins, conſiſting of 17 arches and being only 12 feet in breadth, and incumbered with a ſtone gateway, was rebuilt 1768 from a deſign of Mylne, altered by Gwynne a native, and the firſt ſtone laid by ſir John Aſtley. It conſiſts of ſeven arches, is 410 feet long, and 35 broad.

The Welſh bridge has two gates, over the innermoſt of which is a ſtatue ſuppoſed of Llewellin the laſt prince of Wales, but by the arms of France and England [r] on its coat more probably that of Edward I. It was firſt placed here 1695 [s].

There being no church ever dedicated to St. Gregory in Shrewsbury biſhop Gibſon ſuppoſed Mr. Camden miſtook it for St. Giles: but the charter of the Conqueror expreſsly ſays, that this church of St. Gregory was at Momerfeld wherever that was [t]. The condition which Mr. Camden quotes from the private hiſtory or regiſter of this abbey extended to all the churches given to it by the founder. For in the foundation charter printed in the Monaſticon, I. 379, after an enumeration of the ſaid churches and their appurtenances follows, "Et conſtitui ut monachi ec-"cleſias & terras earundem quas vellent poſt mortem "clericorum ſuorum in dominio retinerent [u]." Theſe are not indeed the very words quoted by Mr. Camden, but the ſenſe is the ſame. St. Giles is the moſt antient ſite in the ſtreet of the ſuburbs beyond the abbey [x].

Roger de Montgomery founded the monaſtery of St. Peter and St. Paul A. D. 1083, valued at £.532. 4s. 10d. [y]

[g] Philips, 238. [h] Lel. Ib. [i] Ymwithug, Camd. [k] Lel. IV. 181.
[l] Ib. VII. 15.
[m] Tan. 454. The remains are made a private houſe. Pennant's Wales, II. p. 404.
[n] Pennant, Ib. 457. Speed calls them White friars. Tan. 455.
[o] Lel. IV. 181. About a mile and an half from Shrewſbury where the Pool road diverges from that which leads to Oſweſtry, there ſtands an antient decayed oak. There is a tradition that Owen Glendwr aſcended this tree to reconnoitre, and finding that the king was in great force, and that the earl of Northumberland had not joined his ſon Hotſpur, he fell back to Oſweſtry, and immediately after the battle of Shrewſbury retreated precipitately to Wales.
[p] Pennant's Wales, II. 393. [q] Leland IV. 180.
[r] The modern arms of England, with Scotland and Ireland, are on the right hand of the ſtatue, and on the left, Az. 3 leopards heads O. the arms of the borough of Shrewſbury. [s] Philips, 148, 149.
[t] Mon. Ang. I. 381. Tanner, Not. Mon. 447, ſays it was Morfield. See Lel. IV. 182, before cited.
[u] Pennant Wales, II. 402. Philips, 84. [x] Tan. 445. [y] Ib. 117—121. Pennant's Wales, II. 407.

The weſt end of the abbey church ſtill remains, with an elegant ſtatue of the founder over the great window; and within, a mutilated figure dug out of the ruins in the beginning of the laſt century, and at the Herald's viſitation 1623 aſſigned to him. The ſite of the priory was the houſe of the late Henry Powis, eſq. Some of the offices remain in the ſtables, and a beautiful little ſtone croſs or pulpit[z]. Next the river is the ſhell of the refectory, or ſome large room.

Beſides the two collegiate churches mentioned by Mr. Camden, and a third of St. Alcmund, collegiate, founded by Ethelfleda, impropriate to Lilleſhull abbey, now parochial, here were two free chapels and four hoſpitals[a]. Some of the laſt ſtill ſubſiſt; together with St. Chad's and St. Mary's almſhouſes, and a charity ſchool ſupported by ſubſcription, a handſome infirmary eſtabliſhed 1745, and another hoſpital founded 1760 for orphans[b]. A 5th founded by James Millington of this town, draper, 1734, for 12 poor perſons of Frankwell; with a charity ſchool for 20 boys and as many girls, with an exhibition in Magdalen college for two ſcholars of this foundation[c]. The freeſchool erected and endowed by Edward VI. and rebuilt by queen Elizabeth[d], is a fair ſtately ſtone building with a good library[e] enriched with the valuable collection of the late learned Dr. John Taylor of St. John's college, Cambridge, who was born here about 1703, and received his education in this ſchool, and died to the irreparable loſs of claſſical learning among us, April 4, 1766, having been chancellor of the dioceſe of Lincoln, and reſidentiary of St. Paul's, in which laſt church he is buried[f]. Here are a head maſter and two under maſters, who have each good houſes. Edward Careſwell, eſq; of Bridgenorth, founded four exhibitions at Oxford for theſe ſcholars. The ſchool owes its preſent flouriſhing ſtate to the rev. Mr. Newling, who has lately quitted it on his preferment in the church of Lichfield and to St. Philip's church, Birmingham, and to the preſent head maſter the rev. Mr. Atcherley. Sir Philip Sidney, chancellor Jefferies, and lord chief juſtice Price were educated here. At Greenſhill about four or five miles out of town is another ſchool-houſe, or peſt houſe, built of the ſame white ſtone, for a retreat in caſe of contagion or any other accident. Along the Severn is a beautiful walk planted with trees, and called the Quarry.

Cherlton hall, the ſeat of the lords Powis, is now the theatre. Vaughan's place, the reſidence of Hubert de Burgh, belongs to Mr. Mytton of Halſton. Cole hall was the manſion of a family of that name[g].

Not leſs than £.1000 of Welſh flannels are ſold at Shrewſbury weekly. Henry I. granted the firſt charter of incorporation to this town. Charles I. gave them a new charter of incorporation. On the Monday fortnight after Whitſuntide the twelve companies make a ſplendid proceſſion and entertainment for the mayor and the corporation to a place called Kingsland, the antient horſe courſe on the oppoſite bank of the Severn, where they have their reſpective arbours and devices. Several parliaments were held in this town. The firſt 1283, at which David, brother to Llewellin laſt prince of Wales, was tried and condemned, and executed as a traitor. That in 1397, called the Great Parliament, inveſted Richard II. with abſolute power confirmed by the pope's bull.

This town gave birth to two eminent antiquaries Robert and Thomas Talbot, and to Thomas Churchyard the poet, all nearly contemporaries. Here were alſo born Richard duke of York, and George, two ſons of Edward IV. Robert biſhop of Bangor, who died 1215; Ralph biſhop of Bath and Wells t. Edward III. who died 1363; and admiral John Benbow, who died 1702 of a wound received in an engagement with the whole French fleet in the Eaſt Indies in his own ſhip and two others, the reſt of his captains declining the fight.

The ſweating ſickneſs, which for above 60 years after infeſted this kingdom at different periods, is ſuppoſed to have been brought hither by the earl of Richmond's army, which landed at Milford haven, and marched through Wales. In many places it ſwept away one third of the people. It began with a ſweat, the ſenſe of a hot vapour running through the whole limbs juſt affected, and had many of the ſymptoms of the plague, but no eruption. The cures never exceeded 24 hours, whence Dr. Caius[h] calls it Ephemera Britannica: but oftener death enſued in 3 or 10 hours. There were places in which ſcarce one in one hundred eſcaped infection. Towards the end of the viſitation the malignacy abated; for in 1528 out of 40,000 who were ſeized in London, only 2000 died. The patient was kept in the ſame poſture wherein he was ſeized without food or phyſic, and ſuch who ſo weathered out the diſtemper 24 hours did certainly eſcape. It is a miſtake to ſuppoſe, as many have done, that it was a diſeaſe peculiar to England, or that Engliſhmen only wherever they were would be ſeized with it. It certainly originated neither in England nor among Engliſhmen, but among the foreign levies of the duke of Richmond, collected from goals and crouded in tranſports. It ended here 1551, but not with that mildneſs as was obſerved in the later viſitations in other places, for not fewer than 990 died in a few days[i].

The battle of Shrewsbury on St. Magdalen's day, July 22, 1403, began in Oldfield or Bulfield, a little north of the North gate, and raged as far as what is now called Battleſield. The onſet was furious on the part of the Scots and Welſh, and earls Douglas and Percy got ſo near the king that his ſtandard was overthrown, and round it were ſlain Edmund earl of Stafford, ſir William Blunt the ſtandard bearer, and [z] Philips, p. 73. 100. &c. Pennant's Wales, II. 402. 404. where the pulpit is engraved.

[a] Tan. 447. 451. 455, 456, 457. [b] Philips, p. 122, 123. [c] Ib. p. 117—120. [d] Ib. p. 124—131.
[e] A MS. chronicle in this library, for the uſe of which I am indebted to the preſent maſter Mr. Archerley, fixes the execution of the duke of Buckingham in the reign of Richard III. at Saliſbury, concerning which Hollinſhed, Hall, and Stow, diſagree. Roſs agrees with this MS. Edit. Hearne, p. 217.
[f] See more of him in Mr. Nichols's Life of Mr. Bowyer, p. 62—68. While this ſheet was printing, Dr. Taylor's learned notes and MS. collections for the illuſtration of the Greek and Roman claſſics were purchaſed at the ſale of his friend Dr. Aſkew's MSS. by the univerſity of Cambridge, from whoſe preſs they may in due time be expected in correct editions of ſeveral claſſic authors. See Gent. Mag. vol. LV. p. 284.
[g] Philips, 145, 146, 147.
[h] Beſides what Dr. Caius wrote about it both in Engliſh and Latin 1552 and 8556, it was firſt treated of by two Germans in "De novo hactenuſque Germaniæ inaudito morbo ἱδροπυρετῳ hoc eſt ſudatoria febri quem vulgo ſudorem Britannicum vocant Generoſi Hermanni a Nuenare comitis præpoſiti Colonien. Simoniſque Riquini medicæ rei expertiſſimi judicium doctiſſimum duobus epiſtolis contentum. Colon 1529." 4°. Lord Bacon alſo treated of it, and his relation was examined by Henry Stubbe of Warwick 1671. 4°.
[i] Fuller's Worth. p. 26. Aikin's Medical Biography, p. 119—127. Pennant's Wales, II. 412, 413.

ſeveral

ſeveral barons and knights: the king himſelf ſlew 37 men. At laſt Hotſpur being killed, his party fled. Douglas tumbling down Haghmon hill was taken priſoner, and pardoned for his valour. Sixteen hundred men fell on the king's ſide, and above 5000 on the other, few Scots eſcaping. Percy's body was delivered to Nevil lord Furnival to be interred, but next day the king ordered it to be taken up, beheaded, and quartered, and hung in different parts of the kingdom [k].

"Battleſield chappell is a mile out of Shrewſbury "by north. King Henry IV. founded this litle col- "lege and endowed it. A gentleman who was "owner of the ground whereon it was builded had "the patronage thereof given to him and his "heirs [l]."

Battlefield is about two miles north of Shrewſbury. The chapel ſtill remains, neatly fitted up, except the nave, which is ruinous, and at the eaſt end without is a ſtatue of Henry IV. much defaced. The college with an hoſpital was founded by Roger Ive, rector of Albrighton, in which pariſh it is, and was valued at £. 56. 1s. 4d. [m].

At Hanley near Shrewsbury is a chalybeat water, of which ſee Dr. Linden's Hiſtory, 1768, 8vo.

Onſlow gave title of baron to lord Onſlow 1716. The family were ſeated here from the time of Henry III. but this place belongs now to Rowland Wingfield, eſq. [n] Richard Onſlow firſt ſpeaker of the Houſe of Commons of that name t. Elizabeth, has a monument in St. Chad's church, Shrewsbury.

At Cleve was born 1640, William Wycherley the poet, who died 1715.

Wellington, 12 miles eaſt of Shrewsbury, is an extenſive pariſh, including 14 villages, 780 houſes, 4000 inhabitants, and two manors; Dothill belonging to Brook Forreſter, eſq; who has a park there three miles round, and Hadley to Mr. Roe. Here is a market and three fairs; but no manufactory, the inhabitants being chiefly employed in getting coal, lime, and ironſtone. There are two furnaces worked by a ſteam engine, one of the largeſt in England. In the iron ſtone about Ketley are impreſſions of plants and ſhells. The great Watling ſtreet leads through the pariſh about half a mile on the ſouth ſide of the town, and gives its name to one of the vills [o]. Charles I. muſtered his forces near this town Sept. 19, 1642.

North of Wellington is Kinardſey, of which Mr. George Plaxton, who had been rector there upwards of 30 years, having been 6th rector from the time of Henry III. gives this curious account to the Royal Society 1673 [p]. He found a great many aged people in the pariſh, and obſerved that every 6th perſon was 60 years old and upwards, ſome 85, others 90; yet the town was ſurrounded by a large moraſs overflowed in winter and inacceſſible by any arable land in winter, whence it had the name of Kinard's Eye or iſland. The adjoining pariſhes of Eyton, Edney, Butterey, have all their terminations from their watry ſituation, and all the vaſt moraſs was called the Weald moor, i. e. the woody moor, which aged people remembered to have been overgrown with elders, willows, ſallows, thorns, &c. and which ſeemed to be a compoſition of ſludge and ſettlement of the floods on their ſubſiding to the debth of three or four feet. Roots and branches of oaks were found in the ditches; the ſoil is peaty, and cut up for firing, and under it is ſand. From ſeveral large trees the ſoil is ſo ſhrunk that ſheep could creep under their roots. The hay produced by the lands that have been drowned, though unfit for cows or horſes, fattened oxen extremely well by its dry and binding quality, which made them drink. About half a mile from the church is a pretty farm called the Wall, which Mr. Plaxton ſuppoſes a Britiſh fortification, 1900 yards in compaſs, and from 16 to 20 broad, ſurrounded by a moraſs, and raiſed to a great height with ſand and gravel.

In his rectory of Donnington, to which he was preſented 1690, and held it 13 years, being the 4th from the Reformation, he found more old people than at Kinardſey. He buried but 23 of his pariſhioners, of whom four were infants, and of the other the youngeſt was 60 and the oldeſt 96, and at one triennial viſitation of the biſhop he had neither burial nor wedding to return into the regiſtry at Lichfield. This part of the county is very healthful, and though it ſeems to the eye but of a moderate height, yet between Donnington and Wolverhampton you croſs four brooks in three miles; two running into the Severn and two into the Trent and Humber. Donnington.

At Wombridge three miles eaſt of Wellington was an houſe of Auſtin or black canons, founded by William Fitz Alan lord of Clun, t. Henry I. valued at £.65. 7s. 4d. [q] Wombridge.

"Ombridge black canons, two miles beyond Weling- "ton market, and two beyond Lillſal abby [r]."

"Coles be digged hard by Ombridge, where the "priory was [s]."

On the north ſide of the Severn is the village of Montford, which gave title 1741 to Henry Bromley, eſq. [t] It was purchaſed from lord Montford by the late lord Clive. Perry and Severn here ſurround Mitton [u], a hamlet in the pariſh of Fittes or Fitz, near whoſe church is a large exploratory mount [x]. Monford. Fittes.

"Newport upon a brooke a 12 or 14 miles by "eaſt from Shrewsbury [y];" a market and corporation antiently belonging to the Audleys and to a family of its own name, to whom it gave title of baron, and who were afterwards earls of Bradford as before obſerved. The church was collegiate. Here is an almſhouſe founded by Thomas and John Reynolds, brothers, canons of Lichfield and York [z]; a freeſchool and almſhouſe founded by John Adams, and another freeſchool. Newport.

Lilleſhull or Lincel [a] priory, founded about 1145, by Richard de Belmeis, laſt dean of St. Alcmund's church in Shrewsbury, who gave all that tract of land between Watling Street and Merdiche to build an houſe in honour of the Virgin Mary, and for the uſe of the canons regular of St. Peter of Dorcheſter de ordine Arroaſiæ, who were afterwards ſtiled the canons regiſters of Doninton near adjoining. It was valued at £. 229. 3s. 1d. [b] Lilleſhull.

[k] Stowe, 329. Hall. f. xxii. Pennant ubi ſup. 407—411.
[l] Lel. IV. 181. Tan. 445.
[m] Tan. 456. Lel. before. Philips, 221.
[n] Pennant's Wales, II. 390.
[o] Gent. Mag. XXVIII. p. 574.
[p] Phil. Tranſ. N° 310.
[q] Tan. 449.
[r] Lel. VII. 32.
[s] Lel. V. 35.
[t] Pennant, II. 390.
[u] Ib. 391.
[x] Ib. 392.
[y] Lel. VII. 32.
[z] Tan, 456.
[a] Lel. VII. 32.
[b] Tan. 450. Phillips, 236.

At

Sheriff Hales. At Sheriffhales is a milky vitriolic water, found among the iron mines.

"Sir John Talbot dwellith a 16 miles from 'Shrewsbury in the way to London towards Hamp-"ton village. His houſe ſtandeth in a park called Pepper hill. "Pepper hill[c]."

Munſlow. Munſlow gave birth 1589, and title of baron 1640 to ſir Edward Littleton, deſcended by a younger ſon from judge Littleton who lived in the reign of Edward IV. He was lord chief juſtice of the Common Pleas and keeper of the great ſeal 1640, and died 1645[d].

Roſſal. At Roſſal the Severn incloſes a piece of ground of five miles in compaſs called the Iſle of Up Roſſal, a moſt compact eſtate of Humphry Sandford, eſq. to whoſe anceſtor it was granted by Elizabeth on the forfeiture of ſir Francis Englefield[e]. The floats mentioned by Mr. Camden are grown out of uſe. But the Shrewsbury fiſhermen uſe a veſſel called a Coracle, which they row with one hand while they fiſh with the other. It is about five feet long and three broad, almoſt oval with a round bottom, made of ſallow twigs or oſiers covered with horſes hides, and ſo light as to be carried on a man's back. Theſe veſſels ſeem to be the remains of the curraghs uſed antiently between Ireland and Scotland, and ſimilar to the canoes of the Americans.

Shrawarden "Shrawarden caſtle is in ripa læva of Severne two "miles above Mountford bridge[f], four miles from "Shrewsbury, and longeth to the earl of Arundel[g]."

Shrawithin or Shrawarden caſtle belonged to John Fitz Alan of Clun, father of the firſt earl of Arundel, in which family it continued till the reign of Elizabeth, when it ſeems to have been purchaſed by ſir Thomas Bromeley, who preſided at the queen of Scots' trial as ſolicitor-general, ſucceeded ſir Nicholas Bacon as chancellor, and died 1587.

There were caſtles both at Great and Little Shrawardine: the former ſhews a few fragments, and belongs to lord Clive; the latter is reduced to a bare keep[h].

Knockin. "Knoking caſtle in Shropſhire, now a ruinus thing, "longid to the lorde L'Eſtrange, and now to the "earl of Darby[i]."

The L'Eſtranges are deſcended from a duke of Bretaigne, whoſe ſons came over in the Conqueror's reign. They were ſettled t. Henry II. at Cnukyn or Knocking, where they built a caſtle, rebuilt t. Henry III. The family failed 17 Edward IV. in John, who left only a daughter married to George Stanley, in her right lord Strange, eldeſt ſon and heir apparent of Thomas firſt earl of Derby. The collateral branches ſettled at Alvitheley (miſcalled by Mr. Camden Avindelegh), Elleſmere, Blakemere in this county, and at Lytheam[k], Ludham, and Hunſtanton in Norfolk.

Kynaſton's cave. In the cliff that overhangs Great Neſſe is Kynaſton's cave, ſaid to have been the retreat of a famous robber of that name, but really of the ſpendthrift ſon of ſir Roger Kynaſton[l], who aſcended to it by twenty-four narrow iliguarded ſteps with his horſe who ſtabled in an apartment adjoining to his maſter. It ſerves now as a cottage.

Maſ. Oſ. Maſerfield in Lancaſhire near Winwic, contends for the honour of the field of the battle, which is generally allowed to have been at or near Oſweſtre. Mr. Pennant[m] derives it from the length of the conflict, Maes hîr, the long field. Near the town is a field called Cae nef, or heaven field, probably the place of Oſwald's martyrdom[n]. Mr. Camden had the name Croix Oſwald from Leland; the Welſh name is Oſweſtre or Oſwaldſtre, q. d. Oſwald's town[o].

"The ſite of Croix Oſwald is on a plain in a val-"ley 12 long miles by champain, having almoſt no "wood north-weſt from Shrewsbury. The cum-"pace of the town within the wall is about a mile. "There be four gates, New gate ſouth, Blake gate, "alias Portdee, ſouth-eaſt, Beteriche gate north-eaſt, "Wylliho, or Mountain gate, north-weſt," [the firſt and two laſt remain] "and no towers in the walls. "The church of St. Oſwald is a very fine leddid "church with a neat toured ſteeple, but it ſtandith "without the New gate, ſo that there is no church "within the town." This church was ſome time a monaſtery called the White Minſter, after turned to a pariſh church, and the parſonage appropriated to Shrewsbury abbey[p]. "The cloiſter ſtood in hominum "memoria ubi monumenta monachorum. The place and "ſtreet where the church ſtandeth is called Stretllan. "There be within the town x notable ſtreets, the "three moſt notable be Croſſe-ſtreet ubi crux la-"pidea, &c."[q] The principal ſtreet was called the Croſs-ſtreet from a ſtone croſs, probably erected in memory of Oſwald, if not on the very ſpot where he fell[r], and where the miracles related by Bede III. 6. were wrought. Leland adds, "in its four ſuburbs were "three chapels, the church alſo ſtanding without the "Newgate. The houſes within the town be of tymbre "and ſlated. Ther is a caſtle ſette on a mount be like-"lihood made by hand," built by Madoc ſon (not brother) of Meredith prince of Powis t. Henry I. 1148[s]. It had a tower called Madoc's, in which was an apartment built by Richard II. after the execution of the earl of Arundel for treaſon[t]. Only the hill now remains, and ſome traces of the ditch. William Fitz Alan ſumptuouſly entertained archbiſhop Baldwin and his ſuite, among whom was Giraldus Cambrenſis[u], at this caſtle, which in records is always called Blancminſter. It went out of that family in the reign of Elizabeth[x], together with their other large eſtates in this county, by the attainder of the unfortunate Philip Howard earl of Arundel. "The "towne ſtandith moſt by ſale of cloth made in Wales. "There is a fre ſchole on the weſt ſide of the church "made by one David[y] Holbuke a lawier, ſteward of "the town and lordſhip, and gave 10*l.* land to it. St. "Oſwald's well is a bow ſhot from St. Oſwald's

[c] Lel. VII. 35. [d] Fuller's Worth. Shropſh. p. 7. [e] Pennant, II. 391.
[f] Lel. IV. 181. [g] Ib. VII. 32. [h] Pennant's Wales, II. 387, 388. [i] Leland ubi ſup.
[k] Q. if in this county. Lythem and Lydem were eſtates of the Powiſes. [l] Philips, 238.
[m] Wales, I. 247.
[n] Pennant Ib. 251. [o] Giraldus Cambrenſis knew ſo little of Welſh as to render it Oſwaldi arbor. II. 12.
[p] Biſhop Tanner (p. 445), doubts the exiſtence of this monaſtery at Oſweſtry, at leaſt long after the Saxon times, becauſe the church was given to Shrewſbury monaſtery ſoon after the Conqueſt. But I think the tithes vicinarum eccleſiarum which maintained 12 prieſts pie-rumque conjugatos in monaſterio albo or Blanch monaſtery, granted by Rayner biſhop of St. Aſaph between 1186 and 1220 to Shrewſbury abbey, eſpecially as that biſhop reſided much at Oſweſtry, prove there was a collegiate church there. The other Album Monaſterium, Whitchurch, had only an hoſpital.
[q] Lel. V. 39. [r] perhaps where the pit was made by ſcraping up the earth which his body had covered. Bede.
[s] Wynne, p. 168. [t] Lel. It. V. 39.
[u] Girald. Camb. II. c. 12. [x] Pennant's Wales, I. 246—257.
[y] "Sum ſay that this David made David Yn in London." Lel. Ib.

"church

"church in the fields ſouth-weſt, into which they "ſay an eagle dropt one of his arms which he had "taken from the ſtakes. There is a chapel of timber, "and the fountain environed with a ſtone wall. Fair "walks about it[z]." The ruins of this chapel ſtill remain over this remarkably fine ſpring[a].

This town then walled with ſtone, its caſtle, and the hundred of Oſwaldſtre, with eleven towns thereto belonging, were annexed to the principality of Cheſter by ſtatute 21 Richard II. c. 9.

"Lloven a buſh. Hene Dinas a quarter of a mile "out of Oſweſtre north weſt. The towne or caſtelle "of Hen Dinas ſtandith upon a rounde hillet about "half a mile in cumpace. There be three great "diches in the bottom of the hillet cumpaſing it, and "in the toppe of the hill now grow great trees of "oak. The common people ſay there was a cite "withyn thoſe ditches. I think rather campe of "men of war, whereas peradventure was the campe "when Penda and Oſwaldes did fight. Ther is "another hillet of caſt earth between it and Oſweſtre, "not far from Dinas itſelf[b]."

Hen Dinas or the Old City is called by Leland Lloven hen Dinas or the old City among Buſhes, which exactly agrees with the name by which it now goes in the country Coed y Dinas, q. d. the City in the Wood, from the thick oaks that cover it. It contains above fifteen acres, and makes a magnificent appearance from the road between Oſweſtry and Wales, ſtrongly fortified with two ramparts and ditches of great height and depth. See it Pl. XII. fig. 11. Tradition ſays it was the laſt retreat of the Britans[c]. The Society of Antiquaries engraved 1763 a very curious circular wooden ſhield near a Roman foot in diameter, found in its area, bound round with iron and covered with iron network, the inſide lined with three coats of leather, and furniſhed with an handle or ſtrap to paſs over the arm, as the outſide with an umbo four inches long terminating in a point.

Sellatyn is remarkable for two of its rectors of principles diametrically oppoſite, James Wylding, who ſat in the Aſſembly of Divines at Weſtminſter, and Henry Sacheverell, the champion of the church of England[d].

"The towne of Whittington is a gret mile north-"eaſt from Hen Dinas. It is a village in a valley "containing a 100 houſes, and hath a ditched round "caſtle, not very large in the middle of the village[e]. "A caſtel of the lord Fitz Warins ſix miles up-"wards almoſt on Severn, and by this goeth Offa's "diche[f]."

Warin a Lorainer bearing a ſilver ſhield[g] with a peacock for his creſt, agreeable to the gallantry of the times, won his wife Mellet, daughter of William Peverell, at a tilting match at Peverell's place in the Peak, againſt the king of Scotland's ſon and a baron of Burgundy. With her he had Whittington caſtle, whence he made continual inroads upon the Welſh. His ſon Fulk, who in the true independent ſpirit of an antient baron almoſt killed king John when prince for breaking his head with a cheſs board, carried on the ſame hoſtilities. Perhaps in remembrance of this, John, when he came to the crown, gave away Whittington caſtle from Fulk's ſon, the hero of ſo many adventures, who thereupon retired to France. Coming over afterwards to Windſor where the king was hunting, he in diſguiſe took him to a tent where his friends were before poſted, and bullied him to conſent to his pardon. But no ſooner was John out of his power but he obliged him once more to croſs the ſea. Thus Leland[h] from the Geſtes of Warine[i].

The public records repreſent theſe tranſactions more in the king's favour. However Warine at laſt obtained his pardon, but again rebelled againſt John and his ſon Henry III. who in his fifth year gave him licence to fortify this caſtle, and he continued in his allegiance till his death, being drowned at the battle of Lewes 48 Henry III. Elizabeth heireſs of this family married Richard Hancford, and their daughter Thomaſine became wife of ſir William Bourchier, who inherited the eſtates, and was ſummoned to parliament 1. Henry VI. by the title of lord Fitz Warine. His great grandſon John was created earl of Bath, which title became extinct with his grandſon[k].

Fulk Fitz Warine procured a market and fair for this town. The firſt is loſt, but there are ſtill three conſiderable cattle fairs. The caſtle ſituate on a flat is reduced to the gateway and two vaſt round towers ſurrounded by a moat of ſeveral vaſt ditches which comprehended outworks. In the church porch the founder is ſaid to have been buried[l].

"Sir Robert Needham of Sheinton 400 mark "land[m]." Sheinton.

The family of Needham were as conſiderable in Cheſhire as in this county. Sir Robert Needham had conſiderable commands in queen Elizabeth's Iriſh wars, was afterwards vice-preſident of the council in the marches of Wales, and created viſcount Kilmorey in Ireland 1625 by Charles I. To him ſucceeded his great grandſon Thomas, who built a noble houſe here, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert, and he 1710 by his ſon Robert, whoſe brother Thomas is the 8th and preſent viſcount[n].

"Sandforde dwelleth at Sandforde, wher is only "his place and a parke 111 miles by S. from White-"church[o]." Sandford.

"The town of Whitchirch in Shropſhire hath a "very good market, and there in the paroch chirch "is buried ſir Gylbert Talbot[p]." It has a free-ſchool, another ſchool and ſix almſhouſes, founded by Mr. Higginſon. The races here are much frequented. "At the end of Whitchurch is a "fair pool having bremes, pikes, tenches, perches, "and daces, the which except bremes be the com-"mon fiſhes of all the pooles of Shropſhire, Cheſhire, "and Lancaſhire: in ſome be alſo troutes[q]." Whitchurch.

Tilſtock hamlet is a chapel of eaſe. Here is a market and two fairs, and in the pariſh two meres, Blackmere and Oſmere[r]. Robert L'Eſtrange married a coheir of William de Blankminſter, whereby the whole manor of Whitchurch deſcended to the L'Eſtranges[s]. Blackmere.

[z] Lel. V. 40. [a] Pennant's Wales, I. 250.
[b] Lel. V. 40. [c] Aubrey, Mon. Brit. [d] Lloyd MS. [e] Lel. V. 40.
[f] Lel. VII. 32. [g] Perhaps a ſhield Arg.
[h] Collect. I. 230, &c.
[i] The ſubſtance of theſe is written in eight lines under a knight on horſeback coarſely painted in a room over the gateway of this caſtle. Pennant's Wales. I. 242.
[k] Dugd. Bar. I. 443—446. II. 131. [l] Pennant's Wales, I. 244, 245. [m] Lel. V. 30.
[n] Lodge, Iriſh Peer. II. 307. [o] Leland, VII. 35. [p] Ib. V. 81.
[q] Lel. Ib. [r] Gent. Mag. XXVI. p. 120. [s] MS. Lloyd.

In the church of Whitchurch is a ſtone figure of a knight in armour, with the robes of the garter, called John earl of Shrewsbury, and in an oppoſite window a ſtone figure of an eccleſiaſtic.

Richard Talbot who died 20 Richard II. married Anchoret L'Eſtrange, heir of Blakmere t. Richard II.[t] His and his brother's monument, together with that of the famous John firſt earl of Shrewſbury[u], ſlain at the ſiege of Chaſtillon in France 1453, were in the church, which was rebuilt 1713, and has a beautiful tower.

"Blakmeer park and lodge 1 half mile off be-"longed to the earl of Shrewsbury, wherein is a "very fair place or lodge and three fair poles, the "larges called Blakein[x]."

The name of Blancminſter given to Whitchurch muſt be carefully diſtinguiſhed from that given to Oſweſtre before-mentioned. Here was an hoſpital t. Henry III.[y]

Dr. Bernard, chaplain to archbiſhop Uſher, whoſe life he wrote, was native and rector 1642 of this place, where he died 1661. The eminent linguiſt and antiquary Abraham Wheeloc was alſo born here, and died about 1654.

Elleſmere. "At Elleſmere was a caſtle and very fair polis yet "be. It hath four ſtreets of metely good building, "privilegid with two faires, but no common market "now[z]." The town ſtands on an eminence commanding a lake of 120 acres, and 26 yards deep, well ſtocked with fiſh, whence it takes its name. The principal trade is malt. The ſite of the caſtle guarded with three great ditches is a bowling green which commands a lovely and very extenſive proſpect. In the church is a monument of ſir Francis Kynaſton of Otley 1590. His houſe and park in this pariſh are on the oppoſite ſide of the lake[a].

Elleſmere gave name to a hundred ſince called Pimhill. John L'Eſtrange was governor of its caſtle 33 Henry III. which was afterwards in the crown. Lord Chancellor Egerton baron Elleſmere, was created viſcount Brackley upon his reſigning the ſeals 1617. The title of earl of Bridgewater intended for him if he had lived was conferred on his ſecond ſon and heir, whoſe great grandſon Scroop was created marquis of Brackley and duke of Bridgewater 1720, which honours are now enjoyed by his ſecond ſon Francis, third and preſent duke.

Wales commences at a boundary ſtone on the Oſweſtry road three miles from Elleſmere.

Three miles from Elleſmere and one from Whittington is Halſton, the ſeat of the Myttons from the time of Henry VIII. Here was born general Mytton, who figured in the cauſe of the parliament, and here are preſerved the valuable collections for an hiſtory of this county, made by Mr. William Mytton, who had been many years engaged in them with indefatigable attention, but died before he could complete his deſign[b]. His nephew the late worthy owner of this eſtate died October 26, 1783. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, afterwards of Hoſpitallers, valued at £.160. 14s. per ann.[c]

Gilbert 7th earl of Shrewsbury, dying 1616, buried at Sheffield, leaving no male iſſue, was ſucceeded by his brother Edward, who alſo died 1617, and left no iſſue; he was buried at Weſtminſter. The chief branch of this noble family being thus extinct, George Talbot of Grafton in Worceſterſhire, lineal heir to ſir Gilbert 2d ſon of John[d] 2d earl became the 9th earl. On his death 1630 without iſſue, his nephew John ſucceeded to the title, and dying 1653, left Francis his eldeſt ſurviving ſon earl of Shrewsbury, who dying 1667, of a wound in a duel[e] with George Villiers duke of Buckingham, was ſucceeded by his ſon Charles, who 6 William and Mary was created marquis of Alton and duke of Shrewſbury, which titles expired with him 1717-8. The earldom deſcended to Gilbert ſon of Gilbert Talbot of Cookſey c. Worceſter, eſq. fourth ſon of John 10th earl by his firſt wife. This Gilbert being in holy orders, and dying unmarried 1743, was ſucceeded by his nephew George Talbot eldeſt ſon of his brother George, who is the preſent and 14th earl of Shrewsbury of this noble family.

[t] Dugd. Bar. I. 327. 667.

[u] Brooke, p. 461. by the ſtrangeſt miſtake ſays he was buried at Rouen in Normandy, and gives him an epitaph there different from that before recited, for which he is properly corrected by Vincent. But this miſtake ſeems to have ariſen from the epitaph in St. Ouen's church at Rouen on his ſon John who died young 1438, which is thus given in Pommeraye's Hiſtory of that church, fol. 1662, p. 212.

Cy giſt noble homme Jean Tallebot, fils du ſieur de Tallebot Mareſchal de France, qui deceda es annees de puerilite le 4 Janvier, 1438.

His arms are quarterly, 1. 4. G. a lion, O. 2. 3. A. a chevron, G.

[x] Lel. Ib. [y] Tan. 453. [z] Lel. V. 38. [a] Pennant, Wales, I. 230—235. Philips, 229.

[b] Pennant, Wales I. 234—237. [c] Tan. 457. MS. Lloyd.

[d] Dugd. Bar. I. 334. makes him ſecond ſon to the famous John firſt earl, but his preceding account of this family ſhews it to be a miſtake corrected by Le Neve's MS. n. though followed by biſhop Gibſon. Collins corrects it as above; Peer. II. 43.

[e] There is a tradition that this duel was fought on Haghmond hill near Shrewſbury. See the particulars in Walpole's Noble Auth. II. 82.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Shropſhire.

Achemilla vulgaris. Common Ladies Mantle; in mountainous meadows: near Biſhop's caſtle.

Andromeda polifolia. Marſh Andromeda or Wild Roſemary; at Birch in the moors of Elleſmere, plentifully.

Apium graveolens. Smallage; in Stank-mead near Biſhop's caſtle.

Aſplenium Ceterach. Common Spleenwort; on ſome walls at Ludlow.

Berberis vulgaris. Barberry or Pipperidge-buſh; in the hedges by the road ſide, from New Inn to Shrewſbury.

Braſſica muralis. Wild Rocket; on the walls of Ludlow caſtle.

Colchicum autumnale. Meadow Saffron; in Hope mead by Biſhop's Caſtle.

Conyza ſquarroſa. Plowman's Spikenard; in mountainous paſtures and meadows of a chalky ſoil: in the road between Onebury and Ludlow.

Dianthus deltoides. Maiden Pink; in ſandy meadows and paſtures: in the lane from Biſhop's Caſtle to Woodbeach.

Empetrum nigrum. Crow, Crake or Heath Berries; upon Stiperſtone common.

Eriophorum vaginatum. Hair's tail Ruſh; near Elleſmere in great abundance.

Fumaria claviculata. Climbing Fumatory; in the warren near Biſhop's Caſtle, plentifully.

Galiopſis tetrahit γ. Fair flowered Nettle Hemp; among the corn in the ſouth-weſt part of this county, plentifully.

Hieracium paludoſum. Succory-leaved mountain Hawkweed; in wet meadows and near rivers.

Hypericum Androſæmum. Tutſan or Park leaves; in a wood at Old Church moor, plentifully.

——— Elodes. Marſh St. Peter's wort; in ſpongy putrid marſhes at Liddum.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in damp meadows and paſtures: in the wood near Biſhop's Caſtle.

Phallus caninus. Red headed Morel; in woods and woody places near Shrewſbury.

Pinus Picca. The Female or Yew-leaved Fir-tree; at Worton, about two miles from Newport in Shropſhire, plentifully, and at Laynton.

Rubus Idæus. Raſpberry Buſh, or Framboiſe; near Henley wood.

Serapias latifolia γ. Marſh Helleborine; in Oakly wood.

Solidago Virga aurea. Golden Rod; in the woods near Biſhop's Caſtle.

Vaccinium Vitis idæa. Red Whorts or Cranberry; upon Stipperſtone common.

Verbaſcum nigrum. Sage leaved Black Mullein; in gravelly places aad highways: in the road between the Heath and the Jay.

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS.

1 Wirrall
2 Broxton
3 Eddisbury
4 Bucklow
5 Macclesfield
6 Northwich
7 Nantwich

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude.

1 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

LIVERPOOL
WARRINGTON
FLINT
CHESTER
FRODSHAM
TARPORLEY
MALPAS
WHITCHURCH
Saltney Marsh
New Channel
RIVER DEE
MERSEY FLINTSHIRE
DENBIGH
FLINT S. SHROPS
N
A
L
C

25 20 10 5 III° 55 50 45 40 Longitude West from London
35 30 25 20 15 10 5 LIII°

A MAP of CHESHIRE

from the beſt

AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J.Cary.

C

THE firſt
occupie
CHESTER, Sa CHESHIRE, and having enjoye inhabitants bei they were to th peat what I be tiently common lace: and in t dignity conferr a palatine offic own province, were called bar come to the ear
grace his court*.
Malmesbury[a]
"very little co
"cattle and fiſ
Ceſtrenſis ſays,
"upon the relat
"of all kinds of
"excellent ſalmo
"chandizes, hav
"works, and min is ſuch a quality cheeſes of a moſt made here in great land afford not; b expert in making parts. And here that Strabo[b] ſhou Britans were ign cheeſe; and Pliny
"barbarous natio
"or deſpiſed for
"eſpecially as the
"to make rich bu
paſſages have given of making cheeſe w however this county to many in England
ducing nobility, ho has antiently broug can boaſt a greater

It is bounded on by Stafford and Der weſt in a long poi which admit the c two bays all the themſelves: into t divides the count eaſtern one the We

* Pithæus Deſc. of C
[a] Geſt. Pont IV. 164
[b] See them enumerate
* The only copy of hi ſultory ſtyle. The latte
[f] See King's Cheſhire,

CHESHIRE.

THE fifth and laſt of thoſe counties antiently occupied by the Cornavii is the county of CHESTER, Saxon Ceſtre-ſcyne, commonly called CHESHIRE, and the county palatine of Cheſter; its earls having enjoyed palatine juriſdiction, and all the inhabitants being tenants in chief to them alone, as they were to the king. The title of palatine (to repeat what I before obſerved on that ſubject) was antiently common to all the officers of the king's palace: and in that age count palatine was a title of dignity conferred on a perſon who had before been a palatine officer, with power to try cauſes in his own province, and both his principal tenants who were called barons, and his vaſſals, were bound to come to the earl's palace to conſult with him and to grace his court*.

Malmesbury[a] remarks "that this county produces "very little corn, eſpecially wheat, but plenty of "cattle and fiſh." On the contrary, Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis ſays, "whatever Malmesbury dreamed "upon the relation of others, it abounds with plenty "of all kinds of proviſions, corn, fleſh, fiſh, eſpecially "excellent ſalmon, receives and returns various mer-"chandizes, having within itſelf ſalt pits, mineral "works, and mines." To this I muſt add, that there is ſuch a quality in the graſs of this county that cheeſes of a moſt agreeable and exquiſite flavour are made here in great quantities ſuch as other parts of England afford not; but the women of this county who are expert in making it are ſent for and employed in other parts. And here I cannot but expreſs my ſurprize that Strabo[b] ſhould ſay, that in his time ſome of the Britans were ignorant of the method of making cheeſe; and Pliny[c] afterwards wonders, "that the "barbarous nations who lived on milk knew not "or deſpiſed for ſo many ages the bleſſing of cheeſe, "eſpecially as they knew how to curdle their milk "to make rich butter of a pleaſant tartneſs." Theſe paſſages have given riſe to an opinion that the method of making cheeſe was derived from the Romans. But however this county may be inferior in richneſs of ſoil to many in England, it ever ſurpaſſed the reſt in producing nobility, nor is there any county in England that has antiently brought more noblemen into the field, or can boaſt a greater number of knightly families[d].

It is bounded on the ſouth by Shropſhire, on the eaſt by Stafford and Derbyſhires. It runs towards the north-weſt in a long point†, incloſed between two bays, which admit the ocean on either ſide. Into theſe two bays all the rivers of the county alſo empty themſelves: into the weſterninoſt the Dee, which divides the county from Denbighſhire; into the eaſtern one the Wever, which runs through the middle of the county, and the Merſey which parts it from Lancaſhire. I know no better method of deſcribing the county than by following the courſe of theſe rivers. For all the places of note ſtand on them. But I ſhall firſt premiſe what Lucian the monk‡ ſays of this county of Cheſter, that I may not be hereafter charged with concealing any thing that makes to the honour of its inhabitants, as this author lived in the early Norman times, and is ſcarce to be met with[e]. "Whoever, ſays he, ſets about to "deſcribe the manners of the inhabitants of this "county in general or in particular according to "their ſituation, he will find them in compariſon "with thoſe of other parts of England in ſome "reſpects better, in others the ſame. Their man-"ners ſeem to be in the main of the beſt ſort, accord-"ing to the general idea of manners. They are ſo-"ciable in their entertainments, chearful at meals, li-"beral in their hoſpitality, haſty, but ſoon brought "to temper, impatient of dependance and bondage, "kind to the diſtreſſed, compaſſionate to the poor, "fond of their relations, ſparing of labour, free from "reſentment, not given to exceſs in eating, unde-"ſigning, fond of frequently borrowing other peo-"ple's property, abounding with woods and paſ-"tures, rich in meat and cattle. They border on "one ſide on the Britans, and by a long commerce "of manners are become very like them. Nor muſt "I forget to obſerve, that the county of Cheſter, "bounded by Lime foreſt from the reſt of England, "enjoys diſtinguiſhed immunities, and by the in-"dulgences of our kings and the great merit of its "earls is more accuſtomed to attend on the ſword of "its own prince than on the crown of the ſovereign "in the aſſembly of the people, and without re-"ſtraint or reſerve determine the moſt important "cauſes within its own territories. Hence Cheſter "itſelf is much frequented by the Iriſh, a neighbour "to the Welſh, and plentifully ſupplied with pro-"viſion by the Engliſh; beautifully ſituated, its gates "are of an antient form of building; approved by "hard experience. It has merited the name of city "by its river and its watch-towers[f] anſwerable to its "name, defended by a watchful guard of holy men, "and through the mercy of our Saviour it has been "always preſerved by divine aſſiſtance."

The Dee, in Britiſh Dyffyr-dwy, q: d. The water Dwy, abounding with ſalmon, riſes from two ſprings in Wales, and is ſuppoſed to have its name from that circumſtance, Dwy ſignifying in their language two. Others from the meaning of the expreſſion render it Black Water; others the water of God and divine water. But though Auſonius[g] in the antient lan- Dee ri

* Pithæus Deſc. of Champaigne; L. Tilius.
† Wirral.
‡ Lucianus Monachus de laudibus Ceſtriæ.
[a] Geſt. Pont IV. 164. b.
[b] IV. p. 200.
[c] H. N. XI. 96.
[d] See them enumerated by Leland, It. VII. 40 to 44.
[e] The only copy of him ſeems to be among R. James's MSS. in the Bodleian library, written in a rude and antient hand, and a deſultory ſtyle. The latter half of the book is filled with panegyrics on the clergy. Tan. Bibl. Brit. 487.
[f] See King's Cheſhire, p. 10.
[g] Claræ Urbes. Burdigala, f. 32.

guage of the Gauls, which was the ſame as the Britiſh, calls a fountain ſacred to the gods Divvona, and the antients accounted all rivers διοπετεις as of divine original, and our Britans paid divine honours to rivers as we learn from Gildas, I ſee no reaſon for their aſcribing divinity to this Dwy in preference to others. We find the Theſſalonians paid divine honours to the river Pæneus for its pleaſantneſs, the Scythians to the Iſter for its greatneſs, the Germans to the Rhine, which they accounted the judge of conjugal fidelity; but I ſee no reaſon, as I ſaid, why they ſhould give this river a divine name, unleſs perhaps becauſe it ſometimes changed its courſe and preſaged victory to the people living on its banks as it inclined to one or the other ſide (for this ſtory is told by Giraldus Cambrenſis[h], who ſcrupled not to believe it); or from their having obſerved that it is leſs ſwelled by rains than rivers uſually are, yet whenever a ſtrong ſoutherly wind blew violently overflows the neighbouring fields more copiouſly. Perhaps too the Chriſtian Britans might account its water ſacred. For it is recorded that when they ſtood drawn up in battle array againſt the Saxons, they kiſt the earth, and devoutly drank out of this river in memory of the moſt holy blood of Chriſt. Be this as it will, the Dee, which ſeems rather to ruſh than run from Wales, in its approach to Cheſhire paſſes in a more gentle manner by Bonium, called in ſome copies of Antoninus's Itinerary Bovium, a city of ſome note in that age, afterwards a celebrated monaſtery, from whoſe choir it had the name of Bonchor and Banchor† among the Britans, and among the Saxons that of Bancopna-by[k]ge and Banchor; where, among many excellent men was educated, according to ſome, that pernicious hereſiarch Pelagius, who by his dangerous perverſion of the nature of divine grace long infected the weſtern church. Whence Proſper Aquitanus called him the Britiſh Adder in this line:

Sacred Rivers.

Bonium.

Banchor.

Pelagius the hereſiarch.

Peſtifero vomuit coluber ſermone Britannus;
The Britiſh adder voids peſtiferous ſpeech.

I mention him only to make his vices and doctrine more generally known. "In this monaſtery, ſays Bede[i], was ſuch a number of monks, that, being divided into ſeven parts, each under a diſtinct head, no part contained fewer than 300 perſons, who all maintained themſelves by the labour of their hands." Twelve hundred of them were killed by Edilfred king of Northumberland, for imploring by their pious prayers the aid of Chriſt for the Chriſtian Britans againſt the Pagan Saxons. The monaſtic rule of life (to digreſs a little) had its riſe in the violence of perſecution, when good men in order to be more at liberty to ſerve God retired into the vaſt deſarts of Egypt, not, as the heathens upbraided them, to involve themſelves in voluntary miſery to avoid being made miſerable by others*. There they lived at firſt ſcattered up and down among the mountains and foreſts, in caves and little cells, in a ſolitary ſtate, whence they were called in Greek Monachi: but afterwards they found it adviſeable to live together in the ſame houſes, agreeable to the nature of man, rather than like wild beaſts to be ſkulking in deſarts. It then became their buſineſs to pray, and to labour for the maintenance of themſelves and the poor, and they entered into vows of poverty, obedience, and chaſtity. This monaſtic life was firſt introduced into the weſtern church by Athanaſius, and was afterwards ſettled among the prieſthood by St. Auſtin in Africa, St. Martin in Gaul, and Congellus (as is reported) in Britain and Ireland. It is incredible how the monks encreaſed in the world, and how many and how large convents were built for them; called cœnobia, from their manner of living in common, as alſo monaſteries, from retaining ſome appearance of their ſolitary life; and nothing was at that time accounted more ſacred, from the great benefit they were of both to themſelves and to all mankind, by their prayers to God, their example, learning, labour, and induſtry. But corruptions gaining ground, theſe holy manners ſunk, as the poet ſays, under proſperity. I now return to my ſubject.

The monaſtic life.

From this time this monaſtery was entirely decayed; for William of Malmesbury, who lived ſoon after the Norman invaſion, ſays, in his time "Here were remaining ſo many marks of antiquity, "ſo many ruined walls of churches and cloiſters[k], "and ſuch heaps of ruins as are hardly to be met "with elſewhere." Now ſcarce the appearance of the ruined city or monaſtery remains, except the names of two gates, Port Hoghan and Port Cleis, a mile aſunder, between which Roman coins are frequently found. I muſt juſt obſerve that Bonium is not reckoned in this county but in Flintſhire, part of which cut off as it were from the reſt lies here incloſed between Cheſhire and Salop.

The Dee entering this county viſits Malpas, ſituate on a high hill not far from its bank. It had a caſtle, and took this modern name among the Normans from its bad, narrow, ſteep, and intricate way, called Mala platea, being named by the Saxons to the ſame effect Depenbach. The barony of this place was given by Hugh earl of Cheſter to Robert Fitz Hugh §. In the reign of Henry II. it was held by William Fitz Patric, ſon of William Patric, of whoſe deſcendants Robert Patric loſt it by being outlawed. A few years after David de Malpas obtained by writ of recognizance one moiety of the ſaid town which belonged to Gilbert Clerk: but the greateſt part of this barony came afterwards by inheritance to thoſe Suttons who were barons of Dudley. Part alſo came to Urian de S. Pierre, commonly called Sampier. From Philip, younger ſon of David de Malpas, deſcends the famous knightly family of the Egertons, who took this name from the place of their reſidence, as others of this family from Cotgrave, Overton, Codington, Golborn, places where they lived. Concerning the name of this place give me leave before I quit it to inſert, though in this ſerious and grave work, this pleaſant ſtory from Giraldus Cambrenſis: "It happened," ſays he, "in my time that a Jew travelling to Shrewsbury "with the archdeacon of this place, whoſe ſurname "was Peche [Sin] and the dean whoſe name was "Devill, and hearing the archdeacon accidentally "ſay that his archdeaconry begun at a place called "Illſtreet and reached to Mal pas [Ill ſtep] towards "Cheſter, upon recollecting and reflecting on the "names of the archdeacon and dean, he ſmartly and "wittily returned, I ſhall wonder if I get well out * Rutilius Claudius in Itinerario L. i. 7. Quiſquis ſponte miſer ne miſer eſſe queat.

† Banchor mentioned by St. Bernard in his life of Malachias was in Ireland. C.
§ Domeſday for Cheſhire. || Itin. II. 13.
[h] It. Camb. II. c. 11. [i] Eccl. Hiſt. II. 2.
[k] IV. 167. b. Mr. Camden reads anfractus por*tarum*, but the London Edition of Malmeſbury has port*uum*. Mr. Gale corrects it porticuum.

" of this place whereof Sin is the archdeacon, the " Devill the dean, the entrance into the archdea- " conry Illſtreet, and the way out of it Illſtep."

Hence the Dee runs by Schoclach, where was once a caſtle; Aldford antiently belonging to the Ardens; Pouleford, where Radulphus de Ormeſby had his caſtle t. Henry III. and Eaton the ſeat of the famous family of Groſvenor, q. d. Great Hunter, whoſe deſcendants are now corruptly called Gravenor.

A little higher up on the ſame river near the mouth or frith called by Ptolemy SETEIA for DEIA, ſtands that famous city which the ſame author calls DEUNANA, Antoninus DEVA, from the river, the Britans Caer Legion, Caer-Leon-Vawr, Caer Leon ar Dufyr Dwy, and Caer by way of eminence; as our anceſtors called it Legeaceaſtep from the camp of the legion, and we by contraction Weſt Cheſter from its weſtern ſituation; and Cheſter; according to that verſe[l], Ceſtria de caſtris nomen quaſi Caſtria ſumſit.

Caſtria from caſtra, as if Caſtria called.

Theſe names are all undoubtedly derived from the 20th legion called Victrix, which when the emperor Galba was a ſecond time conſul with Titus Vinius was ſent over to Britain, and becoming too powerful and formidable to the conſular and prætorian lieutenants, the command of it was given by Veſpaſian to Julius Agricola, and it was at laſt ſtationed in this city, which had, I imagine, been built not many years before as a check upon the Ordovices, though ſome inſiſt upon its being as old as the world itſelf, and built by one Leon Vawr, a giant ages ago. But the name alone ſhould undeceive ſuch vulgar antiquaries; for they cannot deny that Leon Vawr ſignifies in Britiſh the great Legion: and whether it were more natural to ſuppoſe the city named from the Great Legion or Leon the Giant let the learned judge; as in Hiſpania Tarraconenſis is a kingdom now called Leon from the Legio VII. Germanica; and the 20th legion falſely called by ſome Britannica Valens Victrix and Valeria Victrix is proved to have been quartered in this city from Ptolemy, Antoninus, and an antient coin of Septimius Geta, by which it alſo appears this was a colony, on the reverſe being COL. DIVANA. LEG. XX. VICTRIX. Few remains of Roman magnificence are now to be ſeen here, except teſſelated pavements. In the laſt age it afforded many, which Ranulphus, monk of this city, ſhall give you an account of in his own words from his Polychronicon[m]: " Here are ſub- " terraneous paſſages of wonderful ſtone arched " work, vaulted ſaloons, huge ſtones with inſcrip- " tions and antient names; here are alſo coins with " the names of Julus Cæſar, and other illuſtrious per- " ſonages, frequently dug up:" and Rogerus Ceſtrenſis[n] in his Policraticon ſays, " When I behold " the foundations of enormous ſtones in the ſtreets, " they ſeem rather laid by the labour of the Romans " or the giants than by the toil of the Britans."

This city is ſquare, the walls incloſing a circuit of above two miles. It has eleven pariſh churches. On high ground near the river ſtands the caſtle, built by the earls, where the courts palatine and aſſizes are held twice a year. The buildings are neat, and piazzas run along the principal ſtreets. But it has not enjoyed uninterrupted proſperity, being firſt deſtroyed by Egfrid the Northumbrian, afterwards by the Danes; but it was rebuilt by Edelfleda lady of the Mercians, and ſoon after was witneſs to the magnificent triumph of king Edgar over the Britiſh princes. He was rowed in a triumphal veſſel, on whoſe forecaſtle he ſat, by Kinnadius king of Scots, Malcolm king of Cumberland, Macon king of Man and the iſles, and all the princes of Wales, who had made their ſubmiſſions, who managed the oars, and rowed him in great parade down the Dee. In proceſs of time about A. D. 1094, when by a holy emulation, as my author [Glaber Rodolphus] expreſſes it, " churches began to aſſume a more decent form, " and the Chriſtian world had as it were rouzed " itſelf, and throwing off the duſt of antiquity, put " on white robes;" the church which earl Leofric had built in honour of the virgin Werburga was rebuilt by Hugh the firſt earl of Cheſter of Norman deſcent, and by advice of Anſelm, whom he had ſent for out of Normandy, given to the monks. It is now remarkable for the burial of Henry III. emperor of Germany, who they ſay after abdicating the empire led the life of a hermit; and for the epiſcopal ſee tranſlated hither from Lichfield, preſently after the Norman conqueſt by Peter, biſhop of Lichfield, but upon its return to Coventry, and afterwards to its antient ſeat, Cheſter continued long diveſted of her dignity, till in the laſt age Henry VIII. turned out the monks, inſtituted prebendaries, and afterwards reſtored the biſhop, giving him for dioceſe this county, Lancaſhire, Richmondſhire, &c. and ſubjecting him to the juriſdiction of the archbiſhop of York*.

About A. D. 980.

But to go back to earlier times. After the church was built the Norman earls fortified the city with the walls and caſtle. " For as the biſhop held of " the king what belonged to his biſhopric (to uſe " the words of the ſurvey of England made by Wil- " liam the Conqueror °) ſo the earls with their men " held all the reſt of the city of the king. It gelded " for 50 h' les; there were 431 houſes which gelded; " and ſeven mint-maſters. When the king came " there in perſon each carrucate paid him 200 heſths P " and one cann of beer, and one ruſc of butter." And again, " The governor ordained that every " hide in the county ſhould ſend one man to rebuild " the city wall and the bridge: and the lord of that " hide which did not ſend a man was to pay to the " king and the earl 40 ſhillings." If I were to recite the ſkirmiſhes between the Welſh and Engliſh in the early Norman times, the inroads, excurſions, repeated firings of the ſuburb of Hanbrid beyond the bridge (whence it is called by the Welſh Treboeth or the burnt town) and the long wall raiſed there of Welchmen's ſkulls, I ſhould ſeem to have forgot myſelf, and to be thruſting my ſickle into the hiſtorian's harveſt. From that time, however, Cheſter acquired conſequence, and Henry VII. made it a county incorporate by itſelf. It wants nothing to render it a moſt flouriſhing city, but that the ſea, as if offended at certain mills on the bed of the Dee, has gradually withdrawn itſelf, and deprived the citizens of their antient convenient harbour. It ſtands in longitude 20° 23″, latitude 53° 11″. If the reader deſires any further account of this city take it from Lucian the monk, who lived about 500 years ago.

* Stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 31.

[l] of Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis, p. 201. Ed. Gale.
[m] P. 201. Ed. Gale, Ox. 1691.
[n] Theſe are the words of Ranulph before cited, whom Roger copied. Ib.
° Fol. 262. b.
P Capons or fowls. Spelman Gloſſar. in voce.

" Firſt

"First it is to be observed, that Chester, which is "built like a city, whose situation invites beholders, "was erected in the western parts of Britain, as a "retreat and resting place to the legions after their "long expedition, and served the Romans as a "frontier to their empire, and as a key, if I may so "speak, to Ireland. For facing the north point of "Ireland it opens a convenient passage to ships and "mariners, who are continually going backwards and "forwards for various reasons and the purposes of "trade, and who bring a supply of different commo-"dities. And as it faces the east, it has a view not "only of the Roman throne and empire, but of the "whole world, as if it were set for an object to all "beholders. Brave actions, a long train of events, "and all that has been nobly done in the world, by "whom, in what places, and in what ages, deserve "to be known, that bad actions may be avoided. Its "four gates answering to the four winds look, the "east to India, the west to Ireland, the north to "Great Norway, the south to that narrow corner, "to which the divine vengeance has confined the "Britans for their civil discords. How the name of "Britain was changed for that of England by their "antient quarrels and bitter enmities, and the shining "figure their neighbours now make, they may read "with tears [q]. Our Chester is further by the divine "favour enriched and beautified by its fair river well "stocked with fish running under its walls, and on the "south side serving as an harbour of ships from "Aquitaine, Spain, Ireland, Germany, which, by "the guidance of Christ, and the industry and pru-"dence of the merchants, supply and refresh the "heart of the city with various goods: so that by "the various consolations of the divine favour we have "frequently wine in plenty and profusion from the "copious vintages of those countries. The sea fails "not to revisit it with the daily return of its tide, its "spacious bosom continually throwing up something, "whether acceptable or not, as it covers or uncovers "the extensive sands, or making some alteration, or "bringing or carrying off something on its approach "or retreat."

The narrow point running from the city to the south, inclosed by the Dee on one side and the Mersey on the other, is called by us Wirral [r], by the Britans, from its being a corner, Kill-gury. It was antiently all forest and uncultivated, as the inhabitants relate, but disforrested by Edward III. At present it is thick set with towns on all sides, but happier in respect of the sea than the soil, the latter being not fit for corn, but the former very plenteous in fish. On the entrance of this neck of land from the south stands Shotwick, a royal castle commanding the frith. To the north is Hooton, a manor which t. Richard II. came to the Stanleys, who derive themselves from one Alan Sylvester, to whom Ranulphus, first earl of Chester, gave "the Bailliwick of the forest of Wirral," by delivery of a horn. To this adjoins Poole, whence the lords of the place, who have long been eminent, took their name; and near it Stanlaw, which the religious of the place translate the Stoney hill, where John Lacy, constable of Chester, founded a small monastery [s], afterwards, Shotwick.

Hooton.
Poole.
Stanlaw.
1173.

on account of the inundations removed to Whaley in Lancashire. At the extremity of this chersonesus lies a small barren sandy island, called Il-bre, which had formerly its own cell of monks. More inland to the east from this point, lies the famous forest of Delamere, of which the Dawns of Utkinton are hereditary foresters, of illustrious descent, being sprung from Ranulphus de Kingleigh, to whom Ranulphus first earl of Chester gave this office of forester, to hold by right of inheritance. In this Edelfleda the Mercian built her little city Caerbury [t], which may be rendered Happy town, but which has now lost its name, and is become a heap of ruins called The Chamber in the Forest; and about two miles hence are to be seen the walls of Finborow, another town built by the same lady.

Through the upper part of this forest runs the river Wever, which rises from a lake in the south part of the county. At Ridley, the seat of the antient and famous family of the Egertons, descended, as I before observed, from the barons Malpas, it passes not far from Bunbury, where they built a college, and near Beeston castle defended by walls of great extent, numerous towers, and a mount and precipice built by the last Ranulphus earl of Chester; of which our Leland thus sings:

Assyrio rediens victor Ranulphus ab orbe
Hoc posuit castrum, terrorem gentibus olim
Vicinis, patriæque suæ memorabile vallum.
Nunc licet indignas patiatur fracta ruinas,
Tempus erit quando rursus caput extet altum,
Vatibus antiquis si fas mihi credere vati.

Ranulphus, victor from the Assyrian coast,
This castle rais'd, his country's antient boast,
Surrounding nations' dread. Tho' now it lies
In ruin low, in future time shall rise
Its lofty head, if what old poets give
For truth, another poet may believe.

Hence the Wever first proceeds south, not far from Woodhay, where the famous knightly family of Wilburham long lived in great splendor, by Bulkeley and Cholmondeley, which have given names to illustrious knightly families; nor far from hence on one side from Baddeley the residence of the antient family of Praers, on the other side from Cumbermer, where William Malbedeng founded a small monastery 1134. This river in its approach to the southern limit of this county passes among heaths and low grounds, in which, as well as in other parts, they frequently dig up trees supposed to have been buried ever since the flood. After watering many fruitful fields it receives from the east a little river, on which is Wibbonbury, so called from Wibba king of Mercia, near which is Hatherton, antiently the seat of the Orbeys, then of the Corbetts, but now of Thomas Smith, son of sir Laurence Smith, knt. Dodinton of the Delveses, Batherton of the Griphins, Shavinton of the Wodenoths (who seem by their name to be of Saxon descent), and those of other illustrious families, with which this county every where abounds. Thence the Wever runs by Nantwich [u], not far from Middlewich to Norwich. These are famous salt wiches or pits, five or six miles asunder, where the brine or salt water is [q] Bishop Gibson seems to have totally mistaken the last half of this sentence.

[r] Finheale. Sax. Chr. Wirhale, Matth. Westm. sub. an. 895. p. 349, where he confounds Wirhale with Chester, misunderstanding the words of the Saxon Chronicle p. 95. anne pertne ceastne on Finhealum pio ir Legaceastre gehaten. We have here the very name of West Chester, but not as an appellative.

[s] Burton Annals say 1172.

[t] A. D. 914. Sax. Chron. p. 104.

[u] Wych is a term always applied to places where salt is made, as here, Droitwich, c. Worcester, &c. all which places are always called antiently by the simple name of Wych, which in its strict and proper sense means only a place or habitation. Here the epithet Nant is added to signify its low situation. Pennant's Journey from Chester, p. 24.

drawn

drawn out of pits, and not poured upon burning wood as the antient Gauls and Germans uſed to do, but boiled over the fire to extract the ſalt. I have no doubts but the Romans were acquainted with theſe pits, and that they laid a ſalt duty thereon. For from Middlewich to Norwich runs a noble road raiſed with gravel to ſuch an height as eaſily to be known for a Roman work; gravel being very ſcarce all over theſe parts, and therefore now carried from this road to private houſes. Matthew Paris[x] writes that Henry III. ſtopped up theſe ſaltpits when he ravaged this country in a hoſtile manner, to prevent the rebellious Welch getting any proviſions from thence. But when the mild beams of peace dawned, they were again opened.

Nantwich, which is firſt viſited by the Wever, is accounted the largeſt and beſt built town in the county, and called by the Britans Hellath Wen, or the White Saltpit, becauſe the whiteſt ſalt is made there, in Latin Vicus[y] Malbanus, perhaps from William ſurnamed Malbedeng and Malbanc, to whom it fell after the Normans made themſelves maſters of England. It has one brine pit about 14 feet from the river, out of which the brine is conveyed in wooden troughs into houſes, where are ſeveral caſks fixed in the ground, which they fill with this ſalt water, and on ringing of a bell the fire is lighted under leaden kettles, of which there are ſix in each houſe, and the water boiled, and women called Wallers with little wooden rakes draw up the ſalt from the bottom, and put it into baſkets, out of which the water drains, and the ſalt ſettles. Its church is a very handſome one, and belonged, as I have been told, to the monaſtery of Combermere[z]. Hence the Wever winds away obliquely, receiving from the eaſt a ſmall river coming from Crew, which antiently belonged to a family of its name. Further from the weſt bank one ſees Calveley, which gave reſidence and name to the noble family of the Calveleys, of which in the reign of Richard II. ſir Hugh de Calveley diſtinguiſhed himſelf ſo much in the French wars, that nothing could reſiſt his active valour. Thence by Minſhull the houſe of the Minſhulls, and by Vale Royal, a monaſtery founded by Edward I. in a moſt pleaſant valley, where now lives the famous family of the Holcrofts, the Wever haſtes to Northwich, called in Britiſh Hellath Du, or the black ſalt-pit, where is alſo a plenteous ſalt ſpring, at great depth, ſurrounded with ſteps, by which thoſe who draw up the water in leather buckets come up half naked, and pour it into the channels or troughs, which convey it into the ſalt houſes, near which are many woodpiles. Here the Wever receives the Dan, whoſe courſe we are now to follow.

The Dan, or Daven, riſing out of the mountains that part Stafford and Cheſhire on the eaſt, runs by itſelf to CONDATE, mentioned by Antoninus, now corruptly called Congleton, whoſe centre is watered by the little river Howty, its eaſt ſide by the Daningſchew, and its north by the Dan. Though this town by its ſize and populouſneſs has obtained the honour of a mayor and ſix aldermen, it has only a chapel, and that of wood, except the choir and a little tower, and acknowledges Aſtbury, a mile or two off, for the mother church. This laſt is a moſt beautiful building, the weſt porch being as high as the church, which is itſelf of a conſiderable height, and has a ſpire ſteeple. In the church yard are two figures of knights, on whoſe ſhields are two barrs: but, for want of the colours, it is not eaſy to determine whether they belong to the *Brereton*s, *Manwaring*s, or Venables, which are conſiderable families in this neighbourhood, bearing for their arms the ſame barrs of different colours.

The Dan comes next to Davenport, commonly called Danport, which has given its name to the famous family of Davenport: and Holmes Chapel, well known to travellers, where, in the laſt age, J. Needham[a] built a bridge. Near it at Rudheath, was antiently a place of refuge and ſanctuary, both for the inhabitants and for ſtrangers who had broken the laws, and might ſtay there a year and a day in ſafety. It afterwards waſhes Kinderton, the antient ſeat of the antient family of Venables, conſiderable here ever ſince the Norman invaſion, and commonly ſtyled barons of Kinderton. Below it to the ſouth the Dan receives the little river Croke, which, riſing out of Bagmere lake runs by Brereton, which gave name to the famous, antient, and numerous knightly family of the Brereton, of whom ſir William Brereton, knt. has lately embelliſhed it with a magnificent houſe. I have heard an extraordinary circumſtance atteſted by many perſons of credit, and generally believed, that before the death of any heir of this family, trunks of trees are ſeen to ſwim on the ſurface of the adjoining lake. Leonard Vair * reports a ſimilar circumſtance on the authority of Cardinal Granville, that near the abbey of St. Maurice in Burgundy is a ſtew pond, in which are put as many fiſh as there are monks, and whenever any of the latter is taken ill one of the fiſh will float half dead on the ſurface, and if the monk is to die the fiſh will die a few days before him. I make no remarks on theſe facts, ſuppoſing them true, as I do not pretend to a knowledge of miracles; but theſe and the like circumſtances may be the work of the holy angels that guard our perſons, or of devils who by divine permiſſion have powerful influence on this lower world. Both theſe being intelligent beings bring about preternatural events with deſign and for ſome end, and not at a venture: Angels ſeeking and promoting the ſalvation of mankind, and Devils on the contrary their ruin and uneaſineſs. But this by way of digreſſion.

Davenport. Holmes chapel. Rudheath. Kinderton, Croke r. Bagemerelake. Brereton.

The Croke having paſſed Brereton, ſoon after viſits Middlewich, ſituated near its confluence with the Dan, where are two ſalt ſprings divided by a ſmall ſtream, and called Sheathes. One of them is opened only at certain times, becauſe its waters being ſtrongeſt would be ſtolen. Hence the Dan runs to Boſtocke, antiently Boteſtoc, the antient ſeat of the famous and knightly family of the Boſtokes, which, by marriage with Anne, only daughter of Ralph, ſon and heir of ſir Adam de Boſtok, came with a fine eſtate to John Savage. From this antient family of the Boſtoks, as from a fruitful ſtock, iſſued a race of the ſame name in the counties of Cheſter, Salop, Berks, and elſewhere. After the Dan has united its waters below Northwich beforementioned with the Wever, the latter river proceeds due weſt, and receives from Middlewich. Boſtock.

* Lib. 2. de Faſcino.

[x] P. 684. A. D. 1245.

[y] or Wicus Malbanus, q. d. Malbanc's Wyche.

[z] To which it was given by the founder. Vide cartas ap. Tanner, Not. Mon. 60.

[a] Lord of the Manor, and anceſtor of viſcount Kilmorey, of whom in Shropſhire.

Pever r. Pever. the east the Pever, which runs by, and gives name to, Pever, where is seated the antient noble family of Meinilwarin, commonly called Manewaring, of which Ranulphus married the daughter of Hugh Kevelioc earl of Chester, as appears from an antient charter in the possession of Ranulph the present heir of the said family. Thence the Wever runs by Winnington, which gives residence and name to the antient family of the Winingtons, not far from Merbury, so called from the meer below it, and giving name to the famous family of Merbury. From hence the river proceeds by Dutton, the estate of the famous family of the Duttons, who derive their descent from one Hudard, a relation of the earls of Chester, and have by antient custom extensive authority over all the pipers, fiddlers, and harpers of this county ever since R. Dutton, an active young man of this family, collected in haste a band of those people, and rescued Ranulph last earl of Chester, who was surrounded by the Welsh, and in danger of being besieged. Nor must we forget Nether Whitley in these parts, whence came the Tuschetts, or Towchets, barons Audleye of Healye. The Wever now gliding between Frodesham, a castle of antient note, and Clifton, now Rock Savage, the new built house of the Savages, who acquired large property here by marriage, afterwards empties itself into the mouth of Mersey. This has its name from the river Mersey, which separates Cheshire and Lancashire, and empties itself there, passing by, among other towns of less note, Stockport, which had antiently a baron of its own, and receiving the river Bollin from that great forest of Macclesfield. On this river stands the town of Macclesfield, which gave name to that forest, and where T. Savage, first bishop of London, afterwards archbishop of York, built a college, in which some of the noble family of the Savages lie buried together; and Dunham, which descended by inheritance from Hamo de Masey by the Fittons and Venables to the famous family of Booth. The Mersey comes next to Thelwall, leaving not far behind it Knotsford, q. d. Canute's Ford, divided into upper and lower; and Lee, whence comes the generous, noble, and extended family of the same name. Thelwall, now an obscure little village, was antiently a considerable city built by Edward the elder, and so called according to Florilegus [b], from the trunks of trees set in the ground, of which he made a wall round it; for the Saxons call trunks of trees Ðell. At the very mouth of the river stands Runckhorne [c], built at the same time by Edelfleda, and by like fate now reduced to a few cottages; to mention her once more whom I have so often mentioned, sister of king Edward the elder, and wife of Ethelred a petty prince of Mercia, who, on the decease of her husband, governed eight years with the greatest glory in the most troublesome times. On her we have these panegyric lines* in Henry of Huntingdon's history.

Winnington. Merbury. Dutton. Nether Whitley. Frodsham. Clifton. Rocksavage. Mersey r. Stockport. Bollin r. Macclesfield and forest. Dunham. Thelwall. Knotsford. Lee. Runkhorne.

O Elfleda potens, O terror virgo virorum,
Victrix naturæ, nomine digna viri:
Te quo splendidior fieres natura puellam,
Te probitas fecit nomen habere viri.
Te mutare decet, sed solam, nomine sexum,
Tu regina potens, rexque trophæa parans:
Jam nec Cæsarei tantum meruere triumphi;
Cæsare splendidior virgo virago, vale.

Mighty Elfleda, maid of men the dread,
Conqu'ress of Nature, worthy manly name,
Nature to grace thee added womanhead,
And valour made thee manly title claim.
Thou only couldst the sex's honours change,
All potent Queen, and trophy-winning King:
Not Cæsar's triumphs in such glory range;
Thee Cæsar's rival, manly maid, I sing.

Below Runckhorne, a little more inland, one sees the town of Haulton, with its castle, given to one Nigel a Norman by Hugh Lupus earl of Chester, on condition that he should be constable of Chester; by whose descendants it came in process of time to the house of Lancaster. Nor must I omit to mention that William son of this Nigel founded the adjoining monastery of Norton, which now belongs to the antient family of the Brokes.

I am yet doubtful whether I should place in this county the CANGI, an antient people of Britain so long sought for. Antiquity has so shrouded them in its veil that it has not yet been possible to trace them. For though that great master of polite scholars Justus Lipsius is pleased to submit this question to me, I frankly confess I have no criterion to judge by, and had rather resign this task to any other than take it upon myself. However, if the Ceangi and Cangi were the same people, and I see no reason why they should not be, it is very likely they occupied this tract. For while I was revising these sheets I was informed by persons of very good credit that here on the shore had been found 20 pigs of lead, of an oblong square form. On their upper surface, which was concave, was this inscription:

IMP. DOMIT. AVG. GER. DE
CEANG.

and on others:

IMP. VESP. VII. T. IMP. V.
COSS.

which seem to have been a monument of a victory over the Ceangi. The situation of the country on the Irish sea confirms this: for Tacitus in the 12th book of his Annals [d] writes, that in the reign of Nero, Ostorius "led his army against the Cangi, ravaged the country, carried off considerable booty; "the enemy not daring to face them in the field, or "if they attacked them by surprize they suffered for "their stratagems. The army was now got within a "very little of the sea which looks towards Ireland, "when disturbances breaking out among the Brigantes, "obliged the general to return." But, by the former of these inscriptions, they seem not to have been subdued before the time of Domitian; and, by the date, it should seem to have been when the brave Julius Agricola was proprætor in Britain. Ptolomy also places the Καγκανων promontorium on this coast. Nor do I presume to look any where but on this coast for the station CONGANIOS, where, on the decline of * Powel's Chronicle of Wales, p. 298.

[b] Dæl Fæle. Sax Chron. 110. Tealwele. Florence of Worcester, p. 546. gives no etymology, nor Matt. Westm. p. 359. Thelwald Brompton.

[c] Runcofan. Sax. Chron. 104. Rumceven. Huntingd. Runcefa. Flor. Matt. Westm.

[d] c. 31.

the Roman empire a company of ſcouts[e] kept guard with their officer under the Dux Britanniarum. But I ſhall leave every one to form their own opinion on this ſubject.

As to earls, without regarding the Saxon ones, who were only official, not hereditary earls, William I. created Lupus ſon of the viſcount D'Abrinces in Normandy, the firſt hereditary one and earl Palatine of Cheſter, granting him "this whole county "to hold to him and his heirs as freely by the ſword "as the king himſelf held England by the crown;" ſuch are the terms of the grant. The earl ſoon after appointed barons under him, Nigel baron of Haulton, whoſe deſcendants on the eſtate of the Laceys falling to them took the name of Lacey, and were earls of Lincoln: Robert baron de Montalt, ſeneſchal of the earldom of Cheſter, the laſt of whoſe family dying without iſſue made Iſabel queen of England and John of Eltham earl of Cornwal, his heirs: William de Malbedenge baron of Malbanc, whoſe grandſon's daughters carried the eſtate by marriage to the Vernons and Baſſets: Richard Vernon baron of Sipbroke, whoſe eſtate on failure of the male line came by ſiſters to the Wilburhams, Staffords, and Littleburies: Robert Fitz Hugh, baron Malpas, who ſeems to have died without iſſue as was before obſerved: Hammon de Maſcy, whoſe eſtates came to the Fittons of Bolin: Gilbert Venables, baron of Kindreton, whoſe deſcendants continue to the preſent time: N. baron Stockport, ſucceeded at laſt by marriage by the Warrens of Poynton, of the illuſtrious family of the earls of Warren and Surrey. Theſe are all the barons of the earldom of Cheſter I can yet diſcover. It appears by an antient MS. that they had "their courts free for all pleas and "ſuits except pleas pertaining to the ſword of the "earl." Their buſineſs was to attend the earl in council, follow him, and grace his court; and as the old record ſets forth, "they were bound in time of "war with the Welſh to find for each knight's fee "one horſe harneſſed or two unharneſſed within the "diviſions of Ceſtreſcire. And their knights and "free tenants were to be furniſhed with breaſt-"plates and haubergeons, and to defend their re-"ſpective fees in perſon."

Hugh the firſt earl before-mentioned was ſucceeded[f] by his ſon Richard who was ſhipwrecked[g] with William only ſon of king Henry I. and other nobles between Normandy and England A. D. 1120. Leaving no iſſue he was ſucceeded by Ranulph de Meſchines[h] 3d earl, earl Hugh's ſiſter's ſon, who left a ſon named Ranulph de Gernon 4th earl of Cheſter, a brave ſoldier, who took king Stephen priſoner at the ſiege of Lincoln[i]. Hugh, ſurnamed Kevelioc, his ſon was 5th earl who died[k] A. D. 1181, leaving a ſon Ranulph, 6th earl, ſurnamed de Blundevill, who built Chartley and Beeſton caſtles, and De la creſſe[l] abbey, and dying without children[m] left his four ſiſters his heirs, Matilda wife of David earl of Huntingdon, Mabil married to William de Albiney earl of Arundel, Agnes to William de Ferrars earl of Derby, and Hawis to Robert de Quincy. He was ſucceeded in the earldom by John, ſurnamed Scot, ſon of earl David by Matilda the eldeſt ſiſter; but he dying without iſſue[n] king Henry III. caſting a longing eye on ſuch a fine inheritance, annexed it to the royal demeſne[o], and aſſigned other revenues to John's ſiſters, that (as the king himſelf expreſſed it) ſo fine an eſtate might not be parcelled out among women*. Our princes after they became poſſeſſed of this county held the antient palatine rights and courts here. The honour afterwards fell to the king's eldeſt ſons, and firſt to Edward ſon of Henry III. who being taken and kept priſoner by the barons gave it to Simon de Montfort earl of Leiceſter for his ranſom: but Simon being ſhortly after killed, it ſoon reverted to the royal family, and Edward II. created his eldeſt ſon earl of Cheſter and Flint, by which titles he ſummoned the infant prince to parliament. Richard II. afterwards by act of parliament advanced it from an earldom to a principality, annexing to it the caſtle of Leon with the lands of Bromfield and Yale, Chirke caſtle with Chirke land, Oſwald's ſtreet caſtle, with the hundreds and other eſtates forfeited to the crown on the attainder of Richard earl of Arundel; and Richard himſelf was called Prince of Cheſter. But this title was dropped in a few years on Henry VI's repealing the acts of that parliament, and it became again a county palatine, and ſtill retains palatine juriſdiction, under a chamberlain, a ſpecial judge, two barons of the Exchequer, three ſerjeants at law, a ſheriff, attorney, eſcheator, &c.

This county has about 68 pariſhes.

* John Tillet.

[e] Numerus Vigilum. [f] 1101. [g] 1120. [h] or de Bricaſard. Dugd. Bar. I. 36. He died 1128.
[i] He died 1155, of poiſon given by William Peverel. [k] At Leek.
[l] Dieulacres in Staffordſhire. Tan. 500. See before, p. 393.
[m] 1232 at Wallingford, where his bowels were buried, his heart at Dieulacres, and his body in Cheſter chapter houſe.
[n] of poiſon 1237. [o] Pat. 31 H. III.

WE have now gone over the counties of the Cornavii, which together with the Coritani, Dobuni, and Catuellani, compoſed a kingdom in the Saxon heptarchy, which they called Myncna-ric and Meanc-lond, in Latin Mercia, from Meanc a Saxon word ſignifying a boundary, becauſe the other kingdoms were abutted on by this. This was much the largeſt kingdom, and was begun by Crida the Saxon about A. D. 586, and enlarged by Penda, who extended its bounds, and ſoon after under the ſame Penda it was converted to Chriſtianity. After it had ſubſiſted 250 years it fell late under the power of the Weſt Saxons, after having been torn in pieces for ſome years by the Danes with all the horrors of war.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

CHESHIRE is 50 miles long by 25 broad, and between 112 and 130 in circumference; contains ſeven hundreds, 72,000 acres, and near 125,000 inhabitants. The air is reckoned healthy, and the ſoil for the moſt part good. That part which is level and abounds with corn and graſs was by Edward I. ſtyled the Vale Royal of England. On the borders of Stafford and Derbyſhire it has hills; but none of them of any conſiderable height.

The principal landholders in this county at the making of Domeſday beſides the king were the biſhops of Cheſter and Lichfield, the abbey of St. Werburgh, Hugh earl of Cheſter, Robert de Rodlent, William Malbedeng, Richard de Vernon, Robert Fitz Hugh, &c.

Though the extenſive power granted by the Conqueror to Hugh Lupus, in whoſe favour he erected this into a county palatine, included palatine juriſdiction, we do not find Lupus or his ſucceſſors ſtyled comites palatini in this grant or in any record. By virtue of this grant Cheſter enjoyed ſovereign juriſdiction within its own precincts; the earls having parliaments conſiſting of their own eight barons and their tenants, and not being bound by any acts of the Engliſh parliaments. Such authority ſeems to have been thought neceſſary on the marches and borders of the kingdom in caſe of invaſion or other emergency. But growing afterwards formidable to our kings, Henry VIII. by act of parliament made that palatinate ſubordinate to and dependant on the crown of England. Notwithſtanding this reſtraint all pleas of lands and tenements, all contracts within the county, are to be heard and determined within it; and all determination out of it is deemed void and coram non judice, except in caſes of error, foreign plea, and foreign voucher; and for no crime but treaſon can an inhabitant of this county be tried out of it. This juriſdiction, though now held in other counties, was antiently peculiar to this, upon the plan of which the palatinate rights were granted by Edward I. to the county of Lancaſter. And though the biſhop of Durham in antient pleas claims ſuch juriſdiction in his province from and before the Conqueſt, it ſeems not to have been erected into a county palatine before this of Cheſter. Ely, Hexamſhire, and Pembroke are of much later date. The words of the writs in this county run contra dignitatem gladii Ceſtriæ, inſtead of contra coronam & dignitatem regis.

Ego comes Hugo et mei barones was the form of the earl's courts. Each baron had his free court of all pleas, ſuits, and plaints (except ſuch as belonged to the earl) and power of life and death. The laſt inſtance of the exertion of this power was in the perſon of Hugh Stringer, who was tried for murder in the baron of Kinderton's court, and executed 1597[a]. The earl had a chamberlain or chancellor (which office ſtill ſubſiſts) and a high conſtable, and high ſteward. This form of government continued about 174 years from the Conqueſt to the reign of Henry III. who on the death of John Scot the 7th Norman earl 1237 without iſſue male reſumed the earldom and beſtowed the county on his own ſon Edward. From this time the city was incorporated under a mayor and ſheriffs. The county palatine is adminiſtered at preſent by a chamberlain, vice-chamberlain, baron, deputy baron, ſeal-keeper, examiner, bayliff-itinerant, and filazer [1].

The ſtatute 27 Henry VIII. c. 5. empowers the chancellor of England to nominate and appoint juſtices of peace to keep ſeſſions within this county, and the juſtice of the county to hold only two ſhire days or ſeſſions days in a year, whereas he had formerly held eight or nine ſuch days in a year: the ſheriff to hold his monthly court.

It does not appear by the Black book of the Exchequer that any certificates of knights' fees were returned to Henry II. from the earl of Cheſter or any other knights in this county in conſequence of his writs of inquiry directed to his tenants in capite how many and what knights' fees belonged to them of the old or new feofment, to enable him to raiſe the aid or eſenage for the marriage of his daughter Maud. Mr. Hearne, who publiſhed this book, aſcribes this deficiency to the avowed enmity of the then earl Hugh Civelioc to the king. It is more probable the king had no ſuch tenants in Cheſhire; they all holding of the earl in chief and not of the king.

Upon the petition of the inhabitants of this county palatine ſetting forth their great loſs by not having any repreſentatives in parliament, it was enacted by ſtatute 34 and 35 Henry VIII. c. 13. that from thenceforth the ſaid county ſhould have two knights for the ſame and two burgeſſes for the city of Cheſter to ſerve in parliament, and to be elected and choſen by proceſs to be awarded by the chancellor of England to the chamberlain of Cheſter or his lieutenant, or deputy, and ſo like proceſs to be made by the chamberlain, his lieutenant, or deputy to the ſheriff of the ſaid county.

The moſſes in this county yield plenty of turf, and large fir trees are found buried in them, which the poor ſplit, and burn as candles. Theſe moſſy parts conſiſt of a kind of mooriſh boggy earth, and are diſtinguiſhed into white, grey, and black, from the colour of the turf. The white moſſes are compages of the leaves, ſeeds, flowers, ſtalks, and roots of herbs, plants, and ſhrubs. The grey conſiſt of the ſame ſubſtances in a higher ſtate of putrefaction, which in the black is at its height. The grey is harder and more ponderous than the white, the black cloſer and more bituminous than either. Square pieces of theſe

[a] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, p. 125.

[1] G.

moſſes

moſſes are cut out in the ſhape of bricks, and being laid in the ſun to dry are called turfs and uſed for fuel[b].

"On Dee is Bangor, where the great abbay was. "A part of the paroch, that is as much as lyith be- "yond Dee on the north ſide, is yn Walſche Mar- "lor (Welſh Maylor), and that is as half the paroche "of Bangor. But the abbay ſtood yn Ynglyſhe "Mailor on the hither and ſouth ſide of Dee. And "it is ploughed ground now where the abbey was "by the ſpace of a good Welſh mile, and they "plough up bones of the monks, and in remem- "brance were diggid up pecis of their clothes in "ſepulturs. The abbay ſtood in a fair valley, and "Dee ran by it. The cumpace of it was as a wallid "town, and yet remaynith the name of a gate called "Porth Hogan[c] by north, and the name of another "called Portclays[c] by ſouth. Dee ſyns changing "the botom rennith now thorough the middle be- "tween the two gates, one being a mile dim. "from the other, and yn this grounde be ploughid "up foundations of ſquarid ſtones and Romayne "money is found there[d]."

Mr. Horſley very much ſuſpects that the Bovium or Bonium of the Itinerary is not to be looked for at Bangor, or as it is more generally called Bangor ys a Coed, q. d. Bangor under the wood. We have not the leaſt traces of Roman antiquity in this place, not even coins, which Dr. Gale after Mr. Camden aſſerted were frequent here, but which may rank with the veſtimenta monachorum mentioned in the Lambeth MS. of the chronicle of St. Alban's[e]. The pavements and ſtreets ſaid to be diſcovered may be as much later than the Romans as the two ſepulchral ſtones ſtanding in the church-yard. Dr. Tilſon an eminent phyſician of Cheſter, who accompanied Mr. Horſley in his reſearches hereabouts, concurs with him in ſuppoſing the name of Bonium preſerved in Bunbury, or as it is generally written Bonebury near Beeſton caſtle[f]. Be this as it may, the ruins of Bangor monaſtery were remaining in Malmſbury's time[g], who confounds it with the epiſcopal ſee of this name in Caernarvonſhire, which was rather a colony from it; this ſubſiſting ſo early as the middle of the 5th century[h]; the other not before the middle of the 6th[i]. He ſays there were ſo many ruined walls of churches and cloiſters, and ſuch heaps of rub biſh as were never ſeen any where elſe. The Triades as cited by Mr. Vaughan in biſhop Gibſon ſay here were 2400 monks who in their turns (100 each hour) prayed and chanted ſo that divine ſervice was performed night and day without intermiſſion. Ethelfrid, king of Northumberland, deſirous to enlarge his dominions, A.D.607, made an attempt upon Cheſter, the inhabitants of which refuſing to ſubmit to him, and at the ſame time afraid to ſtand a ſiege, drew up in order of battle before the walls, under the command of Brocmail Yſcithroc king of Powis[k], probably commemorated on the Vale Crucis croſs; the monks of Bangor aſſiſting them in a ſeparate body with their prayers in a place of ſecurity at ſome diſtance. The king being informed of their deſign made his firſt attack upon the religious, and having put all but 50 to the ſword, the Britiſh army were ſo terrified that they threw down their arms, and fled in diſorder. The number of monks thus maſſacred (1200) appeared ſo extravagant to the Latin editor of ſir John Spelman's life of Alfred, that in his long note on the preface, p. 7. he gives only 200: if this be not an error of the preſs. But if we admit that there were 2400 monks in the monaſtery there is no difficulty in admitting that near half were ſlain, it being hardly likely the whole ſociety would expoſe their perſons on this occaſion. But whereas biſhop Gibſon ſays the ſame editor puts this battle A. D. 613, "contrary to the general voice of antiquity, unleſs "the Ulſter annals be on his ſide, which perhaps was "after the death of Auguſtine the monk;" his lordſhip forgets that archbiſhop Uſher follows this chronology[l], and ſo muſt all who attend to Bede's narrative[m], which expreſsly ſays, "Thus was fulfilled "the preſage of the holy prelate Auguſtine, quamvis "ipſo jam multo ante tempore ad cæleſtia regna ſub- "lato." See more of Bangor in Flintſhire. Dr. Caius ſays here was an univerſity a mile from the city[n]; Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis[o] and John Tinmouth in his life of St. Alban ſay Pelagius was abbot of Bangor about A. D. 404. All our writers agree he was a Britan, and that his true name was Morgan, which he changed for the other of the ſame import, both implying he came from beyond ſea. When or where he died is not known. It is probable the Saxon conqueſts completed the ruin of this abbey, which ſeems to have ſunk after this maſſacre, in which Dinothus the only abbot we meet with was probably involved[p]. If Gildas the hiſtorian, who lived about the middle of the 9th century, was a monk of this houſe, it probably ſubſiſted till within a century of the Conqueſt[q]. Here is a field called Key cummin, or by ſome ſuch name, q. d. the Communion field[r].

All the remains Mr. Pennant could find were four ſtone coffin lids in the church-yard of later date than the time here mentioned, and an old croſs: and in a field called Stanyards are ploughed up foundations.

The bridge of four arches is a beautiful light ſtructure, and has this inſcription:

MUNDI 5607 DENB. C C CONCIT.
REPARAT. AN. CHRIST. 1658 SUMP. E COMIT. LIB. M. A.
HEGYR 1036 FLINT C.

"Malpas a market having three ſtreets all paved[s]." Malpas.

Hugh de Sutton married Elizabeth daughter and heir of William Patric lord of the moiety of the barony of Malpas[t]. Robert, a lineal deſcendant of Hugh firſt baron Malpas, took the name of Cholmondeley from that lordſhip given him by his father. His grandſon Robert marrying into the family of St. Pierre acquired their moiety of this barony: and from him is deſcended the preſent earl of Cholmondeley, many of whoſe anceſtors are buried

[b] King's Vale Royal, p. 17.
[c] There is a place ſtill called Clai and a houſe Hogan. Pennant, Wales, I. 223.
[d] Lel. V. 33.
[e] Gale's Anton. p. 54. Lel. It. V. 33.
[f] MS. n. in Ward's Horſley, p. 417.
[g] Hiſt. lib. I. p. 9. ed. Lond. 1696. De Geſt. Pont. IV. verſus finem.
[h] Stillingfleet, Origin of the Brit. chu. 184, 185. Tanner, Not. Mon. pref. p. 1.
[i] Tan. Ib. 704.
[k] Bede, II. 2. Sax. Chron. p. 25. 85. Pennant's Wales, I. 118.
[l] Index Chronol. ad Ant. Eccl. Brit. ſub anno 613. p. 536.
[m] Hiſt. Eccl. II. 2.
[n] Ant. Cantab. l. 149. ap. Uſſer Eccl. Ant. 70.
[o] Polychr. IV. 51.
[p] Tanner, Bib. Brit. 228.
[q] Tan. Ib. art. Gildas 4tus.
[r] Horſley ubi ſup.
[s] Lel. VII. 43.
[t] Dugd. Bar. II. 212.

at Malpas, which gives them title of viſcount. The caſtle is now down: but here is a freeſchool and hoſpital founded by ſir Randal Brereton [a]. Leland calls this the ſecond houſe of the Breretons; the fair place being at the end of the ſouth ſtreet.

Shocklach. Shocklach has long ſince loſt its caſtle except the foſs, and in its room has ſucceeded a handſome manſion-houſe, late ſir Randolph Brereton's, whoſe heireſs has brought it to the Egertons of Ridley [x]. On the oppoſite ſide of the road is a vaſt mount, which Mr. Pennant ſuppoſes older than the caſtle. Query if the road has not been ſince carried through the works, and ſeparated the keep from the reſt.

Alford. The Ardern family is worn out at Alford, where is a good ſtone bridge over the Dee [y].

Pulford. Pulford belonged now with its extenſive lordſhip to the Warburtons [z].

Stretton. Not far from Scolach is Stretton which implies a Roman road [a].

Eaton. At the Conqueſt there was a fiſhery at Eaton, which employed ſix men, and yielded 1000 ſalmon; but they have long ceaſed [b].

The lineal deſcendant of the Groſvenors, ſir Richard, was created baron Groſvenor 1761. Their manſion-houſe here was rebuilt of brick in the laſt century [c].

Chester. "The toun of Cheſter is chiefly one ſtreate of "very meane building in lenght: there is beſides a "ſmaul ſtreet or two about the church, that is col-"legiatid, and hath a deane and prebendaries, but it "is of a very meane building, and in the body of "the church is a tumbe with the image of a biſhop, "in token that S. Cuthberth ons was buried or re-"mained in his feretre there [d]."

The 20th legion ſtationed at Cheſter was named Valeria Victrix [e] or Valens Victrix, and was in Britain ſeven years before the time aſſigned for its arrival by Mr. Camden, being here at the battle with Boadicea. The firſt inſcription found here 1653 in Foreſt ſtreet [f] commemorative of this legion was an altar now among the Arundelian marbles at Oxford, but quite ſcaled off. The annexed correct copy Pl. XIII. fig. 2. is from the Marmora Oxonienſia 1764.

I. O. M. TANARO
T. ELUPIUS GALER.
PRAESENS GVNA
PRI·LEG. XXVV
COMMODO ET LATERANO COS
V. S. L. M.

i. e. Jovi Optimo Maximo Tanaro Titus Elupius Galeria [tribu] Præſens Guntia primipilus [or præfectus] legionis viceſimæ valentis victricis Commodo & Laterano Conſulibus votum ſolvit libens merito. It was firſt publiſhed by Selden and Prideaux in their Marmora Arundeliana; then in Dr. Gale's Antoninus, p. 3. The epithet of Tanarus which occurs only here is equivalent to Tonans. Prideaux and Gale read Præſes inſtead of Præſens; but Horſley ſays the N was too plain to admit of this alteration. He ſuppoſed Præſens another name of the dedicator. But he forgot he had put the tribe between theſe names. We muſt, therefore, probably read Galerius. Guntia expreſſes his country, which ſome took for Gwinedha or North Wales, but profeſſor Ward for Guntia in Vindelicia [g]. The date is A. D. 154. A. U. 906. when Lucius Aurelius Verus ſurnamed Commodus was conſul with Sextilius Lateranus under Antoninus Pius. The ſame legion is mentioned on ſome Roman bricks now in the hands of the rev. Mr. Preſcot [h] of Cheſter, as is alſo another altar with this inſcription firſt publiſhed in the Phil. Tranſ. N° 222. See Pl. XIII. fig. 3.

PRO. SAL. DOM|N
ORVM: |NV: INVI
CTISSIMORVM
AVGG: GEN|O. L°CI
FLAVIVS. LONG.
TRIB. MIL. LEG. XX.
LONG|NVS. F+
IVS & DOMO
SAMOSATA
V. S.

Pro ſalute dominorum noſtrorum invicti ſſimorum
Auguſtorum Genio Loci Flavius Longus tribunus militum Legionis viceſimæ [victricis et] Longinusfilius ejus domo Samoſata votum ſolverunt.

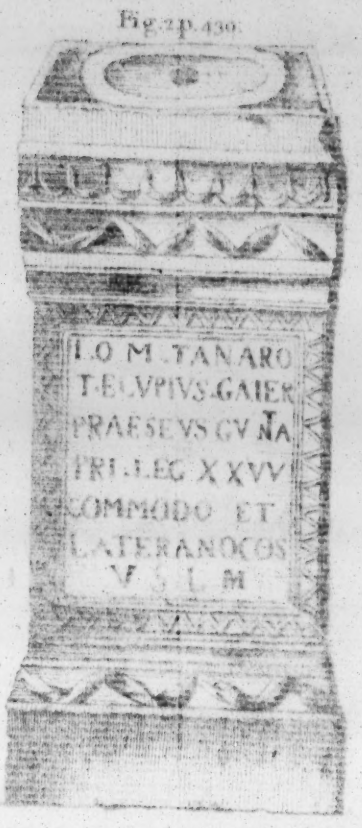
The emperors commemorated on it were probably Diocletian and Maximian, and the dedicator was a countryman of Lucian of Samoſata. It was found in digging a cellar for Mr. Heath near the eaſt gate lying with the inſcription downwards. The ſtone is two feet ſquare, ſuppoſed to have been a pedeſtal on a deep broad foundation of ſquare ſtones. The earth about it was ſolid, but of ſeveral colours mixed with aſhes, and the bones of oxen and deer, and two braſs coins, IMP. CAES. VESPASIAN. AVG. COS. III. Reverſe, VICTORIA AVG. S. C. a victory ſtanding: and FL. VAL. CONSTANTIVS NOB. C. Reverſe, a Genius with a patera and cornucopiæ, GENIO POPVLI ROMANI. Mr. Preſcot had alſo a ſtatue with a Phrygian bonnet, a mantle and ſhort jacket, holding in his hands an inverted torch, ſuppoſed to repreſent Mithras [k], ill drawn in Horſley [l]; and a third inſcription found 1729 in Watergate, which being on many accounts ſuſpicious, I ſhall refer to Horſley [m] for an account of it. The eaſt gate, of Roman architecture, conſiſting of two arches caſed with Norman work, continued till of late years. In taking down this gate to be rebuilt of one large arch by lord Groſvenor, there found between the tops of the arches facing Foreſtreet or the Watling ſtreet a whole length figure of a Roman ſoldier in red grit in relief, tolerably well preſerved, which being little known a draught of it is here annexed. See Pl. XIII. fig. 1. The is now in the garden of Mr. Lawton [n]. The pe

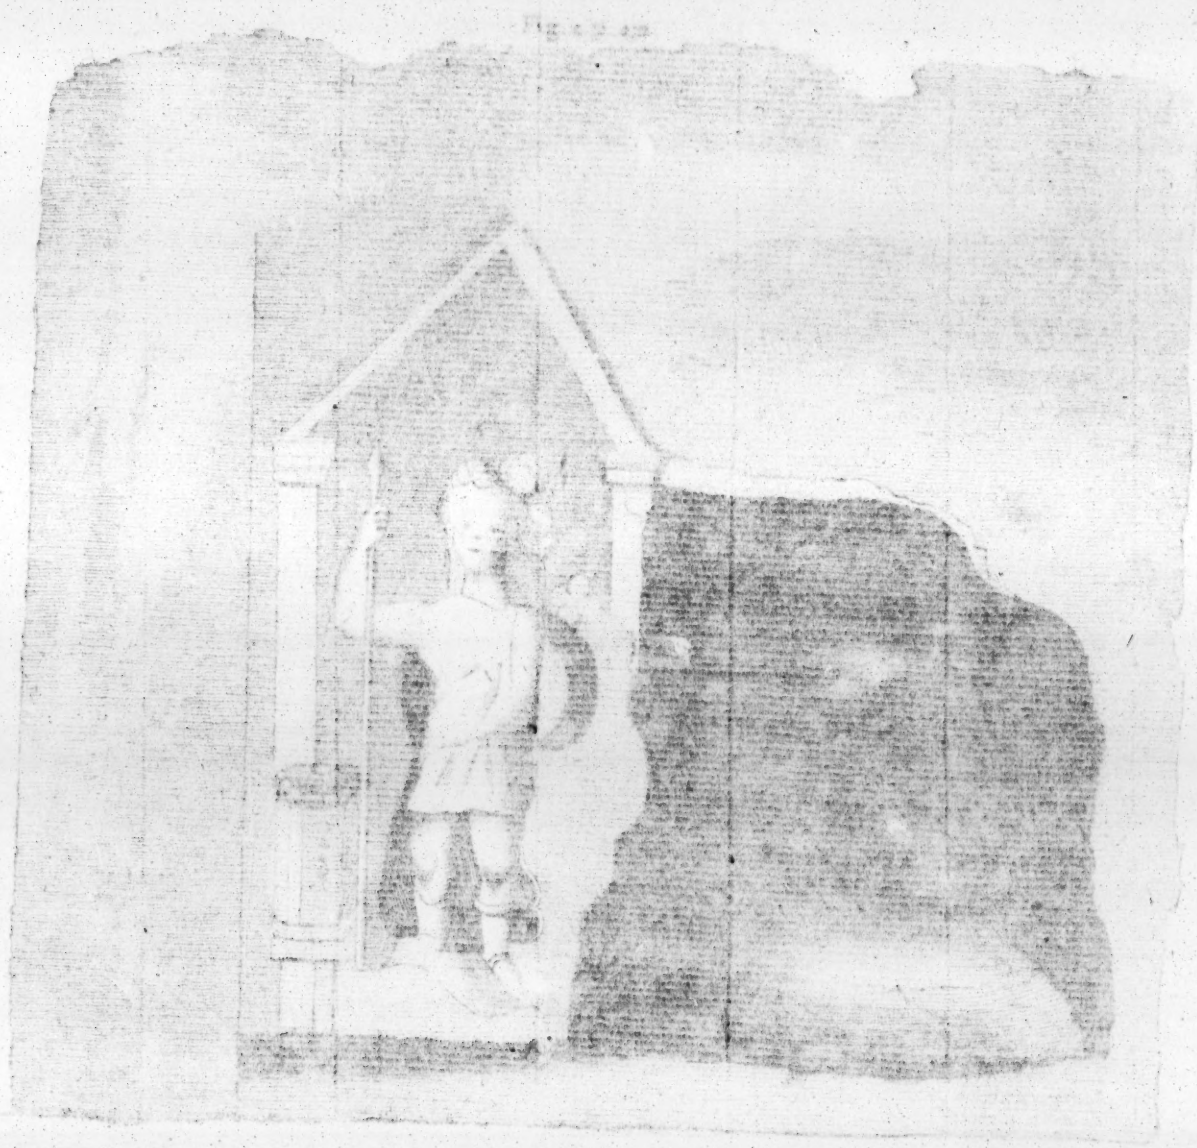
[a] King's Vale Royal, p. 43. 54. Lel. VII. 43.
[x] Pennant's Wales, I. 214. [y] Mag. Brit. I. 275. [z] King, p. 52.
[a] Pennant, Ib. 214. [b] Ib. 202. ex Domeſd. 263. a. [c] Ib. [d] Lel. I. 83.
[e] Perhaps rather this firſt from what Dio Caſſius ſays LV. p. 564. Οι εικοσοι οι και Ουαλερι και Νικηφορες ονομασμενοι και εν Βρεττανια τη απω
[f] So it ſhould be altered in Horſley, the account of the finding No. 2. relating to No. 3. Ward MS. n.
[g] Horſley Brit. Rom. p. 83. 314.
[h] Nephew to Mr. Preſcot mentioned by Gibſon and Horſley, and ſon to the late maſter of Catherine hall.
[i] Horſley, 315. Gibſon. Pennant, Wales I. 115. [k] Ib. 116. [l] Ward's MS. n. Pennant, Ib. 11
[m] P. 316. [n] Pennant, Ib. 114.

Fig. 1 p. 430.

Fig. 2 p. 430.



Vol. III. p. 224.



at Malpas, which gives the title of [illegible] castle is now [illegible] but here is a [illegible] hospital founded by [illegible] calls this the second house of the Benedictines [illegible] place [illegible] the end of the fourth [illegible]

Shocklach. Shocklach has long since loft its [illegible] kept the fort, and in its room has succeeded a [illegible] mansion-house, late Sir Randolph Brereton's, whose heirefs has brought it to the Worsleys of Ridley[y]. On the oppofite fide of the road is a vaft mount, which Mr. Pennant fuppofes older than the caftle. Query if the road has not been fince carried through the works, and feparated the keep from the reft.

Alford. The Ardern family is worn out at Alford, where is a good ftone bridge over the Dee[z].

Pulford. Pulford belonged now with its extenfive lordfhip to the Warburtons[z].

Stretton. Not far from Scolach, at Stretton, which implies a Roman road[a].

Eaton. At the Conqueft there was a nunnery at Eaton, which employed [illegible] but they have long ceafed[b].

The Great defcendant of the Grofvenors, at Richard, was erected [illegible] 1682. Their [illegible] but were rebuilt of late in the moft [illegible] manner[c].

Caftle. The [illegible]our of Chefter is chiefly [illegible] of a very [illegible] building in [illegible] there [illegible] a [illegible] ground ftreet or two about the church, run in [illegible] legrand, and hath a [illegible] and [illegible] is of a very [illegible] building, [illegible] the church is a [illegible] with the [illegible] in token that S. Cuthbert [illegible] was [illegible] malted in his [illegible] there[d].

[illegible] years before [illegible] ring at Mr. Camden, [illegible] Road [illegible] Forest ftreet [illegible] alfo now [illegible] the [illegible] Mill [illegible]

[illegible] pofed Frenus another name of the [illegible] he forgot he had put the tribe before. We muft, therefore, probably read Ga[illegible] [illegible] es his country, which fome [illegible] make it North Wales, but profeffor Wa[illegible] in Vindelicia[e]. The date is A. D. 154. [illegible] when Lucius Aurelius Verus furnamed [illegible] conful with Sextilius Lateranus under [illegible] Pius. The fame legion is mentioned on [illegible] bricks now in the hands of the Prefect[a] of Chefter, as is alfo another [illegible] infeription laft publifhed in the Pa[illegible] N. 222. See Pl. XIII. fig. 3.

PRO. SAL. DOM|N
ORVM. ET. INVI
CTISSIMORVM
AVGG: GENIO. L°CI
FLAVIVS. LONG.
TRIB. MIL. LEG. XX.
LONGINVS. F[illegible]
IVS & DOMO
SAMOSATA
V. S.

Pro falute dominorum noftrorum invictiffimorum Auguftorum Genio Loci Flavius Longus tribunus militum Legionis vicefimæ [illegible]is et] Longinusfilius ejus domo Samofata votum folverunt.

[illegible] commemorated on it were [illegible] Maximus, and the dedi[illegible] [illegible]cers of Samofata. It [illegible] [illegible]ke Mr. Heath [illegible] [illegible] the infeription [illegible] [illegible] feet fquare. Fuppofed to [illegible] [illegible] deep broad foundation [illegible] [illegible]th about it was folid, [illegible] [illegible] arch after, and the [illegible] [illegible] two brafs coins, IMP. CA[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]OBS III. Beverle, [illegible] [illegible] ftanding; and FL. VA[illegible] [illegible] B. C. Beverle, a Ge[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] GENIO POPVLI [illegible] [illegible] alfo a ftatue with a Phrygi[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] beer jacket, ftanding on [illegible] [illegible] fuppofed to reprefent [illegible] [illegible] Horley[f]; and a third infcr[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] gate, which being on [illegible] [illegible] fhall refer to Horley [illegible] [illegible] gate, of Roman arch[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] cafed with Norman [illegible] [illegible] In taking down [illegible] [illegible] large arch [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ops of the arch[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ftreet a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ftone in red got [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] which in the little [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] See Pl. XIII. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Mr. Lever[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Fig.1.p.430.

Fig.2.p.430.

Vol.III.p.124.

Fig.4.p.431.

Fig.8.p.439.

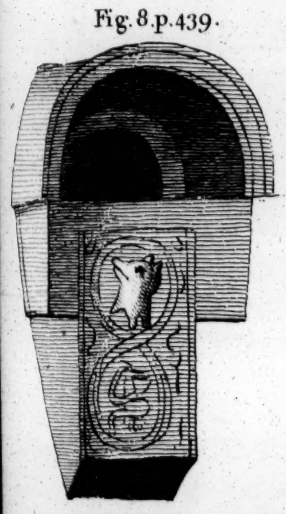

Fig.3.p.430.

Fig.3.p.430.

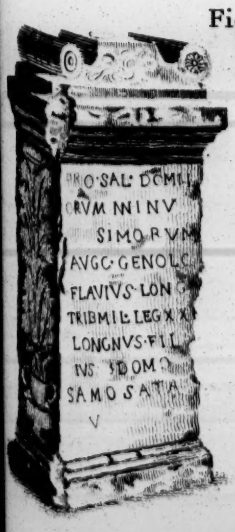

Fig.5.p.431.

23 in.

Fig.6.p.431.

17 in.

Fig.7.p.431.

14 in.

F. Cary sculpt

tiſe or guildhall is ſuppoſed to occupy the ſite of the Prætorium[o]. The ſheriff of Cheſter holds a court called Curia Pentucarum in the place thence called Pendice, or Pentice. Upon a red grit rock in a field on the ſouth ſide of the river called the Cloſe, where tradition ſays Edgar's palace ſtood, is the figure of Pallas Armata cut in relief. At her right hand is an altar, and on her left ſhoulder a rude reſemblance of her favourite bird. See Pl. XIII, fig. 4. Some conſiderable remains of a Roman hypocauſt are yet to be ſeen in the cellars of the Feathers inn, and other houſes in Bridge ſtreet. It is of an irregular figure, ſupported by 32 pillars two feet 10 inches and an half high, and 18 inches aſunder, each pillar 18 inches ſquare, and over them a ſlew tile two feet ſquare ſupporting a floor of coarſe mortar mixed with ſmall red gravel about three inches thick, and over it another five inches thick of finer mortar; the pillars ſtand on mortar ſpread over the arch. The ante-chamber is of the ſame ſize as the hypocauſt with an opening into the middle of it two feet below it. Paſſing through Bridge gate to the right are remains of an antient poſtern, a ſmall part of which leads to an antient large round arch ſeemingly of Roman workmanſhip, now filled with more modern maſonry, and a paſſage left through a ſmall arch of a very irregular form. On the left within the very paſſage is the appearance of another round arch, now filled up. This poſtern is called the Ship gate or Hole in the wall. It ſeems originally deſigned for the common paſſage over the Dee into the country of the Ordovices. The rock on the Hambridge ſide is cut down, and immediately beyond in the field called Edgar's are veſtiges of a road pointing to Bonium, Bangor. In this field is the relief of Minerva before-mentioned, and beyond it ſome antient vaults fell in within memory called the ſite of Edgar's palace, or, as Braun in his plan of Cheſter in his Civitates Orbis III. pl. 3. that of the earls of Cheſter, though Dr. Stukeley conceived them Roman. It is not improbable ſome public building exiſted on this ſpot through each period[p].

Since 1773 another hypocauſt was diſcovered among Roman foundations, and a beautiful altar, Fortunæ reduci & Eſculapio, engraved in Pl. XIII. fig. 5, 6, 7.

The coin of Geta referred to by Mr. Camden has DEVANA, but as we find it only in Goltzius, it is as ſuſpicious as that inſcribed COL. CAMALODUNUM.

The ſtory of the ſix kings rowing Edgar is probably an invention of the monk of St. Werburgh, who firſt mentions it in his Polychronicon. Egbert finally wreſted Cheſter out of the hands of the Britiſh prince about A. D. 828.[q] The Danes retreating before Alfred A. D. 895, ſeized on this city then called Legaceſter before he could overtake them, and kept poſſeſſion of it during the winter, after which they retired into North Wales[r].

The approach to Cheſter from Wales is over a narrow and dangerous bridge of ſeven irregular arches, rendered more inconvenient by the antient gateways at each end, formerly neceſſary to prevent the inroads of the Welſh, who ſo frequently burnt both city and ſuburbs as to occaſion its being called Trvhoeth or the burnt town.

Under Lupus Cheſter had a guild mercatory analogous to a corporation for an excluſive trade: and at the making of Domeſday here was a præpoſitus regis or provoſt. Mr. Pennant[s] imagines the principal trade was horſes and ſlaves, which latter article he obſerves with juſt deteſtation from the life of St. Wulſtan, who died biſhop of Worceſter 1095, was carried on between Briſtol and Ireland[t]. At the making of Domeſday here were 431 houſes taxable, beſides 56 that belonged to the biſhop: it paid 10½ marks of ſilver, two parts to the king and the 3d to the earl: whenever the king came in perſon he claimed from every ploughland 200 heſthas, nine capons, one cuna or vat of ale, and one ruſca of butter: if any perſons made bad ale they were to ſit in a chair full of dung[u] or pay 4*s*. to the provoſts. There were twelve judges and ſeven mintmaſters in the city. But when Hugh Lupus took poſſeſſion there were 205 houſes fewer than in the Confeſſor's time.

Beſides the laws that obtained in this city at the Conqueſt mentioned by Mr. Camden, the following are alſo recited in Domeſday.

The fine for a breach of the king's peace was 100*s*. of the earl's peace the ſame ſum, but the earl had a third penny out of it.

A freeman of the king's killing a man in his houſe forfeited his land and money to the king, and was outlawed. The earl had the ſame fine of his men, but none could be reſtored but by the king.

The fine for bloodſhed from the morning of the ſecond holiday to the noon of Sunday was 10*s*; from the noon of Sunday to the morning of the ſecond holiday 20*s*. alſo in the 12 days of Chriſtmas, on the purification of the Virgin Mary, the firſt day of Eaſter and Whitſontide, Aſcenſion day, the Aſſumption or Nativity of the Virgin Mary, and the feaſt of All Saints; and whoever killed a man on thoſe days paid £.4. but on other days only 40*s*. In like manner for Heinfare[x], or Foreſtel[y]. For Hangewith[z] in the city 10*s*. if by the king's or earl's provoſt 20*s*. For Revelach[a], robbery, or violence offered to a woman in a houſe 40*s*. each. A widow diſhonouring herſelf forfeited 20*s*. a maiden 10*s*. Seizure of another man's land in the city 40*s*. if the party ſeizing could not redeem his own, alſo if a man ſet up a claim thereto, and could not redeem his debt. Refuſal to redeem his own or his neighbour's land 10*s*. Neglect of payment of gavel at the time limited, 10*s*. or, in caſe of inability or refuſal, forfeiture of lands to the king's governor. If a fire happened in the city the perſon at whoſe houſe it broke out was to forfeit 4 oræ denar', and pay 2*s* to his next neighbour. Of all theſe forfeitures two parts belonged to the king, and a third to the earl.

Ships coming to and from the port without the king's leave forfeited to the king and the earl 40*s*. for every man on board, and, if they came againſt the king's peace and prohibition, the ſhip, men, and cargo were all forfeited to the king and earl. But, if they came with the king's leave, the ſhip's company might ſell their goods without interruption, paying at their departure 4*d*. for every laſt to the king and earl. If the king's governor forbad the [o] Pennant, lb. 168.

[q] Powel, p. 27.
[s] Journey from Cheſter, p. 128.
[u] cathedra ſtercoris; the tumbril or dung cart.
[y] Foreſtalling.
[p] Ib. 112, 113.
[r] Saxon Chron. p. 102. Flores Hiſt. p. 269.
[t] Vita Wulſtani in Ang. Sac. II. 258.
[x] Eſcape or running away of ſervants.
[z] A fine for the execution of a robber without formal trial.

dealers

dealers in martens' ſkins [b] to ſell any before he had ſeen them, thoſe who diſregarded this prohibition were to forfeit 40ſ. A man or woman detected in making a falſe abode [c] in the city was to forfeit 4ſ. [d]

The mayors of the city of Cheſter had for long time been authorized and appointed to take recognizance according to the Statute Merchant and of Acton Burnell, whereupon was delivered to the mayor a ſpecial ſeal for the ſame, but ſome doubts ariſing about the legality of recognizances ſo taken, the ſtatute 2 and 3 Edward VI. c. 31, enacted that this ſhould hold good in law. Henry VII. by letters patent dated at Cheſter April 6, a. r. 21, divided, exempted, and in all things ſeparated from the county of Cheſter the city with the ſuburbs and hamlets, and all the land within the precinct and circuit of the ſaid city, thenceforth making and appointing it a county of itſelf; by which means the act 2 and 3 Edward VI. c. 28, for fines with proclamations in the county palatine of Cheſter, did not extend to fines within the county of the city of Cheſter. The ſtatute 43 Elizabeth, c. 15, directs that fines levied before the mayor of Cheſter in the Portmoot court in the ſaid city ſhould be as valid as if levied in the county palatine, but ſubject to be reverſed upon writs of error before the high juſtice of Cheſter, as other judgements given by the ſaid mayor in the Portmoot court have uſed to be if any error be found therein.

The yearly export of cheeſe made in this county to London only has been computed at 14,000 tons, to Briſtol and York down the Severn and Trent 8000 more, beſides great quantities to Ireland and Scotland [e], and the great demand for it both in home and foreign conſumption has now exceeded the manufacture, and abſolutely put it out of power of the dealers to procure any of a tolerable age, which is one of its greateſt recommendations. The fineſt in the county is made in the pariſh of Over, and the adjoining four, near Vale Royal.

The preſent city is extenſive, and well built; with four principal ſtreets leading to as many gates, but diſfigured by the Rows, as they are called, which obſtruct foot paſſengers at the ſame time that they ſhelter them from weather. Theſe piazzas riſe up to the middle of the houſes, and have ſpacious ſhops, and vaults under and apartments over them. But the diſagreeable circumſtance of aſcending and deſcending a flight of ſteps at every interſection of the narrow ſtreets, joined to the want of light for the ſhops, counterbalances the advantage of room gained.

The Rows.

Mr. Pennant [e] ſuppoſes the rows the ſame with the antient veſtibules deſcribed by Plautus [f], —— veſtibulum ante ædes & ambulacrum ejuſmodi.

built before the doors midway between the ſtreets and houſes. The ſhops and warehouſes beneath were the cryptæ and apothecæ. The back courts of all the houſes are level with the rows.

The ſtreets though hollowed out of the rock were once conſiderably deeper, and the Roman pavement is found four feet lower. The walls are the only entire ſpecimen of antient fortification now in Great Britain [g]. They are a mile and three quarters, and 101 yards in circumference, remarkable for the ſingularity of a walk all round on them for two perſons abreaſt. They are kept in repair by an officer called a Murenger and a rate called murage on all imports by perſons not free of the city.

The cuſtody of the gates of Cheſter was committed to very conſiderable noblemen: Eaſt gate to the earl of Oxford, Bridge gate to the earl of Shrewſbury, Water gate to the earl of Derby, and North gate to the mayor [h]. The principal manufacture is gloves: and its fairs are reſorted to three times a year by a great concourſe of the Iriſh linen merchants.

In this city was pretty early in the Saxon times a nunnery, to which St. Werburgh's remains were brought for ſafety A. D. 875. This was ſucceeded by a foundation in her honour by Ethelfleda for ſecular canons, whom Hugh Lupus expelled 1093, and ſettled a Benedictine abbey here from Bec in Normandy, which continued till the diſſolution; its yearly revenues being upwards of 1000*l*. The ſite is occupied by handſome houſes on three ſides, and on the fourth by the epiſcopal palace, rebuilt by biſhop Keen on the ſite of the abbey houſe [i]. The old gate remains. St. Thomas's chapel is the deanry. The cloiſters are entire: the fratry is a ſchool. The chapter-houſe is a beautiful arched building 50 feet by 26 and 35 high, deformed by modern bookcaſes up to the windows, and entered by a veſtibule ſupported by four cluſtered columns 33 feet by 27 and 12 and an half high. The monument of Hugh Lupus in this building where he and the ſix ſucceeding earls were buried, is the only antient one Cheſter has to ſhew in her cathedral, which really has undergone too many revolutions to have many marks of antiquity. The lower part of the nave and part of the north tranſept are the oldeſt; the middle aile and tower were finiſhed by abbot Ripley elected 1485. The weſt end was begun 1508, and is deſcended into by a multitude of ſteps. The nunneries of the choir are probably the work of abbot Oldham. The ſhrine as it is called, or rather the outer caſe of the ſhrine, of St. Werburgh, which ſupports the biſhop's throne, is charged with figures, which formerly bore ſcrolls of their names repreſenting the Mercian kings and ſaints; in the whole 34. The tranſepts are of unequal lengths. The North is very large and dedicated to St. Oſwald, ſerving as a pariſh church, and ſaid to occupy the ſite of the firſt church of St. Peter and St. Paul. The monks built this tranſept on purpoſe for the citizens, whom they afterwards wiſhed to remove to St. Michael's chapel, but at the requeſt of the mayor, &c. agreed to let them have the tranſept again 1488, and the chapel has been converted into a common hall and other lay uſes [k]. An epiſcopal ſee for part of Mercia was ſettled here before the end of the 7th century, ſometimes diſtinct from and ſometimes united to that of Lichfield. After the Conqueſt biſhop Peter and his ſucceſſors reſided here altogether for 30 years [l] in St. John's church till biſhop Robert 1102 quitted Cheſter for Coventry. Henry VIII. at the diſſolution fixed the ſee here once more [m], and by ſtatute 33 a. r. c. 31, ordered that the dioceſe, with all the people

[b] pelles martinas. In the Confeſſor's time the fine of this city, then a very conſiderable ſea-port, was 45*l*. and three timbres of martens ſkins, but when it was given to earl Hugh it was greatly reduced. See the duties on ſhips coming into its harbour, printed in Selden's Tit. of Hon. P. II. c. 5. p. 618 from Domeſday.

[c] falſam manſuram. [d] Domeſday, f. 262. b.

[e] P. 108, 109. [f] Moſtellar. Act. 111. [g] Pennant, 153.

[h] Pennant, Wales, I. 152. [i] Ib. 75. [k] Ib. 183.

[l] Hence the Saxon Chronicle and other writers call biſhop Peter epiſcopus Licifeldenſis ſive Ceſtrenſis. Gibſon.

[m] Tanner, p. 57.

in it, ſhould be united to the province of York, and diſſevered from that of Canterbury. John Bird a Carmelite was the firſt proteſtant biſhop, and granted away the whole property of the ſee except the ſite of the palace and a few old houſes, and was deprived by Mary for being married.

The caſtle is a noble ſtructure, having a tower aſcribed to Julius Cæſar, and bearing his name, which as well as its workmanſhip prove it to have been originally built by the Romans, though the preſent walls are evidently Norman. If Malmſbury's account of Cheſter being the retreat of the veterans of the Julian legions (Julianarum Legionum) be explained by referring Julian to Julius Agricola [n] it is no unnatural ſuppoſition that this tower was his work. In Hugh Lupus's hall, a room 99 by 45 feet, are held the courts of juſtice for the county, and to it adjoins the court of Exchequer ſaid to have been the parliament houſe of the petty king, with ſeats for the earls, abbots, and his eight barons [o].

A county hoſpital was founded 1756 and opened 1761 [p].

As to the retreat of Henry IV. hither and his burial in this cathedral, it ſeems to owe its riſe to tradition recorded by Giraldus Cambrenſis. The tomb ſhewn for his in the ſouth aile of the choir is a modern altar tomb, over which was formerly a ſtone vault like a bee-hive towering above the roof without. Authors of better credit agree he died in want and obſcurity at Liege, and was buried at Spires. Giraldus Cambrenſis was the firſt that broached the ſtory of an emperor of Germany retiring and dying here, and Mr. Camden firſt fixed upon Henry IV. whereas all the circumſtances related by Giraldus belong to his ſon Henry V.

The ruins of St. John's church, which was reputed the antient cathedral, ſhew it to have been no ways inferior to the preſent, though little more than half of it is now uſed for a parochial church. The tower falling 1574 demoliſhed the chancel. The nave reſts on round pillars and arches. It was a monaſtery from the beginning of the 10th century, and had till the ſuppreſſion a dean and ſeven prebendaries, with an income of near 100*£*. a year [q].

On the ſouth ſide of the church-yard impending over a high cliff ſuppoſed Radeclive of Domeſday, is a ſmall chapel called the Anchoritage, placed probably over ſome hermits whoſe bodies have been found in coffin ſhaped caverns in the live rock. Hither Harold was ſaid to have retired [r].

Other religious houſes in this city were, a Benedictine nunnery founded by Randal ſecond earl of Cheſter, valued at £.66. 18*s*. 4*d*. [s] It ſtood in the nurſery garden on the north ſide the city called the Nuns garden, where are walls and arches [t]. Grey or Franciſcan friars t. Henry III. in the Yatch field near the new linen hall where painted tiles and glaſs are dug up [u]. White friars founded 1279 [x]. Mr. Marſden's houſe is part of them [y]. Part of this houſe and its fine vaults are occupied by Henry Heſketh, eſq. [z] Black friars [a]. An hoſpital of St. John Baptiſt valued at £.28. 10*s*. 4*d*. [b] a fragment of it in Foreſt-ſtreet [c]: and another of St. Giles [d] for lepers oppoſite the preſent place of execution; the burying-ground uſed by St. Oſwald's pariſh [e]. Here are nine pariſhes with their churches of which St. Peter's and Trinity have handſome ſpires. The number of inhabitants including the ſuburbs is 14713.

Here Henry II. and Malcolm IV. of Scotland had an interview 1259, and the latter ceded the three counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Weſtmoreland, formerly wreſted from the Engliſh crown [f]. Conſtance counteſs of Cheſter preſented archbiſhop Baldwin when he went to preach up a cruſade in Wales with cheeſes made of deers milk [g]. Edward I. 1275, appointed this city as the place for receiving the homage of Llewelyn, which that high ſpirited prince refuſing, involved himſelf and his principality in that fatal war which obliged his ſubjects to make their perſonal homage and fealty for their lands in 1300 [h]. Richard II. in his 12th year converted Cheſter into a principality, annexing to it the caſtle of Holt, the lordſhip of Bromfield and Yale, Chirkland, and ſeveral other places in Wales and on the borders, enacting that it ſhould be given only to the king's eldeſt ſon. But Henry IV. reſcinded an act that encroached ſo much on the dignity of his ſon as prince of Wales. The citizens of Cheſter were no leſs famed for their dramatic performances than thoſe of Coventry [i]. The ſweating ſickneſs deſtroyed here in 1506, 91 houſeholders in three days, and only four women; and was followed in 1517 by a dreadful peſtilence. A more grievous one viſited it 1647, after it was taken by the parliament forces under ſir William Brereton, having held out a twenty weeks ſiege, and ſurrendered February 3, 1645-6, on terms that did honor to the ſpirit of the beſieged.

The Rood eye or iſland of the croſs, whoſe baſe is ſtill there, was the Campus Martius of the Cheſter youth, and from 1607 an horſe-courſe; a fine extenſive meadow embanked againſt the Dee about 1587. At one end ſtands the houſe of induſtry erected 1757, and a little beyond it the quays and warehouſes, to which ſhips of 350 tons can come; the ſpring tides riſing at a medium 15 feet, the neap tides 8. The port was ſcoured, a new canal cut, and a large tract of land recovered from the ſea by Mr. Yarranton, of whom before in Worceſterſhire, p. 357. An act of parliament was obtained for recovering and ſecuring the navigation of the river Dee, ſettling the duties on ſhips, and two ferries into Flintſhire. Other acts in 1732, 1740, 1743, 1752; and after much loſs and expence a fine canal has been formed guarded by vaſt banks, in which the river is confined for the ſpace of ten miles, and ſhips brought ſafely up to the quay, and much land gained from the ſea and improved into valuable farms [k]. An inland navigation has been begun, to run through the county below Beeſton caſtle, and to terminate near Middlewich. Another branch was to extend to Namptwich. One mouth opens into the river Dee below the water-tower. A fine baſon is formed in the lime rock, into which boats are to deſcend by five ſucceſſive locks

[a] Gibſon, 669. [o] Pennant, 159. [p] Ib. 71.
[q] Tanner, p. 59. The ſite of a church of St. Peter was claimed by Robert de Rodeland ad Fimland (as belonging to his manor as earl) but the county proved that it belonged to the city. Domeſd. fol.
[r] Pennant, 187. [s] Tan. 60. [t] Penn. 188. [u] Tan. 63. Penn. ib. [x] Tan. 64.
[y] Penn. 185. [z] Penn. 186. [a] Tan. 65. [b] Ib. 64,
[c] Penn. 189. [d] Tan. 65.
[e] Penn. 189. [f] Fordun, I. 449. [g] Gir. Cambr. Itin. Cambr. c. XI. p. 87.
[h] Powel, 333. 382. Rymer, II. 53. 68. [i] Warton's Hiſt. of Eng. Poetry, I. 184. Pennant's Wales, I. 136. 144.
[k] Pennant, 190—195.

below the north walls of the city. A few miles of this deſign are completed; but an unhappy miſcalculation has put a ſtop to it for the preſent. The great objects were the ſalt and cheeſe trade and coal from Staffordſhire for the interior parts of this county[l].

Eccleſton. Between Cheſter and Eccleſton, a pleaſant village near the Dee, the Roman road is continued in a ſtrait direction, traceable alſo by its materials and remains of pavement. It points towards Eccleſton, near which are the remains of a mount, the ſite perhaps of a ſmall caſtle. It paſſes through Eaton park and croſſes the Dee at Oldford[m].

Farndon. Higher upon the river is Farndon, a ſmall town, whoſe church being burnt in 1645 was rebuilt, and has in a window over the Barnſton pew ſome beautiful painted glaſs repreſenting a general in his tent ſurrounded by the general officers with their reſpective badges and arms. Over the general thoſe of Gamul perhaps in memory of ſir Francis Gamul, the active mayor of Cheſter during the civil war.

Wyral. "Wyrale beginnith leſs than a quarter of a mile "of the very city ſelf of Cheſter, and within a two "bow ſhottes of the ſuburbe without the north "gate at a little brooket callid Flokars brook that "ther cometh ynto Dee river, and there is a dok "whereat at ſpring tide a ſhip may lye, and this is "called Port Poole. Half a mile lower is Blaken "head as an armelet of the ground pointing out. At "this is an old manor place longing to the erle of "Oxford, and therein lyeth ſometime ſir Gul. Norreis. "A mile be water lower hard on the ſhore is a little "village called Sanbeho. Leſs than a mile lower is "Crabbo village: a mile lower is Shottewick caſtel "on the very ſhore longing to the king, and thereby "a park. Shottewick townlet is three quarters of a "mile lower, and two miles lower is a road in Dee "called Salthouſe, where again it on the ſhore is a "ſalthouſe cottage. Then is Burton head, whereby "is a village almoſt a mile lower than Salthouſe. "Two miles lower and more is Denwale road, and "again it a farm place called Denwall hall. It "longith to Mr. Smith, and more up into the land "is Denwall village. Two miles and more lower "is Neſton road, and inward a mile into the land is "Neſton village. About three miles lower is a "place called the Red bank; and there half a mile "within the land is a village called Thruſtington; a "mile and more lower is W. Kirkeby, a village hard "on the ſhore; and half a mile lower is Hillebyri "as the very point of Wirrall. All the ſhore of "Wirral upon De ſide is highe bank but not very "hilly ground[n]."

Wirrall has been made a good corn country ſince Mr. Camden's time.

Stanlow. A ſmall cell ſeems to have continued at Stanlow hill. At the diſſolution 1716 it was granted to ſir Robert Cotton[o].

Shotwick. Shotwick caſtle, now in ruins, ſtands in a park formerly belonging to the crown, but now the property of Owen Saluſbury Brereton, eſq. The caſtle was a pentagon of 51 feet on each ſide. The Water Tower, five ſtory high. An exact drawing of it is preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum, MS. N° 2079.

Upon this eſtate in 1668 lived Mary Davies who had an horn grew yearly on each ſide of her head, four inches in length. One of her pictures is in the Britiſh Muſeum. Her grandſon is now tenant to Mr. Brereton.

"Hillebyri is the very point of Wirral, and at High "flode is all environed with water as an iſle, and "then the trajectus is a quarter of a mile over and "four fadome depe of water, and at ebbe a man "may go over the ſande. It is about a mile in cum- "pace, and the grounde is ſandy and hath conies. "There was a celle of monks of Cheſtre, and a pil- "grimage of our lady of Hilbyri[p]." This ſeems to be Hyle ſands of the Maps. At Hyle lake duke Schomberg encamped when he was to reduce Ireland after the Revolution, and here his forces embarked. The place was called Wallaſe Lezer, a large fine ſpot where races were run for many years, but thoſe races are now run at Newmarket, though ſtill called the Wallaſea Stakes.

"From Hilbyri to cumpace about the ſhore of "Wyral on Merſey ſide to Waleſey village on the "very ſhore wher men uſe much to ſalt herring taken "in the ſe by the mouth of Merſey, is 7 or 8 miles[q]."

Further on from Cheſter lies Parkgate, where perſons who do not chuſe to take the long route to Holyhead take ſhipping for Ireland. Here the Dublin yacht is uſually ſtationed.

Delamere foreſt is now a black dreary waſte feeding a few rabbits[r]. It gave title of baron 1661 to the Booths earls of Warrington, now extinct.

"The faire and large foreſt of Dalamare beſide "the wich I remember there is plenty of red deer "and falow[s]."

"There is a place in the foreſt of Delamere called "the VII loos, where may be ſeen VII caſtle dikes. "The people there ſpeke much of them. I think "that they were made by men of war[t]."

Edeſbury hall, which gives name to an antient family and to the hundred in which it and Chamber in the Foreſt ſtand, ſeems to have had the name from Eadeſburgh. Whence Mr. Camden had his account that Finborrow was built by Edelfleda does not appear. Neither the Saxon Chronicle, Matthew of Weſtminſter, nor Henry of Huntingdon, mention it. The ſecond of theſe calls Eadeſbury, Fadeſbury, an obvious error of the pen.

Bunbury is the place where Mr. Horſley conjectured BONIUM might be fixed. See before, p. 429. Dr. Tilſton ſays it is written Bonebury. In Domeſday it is Bolibyrie. Mr. King, p. 104, calls it Boniface bury from St. Boniface, to whom the church was dedicated. "Sir Hugh Calveley made the college of "Bunbiry about Henry V's days[u]: a very faire "collegiate church[x]." The college was founded by ſir Hugh Calverley, knt. about 1386, for a maſter and ſix ſecular chaplains. Its revenue £.18. 2s. 8d. per ann. was purchaſed of the Crown in queen Elizabeth's reign by Mr. Thomas Alderſey of London, merchant taylor, who applied it to the maintenance of a lecturer and freeſchool[y].

In the church is the tomb of the founder, who paſſes for a Cheſhire hero, and had raiſed a fortune as a partizan among the diſbanded companies after the battle of Poitiers, and at that of Auray

[l] Ib. 200.
[m] Ib. 201.
[n] Leſ. V. 54.
[o] Tan. 61.
[p] Leſ. It. V. 54.
[q] Leſ. V. 55.
[r] Pennant, Scotl. 2.
[s] Leſ. VII. 42. V. 81.
[t] Leſ. V. 81.
[u] Leſ. VII. 43.
[x] Leſ. V. 81.
[y] King, 16. Tan. 64.

1364, ſerved under lord Chandos and turned the fortune of the day in which the great Gueſclin was taken. He joined the Black Prince in ſupport of the tyrant Peter the Cruel king of Caſtile, whom he reinſtated on the throne by the great victory of Najara, and on the recall of the prince he was left commander in chief. He is ſaid to have married a queen of Arragon, and afterwards the heireſs of Mottram lord of Mottram. He was living in the reign of Henry IV. The tomb is kept very neat by a benefaction of Dame Mary Calverley of Lee, who in 1705 left the intereſt of 100*l.* to the poor of the pariſh if they attended divine ſervice, and kept the tomb clean. The family ſeat at Calveley is now the Davenports by marriage[z].

"Biſton caſtle buildid or reedified by Ranulf earl "of Ceſtre[a]." "Biſton dwellith at Biſton half a "mile from Biſton[b]."

Beeſton gives name to an antient family, of whom was ſir William Beeſton governor of Jamaica. In the higheſt part of the hill within the walls was a well 91 yards deep. In the patents of Henry III. it is called The Caſtle on the rock[c].

The great inſulated rock of Beeſton compoſed of ſand ſtone is very lofty and precipitous, on three ſides affording the moſt curious bird's-eye proſpect imaginable, on the other ſide it ſlopes down 366 feet to Beeſton brook from the ſummit. The caſtle has been a place of very great ſtrength. The acceſs about midway of the ſlope was defended by a great gateway and a ſtrong wall fortified with round towers, which ran from one edge of the precipice to the other acroſs the ſlope, but never ſurrounded the hill. The area within may be about four or five acres. The caſtle on the ſummit is defended on one ſide by an amazing ditch cut out of the live rock, on the other by an abrupt precipice. Within is a ſquare chapel and a draw-well ſunk through the higher part of the rock to the level of Beeſton brook below. King remembers one well 80 and another 90 yards deep. Though Leland in his poem on the birth of Edward VI. deſcribes this caſtle as ruined, it was garriſoned by the parliament, and ſurpriſed September 13, 1643, by the royaliſts, who defended it ſeventeen weeks, and at laſt on the approach of prince Rupert raiſed the ſiege 1644. It was next year ſurrendered to ſir William Brereton, and ſoon after demoliſhed. Tradition ſays prince Rupert burnt Beeſton hall below for fear it ſhould be garriſoned by the enemy[d]. The ruins belong to ſir Roger Moſtyn, bart.

"Cholmeley dwellith at Cholmeley haul, a fair "houſe, having a litle mere by it, a fair wood, and a "moſſe of fyr wood. It is in the middle of the way "between Malpas and Banbury 3 miles from each[e]."

"Mr. Cholmeley's place a faire building of timbre "and motid about with the water of a poole[f]."

"From Blakemere to Byklem is a moſſe 3 miles "of ſand hard by Cholmeley firſt I ſaw the great "number of firre trees and which the inhabitants "thereby communely digge up for firewood, but "ther I did ſee no fyrre trees growing. Oftentimes "in digging in this moſſe or more for petes or turves "they finde the whole trees of the firs, ſum ſhort and "ſum veri long without twike or bow, lying ſum-"time not a foote, ſumtime 3 or 4 foot depe in the "ground, but how or when thes trees cam down "other by cutting or windfaulle no man there can "tell: the wood of them in burning ſavorith of "reſine[g]."

Of the family and title of Cholmondeley mention has been made before, p. 429. We ſhall only add that ſir Robert Cholmondeley was created by Charles I. viſcount Cholmondeley of Kellis in Ireland; and his great nephew Hugh lord Cholmondeley of Wyche Malbank or Nantwich by king William 1689; viſcount Malpas and earl of Cholmondeley by queen Anne 1706, which titles his nephew George 3d and preſent earl now enjoys.

Ridle. "Egerton one of the younger brethren of Eger-"ton of Egerton dwellith at Ridle within a half "mile of Bukle hill wher the head of Wyver river "is, and neere is a poole of a mile and more in "length, and oute of it iſſuith an arme that ſone "after goith into Wyver and ſtrait moch encreſith "it. This Ridle Hawlle made of a poore hold place "the fayreſt gentleman's houſe of al Cheſterſhire by "ſir William Stondeley helper to king Henry VII. "and he was attainted and Ridle was given to Ralph "Egerton[h]." "Hard by Ridle park a right goodly "houſe of ſtone and timber, builded by ſir William "Standeley that much favoured king Henry VII. "at Boſworth field. King Henry VII. gave this "place afterwards to one of the Egertons. Here "is a mere of pikes, bremes, and tenches half a mile "in bredth and a mile and an half in length countid "far the faireſt mere in Cheſhire[i]."

"Bulcle of Whatcroft two miles from the North-"wich now dwelleth in Wales. William of Bulkle, "cheefe juſtice of Cheſter, was ſetter up of Eiton. "Bulkley of Eiton had ſome land afore he was "juſtice. Theſe two Bulkeles contend either to be "the elder houſe of that name. The name roſe "by a lawyer. Bulkley of Wales ys a man of far "greater lands than the other. Bulkle of Eiton's "ſtock came to a daughter and Leſtewich had her: "but ſir Gul. of Breton bot Eyton[k]."

Bulkeley. Bulkeley was t. John, the lordſhip of Robert de Bulkeley from whom deſcends the preſent viſcount Bulkeley of Caſhel in Ireland, whoſe anceſtors have been chamberlains of North Wales, and conſtables of Beaumarais Caſtle. Here is an eſtate of the Calverleys, and a houſe of the Braſſeys[l].

Baddeley. "Sir Randol Manoring dwelleth at Badele three "miles from Nantwiche by S. W. and has a park "and mere called Badlemere[m]."

Baddeley is now the ſeat of the Mainwarings[n].

Cumbermere. Cumbermere abbey was founded 1133 by Hugh Malbanc lord of Namptwich for Ciſtertians, and endowed with a revenue of above £.225 9*s.* 7*d. per ann.*[o] William Malbanc only confirmed his father Hugh's grants. It belongs now to ſir Robert Saluſbury Cotton, bart. whoſe ſeat is built out of its remains.

"A mile from Cumbremere abbay in time of "mind ſank a peace of a hill having trees on hit, "and after in that part ſprang ſalt water, and the "abbat there began to make ſalt, but the men of [z] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, 16—18.

[a] Lel. VII. 40.
[b] Ib. 43.
[c] Dugd. Bar. I. 747.
[d] Pennant ubi ſup. 9—14.
[e] Lel. VII. 43.
[f] Ib. V. 81.
[g] Ib.
[h] Lel. VII. 43.
[i] Ib. V. 81.
[k] Ib. VII. 43.
[l] King, 58.
[m] Lel. VII. 43.
[n] King, 72.
[o] Tan. 60. ex Mon. Ang. and King, 61.

"the

"the wichis componid with the abbay that there "ſhould be no ſalt made. The pit yet hath ſalt "water, but much filth is fallen into it[p]."

"Nantwich upon Wiver 14 miles be weſt from "Cheſter. The paroche churche is impropriated to "Cumbremer. Sum ſay that Acton is the mother "church. It is no market[q]."

Namptwich. Namptwich was erected into a barony by Hugh earl of Cheſter, who gave it to Hugh Malbanc. From his poſterity the three daughters of his ſon Hugh, it deſcended to the Lovels, Audleys, and Vernons, then to the Wilbrahams, Staffords and Littleburies, and is or was lately in the Cholmondeleys, who were created barons of Wich Malbank alias Namptwich 1689. It has been twice deſtroyed by fire 1438 and 1583, but as often recovered itſelf. The living is but a ſmall vicarage. Here was a priory dependant on Combermere, St. Laurence's hoſpital for lepers[r], and a chapel of St. Anne near the bridge[s]. Here are now two charity ſchools. The pariſh is extenſive. The town has a conſiderable trade and a good market: and the cheeſe made in its neighbourhood is highly eſteemed[t]. The Salinis of Ravennas is placed here as being the chief ſalt work, and known to the Romans.

"The ſalt ſpring at Nantwich yeldith more ſalt "water then the other 3 [at Middlewich]. Where-"fore there be at Nantwich a iii hunderith ſalters. "The pittes be ſo ſet abowte with canales that the "ſalte water is fairly derived to every manner "howſe. And at the Nantwiche very many ca-"nales go over Wyver river for the commodite of "deriving the water to the ſalters' troughs. They "ſethe the ſalt water in furneſſes of lede, and lade "out the ſalt, ſome in caſes of wicker through the "wich the water voydith, and the ſalt remaynith[u]."

Midlewich. "Ther be two ſalt ſprings at Midlewich that ſtandith "as I remember upon Dane river[x]." From hence to Northwich a road like Roman.

"The ſalt ſprings are about 30 miles from the ſea, and generally lie all along the river Weever. There is indeed an appearance of the ſame vein at Middlewich nearer the river Dane; and all lie near brooks and in meadows. The water is intenſely cold at bottom. The pit at Namptwich is ſeven yards deep; but the general depth is not above four. It yields 1lb. of ſalt for 6lb. of brine. The pans in which the ſalt is boiled are ſet on iron bars, and cloſed up on all ſides with clay and bricks. After filling them they put into the brine a mixture of brine and cows or ſheeps blood, two quarts into a pan of 360 quarts. This occaſions a ſcum, which they take off, and continue the fire as quick as poſſible till half the brine be waſted. They then repleniſh it, adding a mixture of whites of eggs and brine. When the ſcum of this is removed, and part of the brine waſted, they throw in a quarter of a pint of ſtrong ale; ſlackening their fire and lading in what is called leach brine, which is ſuch as runs from the ſalt when it is taken up before it hardens. After all this is in they boil gently till a thin cruſt riſes, which is the firſt appearance of the ſalt. This ſinking, the brine gathers into corns at bottom of the pans, and they take it out with their loots or wooden rakes, long ſquare boards with handles, and put it into barrows or pyramidal wicker baſkets, which after the leach brine is drained out they remove into their hothouſe to dry[y]."

The rich brine of the chief pit at Middlewich yields a full half pint of ſalt, yet is ſo thrifty of its brine that the inhabitants are limited to their proportions of it, and ſupplied from pits that afford a weaker liquor[z].

The ſalt works in this county and at Droitwich with the ſmall ones at Weſton c. Stafford are the only places in England where any buſineſs is done. The two firſt were worked by the Romans, and had the common name of Salinæ. From that period to the preſent they have been ſucceſſively uſed. The Saxons divided them between the king, the nobles, and the freemen. Thus at Nantwich was one brine pit, which gave employ to numbers of ſalinæ or works. Eight of them were between the king and earl Edwin, the king having two, the earl one ſhare of the profits. Edwin had alſo a work near his manor of Aghton, out of which was made ſalt ſufficient for the annual conſumption of his houſehold; but if any was ſold, the king had a tax of 2*d.* and the earl of 1*d.* In this place were numbers of works belonging to the people of the neighbourhood, who from Aſcenſion day to Martinmas, might carry away what ſalt they pleaſed, but if they ſold any on the ſpot, or in the county, they paid tax to the king and earl: but, after the feaſt of St. Martin, whoever took the ſalt home with his own, or purchaſed from other works, except from the earl's, was to pay toll. The king and earl farmed out their eight works. They were obliged to give on the Friday of the weeks in which they were worked 16 borlings, of which 15 made one horſeload, or eight buſhels of ſalt. The pans of others were not ſubject to this Friday firm from Aſcenſion day to Martinmas, but were afterwards. The Welſh uſed to ſupply themſelves with ſalt from theſe parts, till Henry III. in his wars with them prevented them. All the works were confined between the river and a certain ditch. All crimes committed within theſe limits might be commuted by a fine of 2*s.* or 30 borlings of ſalt; but murder and theft were puniſhed with death. The idea of ſanctity which the Germans annexed to ſalt ſprings[a] obtained here. On Aſcenſion day the old inhabitants of Nantwich ſang an hymn of thankſgiving for the bleſſing of the brine. A very antient pit called the Old Brine was then annually, till within theſe few years, decked with boughs, flowers, and garlands, and the day celebrated as a feſtival[b].

The town underwent a ſevere ſiege 1643 by lord Biron, who, after his defeat here by ſir Thomas Fairfax, retired to Cheſter. It was the reſidence of Milton's widow, daughter of Mr. Minſhul, of Stoke, in this neighbourhood[c].

"Northwiche is a prati market town but fowle: "the ſalt water pitte is hardby the brinke of Dane "river, the which within a good butt ſhot beneth "runnith into Wyver[d]." "Northwiche upon Wy-"ver 12 miles from Cheſter. It hath but a chapel; "the paroche church is a mile off at Budworth im-"propriate to Norton[e]." Here is a market and a [p] Lel. V. 82. [q] Lel. VII. 40. [r] Tanner, 65.

[s] Hiſt. of Namptwich. Pennant, 32. [t] King, 68. [u] Lel. V. 82.
[x] Ib. [y] Dr. Jackſon in Phil. Tranſ. N° 53, 54.
[a] Ib. Edwin earl of Mercland under the Confeſſor ſo divided the profits of eight ſalt-pits in Warminſtow, that the king had two and the earl a 3d part of all the rents and profits thereof. Domeſd.
[b] Tacit. Ann. XIII. 57. [b] Pennant, Ib. 28. 30. [c] Ib. 33. 35.
[d] Lel. V. 82. [e] Ib. VII. 40.

free grammar ſchool. Large mines of rock ſalt were diſcovered here in the beginning of the preſent century.

On the ſouth ſide of Northwich have been diſcovered immenſe mines of rock ſalt, which they dig and ſend to the ſea ſhore, where it is prepared for uſe. The ſalt quarries here, with their pillars and chryſtal roof, extending ſeveral acres, afford a pleaſing and picturesque appearance. The ſtratum of ſalt lies about 40 yards deep. Above it is a bed of whitiſh clay [f]. The church here has a ſemicircular choir, and the roof of the nave is adorned with many wicker baſkets, ſuch as the ſalt ſettles in [g].

Acton near Namptwich belonged before the Conqueſt to Morcar brother of Edwin laſt earl of Mercia, afterwards to the lords of Nantwich, the Ardens, Wilbrahams, and now by marriage to Wilbraham Tallemache. In the church is the tomb of ſir William Mainwaring 1399, and others of ſir Thomas Wilbraham and lady 1660. The town was governed firſt by a bailiff, now by conſtables. It has other officers, as the rulers of walling, who regulate all matters concerning the ſprings; the ale-taſters, whoſe office related to the aſſize of bread and beer; the heath-keepers, who attended to the right of the beam heath antiently called the creach; the leave-lookers were clerks of the markets; and the fire-lookers took care of the fires and chimnies. The town is large, but conſiſts chiefly of old houſes. It is divided into unequal parts by the Weever here a ſmall ſtream. An act paſſed many years ago for making this river navigable, but was never carried into execution. The Cheſter canal terminates in a handſome broad baſon between this town and Acton; but remains at preſent unfiniſhed and uſeleſs. The chief trade of this place is in ſhoes: the manufactures of gloves, bone lace, and ſtockings are loſt, as is the tanning buſineſs. The ſalt works produce an annual duty of near 5000*l.* from the whole diſtrict, including the works at Lawton and a ſmall one at Droitwich from 18 to 20,000*l.* In the reign of Elizabeth here were 216 ſalt works of ſix leadſwalling each. In 1774 only two works of five large pans of wrought iron [h].

Wibbunbury was the eſtate of the Praers, and of another family which took name from it. Among the ſeats round it was Lee, the reſidence of a family of the ſame name, from which deſcended the Lees earls of Lichfield derived from Benedict a ſon of this houſe, who made a ſettlement at Quarendon, c. Bucks, t. Elizabeth [i]. In the church were buried ſir John Delves and his ſon, beheaded after the battle of Tewksbury 1471. Edward IV. purſued them into that abbey church, but was ſtopped by a prieſt with the hoſt, who made him promiſe them pardon, but they neglecting to eſcape out of ſanctuary were dragged forth ſoon after to immediate execution [k]. Only the ſite of the houſe remains [l].

Doddington belonged originally to a family of its own name, then to the Praers, Breſcies, and Delves'. John Delves was one of the eſquires to James lord Audley at the battle of Poitiers [m], and buried near his patron at Audley, another of the reſidences of the Audleys, a few miles north-eaſt of Dodington. The ſite is now occupied by a farm houſe [n]. The other three eſquires were Dutton, Foulhurſt, and Hawkeſton, all Cheſhire men. The ſtone ſtatues of all five are preſerved at Dodington hall [o]. Sir Thomas Broughton, who inherits the eſtate by an intermarriage of his anceſtor with Delves, is building a magnificent houſe in a better ſituation.

Mr. Pennant notes a peculiarity of the houſe of Harding wood adjoining to this pariſh, that whenever the family go to their pariſh church at Lawton, they paſs out of the province of Canterbury into that of York, through the two counties of Stafford and Cheſter, two dioceſes of Lichfield and Cheſter, two hundreds, and three conſtableries [p].

"Sir Henri Delves dwelleth three miles eaſt from "Nantwiche, and hath a faire houſe [q]."

"Davenport dwellith three miles from Biſton at a "place called Calveley. This Davenport is leſs "land than the reſidew [q]." Calveley.

"Mynſhull dwellith at Mynſhul, five miles from "the Middlewich [r]." Mynſhull.

Minſhull is come by a daughter to the Cholmondleys.

At Rotherton was diſcovered, 1670, a rock of natural ſalt, from which iſſued a vigorous ſharp brine beyond any of the ſprings uſed in the ſalt works [s]. Rotherton.

The family of Crew, from whom was deſcended Nathaniel, late biſhop of Durham, have a handſome manſion houſe built 1615 at Crew. Crew.

"Towards the end of Delamere foreſt I looked to- "ward Valle Royal on the right hand, about which "place be divers fair and large pooles [t]." Vale Royal.

Edward I. when prince, began an abbey on his manor of Dernhale, now Darnhill Grange, for 100 Ciſtercian monks 1266. After his acceſſion to the crown, 1277, he laid the foundations of a ſtately monaſtery not far from hence in a more pleaſant ſituation, which he called Vale Royal, under which name he included the circumjacent tract. The houſe was 53 years building (1277—1330), and coſt £.32,000. Its yearly revenues were £. 519. 19*s.* 8*d.* It was granted at the diſſolution to Thomas Holcroft [u]. His grandſon ſold it to the Holfords, from whom it came by marriage to the Cholmondeleys.

"Daven, alias Dane, riſith in the hundered of "Maxfeld, wher the foreſt is. The hed is in the "very border of Darbyſhire and Maxwell foreſt. "And it is ſaid about the hedde of this river be the "limites of Cheſterſhir, Staffordſhir, and Darbyſhir. "After that Dane cummith a three miles beneth the "hedde, if rain come faſt it ragith on ſtones, though "after it comith from Congleton it runnith on ground "ſomewhat mooriſh [x]." Dane [r].

"Congleton upon Dane, 20 miles from Cheſter "plain eaſt out of Cheſter, and ſix miles out of "Northwike [y], a market town, 10 miles from North- "wich upon the bank between the ſalte ſpringing "pitts and Dane river [z]." Congleton.

Mr. Horſley (p. 415), poſitively contradicts Dr. Gale's aſſertion (p. 50.) that both the diſtance and the road concur to fix CONDATE at Congleton, and thinks it highly probable that the Roman road went from Mancheſter to Cheſter through or near Northwich. Dr. Tilſton found a piece of it in this di- CONDATE.

[f] Stukeley, It. I. 55.
[g] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, 24—26.
[h] See before, vol. I. p. 320. Pennant, Ib. 36, 37.
[i] Pennant, [m] See before, p. 387.
[k] Stowe, Annals, 424.
[l] Ib. [n] Pennant, Ib. 42, 43. [o] Ib. 41. 45.
[p] Phil. Tranſ. N° 56. [q] Lel. VII. 43. [r] Ib.
[s] Lel. VII. 41. [t] Lel. V. 81. [u] Tan. 63.
[x] Lel. VII. 40. [y] Lel. V. 82.
[z] Pennant's Tour in Scotland, 3.

rection called the Street, near Altrincham. Stretford is a place on the Merſey: yet the Dr. chooſes rather to place Condate at Kinderton near Middlewich, where he finds a Roman way called Kindſtreet. This is not removing it far from the ſituation aſſigned it by Talbot, Burton, and Baxter on weaker grounds. Valeſius derives Condate in Gaul from its ſituation between two rivers, a circumſtance ſuiting both with Congleton and Northwich, and perhaps a happier etymology than Baxter's, which is too general; Kynta ty, prima domus, regia, prætorium. Thomas Percival, eſq; found a Roman camp at Kinderton, and three roads leading from it to Cheſter, Cheſterton, and Wroxeter [a], and here Mr. Whitaker fixes Condate [b]. Salmon [c] ſays there are two roads that lead to it from Mancheſter, one by Knutsford, the other nearer to Macclesfield. The firſt ſeems to have been the Roman, becauſe it paſſes by the fortreſs ſouthweſt of Mancheſter, whereas the other never comes near it. At Congleton are no remains to proclaim it a ſtation. Five empty jars containing two gallons each, ſmall at top and bottom, were indeed dug out at the depth of about half a yard from the ſurface, in a cellar of the houſe next the bridge, and probably were wine veſſels. Notwithſtanding the diſtance from Mancheſter and Cheſter, and the firſt ſyllable of the name ſuits with a ſtation here, Salmon and Stukeley remove Condate to Northwich. Congleton has now two churches.

Davenport. "The beſt and firſt houſe of the Davenports is at "Davenport, a great old houſe covered with lead on "the ripe of Daven, three miles above Congleton [d]."

Shenton. "Nedam a knt. dwellith at Shenton, a three "miles from Cumbermere by eaſt. He hath builded "a fair houſe. It is motid [e]."

Rudheath. Rudheath is a ſpacious precinct, with a large common. The privilege of ſanctuary here was ſo groſsly abuſed, that it was found neceſſary to ſuppreſs it long before the Reformation [f]. Here was born ſir John Birkinhead, known by the name of the Loyal Poet, and at the reſtoration maſter of Requeſts. He died 1679.

Kinderton. "Venables baron of Kinderton dwellith at Kin- "dreton by the Midlewich. Venables be auncient "gentlemen [g]." The Venables of Kinderton are the only barons created by the earl of Cheſter that have continued to our time. This barony deſcended in a direct line from Gisbert Venables to Anne daughter and heireſs of Peter Venables, who married 1687 Montague Bertie earl of Abingdon, and died 1715 without iſſue [h]. It now belongs to lord Vernon.

Boſtock. "Boſtok of Boſtok in Henry VIIth's time had a "daughter and heire married to ſir John Savage. "Boſtok was of a very auncientnes in Cheſterſhire "and yn Dancham pariſh [i]."

Brereton. Brereton gives birth to an antient family of its name; of whom ſir William Brereton mentioned by Mr. Camden was juſtice and marſhal of Ireland 1540, created baron Laghlin in that kingdom, which title not being made to deſcend to collaterals is now extinct. He died at Kilkenny, and was buried in St. Canice's church there.

A little above Middlewich the Dan receives the Wheeloc riſing from Mowcop hill, near whoſe north-eaſt bank is Sandbach, a ſmall market town, with a fair ſtone church. In the market-place are two ſquare ſtone croſſes on ſteps, with images and releifs of the paſſion. Near the river were found 1561 three tin cheſts empty [k].

There are two villages of the name of Pever or Peover, Over, and Nether: the former a chapelry to Roſthorn has near it the ſeat of the Mainwarings. Of this family ſir Thomas, created a baronet at the Reſtoration, involved himſelf in a ridiculous controverſy in defence of Amicia daughter of Hugh Cyvelioc 5th earl of Cheſter, whom his anceſtor Ralph Meſnilwarin, Juſtice of Cheſter in the reign of John had married, againſt the imputations of ſir Peter Leyceſter, who, in his Hiſtorical Antiquities of Cheſhire, queſtioned her legitimacy. Twelve pieces were printed on both ſides, and the controverſy ended not till the death of Leyceſter.

"[M]arbyri of [Mar]byri, where [is a] great "pole .... from Northwich. The Winington's "lands 2 c markes [a ye]re [l]."

At Rockſavage was a ſtately brick houſe built in the 16th century by ſir John Savage inſtead of his noble antient manſion at Clifton, which from thence fell to decay, as is now the caſe of its ſucceſſor Rockſavage. This houſe ſtands about two miles from Frodſham bridge, on a fine high hill overlooking the Merſey and the goodly marſhes about it, having an eaſy aſcent from the meads through an extenſive park, and formerly adorned with delectable gardens, &c. King James I. lodged here one night 1617 [m], but this eſtate has been let out to farms, and the noble houſe of this family, which Mr. Camden deſcribes as new built, is now almoſt ruined, and the handſome offices added to it ſince it became the property of the earl of Cholmondeley, converted into a farm houſe.

"Sir Perce of Dutton's chefeſt houſe is in Dutton "a feven miles of Cheſter [n]."

"At Whitley hall, within a quarter of a mile of "Dutton, dwells a gentleman of the name of "Towchet, ſo that I think the lord Audley is one "of the lords of the liberties of Nantwich by the "name of Towchett by the inheritance of Towchets "and not of Audley [o]. There was a place of lord "Audleys in Cheſtreſhire between Cumbremere and "Nantwicke called Newhaule tower. It is now clene "down. Ther be motes and fair water [p]."

The firſt mention of the Tuchets is in Edward IIſt's French wars. Of that family was John, who, t. Richard II. marrying Joan daughter of Nicholas lord Audley of Heleigh, his ſon John, on the death of his great uncle, became lord Audley [q]. His lineal deſcendant George was created by James I. earl of Caſtlehaven in Ireland, which title expired with his great grandſon.

Northweſt of Dutton is Tarven, in whoſe church is an inſcription in memory of John Thomaſine, 36 years maſter of the grammar ſchool, and a moſt exquiſite penman [r], who could write the ſmalleſt hand, and in the ſmalleſt compaſs. Many ſpecimens of his art are ſtill preſerved in the county.

[a] Archæol. I. 62. [b] Hiſt. of Mancheſter, I. p.
[c] P. 652. [d] Lel. VII. 42. [e] Lel. VII. 43.
[f] King, 83. [g] Lel. VII, 43. [h] Epitaph in Collins's Peer. II. 513. [i] Lel. VII. 43.
[k] Mag. Brit. I. 284. [l] Lel. VII, 43. [m] King, 93. [n] Lel. VII. 43.
[o] Lel. VII. 15. [p] Ib. VII. 40. Ib. VII. 41. [q] Dugd. Bar. I. 750. II. 28.
[r] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, 5, 6.

"Sir John Downe alias Dane dwellith at Utkin-
"ton[s]."

Utkinton hall ſtood four miles from Tarvin. The manor with Kingſley and the bailliwic of Delamere foreſt was given by Randal Meſchines earl of Cheſter to Randle de Kingſley, whoſe great grandfather Joan about 1233 conveyed it to the Downs, ſince called Dones, whoſe heirs female, or perſons claiming under them, have ſince held it. The Dones of Flaxyard in this neighbourhood were another conſiderable family conſtantly at variance with the former till united by marriage: but at this time both the manſion houſes are demoliſhed or converted into farm houſes[t]. In the church are many monuments of the Dones, and of the Ardens and Crews, who married two daughters of the Dones; alſo of Sir John Done, knt. hereditary foreſter and keeper of Delamere foreſt, who died 1629, holding in his hand an horn which deſcended to the Crews the owners of the eſtate by marriage, and is now in the poſſeſſion of John Arden, eſq. of Yorkſhire another deſcendant. The Downs bore for their arms A. a bugle horn ſtringed S. Sir John Crew of this family was a curious antiquary [u].

Mr. Camden has given an imperfect account of the Dutton privilege.

Ranulph, laſt earl of Cheſter, happening to advance into Wales with too few attendants, found himſelf on a ſudden ſurprized by Llewellin prince of Wales, with whom he had long been at variance. In this dilemma he retreated to Ruthlan caſtle in Flintſhire, from whence he ſent to Roger or John de Lacy, conſtable of Cheſter, for relief. This happening at the time of Cheſter fair, to which Hugh Lupus, firſt earl of Cheſter, had granted ſpecial protection, Lacy's ſteward [x] Hugh de Dutton haſtily aſſembled all the minſtrels and mob that followed them, and marched at their head toward Ruthlan. The Welſh, ſuppoſing them a body of regular troops, preſently raiſed the ſiege. In memory of this the patronage of this rabble was given to John de Lacy, who granted the ſame to Hugh de Dutton and his heirs, by the name of "Magiſterium omnium Leccatorum [y] & Meretricum totius Ceſtreſhire, ſicut liberius illum magiſterium teneo de Comite; ſalvo jure meo & heredibus meis [z]." In conſequence of this juriſdiction all the minſtrels of that country reſorting to Cheſter, accompanied with many gentlemen of the county, attend the heir of Dutton from his lodging to St. John's church, one of them walking before him in a ſurcoat of his arms depicted on taffeta, the reſt proceeding two and two, playing on their ſeveral inſtruments. After divine ſervice they conduct him back in the ſame manner to his lodging, where a court being held by his ſteward, and all the minſtrels formally called, certain orders and laws are made for the better government of this ſociety, with penalties on thoſe that tranſgreſs [a].

Dutton claimed at the feaſt from the minſtrels 4 lagenas vini & unam lanceam, and a fee of 4*d*. $\frac{1}{2}$, and from every meretrix in Cheſter and Cheſhire officium ſuum exercente 4*d*. [b].

Frodſham caſtle is now ſo completely levelled, and the ſite built upon, that nothing but the name remains. It was burnt down 1654, when there lay dead in it an earl Rivers [c], of the family of the Savages, who had long their chief ſeat here. The firſt of this knightly family that occurs in hiſtory is John, who commanded the earl of Richmond's left wing at the battle of Boſworth, and was afterwards ſlain at the ſiege of Bologne. John, ſon of his great grandſon, was created a baronet 9 James I. and his ſon Thomas, 19 James I. viſcount Colcheſter, and 2 Charles I. earl Rivers after the death of his wife's father Thomas lord Darcie, viſcount Colcheſter; but dying in lord Darcie's life-time without having poſſeſſion of either title, his widow was created counteſs of Rivers 17 Charles II. with precedence to her children as thoſe of an earl. She died 1650 [d], and the title became extinct in her grandſon Thomas 1693. Frodſham.

Not far from Frodſham was Stanlaw, a Ciſtertian abbey, founded by John, conſtable of Cheſter, removed to Whalley, c. Lancaſter [e]. Stanlaw.

"The water of Merſey to the ueri maine ſe de- Merſey [f].
"partith Cheſterſhire and Lancaſtreſhire [f]."

"Stoppord upon Merſey, a ſix miles from Man- Stockport.
"cheſter. The paroche church is in the town. Mr.
"Warine is called there baron of Stoppord, for one "of the Warines, of Cheſterſhire, married one
"Stoppard, baron of Stoppord's daughter and heire
"about Henry IV's days. The ancienter houſe,
"longing to the Warines, was Poynton, where he
"lyeth now, for Stoppord manor place is decayed.
"At Poynton is a parke. Pointon is in the middle "way between Stoppord and Maxwell town, four "miles from eche. It is in Preſtebyri paroche, in "which paroch be divers places of ancient gen"tlemen [g]." Stockport ſtands on the ſouth bank of the Merſey, over which it has a bridge leading into the road to Mancheſter, and blown up, to ſtop the rebels 1745, but ſince rebuilt. In 1766 a new church was erected here. The town has a conſiderable corn-market, and four fairs. Here is ſaid to be a chalybeat ſpring ſtronger than that at Tunbridge. "The prati
"river of Bolyll riſith about Maxwell foreſt, and "goith a good way beneth Crosford bridge into
"Merſey [h]."

"Davenport of Bromehaull, two miles weſt from Bromehall.
"Stoppord. Davenport of Woodford, two miles from Woodford.
"Bromehaull [i].

"Maxwell, hard on the edge under Maxwell foreſt, Macclesfield.
"and yet out of the foreſt, 23 miles north-weſt from
"Cheſter towards Darbyſhire [k]."

Macclesfield gave title of earl to Gerrard, ſo created 21 Charles II. with whoſe ſons Charles and Fitton it became extinct. It was revived 8 George I. in favour of ſir Thomas Parker, of Leke in Staffordſhire, firſt created baron of Macclesfield 2 George I. Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench 1709-10, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain 1720, which office he held ſix years. His ſon George died Preſident of the Royal Society 1764, and is ſucceeded in his title by his ſon Thomas, third and preſent earl. This town is in a very flouriſhing ſtate, has a market and free-

[s] Lel. VII. 42.
[t] Pennant, Ib. p. 6, 7.
[u] Mr. Cole in Archæol. V. 343, 344.
[x] Not ſon in-law, as Dr. Powell, who alſo calls him Ralph. Hiſt. of Wales, 296. Wynne, 257.
[y] Buffeons. They are frequently joined with Meretrices. Du Cange in voc.
[z] The charter was in the hands of viſcount Kilmurrey 1648. Dugd.
[a] Dugd. Bar. I. 101.
[b] Leiceſter, 142. Pennant, ubi ſup. 185.
[c] Pennant's Journey from Cheſter, p. 6.
[d] MS. note of Dugdale in his Bar. II. 445. pen. me.
[e] Tan. 61.
[f] Lel. V. 82.
[g] Lel. VII. 40.
[h] Ib. V. 82.
[i] Ib. VII. 42.
[k] Ib. VII. 40.

ſchool, ſchool, a button manufactory, ſilk mills, and copper and braſs works[l]. Stafford duke of Buckingham, t. R. III. had a manſion here[m].

In a chapel on the ſouth ſide of the parochial chapel, belonging to the Leighs of Lyme, is a braſs plate with this inſcription to two of that family.

" Here lyeth the body of Perkin a Legh,
That for king Richard the death did dye
Betray'd for Righteouſneſs:
And the bones of ſir Peers his ſonne
That with king Henry the Vth * did wonne
At Paris.

* It ſhould be IVth.

" This Perkin ſerved king Edward the 3d, and the Black Prince his ſon, in all their wars in France, and was at the battle of Creſſie, and had Lyme given him for that ſervice. And, after their deaths, ſerved king Richard II. and left him not in his troubles, but was taken with him and beheaded at Cheſter by king Henry IV. And the ſaid ſir Peers his ſon ſerved king Henry V. and was ſlain at the battle of Agincourt."

" In their memory ſir Peter Legh of Lyme, knt. deſcended from them finding the ſaid old verſes written upon a ſtone in this chapel, did reedify this place, A. D. 1626."

On the other ſide of the ſame parochial chapel, in an oratory [n] belonging to earl Rivers is engraved on a braſs plate,

" The pardon for ſaying of v pater noſters and v " aves and a crede is xxvi thouſand yeres and xxvi " dayes of pardon;" and on another, Orate pro animabus Rogeri Legh & Elizabeth uxoris ſuæ, qui quidem Rogerus obiit iiii die Novembris Anno Domini MVCVI. Elizabeth vero obiit v die Octobris Anno Domini MCCCCLXXXIX. quorum animabus propitietur Deus[o].

" The whole foreſt of Maxwell, except it be a " ſmall ſpek, is in Cheſtre[p]."

Henbury. " Henbyri place, two miles plain north from Max- " field, belongs to the Davenports. Here is a great " pool[q]."

" Bouth of Dunham dwellith at Dunham, a three " miles from Knottesford. It hath a faire park, " and is a myle from Altringham a pore thing, where " is a mayre[r]."

Dunham Maſſey. Dunham Maſſey was lately the ſeat of George Booth, ſecond earl of Warrington, who, for his loyalty to king Charles I. was created at the Reſtoration baron Delamere of Dunham Maſſey. By the death of George late earl 1758 the title became extinct, except the baronetage which deſcended to the rev. Dr. George Booth. The eſtate belongs to the earl of Stamford, whoſe mother was only daughter of the laſt earl of Warrington. In the park are barrows. Urns have been found there, and near it are remains of a military way[s].

Birkenhead. Hamo de Maſcy, third baron, founded at the end of the reign of Henry II. or beginning of that of Richard II. a Benedictine priory at Birkenhead in Wirral, valued at £. 90. per annum[t].

Haulton. " Haulton caſtle builded or reedified by Randol " earl of Cheſter. It ſtandeth about the ſide of " Merſey, within a mile of his banke, and within " a mile of Runcorne, now a poore townlet by a ſalt " creke[u]."

Haulton caſtle was probably built by Hugh Lupus. Hugh earl of Cheſter gave the barony of Haulton to his relation Nigel and his heirs to hold by the ſervice of leading the Cheſter army into Wales and alſo remaining there, and for that reaſon further gave him two knights fees in Englefield near Ruthan, and made him conſtable of Cheſter and his marſhal[x]. Henry, conſtable and marſhal of Cheſter and lord of the manor of Haulton, claimed to have within his ſaid manor a caſtle embattled, a priſon, caſtle guard, infangthief, outfangthief, wafe, wreck, ſtrays, view of frank pledge, with their appurtenances. All his tenants and all reſients within his demeſnes and out of the boroughs of Haulton and Congleton to attend his court twice a year, once at Haulton and once at Thelwale; a free park and two deer leaps[y] within his park; free warren in all his lands within the ſaid manors; to have the town of Haulton a free borough and to have free burgeſſes there, and himſelf and them free from all tolls, paſſage, and pontage for all things by them bought and ſold as well in the city of Cheſter as in all other places within the county of Cheſhire; to hold a free court in the borough, and his tenants to plead and be impleaded there only before his own ſteward; view of frank pledge and all treſpaſſes three times in a year, a weekly market on Sundays, and two fairs in every year, one for four days before and four days after Lady day, the other on the eve of St. Catherine and to continue till the Sunday following, a 15 days court either at Haulton or wherever elſe he pleaſed within his demeſnes, aſſize of bread and beer, attachment and diſtreſs for ſelling bad meat, or uſing falſe weights and meaſures, and to have the fines and amercements for the ſame; that his tenants ſhould not be amerced if they were indicted for any ſuch crimes before the juſtices of Cheſter or their ſheriffs, that the bailiff of his court ſhould make out all proceſs by attachment upon diſſeiſins de libero tenemento within his demeſnes without the towns of Haulton and Congleton, and give judgement thereon, and the ſame on ploughing up, incloſing, or obſtructing highways, and ſtallage within all his towns within his ſaid honour, and that none of his tenants or other reſident within the ſame ſhould be called before the juſtices in Eyre[z]. From the poſterity of Nigel it came to the crown, and is a conſiderable member of the dutchy of Lancaſter, having a large juriſdiction round it called Haulton Fee, or the Honour of Halton[a]. In this manor was a cuſtom, that, if in driving beaſts over the common the driver ſuffered them to graze or take but a thiſtle, he ſhould pay an halfpenny per head to the lord of the fee, which was called Thiſtletake[b]. The caſtle was the reſidence of John of Gaunt, and all that remains intire is now a priſon[c].

Leyceſter, King, and Tanner, ſay the monaſtery of Auguſtin canons was founded at Runkhorne by William Fitz Nigell, whoſe ſon William the conſtable removed them t. Stephen to Norton. But Dugdale [l] Pennant's Scotland, 3. [m] Ib.

[n] Q. if the college or chantry of Seculars founded 1508 by biſhop Savage. [o] Gibſon.
[p] Lel. VII. 42. [q] Ib. [r] Ib. [s] Horſley, p. 415. [t] Tan. 62.
[u] Lel. VII. 40. [x] King, 94. [y] Saltatores.
[z] Talbot's Collections ex Chron. Ceſtriæ Cotton. Lib. Veſpaſian D. XVII.
[a] Talbot's Collections in the Cotton Lib. Veſpaſian D. XVII. This account was probably taken in the time of Henry de Lacy la earl of Lincoln of that name and baron of Haulton. To it is ſubjoined a liſt of knights fees held of this barony in this county an Lancaſhire, in which laſt county the lordſhip of Wydneſle belonged to it.
[b] Reg. prior. de Thurgarton. Jacob's Law Dict. [c] Pennant's Voyage to the Hebrides, p. 8.

Bar. I. 35, more properly calls the firſt only Nigel. Thus we get a William Fitz Nigel more than Mr. Camden knew of. The yearly value of this houſe was £.80.[c] What remains of it has been converted into a manſion houſe for the Brookes, of whom Henry was created baronet 14 Charles I.

"Right againſt Lyrpoole, ii miles over Merſey, "was a priory of canons called Northton, now ſup-"preſſid[d]."

"Knottesforde market 18 miles by north eaſt, it "hath but a chapel: the paroche church is Aſpebyri, "a mile of[e].

"Le of Hy le, the auncienteſt of the Les of this "contery, a mile from Knotesford[f].

"Le of Bauth, half a mile from Knutesford, hath "a park[g]."

At Moberley, Patric de Moberley founded about 1026 a priory of black canons, which was of ſhort duration only for his life[h].

At Pulton, Robert, butler to Randolph, ſecond earl of Cheſter, founded 1153 a Ciſtercian abbey, removed to Dieulacres in Stafford 1214[i].

At Barow was a preceptory of knights hoſpitalers, valued at £. 93. 3s. 4d.[k]

Pigs of lead, with inſcriptions ſomewhat ſimilar to theſe at Haulton caſtle, have been found in other parts of the kingdom. See Somerſetſhire, Yorkſhire, and Derbyſhire; which may ſerve to defend Mr. Camden's information againſt Mr. Horſley's ſuſpicions[l]. The latter writer from Oſtorius's march from the Iceni to the Cangi inclines to place theſe laſt people in Derbyſhire[m]. Dr. Muſgrave[n] and Mr. Dodwell agree with Mr. Camden, as alſo Thomas Saville in his letters to him inter Camdeni Epiſt. p. 24, 25.

The compliment paid by Lipſius to our author, and here referred to, is probably that on the paſſage of Tacitus here cited, where Lipſius, propoſing his famous correction of Cæſar's Cenimagni to Iceni, Cangi, adds Capio judicem te, Gul. Camdene, qui Britanniæ tuæ nebulas claro ingenii ſole nuper illuſtraſti.

Ralph Holinſhed and John Speed both Engliſh hiſtorians were natives of this county.

Earls of Cheſter.

The only earl of Cheſter in the Saxon times was Leofric, great-grandfather to Leofric, earl of Mercia, whoſe line ended in Edwin and Morcar ſoon after the Conqueſt. The firſt earl after the Conqueſt was Gherbod, who, ſoon returning to Flanders, the Conqueror gave the title to Hugh ſon of this ſecond Leofric's ſiſter according to ſome pedigrees, but according to the general opinion, of the Conqueror's ſiſter by Richard ſurnamed Goz[o]. Ordericus Vitalis[p] ſays of this earl, that he was not only liberal but profuſe. He did not carry a family but an army with him. He kept no account of receipts or diſburſements, but was perpetually waſting his eſtates: and was much fonder of falconers and huntſmen than of cultivating of the land and of holy men: and by his gluttony he grew ſo exceſſively fat that he could hardly crawl about.

Hugh Lupus, and the five ſucceeding earls were buried in a row at the entrance of the Chapter houſe at Cheſter, on a late repair of which their coffins were diſcovered, and that of Hugh being opened his body was found with the fleſh conſumed, embalmed in gilt leather with boots of the ſame. The ſtone laid over him but now fixed over the door within is exhibited Pl. XIII. fig. 8.

The earldom of Cheſter is uſually joined with the principality of Wales in the patent of creation. Edward ſon of Edward III. was earl of Cheſter before he was prince of Wales, as appears by the patent creating him prince of Wales[q]. Henry IV. created his ſon Henry prince of Wales, duke of Cornwall and earl of Cheſter[r]; but ſince that the earldom of Cheſter is uſually joined with the principality of Wales in the patents, as in thoſe whereby Henry VI.[s] Edward IV.[t] Henry VII. and James I. created their ſons princes of Wales and earls of Cheſter.

[c] Tan. 59.
[d] Lel. VII. 41.
[e] Lel. VII. 40.
[f] VII. 42.
[g] Ib.
[h] Tan. 63.
[i] Tan. 61.
[k] Tan. 61.
[l] P. 316.
[m] P. 35.
[n] in Jul. Vit.
[o] Dugd. Bar. I. 32, 33. King, 130.
[p] V. 522.
[q] Rot. Cart. 17 E. III. n. 27.
[r] Rot. Parl. 31 Henry VI. n. 48.
[s] Cart. 11 E. IV. n. 14 and 15, and Rot. Parl.
[t] Pat. 8 J. I. pt. 9. n. 17.

Rare Plants found in Cheſhire.

Acorus Calamus. Sweet ſmelling Flag or Calamus; in rivers with a muddy bottom.

Aſplenium Scolopendrium. var. Jagged or fingered Hart's-tongue; on Beeſton caſtle walls.

Bidens cernua β. A variety of whole-leaved Water-Hemp-Agrimony; about Torperley, and elſewhere.

Braſſica muralis. Wild Rocket; on the walls of Cheſter.

Comarum paluſtre. Purple Marſh Cinque-foil; in meadows about Bellow hill.

Melampyrum arvenſe. Purple Cow-wheat; on a hill at Horſley-bath near Beeſton caſtle.

Myrica Gale. Sweet Willow, Goule, Gale or Dutch Myrtle; near Whitchurch ſo plentifully that the place where it grows is called Gale moor.

Narciſſus poeticus. Common pale Daffodil or Primroſe-Peerleſs; in ſome cloſes at Bellow hill near Whitchurch.

Oſmunda Regalis. Water Fern, Flowering Fern, or Oſmund Royal; on Gale moor near Whitchurch, plentifully.

Pinguicula vulgaris. Butter-wort or Yorkſhire Sanicle; on Willowmoor common near Whitchurch, plentifully.

Polypodium marginale? Marginal Polypody? This plant is ſaid to grow commonly in this county.

Prunus Ceraſus β. The leaſt Wild Heart Cherry-tree, or Merry-tree; near Stockport, and elſewhere.

Saxifraga autumnalis. Small Yellow Mountain Sengreen, or Autumnal Sengreen; on Beeſton caſtle, and on a high hill in Wirſwall town near Malpas.

——— hirculus. Marſh Saxifrage; on Knutsford moor.

Silene Armeria. Broad-leaved Catchfly; on the banks of the river below Cheſter.

Sorbus Aucuparia. The Wild Aſh, Quicken-tree, or Mountain Aſh; in the mountainous meadows near Bellow hill near Whitchurch.

Tanacetum vulgare. Common Tanſey; in the meadows near Whitchurch.

Vaccinium Oxycoccus. Cranberries, Marſh Whortleberries, Moſs-berries, or Moor-berries; on Gale moor near Whitchurch, and ſeveral other places near Bellow hill.

——— Vitis Idæa. Red Whorts, or Whortleberries; on the moors, common.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE
HUNTINGDON
KIMBOLTON
HUNTINGDON
St Ives
St Neots
Godmanchester
Huntingdon
Kimbolton
Ramsey
Yaxley
Peterborough
Whittlesey
Wisbech
Thrapston
Oundle
Stamford
Grantham
Bedford
Northampton
Leicester
Rutland
Cambridge
Ely
Norfolk
Suffolk
Lincolnshire
Warwickshire
Oxfordshire
Buckinghamshire
Hertfordshire
Essex
Arrow R.
Ouse R.
Nene R.
Great Ouse R.
Alconbury Hill
Brampton
Buckden
Diddington
Offord
Godmanchester
Huntingdon
Hartford
Hemingford
Houghton
Wyton
Ramsey
Upwood
Bury Warboys
Somersham
Chatteris
Yaxley
Farcet
Whittlesey
Peterborough
Thorney
Wisbech
Elton
Oundle
Thrapston
Stamford
Grantham
Bedford
Northampton
Leicester
Rutland
Cambridge
Ely
Norfolk
Suffolk
Lincolnshire
Warwickshire
Oxfordshire
Buckinghamshire
Hertfordshire
Essex

A MAP OF HEREFORDSHIRE FROM THE BEST AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

½ 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

Longitude West from London

7½ 7 6½ 6 5½ 5 4½ 4 3½ 3 2½

IT ſeems tient Ca the natural in its place a have been ſo WALES t it is now of ORDOVICES.
the Severn,
Ptolomy's acc part, and we and Glamorga of the name, ruddy comple
The Spaniſh
Silures in Spa ſiderable (for, brave, warlike alike by fever
When the Ro honour, probity emperor Claudi in a very perpl and ravaging th theſe difficulties ſays he in ſmall was the war ter of the legionar
Criſpinus to ou

as if the captive meaning: the le

[a] Manliu

H E

THIS count almoſt circ eſter and Glouc outhſhire, on t ires, on the nor ntneſs, it is w d well furniſhe that it may diſc ngland for fruit

[a] And therefo

SILURES.

IT ſeems adviſeable, before we ſurvey the reſt of England, to make a little digreſſion to Wales, or antient Cambria, ſtill the reſidence of the Britans. Nor do I look on this as a digreſſion, but as following the natural order of things. For this county lies next to the CORNAVII, and ſeems to demand a deſcription in its place and order: eſpecially as the Britans or Welſh, its inhabitants, enjoy the ſame laws with us, and have been ſo long as it were incorporated into the ſame government.

WALES then, by which name antiently was comprehended the whole country beyond the Severn, though it is now of leſs extent, was formerly inhabited by three nations, the SILURES, the DIMETÆ, and the ORDOVICES. They poſſeſſed not only the 12 counties (as they are called) of Wales, but the two beyond the Severn, Hereford and Monmouth ſhires, now reckoned among the Engliſh counties. The Silures, by Ptolomy's account, inhabited thoſe parts which the Welch in their language called Deheubarth, or the ſouth part, and we at preſent by the modern names of Herefordſhire, Radnorſhire, Brecknockſhire, Monmouthſhire, and Glamorganſhire, within which compaſs are ſome traces of the name of the Silures. As to the etymology of the name, I find none that correſponds with the nature of the people. As to their origin, from their ruddy complexions, curled hair, and ſituation oppoſite to Spain, Tacitus ſuppoſed them originally Iberians. The Spaniſh writer Florianus del Campo affirms it with great poſitiveneſs, taking infinite pains to find the Silures in Spain, and talks much about Soloria and Siloria in Aſturia. This nation, however, was very conſiderable (for, by the accounts of Pliny and Tacitus, they ſeem to have occupied all South Wales), hardy, brave, warlike, impatient of ſlavery, of great intrepidity, which the Romans called ſtubbornneſs, uninfluenced alike by ſeverity and clemency; in no one article of which character have their poſterity degenerated. When the Romans, from a deſire to extend their empire, invaded them, ſuch was their confidence in the honour, probity, and abilities of their king Caratacus, and ſo much were they exaſperated at the ſaying of the emperor Claudius, that they muſt be extirpated as the Sigambri had been before, that they engaged the Romans in a very perplexing war, by intercepting their auxiliary cohorts, routing the legion under Marius[a] Valens, and ravaging the territories of their allies, ſo that P. Oſtorius the proprætor died wearied out and ſpent by theſe difficulties, and Veranius, who commanded under Nero, attacked them in vain. For, where Tacitus[b] ſays he in ſmall excurſions laid waſte the woods (ſylvas), we muſt read with the learned Lipſius Siluras. Nor was the war terminated till the time of Veſpaſian, when Julius Frontinus ſubdued them, and placed garriſons of the legionary troops among them. One of our writers has miſapplied that line of Juvenal[c] upon Criſpinus to our Silures:

magna qui voce ſolebat
Vendere municipes fracta de merce Siluros.

as if the captives of this nation were expoſed to ſale at Rome. But he has totally miſtaken the poet's meaning: the leaſt attention will ſhew he ſpoke of fiſh, not of men.

[a] Manlius. Tac. An. XII. 40. [b] Ann. XIV. 29. [c] Sat IV. 33.

HEREFORDSHIRE.

THIS county, called by the Britons Ereinuc, is almoſt circular, bounded on the eaſt by Worceſter and Glouceſterſhires, on the ſouth by Monmouthſhire, on the weſt by Radnor and Brecknocſhires, on the north by Shropſhire. Beſides its pleaſantneſs, it is well calculated for ſheep and corn, and well furniſhed with all the neceſſaries of life; ſo that it may diſdain to rank ſecond to any county in England for fruitfulneſs[a]. To theſe advantages may be added noble rivers, the Vaga or Wye, the Lug, and the Munnow, which, after gently watering rich meads and flouriſhing fields, unite and fall in one ſtream into the Severn.

Munnow r. Hatterell hills.

The Munnow coming from Hatterell hills (which riſing to a conſiderable height like a chair, defend this county to the ſouth-weſt) firſt makes its way ſouthward among the bottoms of the hills to BLESTIUM, a town whoſe ſituation and diſtance aſſigned it

BLESTIUM.

[a] And therefore ſays that for three W. W. W. wheat, wool, and water, it yieldeth to no ſhire of England. Holland.

Old Town. by Antoninus ſeem to fix it to this river. It was called by the Britans Caſtle-bean or Old Caſtle, and by us Old Town[b], a mean village, but whoſe antiquity is authenticated by this modern name. Near this lies Alterynnis. Alterynnis, ſurrounded by water like a river iſland, the antient ſeat of the antient and knightly family of the Sitſilts or Cecils, whence is deſcended my moſt honoured patron,* endowed with all the accompliſhments of virtue, wiſdom, and rank, ſir[c] William Cecil baron Burghley high treaſurer of England.

From hence the Munow turning eaſt for ſome length divides this county from that of Monmouth, and at Map-harald or Harold-Ewias caſtle receives the Dor. This caſtle of Ewias, as appears from the Conqueror's ſurvey, was "refortified[d] by Alured de "Marleberg." It afterwards belonged to Harald, a nobleman, who bore Arg. an ineſcocheon G. between 3 eſtoiles Sable[e]; from whom it took the name of Harold Ewias, but Sibylla his great grand daughter[f] and coheireſs conveyed it by marriage to the lords Tregoz; from whom it came at length to the lords Grandiſon, originally of Burgundy, of whom elſewhere.

Harold Ewias caſtle. Dor r.

Snothill caſtle. The Dore running from the north by Snothill caſtle (antiently the barony of Robert Chandos, where is dug an excellent ſort of marble) divides the valley called by the Welch from the river Diffrin Dwr, but by the Engliſh very expreſſively The Golden Vale[g], which name it deſerves from its golden, rich and pleaſant plenty. The ſurrounding hills are covered with woods, below which are corn fields, below theſe fair and fruitful meadows, and in the middle glides a clear river, on which Robert lord of Ewias built a monaſtery, which ſerved as the common burying-place of the nobility of this county.

Diffrin Dwr.

Irchenfield. Part of the county eaſt from this valley, now Irchenfeld, is called in the Conqueror's ſurvey Archinfeld, which our hiſtorians tell us was A. D. 715[h], ravaged by fire and ſword by the Danes, who took Camalac the Britiſh biſhop priſoner. In this was Kilpec caſtle, the reſidence of the noble family of Kilpec, who according to ſome were the body guards of the kings of England, which I can eaſily believe. In the reign of Edward I. Robert Wallerond lived here, whoſe nephew[i] Alan Plugenet was made a baron. In this Arcenfeld alſo, according to Domeſday book, certain revenues were aſſigned by antient cuſtom to a preſbyter or two on condition they ſhould go on ambaſſies from the kings of England to Wales, and, to uſe the words of the record[k], "the men of Archenfeld when the army marches "perform by cuſtom avantward, and when it re-"turns rereward."

Kilpec caſtle.

As the Munow waters the lower part of the county ſo does the Vaga or Wye the middle, with a bending courſe, on which on the edge of the county ſtands Clifford caſtle, built by William Fitz Oſborne earl of Hereford, "on his waſte (to uſe the words "of the Conqueror's ſurvey[l]) but held by Radulphus "de Totenie." It is ſuppoſed to have come afterwards to Walter ſon of Richard Puntz[m] the Norman, he being ſurnamed Clifford, and to him the illuſtrious family of the Cliffords in Cumberland refer their origin. In the reign of Edward I. it was held by J. Giffard, who had married the heireſs of Walter Clifford*. The Wye winds away hence to Whitney which gave name to a famous family[n]; and Bradwardin caſtle, which gave birth and name to Thomas Bradwardin archbiſhop of Canterbury, who for his various and abſtruſe learning was called in that age the Profound Doctor; and thence the river comes to Hereford, the capital of the county.

Wye r. Clifford caſtle.

How far Arcenfeld reached I know not, but the ſimilarity between the names of Ereinuc, Arcenfeld, the town of ARICONIUM mentioned hereabouts by Antoninus, and Hareford or Hereford, now the metropolis of the county, have led me to think them all derived from Ariconium. Not that I believe Ariconium and Hereford the ſame place, but as Baſil in Germany took the name of Auguſta Rauracorum, and Baldach in Aſſyria that of Babylon, becauſe they aroſe out of the ruins of thoſe places, ſo our Hariford (as it is commonly pronounced) derived in my opinion its name and exiſtence from the neighbouring Ariconium, which having been ruined as they ſay by an earthquake, now retains no intire form of a city, but only the ſhadow of a name, being called Kencheſter, and ſhewing ſome remains of walls called Kencheſter walls, within which are frequently dug up teſſelated pavements, Britiſh bricks, Roman coins, &c. Hereford, its offspring, which more expreſsly bears its name, is three Italian miles to the eaſt of it, ſtanding among very pleaſant meads and fruitful fields, almoſt ſurrounded by rivers, by one without a name[o] on the north and weſt, and on the ſouth by the Wye, which haſtens hither from Wales. It ſeems firſt to have riſen up in the maturity of the Saxon heptarchy, being built according to ſome by Edward the elder, nor does any mention of it occur in earlier times. The Britans, before it got the name of Hereford, called the place Trefawith from the beech trees, and Henwith from the old road, and the Saxons themſelves called it Fepnlaȝ from the fern. It owes its principal increaſe, if I miſtake not, chiefly to devotion and the martyrdom of Ethelbert king of the Eaſt Angles, who while he ſought in marriage the daughter of Offa king of Mercia, was baſely murdered by Quendreda wife of Offa, who more wanted the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles than an honourable alliance for her daughter. Being afterwards ranked among the martyrs, a church was erected to his honour by Milfrid a petty prince, which was ſoon honoured with the epiſcopal dignity, and advanced to great wealth by the liberality of the Mercian, and afterwards of the Weſt Saxon kings. That theſe laſt were maſters of this city appears from Malmſbury[p], who writes that Athelſtan the Weſt Saxon in this city, brought the petty princes of Wales to pay him (beſides hounds and hawks) a yearly tribute of 20lb. weight of gold and 300lb. of ſilver. This city was as far as I find always in a proſperous ſtate, except that in A.D. 1055

* Inq. 26 Ed. I.

[b] Rather Old Caſtle. Taylor's map.
[c] I take ſir to be improper here, though he was knighted before his barony.
[d] refirmavit. Domeſday, fol. 186.
[e] Arg. a feſs G. between 3 eſtoiles Sable.
[f] Proneptis. The pedigree in Dugdale makes her grand daughter.
[g] The Engliſh ſeem to have miſtaken Dwr the name of the river for D'Or, Gold. Leland is right, It. VIII. 83.
[h] Mr. Camden miſtakes the date. It ſhould be A. D. 915. Biſhop Godwin ſuppoſes this was Cimeliauc or Cameleg ſac biſhop of Landaff, or as Matthew of Weſtminſter ſays of the Eaſt Saxons, among whom he was taken and ranſomed by king Edward the Elder for 40l. Ed. Richardſon, p. 599.
[i] Son of his ſiſter Alice. Dugd. Bar. I. 670. The barony of Plugenet ended with Alan's ſon. Dugd. II. 3.
[k] Fol. 179.
[l] Fol. 183.
[m] Ponce. Dugd.
[n] Of whom Robert de Whitney was ſheriff of this county 1 Richard II.
[o] This ſeems to be that called in Taylor's map Yazor brook.
[p] De geſt. reg. II. p. 27.

Griffin prince of South Wales and Algar an Engliſhman raiſing a rebellion againſt Edward the Confeſſor, routed earl Ralph, plundered the city, deſtroyed the church, and carried off biſhop Leofgar. Harold ſoon ſubdued them, and fortified the city according to Floriacenſis with a broad and high rampart. Hence Malmesbury, in his lives of biſhops[q], ſays, "Here-"ford is no large city, but its ſteep ditches give it "an air of grandeur;" and, according to the Conqueror's ſurvey, it had but "103 men within and "without the walls[r]." The Normans afterwards built on the eaſt ſide of the church on the Wye a large ſtrong caſtle, which ſome aſcribe to earl Milo, and which is now falling to ruin by age. They afterwards incloſed the city with walls. Biſhop Reinelm, in the reign of Henry I. built the preſent beautiful church, and his ſucceſſors enlarged it, adding a neat college and fair prebendal houſes. For, beſides the biſhop, who has under him 302 churches, there are in this church a dean, two archdeacons, a precentor, a chancellor, treaſurer, and 28 prebendaries. In the church I ſaw but few monuments, except thoſe of the biſhops, but I was told there was a mauſoleum for biſhop Thomas Cantelupe, who was of noble deſcent, and canonized for his piety, in the reputation of which he had almoſt outſhone the royal martyr Ethelbert. The longitude of this city is 20° 24″, and its latitude 52° 6″.

Scarce three miles from hence the Wye falls in with the Lug, which, rolling from the mountains of Radnorſhire, paſſes gently through this county from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt. At its entrance it ſees at a great diſtance Brampton-Brian caſtle, held by the noble family hence named Brampton (in which Brian was the moſt uſual ſurname), in a regular ſucceſſion, to the time of Edward I. when it came by the heir female to R[obert] Harley[s]. Nearer the river is Wigmore, Saxon Wiȝinȝa-meȝe, antiently repaired by Edward the elder, and afterwards fortified with a caſtle by William earl of Hereford "in the waſte of a ground which was (according to Domeſday[t]) called Mareſtun," held by Ralph Mortimer, from whom were deſcended the Mortimers earls of March, of whom more in Radnorſhire. Three miles off is another caſtle, called Richard's Caſtle, belonging firſt to the Says, then to the Mortimers, and laſt to the Talbots. By the daughters of J. Talbot, the eſtate was divided between Warin Archdecon and Matthew Gurnay. Nature, which never wantons more than in the wonders of the water, has produced a little ſpring, which they pretend, though frequently emptied, is always full of ſmall bones of fiſhes or frogs, whence it is called Bone Well[u]. Not far off is Croft Caſtle, the eſtate of the famous and very antient and knightly family of the Crofts. Thence the Wye goes to Lemſter, which ſome fancy was called Leonminſter, and the Lion's monaſtery, from a lion ſeen in a dream[x], but by the Britans it is called Lhan-lieni, which ſignifying the church of nuns, and it being certain that Merewalch, king of Mercia, built a church here for nuns, which was afterwards a cell to Reading abbey, it were needleſs to ſearch for any other etymology. Some, indeed, derive it from Linum, Flax, an excellent ſort of which grows here; but its chief glory at preſent is from the wool of ſheep fed in the neighbouring grounds, called Lemſter Ore, which Europe in general prefers to all, except that of Apulia and Tarentum. It produces ſo much wheat and ſuch excellent white bread, that Lemſter bread and Weobley ale are become proverbial. This laſt place is the eſtate of the noble family of D'Eureux. Theſe advantages of Lemſter, and the good market they occaſion, raiſed the envy of Hereford and Worceſter ſo much, that they procured the king's authority to oblige them to change the market day, alleging the thinneſs of their markets by the great reſort to this. Nothing further occurs remarkable about Lemſter, except that William Breoſe, lord of Brechin, in his revolt from the king burnt it.

Webley ſtands more inland, and was the barony of the Verdons, the firſt of whom, Bertram de Verdon, came over to England with the Normans, and his deſcendants by marriage with one of the heireſſes of the Lacyes of Trim in Ireland were ſometime hereditary conſtables of Ireland. Their eſtates paſſed by daughters at length to the Furnivalls, Burgherſhes, Ferrars of Groby, and Crophull, and from the Crophulls, by the Ferrars of Chartley, to the Devereuxes, earls of Eſſex. More weſt, near Webley, are Huntindon, formerly belonging to the Bohuns, earls of Hereford and Eſſex, Kinnerſley to the antient family of De-la-bere, and Erdſley, where long lived the famous and antient family of the Baſkervilles, formerly productive of ſo many famous men and knights, who derive themſelves from a neice of Gunora the famous Norman heroine*, and formerly flouriſhed in this county, and the neighbouring one of Salop, and held, to mention it by the way, "the hamlet of Lanton in chief of the honour of Montgomery by the ſervice of giving the king one barbolt as often as he comes into thoſe parts to hunt in Cornedon chace†."

Webley. Huntingdon. Kinnerſley. Erdſley.

The Lug in its approach to the Wye firſt paſſes by Hampton, where Rowland Lenthall, maſter of the wardrobe to Henry IV. having married one of the coheireſſes of Thomas earl of Arundel, built a beautiful houſe now for ſome time poſſeſſed by the Coningſbies, a famous family in theſe parts. Thence it haſtes by Marden, and Southton, or Sutton, which laſt ſhows the ſmall remains of Offa's palace ſtained by the blood of Ethelbert; the former is remarkable for the tomb of Ethelbert, who lay long unnoticed here before his removal to Hereford. Near the confluence of the Lug and Wye to the eaſt a hill called Marclay hill in the year 1575[y], roſe as it were from ſleep, and for three days moved on its vaſt body with an horrible noiſe, driving every thing before it to an higher ground, to the great aſtoniſhment of the beholders, by that kind of earthquake, I ſuppoſe, which Naturaliſts call Braſmatia. Not far from this, likewiſe to the eaſt, under Malvern hills, by which the eaſt part of the county is here bounded, is Ledbury, a noted town on the river Ledden, which Edwin‡, a powerful Saxon, gave to the church of Hereford, imagining himſelf cured of the palſy by St. Ethelbert's prayers. I need not mention the fortification on the neighbouring hill, ſince there are ſo many in this tract which is a frontier, and was the ſeat of war

Hampton. Marden. Sutton. Marcley hill. Ledbury.

* See Gemiticenſis, book the laſt.

† Trin. Hilarii, 20 Edward III.

‡ Walter Mapes calls him Alvod, and ſays he was ſon of Edric the wild. De nug. curial. II. 2. Giraldus Camb. vit. Ethelb. ap. Lel. It VIII. 88. calls him Edwin.

[q] III. 162. [r] Fol. 179. [s] Pat. 24 E. I. m. 14. [t] Fol. 183. b.

[u] Q. if not ſuch a one in Northamptonſhire. [x] by king Merewald. [y] 1571, Holland.

firſt

first between the Romans and Britans, and afterwards between the Britans and the Saxons.

Holme Lacy. The Wye, now increaſed by the Lug, winds off firſt by Holme Lacy, the reſidence of the antient and famous family of *Scudamore, who owed much of their honour to their marriage with the heireſs of the houſe of Eaias in this county, and with that of Huntercombe, &c. in others. Hence the Wye runs down between Roſs, noted for its iron works, and Wilton, oppoſite to it, a very antient caſtle of the Grey family, whence ſo many heroes of that name derive their origin. This is reported to have been built by Hugh Longchamp. But it appears by records that king John gave Wilton, with its caſtle, to Henry de Longchamp, and it came by marriage to William Fitz Hugh, and not long after, in the time of Edward I. to Reginald Grey. After paſſing a little lower by Goderich caſtle, given by king John[z] to William earl Marſhall, afterwards the principal reſidence of the Talbots, the Wye takes its leave of Herefordſhire, and enters Monmouthſhire.

Roſs. Wilton. Baron Grey of Wilton. Goderich caſtle.

Earls of Hereford. In the decline of the Saxon government this county was governed by the title of an officiary earldom by Ralph ſon of Walter de Medant[a], by Goda ſiſter of the Confeſſor. But the Normans ſtripped him of this honour, and conferred it on William ſon of Osbern de Crepon, or, as the Normans called him Fitz Oſbern, a very near relation[b] of the duke of Normandy. He being killed in the wars in Flanders[c], was ſucceeded by his ſon Roger ſurnamed de Breteuil[d], who died outlawed[e] without lawful iſſue[f]. King Stephen gave to Robert le Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, ſon of Emma[g], heireſs of Breteuil "by hereditary "right (as the original grant runs), the borough of "Hereford, with the caſtle and the whole county of "Herefordſhire:" but to little purpoſe. The empreſs Maud, who claimed the kingdom againſt Stephen, conferred the honour on Milo, ſon of Walter, conſtable of Glouceſter, and made him conſtable of England[h]. This Milo had five ſons Roger, Walter, Henry, William[i], and Mabel, all eminent perſons, who all died ſuddenly, having all, except William, ſucceeded each other without iſſue in their family eſtates. King Henry gave this Roger, among other things, "the Mote of Hereford, with the whole caſtle, and the third penny of the revenue of the pleas of the whole county of Hereford, whereof he made him earl †." On the demiſe of Roger, if we may believe Robert de Monte, the king kept the earldom of Hereford in his own hands. Their eldeſt ſiſter Margaret was married to Humphry de Bohun the third of the name[k], and his deſcendents were conſtables of England, viz. Humphry de Bohun, the 4th; his ſon Henry, to whom king John gave £. 20. out of the 3d penny of the county of Hereford, whereof he made him earl. He married the ſiſter and heireſs of William de Magnaville, earl of Eſſex, and died 4 Henry III.‡[l] Humphry V.[m] his ſon, alſo earl of Eſſex, whoſe ſon Humphry VI. died[n] before his father, leaving Humphry VII.[o] by a daughter and coheireſs of William Breos, lord of Brechin; Humphry VIII. his ſon was ſlain at Burrowbridge[p], leaving by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Edward I. widow of the earl of Holland, a numerous iſſue, viz. John Bohun[q], Humphry IX.[r] both earls of Hereford and Eſſex, and both died iſſueleſs, and William earl of Northampton, who by Elizabeth[s], ſiſter and coheireſs of Giles lord Badleſmeer, had Humphry Bohun X.[t] and laſt of the Bohuns that was earl of Hereford, Eſſex, and Northampton, and conſtable of England. He left two daughters, Eleanor, wife of Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, and Mary married to Henry of Lancaſter, earl of Derby, who was created duke of Hereford, and afterwards crowned king of England. The title of earl of Hereford was afterwards conferred on the Staffords[u] dukes of Buckingham, deſcended of a daughter of Thomas of Woodſtock, who afterwards married William Bouchier, called earl of Ew. In our time Edward VI. created Walter D'Evreux, a deſcendent of the Bohuns by the Bourgchiers, viſcount Hereford, and his ſon's ſon was afterwards created earl of Eſſex by queen Elizabeth.

In this county are 176 pariſhes.

* or Eſcudamore. † Giraldus Cambrenſis It. I. 2.
‡ 2 Par. Chart. 1. Joan. M. Paris. Liber Walden. Lib. Monaſterii Lantony.
[z] Anno 5. Dugd. Bar. I. 691. [a] Maunt. Id. ib. 21. [b] Couſin, Id. ib. 66.
[c] 1070, aſſiſting the earl of Flanders. Holland. For a conſpiracy againſt the Conqueror. H.
[d] de Britolio. Dugd. [e] under ſentence in priſon. Id.
[f] Dugdale ſays he left two ſons, excellent ſoldiers under Henry I. but neglected by him.
[g] Emma, or Illa, was indeed heireſs of Breteuil and daughter of Roger aforementioned, but not mother of Robert le Boſſu, but wife, he being ſon of Elizabeth or Iſabel de Vermandois. Dugd. I. 67. 85. Holland.
[h] She alſo granted to them Conſtabulariam curiæ ſuæ the conſtableſhip of her court, whereupon his poſterity were conſtables of England, as the marſhalſhip was granted at firſt by the name of magiſtratus marij alſiæ curiæ noſtræ. Holland.
[i] Omitted by Dugd. Bar. I. 538. [k] He died 33 Henry II. and was buried at Lantony.
[l] buried at Lantoni. [m] ſurnamed the Good earl of Hereford, who died 3 Edward I. and was buried at Lanthoni.
[n] 1265, buried at Cumbermere abbey. [o] He died 1298. 26 Edward III. and was buried at Walden.
[p] 1321, buried at York. [q] died 1335, buried at Stratford, Eſſex.
[r] died 1361, buried in the Auſtin friars church at London.
[s] third ſiſter.—Holland calls her daughter. [t] died 46 Edward III. buried at Walden.
I have been the more particular in ſpecifying the places of interment of theſe Bohuns, becauſe two monuments in the north wall of the Lady chapel or Library of Hereford cathedral, are aſcribed to a Bohun and his wife, earl and counteſs of Hereford, and the arms of Bohun are ſaid to be painted on her arch, together with Ermine, a bend indented, G. both ſingle. But I could not find any coats there 1770.
[u] on Henry Stafford duke of Buckingham great grandſon of Anne, daughter of Thomas of Woodſtock 1 Richard III. Dugd. Bar. I. 168.

ADDITIONS.

HEREFORDSHIRE is almoſt circular, 31 miles from north to ſouth, and 30 from eaſt to weſt, 108 in circumference. Leland makes the breadth 23 miles, or ſomewhat leſs, and the length about 24 miles[a]. It is divided into eleven hundreds, containing one city, and ſeven market towns. Being a kind of frontier in all the wars between the Engliſh and Welſh it abounds with forts and caſtles, both of earth and ſtone, no leſs than thirty ſix of the former and eight of the latter appearing in Mr. Taylor's map of the county[b]. Its air is ſo remarkably healthy that ſerjeant Hoſkins entertained king James I. in his progreſs here with a morrice dance by ten old men and women, whoſe ages together made above 1000. To its fertility in corn and paſturage celebrated by our author muſt be added its orchards yielding ſuch quantity of cyder as to furniſh London and the reſt of the kingdom with that agreeable liquor the common drink of the natives. The beſt plantations are within a certain diſtance round the capital. Of the ſeveral ſorts of apples grown here the redſtreak is moſt eſteemed[c]. Rough cyder being now more in faſhion has occaſioned a greater demand for that produced in Devonſhire.

Redſtreak that once
Was of the ſylvan kind, unciviliz'd,
Of no regard, till Scudamore's ſkilful hand
Improv'd her, and by courtly diſcipline
Taught her the ſavage nature to forget:
Hence ſtyl'd the Scudamorean plant, whoſe wine
Whoever taſtes, let him with grateful heart
Reſpect that antient loyal houſe:
Let every tree in every garden own
The redſtreak as ſupreme, whoſe pulpous fruit
With gold irradiate and vermillion ſhines.
Philips.

The reader will forgive me if I borrow a few more lines of this elegant poet which give ſo juſt an idea of the fertility of this county.

The meadows here with battening ooze enrich'd
Give ſpirit to the graſs: three cubits high
The jointed herbage ſhoots: the unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with ſtore
Of golden wheat, the ſtrength of human life.
Lo! on auxiliary poles the hops
Aſcending ſpiral rang'd in meet array!
Lo how the arable with barley grain
Stands thick o'erſhadow'd ———
— — — Here to the ſight
Apples of price and plenteous ſheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd[d] occur, and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, ſo rich the ſoil,
So much does fructuous moiſture o'er abound.

About Leominſter they ſow wheat and rye together and call it Munk corn, and with the addition of barley Blend corn; and they make excellent bread of the two mixtures.

The landholders recorded in Domeſday in this county and in Arkenfield in Wales, are the king, the biſhop of Hereford, the churches of Cormeils, Lyra, Gloceſter and St. Guthlac; Nigel the phyſician, Ralph Todeni, Ralph Mortimer, Roger de Laci, Roger de Mucelgros, Robert Gernon[e], Henry de Ferrars, William de Scohies, William Fitz Baderon, William Fitz Norman, Turſtin Fitz Rolf, Albert Lotharienſis, Alured de Merleberg, Alured de Hiſpania, Ausfrid de Cormelies, Durand de Gloceſter, Drogo Fitz Pons, Oſbern Fitz Richard, Gilbert and Ilbert Fitz Turold, Herman de Drevves, Humphry de Buivile, Hugh L'Aſne, Urſo d'Abetot, Grifin, Reyner, Carbonel, the wife of Ralph the chaplain, Stephen, Madoc, Edric, and Elmer.

"The eldeſt houſe of the Eſcuedamours of He-"refordſhire was at a place called Penchirch in the "edge of the dominion or country called Ewis
"Harold. There is yet one of them that hath 100
"marks of land by the year and dwellith at ———.
"Eſcudamor of the court cometh out of a younger "brother[f]." Penchurch. Ewias Harold

"There is a lordſhip and mannour place called "Ewias caſtle where Tregoz dwellid on the ripe of "Wye beneath Hereford. It hath been a notable
"thing[g]."

"The lordſhip ſelf of Ewis Harold wher it is nar-
"roweſt is a mile in breadth and moſt in length two "miles. It hath goode corne, graſſe, and woode[h]."

Harold lord of Ewias was ſon of Ralph earl of Hereford t. Edward the Confeſſor, and founded here A.D. 1100 a little Benedictine priory, united 1358 to Gloceſter[i]. His youngeſt ſon Robert had a larger eſtate than his eldeſt, and founded the Ciſtercian abbey at Dore, valued at £.101. 5s. 2d.[k] One of his deſcendants (alſo named Sibylla) was wife to William de Grandiſon, but her elder ſiſter marrying Roger de la War, their ſon John[l] had the body of this caſtle as principal coheir, though the lordſhip ſeems to have gone to Grandiſon[m]. Ewias caſtle was built by William Fitz Oſborn earl of Hereford t. Conqueſt[n].

"The abbay of Daur founded in king Stephen's Dour,
"dayes by one Robertus Ewias, ſo called becauſe

[a] VII. 149.
[b] Q. if all weſt of Wye was not Marches. The hundreds of Wigmore, Huntington, and Ewias Lacy, were taken from the Marches, when ſeveral new Welſh counties were eſtabliſhed, together with Ewias, Harold, and ſome other places. See Stat. 28 H. VIII.
[c] See Philips's Cyder, p. 9. [d] It is no uncommon ſight here to ſee orchards in cornfields.
[e] There is ſtill a private gentleman in the county of the name of Gernons, probably deſcended from this Gernon.
[f] Lel. VI. 22. [g] Ib. IV. 176.
[h] Lel. VIII. 83. [i] Lel. V. 10. Tan. 173. [k] Tan. 175.
[l] Nicholas. Lel. VIII. 83. [m] Dugd. I. 615. [n] Ib. 67.

" that he was lorde of part of Ewias. The fame goith " that king Harold had a baſtard named Harald, and " of this Harold part of Ewias was named. Ewis " Harold. This baſtard had iſſue Robert founder of " Dour abbey; and Robert had iſſue Robert. The " ſecond Robert had one daughter called Sibille " Ewias married to ſir Robert Tregoz a Norman. " Robert Tregoz had iſſue John Tregoz. This John " Tregos married William lord Cantelupe's daughter " caulyd Julia, ſiſter to Thomas Cantelupe biſhop of " Hereford, chancellor to Henry III. John Tregos " had by Julia two daughters, Clarence married to " John lord Delawar, and Sibille married to Guliam " de Grandeſono. The fame is that the caſtle of Ma- " pherald was buildid of Harold afore he was king, " and when he overcame the Walſchemen Harold " gave this caſtle to his baſtard. Great part of " Mapherald caſtle yet ſtandith and a chapel of St. " Nicholas in it. There was ſumtime a park by " the caſtle. The caſtle ſtandith on a mean hill " and on the right banke of Dules broke hard in " the bottom by it. Ther is a village by the caſtle " called Ewis Haralde, in the which was a priory or " cell of blake monkes tranſlated from Duleſſe village " a mile and upper on the brooke. Dules village " longid to Harald. Filius Haraldi founded this at " Dules. Robert Tregoz tranſlated it from Dules " to Mapharald. It was a celle to Gloceſter. Tre- " goz and Graunſon were the laſt that were men of " any great eſtimation that dwelt in Mapharald. " Johan Beauchamp lady of Bergavenny bought of " Delawar and Graunſon Mapherault caſtle[o]." " There was at Dour afore the edification of the " maner called Blak Berats halls[p]."

" Dowr in Ewis land a great houſe of White " monkes ſuppreſſid, and thereby runnith a brook " called Worme[q]." In this abbey were buried the founder and ſeveral of his family, William Grandiſon and wife, the Plukenets, and Caducan biſhop of Bangor, afterwards monk here. It is ſix miles ſouth from Hereford, 10 weſt north-weſt from Monmouth, and nine from Abergavenny[r]. Leland ſays it is in the dioceſe but not in the county of Hereford[s]. He ſhould have ſaid the direct contrary, which is the fact.

Vowchurch. At Vowchurch, north of Door, is a ſquare camp.

Wye r. " Wye river goith through al Herefordſhire by " Bradwardine caſtle to Hereford eight miles to " Roſſe. In it be Umbres, otherwiſe Graylings[t], " called in Welſh Caryin." It alſo abounds with ſalmon.

The fiſh in the Wye called a grayling reſembles the dace in ſhape and the perch in taſte, and bites at a fly as greedily as a trout or ſalmon. The ſalmon get up the ſtream in ſpawning time as near to the head as they can, but are by that time ſo thin and out of ſeaſon that they are ſold ſometimes in Radnorſhire for 3*d.* a pound, when at the river's mouth they will make much more to carry to London[u].

The little ſtreams of this county produce great quantities of trout, but they are not red as in other counties.

Leſſer rivers are the Frome, Ledden, Wadel, Arrow, Doir.

The rivers Wye and Lug were made navigable by two acts of parliament 14 Charles II. and 7 William III. But the navigation of Lug has been abandoned, and Wye reſtored to its natural ſtate, in which it is of great uſe to the commerce of the county.

Alterinnis came to the Cecils by the marriage of Alt. Robert Sitſilt about 1091 with a lady of this county.

At Grendon, in Llanſelle, is a ſquare camp.

" The valley where Dowr runnith between two " hills is callid Diffrine dor, i. e. aurea vallis[x], but I Diffr. " think rather a Duro fl."

" The broke of Dowr runnith by the abbey of Dow. " Dowr, and there it breketh a little above the mo- " naſtery into two arms, whereof the leſſe arme ren- " nethe thoroughe the monaſtery. The bigger arme " levith the abbey a bow ſhot of on the right hand or " bank. The confluence is again hard byneth the " abbay. The place where the confluence of Dowr " and Monow is is 8 good miles from Monemuth " town. Dowr riſith a litle above Dorſton a litle " village about a 6 mile from Dowr abbey W.N.W. " ripa dextra. Dowr 2 miles byneth Dowr abbay " enterith into Monow by the left ripe. There is a " caſtle a mile and more beneth Dorſton upon the " right ripe of Dowr. It is called Snothill, and there Snod " is a park wallyd, and a caſtle in it on an hill called " Snowthill, and thereby is under the caſtle a quarry " of marble. This caſtle is ſomewhat in ruine. Ther " is a fre chapel. The caſtle longed to Chandos. " There was dyvers of the Chandos in the grey and " blacke friers at Hereford[y]."

The firſt mention of Snodhill or Snodhull caſtle is in the reign of Henry III. 30 Edward I. it belonged to Robert lord Chandos, who was 4th in deſcent from one of both his names who came in with the Conqueror[z]. Richard Neville earl of Warwick t. Henry VI. held it in right of his wife Anne, who after his death at Barnet field ſettled it on king Henry VII. Queen Elizabeth a. r. 5. granted it to ſir Robert Dudley knight of the garter[a].

At Dorſton, adjoining to the north, was another caſtle. Dor.

At Winfreton one Walter a canon regular of Wi. Wormeley priory built in an iſland an hermitage and chapel dedicated to St. Kendred, to which Roger Mortimer lord of the place was a benefactor 1304, 32 Edward I. as was Walter de Mucegros of an antient family in this county, now extinct. It was in Mr. Blount's time the eſtate of ſir John Holman, knt. and bart. who had an antient manor-houſe. The ſite of the chapel is called the Chapel cloſe: the foundations were dug up before 1675, and only a yew tree remaining, and the place ſurrounded by the Wye in floods.

The deſcendants of Ponce mentioned in Domeſday ſeem to have taken the name of Clifford from Clifford here mentioned, where Fitz Oſborne earl of Hereford built a caſtle, and Simon grandſon of Ponce a Cluniac priory t. Henry I. valued at £. 57. 7*s.* 4*d.* per annum[b]. His brother Walter's daughter was the fair Roſamund miſtreſs to Henry II. This Walter's grandaughter Maud married for her ſecond huſband ſir John Giffard of Brimsfield t. Henry III. from whom deſcended the proprietor of that name mentioned by Mr. Camden.

" Huntingdon caſtle longid to the duke of Bo- " kingham[c]." It ſtands on the edge of Radnorſhire, and gives name to an hundred.

" Herchinfeld is a great lordſhip longing to the [o] Lel. VIII. 84. Compare VII. 151. [p] Ib. VIII. 83. [q] Lel. V. 10. [r] Lel. VIII. 83.

[s] Lel. V. 10. [t] Lel. Ib. [u] Salmon's New Survey, p. 703. [x] a fertilitate. Lel. VIII. 83.
[y] Lel. VIII. 84. [z] Dugd. I. 502. [a] Blount's MS.
[b] Tan. 174. [c] Lel. V. 3.

" erle of Shrewſbiry, and lieth betwixt Monemuth " and Herford about 2 miles from eche of them. " On the one ſide alluitur Vaga flu. Erchenfeld is " very full of encloſures and of corne and woode. " Gentlemen called Minos [Myners] be great poſ- " ſeſſors in it [d]."

" The king has in Arcenfelde 100 men minus " four, who hold 73 carucæ with their men, and pay " for cuſtom 41 pints of honey, and 20*s.* in lieu of " the ſheep which they uſed to furniſh, and 10*s.* " ſmoke money [e], and no other toll or cuſtom ex- " cept ſerving in the king's army if required. If a " freeman dies there, the king has his horſe and arms: " and if a villan one ox. King Griffin and Blein ra- " vaged this tract in the Confeſſor's reign, and there- " fore the ſtate of it at that time cannot be aſcer- " tained [f]."

Thoſe 96 men here ſpoken of Mr. Blount reckoned to be liberi homines, yet ſuch as held in gavelkind; and the 73 ploughs with their men he looked upon as their villani; and that both held all their lands in this territory in gavelkind, which are ſo continued to this day. They were free from payments and cuſtoms antiently impoſed upon the reſt of the nation, becauſe as a ſpecial remark it is ſaid nec dant geldam aut aliam conſuetudinem unleſs it be to march in the king's army when they are commanded, yet paying (as the reſt of Wales doth) their talu-fwch and talu-furn, this laſt being the furnagium above-mentioned, a payment for fire, and elſewhere called ſmoak-ſilver, which is ſtill paid to the lords of manors in Wales, and in ſome parts of England to the miniſter of the pariſh. They had the chief honour in the army given them, they led the van to fight, and brought up the rear in its retreat. They have within their circuits a liberty to arreſt for any ſum whatſoever, and whoever purchaſes lands there may bequeath them to whom he pleaſes as it was adjudged inter Martinſtow and Gloditha 20 Edward I. The wife here hath the moiety of her huſband's lands for her dower; nor is here any forfeiture of lands for felony; beſides the king's writ runs not here, as it was adjudged in the ſame king Edward's time and thus recorded: " Homines " hundredi de Irchenfeld a tempore quo non extat " memoria placitaverunt et placita ſua habuerunt de " omnibus placitis quæ ad coronam pertinent ſive de " appelis ſive de tranſgreſſionibus contra pacem " regis ſolummodo coram vicecomite Hereford, et " non coram aliquibus aliis juſticiariis." This was pleaded in bar to an appeal made in derogation of the privilege of Irchenfeld before the juſtices itinerant, but the judgment was " Ideo appellum remit- " titur in hundredo prædicto." In this record it is called Hundredum, but in ſeveral other pleadings Libertas de Irchenfeld. And in caſe where any of the inhabitants were impleaded out of the liberty the Ballivus libertatis de Irchenfeld came and claimed thoſe immunities, which always were allowed. They have alſo a formal way of judicature of their own much after the Britiſh faſhion: the ſteward with his officers belonging to the court being ſeated, there are certain chiefs among them who hold their lands of the lord by ſuit and doom in the court of this his liberty, and therefore called Doomſmen, that is men of judgment, or ſuch who are to judge of matters in controverſy. Accordingly, in the Quo Warranto roll of Irchenfeld 20 Edward I. it is recorded that " Jurati hundredorum de Irchenfeld, Webbeter, et " Greytre dicunt quod Botholin qui tenuit villam de " Comboglin ſolebat facere ſectam ad hundred pre- " dict. et eſſe unus doomſman de eodem hundredo, " &c." And whereas the king had three churches within this liberty, the prieſts of thoſe churches were bound to carry the king's meſſages into Wales, and each of them to ſay two maſſes every week for the king as appears by Domeſday book. Beſides the learned author before cited affirms he has ſeen a record wherein theſe inhabitants of Irchenfeld are ſaid to be left as it were to their own liberty, and to be extra comitatum, not bound up to any ſtrictneſs by the country laws. Laſtly, the tenure whereby they hold their lands is gavelkind, which is a partition among all female children, with this difference only to the eldeſt ſon, that certain principals (as they call them) paſs to him as heir-looms, and are not ſubject to partition, ſuch are the beſt beaſt, the beſt bed and furniture, the beſt table, &c. which tenure and thoſe other enumerated cuſtoms they do for the moſt part ſtill retain as derived to them from great antiquity even before the Norman Conqueſt, for they are recorded to have been Conſuetudines Walenſium tempore regis Edwardi Confeſſoris.

Theſe cuſtoms were as follow. If any ſtole from the Welſh a man or woman, horſe, ox, or cow, he was on conviction to reſtore the thing ſtolen, and forfeit 20*s.* but for a ſheep or bundle of manipuli [g] 2*s.* Whoever killed one of the king's men and fled [h], was to forfeit to the king 20*s.* for the murder [i], and 100*s.* forfeit: if the man belonged to a thane the forfeit to the man's maſter was to be 10*s.* If one Welſhman killed another, the relations of the deceaſed were to meet and plunder the goods of the murderer and his relations, and burn their houſes till the body was buried about noon of the following day. The king was to have his third of the booty, and all the reſt was to remain to them. Whoever was charged with firing a houſe, and could not clear himſelf by 40 compurgators, was to forfeit 20*s.* to the king. Whoever was convicted of concealing one pint of honey in the cuſtom, was to forfeit five pints for one, if his lands yielded as much. If the ſheriff called them to the ſhiremot, ſix or ſeven of the beſt were to go with him, and whoever refuſed to go on ſummons was to forfeit 2*s.* or an ox to the king, et qui de hundret remanet was to pay as much; the like fine for diſobeying the ſheriff's precept to go with him into Wales, for if the ſheriff did not go no one elſe need [k].

" Inter preſentationes hundredi de Wormelow. " Juratores preſentant quod vicecomites capere fa- " ciunt homines de hundredo predicto per indicta- " menta et ducere eos ad caſtrum Herefordie, et te- " nere eos donec fluem fecerunt contra libertatem " iſtius hundredi." Thus it was preſented, that contrary to their liberty their men were by the chiefs carried to the caſtle of Hereford, when as they had and ſtill have a priſon and a gateHouſe of their own for puniſhment of their offenders at Goodrich caſtle which is as the Caput Baroniæ or Libertatis [l]. So Leland; " They carry their priſoners to Caſtel " Goderyce ſumwhat out of Erchynfyld, but longing " to the erle of Shrewſbyri." This region or liberty [d] Lel. V. 9. [e] pro fumagio. [f] Domeſd. fol. 181.

[g] faſciculus manipulorum. Q. bundle of clothes: manipulus was a ſacerdotal garment or ſudarium worn on the prieſt's left arm. Du Cange.
[h] facit beinfaram. [i] de ſolutione hominis. [k] Domeſd. f. 170. [l] Blount.

of

of Urchenfeld continued in the crown till Edward III's time, when that king in the 20th year of his reign, granted to Richard Talbot and Elizabeth his wife and their heirs in exchange for the manor of Hertingfordbury in the county of Hertford, the land and hundred of Irchenfeld and the manor of Wormlow, and the homage and ſervices of Reynold Grey for the manor of Wilton and of Thomas Ganworth for the manor of Kinger. In queen Elizabeth's time George Talbot earl of Shrewſbury had licence to alien the caſtle of Goodrich, the manor of Urchenfeld, Goodrich, Flanford, and Eccleſwall, and the hundred of Wormelow with their appurtenances, with the advowſons of the churches there to Henry Cavendiſh and Richard Croke and to the heirs of the ſaid Henry.

From the mention of Penyard park, Wormlow manor, and Irchenfield hundred, among the poſſeſſions of the Talbots, one would ſuppoſe the preſent hundred of Wormlow was antiently called Irchenfield which extended to part of Greytrey, and perhaps comprehended Webtree hundred, being probably the diſtrict of Ariconium. The deanery of Irchenfield is the whole hundred of Wormlow and one pariſh in Webtree. The hundred in which this Roman town ſtands is called Grimſworth, and the next to it Stretford, in the middle of which is a place called Grimſditch; all which names are ſo many remains of Roman antiquity.

Arcenfeld may have given name to ARICONIUM as its capital under the Romans, which afterwards loſing its firſt ſyllable aſſumed the preſent name of Kencheſter. From the ſame ſource we may derive Kenchurch and Kinderchurch in the ſame diſtrict.

Pibanus king of Urgin, now Urchenfelde, is called grandfather of St. Dubritius archbiſhop of Caerleon, and of Gorbodius king of the ſame place after him [l].

Goodrich. The firſt of the Talbots I find at Goodrich caſtle was Richard t. Edward III. who 1347 founded at Flansford. Flansford near adjoining a ſmall priory of black canons, valued at £. 14. 9s. 8d. [m], and the laſt Gilbert Talbot t. Henry V. elder brother to John firſt earl of Shrewſbury [n]. It came afterwards to the Greys of Wilton, of which family Henry was created duke, marquis, and earl of Kent, earl of Harold, viſcount Goodrich, &c. His eldeſt daughter Amabel married John Campbell lord Glenorchy, afterwards earl of Braidalbane, and their only daughter Jemima married Philip earl of Hardwicke. Goodrich caſtle is almoſt ſurrounded by the Wye, which here makes one of its boldeſt ſweeps, forming a noble bay and moſt picturesque view [o].

Great and Little Doward. In Whitchurch pariſh below Goodrich is a hill with entrenchments called Great Doward and King Arthur's hall, and on an oppoſite hill called Little Doward a ſquare camp; both overhanging the river Wye. In digging thereabouts for lime ſtone and iron ore broad arrow heads have been found, and in a place which ſeemed to be arched over an almoſt intire human ſkeleton, whoſe joints were pretended to be twice the length of the preſent race.

Symond's gate. On a bend of the Wye, where it forms the horſeſhoe on which Whitchurch ſtands, is another ſquare camp called Symond's gate.

"The caſtle of Kilpek by Herchenfeld belonging K
"to the erle of Ormonde [p]." "Sir Alan Plokenet
"lord of Kilpec caſtle [q]." "Walerane lord of Kil-
"pek [had] daughters, and Kilpek married one of "the Waleranes heires, and had the caſtle [r]."
"The caſtle of Kilpek 3 miles bynethe the hede of "Worme banke ſiniſtra. No notable thing on
"Worme beſide Kilpek [s]." "Kilpek caſtle 5 miles
"from Hereford by ſouth-weſt very nigh Worme
"brok: Sum ruines of the walls yet ſtand. Ther
"was a priory of blak monks ſuppreſſed in Thomas
"Spofford biſhop of Hereford's time, and clerly
"united to Gloceſter. The priory ſtood from the "caſtle a quarter of a mile [t]."

"Bradwardine caſtel of ſir Richard Vehan's [u]." B
Archbiſhop Bradwardine is ſaid to have been born at Hatfield in Suſſex [x]. He was elected archbiſhop of Canterbury 1349, and died 40 days after his conſecration the ſame year [y].

In the reign of Edward I. John de Frene held half a M knight's fee in the manor of Mochas as appears by a record in the exchequer [z]. It ſeems to be the Moches ſaid in Domeſday to be part of the poſſeſſions of the church of St. Guthlac at Hereford [a].

Roger de Mortimer, ſon of Ralph, granted to John his chamberlain certain lands here, with common of paſture for 12 beaſts, and 30 hogs, free of puronage in all his woods and foreſts, except in Gatehithe and Boningwode, paying yearly a pair of gloves of one penny price at Michaelmas. The church is ſubject to Wigmore, part of whoſe yard walls the inhabitants are bound to repair [b].

The church of St. Wenard's in Wormley hundred S is dedicated to a Britiſh ſaint of that name. In the chancel north window was S. Wenardus heremita under the figure of an old man holding a book in one hand and an ax in the other. In the eaſt window was the Virgin and child, and the arms of Baſkervyle, Myners and Pye. In Minors' chapel St. Michael and the dragon, and under them ..... uxoris ejus filiæ Wilielmi Myll militis, qui hanc feneſtram vitriari fecerunt.

In another window under a crucifix, &c.

Orate pro bono ſtatu Ricardi Mennoriis arm. et ..... filiæ Jacobi Baſkervyle militis & pro anima Johannæ uxoris prædicti Ricardi filiæ Willi Ap Thomas arm. fundatorum iſtius capellæ, anno domini MCCCCCXXI.

In a third over a man praying in modern characters:

Gobethe onye etto Gobethe
Ba callon a durrey etto Gobethe.

i. e.

Let us hope, ſtill let us hope,
Though the heart break ſtill let us hope.

In others the arms of Devereux, Baſkervyle, and Minors, and ſeveral of the Minors are here interred under flat ſtones. In another pane of the ſame window Heb dym a diggon, i. e. having nothing yet enough.

Triago was till within theſe few years the ſeat of the antient family of the Minors who came in with the Conqueror. Crompton Minors was lord 1675 [c].

[l] Blount's MS. [m] Tan. 179. [n] Dugd. Bar. I. 324. 326. [o] Gilpin. 17. 19.
[p] Lel. V. 9. [q] Ib VIII. 84. [r] Ib.
[s] Ib. 83. [t] Ib. 87. Tan. 175. [u] Lel. V. 10.
[x] See his own book de cauſa Dei, printed at Oxford in the beginning of the 14th century. See before.
[y] Godwin, p. 112. Tanner Bib. Brit. [z] Rot. Recept. denar. [a] Fol. 182. b.
[b] Blount's MS. [c] Blount.

Lynton belonged antiently to the Talbots, and probably before they were poſſeſſed of Eccleſwal, Credenhul, or Goodrich caſtle. The firſt Gilbert Talbot wrote himſelf lord of Lynton 12 Henry II. before which time that king granted to Richard Talbot, father of Gilbert, the manſion of Lynton, with free warren, &c. and the land of Coſton. Teſte Hilario epo Ciceſtriæ [c]. Philip and Mary granted the advowſon to Humphry Coningſby, eſq; [d]

Penyard caſtle, manor, and park, belonged to the noble family of Talbot ſo early as 10 Richard II. [e] Guillim ſays that one Spence bears Az. 3 Penyard pence proper, and that they are named from the place where they were firſt coined, which is ſuppoſed to be this caſtle [f]. In Penyard chace is a ſquare camp.

Madley has a large handſome church, with a charnel houſe under the chancel. The windows ſhewed 1675 conſiderable remains of curious painting. In a north window was the figure of St. Ethelbert holding a church in his hand, and the queen ſtanding by him with the arms of England. In another a croſs, and the figure of a woman ſubſcribed, Sancta Milburga priez pur ——— et pur les almes de toutz chreſtiens. In Chelſton chapel belonging to the village of that name, were painted the kings of Iſrael and the genealogy of Chriſt. In St. Mary's chapel Paly O. and Az. on a feſs G. two mullets, A. probably the arms of the founder. A houſe near the church yard called St. Mary's houſe was the habitation of the chantry prieſt. Tradition ſays the very tuneable ring of bells were brought hither at the diſſolution from Dore abbey [g].

"Kencheſter ſtandith a 3 mile or more above He-"reford upward on the ſame ſide of the river that "Hereford doth, yet is yt almoſt a mile from the "ripe of Wye. This towne is far more auncient "than Hereford, and was celebrated yn the Romans "time, as apperith by many thinges, and eſpecially "by antique money of the Cæſars very often found "within the town, and in ploughing about, the which "the people there calleth Duarfes money. The cum-"pace of Kencheſter hath been by eſtimation as "much as Hereford, excepting the caſtle; the "which at Hereford is very ſpacious. Pieces of "the walls and turrets yet appear prope fundamenta, "and more ſhould have appeared if the people of "Herford town and other thereabout had not in "tyme paſt pulled down much and picked out of "the beſt for their buildings. Of late one M. Brain-"ton building a place at Stretton a mile from Ken-"cheſter did fetch much tayled [hewn] ſtone there "toward his buildings. They told me there that "one M. Lingham is owner both of Kencheſter and "Sutton. By likelihood men of old time went from "Kencheſter to Hay, and ſo to Breknok and Cair-"mardin. The place wher the town was is all over-"grown with brambles, hazles, and like ſhrubs. Ne-"vertheleſs here and there yet appear ruins of build-"ings, of the which the fooliſh people caull on "[one] the king of Feyres Chayre. There hath "been found noſtra memoria lateres Britannici, & ex "eiſdem canales, aquæ ductus, teſſelata pavimenta, "fragmentum catenulæ aureæ, calcar ex argento, by-"ſide other ſtrawnge things [h]." "At Kencheſter was "a palays of Offa, as ſum ſay. The ruines yet re-"main, and vaults alſo. Here hath bene and is found "a foſſoribus & aratoribus Romayne money, teſſelata "pavimenta, a lytle croſſe of gold to were abowt "ones neck, and ther they call them Dwery or Dwer-"fich halfpens or money. Sir John Lyngain was "owner of the ground after now his heir [i]."

The third ſyllable of Ari*con*ium ſeems to remain in the preſent name, as moſt of our Cheſters are coupled with part of the antient name of the ſtations.

ARICONIUM ſtands on a little brook called the Ine, which thence incompaſſing the walls of Hereford falls into the Wye. Two great Roman ways here croſs each other; one called the Port way comes from BULLÆUM, now Buelt in Brecknockſhire, and paſſing eaſtward by Kencheſter through Stretton, to which it gives name, over the river Lug to Stretton Grantham upon the Frome goes to Worceſter: the other road comes from the ſouth and Abergavenny [Gobannium] by Old Town [Bleſium], ſo by Dowr acroſs the golden vale and Archenfield to the river Wye, where is a Roman camp for ſecurity and a bridge for convenience of the paſſage. Thence it goes to Kencheſter, ſo north-ward by Stretford. The form of the ſtation is an irregular hexagon: the ſouth-weſt and ſouth ſides being the boldeſt, the preſent road under the former ſeeming to have been a ditch. Mr. Gale ſays the ſite is oval of 50 or 60 acres with four gates or openings, two on the weſt, two on the north ſide [k]. The walls may be traced all round the city though overgrown with hedges and timber trees. The ground of the city is higher than the circumjacent country. There appears no ſign of a foſs or ditch round it. The ſite of the place is a gentle eminence of a ſquariſh form, the earth black and rich, overgrown with brambles and oaks, full of ſtones, foundations, and cavities, where many coins have been found [l]. Nothing remains of its ſplendor except not far from the eaſt end a piece of what was probably a temple, with a nich, which is five feet high and three broad within, built of Roman brick, rough ſtones, and indiſſoluble mortar, and called the Chair. Foundations and holes as of vaults are ſcattered round it. There are many large foundations near it. In 1669 was found here a great vault with a teſſelated pavement and a ſtone floor. About 50 years ago a very fine Moſaic floor was found entire, but ſoon torn to pieces by the ignorant vulgar. Dr. Stukeley took up ſome remaining ſtones of different colours and ſeveral bits of fine red pottery. Mr. Aubrey in his MS. note ſays, in 1670 old Roman buildings of brick were diſcovered underground on which oaks grew. The bricks are of two ſorts, ſome equilateral ſeven or eight inches and one inch thick, ſome two feet ſquare and three inches thick. At the ſame time was found here by ſir John Hoſkyns an hypocauſt about ſeven feet ſquare, the leaden pipes intire, thoſe of brick a foot long, three inches ſquare, let artificially into one another. Over theſe probably was a pavement. In another place is a hollow where burnt wheat has been taken up. Col. Dantſey ſent ſome to the Society of Antiquaries. Numbers of Roman coins, bricks, leaden pipes, urns, and large bones, have been formerly dug up here.

ARICONIUM.

[c] Cart. Inſpex. 2 Edward III. N° 64. Blount.
[d] Pat. 3 and 4 P. and M.
[e] Esc. 10 R. II. n. 42.
[f] Blount's MS.
[g] Blount's MS.
[h] Lel. V. 66.
[i] Lel. VII. 152.
[k] Reliquiæ Galeanæ, p. 120—122.
[l] Stukeley, Itin. Cur. I. 66.

Credon hill.

This city is overlooked and ſheltered towards the north with a prodigious high woody mountain of ſteep aſcent, crowned at the top with a vaſt camp which takes in its whole apex 40 acres, with inacceſſible works, fortified with an inner as well as outer ditch. It is called Credon hill, and ſeems to have been Britiſh, and ſtrengthened in ſucceeding ages; or it may have been the defence of Kencheſter, and included under one common antient name with it. It is of too irregular a form to be Roman. Here Dr. Salmon[m] places MAGNIS, q. d. Magna Caſtra: for ſuch, ſays he, 30 acres defended deſerve to be called. He takes it to have been firſt poſſeſſed by the Romans, and the innermoſt ditch without a vallum added by the Britans, Saxons, or Danes. He eſteemed this the exploratory camp, and Kencheſter the city; and removes ARICONIUM to Cirenceſter[n].

On the road about a mile from Hereford ſtands the hexagon ſhaft of a croſs, called White croſs, with ſix ſhields bearing a lion rampant ſingle and between ſix croſlets fitchè, erected by biſhop Charlton on occaſion of a plague, when the market is ſaid to have been kept at it.

Sugwas.

"A flite ſhot or more of Wye river on the lefte "ripe of it 2 miles and an half," is Sugwas in the pariſh of Eaton Biſhop, though the Wye runs between them. Here was a manſion houſe of the biſhops of Hereford, to which biſhop St. Thomas de Cantilupe uſed to retire. The houſe and lands are leaſed out, but the chapel called St. Thomas' is kept in reaſonable repair, the large altar ſtone reared up againſt the wall, and a great wooden chair almoſt decayed, wherein St. Thomas, as tradition ſays, uſed to ſit. The windows were curiouſly painted. In the firſt pane of the eaſt window was St. Ethelbert in his royal robes, a church in his hand, and his name under him. In the ſecond the Virgin and child and a biſhop kneeling. Hoc precor oblatum cor ſuſcipe terge ratum. In the third a man with green rays holding a book, Ecce Joachim magnum, dans eſſe et ..... In the fourth St. Thomas of Hereford with his mitre and croſier. In the ſouth window the like picture of him with a deviſe and this motto: Qui amat Deum odit mundum; and in the ſame window is written, Dñs Thomas Spofford ep'us Herefordenſis, who probably was at the charge of making theſe windows, and was conſecrated about 1422. In the north window the device of a pelican with Ex his duobus mandatis univerſa lex pendet & prophetæ. In another, Qui odit fratrem ſuum homicida eſt, and Omnes qui confidunt in domino ſicut mons Sion non removebuntur in æternum. The borders of the windows are adorned with mitres painted. On the bricks of the pavement are coats of arms[o].

In Leland's time the park had no deer[p]. In a pool in this pariſh by the road ſide abounding with fine trout it is pretended Thomas Becket often appears, whence the niche at Kencheſter is called Becket's chair.

Eaton wall.

On the ſouth ſide of the Wye oppoſite to Sugwas is Eaton wall, a camp incloſing 30 or 40 acres and ſingle trenched except a little on the weſt ſide. On the ſame ſide of the river about two miles ſouth of Hereford in Dinder pariſh is another camp called Dinder or Oyſter hill, perhaps from Oſtorius Scapula, as ſome ſuppoſe Oyſter hill near Verulam. South of this another large Roman camp called Aconbury, in a pariſh of the ſame name, where was a nunnery founded by the wife of Walter de Lacy t. John. "Acornbyri, a howſe of nunnes, 3 miles from Here. "forde, now ſuppreſſid[q]." "Matildis Walerei "founderes as ſome ſay of Acornbyry, a priory of "nuns in Acornbyry wood 3 miles ſouth from He. "reford[r]." It was valued at £.75 7s. 3d.[s]

"HEREFORD is ancient, large, and ſtrongly wallyd, "having alſo a mayne caſtle hard by the ripe of "Wye. I take the caſtle to be of as great circuite as "Windſor. The dungeon of the caſtle is high and "ſtronge[t], having in the utter ward or wall 10 towers "forma ſemicirculari, and one great tower in the inner "ward. In the dyke not far from it is a fair ſpring "called St. Ethelbert's well. Within the caſtel of "Hereforde in digging hath been found non gigantea, "inſolitæ tamen magnitudinis oſſa, and hard by in "ripa Vagæ aſſidua alluvione apparent in ripa ejuſdem "magnitudinis oſſa. There was a great bridge of ſtone "arches and a drawbridge in the middle of it to enter "into the caſtel. It ſtood on the north-weſt ſide of it. "It is now clene down. There is a fair chapel of "St. Cuthbert, the eaſt part whereof is made "opere circulari: There were ſometime prebends, "but one of the Lacies tranſlated them thence into "St. Peter's in Hereford town, and that college was "there tranſlated into the eaſt ſuburb of Hereford, "and a priory of monks erected there and made a "cell to Gloceſter [valued at £.121 3s. 3d.[u]] There "is a fair and plentifull ſpring of water in the caſtle. "Some think that Heraldus began this caſtle after "that he had conquered the rebellion of the Welſh"men in king Edward the Confeſſor's time. Some "think that the Lacies earls of Hereford were the "great makers of it, and the Bohuns earls of Hereford. "It hath been decayed ſins the Bohuns time. The "caſtle of Hereford ſtandith on the left ripe of Wy "river, and a little benethe the bridge, and is ſtrongly "diched ubi non defenditur flumine: the walls of it "be high and ſtrong and full of great towers: but "now the whole caſtle tendith towards ruin. It "hath been one of the faireſt, largeſt, and ſtrongeſt "caſtles in England. It hath two wards, and each "of them environed with water[x]. There came an "arm of a brooke that runnith through a great "piece of the town dike by an arch made in the "town wall into the caſtle dike, and ſo compaſſing "half the caſtle went into the Wye, ſo that with the "principal arm of this brook, and with the arm of "it going through the caſtle dike, and with the "maine ſtream of Wye river, the whole caſtle was "environed: but now the arme of the brook cometh "not through the caſtle, yet might it ſoon be re"turned thither. The ſecond ward where the "dungeon is was alſo environed with water: for a "piece of the water that came through the ditch "was turned that way. The town of Hereford "ſtandith ſomewhat low on every ſide. Ther be "hilles on the eaſt and ſouth on the ripe of Wye "ryvell well wooded and not far diſtant from Here"forde town. The name of Hereforde town of ſome

[m] P. 699.
[n] P. 742.
[o] Blount's MS. Willis, Hereford. p. 518.
[p] Lel. VIII. 86.
[q] Lel. V. 10.
[r] Ib. VIII. 76.
[s] Tan. 176.
[t] Lel. V. 9.
[u] Tan. 174.
[x] Lel. VIII. 174.

"in

" in Welſh is called Heurford, of an old ford by the " caſtle, by the which menne paſt over or ever the " great bridge on Wy at Hereforde was made. Some " call Hereforde in Welſh Trefawth, a fagis quarum " copia in agro illo creſcebat. The town itſelf is in " cumpace within the walls a good mile. There be " in the walles of Hereforde 6 gates; Wy gate; Frere " gate ſtandith weſt, ſo called of the Grey friars " houſe ſtanding without; Inne gate ſtanding to- " wards W. N. W. Wigmarſh gate flat N. Wig- " marſh is a marſh ground a litle without the ſub- " urbs; Biſhop's ſtreet gate N. E.; St. Andrewe's " gate by eaſt, ſo called of St. Andrewe's pariſh in " the ſuburbs without this gate [y]. The walles and " gates of Hereforde be right well maintained by " the burgeſſes of the town. The walle of the towne " is cumpaced with a dyke alway filled with mooriſh " water gathering and deſcending into it. The com- " mon voice is that the town was ſcant fortified with " walles at ſuch time as Griffin prince of Wales de- " ſtroyed the town, and killed the biſhop Leofgarye " and his clerks by the aſſiſtance and conſent of Al- " garus ſon of Leofric earle of Marche. Ther be " four paroche churches within the walles, St. Peter, " S. Nicholas, Allhallowes, and St. John's, whereof " certain be very faire, beſide the cathedral church, " the which is of a very ſtrong building. The cathedral " church ſtandeth in the ſouth part of the town as " on the higheſt ground of it near unto the caſtle. " Robert Lorengo [Lozinga] biſhop of Hereford be- " gan a new church there, and biſhop Keinelme " [Reinelme] did much unto it. Milfridus Regulus " and Quenburga his wife firſt founders of the cathe- " dral church. There is a ſuburb without Wye gate, " and therein is a chapel of our lady of Allingtre " prope furcas; another St. Egidii. The bridge over " Wy hath great arches of ſtone. There be but " few houſes without Friars gate. The college of " Grey friars was founded by ſir William Pembruge. " The biſhop of Hereforde gave them ſome lands [z]. " There is a church of St. Martin in Wye gate " ſuburb beneth the bridge. There is a ſuburb " without Inne gate, and in it is a chapel of St. " Gyles firſt founded for Lazars, now converted to " the uſe of other poor folke. The burgeſſes be " patrons of it. There is a ſuburb without the north " gate alias Wigmarch gate. This is the faireſt ſub- " urb of the town. In this ſuburb was the blak " friars firſt of Daniel a knt. (forſan Deinvile [a],) and " then of king Edward III. finiſhing. There was " an hoſpital of St. John, ſometime an houſe of Tem- " plares, now it is an almeſhouſe with a chapel. " There is a praty ſuburb without Biſhopſgate ſtreet. " There was a priory of St. Guthlake, a cell to Glo- " ceſtre: This priory was afore in St. Peter's church " in Hereforde tranſlated thence to without the " Biſhopſgate ſuburb by Hugh Lacy of St. Guthlake. " Ther is a ſuburb without St. Andrew's gate; there " is a pariſhchurch of St. Andrew in the middle of " the ſtreet. There is an hoſpital of St. Giles, where " once were friers griſei and then templars. King " Richard gave this chapel to the town, and then it " was made an hoſpital [b]."

" S. Ethelbrite martyred as ſome ſay at Marden, " ... miles out of town, not very far from the " ruins of Sutton, where is ſuppoſed that Offa lay; " but I think rather that his palace was at Ken- " cheſtre, was buried in the cathedral church. But " ſins that the Welſhmen deſtroyed the town in " king Edward the Confeſſor's time his reliques have " not been ſeen there. S. Thomas de Cantalupo " epus Hereford lieth at this time in the church " richly ſhrined.

" Some ſay that the town took the name that it " hath now of an old ford or paſſage over Wye " not far from the caſtle. Some ſay that it was " called Fernlege or otherwiſe Fern hill [c], Saltus " filicis as Mr. Taylor ſaid, and the place where " the cathedral church is now was ſometime a chapel " of our lady called Our Lady Chapel of Fernelege [d]."

To whatever circumſtances Hereford owes its riſe its name is certainly derived from its ſituation near the frontiers. The Welſh call it Hen fordd or the Ola way, not Old ford. Mr. Camden allows this name to have exiſted before that of Hereford. The Saxons probably altered the ſound to one that had a meaning in their own tongue. Hereford is therefore a corruption of the old name. The Saxon n and r are ſo alike that the writers could ſoon fall into it. They conſtantly write it Herefopd, q. d. the ford of the army, and, according to Leland, it was a conſiderable ford. Mr. Camden talks inconſiſtently of Hereford ſpringing up with the Saxon heptarchy when it was in its glory; founded as ſome write by Edward the Elder; and of there being no mention of it more antient. Where then was the ſee of Putta in 680? and where that of his ſucceſſors? Beſides, the heptarchy had ceaſed before the reign of Edward the Elder, which began A. D. 900. Again, Wilfred is made to build the church in honour of Ethelbert, and the church to be ſoon after adorned with a biſhop's ſee. But Ethelbert was not murdered till 793, above 100 years after Hereford is allowed to have had biſhops by Godwyn and others; it is therefore probably much older than has been thought. It is a large old city, but not populous nor well built. It is governed by a mayor, eſcheator (uſually called the late mayor), ſix aldermen, recorder, &c. The principal manufacture is leather gloves, yet the trading companies till lately had their halls. This city gives title of viſcount to George Devereux, 13th and preſent viſcount, whoſe anceſtors were ſo created 4 Edward VI. the 3d being the famous Robert earl of Eſſex, beheaded 1600.

All the remains of the caſtle are the earthworks of the outer ward converted into very pleaſant walks. The eaſtern was levelled to make the walks, and the weſtern behind the vicar's college lately to mend the roads. St. Ethelbert's well remains. It had two keeps like that at Lewes in Suſſex. It was certainly older than Milo who was not earl of Hereford till 1141. Henry III. and his ſon were confined in it after the battle of Lewes.

The epiſcopal ſee was ſettled A.D. 680. The firſt cathedral [e], founded by Milfred 825, was rebuilt by biſhop Athelſtan between 1012 and 1056, and a third (the preſent) begun by Robert de Loſing the ſecond Norman biſhop t. William I. upon the [y] Ib. This is now St. Owen's church and gate.

[z] Tan. 179.
[a] See Lel. VIII. 77.
[b] Lel. IV. 173—175. Tan. 176.
[c] Ib. V. 9.
[d] underſtanding lege low.
[e] at leaſt of ſtone, Lel. It. VIII. 88.

plan of the cathedral built at Aix by Charlemagne. The preſent nave with eight Saxon arches and maſſy round pillars on each ſide ſeems of his work. We are ſorry to ſay the weſt front of its north aile has ſo much declined forward from its perpendicular, and that though the two firſt arches within have been filled up with maſonry, the cracks in the croſs arch increaſe. Biſhop Reynelm carried on the church, and erected the college of prieſts or prebendaries. Biſhop Breoſe t. John is ſuppoſed to have raiſed the tower in the centre, as præcentor Lowman did the weſtern one. The Lady chapel, now converted into a library, was probably erected by the lady whoſe tomb is in its north wall, whoſe huſband as appears by the arms was a Bohun, though not an earl of Hereford. The antient painting under the arch ſhews the lady in a nun's veil as on the tomb with a church in her hand pointing to a chapel at its eaſt end, which ſhe preſents to the Virgin on her throne; the ſecular prieſts (of Hereford no doubt) are following her chanting. Biſhop Audley (afterwards tranſlated to Saliſbury, where he added the beautiful ſouth chapel to the Lady chapel) added a pentagon chapel on its ſouth ſide. The vicars' college is ſuppoſed to have been founded t. Richard II.[f] It ſtood in Caſtle-ſtreet till removed to its preſent ſite by biſhop Stainſbury in the reign of Henry VII. The beautiful octagon chapter-houſe was ſtripped of the lead in the civil wars to cover the gateway of the caſtle, and in conſequence of that dilapidation fell to ruin. The weſt ſide of the great cloiſter is taken away with the magnificent croſs in the centre, having given place to a modern muſic-room. Some years before in the time of biſhop Egerton was pulled down the very antient Saxon double chapel of St. Catherine and St. Mary Magdalen adjoining to the biſhop's palace, whoſe pillars were of ſingle ſtones 12 feet high. From the deſcription and plan of this old chapel, it was not improbably antecedent to the cathedral as well as the epiſcopal palace. It was built intirely of ſtone, and roofed with ſtone, conſiſting of two chapels one above the other. The ground plot was a perfect ſquare, beſide the portico: the engraved plan makes it 57½ feet by 42½ feet. Four pillars in the middle with arches every way form the whole. The portico, 19½ feet deep, and the choir, ſeemed to have a grandeur in imitation of Roman work, made of many arches retiring inwards; two pillars on each ſide conſiſted of ſingle ſtones. The lowermoſt chapel which was ſome ſteps underground was dedicated to St. Catherine: the upper to St. Mary Magdalen had ſeveral pillars againſt the wall made of ſingle ſtones, and an odd octagon ſquare cupola on the four middle pillars. There had been much paintings on the walls: the arched roof was turned very artfully, and ſeemed to have a taſte of that kind of architecture uſed in the declenſion of the Roman empire[g]. The upper ſtory was a parochial church, the walls three feet and a half thick, the pillars ten feet high[h].

Pl. XIV.

Beſides the monuments of Cantilupe and many other biſhops in this cathedral[i], here are thoſe of ſir William Pembridge, one of the earlier knights of the Garter, who died 1375. Two of a Bohun and lady foundreſs of the Lady chapel, who probably after her huſband's death aſſumed the veil in which ſhe appears, falſely ſuppoſed an earl and counteſs of Hereford, all of that name being buried at Lantony, Walden, or London. The church has a biſhop, dean, two archdeacons, precentor, chancellor, treaſurer, 28 prebends, 12 prieſt vicars, four lay clerks, ſeven choriſters, &c. The clear revenue of the ſee is £.768. of the chapter £.423. of the 20 vicars choral, for that was formerly the number, £.88.[k] The dioceſe contains 379 churches and chapels[l], including part of Shropſhire. In the city were ſix pariſh churches[m], reduced to four in the civil wars, when this city ſtood a vigorous ſiege againſt the Scots.

Here was alſo an houſe of Grey friars; hoſpitals of St. Anthony of Vienna[n], St. Thomas, St. Ethelbert, and a 4th near Wybridge[o]; another founded by queen Elizabeth; another 15.. by ſir Thomas and lady Penelope Coningſby for ten poor men, half to be ſoldiers, and half ſuch as have lived ſeven years in ſervice, who are allowed £. 15. per annum each, a ſuit of red cloaths for two years ſucceſſively at Whitſuntide, and a cloak and hat the third year. The corporal or preſident who collects the rents and regulates the reſt has £. 20. per annum, and is allowed to marry. The miniſter of Boddenham is their chaplain, and they attend at the cathedral on the great feſtivals. Another out of Inne or Eygne gate, founded by Priſe of Radnorſhire, for 12 poor men. A fourth 1630 out of St. Owen's gate. Here are alſo two charity ſchools, one for 60 boys, another for 40 girls, and a handſome infirmary juſt below the caſtle.

The black friars are ſaid by biſhop Tanner, (p. 179,) to have had a houſe here, founded by ſir John Daniel. Who this ſir John Daniel was I know not, but of both theſe names I meet with ſir John Daniel living in the 10th of Edward I.[p] ſir John Danyell, who held lands at Marden, in this county, 14 Edward I.[q] and a third of theſe names who held lands there, 1 Edward III.[r] And laſtly it appears, that one John Daniell was executed at Hereford, with the earl of Arundel, 20 Edward II.[s] but, as our author has not thought proper to produce any authority for making him the founder, I am rather inclined to the opinion of Silas Taylor, a learned antiquary, who attributes the foundation of this houſe to Henry Pembrugge. My reaſon for inclining to Taylor's opinion, is, becauſe he lived upon the ſpot, where it was moſt probable he might receive the beſt information; and at a time when the traditional hiſtory, if I may ſo ſay, of theſe religious houſes was freſh in the memory of many old people, it being within a century after the diſſolution. To which may be added his great induſtry and application, in reſeaches of this kind, and the great advantages he had of rummaging the records of the church of Hereford. Some remains of the cloiſter and dormitory of this houſe with a curious ſtone croſs or [f] Willis. [g] Browne Willis ſuppoſed it Roman work, and older than the burning of the cathedral by the Welſh 1056.

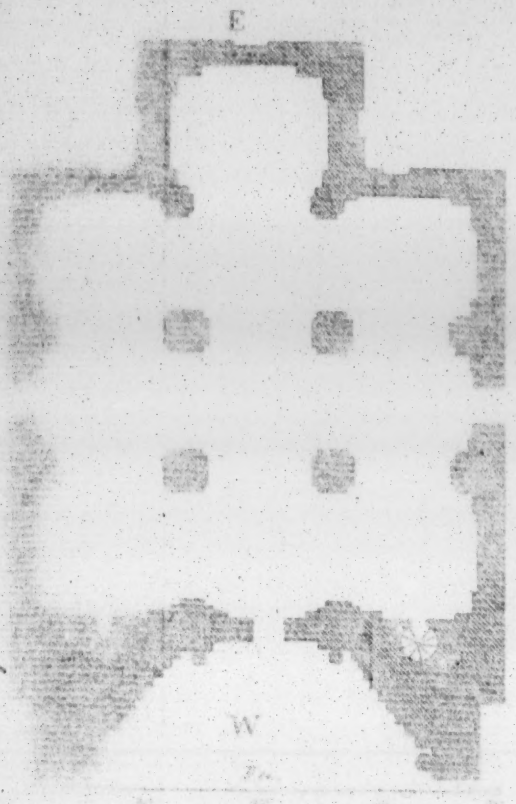
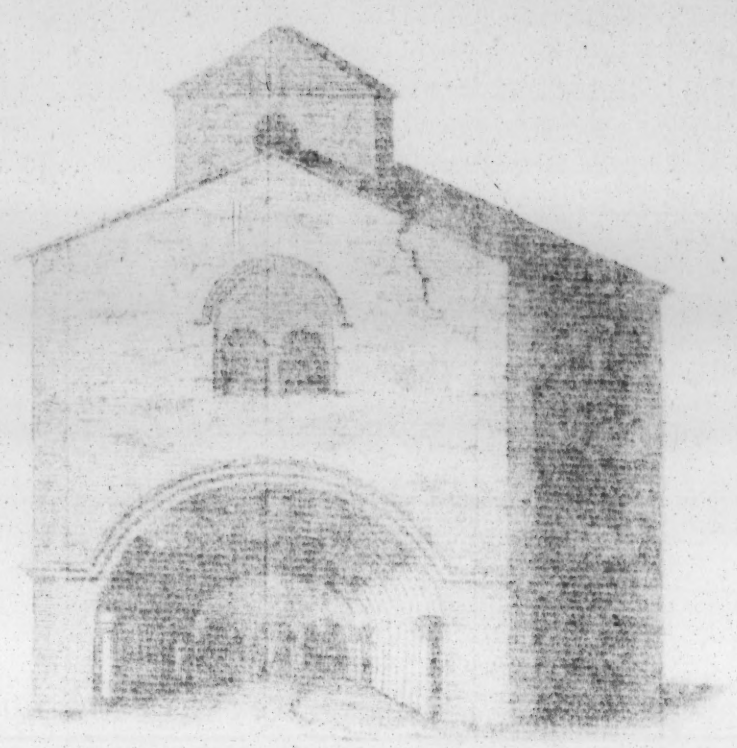
[h] See Stukeley It. Cur. I. p. 68. It was engraved by the Society of Antiquaries.
[i] of 82, 24 Saxon ones before the 11th century being known only by name. See Lel. VIII. 86. Several of the biſhops' tombs here are cenotaphs.
[k] Tan. 171. [l] Willis. [m] in Leland's time only four.
[n] Tan. 178. [o] Tan. 180.
[p] Prynn, Vol. III. p. 737. [q] Eſch. 14 Edward I. MS. F. p. 12. [r] Ib. p. 21.
[s] Milles' Cat. p. 157.

pulpit

Plan and Elevation of an ancient chapel at Hereford.

p. 452.





CAMPS in HEREFORDSHIRE.

Eywood Warren
P. 459.

On Brench behind Eyewood Slopes walk.

plan of the cathedral built at Aix by Charlemagne. The preſent nave with eight Saxon arches and maſſy round pillars on each ſide ſeems of his work. We are ſorry to ſay the weſt front of its north aile has ſo much declined forward from its perpendicular, and that though the two firſt arches within have been filled up with maſonry, the cracks in the croſs arch increaſe. Biſhop Reynelm carried on the church, and erected the college of prieſts or prebendaries. Biſhop Breoſe t. John is ſuppoſed to have raiſed the tower in the centre, as precentor Lowman did the weſtern one. The Lady chapel, now converted into a library, was probably erected by the lady whoſe tomb is in its north wall, whoſe huſband as appears by the arms was a Bohun, though not an earl of Hereford. The ancient painting under the arch ſhews the lady in a nun's veil as on the tomb with a church in her hand pointing to a chapel at its eaſt end, which ſhe preſents to the Virgin on her throne, as ſecular prieſts (of Hereford no doubt) are following her chanting. Biſhop Audley (afterwards tranſlated to Saliſbury, where he added the beautiful ſouth chapel to the Lady chapel) added a pentagon chapel on its ſouth ſide. The vicars' college is ſuppoſed to have been founded t. Richard II.[c] It ſtood in Caſtle-ſtreet, removed to its preſent ſite by biſhop Stanſbury in the reign of Henry VII. The beautiful octagon chapter-houſe was ſtripped of the lead in the civil wars to cover the gateway of the caſtle, and in conſequence of that dilapidation fell to ruin. The weſt ſide of the great cloiſter is taken away with the magnificent croſs in the centre, having given place to a modern muſic-room. Some years before in the time of biſhop Egerton was pulled down the very antient Saxon double chapel of St. Catherine and St. Mary Magdalen adjoining to the biſhop's palace, whoſe pillars were of ſingle ſtones 12 feet high. From the deſcription and plan of this old chapel, it was not improbably antecedent to the cathedral as well as the epiſcopal palace. It was built entirely of ſtone, and roofed with ſtone, conſiſting of two chapels one above the other. The ground plot was a perfect ſquare, beſide the portico: the engraved plan makes it 57½ feet by 42½ feet. Four pillars in the middle with arches every way form the whole. The portico, 19½ feet deep, and the choir, ſeemed to have a grandeur in imitation of Roman work, made of many arches retiring inwards; two pillars on each ſide conſiſted of ſingle ſtones. The lower-vault chapel which was ſome ſteps underground was dedicated to St. Catherine: the upper to St. Mary Magdalen had ſeveral pillars againſt the wall made of ſingle ſtones, and an odd ſquare cupola on the four middle pillars. There had been much paintings on the walls: the arches were turned very artfully, and ſeemed to have a rule of that kind of architecture uſed in the decienſion of the Roman empire[e]. The upper ſtory was a parochial church: the walls three feet and a half thick, the pillars ten feet high[f].

Beſides the monuments of Cantilupe and many other biſhops in this cathedral[g], here are ſir William Pembridge, one of the earlieſt of the Garter, who died 1375. Two of a Lady foundreſs of the Lady chapel, who after her huſband's death aſſumed the veil ſhe appears, falſely ſuppoſed an earl and Hereford, all of that name being buried Walden, or London. The church has a two archdeacons, precentor, chancellor, prebends, 12 prieſt vicars, four lay clerks, ſiſters, &c. The clear revenue of the of the chapter £.423. of the 20 vicars that was formerly the number, £.98.[h] contains 379 churches and chapels[i], of Shropſhire. In the city were ſix pariſh reduced to four in the civil wars, ſtood a vigorous ſiege againſt the Scots.

Here was alſo an houſe of Grey friars, of St. Anthony of Vienna[k], St. Thomas, beſt, and a 4th near Wybridge[l]; another by queen Elizabeth; another 15.. by ſir and lady Penelope Coningſby for ten poor to be ſoldiers, and half ſuch as have lived in ſervice, who are allowed £.15 per annum ſuit of red cloaks for two years ſucceſſively Whitſuntide, and a cloak and hat the The corporal or preſident who collects and regulates the reſt has £.20 per annum allowed to marry. The miniſter of Bodenham their chaplains, and they attend at the on the great feſtivals. Another out of Eygne gate, founded by Pride of Hereford, for 12 poor men. A fourth 1630 Owen's gate. Here are alſo two charity for 60 boys, another for 40 girls, and a infirmary juſt below the caſtle.

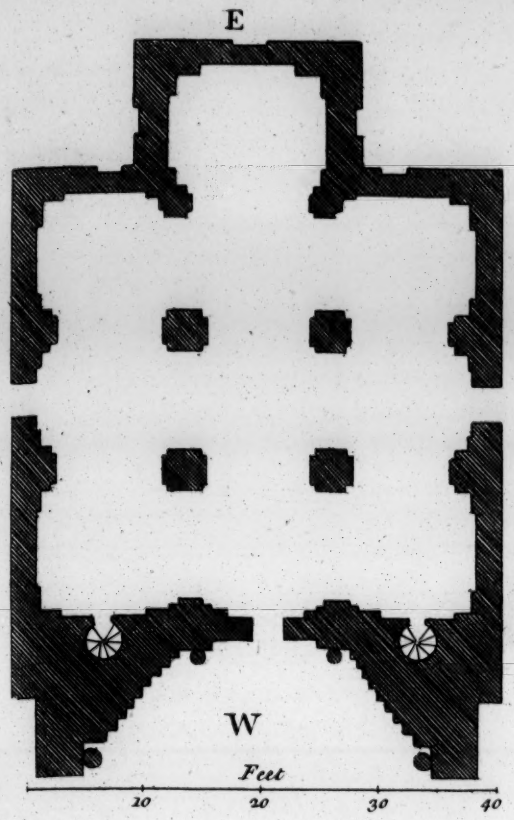
The black friars are ſaid by biſhop Tanner, (p. 179,) to have had a houſe here, founded by ſir John Daniel. Who this ſir John Daniel was I know not, but of both theſe names I meet with ſir John Daniell living in the 10th of Edward I. ſir John Danyell, who held lands at Marden, in this county 14 Edward I.[m] and a third of theſe names who held lands there, 1 Edward III.[n] And it appears, that one John Daniell was executed at Hereford, with the earl of Arundel, 20 Edward II.[o] but, as our author has not thought proper to produce any authority for making him the founder, I am rather inclined to the opinion of Silas Taylor, a learned antiquary, who attributes the founding of this houſe to Henry Pembruge. My reaſon for inclining to Taylor's opinion is, becauſe he lived upon the ſpot, where it was moſt probable he might receive the beſt information; and at a time when traditional hiſtory, if I may ſo ſay, of theſe religious houſes was freſh in the memory of many old people being within a century after the diſſolution, to which may be added his great induſtry and application; in reſearches of this kind, and the great advantages he had of rummaging the records of the church of Hereford. Some remains of the ſcite and priory of this houſe with a curious ſtone croſs

Pl. XIV.

[a] Willis. [b] Browne Willis ſuppoſed it Saxon work, and older than the burning of the cathedral by the Danes 1056.
[c] See Stukeley It. Cur. I. p. 53. It was engraved by the Society of Antiquaries.
[d] Of 8 in 24 Saxon ones before the 14th century being known only by name. See Lel. VIII. 86. Several of the biſhops' ſeals are extant.
[e] Tan. 171. [f] Willis. [g] Tan. 180.
[h] Tan. 178. [i] Pycon, Vol. III. p. 737. [k] Edw. II. Rot. Claus. m. 3 dorſo. [l] Edward I. MS. F. p. 12. [m] 34 b. p. 216.
[n] Miller's Cat. p. 157. [o] In Leland's time only four.

Plan and Elevation of an ancient chapel at Hereford.

P.452.



CAMPS in HEREFORDSHIRE.

On Burvach behind Eyewood Sheepwalk.

F. Cary sculp.

pulpit li the cath ſuburb c
The beſides o
Theſe w
Lidbury and Sug
" Boſb
" at the " place l
" Ledon.
" very ex
" bank o
" place f
" north-e
" from R
" vict pri
" Roſſe,
" end of " clean r
" from H
" byri.
" Cliffe.
Whitbu had here
col. John biſhop's did work of Auguſt them with ſixteen ac have for ſe de buſta, wheat and Tupſley five which nor court cuſtomary week for t for him on penny fart
" The " nethe M
" from H
" Herefor
" and Ne
" lenith a
In Lugw
Beſt, canc relict of R Lentwar in the win
Edward H
eſq; and o family of i the hall is out of a to the townſhi ford, Let heath, the Grange.
Mortimer, his ſucceſſo try here 49 chapel. T was ſold by

[t] Lel. VIII
[y] Lel. IV.
[a] Aubrey.

pulpit like that before deſcribed formerly within the cathedral cloiſter, are to be ſeen in the north ſuburb contiguous to Coningſby's hoſpital.

The biſhop had eight palaces in this county beſides one in London, in St. Mary Montalt pariſh. Theſe were Biſhop's caſtle and Preſtbury aliened, Lidbury and Roſs demoliſhed; Boſbury, Whithurne and Sugwas let to farm; Hereford ſtill uſed.

"Boſberie 10 miles by north-eaſt from Hereford "at the head of Ledon riveret and thereby is a "place longing to St. John's in London called Up "Ledon. Whitburne 7 miles from Worceſter in the "very extreme parts of Herefordſhire on the right "bank of Temde river. There was a fair manſion "place for the biſhop at Ledbyri 12 miles by eaſt "north-eaſt from Hereford and 7 miles or more "from Roſſe. This houſe is all in ruin. The con- "vict priſon for the biſhop of Hereford was at "Roſſe, now at Hereford. Roſſe at the very weſt "end of the paroche church-yard of Roſſe now in "clean ruins. Biſhops caſtle 23 miles by N.N.W. "from Hereford in Shropſhire 12 miles from Shrewſ- "byri. Preſtebury 5 miles from Gloceſter hard by "Cliffe. Ther is a park hard by Preſtbury [t]."

Whitburn belonged to the biſhop of Hereford, who had here a palace or manſion-houſe in the tenure of col. John Birch 1675. The tenants anſwered to the biſhop's court at Bromyard. The cuſtomary tenants did work for the lord from Michaelmas to the Gule of Auguſt, ploughed eight acres called la Rede, ſowed them with their own corn, and harrowed them; alſo ſixteen acres in Lent, and for each virgate were to have for ſeed oats four ſeams of bruſh wood, ſummagia de buſta, and 3d for ploughing each acre both of wheat and oats [u].

Tupſley manor in Hampton Biſhop is one of the five which owe ſuit to the biſhop of Hereford's honor court at his palace in Hereford. Some of the cuſtomary tenants were to do two days work every week for the lord, weed his corn, mow and make hay for him one day each, for which they received a half-penny farthing [x].

"The confluence of Lug and Wye is a litle be- "nethe Mordiford bridge of ſtone on Lug 3 miles "from Hereford. Lug cometh within a mile of "Hereford [y]." "About half way betwixt Knighton "and New Radenor cummith Lugge oute of Me- "lenith and ſo down to Preſteigne [z]."

In Lugwardine church are monuments for Dr. John Beſt, canon of Hereford 1636, and Jane his wife, relict of Robert Kyrle, eſq; of Walford 1622 [a].

Lentwardine church had remains of fine paintings in the windows. Here is a freeſchool founded by ſir Edward Harley, knight of the bath, John James, eſq; and others. Tripleton hall, held antiently by a family of its name, belonged ſince to the James's. In the hall is a rebus of the firſt family, a tree growing out of a ton. This pariſh is large, and comprehends the townſhips and villages of Kynton, Witton, Walford, Letton, Newton, Marchen, Tripleton, the heath, the brakes, Atferton, Stanway, and the Grange. The church was appropriated by Hugh de Mortimer, founder of Wigmore, to that abbey, and his ſucceſſor Edmund earl of March founded a chantry here 49 Edward III. In Newton are ruins of a chapel. The manor belonging to Wigmore abbey, was ſold by Edward VI. to William Thomas [b].

On the river Teme not far ſouth from Lentwardine is a perfect Roman camp called Brandon, ſingle trenched with four entrances, the eaſtern one 15 paces wide [c]. The eaſt ſide 258 paces, the north 900 paces long. On the oppoſite ſide of the river and about the ſame diſtance from Brampton Brian is a circular camp called Coxall, or as it is written in ſome old deeds of the Harley family Coxwall, now covered with great oaks. Mr. Aubrey ſuppoſes this Britiſh, and the other Roman; but the termination of the latter ſeems to make it alſo Roman. The two towns near them probably owed their origin to them. About a quarter of a mile from Brandon are two barrows, one of which being opened by ſir Edward Harley 1662, was found to contain coals, burnt bones, and an urn about two feet high full of both [d]. Brandon camp. See Pl. XIV. Coxall camp. See Pl. XIV.

On the waſte near Colwall, a village ſomewhat north of the laſt entrenchment, a countryman ditching found a crown or coronet of gold, large enough to be drawn over the arm and ſleeve, ſet with precious ſtones, and of ſuch value as to be ſold at Brandon for £.150, as Aubrey was informed: but I fear this ſtory is to be ranked with many others which he believed and aſſerted, and like thoſe which the vulgar entertain of treaſures to be found wherever there are remains of antiquity. The gold ornaments found in Ireland were perhaps the richeſt prize of this kind ever brought to light. The precious ſtones of antiquity eſpecially among our anceſtors were the leaſt valuable articles of ſuch treaſure. Colwall.

The family of Brampton are as antient as Henry I. and intermarried with ſome of our moſt conſiderable antient nobility. After nine deſcents it ended with Brian de Brampton, who died 14 Edward I. and his eldeſt daughter Margaret married Robert de Harley, who had with her this caſtle and a large eſtate. His ſecond ſon Brian's ſon Brian, ſeems to have firſt made his reſidence at, and taken his ſtyle from this caſtle, which continued the ſeat of his deſcendants till the late civil wars, when, 1643, it ſtood a ſiege of ſeven weeks againſt the parliament army by lady Brilliana 3d wife of ſir Robert Harley, and 2d daughter of Edward viſcount Conway. She dying that year it was a ſecond time beſieged, and after a long and brave defence by the ſervants only, it was ſurrendered and burnt, with a valuable library. Its ruins are ſtill the property of Edward earl of Oxford, a lineal deſcendant from Robert Harley. In the church (which being deſtroyed in the ſiege was rebuilt except the tower), are monuments of a lady holding an heart in her hand, of Robert Harley, firſt earl of Oxford, chancellor of the exchequer, and lord high treaſurer, who died May 21, 1724, aged 62, and of Sarah, daughter of Thomas Foley, eſq; firſt wife of his brother Edward Harley of Eywood, in this county, eſq; who died 1721. Brampton.

Eywood, in Titley pariſh, ſouth of Brompton Brian, was the ſeat of Edward Harley, eſq; auditor of the impoſt, younger brother of Robert firſt earl of Oxford, whoſe ſon and heir ſucceeding his couſin in the title, it is now the property of his ſon the preſent earl. Eywood.

Pedwardine, in Brompton Brian pariſh, gave name to an antient family [e]. Pedwardine.

"Richard's caſtle ſtandeth on the toppe of a very "rocky hill, well wooded, and at the weſt end of "the paroch church there the keep, the walles, and Richard's caſtle.

[t] Lel. VIII. 87.
[y] Lel. IV. 176.
[z] Aubrey.
[u] Lib. niger Hereford, f. 101.
[x] Ib. V. 310.
[a] Aubrey and Gibſon.
[b] Blount.
[c] Blount.
[d] Blount's MS.
[e] Blount.

" the towers of it ſtand, but going to ruin. There " is a poore houſe of timbre in the caſtle garth for a " farmer. It longeth now to the king. It longed of " late to the lord Vaulx, then to Pope. There is a " park impaled and well wooded, but no deer [f]."

Richard's caſtle was granted by the Conqueror to Richard a noble Norman, whoſe ſon Oſbern held it at the ſurvey, and Oſbern's grandſon took the name of Say, and was ſlain in Wales t. Richard I. Margaret his grandaughter and heir married Robert de Mortimer, an heir female of which family brought it to the Talbots, and ſo as Mr. Camden. The Says had it from Richard Scrope, probably its builder, in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor [g]. The Talbots held it till that of Richard II.[h] It is now the earl of Oxford's. William de Stuteville in right of Margaret de Say his wife owned the caſtle. King John granted Robert Mortimer a market and fair, both diſuſed and forgotten. Before the building of the caſtle the town was called Gayton or Boitune. Certain villages in the pariſh are in Shropſhire. Batchrot had a chapel, now a barn. Walderton chapel, now a barn, belonged to the hoſpitallers[i]. In the weſt window of Richard's caſtle church were 1675 the ſtory of our Saviour's life and paſſion; and at top the arms of Say, and A. 3 bars Az. In the North or St. John Baptiſt's chapel was St. Elizabeth and her ſon and the paſchal lamb, ſubſcribed in Saxon characters, Elizabet mater beati Johannis Baptiſtæ; alſo the beheading of the Baptiſt. Over all a king and queen holding their crowns. Under the chancel a charnel houſe, vulgarly called St. Anthony's Bower, probably his chapel, for in the Computus Thomæ Monington receptoris Ceciliæ matris Edwardi IV. is this entry of money paid, "pro ſuſtentatione unius lampadis et unius trendul in eccleſia caſtri Ricardi coram Sco Anthonio ex mandato dominæ[k]."

Rotheras. Rotheras in Dyneder pariſh near the Wye within two miles of Hereford, the antient ſeat of the Bodenhams, was in Mr. Blount's time a delightful manſion and park. The houſe was built partly of old timber work, but one end rebuilt of ſtone in the 16th century by ſir Roger Bodenham, where was a fair parlour full of coats of arms, and over that a noble dining-room wainſcoted with walnut-tree, and on the mantle-piece twenty-five quarterings, with the motto Veritas liberabit. Even the long table in the hall was inlaid with coats of arms. There was a fair brick gate-houſe and near it the chapel, diſuſed, and abundance of out-houſes, all mortgaged and going to ruin through the misfortunes of the family[k]. There is now a good new houſe, but the park is laid open.

Ludford. Ludford, with St. Gyles' houſe there, probably the manor houſe, belonged to Ludlow hoſpital. At the diſſolution it was given by Edward VI. to the earl of Warwick, who ſold it to William Fox, eſq; and Edward his ſon, who have monuments here 1554[k]. It ſtands cloſe to the ſouth ſide of the church-yard and is now the ſeat of ſir Francis Charlton, whoſe great grandfather ſir Job chief juſtice of Cheſter t. Charles II. inherited it by marriage, and is buried in the aile erected by the Foxes. William Foxe founded ſix almſhouſes below the church to the north, and is buried with his ſon Edward in the aile built by him.

" Wigmore caſtle, a xx mile from Shreuſbiri, Wig- " ſtanding on a brocket ſometime almoſt dry[l]." This caſtle was taken from Edric earl of Shrewſbury by Ranulph Mortimer, who came over with the Conqueror, and made it his principal ſeat.

Hither Roger Mortimer, earl of March, conveyed prince Edward, ſon of Henry III. after reſcuing him from Hereford caſtle, where he and his father were confined by the barons[m]. It is reputed one of the moſt antient honours in England, and has twenty-one manors that owe ſuit to the honour court held at the town once every five, now ſix, weeks. The privileges granted by our kings to this honour were even jura regalia as appears by ſtat. Parl 18. E. I.[n] All the circuit of the land wherein their manors lie is called Wigmore land, and has two conſtables, and gives name to the hundred. Henry VII. granted this manor to the prince his ſon, which remained in the crown till Elizabeth granted the borough, caſtle, and honor with the parks, Lineham vallet, Mortimer vallet, and all other woods and underwoods, franchiſes and liberties, and the foreſts or chaces of Boringowood alias Bringewood and Morktre, with the advowſon of the churches, vicarages and chapels of Wigmore and Brompton parcel of the poſſeſſions of the earl of March called Wigmore land, &c. to Gelly Merick, &c. and after his attainder his moiety to ſir Henry Lindley, knt.[o]

It is impoſſible to contemplate the maſſive ruins of Wigmore caſtle, ſituate on a hill in an amphitheatre of mountains, whence its owner could ſurvey his vaſt eſtates from his ſquare palace with four corner towers on a keep at the ſouth-eaſt corner of his double trenched outworks, without reflecting on the inſtability of the grandeur of a family, whoſe ambition and intrigues made more than one Engliſh monarch uneaſy on his throne, yet not a memorial remains of their ſepulture.

" The abbey of Wigmore is a mile beyond Wig- " more town[p], a great abbey of white chanons, " within a mile of Wigmore town and caſtle, in the " marche ground towards Shrewsberyſhire[q]." Ranulph Mortimer began the foundation of an abbey of Auguſtines here, valued at the diſſolution at £. 267. 2*s.* 10*d. per annum*[r], where eight of his deſcendants were buried, five of them earls of Marche.

In the church of the abbey removed from Shobden were buried the greateſt part of the Mortimer family, the founder and two of his deſcendents of the ſame name, Ralph, Geoffrey and John, three Rogers and two Edmunds, all whoſe monuments were deſtroyed at the diſſolution with the church that contained them except the walls. In the ruins of the abbey church were found about 20 years ago a ſtone coffin and little urn with aſhes with ſome ſilver coin in the leaden coffin which contained a body perfect, but mouldered on opening. In the pariſh church was in Mr. Blount's time an old figure on a flat ſtone, the inſcription worn illegible, ſaid to be the monument of John Wigmore of the houſe of Euſton, whoſe arms remain at one corner. A wooden ſeat of the earls of March remains below the belfrey in the ſouth aile In the windows are the arms of Bohun, Mortimer, Montacute, and Badleſmeer, and in the corners white roſes, caſtles, [f] Lel. IV. 178. [g] Dugd. Bar. I. 453. [h] Ib. 335. [i] Reg. Dynmore.

[k] Blount. [l] Lel. VII. 32.
[m] Dugd. Bar. I. 142. [n] Blount. [o] Blount.
[p] Lel. IV. 176. [q] Lel. V. 10. [r] Tan. 174.

and

and fleurs de lis and other good painting[s]. At the farm below called the abbey grange remained in Mr. Blount's time ſome antient rooms, as the abbot's council chamber, a large room with a fair canopy of wainſcot, under which the abbot ſat; now two rooms for paupers; a wreathen chain of one of the chimnies had the arms of Mortimer. The buildings are ſince much altered. Among the outbuildings contiguous to the high road from Lentwardine to Wigmore is an alehouſe, which they ſay was the abbey priſon now a farm[t].

On the ſummit of the hill behind the caſtle were two parks, one ſtocked with deer till the civil war, now both incloſed and ploughed up; alſo a foreſt called Deerfald corruptly Darval. In the village of Darval are ruins of a chapel, which ſome called Lollards chapel, becauſe they were wont to meet at this vill.

At Lindbrook four miles from Wigmore was a Benedictine nunnery, founded in the reign of Rchard I. by ſome of the Mortimers according to Leland, or Lingaines, valued at £. 22. 17*s*. 8*d*.[u] Richard II. allowed the Carthuſian monks to purchaſe this priory which belonged to the abbey of Aveney in Normandy, and was ſuppreſſed as alien 2 Henry V. Joan and Elizabeth, daughters of Edward Mortimer, lord of Wigmore, were nuns here t. Edward I.[x] The manor belongs to the earl of Oxford.

Lughton, antiently Leighton, near Wigmore, ſo called from the river Lug on which it lies, was the ſeat of the antient family of the Wigmores, of whom Richard ſoon after the Conqueſt married a daughter of ſir Jaſper Croft, and their deſcendants intermarried with Pedwardin, Lumley, Eylesford, Delamere, Lingein, Throckmorton, Cornwall, Witney, and others. Robert the owner 1675 was 22d deſcendant from Richard. Here was an antient family named from the place. In the chapel is a monument to John Wigmore 15... Walter, ſon of Peter de Lucton gave a piece of land here to Richard ſon of Julian .... paying yearly deo & eccleſiæ St. Laurentii de Lucton at Michaelmas unum galonem de puro oleo & claro, and to him and to his heirs a pair of gloves on St. Peter's day. This oil was for a lamp in this chapel; and the ground, ſtill called the lamp acre, and the lamp ridge, pays to the crown 3*s* yearly rent[y]. The manor belongs to the earl of Oxford.

Orlton was given by the Conqueror to Ralph Mortimer, whoſe deſcendant Edward IV. held it diſtinct from the crown lands, and had a particular ſeal even after he was king for the concerns of his earldom of March. For there is ſtill extant his charter of manumiſſion of one John Dedwick, a villan of this town, bearing date 20 Aug. 8 Edward IV. and the ſeal preſerved intire, bearing the arms of Mortimer and Burgh quarterly, ſupported by two lions rampant, and ſurmounted by a crown: Inſcription, Sigillum Edwardi quarti dei gra regis Anglie Francie dni Hibernie comitatus ſue Marchie[z]. On Edward's death the manor was annexed to the crown, and granted by James I. to George Hapton. He ſold it to Richard Broughton; he to truſtees for John Popham, eſq; whoſe brother ſold it to Thomas Blount. Miles Blount, 6th ſon of Roger Blount, of Grendon, and only heir male of that family about the beginning of the reign of Charles I. bought a capital meſſuage and lands here of one Humfrey Hare, and having married the daughter of William Buſtard, eſq; of Adderbury, c. Oxford, left iſſue Thomas, Myles, and five daughters, and lies buried in this church 1673, aged 78. Thomas married Anne, one of the daughters and coheirs of Edmund Church of Maldon, c. Eſſex, eſq; by whom he had iſſue one daughter Elizabeth. He obtained two fairs for this town, where he died Dec. 26, 1679, and was buried. He publiſhed among other things a collection of "antient tenures "and jocular cuſtoms of ſome manors, 1679," reprinted by Mr. Joſiah Beckwith 1784, with ſome account of the author prefixed. To his MS. collections for an hiſtory of this county I am indebted for many particulars. On a hill in the common of this pariſh is a deep cave, or den, called Palmer's Charm, of which the inhabitants feign no fewer ſtories than the Italians of old did of their Sibyls' cave in the mountain Appenninus[a].

Ledbury, ſo called from the river Leden on which it ſtands, is a tolerable market town in a rich clayey ſoil, formerly inhabited by clothiers. It is an antient borough, and formerly belonged to the biſhop of Hereford. The holders of demeſne lands owed ſervice to the court at Hereford and Ledbury. Some of the free tenants paid a certain rent at St. Andrew's tide pro dono & melle, and at the Annunciation pro piſis. Some of the cuſtomary tenants paid rent, others worked it out by two days in every week from Michaelmas to the Gule of Auguſt. Only Aluredus de la Frith for 12 acres which he held was beſides doing ſuch work bound to look to the lord's corn in the field in autumn, "& cuſtodire latrones infra curiam de Ledbury, & ſi "evaſerint debet inde reſpondere, & debet deferre literas "domini epiſcopi infra epiſcopatum ad mandatum domini "epiſcopi vel ejus ballivi." Biſhop Bohun procured from king Stephen a market for this town to be held on Sundays, which was by a later charter of queen Elizabeth changed to Tueſday. Here are alſo five fairs, the three oldeſt on Eaſter Monday, the Monday before St. Matthew, and the Monday before St. Thomas the Apoſtle, and two later on St. Philip and St. James, and on St. Barnabas' day. The toll of theſe two and of the market is aſſigned to the poor of the town. After that deſtructive exchange made 4 Elizabeth, the manor was veſted in the crown till James I. ſold it to the city of London, and they to feoffees in behalf of the pariſhioners of the Stowein; ſo it has no particular lands, and the biſhop has no intereſt here by the preſentation to the church. In the church were chantries of the Trinity, St. Anne, and two more at leaſt. About 1401 biſhop Treffant founded here a collegiate church, conſiſting of a cuſtos or maſter, eight chaplains, beſides clerks, miniſters, and ſervants, and liberally endowed the ſame. Henry IV.[b] incorporated them, and they were diſſolved, and the lands given to the crown 1 Edward VI. An old deed of 1287, runs "coram "nobis Richardo Dei gratia Herefordenſi epiſcopo in "aula noſtra de Lodebury, &c." On the north ſide the church is a ſtone building called the Deacon's lodgings, now converted into a ſchoolhouſe. Mr. Blount ſuppoſes John Stoke was the founder, for on an old wooden pew there was this inſcription, "——— viginti & ſex marcae a Johanne Stoke ſunt datæ, & 2 cameræ fuerunt ædificatæ." The ſteeple ſtands apart from the church, furniſhed with a ſpire and good ring of bells, and adjoining to it is a

Ledbury.

[s] Blount. [t] Blount. [u] Lel. IV. 175. 177. Tan. 176. [x] Blount.
[y] Blount. [z] Engraved by Mr. Blount. See alſo Sandford, p. 403. [a] Blount. [b] Ib.

charnel, chancel, over which is an empty room inhabited by a poor woman. The church has two sinecure rectors called portionaries, because they change their portion of tithes and other returns every third year. They are in the bishop's gift, and receive institution and induction, and these two alternately nominate the vicar, and to them belongs the upper hall house, and the lower adjoining to the church-yard. The first is leased to John Skip, esq; whose family came into this county out of Norfolk with John Skip, bishop of this diocese, about 1539, and of whose family here are several monuments in the church.

In the north aile of the chancel is a tomb with a female figure in stone much defaced; arms; three lions passant, two lions guardant, and three lions rampant.

A brass figure has this epitaph:

Say Pater noster for syr William Calkw
Who loved God well and Allhalw.

On another stone the deity, and underneath a man kneeling, with these words issuing from his mouth, Miserere mei Deus.

On a brass plate on the north side the communion table was inscribed

Here lyes magister Robert Preece,
That in his lyving was holden wise.
For the love of Peter and of Paul
Pray for magister Preece's saul.

At the east end of the chancel Charles Godwyn, bishop Godwyn's son, and Dorothy his wife, lie under a flat stone thus inscribed:

Præibit Dorothea,
Sequetur Carolus;
Ambo resurgent.
God-wyn the one, God-wyn the other.

Other monuments for Richard Caple, esq; 1601, who gave to the poor of Ledbury £. 20. to be employed by the master of the hospital and vicar for their use.

Thomas Cupper of Glimpton, c. Oxford, esq; June 27, 1621. Anne, wife of Ambrose Elton of the Hazel, esq: and daughter of sir Edward Aston, knight and baronet, and sister of sir Walter Aston, bart. baron of Forfar of Tixal, c. Stafford. She died 5 Feb. 1660, having had 17 children, three sons and 14 daughters, of whom she lived to see 11 married, and from her own loins a fair and hopeful issue of above 120 children's children. Her husband was buried by her 1659.

" Stay reader,
" Here lyes the body of James Baily, late of Ledbury,
" Corvisor, who departed this life 13 Dec. 1674,
" aged 100 years and 8 months. He was the young" est brother of Humphrey Bailey of Ocul Pychard,
" and of Samuel Baily, late of Hereford. These three " brothers lived the age of 300 years,
" what one wanted the
" other made up. Mors rapit omnia."

Thomas Chambers, esq; 1605, who left £. 20. to the poor, and £. 20. to the highway.

John Heywood of Wellington court, alias Prior's court, in this county, esq; 1614.

In the chancel

Dr. John Thornton, born at Harrow, co. Middlesex 1629, several times vice chancellor of Oxford, master of Ledbury hospital, benefactor to Hereford library.

Dr. John Hoskins.

Edward Skinner of Ledbury, gentleman, 1631, aged 87, and family [c].

The freeschool is partly maintained out of the chantry rents which were appropriated to it by the commissioners under Edward VI. confirmed by Elizabeth a. r. 10. Bishop Hugh Foliot, 1232, founded an hospital commonly called St. Catharine's for six single men, two men and their wives, and two widows, each to have 20 nobles a year, and the master 20 marks. A copy of the foundation charter hangs up in the hall, and in the parlour his picture, with some account of his life and charities. He gave many ornaments to the church, two marks to the prebends that assisted at his exequies 7 id. July yearly, half a mark to the choir, and 40*d.* yearly to the dean and chapter for their oversight of this hospital. Walter de Lacy gave to it the churches of Westun and Yarthul: John Gersant lands in Estnore: Roger de la Bourg, John de Stanford, Simon de Weston, Peter de Donnton, Maud de Purho, &c. were also benefactors. In the chapel are the arms of Grandison. Paly of 6 A. and Az. on a Bend, Az. 3 O. It was valued at £.32. 7*s.* 11*d.*[d] and refounded by queen Elizabeth 1580 for a master and seven poor men and three poor women, at 4*d. per* week each. Here are also a freeschool founded by Mr. Biddulph, and a charity school.

" There was a fair mansion place for the bishop at " Ledbyri, 12 miles by east-north-east from Hereford, " and 7 or more from Ros[e]." He has a park called Denzein.

Katharine Audley, or, as she is commonly called, St. Katharine, was a religious woman in the reign of Edward II. and had a maid called Mabel, and not being fixed in any settled place, she had a revelation that she should not set up her rest till she came to a town where the bells should ring of themselves. She and her maid coming near Ledbury heard the bells ring though the church doors were shut, and no ringers there. Here therefore she determined to spend the remainder of her days, and built an hermitage, living on herbs and sometimes on milk, which she sent for to a place called the Hayle. The king, in consideration of her birth or piety, or both, granted her an annuity of £. 30. " Rex præcepit vicecomiti He- " reford quod omnes terras & tenementa que fuerunt " Petri de Limesey in Monyton & Dilew caperentur " in manum regis, & quod de exitibus eorundem sol- " veret annuatim Caterinæ de Audley reclusæ de " Ledbury 30 li[f]."

A figure of a priest in black marble without arms or inscription, now whitewashed and set upright in the north chapel is called St. Katherine.

I suppose the fortification alluded to by Mr. Camden [g] is that called Wall hills, a mile north-west of the town, which from its name [q. d. Vallum] seems evidently Roman. Mr. Skip had certain lands called Wall hills, where about 30 or 40 acres are encompassed with a high mound, which has three entrances, one called the King's gate, and on the south side was formerly a vineyard. In plowing here have been found spear and arrow heads, brass coins, horseshoes of an antique form, and the bones of men [g]. Further to the east on the edge of the county is a large square double camp called Herefordshire beacon: and about the same distance south-east is Bransill castle, a quadrangular oblong with round towers, double trenched, and of great antiquity. This edge of the county was defended by a line of fortifications from another Wall hill by Thornbury down to Dunington, where, on the edge of the county, is a square camp, called the Vineyards. Of these the first was at Birdenbury. East of this a similar one larger at Grendon Bishop: a third in the adjoining parish of Docklow: a larger south at Risbury.

[c] The present lord chief justice baron Skinner is a descendant of this Edward. Robert Skinner successively bishop of Bristol, Oxford, and Worcester, was of the same family.
[d] Tan. 178. [e] Lel. VIII. 87. [f] Pat. 2. H. IV. p. 3. 14, 15. [g] Blount MS.

Four miles east of Ledbury on the left of the road to Tewksbury in a glen of the Malvern hills stands Bransill castle, square, each side about 40 yards, with four round towers at the corners, double moated, only a tower of the gate remaining. It belongs now to lord Somers.

Lenthal earls, in Aylmestre parish, belonged to the earl of March, now to Richard Payne Knight, esq; of Downton, where he has lately rebuilt his house in form of a castle. The tythes belonged to Wigmore abbey. Queen Elizabeth granted them to Richard lord Riche, with a meadow called Pungull or Mones meadow, (i. e. Nuns meadow, from mona a nun), which belonged to the nuns of Lyngebroke [h].

Lenthal Starker had its name from one of its lords under the Mortimers earls of March. Mr. Blount saw in the hands of one of the inhabitants the following record relating to it. "Concessum est Aliciæ "Stanage per communitatem villæ de Leynthale "Starkers quod dcã Alicia nec executores sui nun- "quam debent implacitari de reparatione unius co- "lumbarii destructi, & quod dcã Alicia omni anno "postquam sit sepulta die anniversarii sui habebit "Placebo & Dirige cum 3 sacerdotibus & missam in "crastino imperpetuum. In cujus rei testimoninm "huic scripture prædicta communitas sigilla sua sit "appositа. Dat. ap Leynthale predict. 7 H. IV." The manor belongs to Mr. Knight.

Shobdon church was built by Oliver de Merlymond steward to Hugh de Mortimer about 1140, and a priory of canons founded near it, removed for want of water to Eye near the Lugg at Aymeston and thence to Wigmore. The original chapel of St. Julian's thatched was standing disused when Mr. Blount wrote [i].

Higher up two miles south-west of the Lug is Shobdon Court, the seat of lord viscount Bateman.

The greater part of the parish though not of the town of Presteigne lies in this county [k].

Stepleton castle, near Presteign, belonged to the Mortimers, and by a daughter went to the Cornwalls [l]. It now belongs to the earl of Oxford.

Lingain gave name to an antient family from the reign of Henry III. or before. Sir Henry Lingain married Alice daughter of sir Walter Pye, had issue 19 children; and the remainder of an estate much wasted by the civil wars descended among seven daughters [m]. Sir Henry had besieged the castle of Brompton Brian, and burnt the town, and his estate was sequestered to make good the damages. After an inventory had been taken of his effects, sir Robert Harley waited on his widow, and having asked her if it was complete, and she had signed it, presented it to her with all his right thereto.

The following warrant was granted by Richard de Lingain 4 Henry IV.

"Richard de Lingein empowrt dreuth comission "nostre tres doux seigneur le prince deins le counte "de Hereford & les Merches adjoinant. A toutz y "ceux qui cestes lettres verront ou ouront salutz. "Sachez noy aver grantè as un Janin de Brampton "loyal & liege home a nostre seigneur le roy & a ses "servantz de vendre & acheter bestes & berbes deins "le counte de Hereford & le marche adjoinant sans "empechement ou arreste de nulluy come loyal & "liege homme a son propre use & encrese sans re- "freshment des rebelles de Gales. Et cest ma letter "serra son garrant. En tesmoygnance de quele chore "a y ceste cay mis mon scale. Don a Lemestre le xi "iour de Julet le ann de regne de roy Henrie le "quarte aprest le conquest quarte."

Near the church is the castle mount [n]. The manor is divided between the earl of Oxford and lord Bateman.

"The town of Leominster is metely large, and "hath good buildings of tymbre. The antiquite of "the town is most famous by a monastery of nunnes "that Merwaldus, king of the Marches, built there, "and endowed it with all the land thereabout, saving "only the lordship now called Kingsland, and it is sup- "posed of clerkes that the old name of the town "toke beginning of the nunnes, and was called in "Welsh Llanlheny, i. e. locus vel fanum monialium, and "not of a lion [o] that is written to have appeared to "king Merwald, upon which vision he began, as it "is said, to build this nunnery. Other kings of the "Merches immediately following king Merewald "were benefactors unto it. Some say that the nun- "nery was after in the Danes wars destroyed, and "that after a college of prebends set there. The "certainty is known that the abbey of Shaftsbury "had rule at Lemster, and possessed much lands "there, and sent part of the reliques of St. Ed- "ward the Martyr to be adored there. King "Henry I. annexed the lands of Lemster to his "abbey of Reading, and then was a cell of monks "instituted at Lemster by the abbots of Reading. "There is but one paroch church in Leominster, but "it is large, somewhat dark, and of antient building, "insomuch that it is a great likelihood that it is the "church that was somewhat afore the Conquest. "The church of the priory was hard joined to the "east end of the paroche church, and was but a "small thing. Some say that the monks of the "priory said that they had the scull of the head of "Merewald and Ethelmund, kings of Merch. Mr. "Hackluit told me, that the body of king Mere- "wald was found in a wall in the old church of "Wenlok. The town of Lemster, by reason of "their principal wool, used great draping of cloth, "and thereby it flourished. Syns of later dayes it "chanced that the cities of Hereford and Worcester "complained of the frequency of people that came "to Lemster in prejudice of both their markets in "the shire towns, and also in hindringe their draping, "whereupon the Saturday market was removed from "Lemster, and a market on Friday was newly as- "signed unto it. Syns that time the town of Lemster "hath decayid. The common fame of the people "about Lemster is that king Merewald and some of "his successors had a castle or palace on an hill side, "by the town of Leominster, half a mile off by east. "The place is now called Comfort castle, where now "be some tokens of diches where buildings have "been. The people of Lemster and thereabouts "come once a year to this place to sport and play. "There was a castle at Kingsland, two miles west- "north-

Leominster.

Comfort castle.

Kingsland castle.

[h] Blount. [i] Blount's MS. [k] Ib. [l] Ib. [m] Ib. [n] Ib. [o] Q. if Llan lieus be not the Lion's church.

" north-weſt from Lemſter, the diches whereof and " part of the keep be yet ſeen by the weſt part of " Kingſland church. Conſtant fame ſaith that king " Merewald ſometimes lay at this place. Syns of " later tymes it longed to the earl of Marche, now " to the king [p]."

Leominſter was antient demeſne of the crown, and allotted by the Confeſſor to Eddith his wife, with 16 members [q]. At the Conqueſt it was governed by eight præpoſiti or chief officers of the king, eight bedelli (who were a kind of under bailifs), and eight radicheniſtres or free tenants, with 138 villans and 75 bordarers. The wood was ſix miles long, and three broad, ſince much reduced. But it appears that then they began to aſſart their woods, and clear the land for tillage. Here was at the ſame time an hawk's airey. The town ſtood antiently moſtly on the weſt bank which leads towards Hereford, till, William de Breos lord of Breknoc having burnt great part of it on his revolt from king John, it was rebuilt as now.

The town is ſituate in a very fruitful, well watered vale, is well built, and carries on a conſiderable trade with its wool, feltry, and leather. It gives title of baron to the earl of Pomfret, whoſe grandfather ſir William Fermor was ſo created 1692, 4 William and Mary.

Edward VI. intended to incorporate it, but dying before the patent paſſed the great ſeal, queen Mary incorporated it, a. r. 1, by name of bailif, and 24 burgeſſes, and granted them a ſecond fair, beſides that granted by Henry II. James I. added a 3d. The markethouſe was rebuilt 1634, having the arms of moſt of the gentlemen on this ſide the county as contributors to it. In the reign of Edward III. here were perſons of eſtate in this manor of the names of Shermy, Mappenore, Lorymer, and Romain: the two firſt remain in certain cloſes, and a lane. The Bradfords had a manſion houſe at the ſouth end of the town till the middle of the 15th century. This borough is ſo conſiderable both for receipt and ſituation, that ſometimes the general aſſizes are held here, and in particular in 1610, the peſtilence being at Hereford, the ſummer aſſizes were held here, and Roger Cadwallader (who was born at Stretton by Sugwas), a ſecular prieſt, was condemned for taking orders beyond ſea, drawn, hanged, and quartered Aug. 19, 1610, and his quarters hanged up at the four ends of the town, and his head ſet up in the market place. The tradition is that the carpenter who made the gallows was afterwards, for ſome crime, hanged on it himſelf [r].

Mr. Blount derives the name from Leofric, who was earl of the Mercians, to whom this country was ſubject, and under the Confeſſor, in the beginning of whoſe reign he died, he is ſtyled comes Herefordenſis [s]. He was probably a benefactor to this minſter or church, which Leland inſinuates to have been built a little before the Conqueſt; ſo that whatever name the town went by before, it was probably called after him.

Notwithſtanding the account of the religious foundation at Leominſter given both by Leland and Camden, biſhop Tanner thinks Merewald's foundation was for ſeculars, who were ſucceeded by nuns, and they by Benedictine monks, after Henry I. gave it to his new founded abbey at Reading 1125, valued at £. 660. 16s. 8d. [t] All that remains of the building is a ſmall chapel, now the workhouſe, and a very antient aile of the pariſh church.

Henry I. gave Lemſter to his new founded abbey at Reading by his charter dated 1125, and it was made a cell thereto. Fines were levied in the abbot of Reading's court here. Hugh biſhop of Hereford granted to the abbot of Reading licence to conſtitute and amove the deans and monks here as he ſhould think fit, ſalva in aliis dignitate Herefordenſis eccleſiæ [u]. To this priory belonged quædam camera quæ vocatur le frere chamber & quædam capella eidem cameræ adjuncta. This frere chamber is that gate houſe chamber, now the town chamber, and the chapel is the free ſchool houſe. Q. if the Lady chapel. Leland ſays the priory church adjoined to the pariſh church, but long ſince demoliſhed, though part of the walls were lately ſtanding. Though the pariſh be very great, and the priory was richly endowed, yet, after the diſſolution, the church was left ſo poor, that only £. 10. was allowed to a vicar: for the very tithes and profit which belonged to the Eaſter book were granted by Elizabeth to John Farnham and heirs, and the priory church yard of two acres, with a tenement and garden in Burgeſs ſtreet late belonging to the priory to John Herbert, gent. and heirs [x].

The church conſiſts of a nave and two ailes, the north aile ſuppoſed by its ſtyle the body of the old priory church, is ſhut out from the preſent and only uſed for burials. In it were in Mr. Blount's time an alabaſter figure of a lady, without inſcription or arms, ſaid to be a benefactrix in building the great weſt window, and by gift of ſome commons to the town. Probably Matilda Mowbray, of whom is extant this charter. " Ego Matilda Mowbray pura " virginitate mea cum conſenſu avunculi mei Wal- " teri Clifford militis do & concedo liberis hominibus " ville de Leominſter totas illas quinque paſturas ja- " centes & exiſtentes inter Luggfoorde & Hurſtwall " wood."

Near this a braſs plate for Alice wife of Philip Reding. 10 Aug. 1473.

In the chancel: Ralph and Elizabeth Hakluit. He died 1 May, 1507, Miles Hakluit, gent. 21 June, 1621.

All theſe are now gone.

On the ſouth ſide of the chancel is our Lady's chapel, the benefactions to which are particularized in Liber cartarum capellæ B M. monachor. Leominſtria, penes John Stead, gen. Edith de Aula (Hall) gave a burgage or houſe in Mappenoreſlane here ad ſuſtentandum pauperes tempore cariſtiæ, and to this day there is a cloſe under the priory called the Almonry.

Here were three chantries, and the petition of the inhabitants to Edward VI. to renew their charter ſets forth, that here were 2000 houzeling people, and that the three chantry prieſts ſerved the grammar, writing, and A B C ſchools, that the king had within their borough rents to the amount of £. 53. 11s. that they had 10 ſtone bridges to maintain, and prayed him to give them their chantry and cottage rents, and renew their charter, which queen Mary complied with.

The tradition about the caſtle is now worn out, and the yearly ſolemnity of ſports there diſcontinued; but the place pointed at by Leland muſt probably be the mount which overlooks the Hay

[p] Lel. IV. 175. 177, 178. V. 10. VI. 69.
[q] Domeſd. f. 180.
[r] Blount.
[s] Malmsbury.
[t] Tan. 173.
[u] Blount's MS.
[x] Ib.

lane.

lane[y]. And in truth that great ridge of hills in poſſeſſion of Walter Brabaſon, eſq; was antiently called the Caſtle of Comfort's hills, and were heretofore given for maintenance of a chantry prieſt in Ludlow church [a].

"From Lemſter to Eaton, a mile by weſt-north-"weſt. One William Hackluit that was with king "Henry V. at the battle of Agincourt, ſet up a houſe "at this village, and purchaſed land to it. He had "one St. George, a nobleman of France to his pri-"ſoner. Hackluit now living is the third in deſcent "of the houſe of Eaton. The chief and antienteſt of "the Hackluits have been gentlemen in tymes out of "memory, and they took their names of the forreſt "of Cluid in Radnorſhire, and they had a caſtle and "habitation not far from Radnor. There were three "knights of theſe Hakluits about the time of king "Edward III. whereof one was named Edmond. It "chanced in king Edward III.'s time that one of the "Hakluits took part with Leoline Prince of Wales "againſt king Edward III. whereupon his lands were "attainted and devolved to the king, or to Mortimer "lord of Radnor, and never were reſtored. There "was at that time one of the Hakluits that fled into "the mountains of Wales, and lived as a baniſhed "man, but he after was pardoned, and having a "knight that tended him becauſe he was his godſon "or kinſman and had no iſſue, he made him his heir, "and thoſe lands yet remain to the eldeſt houſe of the "Hackluits [a]."

I ſought for the manſion of Mr. Leland's friend, to whom he profeſſes himſelf obliged for many particulars reſpecting this county, but found only a decaying farm houſe, the property of Edward Brabazon, earl of Meath, near two miles from Leominſter, to which Eyton is an hamlet. The Brabazons have a vault in Leominſter church.

"Croft, the manor of the Crofts ſett on the browe "of an hille ſomewhat declining, ditched and walled "caſtle like [b]."

Croft caſtle was the ſeat of the knightly family of that name ever ſince the Conqueſt, and is ſtill in ſir Archer Croft, whoſe grandfather, ſon of Dr. Croft, biſhop of Hereford 1662, was created a baronet 24 Charles II. Of this family was ſir Richard Croſt, who, by Edward IVth's ſpecious promiſe of ſparing the ſon of Henry VI. after the battle of Tewkſbury was induced to give him up. In the park is a large camp, double ditched, called the Ambrey [c], a name common to other earthworks, as in Eſſex, Hants, from whence is an extenſive proſpect. To this is oppoſed a camp called the Warren or Wapley hill between Eywood and Wigmore. At Avemeſtre, ſouth-weſt of it is a ſmaller ſquare camp.

At Mortimer's croſs, in this neighbourhood, Edward IV. when earl of March, defeated Jaſper Tudor, earl of Pembroke, 1460, and killed 2000 of his men.

Netherwood manor in Thornbury pertained to the Mortimers, afterwards to Richard duke of York before and after he uſurped the crown, but at the battle of Boſworth, William Baſkervyle of the houſe of Eresby obtained it. There remains the ſite of a noble houſe and a park of 1000 acres. Thomas Baſkervyle ſold it in the 16th century to Read, he to ſir John Vere, from whom it came to Aubrey de Vere, earl of Oxford, who ſold it to Edward Pit of Kyre, eſq; whoſe ſon James held it 1675. This place gave birth to Roger Mortimer, earl of March, and the firſt Robert Devereux earl of Eſſex. Edward VI. granted it, with the park, to Edward duke of Somerſet. Afterwards it went to Devereux, then to Baſkervyle as above [d].

Rochford near two miles from the north-eaſt boun- Rochford.
dary of the county is ſurrounded by Worceſterſhire. This was antiently but a chapel of eaſe to Tenbury there till Robert biſhop of Hereford cauſed a church yard to be made here ad refugium pauperum as his inſtrument ſets forth [e].

"Webley is a market town, where is a goodly Weobley.
"caſtle, but ſomewhat in decay. It was the chief "lordſhip of the Devereux. There is a fair caſtle "of my lord Ferrars. The caſtle of Lenſhall, "of ſome written Leonſhall, is a two mile from Lyonſhall caſtle.
"Webley. It belonged alſo to the Devereux, and "there is a park. The very old lords of Lenſhall "were the Marburres. This caſtle came to Devereux "by the heir general of Marburge [f]."

Weobley belonged antiently to the Lacies, was afterward the chief barony of the Verdons, from whom failing heirs male it devolved by a daughter to Devereux. The ſite of the caſtle is viſible on the ſouth ſide of the town. The church is large and well built, having a tall ſpire ſteeple, the top whereof with the croſs was blown down about 1640, and not repaired 1675. One bar of iron which fell with it weighed 300lb. In the chancel an alabaſter figure of a knight in armour, on his helmet, I. H. S. No arms or inſcription. They are probably Verdons. In the church a braſs, the inſcription imperfect; Of your charite pray for the ſoul of Watkin Garway and Agnes his wife. On a plate, W. T. G. Theſe Garways had a manſion-houſe at Ley, bought and laid to that of Bridges. Their arms were A. a pile ſurmounted by a feſs between four leopards' heads G. In the chapel belonging to Bridges of Ley is a monument with this inſcription on a braſs plate and the arms of Bridges with quarterings.

Hic jacet Roulandus Brugge de Ley in com Heref. gen. & Margareta Kelom uxor ejus. Qui quidem Rolandus obiit die ..... anno Dñi Jh .... Et dicta Margareta obiit 18 die Novemb. anno Dñi Jhs Quorum animabus propitietur Deus.

In St. Michael's chapel belonging to Little Sarnefield and the Morningtons its lords, are the arms of Verdon in the windows, and the alabaſter figure of a prieſt, of whoſe inſcription was legible 1675 only obiit and cujus animæ [g].

Here is a ſmall market on Thurſdays and three fairs. Here was antiently a park: ſome ſay two; for there are yet certain grounds called the Park grounds and the Park meadow. The manor belonged to Lanthoni abbey by Gloceſter, and was granted by Philip and Mary to ſir Edward Haſtings.

Weobley is an antient corporation and market town. It has two charity ſchools. The caſtle was taken by Stephen from the empreſs Maud. Six miles north-weſt from Webley, which Leland calls two, is Lenſhall, Leonſhall, or Lyonſhall caſtle and park, which, as well as Weobley, belongs now to lord Weymouth.

North of Weobley, between Great Delwin and Eardſland, is a ſquare camp.

In Sarnesfield church-yard is a monument of John Sarnesfield.
Abell the moſt famous architect of his time. After he was above 90 he engraved on a grave-ſtone for himſelf

[y] It ſeems to be called in Taylor's map High Land.
[a] Lel. IV. 178. Among the Harleian MSS. N°. 7369, is a ſurvey of the townſhip of Eyton, by R. Hackluit, probably Leland's friend, and editor of the Voyages.
[b] Lel. Ib.
[c] Aubrey.
[d] Blount MS.
[e] Lib. niger Heref. Blount.
[f] Lel. IV. 175. VII. 151.
[g] Blount.

himſelf his own effigy kneeling with thoſe of his two wives, and the emblems of his profeſſion, rule, compaſs, and ſquare, and this epitaph compoſed by himſelf:

This craggy ſtone a covering is for an architector's bed,
That lofty buildings raiſed high, yet now lyes low his head.
His line and rule, ſo death concludes, are locked up in ſtore;
Build they that liſt or they that wiſt for he can build no more.

His houſe of clay could hold no longer,
May heaven's joy build him a ſtronger.
John Abel.
Vive ut vivas in vitam æternam.

He built the market-houſes of Brecnoc, Knighton, and Lemſter, and the timber work of the new church at Dore. But above all being in Hereford when the Scots beſieged it 1645, he made a ſort of mills to grind corn which were of great uſe to the beſieged, and for which Charles I. afterwards honoured him with the title of one of his majeſty's carpenters. He died 1674, aged 97 [h].

Hampton Court.

"Hampton, ſometime a goodly manor place of the "barons of Burforde, now of Conesby ripa ſiniſtra "Lug. Here is a ſtone bridge over Lug [i]."

"Hampton court was ſumptuouſly erected by one "ſir ——— Lenthall, knt. that thus roſe by ſervice. "He was yeoman of the robes to king Henry IV. "and being a gallant fellow, either a daughter or "very near kinſwoman of the king's fell in love with "him, and in continuance was wedded unto him. "Whereupon after he fell into eſtimation and had "given to him £. 1000. by the year for maintenance "of him and his wife and their heirs, among which "landes he had Ludlow for one parte. This Lenthall "was victorious at the battle of Agencourt, and took "many priſoners there, by which prey he beganne "the new buildings of Hampton court, and brought "from an hill a ſpringe of water, and made a little "pool within the top of his houſe. This Lenthall "had a ſon by his wife: but he after a few years "died. Then left he of to build any more at "Hampton, and ſoon after his wife died. Then "after he married the daughter of the lord Grey of "Codnor [i]."

At Hampton was an old conſecrated chapel of eaſe, but a new one was built by ſir Rowlands, with curious painted windows repreſenting the deſcent from the croſs, arms, &c. On the roof was this coat, on a feſs three roundels, Q. Lenthall. The roof of the parlour was alſo full of arms [k].

Hampton Court, according to the following inſcription under an original portrait of that prince, was begun by Henry IV. himſelf.

"Henry the IVth, king of England, who laid the "firſt ſtone of this houſe, and left this picture in it, "when he gave it to Lental, who ſold it to Cornwall "of Bamfield, who ſold it to the anceſtors of the lord "Coningſby, in the reign of Henry VI."

Sir Thomas Coningſby was knighted by queen Elizabeth 1591, and his grandſon Thomas was created by king William baron Coningsby of Clanbraſil in Ireland, where he had diſtinguiſhed himſelf at the battles of the Boyne and Ahgrim, and by king George I. Baron Coningsby of Coningsby in Lincolnſhire, and afterwards earl, with remainder to his eldeſt daughter Margaret and her heirs male. She ſucceeded to the title on her father's deceaſe 1729, and reſided till her death at this tower-like manſion, pleaſantly ſituate in a valley on a rapid river under Dynmaur hill, ſurrounded by woods romantically diſpoſed in hanging terraces contraſted by corn fields on the oppoſite ridge. She married ſir Michael Newton, knight of the bath, by whom ſhe had one ſon John, who, dying an infant, the title is extinct. On the deceaſe of lady Margaret the eſtate devolved to her ſiſter lady Frances, relict of ſir Charles Hanbury Williams, knight of the Bath, by whom ſhe had two daughters, the elder of whom was married to William Anne Holles Capel, earl of Eſſex, to whoſe ſon George viſcount Maldon the eſtate devolved on her ladyſhip's death 1779. The park is eight miles round, but the woods have been ſadly thinned of late to redeem a heavy mortgage.

The lord of the manor of Pencomb by antient cuſtom claims a pair of gilt ſpurs as an herriot from every mayor of Hereford who dies in his office [k].

"Sutton is three miles from Hereford, where ap- "peare notable ruines of ſum auncyent and great "building. It is thowght then, and a great likelyhod "is that it was ſumtyme the manſion of king Offa at "ſuch time as Kencheſtre ſtood, or els Herford was "a begynning [l]." Giraldus Cambrenſis in his life of Ethelbert calls it Kinges Sutton, and Southtown Walls, and ſaw ruins of the caſtle [m]. This is a large camp in St. Michael's Sutton.

Between Sutton and Hereford in Sutton St. Nicholas pariſh in a common meadow called the Wergins ſtood two ſtones for a water mark, one upright, and the other laid acroſe it, probably remains of a cromlech. In the late civil wars about 1652, they were removed 240 paces nobody knew how, but becauſe of their bulk, of courſe, aſcribed to the Devil, and called the Devil's ſtone. One of them required nine yoke of oxen to draw it to its former ſite.

Below on the Lug lie thoſe beautiful meadows called Lugg meadows, containing ſome hundred acres of moſt fertile ground not eaſily to be paralleled for ſo great a quantity together [n].

"Marden village is abowt a myle from Sutton, and "harde by ys a hill, wher, as men ſay, St. Ethel- "bright was behedded. At the village now is a fair "chirche dedicate to him. I think verely that he "was ſlain at Sutton in king Offa's houſe. The "name of Marden ſeemeth to expreſs the Martyr's "hill [o]." The pariſh church of Marden was built on the ſpot were Ethelbert was firſt buried [p].

Morden is antient demeſne land of the crown in Domeſday. It comprehends Sutton, St. Michael's, alias Weſt Aſton, the ſeat of Thomas Price, eſq; with a free chapel, the vale, Ferne, and Fromanton. Here is a high piece of ground called Sutton Wall, ſuppoſed the ſite of Offa's palace. The top is level, and eſtimated to contain 30 acres, ſurrounded with a continued bank of earth, the entrances at the north and ſouth ends, in the middle a low place called the Cellar. A ſilver ring of antique form was found here in digging not many years ſince. Henry de Monemouth held lands here by ſervice pro qua debet

[h] Blount.
[i] Lel. V. 66. See alſo VII. 152.
[k] Blount.
[l] Lel. IV. 176, 177.
[m] Giraldus. Cambr. vit. Ethelb. ap. Lel. It VIII. 88.
[n] Lel. V. 66.
[o] Liber niger Hereford, f. 227. Blount.

ſummonire

ſummonire dominos de Wiggemore apud Wiggemore, Braos apud Gingſton, & de Cary apud Webbeley, & diſtringere eos pro debitis dni regis cum neceſſe fuerit, & conducere theſaurum dni regis a caſtro Hereford uſque London, & habere quolibet die xiid. Et quia ſervicium debile eſt ideo mutatur de conſenſu ejuſdem Henrici. Ita quod dictus Henricus reddat dno regi per an. xiid. Et faciet ſervitium 40mæ partis feodi unius militis, & ſic quietus ſit de predicto ſervicio [q]. So in Marſton John le Wafre held two virgates per ſervitium conducendi theſaurum dni regis de Hereford uſque ad London quotieſcunque ſummonitus fuerit per vicecomitem cum uno equo & capello ferreo ſumptibus dni regis, viz. xiid. quolibet die verſus London, & in redeundo ſumptibus ſuis propriis [q]. The well into which Ethelbert's body was thrown ſtill retains his name. The church ſtands over it, built without doubt to his memory, and placed ſo near the river Lug, viz. within 10 yards, that high floods overflow it, yet it is pretended the muddy waters never intermingle with this well. The vicarage is conſiderable by the plenty of good orchards in the pariſh, whence the vicar in a good year had 50 hogſheads of cider for tithe.

Great Marclay belonged at the Conqueſt to Roger de Lacy, afterwards to the Baluns, from whom it came to the crown, and was by Edward I. granted to Edmund Mortimer. 22 Richard II. the laſt Roger Mortimer, earl of Marche, died ſeiſed of it, and demiſed it to Thomas Walwayn for his life. Coming again to the crown it was purchaſed of queen Elizabeth by Thomas Kirle of Walford, eſq; who had iſſue ſir John Kirle, created baronet 3 Charles I. who had iſſue Francis, who died in his life time leaving iſſue ſir John Kirle, bart. living 1675, having no ſons, but one of his daughters Vincentia married to ſir John Erneley, knt. Near the church ſtood Mortimer's caſtle, the ſite viſible, and another perhaps more antient, called Ellingham caſtle, not far from the town, the ſite overgrown with wood, and called the Quarry wood. The other third of the pariſh being a manor by itſelf, and the capital meſſuage called Helions, corruptly Heiens, belonged to William Ludlow, and in the reign of Edward III. to the Audleys, whoſe heireſs brought it to Ralph lord Stafford, and Edmund lord Stafford ſold it to Thomas Walwayne 4 Henry IV. Queen Mary by commiſſion under the great ſeal dated 25 Nov. a. r. 1, authorized Henry earl of Arundel to confer the honour of knighthood on William Wareham and Richard Walwayn, which was done the 30th of the ſame month, they having been firſt made eſquires to the queen's body. Richard Walwayn, anceſtor of this family t. Edward III. married Joan daughter and heir of Walter Helion of Helion here, which is now the chief ſeat of the Walwayns. Sir Walter Helion married the daughter and heir of Walter Walſh, and had been in the Holy War, and lay croſs-legged in Aſperton chancel, which falling down a few years ſince, the monument was removed to Helion. In Marclay church is an alabaſter monument with a lady holding a pair of beads, no inſcription, but arms of Grandiſon and Mortimer; probably ſhe was Blanche daughter of Roger Mortimer earl of March, third of that name, and wife of John lord Audley t. Richard II. Another monument in freeſtone, without arms or inſcription, has the effigies of a knight and lady, ſuppoſed the great Roger Mortimer, executed at the Elms in Smithfield, firſt buried in the Grey Friars, London, removed as Stowe to Wigmore, but Mr. Blount ſuppoſes hither, and Joan his wife, daughter of Peter de Genevil. Sir John Kirle, bart. built a chapel on the north ſide, where is a monument for himſelf and lady Sibylla. The manſion houſe of Chandos in this pariſh is ſuppoſed to give name to that family, or they to it. 28 Edward III Robert Brug ſold to Peter Grandiſon the lands which John Chandos held in Marcle [r].

Marclay hill.

Mr. Camden's credulity about Marclay hill is perfectly ridiculous. That ground lying on a clayey ſtratum ſhould in a very wet ſeaſon ſlide to a lower place is natural enough: but that it ſhould ſlip up hill would be a wonder indeed. Yet to this account Fuller[s] adds that it travelled 14 hours, and aſcended 12 fathoms up hill, leaving a chaſm, 400 feet wide, and 520 long, the whole field that moved being twenty acres. It overthrew Kinnaſton chapel, removing a yew tree in the yard from eaſt to weſt, and totally changing the face of the country.

Wormeſley.

At Wormeſley, called alſo de Pyonia, from its vicinity to King's Pion, Gilbert Talbot, t. John, founded a priory of black canons, valued at £. 83. 10s. [t] Sir Walter Map was lord and benefactor. Sir Nicholas de Wormeley was antient lord [u]. At Canon Pion adjoining is a ſquare camp, ſouth of which is the great work at Credon hill before deſcribed, about two miles from Eaton wall and one from Kentcheſter, the graff inward as well as outward, but vaſt, incloſing about 40 acres, which Aubrey pronounces not to be Roman; and eaſt of Credon hill at Burghill is a third ſquare camp. There is another near Letton.

Pembridge.

Pembridge, a ſmall market town on the Arrow, the market now diſuſed, gave name to an antient family t. Stephen, of whom Richard was knight of the garter t. Edward III. and buried in Hereford cathedral, and Thomas was knighted at that great ſolemnity 34 Edward I. at Carliſle before his laſt expedition againſt Scotland. It belonged to the canons of St. Guthlac at Hereford. The Mortimers held it t. Edward I. Henry I. gave it a charter of liberties; but the market is much declined. They have a fair on May day, called Cowſlip fair, and another in November called Woodrock fair. The caſtle in Welſh Newton pariſh had for its governor 7 Henry III. William lord Cantelupe. In Henry VIIth's reign the knights hoſpitalers of Dynmore held it. Margaret counteſs of Richmond held it with the manor of Welſh Newton [x]. After the diſſolution it was in the hands of one Baynham, who being attainted t. Elizabeth, forfeited it to the crown. David Baker bought it as part of the lands and poſſeſſions called Richmond's lands, and ſold it to ſir Walter Pye, ſen. and the laſt ſir Walter Pye ſold it to George Kemble, gent. who repaired the ruins with timber, and made it habitable as it was 1675. This Robert Kemble, among other valiant royaliſts, ſtoutly oppoſed the rebellious regicides Sept. 6, 1651, at Sudbury gate, Worceſter, whereby the king's retreat was ſecured, and he received eleven wounds, yet was living 1675. The park is ploughed up, and the adjoining chapel demoliſhed [y].

Monklow.

Monklow, vulgo Monkland, near Pembridge, had

[q] Plac. Cor. 20 Edward I.
[r] Blount.
[s] Worthies, Hereford, p. 34. Q. if this ſpot is called in Taylor's Map, Wonder.
[t] Tan. 177.
[u] Blount.
[x] Regiſt. Dynmore.
[y] Blount.

a ſmall Benedictine priory, founded by Ralph Toni the elder, in the reign of William Rufus, cell to Conches abbey in Normandy, and ſuppreſſed as alien 2 Henry V.[z] This manor belonged to Wotton priory, c. Warwick, and was granted by Henry V. to ſir Rowland Lenthal, and Edward Windſor[a]. At Ivington adjoining is a ſquare camp of 30 acres on a hill[b].

Stretford. Stretford is a ſmall town, giving name to an hundred. In the church on the north ſide is the ſtone figure of a knight and lady: on his ſhoulders the arms of Delabere Az. a bend between 2 bendlets and ſix martlets O. A monument in the chancel has the ſame arms. In the chancel is a large caſe of ſtone, wherein tradition ſays were heretofore the effigies of St. Coſmas and Damian, to whom the church is ſuppoſed to be dedicated[c].

Winſley. Winſley or Windley came to the Berytons now Berringtons by marriage with the heir of Winderley

Hope. t. Edward III. The houſe is in Hope pariſh under Dynmore, and as a badge of its antiquity there is carved over the porch in wood a croſs with theſe words, Per ſignum Tau libera nos Domine.

On one of the croſs beams of the hall is carved Bendy of 5, probably arms of Winderley[d].

Dynmore. "The hill of Dineſmore is very ſteep, high, well "wooded, and a ſpecula to ſee all the country about. "There ſtandeth a litle by weſt of the very toppe "of Dinemore hill on the left hand as I rode a "commandry with a faire place that belonged to the "order of the knights of St. John of Hieruſalem in "London[e]." The figure of St. John is over the gate, and on a window of the ruins of this houſe was an inſcription SANCTE Bo Ro, ſuppoſed an invocation of him as the patron ſaint equivalent to St. John our pledge or defence[f]. It is rather the motto of the arms of that order[g].

Titley. At Titley, another village on this river, was a cell to Tyrone abbey in France[h]. This alien priory, whoſe founder and order are unknown, was ſuppreſſed 2 Henry V. and given to Wincheſter college, to which it now belongs.

Keynton. Keynton, or Kington, a market and clothing town has a freeſchool and charity ſchool. On a hill above it to the north, called Bradnor mountain, is a ſquare camp.

Leonhall Stretford. Leland ſays, the very old lords of Leonhall Stretford were the Marburyes. It came to the Devereuxes by their heir general. Inq. 26 Henry VI. found that Elizabeth wife of Walter Devereux was daughter and heir of ſir John Merbury, but this manor was long before in the family of Devereux. In the beginning of the reign of Henry III. ſir Stephen d'Ebroicis was lord of this manor and caſtle, ſucceeded by ſir William his brother, and he by another William. William Tuchet a baron of this realm was lord here in the reign of Edward I. who granted him freewarren, and a market here and a fair, both long ſince diſuſed. The caſtle was demoliſhed, and the town decayed t. Edward II. Bartholemew Badleſmere died ſeized of this caſtle and manor. Sir Stephen d'Ebroicis appropriated the church to the canons of Pyon, which grant was confirmed by William ſon of ſir Richard Tyrrel, and by the biſhop, dean, and chapter of Hereford, reſerving to himſelf the power of aſſeſſing the vicar's portion. The ſaid Stephen by another deed, called Magna Charta Domini Stephani de Ebroicis gave his mill here to the church and canons of St. Leonard of Pyon. William Golafer was alſo poſſeſſed of lands here, and gave part of them to the priory of Wormeley[i]. The knights of St. John of Jeruſalem had lands at Home in this manor pertaining to their preceptory of Dynmore[k]. On the ſouth ſide of the church is a chapel appropriated to Mr. Pember's houſe at Ellſden in this pariſh, and another on the north ſide belongs to the More. The caſtle ſtood almoſt contiguous to the church. It ſeems to have been a noble building, but now nothing remains of it but the outer walls. It belonged with the manor 1675, to Frances ducheſs of Somerſet, who was eldeſt daughter and coheir of the firſt Robert earl of Eſſex, and relict of William earl and marquis of Hertford and duke of Somerſet[l].

The family of Scudamore came over with the Conqueror, and ſettled firſt in Wiltſhire at Norton and Upton Scudamores, at the laſt of which are traces of their manſion-houſe. Thomas younger ſon of ſir Peter of that place married Clarice daughter of the lady Clara of Ewias 28 Edward III. whoſe name he aſſumed. He ſettled at Homme or Home-Lacy, which he had from the Tregozes by inheritance. John Scudamore was created a baronet by James I. and by Charles I. viſcount Scudamore of Sligo, and died 1671, having reſtored the tithes of this pariſh church[m]. Here was a Premonſtratenſian abbey, founded by William Fitz Warine t. Henry III.[n]

On the oppoſite ſide of the Wye to Holm Lacey is Fownhope, a village between two ſquare camps, one called Wobury, q. d. Woldbury, on Capler hills at Brockhampton, double trenched, near half a mile long and narrow[o]. The other ſquare and nameleſs[p].

North of this is the pariſh of Stoke Dormington is Ethelbert's camp on a hill.

Roſs maintains its reputation for iron works, and drives a conſiderable trade in cyder and wool. It ſtands high, but is cloſe built with old houſes. Henry III. made it a free borough, the biſhop of Hereford being its lord. It is governed by a ſerjeant and four conſtables. King Stephen granted the market to biſhop Betun. Here are four fairs. In its fine church lie the Rudhalls, antient proprietors of Rudhall in its neighbourhood, viz. Judge Rudhall and lady t. Henry VII. ſir Richard knighted at Cadiz, and others: here alſo in more obſcurity the great benefactor to this town John Kyrle, eſq. celebrated by Mr. Pope as the man of Roſs who ſpent his income of £.500 per annum, in acts of benevolence and charity, the traces of which remain in his embelliſhments of the church-yard and the road to Hereford. He died 1724, aged 84, and his manſion-houſe is now the King's arms inn. The river winds in form of a horſhoe in a beautiful vale having Wilton caſtle on its bank. The convict priſon for the [z] Blount. Tan. 173. [a] Blount. [b] Aubrey, Mon. Brit. [c] Blount. [d] Ib.

[e] Lel. IV. 176. Tan. 176. [f] Gent. Mag. 1755. p. 347.
[g] See Gent. Mag. 1784, p. 496. Dugd. Warw. p. 969. [h] Tan. 178. [i] Reg. de Wormeley, f. 19. b.
[k] Reg. Dynmore. [l] Blount.
[m] Gibſon's Memoirs of that family in his Hiſtory of Door and Home Lacy churches. [n] Tan. 178.
[o] Aubrey, Mon. Brit. [p] The dimenſions of the firſt are ſuſpicious. Taylor has both of an equal ſize and nameleſs.

biſhops of Hereford was at Roſſe, where they had a palace at the weſt end of the church-yard, ruined in Leland's time [q].

Here is a croſs called Cob's croſs, i. e. Corpus Chriſti, and a lane of the ſame name. In a houſe formerly an inn oppoſite to the king's head, is a chamber called the King's chamber, where Henry IV. lay when he went to ſee his queen then ready to lie in at Monmouth. Near the church an almſ-houſe for five or ſix poor people, founded by one Burt [r].

In the pariſh of Selleck, on the Wye, is a ſquare camp called Caradoc, and a little ſouth-weſt of it at Michael church another called Geer cop. Mr. Aubrey mentions traces of another large camp almoſt worn out by the plough but on a fine hill, and called Warre locks near Fawley, on the oppoſite ſide of the river to this.

King John only confirmed Wilton to Henry de Longcamp, for Henry I. had given it to his grandfather Hugh. Henry's grandaughter marrying Reginald Grey juſtice of Cheſter conveyed it to his family, which afterwards took title from it, the laſt lord Grey of Wilton dying 1614. Dugdale ſays nothing of Fitz Hugh marrying into this family or having anything to do here [s]. William Fitz Hugh lived t. Henry V. but Wilton was never out of the Greys from their firſt poſſeſſion 15 Edward I. to 1614 [t]. It paſſed from the Greys by marriage to the Chandos family. It has been lately purchaſed by the truſtees of Guy's hoſpital.

Eaſt of Roſs in Linton pariſh is Eccleſwall caſtle, formerly belonging to the Talbots, from whom it came by an heireſs to the Greys: the duke of Kent ſold it to Mr. Bonner, who held it 1749. In an old wall there was found about 1739 a ſilver ſeal circumſcribed S. Philippi de Henbury. Arms, a chevron indented between 6 croſs croſlets fitchè [u].

On the river Teme is Hereford parva, probably denominated like the city of Hereford from being a conſiderable paſs or ford. Hereford parva.

On one ſide of the river Frome is Aſperton, the ſeat of the Grandiſons, where was born John Grandiſon biſhop of Exeter. In an heraldic MS. of Randal Holmes, MSS. Harl. 2152, is a note of a tree in this park 60 feet high before it had any bough; then one grew out ſo low that a man on the ground might touch the end with his hand; then it grew 15 feet and a half before it had any more: the body was three fathom round, and very upright. Aſperton.

On the other ſide is Stretton Granſom or Grandiſon, where Baxter, who calls it Grantham or Grantavon, places the Circutio of Ravennas, there being a ſquare camp. Stretton Granſom.

Walter D'Evreux created viſcount Hereford by Edward VI. was the firſt Engliſh viſcount, and died 1558 [x], his ſon Richard dying in his life time left a ſon Walter who died 1576 [y], and left a ſon Robert, created earl of Eſſex and viſcount Hereford by queen Elizabeth, beheaded 1600. His ſon Robert being reſtored in blood, and dying without iſſue 1646 [z], the title of Hereford deſcended to ſir Walter D'Evreux of Warwickſhire, grandſon of the firſt viſcount by a ſecond marriage [a]. He was called up to the houſe of peers 1646, and died 1674, and was buried at Ipſwich. He was ſucceeded by his ſecond ſon Leiceſter, who died 1676, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and nameſake. He died ſingle 1682 [b], and was ſucceeded by his brother Edward, who dying 1700 without iſſue, the title devolved upon Price D'Evreux deſcended from ſir George brother of Walter the third viſcount. He died 1740. His ſon Price dying 1748 without iſſue, it went to the deſcendants of the laſt-mentioned Price's great uncle Vaughan D'Evreux, whoſe ſon Edward died 1760, and his ſon and nameſake 1783, whoſe ſon George is the preſent and 13th viſcount Hereford. Viſcounts Hereford.

[q] VIII. 86, 87. [r] Blount. [s] V. Bar. I. 402. 593. 713. [t] Dugd. ubi ſup.
[u] Gent. Mag. XIX. p. 536. 1749. [x] buried at Stow near Chartley c. Stafford.
[y] buried at Caermarthen. [z] He was the parliament's general, and was buried in Weſtminſter abbey.
[a] See Dugdale's Warwickſh. p. 641. [b] Dugdale's Baron. II. 175—182.

Rare Plants found in Herefordſhire.

Bryum rigidum. Rigid Bryum; on moiſt rocks: near Wigmore.

Conferva rigida. Rough Conferva; in the river Lug near Mortimer's Croſs.

Lichen furfuraceus. Branny Liverwort; on the park pales at Croft caſtle.

——— ſinuatus. Sinuated Liverwort; on rocks, and in ſtoney and ſhady places, near Wigmore.

Mentha rotundifolia. Round-leaved Horſemint; by the riverſide at Lydbrook, near Roſs.

Taxus baccata. The Eugh or Yew-tree; on the mountains, frequent.

The

The following letter biſhop Gibſon received from Mr. Lhwyd along with his tranſlation of Mr. Camden's account of the Welſh counties and his additions to them *. As it contains the method he obſerved, with ſome general rules relating to the orthography and pronunciation of the Welſh tongue, we have reprinted it.

SIR,

I have herewith ſent you the tranſlation of that part of the Britannia that relates to Wales, together with ſome annotations on each county. I was always ſenſible there were ſeveral perſons better qualified for this taſk than myſelf, and therefore (as you know) for ſome months declined the undertaking. But finding afterwards that thoſe gentlemen who were fitteſt for it could not have leiſure to attend it, I thought it better, with the aſſiſtance and advice of friends, to offer my beſt endeavours, than to leave it wholly to the management of ſome perſon leſs acquainted with the language and country. Thus having not entered upon this province till ſuch as were more capable declined it as inconſiſtent with their private occaſions, I hope what faults I have committed in the performance may be ſomething more excuſable.

In the tranſlation I have, without favour or prejudice, endeavoured to retain the ſenſe of the author, but whereas I have ſometimes differed in writing the Welſh names of perſons and places, I preſumed few readers would ſcruple to allow me that liberty. Nor can it derogate any thing from our excellent author's character that a native of that country ſhould pretend to a more comprehenſive knowledge of the Britiſh than himſelf. However, in this caſe, as I have not wholly written the Welſh words according to the Engliſh cuſtom, ſo neither have I kept ſtrictly to the common method of writing Welſh, but have uſed a more general alphabet whereby ſuch as are unacquainted with that language will pronounce the words much truer; and they that underſtand it will find no occaſion of miſtakes. For example, in regard the letter C in the Welſh and Iriſh is before all vowels pronounced lik K (as Cilcen is read Kilken); but in every other language obtains that pronunciation only before a, o, and u, I have in ſuch words as are purely Welſh ſubſtituted K for it, in the pronunciation whereof all languages agree. Nor can the critics in the Welſh call this an innovation, the letter K being common in antient MSS. though never uſed in printed books. I have alſo for the like reaſon taken the ſame liberty in writing V. for F. and F for Ff, Lh for Ll, and Dh for Dd. Aud whereas the word Lhan in the names of churches is commonly joined with that which follows, as Llanèlian, Lhanieſtin, &c. I thought it better orthography to ſeparate it, writing Llan Elian, which ſignifies St. Elian's church, and Llan Jeſtin, i. e. St. Jeſtin's. As for the annotations I have added at the end of each county ſuch as have the letters of direction prefixed are notes on thoſe places they refer to in the text, with occaſional additions. And whereas in ſome counties I had notes to add which did not refer at all to any part of the text, I have inſerted them after the annotations with this mark ¶ prefixed. What I have added are generally obſervations of my own, and where they are not ſo I have taken care to inform the reader. I find upon peruſal of Cornwall and thoſe other counties you lately ſent me, that the additional notes on the Engliſh counties are much more complete than theſe, and ſomewhat in a different method. But my taſk was too large to be well performed by one hand, except more time had been allowed. And having received no pattern for imitation, but only ſome general inſtructions, I knew not how far I might enlarge, and to have jumped into the ſame method, muſt have been a great accident. However, I find the difference is not very material, nor is it of any great moment what method we uſe in annotations ſo we take care to add nothing but what may ſeem to the beſt of our apprehenſion pertinent and inſtructive. What faults you find in the orthography I deſire you would be pleaſed to correct, and alſo in the phraſe where you ſuppoſe it convenient; and where we diſagree in the ſenſe, I ſhall, upon notice thereof, either give directions to alter it, or offer ſome reaſons to the contrary.

I am, Sir,
Your obliged friend and ſervant,
EDWARD LHWYD.

Oxford, Sept. 13, 1694.

Pronunciation of the Welſh.

Ch is pronounced as the Engliſh Gh amongſt the vulgar in the north, but more roughly.
Dh as Th in the words this, that, &c.
G as the Engliſh G in the words Gain, Gift, &c.
I as in Engliſh in the words Win, Kin, but never as in Wind, Kind, &c.
Lh is only a ſibilating L, and is pronounced in reſpect of L as Th with reference to T.
U as the Engliſh I in the words Limb, Him, &c.
W is always a vowel and pronounced like the Engliſh oo.
Y as I in the Engliſh words Third, Bird: O in Honey, Money, U in mud, muſt, &c.
All the other letters are pronounced as in Engliſh, and never alter their pronunciation.
ʌ denotes a long vowel, as Man is pronounced like the Engliſh word Mane.
ʋ ſhews only the accent in ſhort vowels.

* All but what relates to the Welſh orthography was omitted in ſucceeding editions, and the whole was left out in the laſt. In the preſent Mr. Lhwyd's obſervations are incorporated in the additions with due acknowledgement.

A MAP of SOUTH WALES,

from the best

AUTHORITIES.

Engraved by J. Cary.

ST GEORGES CHANNEL

ST BRIDES BAY

CARMARTHEN BAR

COUNTIES.

1. Pembroke
2. Cardigan
3. Carmarthen
4. Glamorgan
5. Brecknock
6. Radnor

BRISTOL

2° 1° V° 5° 4° 3° Longitude West from London

52° 51° 50° 40° 30° 20° 10°

MONTGOMERY SHIRE

SHROP SHIRE

RADNOR SHIRE

HEREFORD SHIRE

BRECON SHIRE

MONMOUTH SHIRE

GLAMORGAN SHIRE

CARMARTHEN SHIRE

CARDIGAN BAY

BRISTOL CHANNEL

Forest of Radnor

The Black Mountains

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15

SOUTH WALES.

RADNORSHIRE.

TO Herefordſhire on the north-weſt adjoins Radnorſhire, Britiſh Sire Maiſeveth[a], of a triangular form, wideſt on the weſt, and from thence gradually narrowing. On the ſouth the river Wye divides it from Brecknocſhire; on the north Montgomeryſhire borders on it. Its eaſt and ſouth parts are more cultivated; the reſt covered with mountains is ſcarce at all improved, but well wooded and watered and has ſeveral lakes interſperſed.

On the eaſt ſide among other caſtles of the lords Marchers, now almoſt buried in their own ruins, the moſt remarkable are Caſtelh Paine, ſo called from Paganus or Paine a Norman who built it; and Caſtelh Colwen, which if I miſtake not was formerly called Caſtelh Maud in Colewent. This laſt was very famous, and belonged to Robert de Todeney, a man of conſiderable rank in the reign of Edward II. It is ſuppoſed to have taken its name from Maud de St. Valery a woman of great ſpirit, wife of William Breoſe, who rebelled againſt king John*. It was deſtroyed by the Welſh, and rebuilt in a handſome manner of ſtone by king Henry III. A. D. 1231. But of greateſt note is Radnor, the chief town of the whole county, called in Britiſh Maiſeveth, handſomely built of thatched houſes according to the cuſtom of the country. It was formerly defended with walls and a caſtle, but after that rebel Owen Glendowrdwy[b] burnt it, it gradually fell to decay, as well as its mother Old Radnor (called by the Britans Maiſeveth hean [hen], and from its high ſituation Pencrag) which in the reign of John had been burnt by Rhees ap Gruffin. If I ſhould ſay this Maiſeveth was the city MAGOS, which Antoninus ſeems to call MAGNOS, where, according to the Notitia, the commander of the Pacenſes was ſtationed under the Dux Britanniarum in the reign of Theodoſius the younger, I ſhall not in my own opinion, and perhaps in that of others, be much miſtaken. For we find the inhabitants of theſe parts called by writers of the middle age MAGESETES, and we find mention alſo of comites Maſegetenſes and Mageſetenſes, and the diſtance both from GOBANNIUM or Abergavenny and BRANGONIUM or Worceſter differs very little from that aſſigned by Antoninus. Scarce three miles eaſt of this is Preſtaine, Britiſh Lhan Andrè, q. d. St. Andrew's church, which from a little village in our forefathers' days roſe by the countenance of Martin biſhop of St. David's to a famous market town, and to ſuch a degree of elegance as in ſome meaſure to eclipſe Radnor at preſent. Scarce four miles from it is Knighton, which rivals Preſtain, and was called by the Britans, as I am informed, Trebuclo for Trefyclaudh, from the wonderful ditch below it made by Offa king of Mercia, to ſeparate the Britans from his Saxon ſubjects, from the mouth of the river Dee to that of the Wye for near 80 miles. Thence it was called in Britiſh Claud Offa or Offa's dyke, of which Johannes Sariſburienſis relates in his Polycraticon that "Harald made a law that whatever Welſhman "ſhould be found armed on this ſide of the boundary "he had ſet them, namely Offa's dyke, ſhould have "his right hand cut off by the king's officers[c]."

All the country beyond this to the weſt and north border is for the moſt part barren and hungry, called by the inhabitants Melienith, from the yellow hue of the hills. It ſhows however many ruins of caſtles, particularly Kevenles and Tinbod; the latter built on the point of a hill, and deſtroyed by Lewellin prince of Wales 1260. This Melienith reaches to the river Wye, which croſſes the weſt corner of the county, and being interrupted by rocks in its paſſage by the ſudden diſcontinuance of its bed, falls down a precipice. Hence the place is called Raihader Gowy or the fall of the Wye; and I know not whether the Engliſh may not from hence have formed the name of Radnor for the whole county firſt and then for the principal town. At this fall was a caſtle, which we are told Rhees prince of South Wales in the reign of Richard I. rebuilt. Near it is a vaſt deſart with dreary irregular paths and frightful mountains, to which as his ſafeſt retreat Vortigern, that bane of his country, whoſe memory is held in abhorrence by the Britans, retired to reflect too late on the enormity of his guilt in calling in the Saxons, and the horrible inceſt of marrying his own daughter. But the divine vengeance purſuing him he periſhed by fire from heaven with his city Caer Gwrtigern, which he had built for his ſecurity. And not far from hence, as if by a fatality attached to the place, not only this Vortigern laſt monarch of Britain of Britiſh race, but alſo Lewellyn the laſt prince of Wales of the Britiſh line, was ſlain by an ambuſcade in the year 1282.

Knighton.

Claudh Offa.

Melienith.

Kevenles and Tinbod caſtles.

Rhaidr Gwy.

Vortigern.

Caer Gwrtigern.

Lewellyn.

* Matth. Paris. M. Weſtminſter, p 89. Dugd. Bar I. 415. 417. She was afterwards ſtarved to death at Windſor.

[a] Vaeſyved. G. wrong, as appears by the name of Radnor below.

[b] commonly called Owen Glendour.

[c] Polycrat. L. VII. c. 6.

Ninnius calls this little tract Guortigermaur from Vortigern, and it has not yet loſt the name. No traces of the city however remain except in hiſtorians. Some think Guthrenion caſtle roſe out of its ruins, which was razed by the Welſh in 1201, out of hatred to Roger Mortimer. This part of the country was alſo antiently called Guarthenion according to Ninnius, who ſays that Vortigern being publicly and ſharply reproved by St. Germanus, not only refuſed to turn his mind from his evil courſe to devotion, but loaded that moſt holy man with abuſe. "Wherefore Vortimer ſon of Vortigern (ſays Ninnius[d]) to atone for his father's abuſive reflections on St. Germanus, gave him the land in which the biſhop had endured ſuch reproach, to be his property for ever; whence in memory of St. German it had the name of Guarthenian[e], which ſignifies calumny juſtly retorted, from the Britiſh words Gwarth, Calumny, and Eniawn, juſt."

Guthrenion caſtle. Gwarth Ennion.

Earls of March.

The Mortimers deſcended from a niece of Genora wife to Richard firſt duke of Normandy were the firſt Normans that conquered part of this country for themſelves, after defeating Edric Weald a Saxon*. After they had figured a long while in this county king Edward III. about the year 1328 created Roger Mortimer lord of Wigmore earl of this Welſh border, or, as it is commonly called, March†. He was ſoon after put to death on a charge of rebelling againſt the ſtate, favouring the Scots to the prejudice of the realm of England, behaving too familiarly with the king's mother, and contriving the death of king Edward II. the king's father. He had by Joan de Jeneville, who brought him a fine eſtate both in Ireland and England Edmund, who for his father's crimes loſt both his eſtate and title of earl‡. His ſon[c] Roger was however completely reſtored, recovered the title of earl of March, and was elected knight of the order of the Garter in its firſt inſtitution. He by Philippa de Montacute had Edmund earl of March, who married Philippa only daughter of Lionel duke of Clarence 3d ſon of king Edward III. whereby he acquired the earldom of Ulſter in Ireland, and the lordſhip of Clare. Dying in Ireland[f], which he had governed with great applauſe, he was ſucceeded by his ſon Roger earl of March and Ulſter, whom king Richard II. had appointed ſucceſſor to his crown as next of kin on the mother's ſide. But he dying in the king's lifetime[g] left iſſue Edmund and Anne. Edmund, whoſe power joined to the honour of being of the blood royal rendered him obnoxious to Henry IV. who had uſurped the crown, was by that prince expoſed to many dangers, and being taken priſoner by the rebel Owen Glendour died of grief[h], leaving his ſiſter Anne his heir. Richard Plantagenet earl of Cambridge married her, and in her right his deſcendants became earls of March, and claimed the crown, which they at laſt obtained (as will be elſewhere related[i]), and Edward IV. created his eldeſt ſon prince of Wales and duke of Cornwall, &c. with the additional title of earl of March. I do not know of any perſon who bore the title of Radnor by itſelf.

In this county are 52 pariſhes.

* G. Gemit, lib. ult. c. 16. † 2 E. III. Dugd. I. 145. ‡ Lib. mon. Lanthoni, 29 E. III.
[d] c. 45. Ed. Gale. [e] Guarenniaun. Ed. Gale. * grandſon. Dugd. I. 147. He died 34 E. III.
[f] 1381. Dugd. I. 150. [g] 21 Rich. II.
[h] He was out of Owen's hands 7 H. IV. and died 3 H. VI. Dugd. I. 150.
[i] See Yorkſhire towards the end.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

RADNORSHIRE is 24 miles long from eaſt to weſt by 22 miles broad from north to ſouth, and about 90 miles in circumference, is divided into ſix hundreds, and contains three market towns.

" In High Elvelde lordſhip, within two miles weſt " of Radenor, is no market toune." " The ruines " of the caſtle of Colewine ſtandith in Hy Eluel, and " is a three miles from Wy bank. Wy river in " courſe cometh firſt to Aberhedon, then towards " Payne and Colewine. In Low Elvel be two lord- " ſhyps; Aberhedon caſtle the kyng's hard by Wy. " Payne's caſtle about a two mile from Wy bank. " Thus in both Elveldes be three lordſhips. Low " Elvelde endeth on Wy bank right agayne Clifford " on the other bank of Wy [a]." " There is a Llin " in Low Eluel, within a mile of Payn's caſtle by the " church called Llanpeder. The Llin is called " Boughlline, and is of no great quantity, but is " plentifull of pike and perch and eels [b]."

" New Radnor town hath been metely well wallyd, " and in the wall appear the ruins of four gates. " There is an old church ſtanding now as a chapel " by the caſtle. Not very far thens is the new " pariſh church, builded by one William Bache- " fild and Flory his wife. There goith by the " town, as I remember, a broke called Somergil. " The building of the town is in ſome parts metely " good, in moſt part but rude, many houſes being " thakyd. The caſtle is in ruin, but that a piece of " the gate was a late amended. The town was de- " faced in Henry IV's days by Owen Glindowr [c]," who took the caſtle and beheaded 60 of the garriſon in the yard [d].

" Radenor wolle is much prayſed. The valey " about Radenor, very plentiful of corn and graſſe, " and ſtretcheth up to Lemſtre. It goith one way " toward Cheſter and another toward Shrewſbiri [e]."

" Coming from Radenor to the Hay I left Old " Radenor on the left hand ſet on an hill two miles " from New Radnor. At Old Radenor, as ſum ſay, " was ons a market kept. There is yet a very " fair church and well ſervid. By Old Radenor is " a hill called Pencrage [f]."

Dr. Gale followed Mr. Camden in the ſituation of MAGOS or MAGNA. Baxter placed it at Lidbury c. Hereford, where are no more Roman remains than at Radnor, and the diſtance agrees with Antoninus only in computed miles: Burton at Old Radnor [g]. Mr. Harris [h] fixes it at the Gaer near Brecknock, of which hereafter. He derives the name of Maiſeveth from the thirſty barren ſoil of the county, q. d. Campus Bibulus. Mr. Ward [i] ſays, he is as ſure as he can be from his own inſpection and ſtrict enquiry, that there has been a Roman ſtation at Old Radnor, or a road to it. He therefore places MAGNA at Kencheſter, and MAGI at Pierſbridge [k]. Mr. Strange [l] places it at Cwm in Llanier pariſh about one mile and an half north-weſt of Llandrindod near the river Ithon in this county, where are conſiderable remains of a Roman ſtation, and a road leading to Bualt, and Roman coins frequently found in the neighbouring pariſhes [m].

" Preſteine, in Welch called Llanandrew, is a very " good market of corne, to the which many folkes " of Melennith reſorte to buy corne; and beſides " this is no notable building in the lordſhip of Preſ- " teine. The towne is watered by the river Lug " running by it [n]." The aſſizes and the county goal are here. Presteigne.

" Knighton, in Welſh called Trebuclo, is a praty " towne after the Welſche building. The river of " Teme goeth on the ſide of the toune, and as I re- " member I ſaw a river on the other ſide [o]." Knighton.

Claudh Offa may be ſeen on Brachy hill and near Rhydar Helig and Lanterden in Herefordſhire, and is continued northward from Knighton over part of Shropſhire into Montgomeryſhire. It may be traced over the long mountain called Kevn Digolk to Hawarden caſtle acroſs the Severn and Llan Drinio common. Thence it paſſes the Wye again into Shropſhire, not far from Oſweſtry, where there is a ſmall village called Trevyr Claudh [of the ditch]. In Denbighſhire it is viſible along the road between Ruâbon and Wrexham, from whence being continued through Flintſhire it ends a little below Holiwell, where that water falls into the Dee at Baſingwerk caſtle [p]. " It appears manifeſtly by the ſpace of two miles almoſt in the midway between Biſhops Caſtle and Montgomery, and there it is not far from the mote on a hill top as a limes between Montgomery and Herefordſhire, and again not far touchith a little in Chirbury hundred, and again paſſith a little by Caurſeland. Leland heard at Montgomery that it appeared ſomewhere about Radnor, and again within three miles of Oſweſtry [q]." Entering Montgomeryſhire from Herefordſhire I croſſed this dyke on two commons on the road from Montgomery to Welſhpool. It is a low bank between two ditches, ſometimes ſerving as a hedge bank, ſometimes bolder, and on the commons where one rides through it almoſt levelled. It makes part of the preſent turnpike road between Ruâbon and Wrexham. Though called a dyke it is rather a high vallum between two ditches. Claudh Offa.

" Offa's ditch extended from the river Wye along the counties of Hereford and Radnor into that of Montgomery, where I ſhall take it up at its entrance into North Wales at Pwll y Piod, an alehouſe on the road between Biſhops caſtle and Newtown; from thence it paſſes northward near Millington hall, near which is an encampment called [a] Leland VII. 27.

[b] Lel. V. 70.
[c] VII. 27. and V. 4.
[d] Ib. V. 4. Pennant, Wales, I. 319.
[e] Lel. V. 4.
[f] Ib.
[g] Antonin It. p. 251.
[h] Archæol. II. 27.
[i] Horſley, p. 465.
[k] Ib. p. 486.
[l] See in Brecknockſhire.
[m] Archæol. IV. 5, 6.
[n] Lel. V. 4. VII. 27.
[o] Lel. VII. 27.
[p] Lel. V. 2.
[q] G.

Caer

Caer din, by Brompton mill where there is a mount; Linor park near Montgomery, Forden heath, Nantcribba, at the foot of an antient fortreſs, Layton hall, and Buttington church. Here it is loſt for five miles; the chanel of the Severn probably ſerving for that ſpace as a continuation of this famous boundary, which juſt below the conflux of the Bele and Severn appears again, and paſſes by the churches of Llandiſilio and Llanymyneh to the edge of the vaſt precipitous limeſtone rock in the laſt pariſh. From this place it runs by Tref y Clawdd over the Horſe courſe on Cefn y Bwch above Oſweſtry, then above Sellatyn, whence it deſcends to the Ceiriog, and thence to Glyn, where there is a large breach, ſuppoſed to be the place of interment of the Engliſh who fell in the battle of Crogen. It then goes by Chirk caſtle, and below Cefn y Wern croſſes the Dee, and the Rhuabon road near Plas Madoc, forms part of the turnpike road to Wrexham to Pentre Bychan, where is a mount, then by Plas Bower to Adwy'r Clawdd near Minera; by Brumbo it croſſes Cegidog river, and through a little valley on the ſouth ſide of Brin Yorkyn mountain to Coed Talwrn and Cae-deon, a farm near Treyddyn chapel in Mold pariſh pointing towards the Clwyddian hills, beyond which no farther traces can be diſcovered. No reaſon appears why its courſe was not continued from ſea to ſea. It ſeems probable that Offa imagined that the Clwyddian hills and the deep valley on this ſide at their baſe would ſerve as a continuance of his prohibitory line. The weakneſs of this great work appeared on the death of Offa; the Welſh with irreſiſtible fury deſpiſed his toils, and carried their ravages far and wide in the Engliſh marches. It is obſervable that in all parts the ditch is on the Welſh ſide, and that there are in many places along its courſe numbers of ſmall artificial mounts, the ſites of ſmall forts. Theſe were garriſoned, and ſeem intended like the towers in the famous Chineſe wall to watch the motions of their neighbours, and to repel the hoſtile incurſions [q]."

This limit ſeems to have been not well maintained in after-ages by the Engliſh; for though we find the Britiſh tongue decreaſe daily on the borders of Wales, yet not only that language but the antient Britiſh cuſtoms and names of men and places remain ſtill for ſome ſpace on the Engliſh ſide almoſt the whole length of it [r].

Melennith. "Part of Melennith is well wooded, the other is "but ſcant. Ther is in Melennith plenty in ſum "places of corne and great plenty of graſs. In "Melennith is a good breed of horſes on a mount "called Herdoel [s]."

Tynbot caſtle. "In Melennith appear great ruins of two caſtles. "The one is called Tynbot ſet on a ſteep cragg, a "three miles from the abbey of Comehire, the which Kevenlles caſtle. "is alſo in Melennith. The other is called Kevenlles "on the river of now down. It longyd to "the duke of York. Rayader lordſhip longed to the "duke of York. It hath nether market town nor "caſtle, as far I could know. This Rayder is countyd "a member to the lordſhip of Radenor [t]."

Rayder. "Rayder, the chief village of Melennith, and Wy "river runnith by it [u]."

Wye r. Wye, here the name of a particular river, was antiently an appellative for water or rivers in general. For, though it is not uſed at preſent in that ſenſe, nor preſerved in any gloſſary or other books, it is the termination of many of our rivers. Thus Lhugwy, Dwrdwy, y Vyrnwy, Edwy, Conwy, Elwy, Hondhwy, Mwnwy, Mwdhwy, Tawy, Towy, &c. It is probable that this termination is the ſame with gwy, as we find the river Towy called in the liber Landavenſis Tuigui, ab oſtio Taratir ſuper ripam Gui uſque ad ripam Tuigui, and the river Elwy is there called Elgui. Theſe ſyllables expreſſing water occur in the names of ſeveral aquatic animals, as Gwyach, Giach, Eog, or Oiog. From hence we may interpret the names of ſeveral rivers which have hitherto been unintelligible. Thus Lhugwy will ſignify clear water, from lhug, light or brightneſs; Dwrdhby, loud water, from dwrdh, noiſe; Edwy, ſwift or rapid ſtream, from Ehed, to fly, &c. [3]

Rhaidar Rhaidar is the general name of a cataract all over Wales, and is ſtill uſed appellatively among the mountains of Snowdon, where ſuch falls of water are very frequent. Rhaidor caſtle, whereof not the leaſt ruins are now remaining, was very advantageouſly ſituated in a nook of the river Wye, cloſe by the cataract here mentioned, having a deep trench cut in the ſolid rock on one ſide of the caſtle yard. About two furlongs below its ſite Mr. Lluyd obſerved a large tumulus or barrow, called from a chapel adjoining Tommen Llan San Fred, or the tumulus of St. Frid's church, and on the other ſide, farther off, are two much ſmaller, called Kugeu Kwn Keido, or the barrows of Kwn Keido [the hill of Keido], where is ſuppoſed to have ſtood a church, the piece of ground adjoining being called Klyttieu'r eglwys [church]. On the top of Gwaſtedin hill, near Rhaidr Gwy, are three large heaps of ſtones, ſuch as are common on mountains in moſt if not all the counties of Wales, called in South Wales Karnen, and in North Wales Karnedheu. They conſiſt of ſtones from a pound to a hundred weight collected from the neighbourhood, and confuſedly thrown together in heaps. Some of theſe Carnedheu on Plinlimmon mountain may conſiſt of 100 cart loads of ſtones: but generally ſpeaking they are much leſs. They are alſo found in the north, and probably in other parts of England, and are frequent in Scotland and Ireland, where they retain the Britiſh name of Cairn, a primitive word appropriated to ſuch heaps of ſtones. Moſt if not all the Carnedheu ſeem intended as memorials of the dead, Mr. Lluyd having obſerved near the ſummit of one of them a rude ſtone coffer or cheſt which he proved to be ſepulchral, and he was informed of two more ſuch monuments found of late years in like places. It is ſtill the cuſtom to throw heaps of ſtones on the graves of malefactors and ſelf-murderers, and hence perhaps the worſt of traitors are called Karn Vradwr, the moſt notorious thieves Karn Lhadron, &c. That this was a Roman cuſtom appears from the epitaph on the infamous robber Baliſta aſcribed to Virgil:

Monte ſub hoc lapidum tegitur Baliſta ſepultus.
Nocte, die, tutum carpe, viator, iter.

Under this hill of ſtones Baliſta lies interr'd;
Now night or day no danger need be fear'd.

But the finding ſuch monuments in Ireland and the highlands, where the Roman arms never reached, ſhews the cuſtom to be of greater antiquity in Britain. [We may go back to earlier ages to the heaps of ſtones piled over Achan and Abſalom.] Nor was [q] Pennant's Wales, I. 259—261. [r] G.

[s] V. 14. [t] G.
[u] Lel. V. 70. [3] Lel. VII. 27.

this kind of monument confined to malefactors. Perſons of the beſt quality had ſuch in the earlieſt ages, as among the Trojans, Hector, and ſuch Mr. Lluyd takes to have been the larger ones which have the cheſts within them. But ſince Chriſtianity prevailed they became ſo deteſtable and ſo appropriated to malefactors that the worſt a man can ſometimes wiſh his enemy is Karn ardy wynob, may a Carn be his monument [u].

The wells on a common at Llandrindod are in a wild extenſive heath bounded by diſtant mountains. They are three: ſaline pump water, ſulphureous water, and chalybeate rock water. The air has been found very efficacious in conſumptions, the place is much reſorted to, and here are tolerably decent accommodations for the company [x].

The only religious houſe in this county was at Cumbyr, or Combehire, north-eaſt of Rhiadargouy, where Cadwathelan ap Madoc, 1143, founded a Ciſtertian abbey, valued at £. 28. 17*s*. 4*d*. [y]

"Comehere, an abbay of White Monkes, ſtandith "between two great hilles in Melennith in a botom "where runith a little brook. It is ſeven miles from "Knighton. The firſt foundation was made by Cad-"wathelan ap Madoc for 60 monkes. No church "in Wales is ſeene of ſuch length, as the foundation "of the walles ther begonne doth ſhew; but the third "part of this work was never finiſhed. Al the "houſe was ſpoiled and defaced by Owen Glen-"dowr [z]."

The title of earl of March lay dormant till it was revived by James I. in the perſon of Eſme Stuart, lord Aubigné, afterwards duke of Lenox, who was ſucceeded by his ſon James, and his grandſon Eſmè, who dying young, the honor deſcended to Charles, fourth ſon of Eſme the firſt duke, and he dying without iſſue 1672, this title was conferred with others by Charles II. 1675 on Charles Lenox, created at the ſame time duke of Richmond [a], whoſe deſcendants ſtill enjoy the title.

Radnor was erected into an earldom by Charles II. in the perſon of John Robartes lord Roberts of Truro, whoſe ſon Robert, ſtyled lord viſcount Bodmin, dying in his father's life time, the honor deſcended to his grandſons Charles-Bodvile and Henry and their couſin John, who dying 1757 the title became extinct. It was revived in the perſon of William ſon of ſir Jacob Bouverie, baron Longford, viſcount Folkſtone, who was created earl of Radnor 1765, 5 George III. and dying Jan. 28, 1776, was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon Jacob, ſecond and preſent earl.

[u] Lluyd in Gibſon. See alſo hereafter, and Borlaſe's Cornwall. Rowland's Mona Antiqua, &c.
[x] Wyndham's Tour through Monmouthſhire, p. 193. 4to.
[y] Tan. 721. Dugdale miſplaces it in Pembrokeſhire. Mon. Ang. I. 825. [z] Lel. V. 13. [a] G.

Rare Plant found in Radnorſhire.

Lichen puſtulatus. Singed Liverwort; on rocks facing the ſouth under a tower called Keven-lees-caſtle.

BRECKNOCKSHIRE.

TO Radnorſhire on the ſouth adjoins Brecknockſhire, Britiſh Brechineauc [Brecheinog], ſo called, as the Welſh fancy, from prince Brechan[a], who, they pretend, left a numerous and holy offſpring, 24 daughters, all ſaints. This county is much larger than Radnorſhire, but thicker ſet with mountains, interſperſed, however, with fruitful vallies. It is bounded by Herefordſhire on the eaſt, by Monmouth and Glamorganſhires on the ſouth, by Caermardinſhire on the weſt. But as nothing can be added to the deſcription of this little county given by the induſtrious Giraldus Cambrenſis, who was archdeacon here 400 years ago, I ſhall reſt a while, and call in his pen to my aſſiſtance.

"Brechiniauc (ſays he, in his Itinerary of Wales[b]), "is a country abounding with corn, and if ever any "deficiency happens it is plentifully ſupplied from "its neighbour England. It is rich in paſtures and "woods, deer, and herds, and abounds alſo with river "fiſh in the Uſk on one hand, and the Wye on the "other, both yielding ſalmon and trout in plenty, "but the Wye greater quantities of the excellent fiſh "called *Umbræ. It is incloſed on every ſide except "the north by high mountains, having on the weſt "the mountains of Canterbochan†, on the ſouth the "Southern hills, the chief of which is called Cadier "Arthur‡, or Arthur's Chair, from its two ſummits "(it being διαφυϛος double topped), reſembling a "chair. And this chair being on a high and ſteep "place is by the vulgar aſcribed to the greateſt and "moſt ſovereign monarch of Britain Arthur. On "the top of this hill riſes a ſpring, deep like a well, "but ſquare, and though no ſtream runs out of it "they find trout in it. Theſe mountains forming a "barrier to the ſouth keep out the ſun while cool "breezes and the native ſalubrity of the air render "the country extremely temperate. On the eaſt "ſtretch the Talgar § and Ewias hills."

On the north ſide, as Giraldus obſerves, the county is more open and level where it is divided from Radnorſhire by the river Wye, on which ſtand two towns conſiderable for their antiquity, Buelth and Hay. Buelth is pleaſantly ſituate among woods, and defended by a caſtle, but of more modern date, built by the Breoſes and Mortimers, the old one being demoliſhed by Rhys ap Gruffin [Gryffin]. The town is now conſiderable for its market, as it ſeems to have been antiently on other accounts. Ptolemy having taken an obſervation for it, and called it BVLLEVM Silurum. From it the neighbouring rough and mountainous country is called Buelth, in which, after the Saxons were become maſters of the iſland, and Vortigern had retired into theſe parts, his ſon Paſcentius ruled by leave of Aurelius Ambroſius, as we learn from Ninnius[c], who, among his wonderful ſtories, tells one[d] about a heap of ſtones here, on which were the footſteps of Arthur's dog.

Hay, called in Britiſh Trekethle, q. d. the town among hazles, ſtanding in the edge of this county and Herefordſhire on the Wye, ſeems to have been known to the Romans, whoſe coins are frequently dug up there, and ſhews the ruins of walls. It is now almoſt decayed, and laments the rage of that abandoned rebel Owen Glendowerdwy, who burnt it in his devaſtations of this country.

As the Wye waters the north part of the county, ſo through the middle runs the noble river Uſk, or Oſk[e], which precipitating itſelf from the Black mountain, forces itſelf a deep channel, and paſſes by Brecknock, the chief town of the county, and ſituate almoſt in its centre, called by the Britons Aber Hodnei, from the confluence of the Hodnei and Uſk there. From the Roman coins frequently dug up there it appears to have been inhabited in the Roman times. Bernard de Newmarch, who reduced this little county, built here a noble caſtle, repaired by the Breoſes and Bohuns, and in the laſt age king Henry VIII. founded here in the Dominican abbey a collegiate church for 14 prebendaries, which he transferred from Aberguilly in Caermardinſhire.

Two miles eaſt from hence a lake ſpreads itſelf called by the Britans Linſavathan, or the ſtanding Lake. Giraldus[f] calls it Clamoſus from the horrid noiſe like thunder heard on it when the ice breaks on it. The Engliſh call it Brecknock-mere. It is two miles long, and about as many broad, abounding with otters[g], perch, tench, and eels, which the fiſhermen catch in wicker boats or coracles. The little river Leven entering this lake keeps its waters unmingled as by a kind of antipathy, which it ſhews by its colour, and is ſuppoſed to carry out its own ſtream without the leaſt augmentation. It has been an antient tradition among the natives, that where the lake is now was formerly a city[h], which being ſwallowed up by an earthquake, made a receptacle for the water. As one proof of this among many others they obſerve that all the high roads in this country from every part lead hither. If this be true, what other city can we Buâlt.

BULLÆUM.

* Vinbræ. † Cantre-bychan. ‡ Cader Artur. § Talgarth.

[a] See Girald. Camb. I. c. 2. G. [b] I. c. 1. [c] c. 52. [d] q. where.

[e] Wyſk, the Britiſh name of this river, ſeems derived from Gwy, or Wy, of which before. At preſent it is not ſignificative in the Britiſh, but is ſtill the common Iriſh name for water. There were formerly many rivers of this name in Britain, which may be diſtinguiſhed in England by theſe traces of it, Ex, Ox, Ux, Ouſe, Eſk, &c. and that this is not a groundleſs conjecture will appear from Exeter being called in Antoninus Iſca Dumnoniorum from its ſituation on the river Ex, as a city on the Uſk was called Iſca Leg. II. Lluyd in Gibſon Q. if Wy is not underſtood as part of all theſe names, Wy Iſc. q. d. Iſk, &c.

[f] I. c. 1. [g] Some copies of Giraldus read luciis, pyke, inſtead of lutris, otters; alſo river muddy eels.

[h] Many lakes in Wales are ſuppoſed to have been formerly cities: thus Pwl Kynffig, c. Glamorgan. Llyn Llan Llwch, c. Caern. Yllhyngwyn, c. Radnor. Llyn Dekwyn uha, c. Merion. Llyn Llyngclys, c. Salop, all which Mr. Lluyd juſtly ſuſpects as fabulous tradition. See Caermarthenſhire. "Notwithſtanding Camden's aſſent to the notion of a city in this lake, it appears to be a mere fable, and applied "with as little foundation to other lakes in Wales, and other countries," which Mr. Strange accounts for from lakes not being all ab origine but of recent and ſucceſſive formation. Archæol. IV. 16.

conceive on the river Leveny but LOVENTIVM [i], placed hereabouts by Ptolemy, which I cannot upon the ſtricteſt ſearch any where diſcover by name, ſituation, or ruins [k]. I had almoſt forgot to mention that Marianus Scotus ſeems to call this lake Bricenaumere, when he relates that Edelfleda the Mercian, A. D. 913, "entered the country of the Britons to take "the caſtle at Bricenaumere, where ſhe made the "wife of the Britiſh king priſoner." Whether this caſtle was Breknocke itſelf or Caſtle Dinas, which commands this lake on a rock tapering as it riſes, is by no means clear. But it is evident from the public records that Blean Leveney caſtle in the neighbourhood was the head of the barony held by Peter Fitz Herbert, ſon of Herbert lord of Deane forreſt by Lucia daughter of Milo earl of Hereford.

In the reign of William Rufus, Bernard de Novo Mercatu or Newmarch, a Norman of great ſpirit and prudence, aſſembling a conſiderable body of Engliſh and Normans, firſt invaded this county, and having with great difficulty wreſted it from the Welſh, built caſtles, and aſſigned lands and poſſeſſions in it to his fellowſoldiers, among whom the chief were the Aubreys [l], Gunters, Haverds, Waldebeofs, and Prichards, and to gain a more certain and firm footing among his inveterate enemies the Welſh, he married Neſt daughter of prince Gruffin. She being a woman of an abandoned and revengeful ſpirit, loſt both her own character and her ſon's patrimony. For Mahel only ſon of Bernard ill treating a noble youth with whom ſhe had an intrigue, ſhe, as the poet expreſſes it, Iram atque animos a crimine ſumens, "de-"riving rage and ſpirit from her guilt," took a ſolemn oath before king Henry II. that her ſon Mahel was born in adultery, and was not the ſon of Bernard, whereby Mahel being excluded, his ſiſter Sibylla obtained his fine eſtate and conveyed it to her huſband Milo earl of Hereford*. After five ſons of Milo had died without iſſue, Brecknockſhire in the diviſion of his eſtate fell to his daughter Bertha, who, by Philip de Breos †, had William de Breos, lord of Brechin, on whoſe head his rebellious diſpoſition and his wife's ‡ ungovernable tongue drew down a load of calamities. For, ſhe venting her furious invectives againſt king John, provoked the prince to demand with the utmoſt rigor a great ſum of money owing to him by her huſband William. He putting off payment by a variety of excuſes at laſt made over the three caſtles of Hay, Brecknock, and Radnor, to the king. Soon after raiſing troops in haſte he retook theſe caſtles by ſurprize, having put the garriſon to the ſword, burnt the town of Lemſter, carried ſword and fire and devaſtation everywhere, and committed all the outrages of rebels. But the king's forces preſſing him cloſe, he withdrew with his men to Ireland, where he aſſociated with the king's enemies. Afterwards preſenting himſelf with feigned ſubmiſſion and many promiſes before the king, who was ſetting out for Ireland, he raiſed new diſturbances in Wales; but, being at laſt obliged to fly, he died in exile in France. His wife was taken, and being ſtarved to death in priſon paid dear for her abuſive tongue. His ſon Giles biſhop of Hereford, by favour of king John, (to the excluſion of his nephew the right heir), recovered his paternal eſtate which he left to his brother Reginald, whoſe ſon William being caught by Lewellin prince of Wales in adultery with his wife was hanged. But by the daughters of William the Mortimers, Cantelupes, and Bohuns, earls of Hereford, obtained an addition to their eſtates. The county of Brecknock fell to the Bohuns, and by them at laſt to the Staffords, and upon the attainder of Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, a noble revenue in this county came to the king.

Here are 61 pariſhes.

* Girald. II. 2.

† called alſo Braus and Brtus.

‡ called Matilda de Hay.

[i] Abſolvov. Luentium. Mr. Ward places it with Camden at Llandewi Brevi, c. Cardigan, Brit. Rom. p. 372.

[k] See Cardiganſhire.

[l] Mentioned here by Leland, V. 70, 71.

ADDI-

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Brecknock is 39 miles long by 17 miles broad, and 109 miles in circumference, contains ſix hundreds, 61 pariſhes, and four market towns.

" Not 30 years ago, ſays Leland [a], there was no " barley ſowed in the lordſhip of Brekenock nor " Llanameveri, but the inhabitants bought it out of " Herefordſhire and much other corn; whereas now " they have enough for their own uſe and alſo to ſell. " Brecknockſhire is very mountainous and in ſum " places woody; nevertheleſs in the vallies fruitful " of corn and eſpecially of paſture. For the Welſh- " men in times paſt, as they do almoſt yet, did ſtudy " more to paſturage than tillage, as favorers of their " conſuete idleneſs. Among al the mountaines of " that ſhire Blake mountain is moſt famous; for " he ſtretcheth his roots on one ſide within four or " five miles of Monmouth, and on the other ſide as " near to Cairmerdin. Though this be al one moun- " tain yet many partes of him have ſundrie names. " Out of it ſpringith the heddes of four famous " rivers that be diverſe courſes through S. Wales " at laſt come into the Severn ſe. There be in the " ſhire diverſe other little rivers, of whom Giraldus " writeth at length, as Hodeney that giveth the old " name to Brecknock, that is to ſay Aberhodeny and Llevenny r. " Llevenny that cometh out of Atterell hills which be " called in Welſh Meneth e Cadair, i. e. montes alti " inſtar cathedrarum, and ſo deſcendeth into Breck- " nockſhire [b]."

Hondy r. " Hondy riſith at a place called Blainhonddy ſeven " miles from Brekenok, and in Brekenok lordſhip, " and runneth in a valley called Dyffrin Honddye [c]."

Brennick r. " Brennick riſith in one of the hills called Mennith " y gader, and rennith through Engliſch Talegarth " and by Broynlles caſtle into Lleveni at Aber bren- " nik [d]."

Brenych r. " Brenych riſith a 3 miles from Brekenok at a place " called Blain . . . . and cometh into Wiſk at Abre " Brenych againſt Mr. Aubre's maner [e].

Llyn Sava- than. " Breknok mere is two mile or more broad, callid " in Welſh Llin Sevatham. Here one thing is to be " notid that after a great reyne Lleveney cometh " out of the mountaynes with ſuch a rage that he " bringing the color of the dark red ſand with him " is ſeen by the color where he violently paſſeth " through the mere. Look more diligently for this " lake in Giraldus' book called Itinerarium Cam- " briæ. In the lake be umbers, in Welſh Cangans, " and great ſtore of pykes, whereof many come " into Wy river. The lake of Breknok ons frozen " over and then in a thaw brekying maketh mer- " velus noiſe per totam viciniam [f]."

" Llin Sevathan is 3 miles by S. S. E. from Breke- " nok. It is in bredth a mile, and two miles of " lenght, and where it is deepeſt 13 fadom. On " the one ſide wel near the ripe is a kinde of weedes " that goithe along the Llin, wherin the ſpawn hath " ſocour, and alſo the greate fiſh. At great windes " the water doth ſurge there marvelouſly. Lleveny " cometh thoro' this lake no great river, and after " great raine is perfectly ſeen of red colour in the " middeſt of the lake. After that it is froſen and " with thaw beginnith to break it makith ſuch a " noiſe that a man would think it a thunder. It " berith as the principal fiſh a great number of " bremes, and they appear in May in mighty ſculles " [ſhoales] ſo that ſometime they breake large nettes, " and ons frayed apperith not in the brimme of the " water that year again. It berith alſo good pikes, " and perches in great number. Trowts alſo and " chevyns by coming in of Lleveny. Men fiſh there " unis ligneis [uncis ligneis, Hearne; rather vitiligineis] " and they be very narrow. The head of the lake " where Lleveny river comith in is at Lanvihengle " Kythedine, the end at Llanvihangel Tal Llin [g]."

" Part as ſome ſay of Llin Sevatan is in the Welſh " Talgart, and part in Brecknock lordſhip, the " which be divided by Llin Sevaton [h]." The lake and the river run green into Wy before the great war of the ſons of Jeſtin, and before a former like event [i].

Llyn Savadan is deſcribed by Giraldus as ſurrounded with houſes, gardens, cornfields, and orchards. Sometimes, as juſt before the Norman and Welſh princes ravaged this country about 1030, its waters aſſume a miraculous green colour; at other times a red one, which Leland aſcribes to the coming in of the river Lleveny after rain, which may alſo account for its diſtinct appearance. Giraldus pretends that the flights of birds which frequent there in winter by their chattering and fluttering declared Griffyth ap Rhys ap Theodore of the true line of Welſh princes and rightful lord of this country, to the conviction of Henry I. who had given it from him. We have a good view of this lake from a hill above Bualht.

" The hilles called in Walſch Munnith e gader " appere in Talegarth about Dinas, and ſo to the " places about Nanthondy, and with ſome part of " theſe mountains meet the great hills called Ban " Breckeniauc, and rennith in length to the Black " mountain to my eſtimation upon 18 miles [k]."

" Arture's hill is three good Welſch, almoſt five " Engliſh miles, ſouth-weſt from Brekenok and in " the very top of the hill is a fair wellſpring. The " hille of ſumme is countid the hieſt hille of " Wales, and in a very cleere day a man may ſee " from it a part of Malvern hills and Gloceſtre and " Briſtow, and part of Devenſhire and Cornwale. " There be divers other hillies by Arture's hille, the " which, with it, be communely called Banne Breke- " niauc [l]."

[a] It. V. 73. [b] Ib. 67. [c] Ib. 70. [d] Ib. [e] Ib.
[f] Ib. 67. [g] Ib. 68, 69. [h] Lel. V. 69.
[i] Giralcus Cambr. I. 2. [k] Lel. V. 71. [l] Ib. 68.

" Trecaſtle

Vol. II. Pl. XIV. P. 473.

Fig. 4.

Fig. 3. P 473

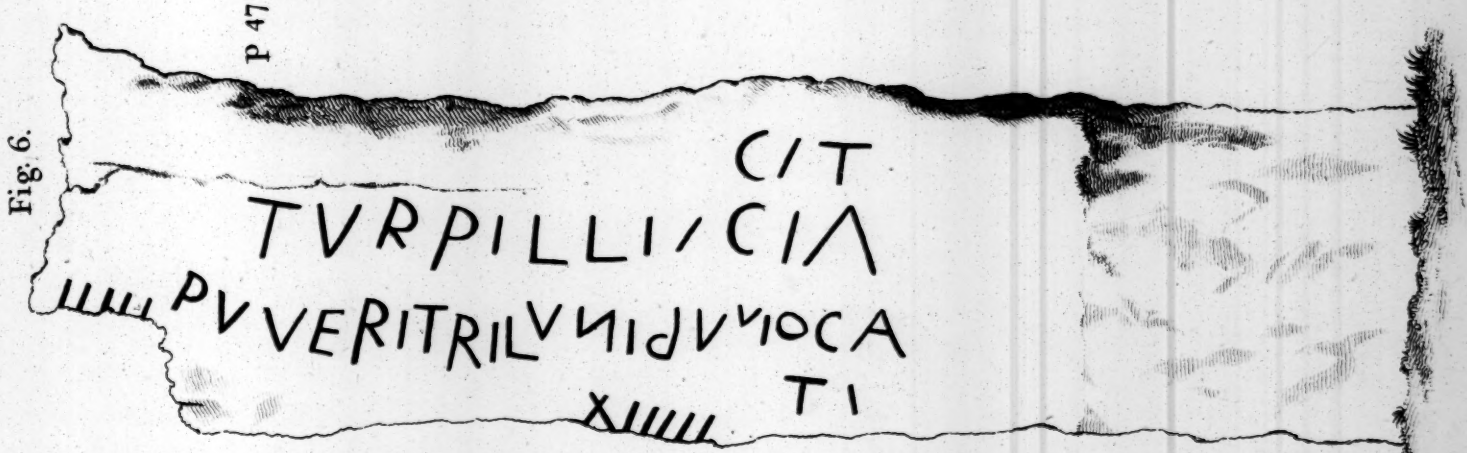
Fig. 2.

Fig. 1. P. 473.

Fig. 7.

P 476

Fig. 6.



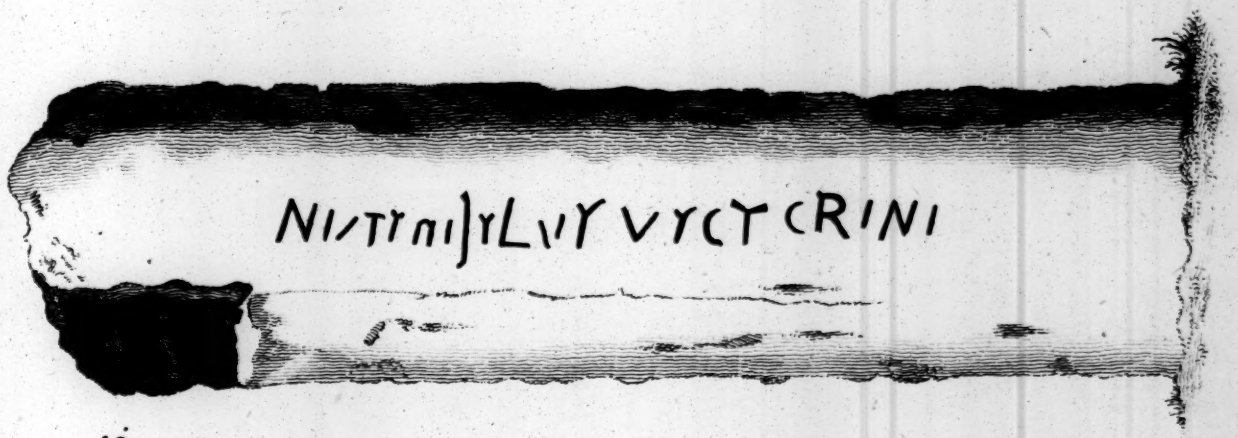


Fig. 5.

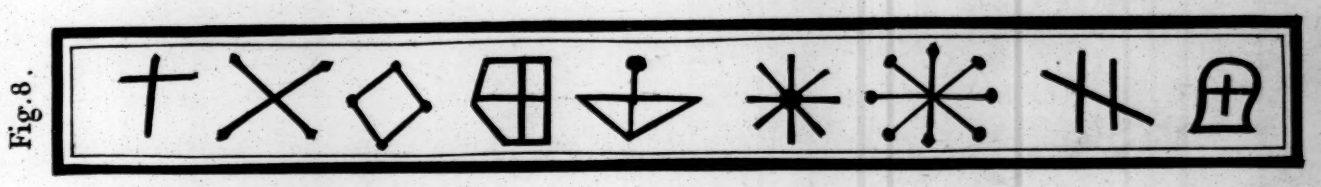
P. 476.

Fig. 8.



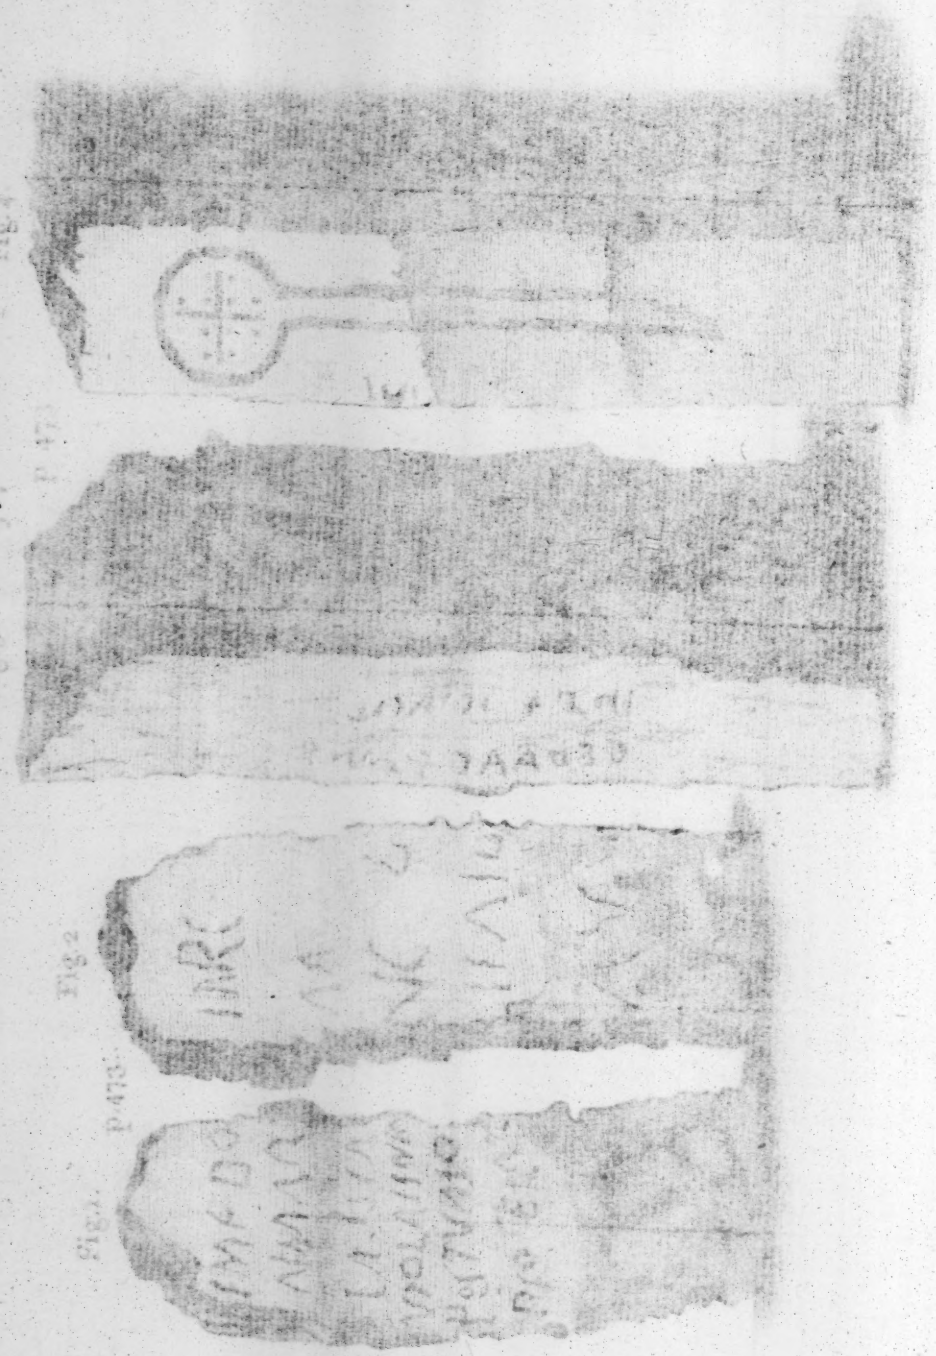
F. C. sey. sculp.

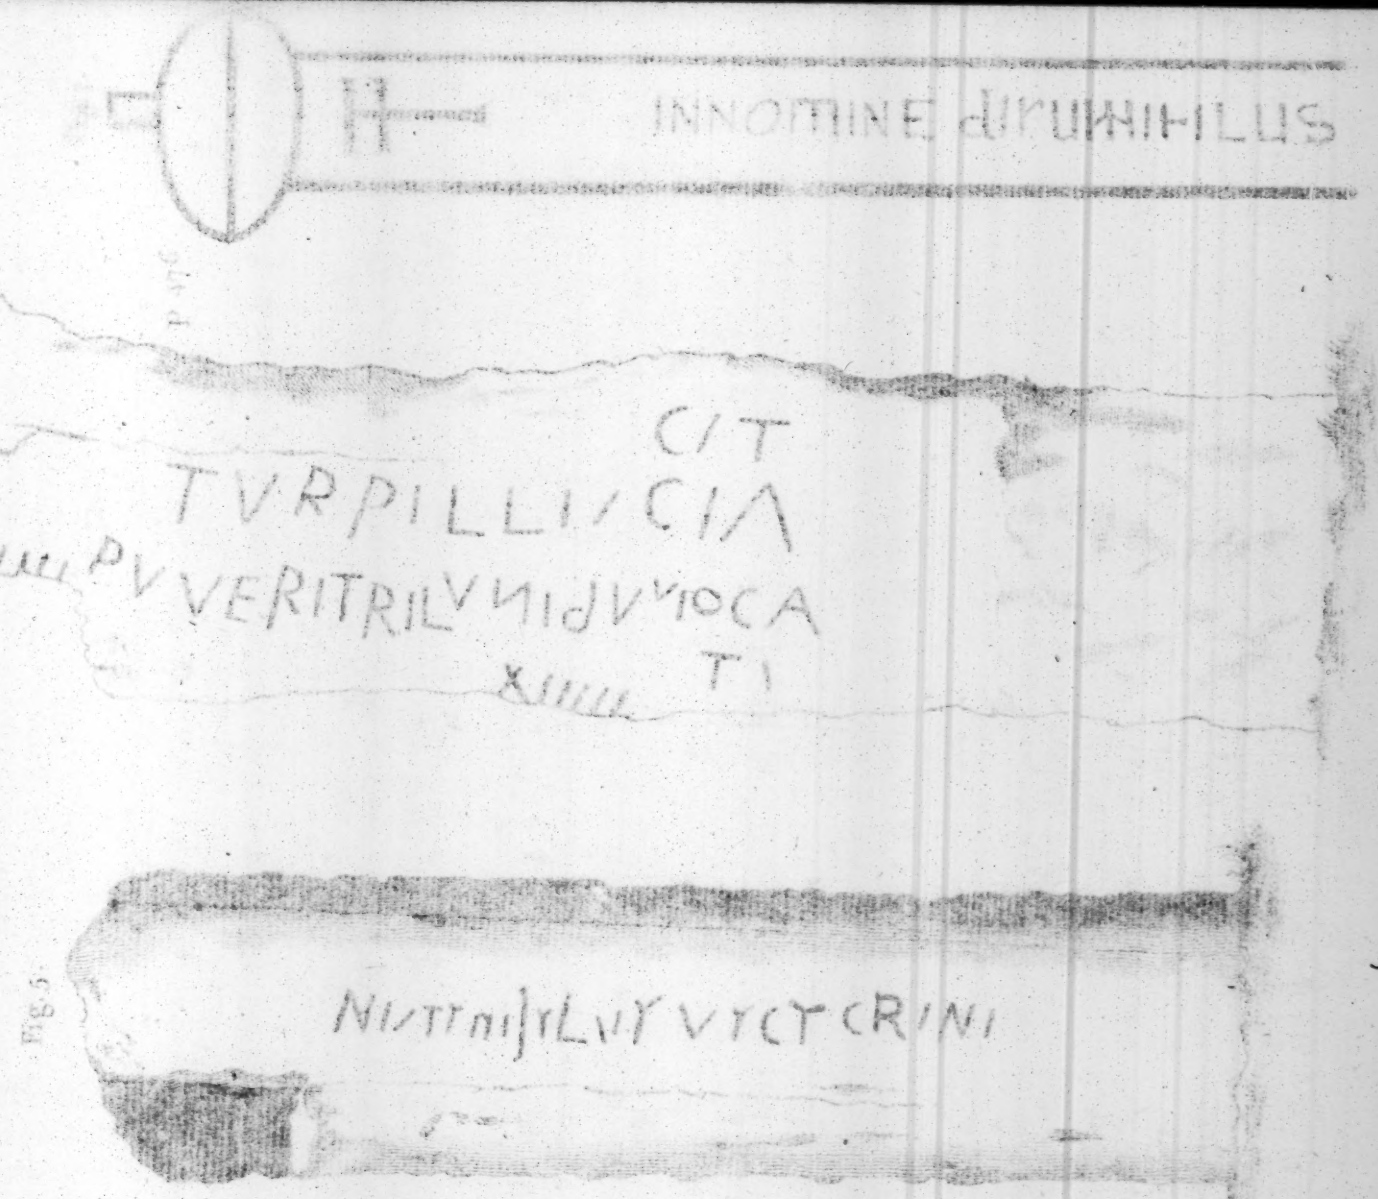
Dardic.

Owen Glendwr.

[a] Mr. Strange, Archæol. IV. 7.
[b] Wyndham, 194.
[c] Horsley, 363—[illegible]
[d] Ib. 8.
[e] Ib. IV.
[f] Mr. Powell.
[g] Yyod. Neuadr. 304.

G gomeryshire,





INNOMINE DRUIHILUS
CIT
TVRPILLI CIA
PVVERITRILVNIDVNOCA
NIVTTAIIRLVIRVRCTCRINI

"Trecaſtle, eleven miles from Brekenok, ſome-
"time a large borow and market town, now much
"in ruin, wherby yet appereth the ruines of a "caſtle. In the bottom of this town runneth Lug-
"gun, a brook riſing two miles of in a marſh on
"the ſide of an hill, and by Trecaſtle runnith into
"Wiſke. There is building on the further ſide of "this river hard joining to Trecaſtle, and is called
"the Biſhop's Town, and it keepeth law day at
"Llandew lordſhip a mile from Brekenok, as Tre-
"caſtle doth at Brekenok. Then paſſing upward
"the hill a mile and more I left on the right hand
"Munnith de the black Mountain, and two miles
"thens on the left hand appeared the place whereof
"the river Uſk doth ſpring as out of a fountain or
"well called Blainwiſke[m]."

The firſt place on the borders of Caermarthenſhire at the foot of a high green mountain, on whoſe top is the diviſion of the counties, is Trecaſtle, diſtinguiſhed only by a very good inn. By the road ſide from hence to Brecknock are ſeveral gentlemen's ſeats and parks.

On the top of Trecaſtle hill was dug up the ſtone Pl. XIV. fig. 1. near a ſpot called the Heath cock, in making the turnpike road over the hill 1769, and it has ſince been removed to Landilo in Caermarthenſhire[n]. It is a milliary, to be read,
"Imperatori domino noſtro Marco Caſſianio Latino
"Poſtumo Pio Felici Aug."

Fig. 2. in the ſame plate was found by the ſide of the Roman road between Capel Coelbryn and Mynidd birr or the Long Mountain, which road Mr. Strange ſuppoſes led from NIDVM or Neath into Brecknockſhire[o]. This alſo may be a milliary, and the firſt word IMP. C.

Fig. 3. was diſcovered in the ſame neighbourhood about a mile from Yſtraedvelty in the croſs road leading from Brecknock over the mountains to Neath. It is a ſtone called Main Maddock, which from the rude inſcription on it appears to have been ſepulchral, and probably ſtood by the ſide of the Roman road ſuppoſed to have traverſed this country. In the neighbourhood of Yſtraedvelty was found a large gold coin of Veſpaſian[p]; and at Pen y Mynnid in the ſame neighbourhood ſtands the ſtone engraved in Pl. XIV. fig. 4. having a ſimpuvium on it.

"Buelth upon Wy is a good market town, and "there is a fair caſtle of the king's. This lordſhip
"hath good plenty of wood[q]." Here prince Llewellyn was ſlain in a wood after his defeat by the Engliſh at Irvon bridge[r].

BULLÆUM, the only place Ptolemy mentions among the Silures, may be the Burrium of the Itinerary, and to be placed at Uſk[s]. Neither Bualth nor Kaereu a few miles from it have any pretenſions to Romanity. The remains of an entrenchment on a riſing ground near the latter are evidently Britiſh, and a few miles from it in the road from Brecknok into Cardiganſhire are two very large ſtones eight or nine feet high and about four feet broad, of an irregular form, about a furlong aſunder, in ſome low grounds one mile ſouth-eaſt of Llanworthid wells. Near the river Irvon about one mile and an half north from Llandrindod wells in Radnorſhire, and not much out of the road from thence to Bualht, is a ſquare camp and foundations of its ſtone walls like thoſe of the Gaer near Brecknock. It is on a farm called Cwm in Llanir pariſh, encloſing about four acres, each ſide within the walls 432 feet. The walls are about eight feet thick, defended by a ditch about ten or twelve feet wide. Parallel to the north and weſt ſides, which are the moſt acceſſible, but not quite the length of either, and about twenty yards from the ditch, are remains of another wall and ditch; the two other ſides are defended by the river Ithon and a kind of natural hollow[t]. Mr. Lluyd interprets Buelth Ox Cliff or Oxen Holt, and places the Roman fort at Caereu. Dr. Stukeley very erroneouſly puts it both at Buelht and Old Radnor[u]. A conſiderable part of the town, all the ſide of the ſtreet next the Wye, was deſtroyed by an accidental fire 1690[t]. Cwn.

"The Hay ſtandith hard upon Wye, and yet Hay.
"ſhewith the token of a right ſtrong wall having "in it three gates and a poſterne. There is alſo a
"caſtle, which ſometime hath been right ſtately.
"Within the town is but one poor pariſh. In the "ſuburb hard by Wy is a pariſh church metely fair.
"Ther is alſo in the ſuburb a chapel, wher on the "Sunday I heard maſs. Not far from the pariſh
"church in the ſuburb is a great round hill of earth
"caſt up by men's hands either for a windmill or "rather for ſome fortres of battle. The town of "the Hay has yet a market, but the town within "the walls is wonderfully decayed. The ruine is
"aſcribed to Owen Glendowr[x]".

"One ſhewid me in the towne the ruines of a "gentleman's palace called Waulwine, be whos
"means prince Lluelin was ſodenli taken at Buelth
"caſtle, and thir beheddid and his hedde ſent to the "kinge. Duleſſe, a pretty river riſing in the moun- Duleſſe r.
"taines about three miles from Hay cummeth even "thoro' the town and ſtrait into Wy without the "eaſt gate of the town. In felds hard by in plough-
"ing hath been found oftimes numiſmata Romano-
"rum, the which ther communely be callid the Jewis
"money. The town longid to the duke of Buck"ingham. It perteinith now to the lord Staford
"his ſon. Artures hilles and ſumme other of the "[bank]nes veri manifeſtly appeare to a man loking
"out of the W. gate of Hay[x]."

Owen Glendwyr, or more properly Owen ap Gryffydh Vychan, was about the middle of the 14th century educated at one of the inns of court, and was preferred to the place of ſcutifer or eſquire of the body to Richard II. (as Walſingham[y] ſays) and was taken priſoner with him in Flint caſtle. Being well aſſured that his maſter was depoſed and murdered, and being alſo provoked by ſeveral affronts and wrongs received from lord Grey of Ruthin, whom Henry very much countenanced, he took up arms, and looking upon Henry as an uſurper cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed Prince of Wales. Though he was deſcended paternally only from a younger brother of the houſe of Powis, he ſet up a claim to the principality as deſcended by a daughter from Llewellyn ap Griffydh laſt prince of the Britiſh race. He invaded the lands and burnt and deſtroyed the houſes and eſtates of all who favoured and adhered to king Henry. He defeated Henry's troops once under lord Grey, whom he took, and on his ranſoming himſelf he married Owen's daughter. He ſummoned a parliament 1402 at Machynlleth in Mont- Owen Glendwr.

[m] Lel. V. 72, 73. [n] Mr. Strange, Archæol. IV. 7. [o] Ib. [p] Ib. 8.
[q] Lel. V. 70. [r] Wyndham, 194. [s] Horſley, 363—365. [s] Mr. Powell.
[t] Mr. Powell, Archæol. I. 301, 302. [u] Ib. IV. 25. [x] G.
[x] Lel. V. 72. [y] Ypod. Neuſtr. 364.

gomeryſhire, at which all the nobility and gentry of Wales aſſiſted, and among them David Gam, who, though he had married Owen's ſiſter, being wholly devoted to the intereſt of the duke of Lancaſter, intended nothing leſs than to aſſaſſinate Owen. But the plot was diſcovered, and Gam being ſeized had like to have ſuffered as a traitor, but was ſaved by the interceſſion of Owen's beſt friends and ſupporters. Notwithſtanding this pardon, as ſoon as he returned to his own country, where he had a conſiderable intereſt, he exceedingly annoyed Owen's friends. Not long after Owen entered the Marches of Wales laying all waſte with fire and ſword, and having then burnt the houſe of ſir David Gam is reported while it was on fire to have made this inſulting ſpeech:

O gweli di wr côch Cam,
Yn ymoſyn y Gyrnigwen,
Dywed y bôd hi tan y lan,
A nôd y glo ar ei phen [z].

After the defeat of Hotſpur who had joined him 1404 he ſolicited and received aid from France, and having given much trouble and defeat to Henry IV. continued ſo powerful an oppoſition to his ſon Henry V. that that prince was glad to offer him a pardon; the effect of which was probably defeated by his death 1415, in a forlorn reduced condition, and peace was granted to his ſon [a].

Clereho. "When I approached near the Hay, and began "to deſcend from thens I ſaw on the hither ſide of "Wy a mile from the Hay the caſtle of Clereho [b]."

Glinbock. "Glinbock a lordſhip within a mile of the Hay.

Llanigo. "It is no market town nor caſtle; but at Llanigo ap- "pears a caſtle or tower tanquam noxiorum cuſtodie "deputata [c]."

Broyulles. "Broynlles caſtle in the midway between the Hay "and Breknok in the hundred of Cantercily in great "ruines [d]."

Uſk r. "Wiſk riſith in Black mountain 10 miles above "Brekenok towards Carmardine, and ſo rennith "thorough the litle foreſt and great foreſt of Brekenok "and ſo cummith thorough Redbrynn bridge to "Breken to Aberconnreg, a maner place of the Au- "breys, to Penkelthle, to Creghowel, to Aberga- "veny, to Uſk, Caerleon, Newport [e]."

Breknok. "The town of Breknoc is welle waullid, and hath "a fair caſtel joining to it. The duke of Boking- "ham was a late lord there. In the town be . . . . "paroche churches, and withowt . . . There a late "was a celle of blak monkes longing to Batayle "abbey. Breknok waullid, 1111 gates. Old Port "ſuperior as the hy gate by North. Weſt gate by "the Blak freers. They be in the ſuburb. Eſt gate, "Water gate, Cambrice Porthene hichca, i. e. ſupe- "rior, the old gate. Portbont, Bridgate alias Weſt "gate. Portiſſa the lower gate alias Eſt gate. "Port doure, Water gate, alias Portwiſke. Beſide "theſe gates is one without in the beginning of a "ſuburb called Porthene S. Mariæ. In the town "is a mighti greate chapel with a large tour for "belles of hard ſtone coſteli ſquared with the ex- "pence of a thowſand pounds. The paroche (St. "Johannis Evangeliſtæ) was wher the priori was, "and was afor ether or the priori was made, and yet "is. It ſtandith north without the wall upon the "ripe of Honddye. The paroche of Llanvays. St. Da- "vid's. *Llan*church, vais, extra, ac ſi diceres extra muros. "It ſtandeth between the river of Uſke and Tyrtareile "brooke, that is about the lower end of the town of "Brekenok. In the eſt ſuburb is an hoſpitalle with "a chapel of S. Catarine. The caſtel ſtandeth in "the ſuburb, and is divided from the town by Hon- "deney river, over the which is an hy bridge of "11 arches to go into the caſtle, the which is very "large, ſtrong, well maintained, and the keep of "the caſtle is very large and fair. Ther apperith "digging, when menn labored to bring a peace of "Hondy about to inſulate Brekenok with hit and "Wiſke. In the town is a market twice a week "on Wedneſdays and Saturdays. There hath been "found about the town in the feelds Roman coins. "At the end of the lower part of the caſtle cum- "meth Honddey into Uſke as ſoon as Uſke is once "paſſed through the great bridge. Uſke bridge "at Breknok was thrown down by the rage of Uſke "water 26 Henry VIII. die S. Hugonis. It was "not by rain but by ſnow melted that came out of "the mountains. The water ran forward about the "toppe of the high bridge, and the circle marke ap- "pereth almoſt to the middle wall of the blake friers "cloiſter. To the lordſhip of Brekennok longith but "only the market of Brekenok. In al the lordſhip of "Brekenoc was not in time of memori but the priori "of blake monks in Brekenok a cell to Bataile. Ber- "nardus de Novo Mercatu was founder of it [f]."

The town of Brecknock is old and not illbuilt, governed by a bailiff and 15 aldermen, and has three churches. The caſtle ſtood on an hill to the eaſt commanding the whole town, but only a piece of its walls and a tower remain. Leland ſays part of it was built by a lady Malt Albere or Marabrune a reputed witch [g]. Prince Llewellin was forced to raiſe a long ſiege of it 1433 [h]. At its foot the Uſk runs over ledges of rocks under a handſome bridge of three arches by the priory, founded for Benedictines by Bernard Newmarch in the reign of Henry I. valued at £.112. 14s. per ann. [i] The houſe is inhabited by a private family; the ſouth and eaſt ſides of the cloiſters, the refectory and other offices are intire: the church now parochial is a magnificent building but ill kept. The principal church in the town is St. David's, a handſome ſtructure neatly fitted up, in which prayers are read twice a week in Welſh, though that language prevails leſs as we approach England. On the other ſide of the river at the eaſt end of the town are the remains of the Dominican priory, part of the gateway, a quadrangle and a cloiſter with the refectory and St. Mary's chapel (the antient choir) the nave a ſhell for burying. Henry VIII. converted this into a college by the name of the college of Chriſt Church in Brecknoc, and joined the college at Aberguilly to it. It ſtill remains, and conſiſts of the biſhop of St. David's who preſides as dean, a precentor, treaſurer, chancellor, and 19 other prebendaries [k]. Here were buried three biſhops of St. David's, Manwaring, Lucy, and Bull. A linen manufactory has been lately ſet on foot at Breknok with ſucceſs.

The Roman ſtation is called the Gaer [q. d. Caer or the city] at which Mr. Harris places Magnis. He ſeems, however, to have been miſled by the equivocal name of Vaſta civitas given it in old charters [l]. It is a ſmall farm three miles from Brecknock. Half a mile from the houſe the preſent road from [z] Gibſon ex MS. Hengwrt. [a] Pennant's Wales, I. 302—369. [b] Lel. V. 72.

[c] Ib. 69. [d] Ib. 72. [e] Ib. 70. [f] Lel. V. 67, 68.
[g] Ib. 72. [h] Wynne, Hiſt. of Wales, p. 23. [i] Tan. 700. [k] Ib.
[l] Archæol. II. p. 22, 23. Vaſta civitas quæ vocatur Chaer. Vaſta civitas quæ vocatur Carneys.

that that town joins the old Roman one, which though much broken is ſtill very diſcernible, having been raiſed high with large pebbles, and 40 feet wide. It croſſes Eskir brook, but is loſt on the other ſide of it, ſo that it probably led only from Caerleon to Ariconium, the 12th Iter in Antoninus. In the middle of it about a quarter of a mile from the farm houſe is the monumental ſtone deſcribed by Mr. Lluyd in Gibſon's Camden, II. 706. 834, but much better engraved here (Pl. XV. fig. 2.) from Mr. Strange. It is called Maen y Morinnion or the Virgin's ſtone, from a vulgar tradition of a virgin murdered there; but it really belongs to the Romans, repreſenting a man and his wife, and ſtill retaining part of the inſcription, CONIVNX EIV.. It is about ſix feet high, and three and an half broad, and the figures are cut in an area two or three inches below the ſurface of the upper and lower part of the ſtone, a circumſtance not unfrequent in theſe ſepulchral monuments.

The camp at the Gaer is on a riſing ground near the confluence of two rivers, a parallelogram of 624 feet by 456 the longeſt ſides eaſt and weſt including eight acres. The walls remain on the north and eaſt ſides from three to ſix feet and near ſeven and an half thick, and part of the facing is ſtill perfect. Mr. Strange ſaw part of the baſe of a ſmall pedeſtal, and was told many fragments of figured ſtones, urns with aſhes, braſs and ſilver coins, traces of a brick drain of ſemicircular tiles and ſquare tiles, inſcribed LEG. II. AVG. have been found here. (See Pl. XV. fig. 3.) A mile hence and near two miles north from Brecknock on a high hill are remains of a Britiſh oval camp, triple trencht, called Pen y Crug, q. d. the chief heap or barrow[m].

In clearing the corner of a field belonging to Jeffry Wilkins, eſq. in the pariſh of Llanfrynach two miles ſouth-eaſt of Brecknock, in October 1783, the roots of an aſh tree in its fall uncovered a Roman hypocauſt. The pillars were three feet three inches high, formed of bricks ſeven inches ſquare and one inch thick, covered with tiles from ſix to eight inches broad, whoſe edges downwards formed both capitals and a kind of arches between the pillars: the ſpace between the pillars filled up with rubbiſh. At the eaſt end was a paſſage leading to another row of pillars at right angles to the firſt ſupporting a floor of cement and a bath ſeven feet four inches by five feet one inch, lined with cement of lime and pounded brick two inches and an half thick, poliſhed like marble, and four feet deep. In this paſſage was found a bar of iron ſix inches ſquare and four feet long. This bath was deſcended into by two ſteps, one a foot the other 16 inches deep. The inner angles of the bath were filled with the ſame cement two inches by one and an half and rounded towards the bath. In the walls on the eaſt and weſt ſides was a perpendicular brick flue four inches by four and an half in the clear with openings through the ſides. At the bottom of the ſouth-eaſt corner was the arched drain for letting out the water which ſeems to have been brought by other brick pipes. Contiguous to this bath were two others probably for cold water; the inſide cement of which was moſtly deſtroyed in clearing out the rubbiſh. The floor of the whole building, which ſeems to have conſiſted of ſeveral apartments at different levels, appears to have been covered with teſſelated pavement of blue and white dies an inch ſquare. One part near three feet ſquare conſiſted of half inch dies. The brick tiles were variouſly marked, but none with letters. There were alſo found many pieces of compoſt, ſome impreſſed with the figures of leaves and the feet of animals: alſo ſeveral large ſtags horns. Only two coins: one ſilver IVLIA AVGVSTA: rev. PVDICITIA, a female figure ſitting in a chair: the other a ſmall imperial copper coin with two figures ſtanding and an inſtrument of mixed metal like a ſpoon or ſtrigil. About 80 feet ſouth of this building where the ground riſes ſuddenly were foundations of another building. An old water-courſe appears to have conveyed the water from ſprings at a mile diſtant. The farm in a ſurvey 1761 is called Pen y pentry or the head of the village, the meadow where the bath is Carney Bach. In the fields of the ſame farm are two artificial mounts of earth covered with trees and underwood[n].

Llanedeu.

"Llanedeu, a mile from Brekenok, a lordſhip of "the biſhop of St. David's, where was ſometime a "place of the biſhops, now nothing but an unſeemly "ruin. The archdeacon of Breknok has a houſe "even there, mentioned by Giraldus, that is alſo "fallen down for the moſt part[o]."

James Howel the firſt hiſtoriographer of England in the reign of Charles II. was born at Brynn Llanguneth near Brecon about 1596, and died 1666.

Penkethle.

"Going from Brekenok towards Llanſavathy I "ſaw Penkelthle caſtle two miles from Breknok on "the farther ſide of Uſke; but ther is only a fair "medow between Uſk and it. Some ſay that it lon-"gid to the Mortimers. Syns the lordſhip was di-"vided betwixt the duke of Bokingham and one of "the Herberts of Montgomeri. But the caſtle lon-"gith to the Herberts[p]."

Tretarith[r].

"Tertarith a great broke riſith in the Banne hills "5 miles from Brekenok and comith into Uſk in "Brekenok ſuburbe by a place called Trenewith. St. "David's church in the ſuburbe of Brekenok ſtood ons "on this broke, and ſpilled alluvione was removid to "another place[q]."

Trenewith.

"Coming from Brekenok towards Llanameveri "within leſs than 3 miles I enterid into the great "foreſt of Brekenok, where men of late were not "wont to paſſe without tolle of money; and ſo "through that a 3 mile to the litle foreſt, leving "Wiſk alway on the right hand; and about the "end of the litle foreſt I ſaw a litle pile on Wiſk "ſtrongly buildid as a lodge. The people ſay there "that it was buildid of a lady, the which alſo buildid "much of Breknok caſtle called Malt Albere [Maud "Aubrey]. This was ſhe that ſome call Mata-"brune, of which ſo many fables be told as of a "witch. The foreſt is called in Welſh Maiſcar[r]."

Tretwr.

Tretŵr is a large well-built town among woods, with a round tower or caſtle intire except the roof. In Leland's time it was a ſmall village eight miles from Brekenok, ſtanding on a little brook, with a prety caſtle longing to the king, and thereby in the village a fair place of Henry Vehan, eſq.[s]

Crickhowel.

Crickhowel is a ſmall but well accommodated market town near the Uſk 14 miles from Brecknock. Leland calls it a pretty tounlet in a valley on Uſk, having a caſtle hard by belonging once to the Paunſfords, but now to the king[t].

Mr. Maſkelyne, brother to the Aſtronomer Royal, copied, 1773, the following inſcription from a ſtone at the Gaer by Cŭmdu near Crecowel, communi-

[m] Archæol. I. 294. 297. Harris ib. II. 22.
[n] Archæol. VII. p. 209.
[o] Lel. V. 70.
[p] Lel. V. 69.
[q] Ib. 70.
[r] Ib. 72.
[s] Ib. 69.
[t] Ib.

cated

cated by Mr. Barrington to the Society of Antiquaries Nov. 18, 1773.

EATXLVS HIC IA· EP
FILIVS PSSESERHACVS

Llan St. Fryd. About a mile from Llan St. Fryd church, which ſtands alone cloſe to the road, is a cylindrical ſtone three feet and an half high, with this inſcription greatly damaged and the four laſt letters buried [u].

NI . . . FILIVS VICTORINI.

See Pl. XIV. fig. 5. Mr. Lluyd, who ſent biſhop Gibſon an incorrect copy, ſuppoſes it ſepulchral and later than the Romans; but the name of Victorinus appears to me to confute this ſuppoſition. Another ſtone commemorating Turpilianus ſtands one mile from Crickhowel. See Pl. XIV. fig. 6. On the top of an high mountain are plain veſtiges of a circular trench cut out of a ſolid moorſtone rock, probably Roman [x]. Mr. Lluyd gives the following inſcription on a croſs on the road in Vaenor pariſh, which he at firſt ſight conjectured might mean In Nomine Dei Summi Tilas, or Teilaw, an eminent Welſh Saint. It is much more probably to be read, In no Dñi Summi filia, a religious memorial of one Sumi or Sunni, whoſe father's name is loſt or overlooked: See Pl. XIV. fig. 7.

The ſame antiquary adds a monument called Ty Iltud or St. Iltut's hermitage in Llan Hammwlch pariſh on the top of a hill not far from the church, compoſed of four large flattiſh rude ſtones, three of them pitched in the ground, and the fourth laid on them as a cover forming a cell or hut open in front about eight feet long, four wide and high: on the two ſide ſtones this variety of croſſes. See Pl. XIV. fig. 8.

The cell is undoubtedly of the druidical age, though whether the rude figures are of that or a later is uncertain, as alſo whether they mean anything. It correſponds with Kit's Coity houſe in Kent, the cells at Rollrich, Abury, &c. Within a few paces of it was a circle of ſtones called Maen Iltud; ſome of which remained in Mr. Lluyd's time. Probably on the introduction of Chriſtianity this Pagan temple was applied to Chriſtian uſes.

Dinas caſtle. "Dinas caſtle ſtandith a good mile from Blan "Lleveni on the top of a notable hill. It is now "ruinous almoſt to the hard ground. There be "manifeſt tokens of three wards walled about, and "thereby was ſometimes three parks and a foreſt. "The parks be down, but there is yet good plenty "of red deer. The tenants of Dinas hold of the "Welſh tenor. It is ſet by like of one of the hilles "caullid Cathedrales [Cader Idris or Cader Artur]." "The people about Dinas burnt Dinas caſtle that "Owen Glendwr ſhould not keep it for his fort-"reſs [y]."

"Lleveni riſith on the Welch Talgarth hard by [illegible] "Blain Lleveni caſtle, and ſo within a mile to Llyn-"ſevathan by Broynlles caſtle, and ſo by Glaſebiri "into Wy at ap called Aber Llewenit."

"Blain Llevenni in ſume antient writings is called [illegible] "Everi caſtle and Lleveni water Everi brook. The "honor of Blain Llevenni ſtanding in a valley is in "the Welſh Talgarth 3 miles from Penkethle, 5 "from Brekenok, and within a mile of the mere. "There is yet the ſhape of a very fair caſtle, now "decaying, and by it was a borow town, now alſo "in decay. Both longed to the earl of March. "Though Blaine Lleveni be in the Welſch Tal-"garth, yet the tenants keep the Engliſh tenor. "Llangors lordſhip in Talgarth is a member to Blain "Lleveni [z]."

"In Engliſh Talegart is no notable building, but [illegible] "a litle priſon by Talgart church in the town, and "Mr. William Vehan's eſq; place callid Porthamal, [illegible] "i. e. Porta copiæ, half a mile from Talegarth church "in the valley. The houſe hath a fair gate and a "ſtrong wall embattled [a]."

In the porch of an old houſe at lower Trevena near Talgart, ſuppoſed to have ſerved ſome religious purpoſe, now a college for the education of 12 youths, Mr. Strange heard of an old ſtone relief of four angels ſupporting ſhields, and ſome rude characters which he or his friend Mr. Hay took for a date [b]. A braſs celt was found under a cromlech near Kevn Hirr Vynidd on the borders of this county [c].

In Llandavailog church-yard on the road from [illegible] Brecknock to Bualth ſtands a ſtone with a rude figure of a ſoldier, which ſeems to commemorate Brocmail ſurnamed Eſcithrauc, a prince of Powiſland, who defeated Ethelrid king of Northumberland on the banks of the Dee A. D. 617. His ſurname in Bede may refer to Skethrog or Eſkithrog near Llanſanfrid above mentioned [d]. See it in Pl. XV. fig. 1.

Bernard Newmarch having defeated and ſlain [illegible] Bledhyn ap Maenyrch, and ſeized on the lordſhip. of Brecon, forcing his ſon and heir Gwgan to be content with that ſhare which he was pleaſed by way of compoſition to allow him, he gave him the lordſhip and manors of Llanvihangel, Tal y Llyn, part of Llan Llieni and Cantrev Seliv with lodgings in Brecknock caſtle; where there was ſuch ſtrict guard kept over him as being the rightful lord of the country that he was not permitted to go abroad without two or more Norman knights in his company. Roger Gunter, a younger branch of the family who aſſiſted Bernard, intermarrying with the daughter and heir of Thomas Stodey 8 Henry IV. ſettled at Kintbury or Kentbury c. Berks [f].

James Butler afterwards duke of Ormond, was firſt created earl of Brecknock at the Reſtoration 1660, and with him the title expired 1688 [e].

[u] Mr. Strange in Archæol. IV. 15. [x] Ib. 19. [y] Lel. V. 69.
[z] Ib. 69. [a] Ib. [b] Archæol. IV. 21. Pl. I. 4. 6. [c] Ib.
[d] Ib. I. 294. IV. 24. [f] Gibſon ex R. Vaughan. [e] Dugd. Bar. II. 478.

Rare Plant found in Brecknockſhire.

Orobus ſylvaticus. Engliſh Wood Vetch or Bitter Vetch; in woods and hedges: below Brecknock hills in the way to Cardiff.

A

MAP

MONMOUTHSHIRE

from the best

AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J. Cary.

REFERENCES to the HUNDREDS.

1 Wentlooge
2 Abergavenny
3 Skenfrith
4 Ragland & Trelick
5 Usk
6 Caldicot.

BRECKNOCKSHIRE

HEREFORDSHIRE

GLAMORGANSHIRE

Lanfoy Abby
Llanvihangle Gracourney
Sugar Loaf
Langattock Lingoed
Skenfrith Castle
Lanwenarth Landilo
ABERGAVENNY
Lanvethrine
Lanthwy Skerrit
Colbrooke
Lanvaply
Lamillio Greffenny
Langattock Vibon Avil
Welch Newton
Courtfield
English Newton
Lanvihangle Tavrnbach
Lookfield
Lanarth
Penrose
Lanvihangle
Bryngwn
Tregare
Lanvair Kitgden
Goytre
Usk River
Dingestow
Castle Ragland
MONMOUTH
Dixon
Hadnock
The Hill
Mitchel Troy
Newland
Cwmcarvan
Langoven
Landenny
Monkswood Chapel
PONTYPOOL
Lanvihangle Pontymoyl
Chapel Newydd
Lanhiddel
Nanty Bwch
Blaenau Ghwe
Pontypool

Scale of Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude

1 2 3 4 5 6

3° Longitude W. from London 5'

10 5 0 4 5 5 0 3 5

SEVERN RIVER

GLOUCESTERSHIRE

MONMOUTHSHIRE

Aust Passage

Aust Tygroge

Beachley

New Passage

Berkeley Pill

Berkeley Sands

Berkeley Ferry

New Passage

Goldcliff Priory

Redwick

Witheston

Goldcliff

Nash

Undy

Lavithmedic

Rogiate

Eaton a Huin

Fortsgowit

Magor

Lanwarne

Bishton

Wilcrick

Langstone

Lamarkin

Penrose

Huin

Lanhilleth

Church

NEWPORT

Castle Town

Lanaden & Bc

Llanmaes

Cowbridge

Marshfield

Sthiddes

Wentlooge Level

Peterstone

Rumney R.

Rumney Bn

Rumney

Rumney Bridge

Rhymney R.

Rhymney Bridge

Tredonnock

Lamtrisant

Lamlash

Llanvaches

Llanmartin

Kemys

Bedwas

Machen

Machen Bc

Machen Mill

Upper Machen

Lower Machen

Iron Works

Bedwas Bc

Gellyhaled

Maesycwmmer

Hengoed

Ystrad Mynach

Llanbradach

Llanfabon

Llanfabon Bc

Llanfabon Church

Llanfabon Mill

Llanfabon Pond

Llanfabon Bridge

Llanfabon Common

Llanfabon Wood

Llanfabon Park

Llanfabon Farm

Llanfabon Cottage

Llanfabon Lodge

Llanfabon Gate

Llanfabon Road

Llanfabon Lane

Llanfabon Hill

Llanfabon Valley

Llanfabon Brook

Llanfabon Bridge

Llanfabon Ford

Llanfabon Ferry

Llanfabon Pier

Llanfabon Quay

Llanfabon Harbour

Llanfabon Dock

Llanfabon Basin

Llanfabon Canal

Llanfabon Tunnel

Llanfabon Aqueduct

Llanfabon Viaduct

Llanfabon Railway

Llanfabon Station

Llanfabon Goods Station

Llanfabon Engine Shed

Llanfabon Turntable

Llanfabon Signal Box

Llanfabon Level Crossing

Llanfabon Gatehouse

Llanfabon Toll House

Llanfabon Turnpike

Llanfabon Milestone

Llanfabon Boundary Stone

Llanfabon Parish Boundary

Llanfabon Hundred Boundary

Llanfabon County Boundary

Llanfabon Meadow

Llanfabon Pasture

Llanfabon Arable

Llanfabon Orchard

Llanfabon Garden

Llanfabon Yard

Llanfabon Barn

Llanfabon Stable

Llanfabon Coach House

Llanfabon Dairy

Llanfabon Brewhouse

Llanfabon Malthouse

Llanfabon Granary

Llanfabon Mill

Llanfabon Millpond

Llanfabon Millrace

Llanfabon Waterwheel

Llanfabon Millstone

Llanfabon Millhouse

Llanfabon Millkeeper

Llanfabon Miller

Llanfabon Millboy

Llanfabon Millgirl

Llanfabon Millwife

Llanfabon Millchild

Llanfabon Millfamily

Llanfabon Millhouse

Llanfabon Millgarden

Llanfabon Millyard

Llanfabon Millbarn

Llanfabon Millstable

Llanfabon Millcoach House

Llanfabon Milldairy

Llanfabon Millbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmalthouse

Llanfabon Millgranary

Llanfabon Millmill

Llanfabon Millmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillrace

Llanfabon Millwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmiller

Llanfabon Millmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgarden

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillyard

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbarn

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstable

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillcoach House

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmilldairy

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillbrewhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmalthouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgranary

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmill

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillpond

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillrace

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwaterwheel

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillstone

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillhouse

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillkeeper

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmiller

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillboy

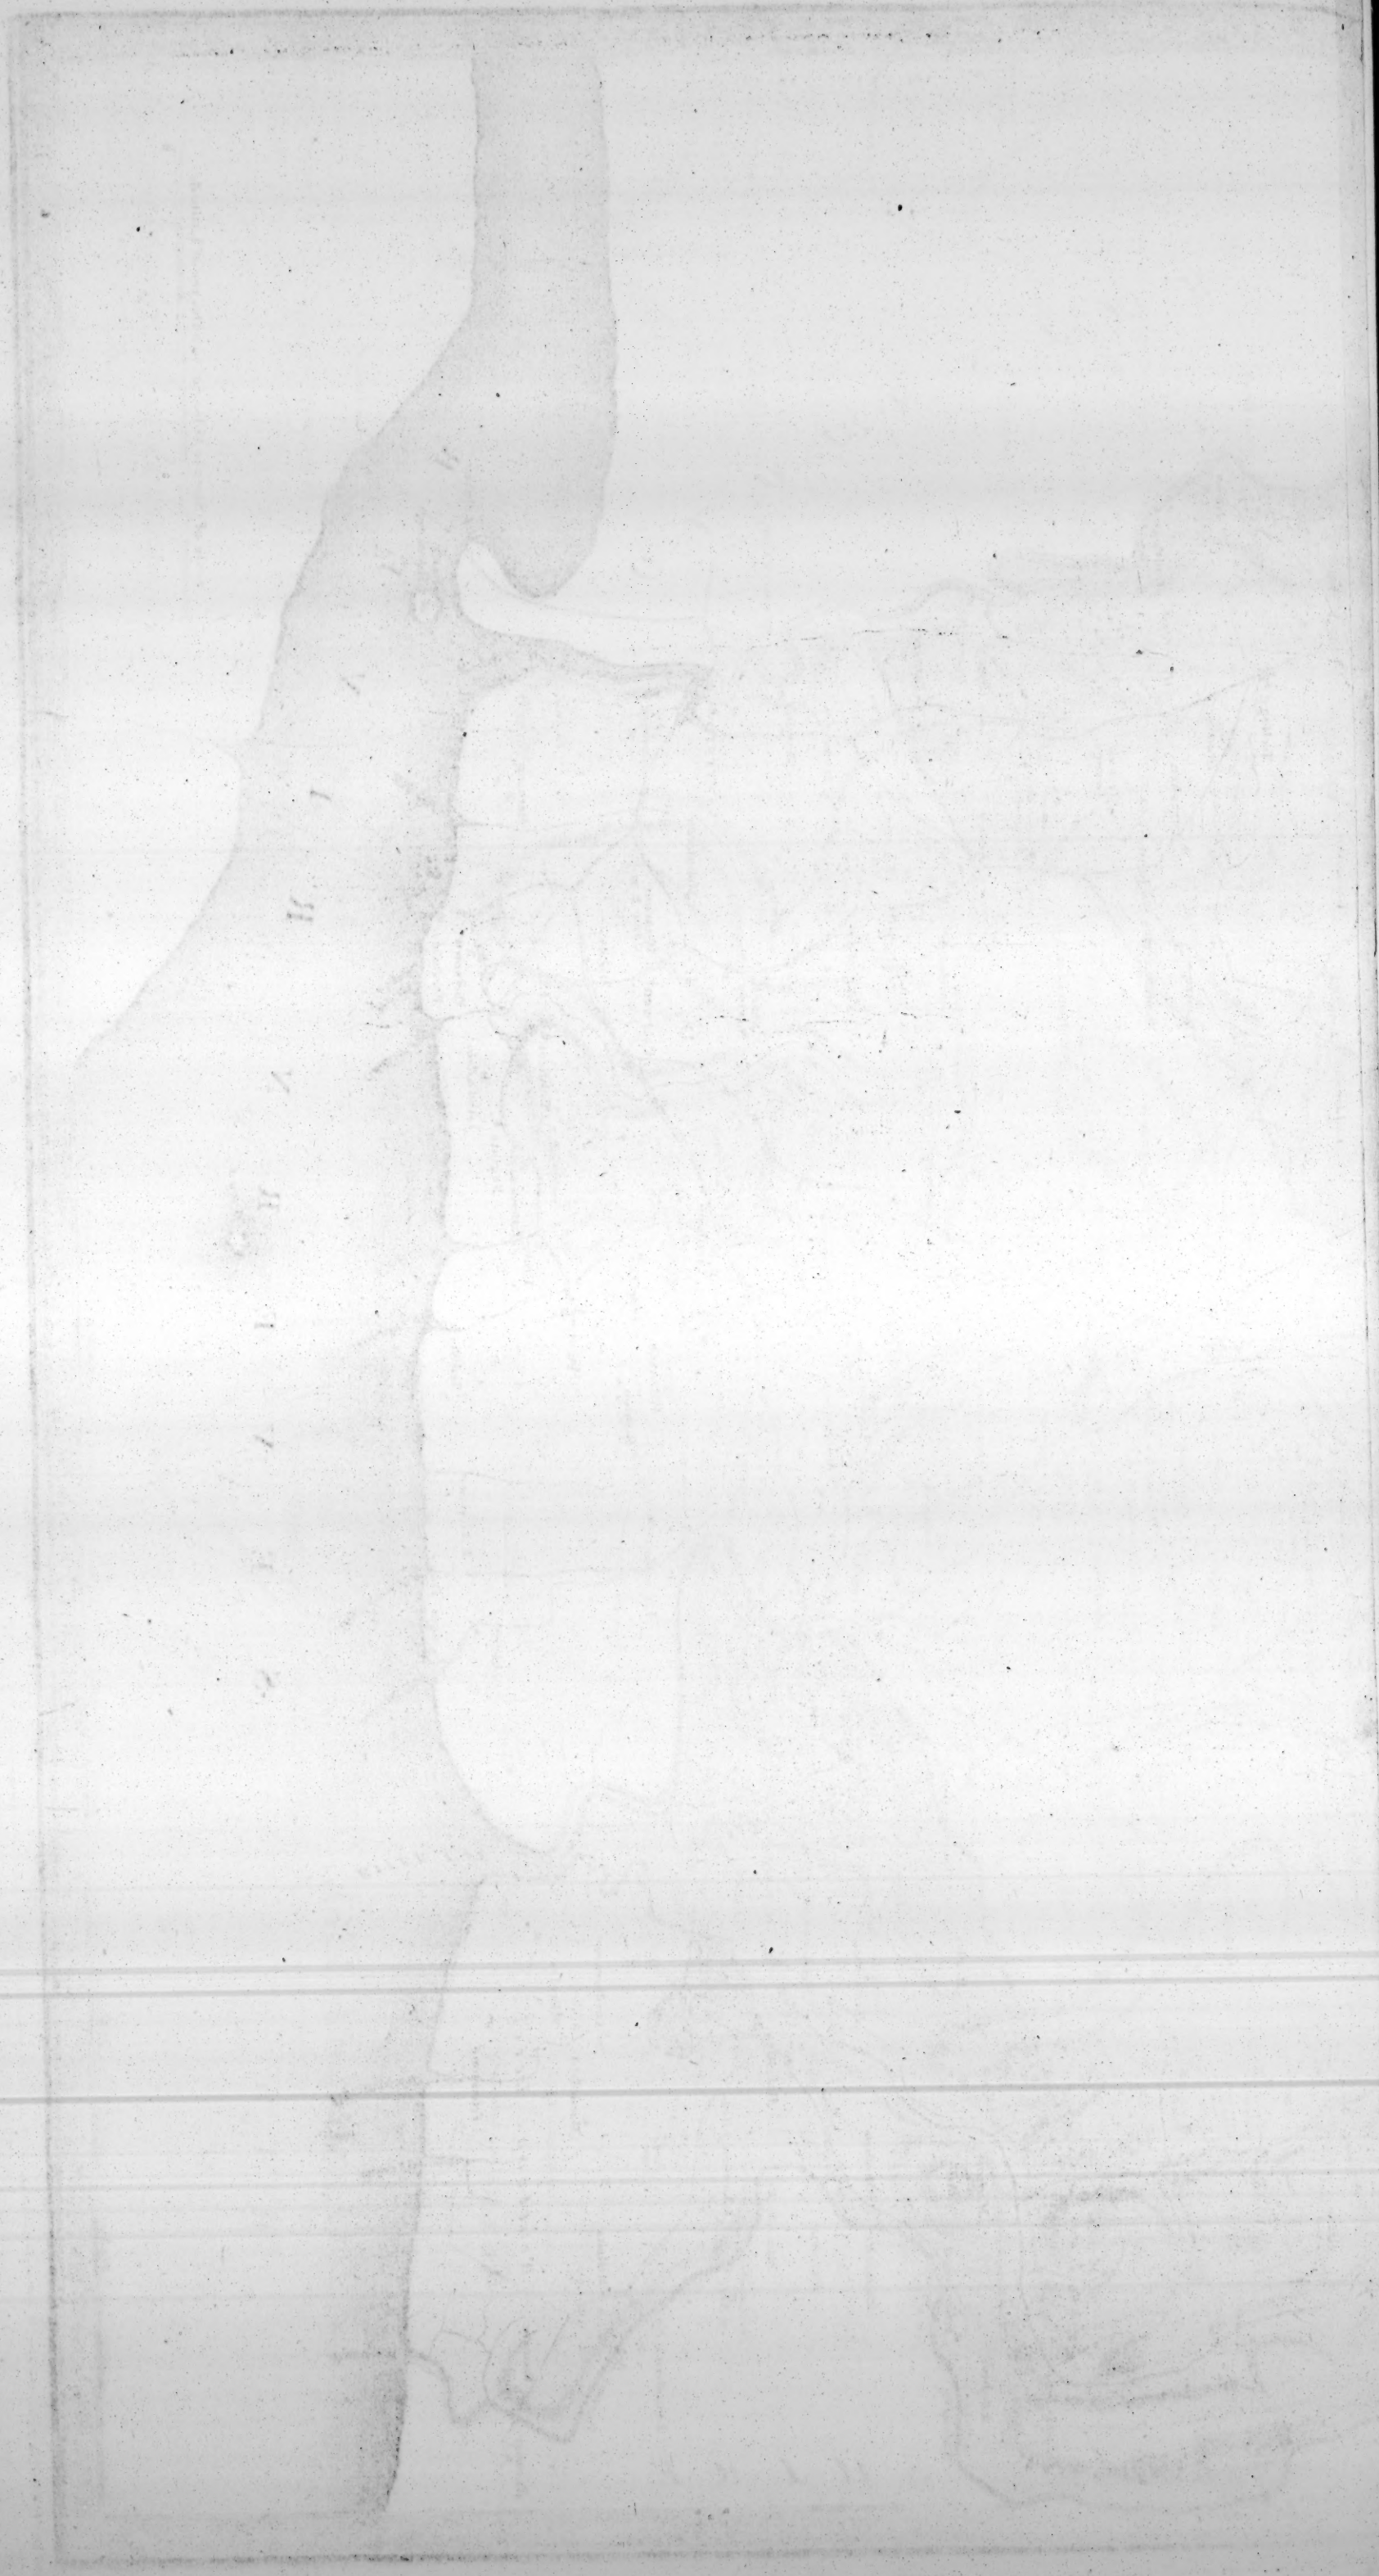
Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillgirl

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillwife

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillchild

Llanfabon Millmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillmillfamily

Llanfab



MONMOUTHSHIRE.

BELOW Brecknock and Herefordſhires to the ſouth lies the county of Monmouth, formerly called Wentſet and Wents-land, and by the Britans Guent, from an antient city of that name. It is bounded on the north by the river Munow, which divides it from Herefordſhire, as does the Wye on the eaſt from Gloceſterſhire, and the Remney on the weſt from Glamorganſhire; and on the ſouth is the Severn ſea, into which thoſe rivers fall, together with the Uſk, which runs through the middle of the county. Its produce is not only equal to its own conſumption, but plentifully ſupplies its neighbours. The eaſt part is covered with herbage and wood; the weſt is ſomewhat mountainous and ſtony, but does not ill requite the huſbandman's pains. "The people," ſays Giraldus, ſpeaking of his own time[a], "are practiſed "in martial exerciſes, of approved bravery, and the "beſt archers of all the Welſh borderers."

In the extreme point called Ewias, not far from the river Munow, among Hatterell hills, which riſing like a chair are called Munith[b] Cader, ſtands the antient abbey of Lanthony, founded by Walter Lacy, to whom William earl of Hereford gave lands here, and from whom deſcended the Lacies, who figured among the firſt conquerors of Ireland. I ſhall borrow Giraldus Cambrenſis' deſcription of this ſmall monaſtery, with whoſe ſituation he was perfectly acquainted. "In the deep vale of Ewias," ſays he, "which is about an arrow's flight over, ſurrounded "on every ſide by a circle of mountains, whoſe ſum"mits pierce the clouds, ſtands the church of St. "John Baptiſt, roofed with lead, and built of hewn "ſtones, in no mean ſtyle conſidering the place, on "the ſpot where before ſtood the poor chapel of St. "David the archbiſhop adorned only with moſs and "clinging ivy. A ſpot calculated for the purpoſes "of real religion, and moſt adapted to canonical "diſcipline of all the religious houſes in the iſland of "Britain, firſt pitched upon by two hermits in honor "of an hermit, at the greateſt diſtance from all the "buſtle of the world, in ſolitude upon the river "Hodney, at the bottom of a valley, from which "and from Hodney it is called Lanthodeny, Lhan ſig"nifying a place for religious purpoſes. But to "ſpeak with more exactneſs, the proper name of this "place in Welſh is Nanthodeny, it being to this day "called by the inhabitants Lhan Devi Nanthodeny, "q. d. The church of St. David upon the river "Hodeney. The rains produced by the mountains "are frequent here, the winds violent, and the fogs "in winter time almoſt continual. Yet, thick as the "air is, the temperament is ſo mild and healthy "that diſorders are very uncommon. The monks "ſitting here in their cloyſter, when they put out "their heads for freſh air, whichever way they turn "their eyes over the lofty roofs of their cells behold "the tops of the mountains as it were reaching to "heaven, and covered with deer, of which here are "plenty feeding on the ſummits which bound the "horizon. The ſun is firſt ſeen here even in fair "weather between the firſt and third hours of the "day juſt above the tops of the hills." And a little after he goes on thus: "Report drew hither Roger "biſhop of Saliſbury then the firſt man in the king"dom under the king; who, after he had for ſome "time with aſtoniſhment conſidered the nature of the "place, the hermit-like ſolitude of the brethren "there ſerving God without the leaſt diſagreement, "and their calm converſation, returned to the king, "and reporting all that he had ſeen and thought "worthy to be related, after ſpending the greateſt "part of the day in praiſe of the place, concluded "his encomium in theſe terms: 'To finiſh my ſtory, "the whole revenue of the crown and ſtate would "not be ſufficient to build the cloyſter only.' After "keeping the king and all the court in ſuſpence "wondering at his paradoxical expreſſion, he at laſt "explained it by ſaying he meant the incloſure of "hills defending it on every ſide." But of this enough.

Groſſmont. Skinfrith caſtles.

On the river Munow one ſees Groſſmont and Skinfrith caſtles, formerly belonging to the Breoſes by grant from king John, afterwards to Hubert de Burg, who, to appeaſe the ſtorm of court envy, gave up theſe and two others, viz. White Caſtle and Hanfeld to king Henry III. as we read in Matthew Paris' Hiſtoria Minor, "for peace and recovery of former "favour."

Monmouth.

In the other corner, to the north[c], the Munow and Wye meeting almoſt ſurround, and give name to the chief town of the county, it being called in Britain Mongwy [Mwnwy], and by us Monmouth. On the north, where it is not defended by the rivers, it was encompaſſed with a wall and ditch. In the middle of the town, near the market place, is the caſtle, which appears from the public records to have flouriſhed in William the Conqueror's time, though ſuppoſed to have been built by John baron of Monmouth, from whom it came to the houſe of Lancaſter, when Henry III. ſtripped him of his eſtate for his obſtinate adherence to the barons againſt him, or rather, as we read in the king's prerogative, becauſe his heirs had taken the oath of allegiance to the earls of Bretagne. The town at preſent enjoys conſiderable privileges granted by the houſe of Lancaſter. But it is diſtinguiſhed for nothing ſo much as for giving birth to Henry V. the Conqueror of France, and the ſecond ornament of the houſe of Lancaſter, that Henry, who by his valor ſubdued France, and brought Charles VI. king of France to a kind of renunciation of his crown. On the great ſucceſſes which attended this prince in his

[a] I. c. 3. p. 835.
[b] Mwnyth cadir i. e. the chair mountains.
[c] N. E. G.

wars John Seward, not the worſt poet of the time, thus exultingly addreſſes the Engliſh:

Ite per extremum Tanain pigroſque Triones,
Ite per arentem Lybiam, ſuperate calores
Solis, & arcanos Nili deprendite fontes,
Herculeum finem, Bacchi tranſcurrite metas;
Angli juris erit quicquid complectitur orbis.
Anglis rubra dabunt pretioſas æquora conchas,
Indus ebur, ramos Panchaia, vellera Seres:
Dum viget Henricus, dum noſter vivit Achilles:
Eſt etenim laudes longe tranſgreſſus avitas.

Go to remoteſt Tanais' Northern lands,
Through Phœbus' power in Afric's burning ſands,
The ſecret ſources of the Nile explore,
Bacchus and great Alcides' bounds run o'er.
All that the world contains the Engliſh owns;
The Red Sea gives to England precious ſtones,
Arabia ſpice, India her iv'ry gives,
The Seres ſilk: For while our Henry lives,
England's Achilles ſhall in Henry laſt,
Who all her antient glories far ſurpaſt.

Geoffrey of Monmouth, or Ap Arthur.

Monmouth alſo boaſts of having given birth to Galfridus Arthurius, biſhop of St. Aſaph, the compiler of Britiſh hiſtory, a man very well verſed in antiquity, but not of antient veracity, having ſtuffed his work with ſo many idle tales of his own inventing that he is ranked among prohibited authors by the church of Rome.

Hence the Wye winds down to the ſouth, having a plenteous ſalmon fiſhery from September to April. It is at preſent the boundary between Glouceſter and Monmouthſhires, as formerly between the Welſh and Engliſh, according to that line of Necham:

Inde vagos Vaga Cambrenſes, hinc reſpicit Anglos.

One way the Wye the wandring Welſhmen ſees, Another England.

Chepſtow.

As it approaches towards its mouth it runs by Chepſtow, q. d. if you derive it from the Saxon, a market or place of trade, called by the Britans Caſtle Went. It is a conſiderable town, ſituated on a hill riſing from the river, ſurrounded with walls, which include fields and gardens within their large circuit. It has a caſtle of conſiderable extent commanding the river, and overagainſt it ſtood a priory, now for the moſt part demoliſhed, and the remainder turned into a pariſh church. The bridge over the Wye is built of timber, and very high, on account of the great riſe of the tide in this river. The lords of this town were the earls of Pembroke, of the houſe of Clare, commonly called from the neighbouring caſtle of Strighull, where they reſided, earls of Strighull and Pembroke, the laſt of whom, Richard, a man of an invincible ſpirit, and very long arms, called Strongbow, from being able to bend the ſtrongeſt bow, and his amazing ſtrength, firſt by his valour opened the conqueſt of Ireland to the Engliſh. By his daughter it came to the Bigotts, &c. but now belongs to the earls of Worceſter. But this town is of no great antiquity; for many perſons affirm, and not without reaſon, that it roſe not many ages ago out of VENTA, a very antient city four miles weſt of this, which flouriſhed in the time of Antoninus, whoſe name neither the rage of men nor time has yet extinguiſhed, it being ſtill called Caer Went, or the City Wenta. The city has ſuffered ſo much from one or other of theſe circumſtances, that its exiſtence is diſcoverable at preſent only from half ruined walls, teſſelated pavements, and Roman coins. It is about a mile in circumference; great part of the wall remains on the ſouth ſide, and ſomething more than the ruins of three towers. Of what conſequence it was formerly may be inferred from this circumſtance alone, that before the name of Monmouth was known, the whole country was called from it Guent, Went-ſet, and Wentſland. It was further, as we read in the life of Tathaus a Britiſh ſaint, an univerſity, or place appropriated to literature, over which this Tathaus preſided with great applauſe, having been invited by king Caradoc ap Inir: he alſo built a church here *.

Caſtelh Gwent.

Earls of Strighull.

Venta.

Caer Went.

Five miles weſt of this place ſtands at the foot of a hill Strigull caſtle, called by us at preſent Strugle, by the Normans Eſtrighill, built as appears from Domeſday book [d] by William Fitz Oſborn, earl of Hereford, and afterwards made the reſidence of the earls of Pembroke of the houſe of Clare: whence they were commonly called earls of Strigul.

Below this, on the æſtuary near the mouth of the Wye, ſtands Portſkeweth, called Portſcith by Marianus, who relates that Harald erected here, A.D. 1055, a fortification againſt the Welſh, which they immediately razed under the command of Caradoc. The little river Throgoy next falls into the Severn near Caldecot, where I ſaw the walls of a caſtle belonging antiently to the Conſtables of England, and held by the ſervice of being Conſtable of England †. Near it one ſees Wondy and Penbow, antiently the ſeat of the famous family of Saint Maur, now corruptly Seimor. For William Mareſchall, earl of Pembroke, about the year 1240, was bound to aſſiſt William de Saint Maur to recover Wendye from the Welſh. From him deſcended Roger de Saint Maur, knt. who married one of the coheirs of the illuſtrious J. de Beauchamp, baron of Hach, who derived his deſcent from Sibilla coheireſs of William Mareſhall, that puiſſant earl of Pembroke, William de Ferrars, earl of Derby, Hugh de Vivonia, and William Mallet; men of great renown in antient times. The nobility of all theſe, as well as that of others, as can be clearly proved, centered in the right honourable Edward Seimor, now earl of Hertford, a ſingular encourager of virtue and learning, and deſerving the higheſt praiſe on that account.

Lower down for ſeveral miles extends a marſhy tract called the Moore, which, while I was reviewing this work, ſuffered great devaſtation. For the Severn ſea, after a ſpring tide, being driven back by a ſtrong ſouth-weſt wind that blew three days without intermiſſion, roſe to ſuch a height with a moſt violent ſea wind [e], that the ſwell broke upon this low ground and the oppoſite coaſt of Somerſet with the greateſt violence, beating down houſes, and drowning many cattle and men. At the extremity of this marſh-land, which runs out into a point, riſes Goldcliffe, ſo called according to Giraldus Cambrenſis [f], from the "ſparkling golden colour of its ſtones, when the ſun "ſhines upon them; nor can I (continues he) eaſily "perſuade myſelf that Nature in vain gave brightneſs "to ſtones, or that there ſhould be flower without "fruit, if any body would take the pains to pe-"netrate by art into the veins there and the inmoſt "bowels of the earth." Here alſo are ſome remains

* Liber Landaff.

† Inq. 3. E. I.

[d] Fol. 162. where it is ſpelt Eſtrighoiel.

[e] vehementiſſimo Altano. Sea wind. G. very ſtrong pirry from the ſea. H.

[f] I. c. 5.

of

of a priory, which acknowledges the Chandos family for its patrons.

After this we come by the marſhland to the mouth of the Iſca, which the Britans call Uſk and Wyſk; and others Oſk. This, as I ſaid before, runs through the country by three ſmall towns of high antiquity.

The firſt on the north-weſt edge of the county is called by Antoninus GOBANNIVM [g] at the confluence of the Uſk and Gevenny, whence it takes its name, and at preſent retaining the antient name intire is called Aber Gevenny, and contractedly Abergenny, which ſignifies the confluence of the Gevenny or Gobannius. It is defended by a wall and caſtle, which, as Giraldus [h] ſays, was diſhonoured by treaſon oftner than any caſtle in Wales; firſt by William ſon of earl Milo, afterwards by William Breoſe; both of whom inviting ſome Welſh lords hither under pretence of friendſhip and public faith, baſely murdered them. But the vengeance of Heaven followed their crimes; the latter, being ſtripped of all his eſtates and his wife and ſon ſtarved to death, died abroad; the former ſuffered at length the puniſhment due to his crimes by a ſtone falling on his head when Breulais caſtle was on fire. The firſt lord of Abergevenny or Gobannium that I have met with was one Hameline Balun [i], who left Brian of Wallingford or Brientius de L'iſle ſurnamed Fitz Count [k] his heir. He built an hoſpital here for his two ſons who were lepers, and left the greateſt part of his eſtate to Walter ſon of Milo earl of Hereford [l]. To him ſucceeded his brother Henry, ſlain by the Welſh who invaded his lands, which were defended by the king's officers with great difficulty. But by a ſiſter of Henry [m] it came to the Breoſes, and from them by marriage by the Cantelupes and Haſtings to Reginald Grey of Ruthin [n]. William de Beauchamp however recovered it from Grey by virtue of a conveyance and agreement, and he again in default of iſſue male made it over to his brother Thomas earl of Warwick and his heirs male. William de Beauchamp lord of Abergavenny had a ſon named Richard created for his valour earl of Worceſter, and ſlain in the French wars [o], leaving an only daughter [p] married to Edward Nevill. From that time the Nevilles bore the tile of baron Abergavenny, though the caſtle was long kept from them by virtue of the conveyance abovementioned [q]. The fourth of theſe dying in our time left one only daughter Mary, married to ſir Thomas Fane, knt. between whom and ſir Edward Nevill, knt. the next male heir, to whom by will confirmed in parliament the caſtle of Abergevenny and the largeſt part of the eſtate had fallen, a long ſuit was vigorouſly and ably agitated before the Houſe of Lords, 2d of king James, for ſeven days together [r]. But the queſtion of right not being ſufficiently clear, and both adjudged highly deſerving of the title by the ſplendour of their family, and it plainly appearing that both the title of baron Abergevenny and baron Le Deſpenſer belonged to this family hereditarily, the lords petitioned the king to reſtore the rank of baron to both, to which he readily agreed. Upon this it was propoſed by the Chancellor, firſt, whether the heir male or the heir female ſhould bear the title of Abergevenny, when the majority determined in favour of the heir male. It was again propoſed, whether the barony of Le Deſpenſer ſhould be reſtored to the heir female and her heirs, to which they all agreed: and this being laid before the king, he confirmed it by his aſſent. Edward Nevill by the king's writ was immediately ſummoned to parliament by the title of baron Abergavenny, and introduced in his robes of parliament between two barons according to cuſtom, and ſeated above baron Audeley. At the ſame time were read in the houſe of Lords the king's letters patent "reſtoring, advancing, preferring, &c. Mary Fane to "the ſtate, degree, title, ſtyle, name, honour, and "dignity of baroneſs Le Deſpenſer, to have and to "hold the ſtate, &c. aforeſaid to the ſaid Mary and "her heirs; and that her heirs ſhould be ſucceſſively "barons Le Deſpenſer, &c." A new queſtion ariſing about precedence, the lords referred it to the commiſſioners for executing the office of earl marſhall of England, who after mature conſideration determined under their hand and ſeal in favour of the barony of Le Deſpenſer, which was read before the Houſe of Lords, and by their command entered in their journals, whence I have taken this abſtract. I muſt not forget to obſerve, that this caſtle was held by J. Haſtings, "by homage, ward, and mar- 6 E. II.
"riage, and whenever it happened (as the inqui"ſition ſets forth) that there was war between the "king of England and the prince of Wales, he was "to defend the country of Over-went at his own
"expence in the beſt manner he could for his own
"and the king's advantage and the defence of the "realm of England."

The ſecond little city, which Antoninus calls BVRRIVM, and places twelve miles from Gobannium, ſtands where the Birthin joins the Uſk, called by the preſent Britans by a tranſpoſition of letters Brunebegie for Burenbegie and Caer Uske, by Giraldus [s] Caſtrum Oſcæ, and by the Engliſh Uske. At preſent it exhibits only the ruins of a large and ſtrong caſtle, pleaſantly ſituate between the river Uſke and the little rivulet Oilwy, which runs under it from the eaſt by Ragland, a beautiful and caſtle-like ſeat of the earl of Worceſter.

BVRRIVM. Brydbin r. Brynbiga. Uſk. Oilwy r. Ragland c.

The third city Antoninus calls ISCA, LEGIO II. ſituated on the other ſide of the Uſk, exactly twelve Italian miles, as he obſerves, from BVRRIVM. It is called by the Britans Caer Leon and Caer Leon ar Uſk, q. d. the City of the Legion on the river Usk from the Legio II. Auguſta called alſo Britannica II. This legion formed by Auguſtus, and ſent by Claudius out of Germany into Britain under the command of Veſpaſian, whom it ſupported in his deſigns on the empire, and ſecured it to him with the legions in Britain, ſeems to have been at laſt ſtationed here under Julius Frontinus [t] againſt the Silures. How conſiderable a place this Iſca was at that time Giraldus will tell us in his Itinerarium Cambriæ [u]: "This was an antient and highly privileged city, "admirably built in former times by the Romans "with walls of burnt brick. You will ſee here "many traces of antient grandeur, immenſe pa-

ISCA. Cear Leon.

[g] More properly Gebanium. Baxter and Harris.
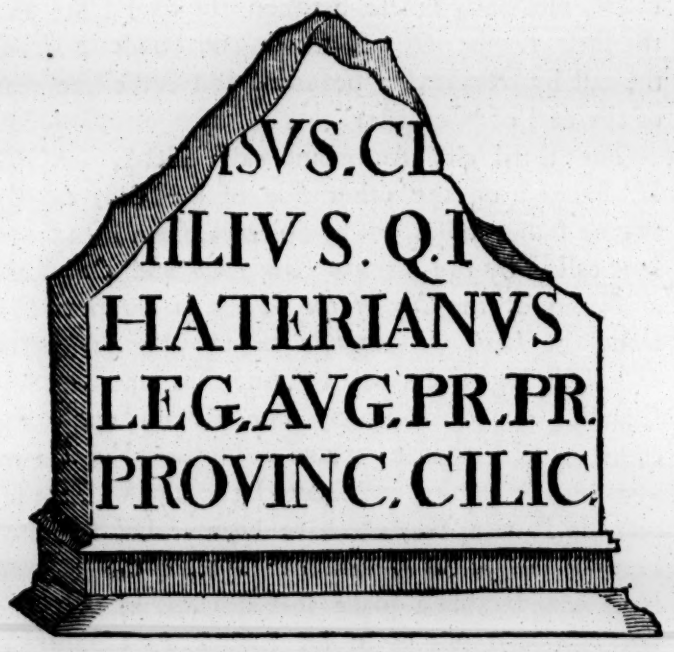
[h] He ſpeaks of the caſtle, I. 3. but uſes not theſe words.
[i] Dugd. Bar. I. 453.
[k] his nephew. Dugd. I. 468.
[l] Dugdale I. 536. and Vincent, 237, differ.
[m] Dugdale differs, I. 414.
[n] Dugd. I. 716. 732.
[o] 5 Hen. V. Dugd. I. 242.
[p] Elizabeth. Dugd. I. 309.
[q] Dugd. I. 242.
[r] Ib. 311.
[s] I. c. 5.
[t] Rather by Severus after his wall was finiſhed; for the inſcriptions ſpeak of him and his ſons. Horſley, p. 78.
[u] I. c. 5.

" laces whoſe roofs once gilded imitated the Roman " ſplendor, it having been firſt built by the Roman " emperors, and adorned with handſome ſtructures. " Here was a prodigious high tower, noble baths, " remains of temples and theatres with grand walls " part of which are ſtill remaining. You will every " where find both within and without the walls " ſubterraneous buildings, water-courſes, and paſ- " ſages underground, and what you will think more " extraordinary, ſtoves everywhere wonderfully con- " ſtructed, ſecretly conveying a concealed heat from " certain narrow brick flews. In this city are bu- " ried two eminent perſonages next to Alban and " Amphibalus, the principal protomartyrs of Great " Britain, and here crowned with martyrdom, viz. " Julius and Aaron, who have each a noble church in " the city. That dedicated to the martyr Julius is " graced with a choir of virgins devoted to God; the " other is dedicated to his companion Aaron, and fur- " niſhed with an excellent company of canons. Am- " phibalus alſo, the teacher and faithful inſtructor of " St. Alban in the faith, was a native of this place. " The city is well ſituated on the river Oske which " is navigable to the ſea, and is beautified with woods " and meadows. Here the Roman ambaſſadors came " to the great Arthur's court. Here Dubritius the " archbiſhop reſigned that honour to David of Me- " nevia, and the Metropolitan ſee was tranſlated from " hence to that place." Thus Giraldus. But in proof of its antiquity I have added ſome antient inſcriptions lately dug up here, kindly communicated to me by the right reverend father in God Francis Godwin biſhop of Landaff, a ſingular lover of venerable antiquity and polite literature. In the year 1602 was found by labourers in an adjoining meadow on a teſſelated pavement an image in tuckt up garments with a quiver, but without head, hands, or feet; and a fragment of an altar with this inſcription in letters three inches long, erected by Haterianus the emperor's lieutenant and proprætor of Cilicia.



Next year was dug up near it the following inſcription, which proves the ſaid image to have repreſented Diana, and that her temple was repaired by Titus Flavius Poſtumius Varus, probably a veteran of a cohort of the ſecond legion.

T. FL. POSTVMIVS VARVS
V. C. LEG. TEMPL. DIANAE
RESTITVIT.[x]

And this year was found a votive altar, on which the name of Geta Cæſar ſeems to have been eraſed when he was taken off and declared an enemy by his brother Antoninus Baſſianus; yet ſo as ſome traces of letters ſtill appear.

PRO SALVTE
AVGG. N. N.
SEVERI ET ANTON-
NI ET GETAE CAES.
P. SALTIENVS P. F MAE.
CIA THALAMVS HADRI.
PRAEF. LEG. II. AVG.
C. VAMPEIANO, ET
LVCILIAN.

Some books make Claudius Pompeianus [Pompeius] and Lollianus [Lollius] Avitus Conſuls A. C. 210[y].

The following beautiful broken altar was alſo found there, which I think is to be thus ſupplied[z]:

Theſe inſcriptions are at Mathern, a houſe of the biſhop of Landaff.

Likewiſe theſe fragments.

* 7. VECILIANA.

VIII.
7. VALER.
MAXSIMI.

[x] V. C. LEG is for Vir clariſſimus or conſularis legatus. Horſl. 321.
[*] Ward MS. n. Woodford has no more of this than appears on the left of the crack.
[y] So Horſl. 321.

Here about the arrival of the Saxons was "a "ſchool of 200 philoſophers verſed in aſtronomy "and other ſciences, who diligently obſerved the "motions of the ſtars," as is related by Alexander Elſebienſis, a ſcarce author, out of whom much was tranſcribed for me by Thomas James of Oxford, a learned man and true lover of books, who devotes himſelf intirely to learning and books, and whoſe public ſpiritedneſs in examining the libraries in England has engaged him in a deſign that will be of ſingular ſervice to the republic of letters, and in which I moſt heartily wiſh him ſucceſs.

In the reign of Henry II. when Giraldus wrote, this place ſeems to have been very ſtrong. For Yrwith[a] of Caerleon, a ſpirited Britan, held it long againſt the Engliſh, till he was defeated by the king, and diſlodged. At preſent, as a proof how ſubject cities as well as men are to fate, it has dwindled to a little town which was formerly ſo large and extended on both ſides of the river that St. Julian's, a houſe of the honourable ſir William Herbert, knt. no leſs eminent for his accompliſhed genius and judgement than his noble birth, is reported to have been within the city, and the church of St. Julius the martyr to have ſtood there, though now near a mile from the town. From its ruins roſe Newport, called by Giraldus[b] Novus Burgus, a modern town, ſomewhat lower at the mouth of the Uſk conſiderable for its caſtle and commodious harbour, where was formerly a military way mentioned in the following lines by Necham.

Intrat, & auget aquas Sabrini fluminis Oſca Præceps; teſtis erit Julia Strata mihi.

Uſk furious ent'ring Severn's ſtream augments
As Julia Strata ſhews.

There is no reaſon to doubt that this Julia Strata was a way, and if I may be indulged a conjecture I ſhould think it not improbable that it was raiſed by Julius Frontinus the conqueror of the Silures. "In "the confines of this New Burgh," ſays Giraldus[c], "creeps a rivulet named Nantpencarn, impaſſable Nantpencarn. "except at certain fords not ſo much by the depth "of its ſtream as for the hollowneſs of its bed and "marſhy muddineſs: and it had antiently a ford "called Rydpencarn or the ford under the head of Rhydpencarn. "the rock." This being hardly known when king Henry II. accidentally croſſed it, the Welſh (who place great faith in prophecies) gave up every proſpect for loſt, becauſe Merlin Wyldht had foretold that the Welſh would be cruſhed whenever a ſtout and freckled prince (ſuch as Henry was) croſſed that ford.

In the Saxon heptarchy this country was ſubject to the Welſh mountaineers whom they called Dunſettan, who yet as appears by antient laws were ſubject to the Saxon government. In the early Norman times the Lords Marchers grievouſly harraſſed it, particularly Hameline Balun already mentioned, Hugh Lacy, Walter and Gilbert de Clare and Brien Wallingford, to whom our kings having granted the propriety of all they could conquer from the Welſh in theſe parts, ſome of them gradually reduced the upper part called Over-went, others the lower called Nether-Went. Dun-ſettan.

This county contains 127 pariſh churches.

[a] I. Jorwerth. [b] I. c. 5. [c] I. c. 6.

ADDITIONS.

MONMOUTHSHIRE is about 29 miles long by 20 broad, and 80 in circumference. It contains 127 pariſhes and ſeven market towns, and ſends three members to parliament, two for the ſhire, and one for Monmouth. It was conſidered as a Welſh county till the time of Charles II. when it began to be reckoned in England becauſe the judges kept the aſſizes here in the Oxford circuit.

"The ſoil of all Venteland is of a dark reddiſh "earth full of ſlaty ſtones, and other greater of the "ſame color. The country is alſo ſomewhat moun- "tainous, and well repleniſhed with woods, alſo very "fertile of corn, but men there ſtudy more to paſ- "tures, which be well encloſed[a]."

Kader. Kader, which is the name of many mountains in Wales, as Kader Arthur, Kader Vervin, Kader Idris, Kader Dhinmael, Kader yr Ychen, &c. is by the learned Dr. Davies ſuppoſed to imply, that theſe mountains were fortified places, or conſidered as naturally impregnable by thoſe who gave them this name. The Britiſh word Kader, as well as the Iriſh Kathair, antiently ſignified a fort or bulwark, whence probably the modern word Kaer of the ſame ſignification might be corrupted[i]. Leland calls theſe mountains Cathedrales. See in Brecon. But why might not their elevated ſituation, and ſometimes their double ſummit, ſuggeſt the idea of a throne or chair?

Lanthony. "Llan Nanthonddye a priori of blake chanons "ſtondith in the vale of Ewias, then called Hon- "ddye Slade 14 miles from Breknok. This priori "was faire, and ſtood betwixt two great hilles[b]."

This abbey was firſt founded about A. D. 1103 by Erviſtus a prieſt and William a ſoldier, whoſe reluctance to be enriched by the liberality of their lord and patron Henry de Lacy, ſerved only to procure them greater benefactions. However, they retained their happy moderation to the time of Giraldus, who draws a ſtriking contraſt between this houſe and its daughter and nameſake near Gloceſter. At firſt the two hermits would accept no more than was ſufficient to build a ſmall church 1108; but at length Erviſtus by the advice of Anſelm archbiſhop of Canterbury, perſuaded his companion to form a convent by the aſſiſtance of their generous benefactors, and they choſe the order of canons regular of St. Auſtin, which Giraldus calls the prevailing order of the times. The preſent church beſpeaks a later date. Its magnificence conſiſts in the great and ſolid as that of Tintern does in the light and beautiful. It was till within a few years thatched for a barn: at preſent the body has no roof; the ſouth wall is down; the roof of the north aile compoſed of rag ſtones laid edgeways and vaulted is almoſt gone: little remains of the chancel or of a ſmall tower; and the central tower has loſt its north ſide. The eight arches on each ſide of the nave are round with octagonal cluſtered columns, and the windows over them round. The choir is 24 yards long, the tower 10 yards ſquare, the nave 212 feet long, and with its ailes 35 feet wide[c]. To the ſouth tranſept adjoined the refectory forming the north ſide of a ſquare of apartments, on whoſe ſouth ſide is a ſmall chapel, now officiated in, ſaid to be older than the church, and probably on the ſite of that mentioned by Giraldus. The abbey gate ſerves as a barn. It was valued at near £.100. per annum[d]. Nothing can be more romantic than the country hereabouts. The road from Abergavenny hither is through ſtony, hollow ways: at about four miles from the abbey it winds along a precipice having the river Hodney covered with trees and meandering through meads to the right, and beyond that St. Michael's and other mountains riſing perpendicular with large maſſes detached from them by rains. Skerid vawr is full of cracks aſcribed to the earthquake at the Crucifixion. Juſt above the little pariſh of Cwmioy four miles below Llantony is a remarkable mountain, whoſe ſides have been broken off and lie in immenſe fragments below having left a long perpendicular precipice above 150 feet high[e].

Mr. Lluyd obſerves that Llan in compoſition properly ſignified a yard or ſmall incloſure; thus Gwinlan is a vineyard, Per-lan an orchard, Yd-lan a hay-yard, Korph-lan a church-yard, Kor-lan a ſheep-fold. However, as Giraldus obſerves, it denotes ſeparately a church or chapel, and is commonly uſed in that ſenſe throughout Wales, probably becauſe ſuch yards or incloſures might be places of worſhip in times of heatheniſm, or on the firſt planting of Chriſtianity when churches were ſcarce. Llan denoting incloſure was eminently applied to places ſet apart from profane for ſacred uſes.

Mon. "Money river riſing in Eweſland gettith a pretey "botom at Trewen a gentleman's place 10 miles "from Monemuth, & tandem non procul ab urbe ſua "nominis Vagam petit[f]."

Gref. "Greſmont caſtle five miles from Monemuth, not "far from the ripe of Money[g]." It gives title of viſcount to the duke of Beaufort.

Llang. Near it at Llangwin was a cell of Black monks from the abbey of Lyra[h].

Skinf. "Skinford caſtle on the river of Money three "miles above Monemuth[i]."

Whit. "White caſtle a four miles from Monemuth and a "myle from Money river[k]."

Mon. "Monmuth town is walled and ſtandeth in the dio- "ceſe of Hereford between two rivers Wy and Mone, "of which it taketh name[l]." The town ſtands low

[a] Lel. V. 5. [b] Lel. V. 68.
[c] Wyndham's Tour in Monmouthſhire, p. 202, 4to. [d] Tan. 328. [e] Wyndham Ib. 203.
[f] Lel. V. 9. [g] Ib. [h] Tan. 330. [i] Lel. V. 9.
[k] Ib. [l] Lel. V. 8.

among

among hills pleaſantly ſituated and neatly built. It was a free borough, in the juriſdiction of the duchy of Lancaſter, and not ſubject to the reſt of the county. The principal ſtreet running eaſt and weſt is well-built, long, and ſpacious, terminating weſt at an old gate and bridge over the Mwnwy. Its walls built where it was not defended by the rivers were much ruined in Leland's time. It had four gates and a ſuburb with a chapel of St. Thomas in Landaff dioceſe, formerly parochial. All the ſuburb except next the river was defended by a deep ditch. In the town is one pariſh church, a modern building, except the ſquare tower. On the north ſide ſtands a ruinous ſquare building, in whoſe very thick walls are niches and windows and three round-arched doors. It ſeems to have belonged to the Benedictine priory founded by Wihenoc de Monmouth t. Henry I. and valued at £.56. per annum[m]. Here were alſo two hoſpitals founded by John de Monemue about 1240[n]. In the caſtle, reduced to a ſmall piece of wall, ſituate on a hill near the market place, Henry V. was born, and thence had his name. "Monemuth "caſtelle the king's ſometime of Lancaſter dition[o]."

Here is a long bridge over the Wye on the eaſt ſide, and a beautiful view of the woody hills on its oppoſite bank.

Without the north or Monk gate lay Herchenfield, which Leland tranſlates Campus Erinaceus, a ſmall tract owning the earl of Shrewſbury for its lord[p].

Geoffrey of Monmouth was a Benedictine monk, archdeacon of Monmouth, and biſhop of St. Aſaph 1151. Being obliged to quit Wales in the troubles he had the cuſtody of Abendon abbey from Henry I. but reſigning his biſhopric with a view to that abbey he loſt both. The time of his death is uncertain[q]. Leland[r] obſerves of him, that though he ſeems to follow hiſtorical verity in his hiſtory, he has interwoven many ſilly ſtories, which he perhaps borrowed from others; and Mr. Lluyd and biſhop Tanner are of opinion the fabulous part of his hiſtory was prior to his time. As to the regard due to his hiſtory in general, Mr. Lluyd ſays, the judicious reader may conſult Dr. Powel's epiſtle "De Bri-"tannica Hiſtoria recte intelligenda," and Dr. Davies' Preface to his Britiſh Lexicon, and balance them with the arguments and authority of thoſe who wholly reject it.

In the garden of the rev. Mr. Crowe, head maſter of the freeſchool at Monmouth, were found 1767, two coins of Conſtantine the Great.

IMP. CONSTANTINVS P. F. AVG.
MARTI PATRI PROPVGNATORI T. F. P.TR.
Mars Gradivus; dextra haſta, ſiniſtra ſcutum.

The other,

IMP. CONSTANTINVS AVG.
SOLI INVICTO[s].

"Old Troy, the ſeat of the Herberts, about half a "mile from Monmuth ſuburb[t]."

The roads between Chepſtow and Tintern are very indifferent, but, excluſive of this, the water paſſage ought in every reſpect to be preferred. The views from the Wye are exceedingly magnificent. The rocks on each ſide ſeem to be from 300 to 600 feet high. They are ſometimes perpendicular and wholly naked, and ſometimes the very precipices are covered with woods from the river's brink to their ſummits for continued miles. Theſe views are once only interrupted by the beautiful peninſula of Llancot, which projects and ſeems as it were to be tied by a narrow iſthmus to the mountains on the Glouceſterſhire ſide of the river. The Wye almoſt ſurrounds this ſpot, and the encircling hills caſt their conſtant and gloomy ſhades over ſome part or other of it. The whole is about two miles in circumference, and conſiſts of a pleaſing variety of coppices and meadows interſperſed with large timber trees and orchards of the Stire apple[u]. Llancot.

"Venceland is divided into Low, Myddle, and "Hy. The principal town of Low Venteland is "Chepſtowe, two miles from Severn ſhore. Some "ſay that the old name of this town is Strigulia. "Some think that Strigulia ſhould be ſome other "place, becauſe the lord Herebert writeth himſelf "lord of Chepſtow and Strigul as of two diverſe "places. There appere 5 or 6 Engliſh miles from "Chepſtow in a great wood ſide under a hill very "notable ruins of a caſtle called Trogy, whereby "runnith a little brook of the ſame name. The "name of this caſtle ſomewhat cometh to the name "of Strigulia, but it ſtands as they ſay ther in Mid "Venceland[x]." Gwentland. Trogy caſtle.

"Wye, a very great and famous river paſſes through "Ventland, and at St. Terendake's chapel enters into "Severn[y]." Wye[z].

The Wye takes its riſe near the ſummit of Plinlimmon, and dividing the counties of Radnor and Brecknock, paſſes through Herefordſhire; from thence becoming a ſecond boundary between Monmouth and Glouceſter it falls into the Severn a little below Chepſtow. To this place from Roſs, a courſe of 40 miles, it flows in a gentle uninterrupted ſtream, and adorns through its various reaches a ſucceſſion of the moſt pictureſque ſcenes, the beauty of which ariſes chiefly from two circumſtances, the lofty banks of the river, and its mazy courſe through rocks and woods[z]. Its courſe through Roſs to Monmouth is through corn fields and paſtures[a]. The coracle is uſed on it as on the Severn[b].

"The ferry from Auſte in Glouceſterſhire to a vil-"lage on the farther ripe of Severn, not far from "St. Terendacus chapel, yn the mouth of Wy ryver, "is a three myles over[c]."

The town of Chepſtow has been very ſtrongly "walled as yet well doth appere. The walls "began at the end of the great bridge over the "Wy, and ſo cam to the caſtle, which now ſtandith "fair and ſtrong, not far from the ruin of the "bridge. In it is one tower, as I hard ſay, by the "name of Longin. The town now hath but one "pariſh church. The cell of a blak monk or two "of Bermondſey by London was lately there ſuppreſt. "A great part of compace which ſtands within the "walls is now converted to little meadows and gar-"dens[d]." Here are large remains of its caſtle, which is ſituate on a rock, and held out laſt againſt the parliament. Henry Martin the regicide died a priſoner in it[e]. The doors and windows of the church have round zigzag arches, and a monument Chepſtow.

[m] Tan. 331. [n] Tan. 329. [o] Lel. Ib. 9. [p] Ib.
[q] Tan. B. B. 305. Cave, &c. [r] Coll. II. 21, 22. [s] Ant. Soc. min. 1774.
[t] Lel. V. 8 [u] Wyndham, ubi ſup. p. 5. [x] Lel. V. 5. [y] Ib. 9.
[z] Gilpin's Obſervations on the river Wye, &c. p. 7. [a] Ib. 29. [b] Ib. 25.
[c] Lel. V. 5. [d] Ib. [e] Wyndham, 3.

of

of Henry Somerſet earl of Worceſter 1549[f]. The priory was founded for Benedictines t. Stephen, valued at £.32.[g] cell to Cormeil abbey in Normandy, or, as Leland, to Bermondſey[h]. In the north ſide of the chapel are Roman bricks. The weſt gate of the town is ſtanding. Chepſtow gives title of lord to the duke of Beaufort. The bridge, built entirely of wood except a ſtone pier in the centre (probably ever ſince Leland's time) is 52 feet high from the water when the tide is out, which has riſen above four feet within the memory of perſons now or lately living. The tide runs rapid, and riſes above ſix fathoms at the bridge. The diviſion of the two counties is in the centre of this bridge. The Wye is a narrow river, but capable of bearing coaſting veſſels. Its bed yellow mud, deep and ſhelving: the cliffs moſt romantic. Its water diſcovers effects of a tide about Tintern.

Piercefield. Two miles weſt of Chepſtow is Piercefield, the ſeat and gardens of Valentine Morris, eſq; formed out of woods three miles in extent with walks terminating in ſtupendous winding precipices overhanging the Wye, and producing ſome extraordinary echoes, and affording many romantic and extenſive views of the Severn and greateſt part of Gloceſterſhire. The whole has been for ſome time neglected, and while this ſheet was printing was ſold in chancery.

Offa's dike terminated weſt at the mouth of the river Wye below Chepſtow[i], three miles from Chepſtow by Wye ſide[k]. Between Chepſtow and Monmouth, five miles from the latter, ſtood Tintern abbey, founded for Ciſtercians by Walter Clare 1131, and valued at £.192.[l] The ſhell of the church is entire except the roof, preſerved by the good taſte of the duke of Beaufort, and in it the monument and figure of the founder's brother Gilbert de Clare who died 1148. The nave is 230 feet by 33, the croſs aile 160 feet long, and the whole preſents a very inchanting piece of ruin mantled with ivy in maſſes uncommonly large, and intermixed with varieties of moſſes and other humble plants. Within half a mile of this tranquil ſolitary ſcene, which forms the moſt beautiful and pictureſque view on the river, are carried on great iron works among grand woody hills.

Tintern abbey.

Chriſt Church. Two miles ſhort of Newport ſtands Chriſt Church, on a conſiderable eminence, commanding a moſt extenſive and agreeable proſpect. It was here I hoped to find ſome memorial of the family of that extraordinary perſonage lord Herbert of Cherbury, who lived at St. Julian's in this pariſh, but none remains. In the middle of the chancel is a large flat ſtone, which I was told belonged to ſome ſaint, whoſe name I could not learn; but whence this fancy ſhould riſe is not eaſy to gueſs; for the inſcription, which is tolerably plain, only ſays that a man and his wife are buried under it; their figures are ſlightly traced on the ſtone, and are very perfect though 400 years old. The inſcription round the border is,

"✠ Hic jacent Johannes Colmer et Iſabella uxor
"ejus qui obierunt anno Domini MCCCLXXVI q̃ũm
"aĩabus p̃picietur Deus, Amen."

Upon this ſtone, every year on the Wedneſday eve before Trinity Sunday, men, women and children who are weak in their limbs are brought from diſtant parts to lie from ſunſet to ſun riſing, the pariſh clerk continuing with them all night with candles. In 1774 there were but eight patients (ſometimes there is double that number) and ſome of them, my informant very modeſtly ſaid, got better and ſome not.

Venta Silurum is univerſally and very juſtly agreed to be Caergwent, where there are large remains and ſure evidences of a Roman ſtation, the diſtance very exact, nine miles in the Itinerary and ſix computed in Monmouthſhire, the uſual ratio here and the military way eaſtward from hence very remarkable[m]. Venta Silurum Caergwent

"Caerguent in Baſe Venteland is four miles from "Chepſtow in the way to Cairlion. It was ſometime "a fair and large city. The places where the four "gates was yet appere, and the moſt part of the "wall yet ſtandeth, but al to minichyd and torne. "In the lower part of the wall toward a little valey "ſtandeth yet the ruin of a ſtrong ..... Within "and about the wall now be 16 or 17 ſmall howſes "for huſbondmen of a new making, and a pariſh "church of St. Stephen. In the town yet appear "pavements of the old ſtreets, and in digging they "find foundations of great bricks, teſſelata pavi-"menta & numiſmata argentea ſimul & ærea. A "great likelihood is that when Cairguent began to "decay then began Chepſtow to floriſh. For it "ſtondeth far better as upon Wy there ebbing and "flowing by the rage coming out of Severn, ſo that "to Chepſtow may come great ſhyppes[n]."

The Roman ſtation at Caerwent is ſituated on the higheſt part of the ridge which riſes gradually at Chepſtow, and continues nearly weſt toward Newport. It is five miles from Chepſtow in the road to Newport and Caerleon, which, eſpecially near the ſtation, is the old Roman one croſſing the middle of the camp at right angles, and parts of it remain beyond Caerwent near Creek. The camp is on a ſmall eminence not preciſely on the banks of the Throggy as Dr. Gale imagined. The foundations of the wall are eaſily traced on every ſide, and deſcribe a parallelogram of 450 yards by 350, the longeſt ſides pointing eaſt and weſt. Great part of the Saxon walls, eſpecially to the ſouth have Roman bricks interſperſed and are in ſome places of conſiderable height. The moſt conſiderable part of the wall remains on the weſt, 15 or 16 feet high with the facing intire riſing from the bottom and inner ſide of the foſs, which is very deep on the north and weſt. Some parts of the facing of the ſouth wall and of the three octangular baſtions or towers are intire, each ſide meaſuring about eight feet; the ſtones placed in the rubble of the wall are in a zigzag or herring-bone poſition[m]. Within the walls of the camp about 100 yards from the weſt gate are foundations of buildings, and in a kind of cellar or incloſure in Mrs. Williams's orchard, probably the prætorium, were ſome conſiderable remains of a teſſelated pavement 18 inches below the ſurface. Mr. Thomas the curate remembered it having the figures of a lion, tiger, and ſtag, and that four pedeſtals, ſeven capitals, and ſome ſhafts of pillars had been dug up at different times about 100 yards weſt of the ſteeple. The church appears to have been built with Roman [f] Se Sandford, p. 343.

[g] Tan. 330.
[h] Lel. V. 12. Tanner doubts this.
[i] Harris in Archæol. II. ...
[k] Lel. V. 5.
[l] Tan. 329. Lel. V. 8.
[m] Horſl. 464.
[n] Lel. V. 5.

materials. Coins are frequently found here from Severus to the Valentinians [o].

In 1689 three teſſelated pavements were diſcovered in Francis Ridley's garden, but being expoſed to the air in froſt were utterly defaced by diſſolving of the cement with the thaw, and nothing remained but the teſſelæ which were ſcattered in the earth at the depth of about half a yard. Mr. Lluyd was informed by the owner that one of theſe pavements was compoſed of flowers, at each corner was ſomething like a crown and a peacock holding in his beak a ſnake, which he trod under foot. Another had an armed buſt and ſeveral heads as of emperors. In the year 1693, one Charles Keinton ſhewed Mr. Lluyd part of a Roman brick pavement in his yard, the bricks ſomewhat above a foot long, nine inches broad and one inch and an half thick, all having this mark ϭ P. In an orchard adjoining to the ſtreet was diſcovered a few years ago a teſſelated pavement about a yard ſquare with an animal under a tree in lively colours [q]. The church and village ſtand within the walls near the centre of the camp, built moſtly of ſtones collected from the ruins [r]. Braſs coins are frequently met with in the gardens and other parts of the village; and George Kemeis, eſq; of Llanvair in the neighbourhood, had a large collection of them: among the reſt a counterfeit Antoninus Pius of braſs covered with thin ſilver, which being rubbed off the letters diſappeared, which Mr. Lluyd ſuppoſed of equal antiquity with the reſt. He had alſo a Julia Mæſa of baſe metal like tin: others of Valerian, Gallienus, Diocleſian, Conſtantius Chlorus, Conſtantine the Great, Criſpus, Conſtans, and the Valentinians.

Gwent was the name of almoſt all this country with part of Gloceſter and Hereford ſhires before the diviſion of Wales into counties. But it ſeems hardly to admit of a queſtion whether that name be owing to the city Venta, or whether the Romans might not call this city Venta Silurum as well as thoſe of the Iceni and Belgæ from their more antient Britiſh names. Had the country been denominated ſince the Roman conqueſt from the chief city, it had more properly been called Gwlad Gaer Lheion than Gwlad Gwent [s].

At Caerwent, the firſt Roman ſtation among the Silures, began the Julia Strata mentioned by Necham as quoted by Mr. Camden, pointing to Caerleon, not in a ſtrait line like the Roman roads in England, but following the nature of the ſoil; not diſtinguiſhed by a ridge or cauſeway, but by the camps on or near it [t].

At Llanvair is coed one mile from Caerwent was found about 25 years ago an urn containing aſhes and a few coins of the lower empire [u]. "Llan "Vair a caſtle in Baſe Venteland two miles almoſt "north from Caerguent [x]."

Portſkewit, Leland Porteskwin [y] between Chepſtow and Cairguent, or as it is ſpelt in Hondius's map of this county Porteſkuet, q. d. Porth is coed or Portus Venta infra boſcos, was the only port in this part of Netherwent, before the building of Chepſtow, whoſe names beſpeak it of Saxon origin. In this pariſh in the new paſſage acroſs the Severn, and half a mile below it is part of a ſquare camp cloſe to the Severn (which has waſhed the reſt away) and in its centre the ruined church of Sudbrook, probably South Burgh. This ſeems to have been the firſt camp of the Romans after their landing in Wales. From it to Caerwent is three miles [z]. Mr. Ward thinks Old paſſage not ſo antient as the Roman Trajectus, which was rather below the mouth of the Wye, and not near ſo high as Oldbury [a]. Sudbrook.

"The church of Sudbroke called Trinity chapel ſtandeth ſo near the ſea that the vicinity of ſo tyrannous a neighbour hath ſpoiled it of half the church-yard, as it hath done alſo of an old fortification lying thereby, which was compaſſed by a triple ditch and three rampiers as high as an ordinary houſe, caſt in form of a bow, the ſtring whereof is the ſea cliff. That this was a Roman work, the Britiſh bricks and Roman coins there found are moſt certain arguments, among which the reverend father in God Francis biſhop of Landaff, by whoſe information I write this, imparted unto me of his kindneſs one of the greateſt pieces that ever I ſaw coined of Corinthian copper by the city of Elaia in the leſſer Aſia, to the honour of the emperor Severus with this Greek inſcription: AYT. KAI. Λ. CEΠTI. CEBHPOC. ΠEP. i. e. "The emperor Cæſar Lucius Septimius Severus Pertinax;" and on the reverſe an horſeman with a trophy erected before him, but the letters not legible, ſave under him ΕΛΑΙΑΩΝ, i. e. of the Elaians [b], which kind of great pieces the Italians call Medaglions, and were extraordinary coins, not for common uſe, but coined by the emperors, either to be diſtributed by way of largeſs in triumphs, or to be ſent for tokens to men well deſerving, or elſe by free cities to the glory and memory of good princes. What name this place antiently had is hard to be found, but it ſeems to have been the port and landing-place for Venta Silurum which is but two miles from it [c]."

"The caſtle of Calecoyth longing to the king is in "Baſe Venteland towards the Severn ſhore not far "from Matthern. At this caſtel as ſome ſay was "king Henry VII. begotten [d]." Caldecot caſtle gives title of baron Beaufort to the duke of Beaufort [e]. Caldecot caſtle.

"Matthern is a pretty pile in Baſe Venteland long- "ing to the biſhop of Landaf [f]." Matthern.

In the church yard of Matthern, near St. Pier, the ſeat of Morgan Lewis, eſq. is a tomb-ſtone with this old French epitaph for Sir Urian de St. Pere, who lived in the reign of Henry III. and died 1239, 23 Edward I. or for his ſon and nameſake [g].

ICI GIT LE CORS V DE SENE PERE
PREEZ PVR LI EN BONE MANERE
YE IESV PAR SA PAISVN
DE PDECEZ LI DONE PARDVN. AMEN. P. R.

By the ſide of this is another ſtone adorned with a hand holding a croſs fleure with birds and beaſts at the ſides and 10 pellets at the top [h]. See Pl. XVI. f. 1, 2.

"At Goldcliffe three miles from Newport on the "Severn ſhore was a priory of monkes of the French "order, ſuppreſſed, and the landes given to Eton "college [i]." "Chaundois had lands in and about "Herefordſhire, and he was founder as I remem- "ber of Goldclyve priory in Wales, and here as I think Goldcliffe.

[o] Strange in Archæol. 48. 51. 55, 56. [p] Lluyd in Gibſon. [q] Mr. Strange, Archæol. V. 49.
[r] Harris, Archæol. II. p. 3. [s] Strange, ubi ſup. [t] Harris, ubi ſupra, p. 3. [u] Ib. p. 4.
[x] Lel. V. 5. [y] Ib. [z] Harris, 2, 3. [a] Horſl. Brit. Rom. p. 469, 470.
[b] Elæa was a maritime city of Eolis in Aſia Minor. This may be the coin in Vaillant's Numiſm. Græc. Imperator, p. 80. ΕΠΙ CTPAΠHΓOT AOYPIOT ΕΑΑΙΤΩΝ. Imperator eques ante trophæum ad cujus imum captivus.
[c] Holland. [d] Lel. V. 5. [e] Strange, Archæol. V. 61. [f] Lel. V. 5. [g] Strange Ib. 77.
[h] Ib. Gent. Mag. vol. XXXV. p. 72. 1765. [i] Lel. V. 7.

"think was his first and chief house; and dying "1120 he was buried there. He gave it to Tewks- "bury[k]." "Robert de Chandos founded it 1113 for 12 Benedictines a cell to Bec[l]." It was valued at £.144. per ann.[m] The cliff is a high single rock rising abruptly from the extremity of an extensive marshy flat; the side next the sea is marly, perpendicular about 100 feet, consisting of many horrizontal strata of limestone, under which is a body of hard reddish brown grit full of yellow micæ continuing along the shore. Mont d'Or near Lyons, and another a few leagues from Clermont in Auvergne, may have their name from similar circumstances[n].

Abergavenny. "Abergeveny is a fair walled town, metely well "inhabited having a parish church. There is a "fair castle[o]." "A priory of black monks of the "French order; Hameline de Barham [or Balon] a "Norman, the founder. It stood a late by the east "gate in the suburbe[p]." Mr. Ward was informed of several Roman bricks with LEG II. AVG. found about the castle, and he saw several Roman coins found probably here, as was a gold Otho; and a Roman sudatory was once to be seen at the castle[q]. Mr. Strange could find no Roman remains[r]. The priory was valued at £.129. 5s. 8d. per annum[s]. Abergavenny is a handsome well-built market town, in a delightful country, the prospect on every side terminated by mountains; on the south is the Blorenny a most fruitful hill; to the east Skiridvawr or St. Michael's mount, on the west point of which is a notch or break, pretended to have been made by the earthquake at the Crucifixion, and much resorted to by the Catholics, who bring away the earth in white handkerchiefs and even in carts to lay on their fields. To the north-east is Penywals hill, and at the back of the town a large chain of mountains. The history of the abbey says Balun built the castle[t]. There are some small remains of it which seem to be of the time of Henry II. after it was destroyed by the Welsh[u]. The three churches are now reduced to two. Of these St. John's is almost a ruin, and only used by the Welsh on Fridays. St. Mary's or the principal church stands without the east gate, a handsome structure with monuments for two heiresses of Braiose lords of Abergavenny, William first earl of Pembroke of that name, taken at the battle of Banbury and beheaded at Northampton 1469, his brother sir Richard Herbert of Colebrook, his son sir Richard of Ewias, and the earl's father and mother, Edward Neville, first lord of Abergavenny, &c.

"In the priory church in Abergavenny in the south isle belonging to the family of Herbert are the monuments of the saide family.

"Two alter monuments with the effegies or portraitures in aleblaster in their armour. The first is sir William Thomas as there saide who married the daughter of sir David Jones, but I believe it is Thomas ap Gwillim ap Jenkin father to sir William Thomas, because that at the head of his wife that lies on his right hand in full portraiture in an escochon is the black lion rampant crowned Or, beeing the armes of Morley, who was as divers books being in my custody doeth evident the wife of Thomas Gwellim ap Jenkin: she indeed was the daughter and heiress of sir John Morley of Raglan, by whom the inheritance of Raglan and a greate estate belonging to it first came to that family.

"Q. whether the daughter and heiress of sir John Morley was wife to Thomas Gwillim Jenkin, or wife to sir William Thomas his son, it is by tradition diversly reported.

"The armes on this monument at the man's head is paly B and G. three lions rampant Or, the crest, the prior's head with a wreath above it.

"The next monument of that family is the like monument in alablaster and the effigies or portraitures of sir Richeard Herbert of Colbrooke, (second son to sir William Thomas and brother to the first earl of Pembrooke) and his wife was the daughter of Griffith ap Nicholas as is well known and as it appears by her armes in her escochion at her head beinge Or a chevron between 3 ravens proper being the armes of Griffith ap Nicholas; she was ant as said to sir Rice ap Thomas knt. of the Garter.

"Sir Richeard Herbert's armes, per pale B and G. 3 lions rampant Or; the crest a sheaf of arrows the heades downwards on the helmet.

"In a monument in the south side of the walle of that chappell is a faire monument in marble in full pottraiture in armour with his coate of maile, beinge the monument of Richard Herbert of Ewias, esq. The armes per pale B and G. 3 lions rampant Or, a battoon over; the crest a greene dragon on a helmet under his head. Hee was the natural sonne of William Herbert first earl of Pembroke) and hee was father to the second William earl Pembroke. The saide Richard Herbert married the daughter and heiress of sir Matthew Cradoc, knt. by whom hee had issue as appeers on the seconde monument (the portraitures of them being upon the monument) and over them thus written, Margarett Herbert, Mathew Herbert, William Herbert, George Herbert, and his wife, John Herbert, Water Herbert, William Herbert, Jane Herbert.

"The inscription about the monument is "Hic jacet "Richardus Herbert ar. qui obiit ij. die Septemb "anno Dom 1520 et anno r. r. H. VIII. 11."

"In the saide chappel between the monument of sir William Thomas and sir Richeard Herbert is a faire great stone flatt on the ground with this inscription; "Underneath this stone lieth buried the body "of William Herbert of Colbrook, esq; son and heire "of Rees Herbert, esq; son and heire of sir William "Herbert, knt. son and heire of sir Richard Herbert, "knt. which William Herbert had 3 wives (viz.) "Denis, Jane, and Anne; by the first he had a sonne "and a daughter: by the second 6 sonnes and 5 "daughters, which William departed out of this world "anno Dom. 1579." On this stone is in brasse the portraiture in little of the said William with the first wife on the right hand and the portrature of the 2 children under her, and on the left hand his other 2 wives, and under the first of them the portrature of the 11 children hard by her. Non by the last there mentioned.

"In the saide chappel is there on the south side a monument in free stone, beeinge in full portrature in armour and marked with his armes, crosse leged, the right leagg upermost crossing the left lying something sidlonge, on the left side his sword lying by his side; he had another sword in his right

[k] Lel. VIII. 70. [l] Ib. VI. 83. [m] Tan. 328. [n] Strange, Archæol. V. 61.
[o] Lel. V. 7. [p] Ib. 12. [q] Horsley, 319.
[r] Archæol. IV. 34. [s] Tan. 328. [t] Monast. Ang. I. 556. Dugd. Bar. I. 453.
[u] Grose's account under his view of it.

hand,

hand, his headpeece and creſt lying by him which is not well to bee dytermined, but I am confident it is a Haſtings, by what is to bee dytermined and that very well in the widow above him and in many places in the windows the armes of Haſtings is there; they were ſometime lordes of Abergavenny.

"On the north ſide of the ſaide chappel is there a monument in full portrature of the like ſtone, in maile under his armour and ſurcot, with a great ſhild on his arme, and his ſword lying by his ſide, but not croſſe leged, his helmet under his head, the creſt thereon beinge as appeeres by it one of the lordes of Abergavenny.

"In a window in an iſle of the north ende of the quire of the ſaide church is there a very ould monument in Iriſh oake lying croſſe leged, the left legg upermoſt croſſinge the right, with gilt ſpurs on, and on his armour his ſurcoate, but there is neither any expreſſion of armes or creſt. Whos it is I could not learne, moſt probably to bee one of the auntient lords of Abergavenny; for in the window over him and in the border of the window is Valence: his armes were Haſtings, and probably he belonged to the family of Valence, for they have bin auntiently lordes of Abergavenny likwyſe.

"In the windows in ſeverall places in the ſaide church are the armes of Mortimer, Haſtings, Herbert, and theſe armes in the window in Herbert's chappel. Barre of 7 Vaire Erm. and G. and Az. Next 3 towers Or. Cheque or bendy Azure on a feſſe Gules 3 mullets Or. Az. 6 eſcochions Sable, each charged with a lion rampant Or. O. a maunch In the window on the north ſide of the croſſe iſle is firſt Haſtings, next Mortimer, next paly of 6 pieces B and Or, on a feſſe Gules 3 mullets Or. Q. whoſe it is[x]."

This town gives title of lord to the Nevilles deſcendants of that Edward mentioned by Mr. Camden, of whom George the 14th now enjoys the title. Edward Nevil was ſucceeded in the title of Abergavenny by his ſon and nameſake, and he by his ſon Henry and grandſons John and George. This laſt was ſucceeded by his ſon George, who dying without iſſue 1694 the title deſcended to George ſon of George Neville of Sheffield c. Suſſex, great grandſon to lord Edward [z]. His lordſhip being the ſecond baron of England was raiſed to the title of viſcount Neville, of Berling, c. Kent, and earl of Abergavenny 1784.

"Some would that Cairuske, otherwiſe called Bren- Cair Uſke.
"bygey, ſhould be the principal place of Mydle
"Venteland. The caſtle there hath been great,
"ſtrong and fair. The town by ſemeth not to have "been of any renown. There was a late an ab"bey of nuns. Caer Uſk ſtandeth on the further
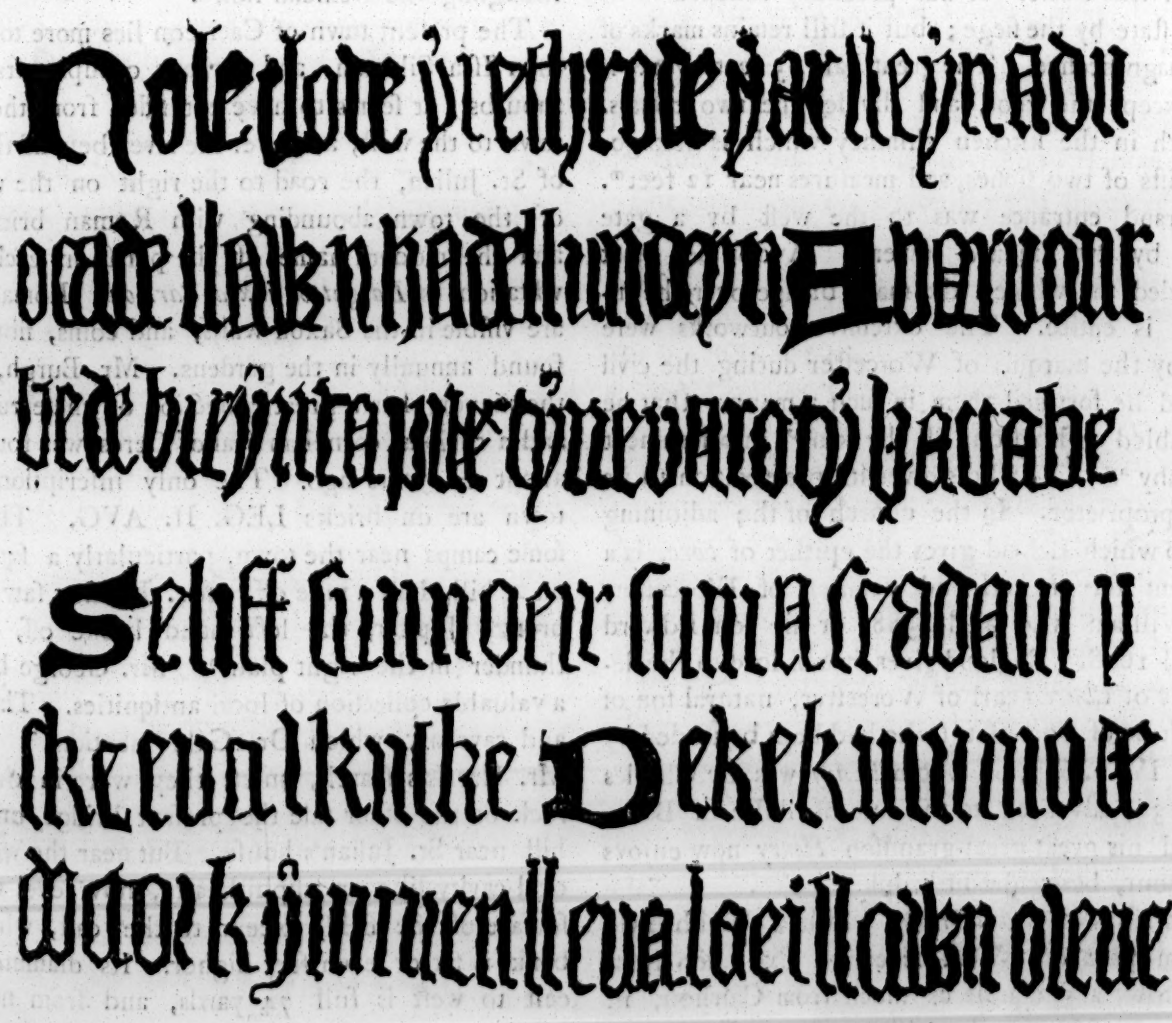
"ſide of Uſk [y]." Leland writes it frequently Wisk, which ſeems the true pronunciation, and more correſponding to Iſca.

Salmon fixes Isca at Uſk, but Ward in Horſley, Uſk.
p. 363. 365. makes Burrium the ſame with Bulleum, and places it at Uſk, and the latter name may be traced in the little river Byrdhin which joins the Uſk at this ſpot [z].

No Roman remains have ever been found at Brynbiga or Uſk: but in the church is the following curious antient epitaph on a braſs plate now chained to the wall within the church [a].



Thus read and explained by Dr. Wotton:

Nole clodde [b] yr Ethrode Caerlleyn advocade
Lawnhade Lhundeyn a barruour hede
Breynt aput Ty'n ev aro ty havalie
Selif ſunnoier ſum a ſeadam Uſke
Eval kulke deke kummode
Doctor Kymmen lleva loe i llawn oleve.

[x] MS. pen. me dated July 8, 1646.
[a] See Archæol. II. 19, 20.
[z] G.
[b] y or elode.
[y] Lel. V. 6.
[z] Strange, Archæol. IV. 38.

" Noli effodere profeſſorem Caerlegionenſem, advo-
" catum digniſſimum Londinenſem & judicem ſacri
" privilegii[c] apud fanum Aaronis & fanum Julii[d], Sa-
" lomonem aſtrologum ſummum vel præpoſitum ci-
" vitatis Uſke tenentis circiter decem commotes, lu-
" nam lucidam in plenilunio lucentem."

Uſk. Usk is a neat town, with the ſhell of a caſtle by no means ſo large as Mr. Camden repreſents it. " A " nunnery on the river ſide a flight ſhot from the " caſtel[e]," founded by the Clares, and valued at £.55.[f] Here was alſo an old hoſpital[g]. A mile and an half north-weſt from Uſk is a large camp called Craig y Gaerkig, near which ſtands Stavernen houſe, where Roman coins have been found[h].

Ragland. Ragland caſtle, which Leland calls " a fair and " pleaſant caſtle with two goodly parks: the town " by it bare[i]," is one of the fineſt remains in South Wales. Leland was told that one of the laſt lord Herberts builded all the beſt lodges of this caſtle[k]. " After the deth of Herbert earl of Pembroke, one " ſir Walter Herbert was heir in appearance, and he " being in diſpleſure made his ſiſter as heire to the " land, and ſhe was married to ſir Charles Somerſet[l]. It came to the firſt earl of Worceſter of the name of Somerſet by marriage with the daughter of Henry Herbert earl of Huntingdon. Henry, the 4th in deſcent from Charles Somerſet, whom Henry VIII. created earl of Worceſter, defended it in a gallant manner for Charles I. againſt general Fairfax, after all the reſt of Wales had been reduced, and ſurrendered it upon honourable terms after a ſiege of three months, being the laſt that held out in the kingdom. He had the honour of entertaining Charles I. with extraordinary greatneſs and freedom three weeks 1645 in this caſtle. It was probably reduced to its preſent ſtate by the ſiege; but it ſtill retains marks of great magnificence. The great hall 65 feet by 28 is intire except the roof, and divides the two courts. The arch in the kitchen chimney which is hexagonal conſiſts of two ſtones, and meaſures near 12 feet[m]. The grand entrance was to the weſt by a gate flanked by two ſquare towers. A double moat ſurrounded the whole: the main bridge over the innermoſt is entire. The extenſive outworks were added by the marquis of Worceſter during the civil war, and he fortified them in ſuch a manner that he was enabled to hold out till the king's impriſonment at Holmby[n]. The whole owes its preſervation to its preſent proprietor. In the church of the adjoining town, to which Leland gives the epithet of bare, is a monument for an earl and counteſs of Worceſter, either William who died 1588, or his ſon Edward who died 1628. Ragland gives title of lord to the deſcendants of Charles earl of Worceſter, natural ſon of Henry duke of Somerſet (who had been beheaded by Edward IV. 1463), of whom Henry was by Charles II. a. r. 34, advanced to the title of duke of Beaufort, and his great-great-grandſon Henry now enjoys the honour, being the fifth duke.

Caſtle Trogy. " The ruins of Caſtel Trogy, within a Welſh myle " of ſum part of Wyſk river, a ſix miles from " Chepſtow, and almoſt as much from Cairlion, in " the way to Monemuth. The caſtle of Trergreg, a Tregreg caſtle. " two miles from Cair Uſke, in Middle Venceland. " Yt is communely called Lankiby, bycauſe it is in " the paroche of St. Kiby[o]."

" Caerleon ſtandeth magnificently on the farther ſide Caer " of Wiſcke[p], one of the principal rivers of South " Wales, ſo that very great ſhips might well come " now to the town as they did in the Roman times, " but that Newport bridge is a lett. Nevertheleſs " bigge boats commeth to the town. The ruins of " the walls of the town yet remain, and alſo of the " caſtle. There is opinion that the old Roman chirch " was abowt Mr. —— houſe, where I lay. There " in digging appeared certain paintings on ſtones. " There were found a late hard by the caſtle certain " paynted incruſtamentes. In the town is now but " one paroche chirch, and that is of St. Cadocus[q]."

Caerleon ſtands chiefly within the wall of the Roman ſtation, except a ſmall ſuburb on the ſouth ſide. The buildings mentioned by Giraldus may be traced in ploughing the hilly grounds to the north and weſt, at the diſtance of a mile or more. But he miſtakes in deſcribing the walls as coctiles, they being lime ſtone as at Caerwent. The ſtation ſeems to have formed a parallelogram of about 530 yards by 460. The north weſt and ſouth-weſt walls are ſtill conſiderable, ſeveral feet with the facings being preſerved on the ſouth-weſt by the owners of the ground. Mr. Morgan, an attorney there, has collected all the antiquities found on the ſpot, and has a great number of Roman braſs and ſilver coins of the lower empire, fibulæ, rings, ſeals, fragments of ſmall bronze figures (the arm of one in a very good ſtyle), lamps, and ſurgeons inſtruments. Mr. Strange has engraved a gold ring with an intaglio of Hercules ſtrangling the Nemean lion[r].

The preſent town of Caerleon lies more to the eaſt than Iſca Silurum, and perhaps occupies its eaſtern ſuburbs. It ſeems to have extended from the preſent town to the weſt, and over the river beyond the houſe of St. Julian, the road to the right on the weſt ſide of the town abounding with Roman bricks, &c. and the modern name of the pariſh in eccleſiaſtical viſitations is Langattoc juxta Carleon. Roman bricks are viſible in the Saxon walls, and coins, fibulæ, &c. found annually in the gardens. Mr. Burgh, lord of the manor, has a great collection of theſe curioſities, and a curious cornelian ſeal of Ceres was found here about 20 years ago. The only inſcriptions in the town are on bricks LEG. II. AVG. There are ſome camps near the town, particularly a ſquare one on a hill, half a mile off. Mr. Horſley ſaw a ſmall bronze Jupiter, the left hand broke off, but the thunder in the right plain[s]. Mr. George had then a valuable collection of local antiquities. The vaults and caverns, which Dr. Gale mentions[t], eſcaped Mr. Harris's ſearch, unleſs they were in the ſouth rock on the other ſide the preſent bridge, or in the hill near St. Julian's houſe. But near the wall is an oval cavity like an amphitheatre, now level with the ſurface of the field, except to the eaſt, where the bank is ſix or ſeven feet higher. Its diameter from eaſt to weſt is full 74 yards, and from north to ſouth 64. It is ſeven yards deep in the middle, the [c] vel Cancellarium. [d] potius forte Avaloniæ.

[e] Lel. V. 12. [f] Tan. 33. [g] Ib.
[h] Harris, Arch. II. 21. [i] Lel. V. 7.
[k] Lel. VI. 30. [l] Lel. Ib.
[m] See an account of the marquis's manner of living here at the end of the Northumberland houſehold book, p. 419.
[n] Wyndham, 206. [o] Lel. V. 6. [p] Uſk. [q] Leland V. 6.
[r] Archæol. V. 66, &c. [s] Horſley, 320. [t] Itin. 95.

ſides and bottom covered with graſs; the ſides have an eaſy ſlope, and Mr. Williams, the preſent proprietor of the ground, remembered to have ſeen on opening them a piece of wall, which he judged might have been part of the ſeats, though Mr. Strange could find none. The inhabitants call it King Arthur's round table. A Roman ſudatory was diſcovered 1755 in a field by the river weſt of the bridge, formed of pillars of round bricks, four inches thick, and 14 in diameter, and in an adjoining room a teſſelated pavement. The room was ſhut up, and the floor left whole. Bricks burnt black and leaden pipes which conveyed the water from the north hill were taken up ſeveral years ago: and Mr. Harris was told a Roman bath was diſcovered in the next field[a], but the proprietor would not allow it to be opened. Mr. Aubrey ſays one was opened near St. Julian 1654.

In 1692 a teſſelated pavement was diſcovered in the grounds of Henry Tomkins of Caerleon, eſq; by workmen ploughing in a field cloſe to his houſe. The pavements are not buried ſo deep here as in the churchyard at Woodcheſter, c. Glouceſter, that being three feet under ground, and this no deeper than the plowſhare, and that above-mentioned at Caerwent not much lower. Mr. Tomkins removed a conſiderable part into his garden in the ſame order in which it was found, and ſent a draught of the whole to biſhop Gibſon, from whoſe plate it is here engraved Pl. XV. fig. 7. It is about 14 feet diameter, all the arches and that part of the border which they touch were compoſed of white, red, and blue ſtones, varied alternately: the bills, eyes, and feet of the birds were red, and they had a red ring round their necks, and one or two of the longeſt wing feathers red and blue: the inſide of the cups was alſo red: the reſt of the area was formed of brown and white teſſelæ.

The circuit of the walls is about three miles[z]. The church of St. Julius (which gave name to St. Julian's houſe) and that of Aaron were gone in Leland's time. Biſhop Godwin[x] ſpeaks of theſe churches as then viſible on the eaſt and weſt ſides of the town. The 3d was probably the preſent church of Langatoc or St. Cadoc[y]. Here was a Ciſtertian abbey in the reign of John[z].

VECILLIANA the firſt of the fragments mentioned by Mr. Camden in the church-yard wall was in the wall of the ſchool, but now razed out[a]: the ſecond was in Moin's court garden walls, but has loſt the N° VIII, and the centurial mark[3]. The houſe ſince belonged to Thomas Lyſter, eſq.[4] and they are now fixed in the wall of a farm-houſe. Dr. James Davis of the Devizes ſaw the laſt 1741 much defaced; but to be read, TEMPL . . M and DIANAE. Mr. Woodford in his MS. collection of inſcriptions records an inſcription

DEAE
DIANAE SA
CRV. AEL.
TIMO P.
VS TLM

Several more Roman monuments have been diſcovered here. Mr. Aubrey communicated to biſhop Gibſon the following inſcription from an altar of freeſtone, four feet long, and three feet broad.

IOVI. O. M. DOLICHV
I. ONI. O. AEMILIANVS
CALPVRNIVS
RVFILIANVS EC
AVGVSTORVM MONITV.

which the biſhop read thus:

Jovi optimo maximo Dolicheno
Junoni optimæ Æmilianus
Calpurnius
Rufilianus fec
Auguſtorum monitu.

The laſt letter in the firſt line is an N, and the E before it is loſt in the crack of the ſtone[b].

The epithet of Dolichenus here given to Jupiter is found on an inſcription in Reineſius[c]. "Jovi optimo "maximo Dolicheno, ubi ferrum naſcitur, C. Sem- "pronius Rectus, cent. Frumentarius, D. D." From the words ubi ferrum naſcitur antiquaries ſuppoſe this deity to have ſuperintended mines, and directed where to find them. There were probably iron mines or works in the foreſt of Dean, or in this neighbourhood. Stephanus Byzantinus mentions Ζευς Δολιχαιος worſhiped at Doliche a city of Commagene. A marble figure habited like Mars ſtanding on a bull, under whom is an eagle found in the port of Marſeilles 1654, ſubſcribed DEO DOLICHENIO, &c. is by P. Martin[d] referred to the Sun, but the epithet ſeems rather confined to Jupiter. Auguſtorum monitis is alſo in Reineſius. What follows after DOLICH is read by Gibſon Junoni optimæ. It may as well be et numinibus Aug. as in Horſley's Northumberland inſcription VII. where Jupiter Dolichenus occurs, or any thing elſe; for this inſcription is now loſt.

The pavement on which lay the ſtatue of Diana was gone in Mr. Horſley's time. Temple ſtreet leads to Arthur's round table, which he was not aware was an amphitheatre[e]. Very little remains of the caſtle except the lofty keep[f].

On the inſcription from whence the name of Geta is ſaid to be eraſed Mr. Horſley obſerves that he does not recollect any inſcription in Britain in which that prince has the title of Auguſtus, unleſs it may have been in ſome of thoſe in which the name is eraſed, and then perhaps for that very reaſon it has been ſtruck out. On this Mr. Ward obſerves[g] that Geta is here ſtyled only Cæſar: had he been Auguſtus the inſcription would have run AVGGG. NNN.

At Tre Dynogg[h] church, three miles from Caerleon, and half way from it to Uſk, is preſerved a fair and entire monument of a Roman ſoldier, of the ſecond legion. The ſtone is a kind of blue ſlate; the four oblique lines are grooves, or canaliculi, and the ſmall ſquares without the lines are holes bored through the ſtone to faſten it by iron pins to the church wall near the font. It was diſcovered faſtened by four pins to the foundation of the church, by which one Tre Dynog

[a] Archæol. II. 5—7. [z] G. [x] de præſ. Landav.
[y] Harris in Arch. II. 5. 7. [z] Tan. 327.
[a] Hortl. 321. [3] G. [4] G. [b] Horſley, 322, 323.
[c] Synt. Inſc. cl. 1. n. 15. This was at Rome where there are ſix inſcriptions to the ſame deity in Gruter XX. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.
[d] Religion des Gaulois, I. 407—418. This is a votive offering to the God juſſu ejus, & Patin (Imp. Rom. Numiſm. p. 228.) from Gruter, gives a Greek inſcription καλα κελευσιν Θεου Δολιχηνου, &c.
[e] 321. [f] Wyndham, p. 14. [g] MS. n. [h] Tredonock. Ecton.

would think ſome good Chriſtian intended it ſhould paſs for a memorial of St. Julian. Pl. XV. f. 6.[i]

On the bank of the river Uſk, near Caerleon, was ploughed up a ſtone with the inſcription, Pl. XV. fig. 5. which Mr. Horſley ſaw in London. It is to be read thus;

" Diis manibus Gaius Valerius Gaii filius Galeria " [tribu] Victor Lugduni ſignifer legionis ſecundæ " Auguſtæ ſtipendiorum 17 annorum 45 curam " agente Amnio Perpetuo bene [merenti]"

Lugdunum relates to Lyons, and if Victor is not a name placed out of the common order, it may refer to ſome victory he gained at Lyons[k]. Hearne[l] takes the laſt letter for beneficiario, but this is not uſually applied to an enſign[m]. Hearne adds, curam agere is in Livy. So ſays Ainſworth without citing the place. It occurs in eight inſcriptions in Gruter[n].

Mr. Wyndham, 1774, ſaw in the caſtle wall a ſtone 27 inches diameter, having a rude female ſitting holding a dolphin in her right hand, incircled by a border of foliage; and in his ſecond tour he purchaſed a rude figure ſeated between two dolphins in a border of ſimilar foliage in terra cotta. He ſaw about the town many bricks inſcribed LEG. & LECLAVG. II. AVG.[o] and ſome ſepulchral tiles. Roman bricks are frequently dug up here like thoſe near Brecon, inſcribed LEG. II AVG. the letters in relief as if formed by a ſtamp.

Among other Roman antiquities dug up at Caerleon were ſeveral curious earthen veſſels, ſome of them plain round pateræ, others adorned with elegant reliefs. A relief on half of a bowl here engraved from Gibſon is by Mr. Lluyd ſaid to repreſent the Roman Piety; but if this groupe is juſtly repreſented, it ſeems only two perſons embracing. In another part is a figure of Cupid looking up towards birds in the character of an aruſpex: next, a woman ſacrificing at an altar, and, as Mr. Lluyd thinks, caſting frankincenſe on vervein, the uſual offering of women to Lucina according to Plautus, Truc. A. II. ſc. 5. and on other occaſions, as Virgil, Ecl. VIII. 64. Behind the altar a naked figure, which the ſame antiquary takes for her huſband: but it ſeems rather to repreſent a ſacrifice in general; though he is for confining it to the Matronalia, a feſtival obſerved on the calends of March by married women in the honour of Juno. He ſuppoſes it one of the veſſels called Phiala, becauſe the only name for ſuch in Welſh is Phiol, which ſeems derived from the Greek and Latin Phiala, and one of the many words left among us by the Romans, and we may preſume ſtill preſerved in their original ſenſe. Among other curioſities found here muſt be reckoned a ram's horn of bronze, nearly of the natural ſize, broken off at the root as if formerly united to an head of the ſame metal. Such an one, ſomewhat different, is to be ſeen in Moſcardi's Muſæum, who ſuppoſes they ſerved as ornaments to their temples, and types or emblems of ſacrifices. An elegant and well preſerved fibula alſo found here is exhibited in our plate XV. f. 9, 10. in two views. It is of braſs, curiouſly enamelled on the back with red and black chequer-work. A ſimilar one, but leſs, was found 1691 near Kingſcott, c. Glouceſter[s].

Pl. XV. f. 8.

Aaron and Julius are allowed to have ſuffered martyrdom, A. D. 303, along with St. Alban and others[p], but Amphibalus is generally ſuppoſed to have been no other than St. Alban's cloak. Bede only ſays that when the ſoldiers came to apprehend Alban, he put on his caracalla, or cloak, with a cowl belonging to his gueſt and inſtructor in the Chriſtian faith. Geofrey of Monmouth firſt gives this gueſt the name of Amphibalus. One would ſuppoſe the unlettered legend writers ſhould as eaſily have miſtaken the name of the cloak, as of the wearer. Perhaps after all Alban only put on his own cloak, and the firſt hiſtorian of the martyrdom miſtook the words of ſome Greek narration αμφιβαλων καραχαλλιον[q]. Julius being a co-martyr with Alban had the honor of a church at Verulam. The church of Caerleon is dedicated to St. Caradoc, vulgarly called Cattoc or Gattoc.

Some labourers digging about 60 years ſince in a quarry between Kaerleon bridge and Chriſt church, near a place called Porth Sini Cran, diſcovered a large freeſtone coffin, in which they found a ſheet of lead wrapped about an iron frame, curiouſly wrought, and within the frame a ſkeleton. Near the coffin lay a gilded alabaſter ſtatue of a perſon in a coat of mail, holding in the right hand a ſhort ſword, and in the left a pair of ſcales: in the right ſcale was a female buſt, in the left, which was outweighed by the former, a globe. Captain Mathias Bird, who was on the ſpot at the time of diſcovery, gave this ſtatue to the Aſhmolean Muſeum at Oxford. The feet and right arm and ſcales have been broken ſome years ſince; but the reſt is tolerably well preſerved, and ſome of the gilding remains in the interſtices of the armour[r]. The biſhop at firſt ſight thought it repreſented Aſtræa. It ſeems rather a Chriſtian figure, perhaps from the ſide of ſome tomb, repreſenting St. Michael weighing a human ſoul againſt the world, as on Glaſtonbury Torr he is weighing the devil againſt the bible. It has the ſcaly or feathery appearance uſual in paintings and carvings of angels, and the right hand may probably have held a ſword or ſpear. Both the coffin and the ſtatue may have been found on the ſite of an antient church-yard.

" Wentlug is divided from Ventiſſa by eaſt by the " river of Wiſke, by the ſouth with the Severn ſea, " by weſt with the river of Romny to the very head " of it, and toward the north-north eaſt lie the hills " of High Wenceland. The length of Wentlugh is " from the Severn ſea to the lordſhip of Meridith, " that is to ſay, from ſouth to north about 20 miles. " Where it is moſt broadeſt from eaſt to weſt it is not " countid by eſtimation above eight miles, and in " diverſe places leſs. The ſoil by ſouth towards Se- " vern is ſomewhat low, and full of dikes to drain it. " There is lightly great plenty of benes, and in divers " it bereth al other manner of corn: And this low " ground is from the cauſey or highway that goith " from Newport to Pont Remny by ſouth to the " Severn ſea. There is very little wood in this low

[i] Horſl. 320.
[k] Phil. Tranſ. 359. where Lugdunum is referred to Luckton, a place on a hill on the ſide of the river Lugg.
[l] Pref. ad G. Neub. lv.
[m] Ward, MS. n.
[n] Cura agente, agentib. XLV. 2. CCLXXX. 1. CCCCLXV. 5. 6. CCCCLXXII. 6. MXXVII. 5. curam agente legatis. MLXXXI. 2. cura agit. CMXL. 7.
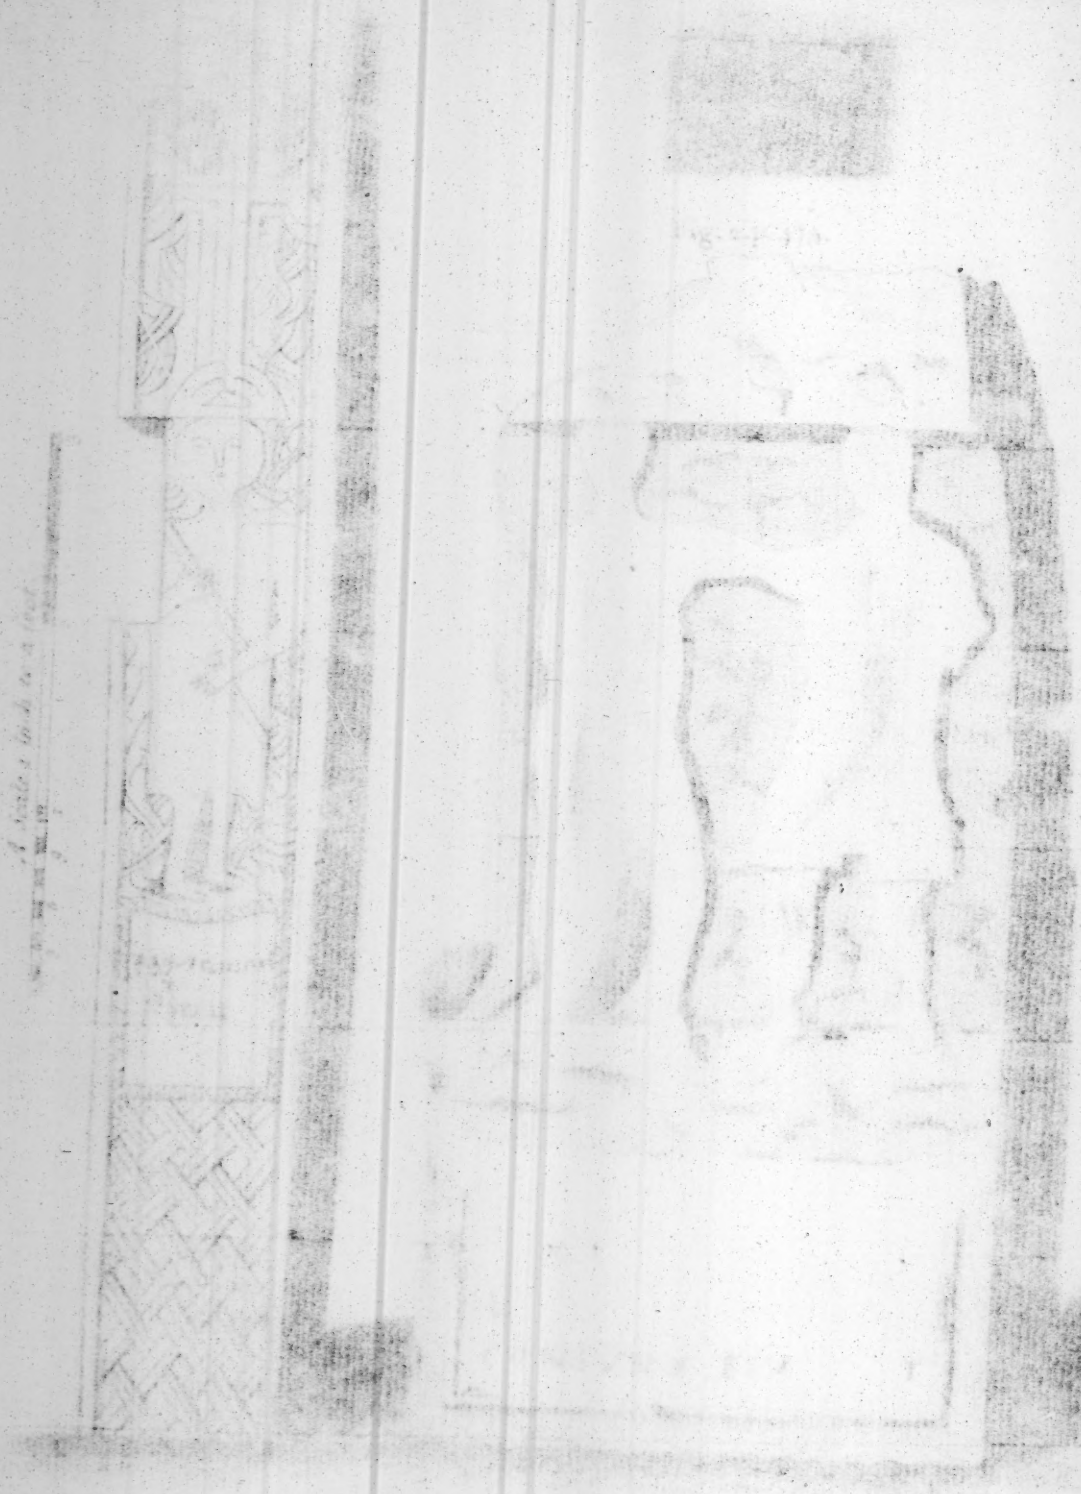
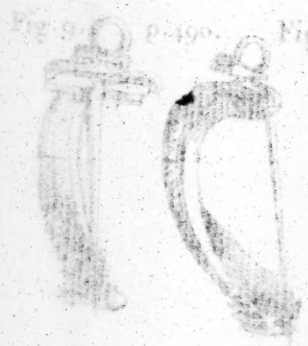
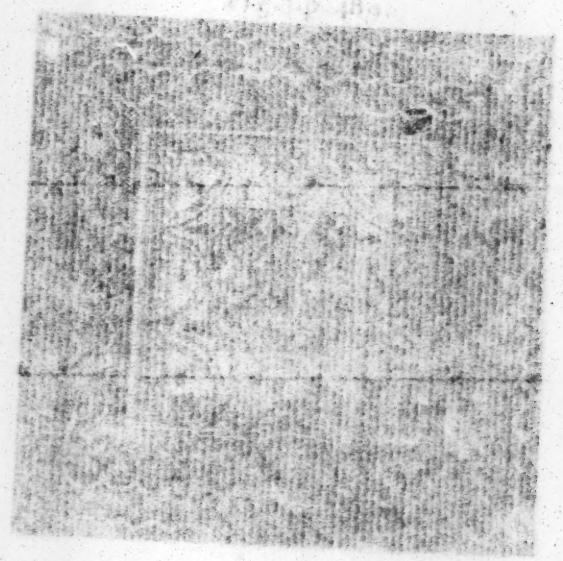
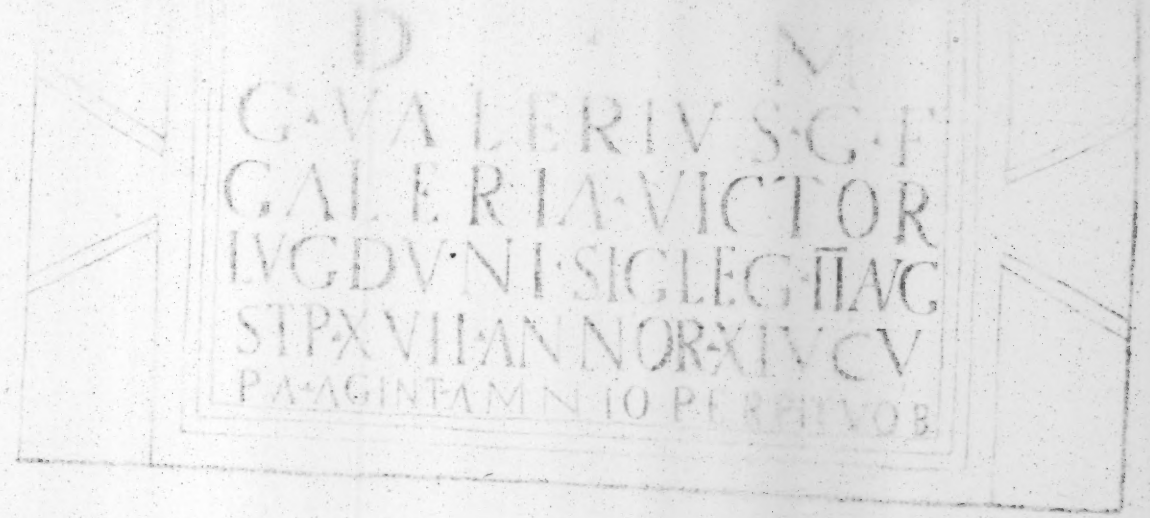
[o] P. 15—18.
[p] See Bede I. c. 7. Flor. Worc. ad an. 303.
[q] See Biog. Brit. Alban. (P.)
[r] See the figure, Pl. XV. f. 12 from the Marmora Oxon.
[s] See before, vol. I. p. 277.

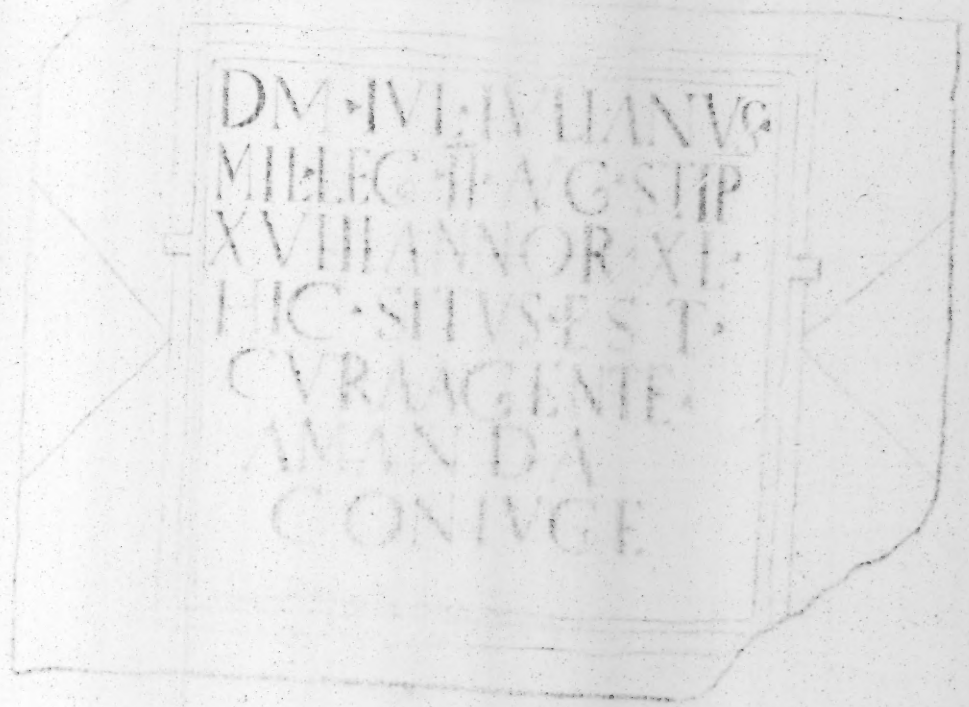








D
N
GAVALERIVS·G·F
GALERIA·VICTOR
IVGDV·NI·SIGLEG·IIAVG
STP·XVII·ANNOR·XIV·CV
PAGINTAMNIO PERPETVOB



DM·IVL·IVLIANVS
MILEG·IIAG·STIP
XVIII·ANNOR·XL·
HIC·SITVS·EST·
CVRAGENTE·
AMANDA
CONIVGE

would think some good Christian intended it should pass for a memorial of St. Julian. Pl. XV. f. 6.[1]

On the bank of the river Usk, near Caerleon, was ploughed up a stone with the inscription, Pl. XV. fig. 5. which Mr. Horsley saw in London. It is to be read thus;

"Diis manibus Caius Valerius Ozii fil. Galeria "[tribu] Victor Lugduni signifer legionis secundæ "Augustæ stipendiorum 27 annorum 45 curam "agente Amulio Perpetuo [heredi] merenti."

Lugdunum relates to Lyons, and if Victor is not a name placed out of the common order, it may refer to some victory he gained at Lyons[2]. Hearne[3] takes the last letter for beneficiario, but this is not usually applied to an enfign[4]. Hearne adds, curam agere is in Livy. So says Ainsworth without citing the place. It occurs in eight inscriptions in Gruter[5].

Mr. Wyndham, 1774, saw in the castle wall a stone 27 inches diameter, having a rude figure sitting holding a dolphin in her right hand, bordered by a border of foliage; and in the second year he purchased a rude figure found between two dolphins in a border of similar foliage in terra cotta. He saw about the town many bricks inscribed LEG. & LEG. I. AVG. II. AVG.[6] and some sepulchral tiles. Roman bricks are frequently dug up here like those near Brecon, inscribed LEG. II AVG. the letters in relief as if formed by a stamp.

Among other Roman antiquities dug up at Caerleon were several curious earthen vessels, some of them plain round pateræ, others adorned with elegant reliefs. A relief on half of a bowl here engraved from Gibson is by Mr. Lhuyd said to represent the Roman Piety; but if this groupe is justly represented, it seems only two persons embracing. In another part is a figure of Cupid looking up towards birds in the character of an auspex: next, a woman sacrificing at an altar, and, as Mr. Lhuyd thinks, casting frankincense on vervein, the usual offering of women to Lucina according to Plautus, Truc. A. II. sc. 5. and on other occasions, as Virgil, Ecl. VIII. 64. Behind the altar a naked figure, which the same antiquary takes for her husband: but it seems rather to represent a sacrifice in general; though he is for confining it to the Matronalia, a festival observed on the calends of March by married women in the honour of Juno. He supposes it one of the vessels called Phiala, because the only name for such in Welsh is Phial, which seems derived from the Greek and Latin Phiala, and one of the many words left among us by the Romans, and we may presume still preserved in their original sense. Among other curiosities found here shall be reckoned a ram's horn of bronze, nearly of the natural size, broken off at the root as if formerly united to an head of the same metal. Such an one, somewhat different, is to be seen in Moscardi's Museum, who supposes they served as ornaments to their temples and were emblems of sacrifices. An elegant and well preserved fibula also found here is exhibited in our plate XV. f. 9, 10. in two views. It is of brass, curiously enamelled on the back with red and blue enamel

Pl. XV. f. 8.

[1] Hearne, App.

[2] Phil. Transf. 259. where Lugdunum is rendered Chester, a place on a hill on the side of the river Legr.

[3] Præf. ad G. Neubr. iv.

[4] Cura agendi signifer. XLV. 2. CCLXXX. 1. CCCLXV. 3. CCCCLXXXI. 2. cura egit CMXL. 7.

[5] P. 15—18.

[6] See Bede I. c. 7. Flor. Worc. ad an. 305.

[7] See the figure, Pl. XV. f. 12. from the Marmora Oxon.

[8] See before, vol. I. p. 325.

[9] See Blog. Brit. Alban. (F).

Fig. 5. p. 490.

Fig. 3. p. 475.

Fig. 1. p. 476.

Fig. 1. p. 476.

Fig. 3. p. 475.

Fig. 2. p. 475.

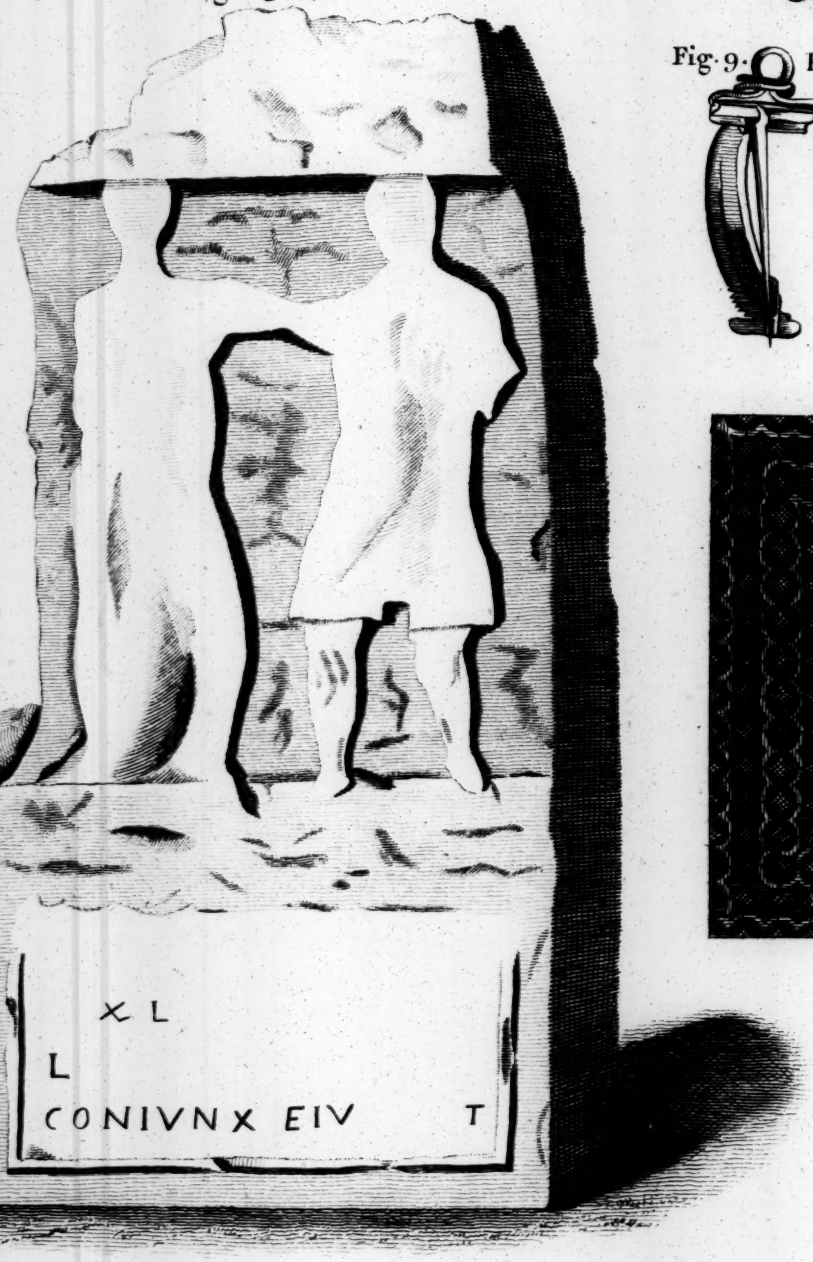

Fig. 9. p. 490. Fig. 10.

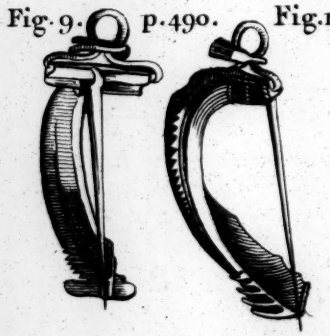

Fig. 7. p. 489.

Fig. 8. p. 490.

Fig. 5. p. 490.

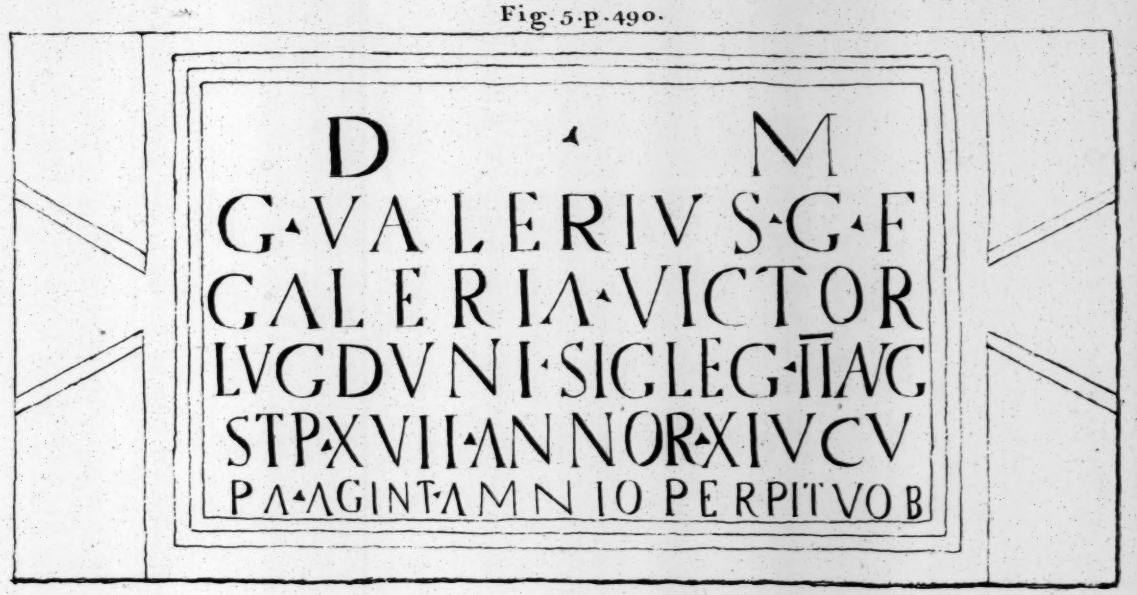

Fig. 6. p. 490.

F. Cary sculp.

" part of Wentlugh, except at Park Vehan or Behan, " or Little park, three miles out of Newport, through " which the high way lyeth, to Caerdif. This park " hath neither deer nor pale, now it is the king's by " the lordſhip of Newport, and at Tredegar, wher " Mr. William Morgan, a man of 300 marks of " landes by year hath a very fair place of ſtone. " It is a mile and half from Newport ſouth-weſt on " the hither ſide of Ebouith river. Caſtelle Behan is " a little without the ſouth ſide of this park, and is " in ruin. It longed to the duke of Bukkingham. " Such part of Wentlugh as lieth up toward Caerleon " is well paſtured and woody: ſuch parts as lieth " from Pont Remney along on the eaſt ripe of " Remny to Bedwes paroche, ſix miles off by land, " is much woody, and in ſome places betwixt, as firſt " in Llanvichangle paroche, and then in Maghen " paroche joining to it is metely good corn. Pont " Remny is two miles from the Severn ſea. There " is a village by it called Remmy in Engliſh, in Welſh " Tredelerch. Thence in Remney ripe, a mile upper, " is a fair valley called Deffrin Riſca, going three or " four miles upward on the water, plentiful of wood " as it were a foreſt ground mingled with fields, hav- " ing litle corn, and from the head of this valley it " is upward on Remny four miles to Egglins Tider- " uab Hobel, by rough hills and wild vallies, and " plenty of wood. The head of Remny river is " three or four miles above this in the hills of High " Wenceland; thens come many ſprings and take in " one bottom; the brook is called Kayach, and " thence going into Diffrin Riſka, it is augmented " with Riſca a brook coming into it out of a paroche " called Egglins Ilan, and then doth it all bear the " name of Riſca. Egglins Ilan is in Singhenith in " Glamorganſhire, four miles from Diffrin Riſca, " and coming to Bedwes paroche it is called Remny, " and by the ſame name into the Severn ſea. In the " middle ground betwixt Remny and Ebouith river " on the north ſide of the highway to Pont Remny, " the ground for the moſt part is hilly, better for " cattle than corn, and there is a very high hill " called Tumbarlum. The river of Ebouith riſith " flat north in a mountain of High Wenceland, and " ſtrait comith into a valley called Diffrin Serowy. " Ebouith goeth into Wiſk one mile and half be- " neth Newport, and half a mile from the haven " mouth of Wiſk. There is a bridge of timber over " Ebouith called Pont Beſſaleg, two miles above the " confluence of Ebouith and Wiſk, and over this " bridge lieth the high way from Newport to Cair- " taph. This bridge is ſcant two miles from New- " port town. Newport is but two miles from " Caerleon; from Newport to the place where " Ebouith goith into Wiſk haven a good mile and a " half, and then more than half a mile to the haven " mouth. The bridges of Caerleon and Newport be " both of wood. From the haven mouth of Wiſk " to the mouth of Remny, where is no haven or " coming in mete for ſhips, are ſix miles. On this " there is no very notable thing. The banks of it " be clived enough to defend the ſea for raging into " the low ground of Wenceland. Newport is a bigg " town, whereof that part where the paroche " church is ſtandeth on a hill. The church is St. " Guntle Olave [s] in Engliſh. There is a great ſtone " gate by the bridge at the eaſt end of the town: " another in the middle of the town as in the high " ſtreet to paſs through, and the third at the weſt " end of the town, and hard without it is the paroch " church. The faireſt of the town is al in one ſtreet. " The town is in ruin. There was a houſe of re- " ligion by the key beneth the bridge. The caſtle is " on the eaſt ſide of the town above the bridge [t].

" Newport is in Wentlugh a mile and more by foot " path from Cairlion, and ſtandeth on Uſk, having a " prety ſtrong town, but I markt not whether it were " walled or no. There is a very fair caſtle longing " ſometime to the Bukkinghams. But this great " lordſhip the Welſhmen ſay is no part of the three " Vencelands, yet it is called in Welſh Guentluge. " Wherefore it might in deſcription be well joined " with Myddle Ventland [u]." This town has flou- riſhed conſiderably ſince Mr. Camden's time, and is walled round. Its ſituation equals if not exceeds Caerleon. It has a wooden bridge like thoſe at Chepſtow and Caerleon, and conſiderable remains of a noble caſtle on the river [x], with three ſtrong towers next the river [y]. Here was a religious houſe by the key below the bridge, probably of friars preachers [z].

On the north ſide of the town within leſs than half a mile on a hill are remains of a camp double trenched, which Mr. Harris ſuppoſes the æſtiva of the ſecond Legion. He thinks the road hence to Ju- papania [a] went round by Malpas to Newport on the eminences above the former, where was a cell of Cluniacs from Montacute, c. Somerſet, valued at £. 14 [b]. However, at St. Woolas church are remains of antient fortifications called Caerau, incloſing the church; and he was told a road had lately been ſtopped up which led from Malpas by Crunden houſe, and a little weſt of Newport to St. Woolas church, and within ſix yards of the works is a lofty tumulus commanding an extenſive proſpect.

" Morgan, the chiefeſt of lands, hath a very fair " place at Tredeger, and another in the town of " Newport [c]." The ſeat of this family at Ruperra in Glamorganſhire, was conſumed 1784, with ſeveral antient family pictures in it, by fire occaſioned as ſup- poſed by lightning. Tredegar.

" There is another of the Morgans, a man of " mean lands dwelling at Newport. The other of " the Morgans dwelling by Remny at Mayher, " having a fair houſe. He had bene a man of fair " lands if his father had not divided it partly to " other of his ſons. John Morgan of Lampedu " pariſh in Low Wenllugh [d]." Mayer. Lampedu.

Gracedieu, or Trody, a ſmall Ciſtertian abbey, founded 1226 by John of Monmouth, lord of Mon- mouth, valued at £. 19. 14s. [e] ſtanding in a wood, and having a rill running by it between Wiſk and Ragland, three miles from Cairwiſk, and four from Ragland [f]. Gracedieu abbey.

Llantarnam, a Ciſtertian abbey, valued at £. 71. [g] in a wood two miles from Caerleon [h]. Llantarnam.

Sir William Dugdale [i] recites a ſucceſſion of lords of Monmouth from the Conqueror to 41 Henry III. when they ended in heirs female. Charles I. in the firſt year of his reign created Robert lord Carey earl of Monmouth. He was ſucceeded 1639 by his ſon Lords of Monmouth.

[a] St. Woolos alias Gunlin. St. Gunleus. Ecton.
[b] Tan. 330. [c] Lel. IV. 53.
[d] Lel. Ib.
[e] Tan. 331. Lel. IV. 176. Dugd. Bar. I. 442.
[f] Lel. V. 12. [g] Tan. 331.
[h] Lel. V. 7, 12. [i] Bar. I. 442.
[s] St. Woolos alias Gunlin. St. Gunleus. Ecton.
[t] Lel. IV, 52, 53. [u] Lel. V. 6.
[x] Strange, Archæol. V. 76.
[y] Groſe's account under his view of it. [z] Tan. 332. [a] Caerdiff.
[b] Tan. 330. [c] Lel. IV. 53.
[d] Lel. Ib.
[e] Tan. 331. Lel. IV. 176. Dugd. Bar. I. 442.
[f] Lel. V. 12. [g] Tan. 331.
[h] Lel. V. 7, 12. [i] Bar. I. 442.

Henry,

Henry, who, dying without iſſue male 1661, James Fitzroy was, among other honours, created duke of Monmouth 15 Charles II. and beheaded 1685, 1 James II. 1 William and Mary, Charles, ſon of John earl of Peterborough, by Elizabeth of Thomas Carey, ſecond ſon of Robert earl of Monmouth, was created earl of Monmouth in right of his mother, which title is enjoyed by his grandſon Charles earl of Peterborough [k].

[k] Dugd. II. 398. Ib. 482.

Rare Plants found in Monmouthſhire:

Gnaphalium margaritaceum. American Cudweed; on the banks of Rymney river.

Vicia ſylvatica. Tufted Wood Vetch; in a wood near Caerwent.

GLAMORGANSHIRE.

THE furtheſt territory of the Silures I take to have been what we now call Glamorganſhire, the Britans Morganuc, Glath morgan, and Glad Vorganuc, i. e. the country of Morganuc, from prince Morgan as moſt think, or as ſome from Morgan abbey. If I ſhould deduce it from Mor the Britiſh word for ſea, I know not whether I ſhould be far from the truth. I have, however, obſerved that a maritime town of Bretagne, now called Morlais, is by Ptolemy and the antient Gauls called Vorganium or Morganium (M and V being frequently put for one another in this language) and whence can that be derived but from the ſea? And this our Morganuc is alſo entirely on the ſea; for being long and narrow it is waſhed by the Severn ſea on the ſouth. On the land ſide it adjoins eaſt on Monmouth, on the north on Brecknock, and on the weſt on Caermarthenſhires.

The northern part is rough with mountains, which as they decline ſouthward gradually grow more improveable, at whoſe foot a plain extends open to the ſouth ſun in ſuch a ſituation as Cato preferred to all others, and for which Pliny ſo much commends Italy. For this is the richeſt part of the county, and thick ſet with towns.

Juſtin[a], petty prince of this country in the reign of William Rufus, revolting from his ſovereign Rhys, and finding himſelf not a match for his power, by a raſhneſs which he repented of when too late, invited over to his aſſiſtance from England by means of one Ivo[b], a nobleman to whom he had married his daughter, Robert Fitz Haimon a Norman, ſon of Haimon Dentatus earl of Corbul, who preſently raiſing troops, and aſſociating with him twelve knights, firſt engaged and ſlew Rhys, and then allured by the fertility of the country, of which he had before inſured to himſelf the poſſeſſion in proſpect, turned his arms againſt Juſtin himſelf for not keeping his word with Ivo, ſoon diſpoſſeſſed him of the patrimony of his anceſtors, and divided the country between his own followers. The barren mountains he granted to Ivo, but reſerved the richer lands to himſelf and thoſe twelve whom he called Peers, to hold of him as their lord, and mutually defend one another, and each their reſpective poſt in Caerdiff caſtle, and to attend at his court for the adminiſtration of juſtice when ſummoned. It may not be amiſs to ſet down their names from a book written on this ſubject either by ſir Edward Stradling or ſir Edward Manſell, for it goes under both their names, both of antient family and well verſed in matters of antiquity. They are as follow:

William de Londres
Richard Granvill
Paine Turbervill
Oliver St. John
Robert de St. Quintin
Roger Bekeroul
William Eaſterling, ſo called becauſe he was a native of Germany, whoſe deſcendants are ſtill called Stradlings.
William Humfranvill
Richard Siward
John Fleming
Peter Soore
Reginald Sully.

The river Remny falling from the mountains is the eaſtern boundary dividing this county from Monmouthſhire; and Remni in Britiſh ſignifies to divide. Near its courſe through inacceſſible places among the mountains in a marſhy place one ſees the tottering walls of Caer Phili caſtle, which was of ſuch vaſt extent and ſtupendous workmanſhip that it is almoſt univerſally allowed to be a Roman work. Nor do I deny it, though I have not yet found by what name it was known to them. It ſeems, however, to have been repaired, as it has a chapel in the Chriſtian ſtyle, as I was informed by the learned and judicious J. Sanford, who examined it with attention. It belonged to the Clares earls of Gloceſter, but no mention is made of it in our chronicles before Edward II. At that time the Spenſers having by their wicked arts fomented a variance between the king, queen, and nobles, Hugolin Spenſer was beſieged a long time in this caſtle to no purpoſe. On this river alſo, but whereabouts is unknown, Fauſtus, the good ſon of the worthleſs Vortigern, built as Ninnius[c] relates a great place, where with other holy men he ſpent his time in prayer to God that he whom his abandoned father had inceſtuouſly begotten on his own daughter might not ſuffer for his father's ſins, that his father might at laſt be brought to a ſerious repentance, and that his country might be delivered from the Saxon war.

Rhymny r.

Caer Phili caſtle.

Somewhat lower Ptolemy places the mouth of the river RATOSTABIVS or RATOSTIBIVS, a name corrupted for Trait Taff[d], q. d. the ſandy frith of the river Taff. This river falling from the mountains there enters the ſea by Landaff, q. d. the Church on the river Taff, a ſmall city[e] in a low ſituation, but dignified with an epiſcopal ſee, to which are ſubject 154 pariſhes, and a cathedral church dedicated to Teleanus[f] its biſhop. It was founded by Germanus and Lupus, French biſhops, after ſuppreſſing the Pelagian hereſy then ſpreading itſelf over Britain*; and Dubricius, a moſt holy man, was appointed firſt biſhop, to whom Meuric a Britiſh petty prince gave all the country between the rivers Taff and Elei. From hence the Taff comes to Caerdiff, called by the Britans Caerdid[g], as neat a town as any in this Ratoſtibii oſtium.

Landaff.

Caerdiff.

[a] Jeſtin ap Gwrgant.
[b] or Ino, or rather Enion ap Kadivor.
[c] c. 52. on the bank of the river Renis.
[d] Traeth Taw.
[e] urbecula.
[f] St. Teilian.
[g] corruptly I ſuppoſe for Caer Dydh.
* Hiſtoria Landavenſis.

county, having a commodious harbour. Fitz Haimon after his conqueſt made it the ſeat of war and juſtice, fortifying it with walls and a caſtle, in which beſides a choice band thoſe knights beforementioned were bound to defend each his poſt. Notwithſtanding all this in a few years Yvor Bâch a Britiſh mountaineer, a little man of great ſpirit, ſurpriſed the caſtle in the night-time, carried off William earl of Gloceſter, Fitz Haimon's daughter's ſon, with his wife and ſon, and detained them till he obtained full ſatisfaction for the wrong that had been done him. How Robert Curthoſe, eldeſt ſon of William the Conqueror, a perſon of fooliſh intrepidity and courage, being ſupplanted in his pretenſions to the crown by his younger brothers, and deprived of his eye-ſight, ended his days in this caſtle, may be ſeen in our hiſtorians; whence may be learnt how little eaſe or ſecurity attends royal birth.

Robert Curthoſe duke of Normandy.

Scarce three miles from the mouth of the Taff in the turn of the ſhore lie two ſmall but pleaſant iſlands, divided from each other as well as from the main land by a narrow ſtrait. The hithermoſt is called Sully from the town overagainſt it, to which Robert de Sully, to whom it fell in the diviſion of the country, gave his name, unleſs one ſhould rather ſuppoſe he derived his name from it. The furthermoſt is called Barry from Baruch a holy man there buried, who left his name both to the place and the ſucceeding lords of it. The illuſtrious family of the viſcounts Barrè in Ireland derive their name from thence. "On a rock in the ſea here," ſays Giraldus[h], "is a "ſmall cleft, to which if you put your ear you will "hear a noiſe as of a forge, ſometimes the blaſts of "the bellows, ſometimes the ſtrokes of the hammer, "ſometimes the loud gratings of the grindſtone and "the iron, the hiſſing of the ſteel and the roaring "of the fire. I could eaſily ſuppoſe theſe ſounds "to be occaſioned by the ſea which enters theſe "cavities unſeen, were it not that the ſame noiſes "are heard when the tide is out and the ſhore left "bare as when it is in." Somewhat like this place was that mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus in the 7th book of his Stromata. "Hiſtorians ſay there is "in the iſland of Britain a cavern under a mountain "having a cleft at the top; and when the wind "blows into the cavern and whiſtles in its receſſes "the ſound of a number of cymbals is heard. For "the repercuſſion of the wind makes a very great "noiſe."

Sully perhaps from the Silures.

Barry.

From theſe iſlands the ſhore runs due weſt, and opens for one river, on which higher up ſtands Cowbridge, called by the Britans from its ſtone bridge Pont-Uan[i], a market town, and the ſecond of the three that Fitz Haimon after his conqueſt reſerved for himſelf. As Antoninus hereabouts and at this diſtance from ISCA places BOVIVM, corruptly written alſo BOMIVM, I thought it a fortunate conjecture that this place might be Bovium. But finding three miles off Boverton, which exactly correſponds in ſound with Bovium, my regard to truth prevented me from ſeeking BOVIVM anywhere elſe. Nor is it uncommon to have places named from Oxen; witneſs the Thracian Boſphorus, Bovianum a town of the Samnites, and Bauli in Italy quaſi Boaliæ, if we may believe Symmachus. But what ſerves inſtead of every other proof is, that 15 miles from BOVIVM Antoninus places a town, whoſe Latin name alſo is NIDVM, which our antiquaries have long ſearched for, though Neath a town of conſiderable note preſents itſelf with its name ſtill entire; and here at Lantwit (q. d. St. Iltut's church) adjoining are to be ſeen foundations of many buildings, and it had antiently ſeveral ſtreets. Not far from hence in the turn of the ſhore ſtands the caſtle of St. Donat, the ſeat of the antient and famous family of the Stradlings, near which were lately dug up ſome antient Roman coins, chiefly of the thirty tyrants, and ſome of Emilianus and Marius, which are leſs common. A little higher the river Ogmor makes its way into the ſea falling from the mountains by Coitie, antiently belonging to the Turbevilles, afterwards to the Gamages, now by marriage to Robert Sidney viſcount L'iſle; and Ogmor caſtle which from the family of Londres came to the houſe of Lancaſter.

Cowbridge.

BOVIVM.

Boverton.

NIDVM.

"A few miles from hence (as the learned J. Strad-"ling writes to me) at Newtown, a little town on "the weſt bank of the river Ogmor, about 100 "paces from the ſhore of the Severn in a ſandy "plain, is a ſpring not of the cleareſt water, but "tolerably pure and fit for uſe. It never runs over, "but you go down ſome ſteps to the well. In "ſpring tides in ſummer time you can ſcarce take "up a diſhful of water, but when the tide is out "there is enough to fill a large veſſel. The ſame "uncertainty continues in winter, but far leſs viſible "by reaſon of the adventitious ſupplies from rain "and other cauſes. This had been confidently "affirmed to me by many creditable perſons in the "neighbourhood. But giving little credit to com-"mon report, I lately paid ſeveral viſits to this "ſacred ſpring, as I wiſhed to write to you about it. "When I came there I ſpent above a quarter of an "hour in examining every particular, and the tide "being in the Severn without anybody coming to "carry away the water it ſunk about three inches. "I then left it, and ſoon after coming back to it I "found it riſen a foot. The lower diameter of the "ſpring within the walls is near ſix feet broad. "My muſe ſuggeſted the following lines on it:

"Te, Nova Villa, fremens odioſo murmure nympha
Inclamat Sabrina; ſoloque inimica propinquo,
Evomit infeſtas nutu violenter arenas.
Damna pari ſentit vicinia ſorte; ſed illa
Fonticulum cauſata tuum. Quem virgo legendo
Litus ad amplexus vocitat: latet ille vocatus
Antro, & luctatur contra. Namque æſtus utrique eſt Continuo motu refluus, tamen ordine diſpar.
Nympha fluit propius: fons defluit; illa recedit;
Iſte redit. Sic livor ineſt & pugna perennis."

Thee, New town, noiſy raging Severn duns,
And on the neighouring land miſchievous throws
With violence heaps of ſand: the neighbours feel
Their ſhare of miſchief; but alone for it
Accuſe thy little ſpring, whoſe fond embrace
The ſea nymph courts oft as this ſhore ſhe laves.
He in his cavern hid her ſummons ſcorns,
And ſpurns reluctant. For in both a tide
Continual changes, but at diff'rent times;
As ſhe approaches he retreats. Again
She ſhuns as he returns. Continual ſtrife,
Continual emulation, both exert.

Polybius[k] mentions ſuch a ſpring at Gades, and gives this ſolution of it; that the wind wanting its [h] I. c. 6.

[i] Y Bon vaen. Lluyd.

[k] Spr. Gad.

uſual vent returns inward, and ſtopping up the paſſages of the ſpring confines the water; that afterwards the water quitting the ſurface, the ſpring is no longer obſtructed, and then the water riſes up plentifully.

Proceeding along the ſhore from hence we meet with Kinfeage, formerly Fitz Haimon's own caſtle, and Margan on the ſea, antiently an abbey, founded by William earl of Gloceſter, now the ſeat of the illuſtrious and knightly family of the Maunſells. Near this laſt place on the top of a mountain called Mynydd Margan is a block of hard ſtone four feet long and one broad with an inſcription which the ignorant vulgar in its neighbourhood firmly believe whoever reads will die ſoon after: with this aſſurance let the reader, therefore, attempt it if he dares.

The laſt words I read Æternali in domo; ſepulchres being in the language of that age ſtyled ÆTERNALES DOMVS. Between Margan and Kinfeage by the road ſide lies a ſtone four feet long with this inſcription:

PVNP EIVS
CARAN TOPIVS.

This, as the right rev. the biſhop of Landaff, who procured me copies of both theſe inſcriptions, informs me, the Welſh by adding and altering read and explain thus [k]: PIM BIS AN CAR ANTOPIVS, q. d. The five fingers of our friends or neighbours ſlew us: believing it to be the ſepulchre of Morgan, the prince from whom the country took its name, and who they ſay was ſlain 800 years before the birth of Chriſt. But antiquaries know theſe letters are of later date.

From Margan the ſhore runs out to the north-eaſt by Aber-avon, a mean market town on the river Avon, whence its name, to the river Neath remarkable for its quickſand, on which ſtands a town of the ſame name, called in Antoninus's Itinerary NIDVM. After Fitz Haimon reduced the country this fell to the ſhare of Richard Granville, who, after founding a monaſtery below the town and conſecrating his portion to God and the monks, returned to his much better eſtate in England. NIDVM.

All the country beyond the river Nid to the river Loghor [l] the weſt boundary of this county is called by us Gower, by the Britans and Ninnius Guhir [m], wherein as that author ſays "the ſons of "Kaianus [n] the Scot ſpread themſelves," till driven out by Cuneda [o] a Britiſh petty king. In the reign of Henry I. Henry [p] earl of Warwick reduced this country, but by agreement between Thomas [q] earl of Warwick and king Henry II. it paſſed to the crown*. King John gave it to William de Breos to hold "by "the ſervice of one knight in lieu of all other ſervice," and his poſterity held it to the time of Edward II. For then William de Breos having mortgaged [r] this eſtate to ſeveral perſons, and afterwards to the prejudice of all the reſt to oblige the king made it over to Hugh Spenſer, this was one of the many cauſes of the inveterate hatred which the nobility bore to the Spenſers and of their raſhly renouncing their allegiance. It is now divided into eaſt and weſt. In the eaſt the chief town is Sweinſey, ſo called by the Engliſh from the porpoiſes, by the Welſh Aber-Taw [s] from the river Taw running by it. It was fortified by Henry earl of Warwick aforeſaid. But much older than this is the town on the river Loghor called by Antoninus LEVCARVM, by us, retaining the name intire, Loghor, where after the death of Henry I. Howell ap Meredic coming on a ſudden with his mountaineers on the Engliſh cut off many perſons of diſtinction among them. Weſt Gower lies below this, and by the ſea inſinuating itſelf on both ſides is made a peninſula, more famous for its corn than its towns, and antiently for Kineth, who was canonized after leading a ſolitary life here, of whom the reader that deſires further information may conſult our countryman Capgrave, who dwells largely on his miracles.

Lochor r. Gower land. East Gower. Sweinſey. Aber Taw. LEVCARVM. Loghor. W. Gower.

From the conqueſt of this province the lineal deſcendants of Fitz Haimon, the Clares and Spenſers earls of Gloceſter, were lords of it: afterwards ſeveral of the Beauchamps and Nevilles, and by a daughter of Nevill deſcended from the Spenſers, Richard III. king of England, on whoſe death Henry VII. became poſſeſſed of this country, and granted it to his uncle Gaſpar duke of Bedford, who dying without iſſue the king reſumed the intire right, and left it to his ſon Henry VIII. whoſe ſon Edward VI. ſold the greateſt part of it to William Herbert, whom he had created earl of Pembroke and baron Caerdiff [t].

Lords of Glamorgan.

Of the iſſue of the twelve knights remain in this country only the Stradlings, diſtinguiſhed by a long ſeries of anceſtors; the Tubervilles and ſome of the Flemings, the chief of which laſt lives at Flemingſton; now by corruption Flemſton, which took its name from them quaſi Flemings' town. But in England remain baron St. John of Bletſo, the Granvilles in Devonſhire, the Siwards, as I am informed, in Somerſetſhire. The male line of the reſt has long been extinct, and their eſtates parcelled out among females.

This ſhire contains 118 pariſhes.

* Liber Mon. Neth. 5 Joh.

[k] PVMP. BVS CAR ANTORIVS.
[l] Britiſh Lhychwr.
[m] Gwyr. Guihur cet. Gualig, q. Guchur in Gwalig, i. e. Wallia, c. 8. Ed. Gale.
[n] Keian.
[o] Kynedhav.
[p] Dugdale, Bar. I. 69, from Rous ſays it was his ſon Roger.
[q] William. Ib.
[r] ſold. G.
[s] Aber Thawan, Lel. II. 63.
[t] which title his deſcendants ſtill enjoy.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Glamorgan is 48 miles long from eaſt to weſt by 27 from north to ſouth, and 116 in circumference.

"Glade is in Welſh a country or a land, and this "province or country is often called Morganhog. I "take Moregan to have the name of More, that is "to ſay the ſea, unto the ſhore whereof it lyeth. "The confine of Glamorgan lieth thus. Remny is "the march on the eaſt ſide of it. Cremline a little "brook is the march of the weſt part. The Se-"verne ſe boundith from the mouth of Remny to "the mouth of Cremlin. The rootes of the black "mountain marcheth it by north [a]."

On the north and north-eaſt ſides it is very mountainous, the ſoil of the hills extremely varied. In ſome parts they are abſolute rocks, in others full of coal and iron. The ſurface over theſe mines produces plenty of fine wood. What corn grows in the county is principally between the ſouth ſide of the mountains and the ſea in a ſpacious vale or plain open to the latter. Between Pontypool and Caerfilly is a long deep winding vale, ſuch as the Welſh call a dingle, between a range of very ſteep hills, thoſe on the right covered with coppices, thoſe on the left rich in mines, which in ſome places have been uncovered by letting looſe the ſprings on the hills. A ſtream winds through this vale and ſupplies the iron works. From the hills at Caerfilly are extenſive but barren proſpects. The roads over the mountains are exceſſively ſteep, ſtoney, ſtrewed as well as the heaths on each ſide of them with ſtones of various ſizes detached from the rocks by the winter rains. The lower road from Caerdif through the county is good. From thence to Cowbridge and Margan the diſtance relieved by mile ſtones. The ferries at Brutton, Swanſea, and Lwchur, if better managed or the information about fords to be relied on, would cut off ſome of the way. The ſea ſhores are delightful, having a level ſand beach and romantic cliffs moſtly of marle. Caſtles are planted thick along the coaſt and in Gowerland: the former to ſecure the Norman, the latter the Engliſh conqueſts. The air on the north ſide is ſharp, occaſioned by the long continuance of the ſnow on the hills; but on the ſouth ſide mild and temperate, improved by the ſea breezes. There is no where perhaps ſouth of Tweed a greater air of miſery and ſavageneſs than among the inhabitants of the Glamorganſhire mountains, always employed in coal, iron, and copper-works, almoſt naked, exceſſively naſty, their long ſtrait hair hanging about their tawny faces. The women outdo the men in hard labour, their feet and legs bare almoſt above their knees. Their huts like their hedges of ſtones confuſedly piled up and wedged together without cement or earth. Mr. Wyndham [b] obſerves that though Caerphylli is but two miles from Monmouthſhire, and ſeparated from it only by a ſimple brook, the buildings, manners, and dreſs of the inhabitants are as ſtrictly Welſh as thoſe of Merionethſhire, and the Engliſh language is as little underſtood here as among the mountains of Caernarvonſhire.

Such is the profuſion of coal and lime-ſtone in this county that lime is the general manure of it, and there is ſcarce a cottage that is not white-waſhed regularly once a week. The plenty of coal and the conveniency of exportation have brought a large copper work to Swanſea [c].

"Juſtine lord of Glamorganſhire had great trouble "of Theodore prince of Wales. Juſtine deſired "help of one Inon a Welſhman borderer unto him, "promiſing to him his daughter with great landes. "Inon got help of Haymo erle of Gloceſter, and "had 12 or 13 knights of his, and bette the prince "of Wales. Juſtine kept no promiſe with Inon, "wherefore Inon and the 12 knights drove Juſtine "away and occupied his landes. Inon had all the "Walſcherie for his parte, as up into the mountains "by North in Glamorganſhire, as Glin Rutheney, "Miſkin Sighenith, Glin Neth, and other parts "towards the Black mountains. The lands of the "12 knights were in the beſt part of Glamorganſhire, "as towards the ſea, and this land went to heires "undivided. Inon's part in the Walſcherie was di-"vided by heirs into peces, and ſo ſoon ſparkelid. "Lounders, Stradling, and Fleming be countid as "three of the 12 knights. Lounders' part came to "the dukedom of Leinſter. Fleming's part to the "male infants, and of late time Gaſpar duke of "Bedford being lord of Glamorganſhire, the lands "of the male infants for lak of due iſſue cam by "exchete unto him as lord of the country. Now "they be the kinge's [d]."

"The river of Remny limes Morganiæ [e]." Rem

"Singheneth of ſome is divided into Iſkaihac and "Huhekaihach. In Iſkaihac is Cair Filly caſtle ſett Cair "emonge mariſches, where be ruinus walls of a "wonderfull thicknes, and toure kept up for pri-"ſoners as to the chief hold of Singheneth. It is "three miles N. E. from Landaff and two from the "E. ripe of Tave [f]."

The village of Caerphilly ſtands among the chain of hills which run through the middle of Glamorganſhire and ſtretch north towards Brecknockſhire, from whoſe top may be ſeen all the north part of South Wales and part of North Wales, and all the ſouth and eaſt parts to the ſea and the Severn. It is a mean irregular village, with a church dedicated to St. Helen of no better appearance. The caſtle is probably one of the nobleſt remains of antient architecture now in Britain. It conſiſts of one large oblong court, which had an entrance by a gateway with two round towers to the eaſt and weſt, the firſt being the principal. On the north ſide was a dead

[a] Lel. IV. 54.
[b] Toure p. 18.
[c] Wyndham, p. 37.
[d] Lel. IV. 76.
[e] Lel. V. 6.
[f] Ib. IV. 57.

wall

e l
,
s. d ce
n, ne
he ns ey, rts
the ire, res dielid.
l as e to the e of ands n by Now

c and e ſett of a r pri-
It is m the chain lamorkſhire, part of all the rn. It ated to attle is ent are large gateway the firſt

a dead

IV. 76.

wall

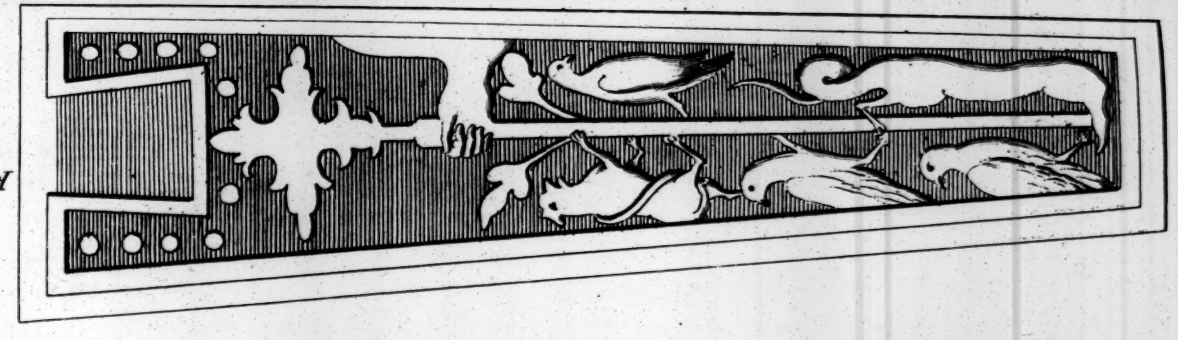

Fig. 1. Fig. 2. p. 485.

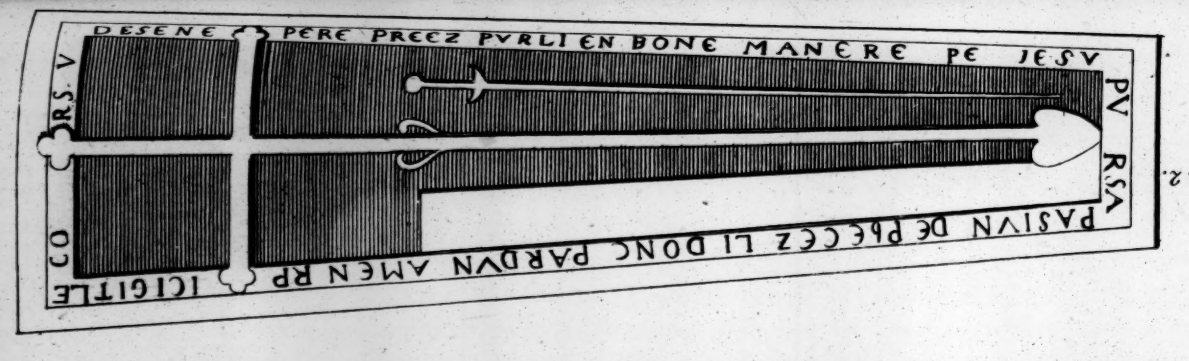

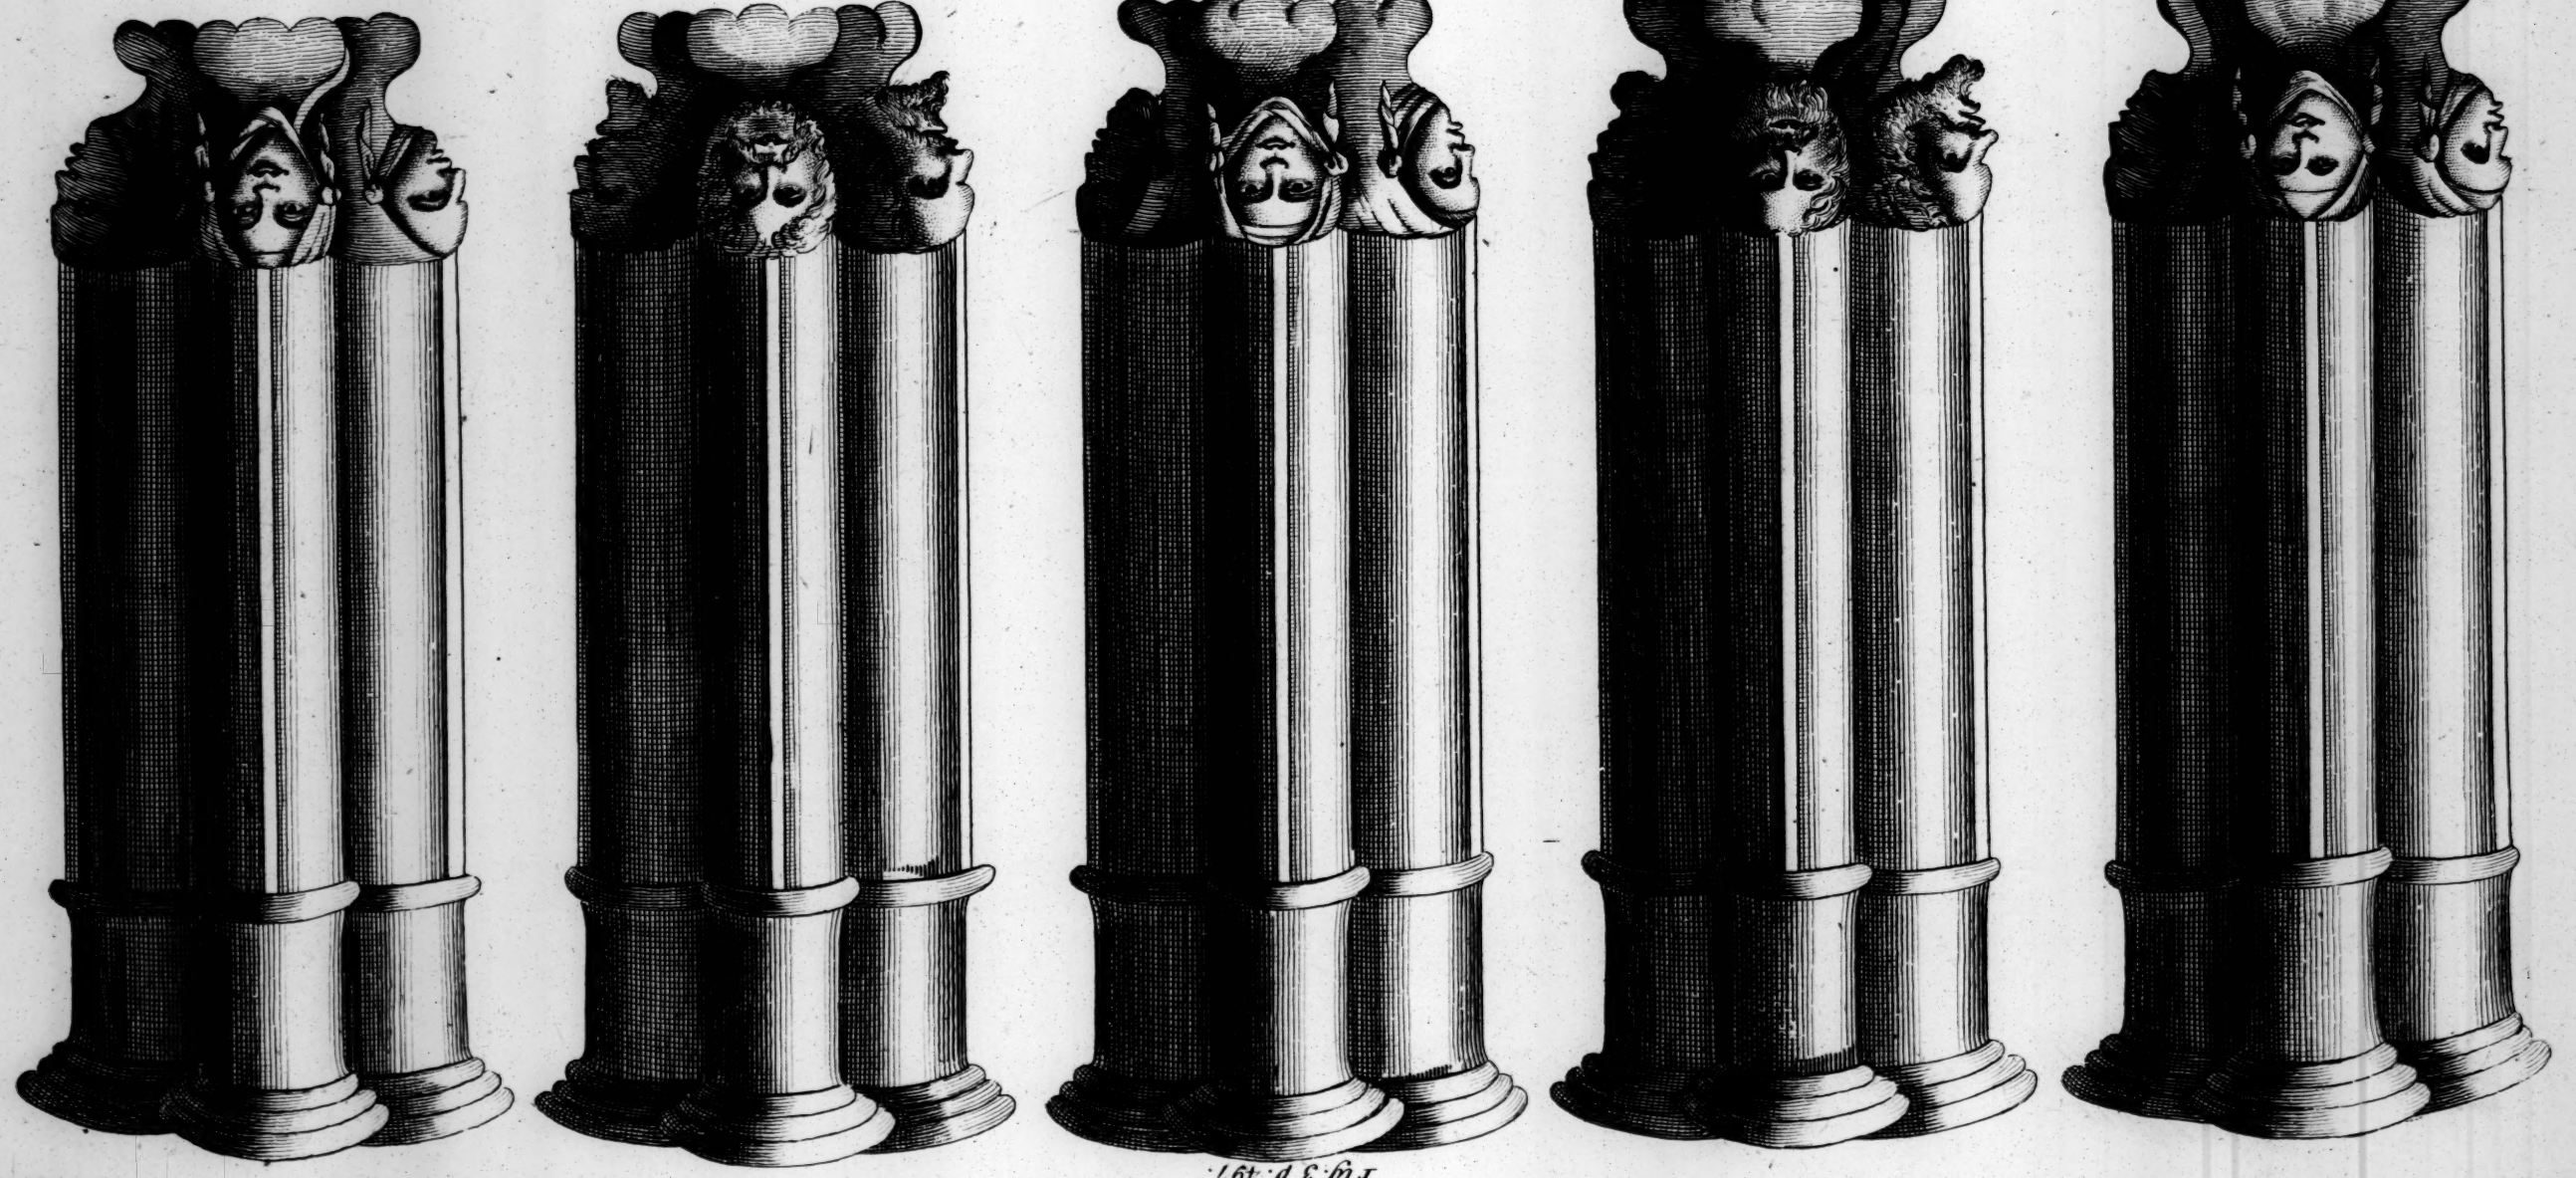

Fig. 3 p. 497.

Fig. 4. p. 497.

Vol. II Pl. XVI. p. 497.

wall with loop holes. On the south the hall. At each angle was a round tower of four ſtories, all which were communicated with each other by a gallery in the ſecond ſtory. The ſouth-eaſt tower in the laſt century of its ſituation is ſuppoſed to exceed any leaning tower in Italy or elſewhere, having been reſtored, probably by gunpowder in the civil wars eleven feet from its perpendicular, and reſting only on a ſhaft of the ſouth ſide. The hall before-mentioned, which Mr. Sandford miſtook for a chapel, is a ſtately room about 70 feet by 30 and [illegible]. On the ſouth ſide we aſcend to it by a double flight about eight feet wide, the roof of which is vaulted and ſupported by twenty arches rising as you aſcend. This ſtaircaſe leads not exactly into the middle but nearer the weſt end of the room, and oppoſite to it on the north ſide is a chimney about 10 feet wide. On the ſame ſide are two ſtately windows (two on each ſide the chimney) continued down to the floor and reaching above the ſuppoſed floor of this room. They do not appear to have been open entirely within more than a yard of the floor though they are ſo now.] The ſides of theſe windows are adorned with [a double row of] certain three-leaved knobs or buſks, having a frith or ſmall round ball in the centre, an ornament common in buildings of the 14th century[k].] On the ſide walls of the room are ſeven equidiſtant cluſters of round pilaſters about four feet long, from the bottom of which to the floor may be about 12 feet and an half, each pilaſter ſupported by three buſts varied alternately; a bearded old head and two young ones all with flowing hair; a female buſt with a cloth under the chin and about the forehead between two younger ones with only forehead cloths, all with braided hair. There are alſo in the ſouth wall ſix equidiſtant grooves about nine inches wide and eight or nine feet high, four whereof are continued from the tops of the pilaſters, but the two middlemoſt are about the middle between the pilaſters and come down below the reſt, having neat flowers projecting at bottom as if intended to ſupport ſomething placed in the grooves. [Above the top of theſe grooves may be ſeen three feet of wall, which was evidently no more than a parapet, the roof having ſtrung from the top of the pilaſters and from wooden uprights placed in the grooves; it being highly improbable that only the upper part and almoſt the point of the windows ſhould have been cut off for an upper room.] On the north ſide near the eaſt end is a door about eight feet high opening into a pretty green [the court of the caſtle] about 70 yards by 40. At the eaſt end are two low arched doors within a yard of each other [and a window.] Over one of theſe doors they pretend to ſhew a hole in proof of its being a chapel, but it is only [illegible] animal at the foot of the arch.] On the ſouth ſide was a third door and another oppoſite [at right angles] with that on the weſt end. To the deſcription in biſhop Gibſon thus corrected I ſhall add, that at the eaſt end of the hall are two ſmall ſquare [illegible] communicating with it by the two doors before-mentioned. There may have been a kitchen and buttery. Beyond theſe is an area come to look [illegible] which does not appear to have been roofed. At the weſt end of the hall is a room 22 feet and an half long by the width of the hall, having one long narrow pointed window on the north ſide lately filled up; but the tracery of later date than any in the caſtle. From the weſt wall of this room project ſingle ſtones like thoſe in the hall, but with characters on them, probably maſons marks. This room all [illegible] contrary to its ſituation is vulgarly called a chapel. Beyond this is another narrower room, but of the three ſeparately from north to ſouth, which was a paſſage with doors into the [illegible] deep well, now filled. The main body of the caſtle is ſurrounded by an immenſe wall, ſupported with [illegible] and defended by ſquare towers communicating each with other by an embattled gallery with a walk over it. In this wall is a narrow gateway, not exactly correſponding with the eaſt gate of the caſtle, and having two hexagonal towers. At right angles with this gateway is a ſquare tower with three ſlits for portcullices and an oven. At this the entrance opens into the gallery in the eaſt wall, and juſt under that near this tower is an arched paſſage formerly fortified with portcullices. Through the outer wall and the moat were the offices, that ſtill [illegible] remaining.

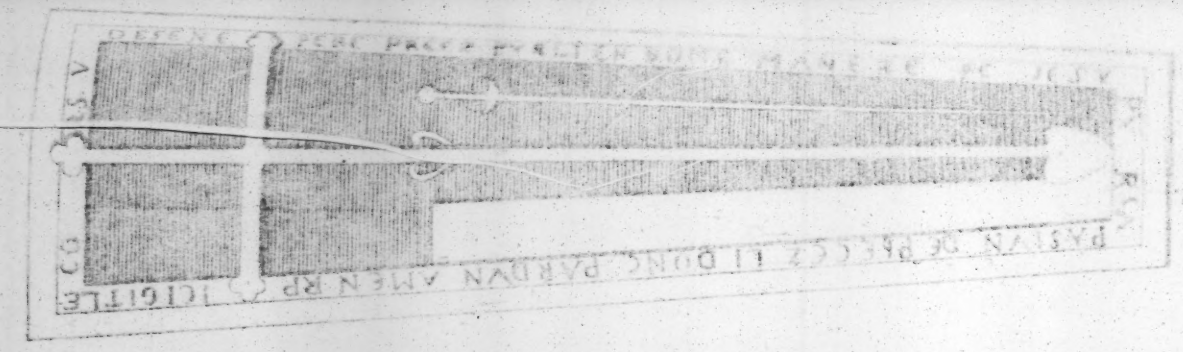
See Pl. XVI. fig. 1.

The preſent caſtle within the old deep moat is not ſo large as that at Caerphilly, but the outworks are of great extent; riſing to the eaſt and of later erection, and on the outſide of the old moat. On the north-weſt ſide of the old moat is a pentagon entrenchment of earth with circular baſtions at the angles; and farther north-weſt and only divided by another moat is a large triangular field incloſed round, with a circular mound at each corner. The works that lye to the north-eaſt have a moat of a modern faſhion before them; the gate on that ſide [illegible] and the cattle drawn [illegible] Spenſer[l] lord of Glamorgan, who [illegible] this caſtle by the queen and [illegible] part of the outworks are unfiniſhed.

Caerdydd, or as Mr. Lhuyd [illegible] native calls Caer Fyl, i. e. Caſtrum Fili, ſeems to be the name of Caer to be the Roman [illegible] or Bullæum Silurum, though no remains of them have ever been found here. If, ſays he, there were no other ground to play it or ſtrain [illegible] the affinity of the name and the ſituation in the country of the Silures, we may alſo urge that the name of Caerphilly comes as near Caſtrum Bullæi as Briſtol. For they who underſtand the Britiſh tongue will readily allow that Bullæum could not be otherwiſe expreſſed in that language than Kaer Fyl or Fyll, which muſt be pronounced Kaer Fil or like it. Other name of places from the [illegible] In the Welſh Miſc. it is called the Blue caſtle, from the colour of the ſtone; Powis caſtle in North Wales is called the Red caſtle. It occurs in Wynne's improved edition of Giraldus of Lancaſter's [illegible]

[illegible] Grandiſon [illegible] and St Athan [illegible]

[illegible] conſidered, that the long eaſt wall of [illegible] with its [illegible] towers and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]



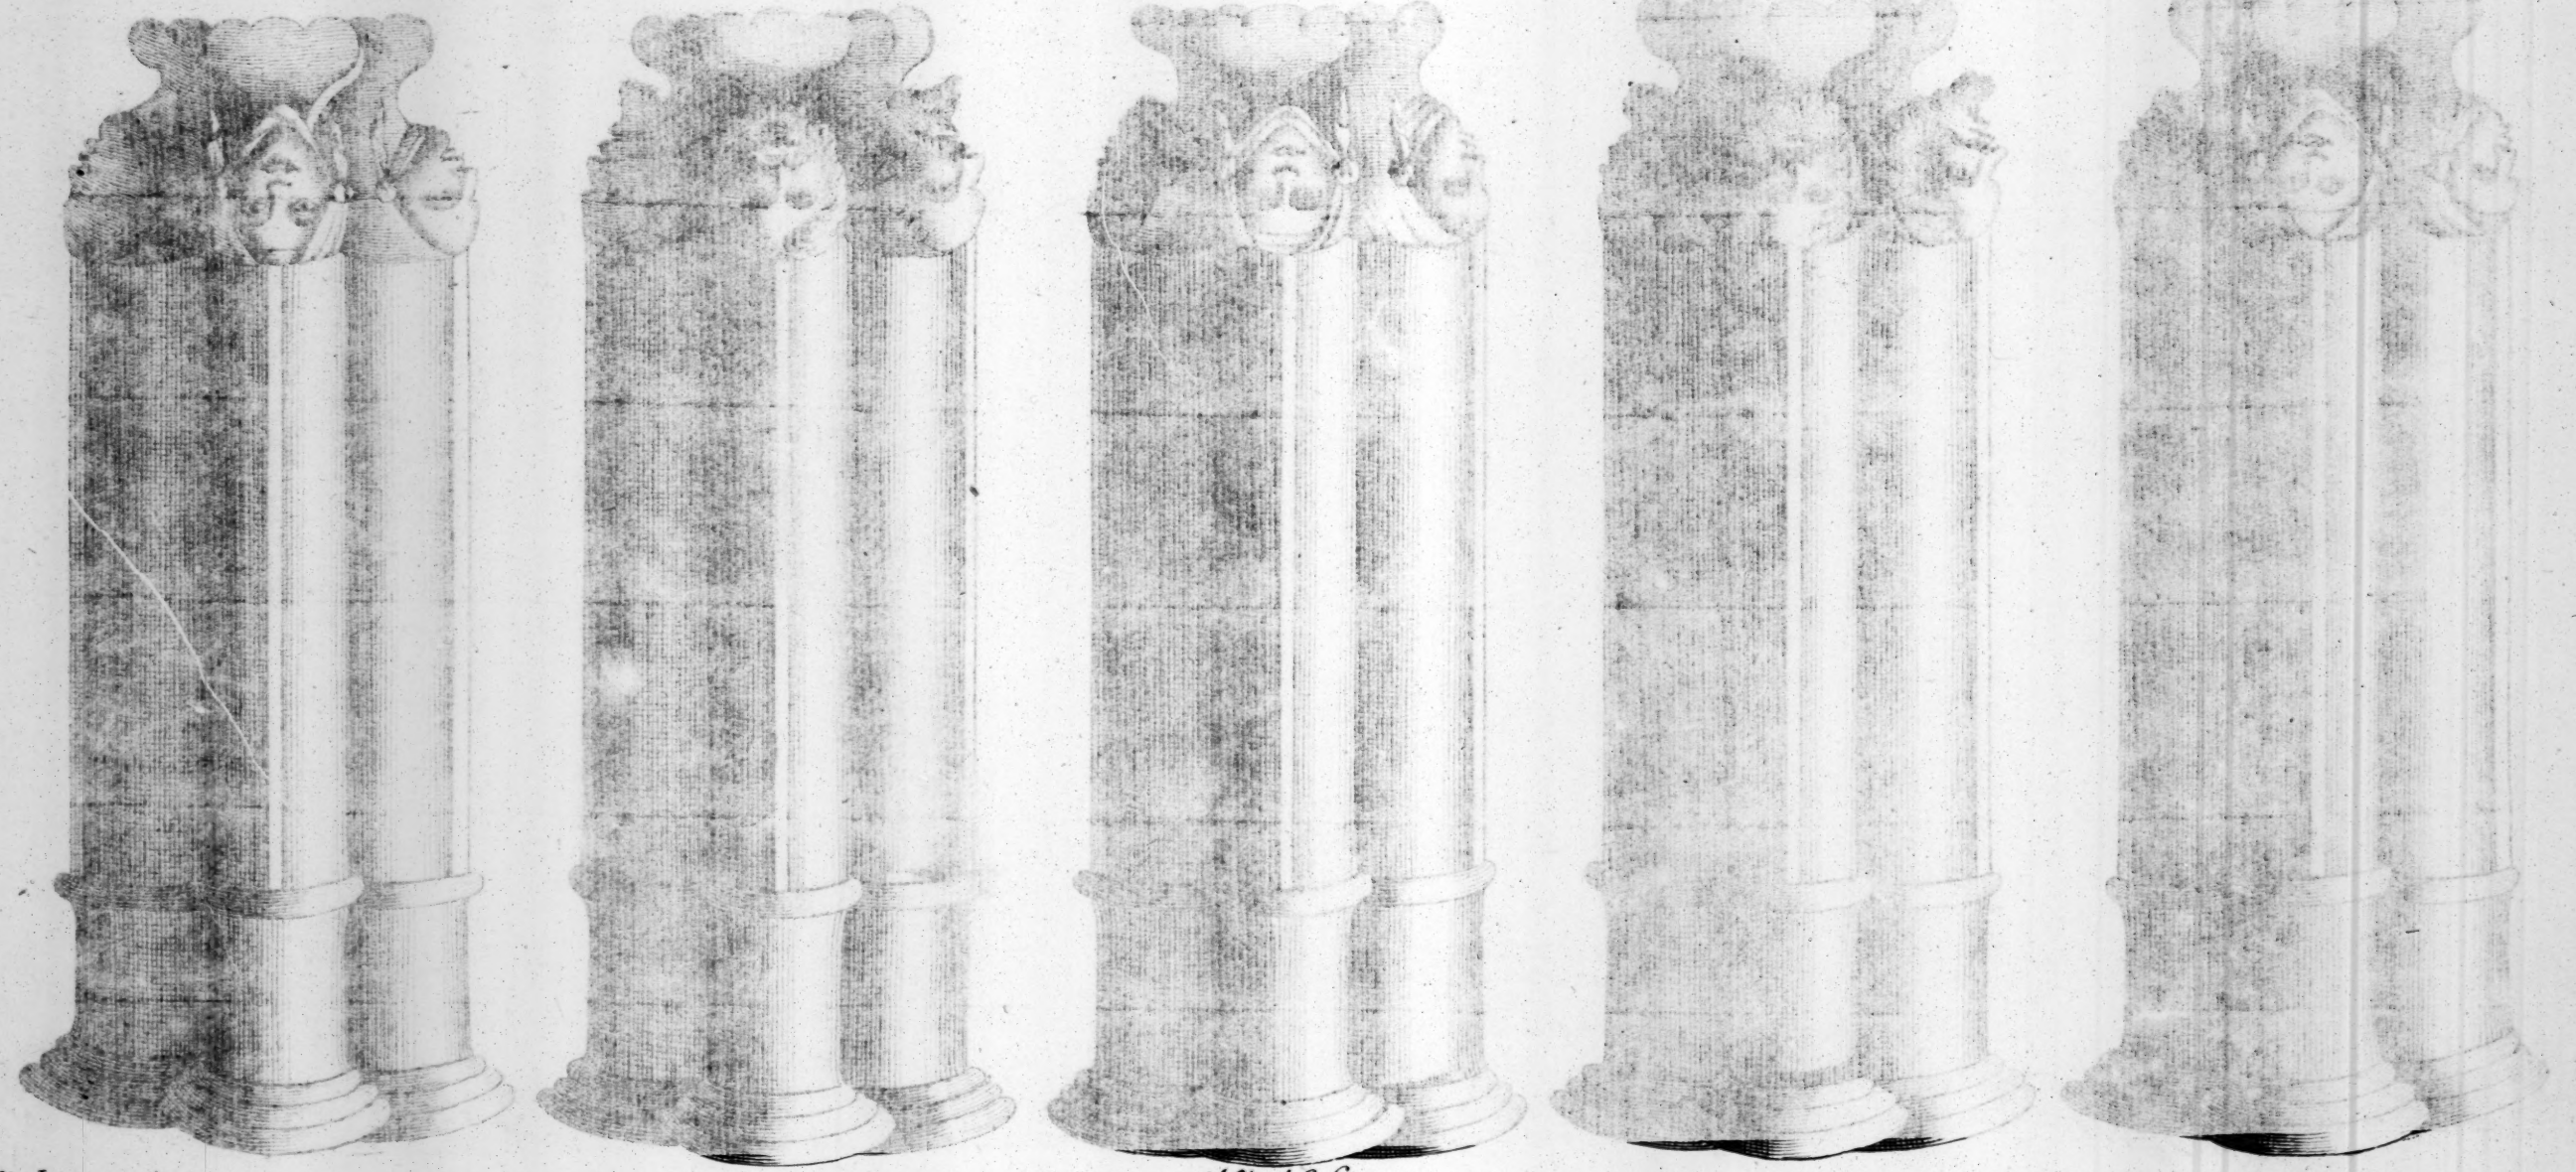


Fig. 3 p. 497.

Vol II Pl XVI. p. 497.

wall with loop holes. On the ſouth the hall. At each angle was a round tower of four ſtories, all which towers communicated with each other by a gallery in the ſecond ſtory. The ſouth-eaſt tower in the ſingularity of its ſituation is ſuppoſed to exceed any leaning tower in Italy or elſewhere, having been removed probably by gunpowder in the civil wars eleven feet[g] from its perpendicular, and reſting only on part of the ſouth ſide. The hall beforementioned, which Mr. Sandford miſtook for a chapel, is a ſtately room about 70 feet by 30 and 17 high. On the ſouth ſide we aſcend to it by a direct ſtaircaſe about eight feet wide, the roof of which is vaulted and ſupported by twenty arches riſing as you aſcend. This ſtaircaſe leads not exactly into the middle but nearer the weſt end of the room, and oppoſite to it on the north ſide is a chimney about 10 feet wide. On the ſame ſide are two ſtately windows (two on each ſide the chimney) continued down to the floor and reaching above the ſuppoſed floor of this room. [They do not appear to have been open antiently within more than a yard of the floor though they are ſo now.] The ſides of theſe windows are adorned with [a double row of] certain three-leaved knobs or huſks, having a fruit or ſmall round ball in the centre, an ornament common on buildings of the 14th century[h].] On the ſide walls of the room are ſeven equidiſtant cluſters of round pilaſters about four feet long, from the bottom of which to the floor may be about 12 feet and an half, each pilaſter ſupported by three buſts varied alternately; a bearded old head and two young ones all with flowing hair; a female buſt with a cloth under the chin and about the forehead between two younger ones with only forehead cloths, all with braided hair. There are alſo in the ſouth wall ſix equidiſtant grooves about nine inches wide and eight or nine feet high, four whereof are continued from the tops of the pilaſters, but the two middlemoſt are about the middle between the pilaſters, and come down below the reſt, having neat ſtones projecting at bottom as if intended to ſupport ſomething placed in the grooves. [Above the top of theſe grooves may be about three feet of wall, which was evidently no more than a parapet, the roof having ſprung from the top of the pilaſters and from wooden uprights placed in the grooves; it being highly improbable that only the upper part and almoſt the point of the windows ſhould have been cut off for an upper room.] On the north ſide near the eaſt end is a door about eight feet high opening into a ſpacious green [the court of the caſtle] about 70 yards by 40. At the eaſt end are two low arched doors within a yard of each other [and a window.] [Over one of theſe doors they pretend to ſhew a lamb in proof of its being a chapel; but it is only a rude animal at the foot of the arch.] On the ſouth ſide was a third door and another oppoſite [or at right angles] with that on the weſt end. To the deſcription in biſhop Gibſon thus corrected I ſhall add, that at the eaſt end of the hall are two ſmall ſquare rooms communicating with it by the two doors beforementioned. Theſe may have been a kitchen and buttery. Beyond them is an area equal to both together, which does not appear to have been roofed. At the weſt end of the hall is a room 12 feet and an half long by the width of the hall, having one long narrow pointed window on the north ſide lately filled up; but the tracery of later date than any in the caſtle. From the weſt wall of this room project ſingle ſtones like thoſe in the hall, but with characters on them, probably only maſon's marks. This room alſo expreſsly contrary to its ſituation is vulgarly called a chapel. Beyond this is another narrower room, but of the ſame length from north to ſouth, which was only a paſſage with ſtairs into the covered way on the ſouth ſide. On the eaſt ſide of the hall ſtairs is a low round tower of one ſtory called the Mint houſe, having three pointed arches with flues on the ſouth ſide, and on the weſt a ſquare place like a well with benches round it. In the great court near the eaſt entrance was a ſquare deep well, now filled up. The inner building or main body of the caſtle is intirely ſurrounded by an immenſe wall, ſupported with ſtrong buttreſſes and defended by ſquare towers communicating with each other by an embattled gallery with a walk over it[i]. In this wall is a narrow gateway, not exactly correſponding with the eaſt gate of the caſtle, and having two hexagonal towers. At right angles with this gateway is a ſquare tower with three ſlits for portculliſes and an oven. At this the entrance opens into the gallery in the eaſt wall, and juſt under that near this tower is an arched paſſage formerly fortified with portculliſes. Between the outer wall and the moat were the offices; the mill-houſe ſtill remaining.

See Pl. XVI. fig. 4.

The preſent caſtle within its old deep moat is not ſo large as that at Caerdiff, but the outworks are of great extent: thoſe to the eaſt are of later erection, and on the outſide of the old moat. On the north-weſt ſide of the old moat is a pentagon entrenchment of earth with circular baſtions at the angles; and farther north-weſt and only divided by another moat is a large triangular field moated round, with a circular mound at each corner. The works that lye to the north-eaſt have a moat of a modern faſhion before them; the gate on that ſide ſeems more recent, and does not run parallel with the inner gate and the eaſtern drawbridge. Theſe additional works might poſſibly have been erected by the younger Spenſer[k], lord of Glamorgan, who was beſieged in this caſtle by the queen and barons 1326. Great part of the outworks are unfiniſhed.

Caerphily, or as Mr. Lluyd reads it in the nominative caſe Caer Vol, q. d. Kingſton, appears by the name of Caer to be the Roman ſtation of Ad Latus or Bullæum Silurum, though no remains of them have ever been found here. If, ſays he, there were no other ground to place it at Bualht but the affinity of the names and the ſituation in the country of the Silures, we may alſo urge that the name of Caerphilly comes as near Caſtrum Bullæi as Bualht: for they who underſtand the Britiſh tongue will readily allow that Bullæum could not be otherwiſe expreſſed in that language than Kaer Vwl or Vul, which muſt be pronounced Kaer Vyl or like ſome other names of places from the genitive caſe Kaer Vyli. In old Welſh MSS. it is termed the Blue caſtle, from the colour of the ſtones, as Powis caſtle in North Wales is called the Red caſtle. It occurs in Wynne's improved edition of Caradoc of Lancarvon's hiſtory[l]

[g] Mr. Horſley 10 feet.

[h] See Grantham ſteeple, eaſt end of St. Alban's lady chapel, &c.

[i] Mr. Wyndham remarked, that the long eaſt wall on the ſouth ſide of the principal entrance is concave between the large upright buttreſſes: theſe buttreſſes reſemble towers, and had battlements on their tops, from which the intermediate wall might be protected. Ubi ſup. 21.

[k] ſon of the younger Spenſer. Walſingham.

[l] 1697, p. 200. 239. 244. 247.

under the name of Senghenneth, which name is alſo given to the hundred in which it ſtands, to the north gate of Cardiffe leading to it, and to the eaſt wind as blowing from that hundred. This name may be derived from St. Kenneth or Chineth, from whom the monaſtery of Langennith in the weſt part of this country. The antient caſtle having been razed by Rhees Vychan 1217, the preſent was erected by its owner John Bruce ſon-in-law to prince Llewellyn ap Jorwerth. The Flemings, who were the beſt artiſts in that age, appear to have been employed here; and the coins found here and at Landaff cathedral are to be aſcribed to them. Mr. Lluyd mentions one of ſilver of the ſize of a ſixpence but thinner with the image of our Saviour, and ꝺ⊔ORIꝸ+ TIBI K... and on the reverſe two figures with MVꝸNꝸTIR.... ON✱✱. This he ſuppoſes Venetian [m]. The braſs coin reſembles the French pieces of the middle age, and on one ſide a king crowned ſtanding and holding a ſceptre in his right hand with this inſcription, XꝬVſ:: ꝏ+ ×RSꝸI Ave Maria, &c. on the reverſe a croſs florè and +✠++ Ꝭ++V++ꝸ+ Ave [n].

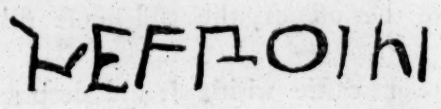
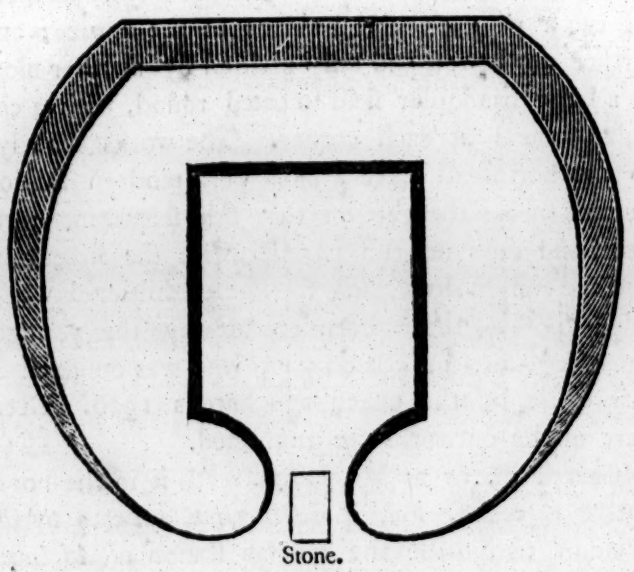
Kevn Gelhi Gaer.

On a mountain called Kevn Gelhi Gaer, not far from Caerphili in the way to Marchnad y wayn, Mr. Lluyd obſerved a remarkable monument called Y maen hir, a rude ſquariſh ſtone pillar about eight feet high, ſomewhat inclining, with this inſcription to be read downwards:



At the bottom on the ſide to which it leans is a ſmall intrenchment incloſing about ſix yards, and in the centre this ſquare area.



Stone.

He reads the inſcription Tefroiti or Deffroiti, anſwering to Dyvrod, Latin Dubrotus or perhaps Dubritius, and ſuppoſes ſome perſon buried within the area [p]. Two miles from the caſtle is a farm called Caer Vol or the Prince's field, and another Caer Marchag or the Knights farm. Alſo a third Ynis y bwl or vol, q. d. the Prince's iſland in a low flat ſituation. On Eglwys Slan common two miles from Caerphyli were ſeveral tumuli opened 1753, when burnt bones were found in urns incloſed in a ſquare cavity of flat ſtones [o]. Several barrows are viſible on one of the mountains to the north of the caſtle.

" There is within half a mile eaſt of Caerfilly a " fair place called Vanne, where Mr. Edward Lewis " dwellith [p]." Vanne.

" The water of Taphe comith ſo down from woodey " hills, and after bringeth down ſuch logs and trees " that the country were not able to make up the " bridges if they were ſtone they ſhould be ſo often " broken [q]." Taf.

Over this river, which like many others in Wales is almoſt dry in the ſummer, but in winter paſſes all bounds, was erected 1750 at Pontytypridd, a ſtupendous bridge of one arch 145 feet wide and 35 feet high, by one William Edward a country maſon, who failed in his effort three times till by lightening the abutments it has ſtood now above thirty years. About half a mile above it is a natural fall of the Taff. Pontytyp bridge.

Mr. Ward takes Ptolemy's RATOSTIBIUS for the Wye, though he wonders why the Uſk is omitted [r]. Ratostibius.

" Lantriſſent [s] caſtle longing to the king as principal " houſe of Miſkin, ſtands on the top of a hill and is " in ruin. It hath been a fair caſtle, and had two " wards, and the inner diked, having among other " towers one great and high called Giguran; and at " this caſtle is the priſon for Miſkin and Glin Rode- " eney. There were two fair parks by ſouth of " Lantriſſent, now unpalid and without deer. There " is now iron made in one of theſe parks named " Glinog [t]." Lantriſſ Lantriſſant is a miſerable village in the mountain road through Glamorganſhire having ruins of a caſtle, where Hugh Spenſer was taken after his father was beheaded at Briſtol [u]. Here is annually a great fair Auguſt 11th, where the Welſh cattle are bought up for England.

" Two miles ſouth-eaſt from Lantriſſent at Caſtle " Crege are tokens of buildings on the top of a " hill [x]." Caſtle

" The caſtle of Talevain in Rithin lordſhip ſtand- " ing on a level ground is clerely in ruin, and is " diſtant two miles and an half north-eaſt from " Cowbridge [y]." Talva

" Caſtle Gogh [Gough] ſtands on a high rok of " red ſtone or ſoile two miles from Landaf on Tave " al yn ruin, no big thing but high. It longeth to " the king, and ſtandith by Keven On [z]." Caſtle

" The town of Cairtaphe as the principal of all " Glamorganſhire is well walled, and is by eſtima- " tion a mile in compace. In the wall be 5 gates. " The caſtle is in the north-weſt ſide of the town wall, " and is a great thing and a ſtrong, but now in ſome " ruin. There be two gates to enter it, wherof the " biggeſt is called Sherehaul gate, the other the " Eſcheker gate. There is by Sherehaul gate a " great large tower called White tour, wherein is " now the king's armory. The dungeon tower is " large and fair. The caſtle toward the town by " eaſt and ſouth is plain, but it is diked by north, " and by weſt is defended by Taphe river. There " be certain places in the caſtle limited to every one " of the 12 peres or knights that came with Haymo " earl of Gloceſter in king William the Conqueror's " days, and wan Glamorgan country, and eche of " theſe be bound to the caſtle's guard. There be " two pariſh churches in the town, the principal " lying ſomewhat by eaſt, the other of our lady by Cardiff

[m] The inſcription on the reverſe may be read, MONETA VENETA, or VENETE Reipublicæ.
[n] Harris. Lluyd in G. [o] Harris.
[p] Lel. IV. 57. [q] Ib. 74. [r] Horſley, 375.
[s] Fanum trium ſanctorum. Leland. [t] Lel. IV. 60. [u] Kennet's Paroch. Ant. p. 406 ex MS. Dodſw.
[x] Lel. IV. 58. [y] Ib. [z] Ib. IV. 57.

" ſouth

" ſouth on the water ſide. There is beſides a chapel " in Shoemaker-ſtreet of St. Perine, and another hard " within Meſkin gate ſide. Ther was a late a goodly " manſion in the town called Place Newith. The " biggeſt ſuburb of the town is called Crokerton, " and ther was a houſe of Gray friars[a]. There is " another ſuburb but leſs without Port Llongy. " The Blak friers houſe was without Meſkin gate, " and beſides this there is a little building there[b]." The priory was founded by Robert firſt earl of Gloceſter, who died 1147, and there was alſo a houſe of White friars[c].

Cardiff is a populous but illbuilt town, ſituate on a low flat near the mouth of the Taff. Its old walls very conſiderable and extenſive. The keep ſeems very antient, and the caſtle is of great circumference, and muſt have been of conſiderable ſtrength[d]. On the keep is a large octagon tower[e], wherein they pretend Robert Curthoſe was confined in a dark vault: but Vitalis[f] and Malmſbury[g] ſay his confinement was enlivened by all the feſtivities of an elegant table. The high tower of the church is very beautiful. The town gives title of baron to the eldeſt ſon of the earl of Bute, ſo created 1777.

At Caerdiff Mr. Baxter places the JUPANIA, or as he corrects it JUPAPANIA of Ravennas, though it has no Roman remains except the name of Caer and a coin of Trajan in large braſs found with others not attended to in the caſtle garden. Mr. Ward makes PUNCTUOBICE in Ravennas Cowbridge[h]. He places BOMIUM at Axbridge[i], and BOVIVM at Bunbury or Bonebury near Beeſton caſtle, Cheſhire[k], and NIDUM, or as he writes it NIDUS, at Portbury c. Somerſet[l].

Two miles ſouth of Caerdiff and within 400 yards of the road is a fine entire camp of 10 or 12 acres called Caireu or fortifications, which occupies the whole hill, and includes a pariſh church of the ſame name. The hill is an oblong ſquare ſurrounded by earthworks, ſingle but very lofty to the ſouth, where is the ſteep narrow entrance. The Porta Decumana is viſible to the weſt, where and on the north the ramparts are double, and treble north-eaſt of the prætorium which is at the eaſt end of the camp, deep and entire and circular, with a very narrow entrance from the camp[m].

Near Caerdiff is Henſol, the ſeat of the Talbots. Of this family Charles was appointed lord high chancellor of Great Britain Nov. 29, 1723, on the reſignation of Peter King, lord King, and created the ſame year lord Talbot, baron of Henſol. He died Feb. 14, 1737, at his houſe in Lincoln's-inn-fields, deſervedly diſtinguiſhed by his great eloquence and eminent abilities in his profeſſion. His ſon Charles Richard dying ſingle, he was ſucceeded in his title and eſtate by his ſecond ſon William, who was created 1761 earl Talbot, and conſtituted lord ſteward of the houſehold the ſame year, and 1780 baron Dinevawr of Dinevawr c. Caermarthen, remainder to his daughter lady Cecil Price and her heirs. He died 1782.

" As much of Cowbridge as is encloſed with the Cowbridge.
" wall ſtandith on the eaſt ripe and the bridge of " ſtone there. The great ſuburb is cis pontem, the " wall is three-quarters of a mile about with three " gates. There is a church in the town, which
" ſtands in a vale[n]," and conſiſts of one broad handſome ſtreet[o].

The neighbourhood of Cowbridge is remarkable for the number of caſtles[p].

In Cowbridge we firſt meet with the fiſh called Seven, which ſeems to be of the ſalmon kind, but in flavour much ſuperior, more like the Berwick trout ſo much eſteemed in London. The ſouth and weſt parts of Wales abound with this delicious fiſh in ſuch plenty that it is frequently ſold for 1½*d.* or 2*d.* a pound[q]. Seven, a fiſh.

" The commote of Landaf begins on the weſt ſide Landaff.
" of the mouth of Teve, and runs up by the marſhy
" ſhore on Severne to the mouth of Ley river of " ſome in Engliſh called Ele. The mouths of theſe
" two rivers be about a mile aſunder. In Eſt Tha-
" wan commot is only the caſtle of Landaf, being
" the biſhop's palace[r]."

Landaff ſtands on a gentle elevation, and though a biſhopric is but a paltry village. A biſhopric was erected here in the time of St. Dubricius, whoſe death is commonly placed A. D. 522, though ſome place it near 100 years later. Hiſtorians have preſerved the names of the biſhops from the firſt erection to the end of the 9th century, but with much uncertainty of dates. It was at firſt endowed with large poſſeſſions, which were reduced at the Conqueſt, and the church deſtroyed. The preſent church built 1120 by biſhop Urban and dedicated to St. Peter, Dubricius, Teliau[s] and Oudoen, has of late fallen into great decay, notwithſtanding great pains are taken to preſerve it. The ſee was valued at £.154. per ann. and the chapter at 87£. The biſhop is dean and the archdeacon ſubdean, and here are twelve prebends and two vicars choral. The choir ſervice has been left off ſince 1692, and its revenue is applied to repairs[t]. The remains of the old cathedral are very beautiful, the door-caſes are all Norman work richly moulded. The reſt is elegant Gothic, though built ſo early. The nave is unroofed. The remaining part on which large ſums have lately been laviſhed is made up of Roman and Gothic, and the portico of a heathen temple projects over the altar. The north-weſt tower was rebuilt t. Henry V. by Jaſper earl of Bedford ſon of Owen Tudor by Catherine and 414 feet lower than the correſponding original one. The weſt windows are lancets; over them is a ſtatue of Henry I. over the door one of Dubricius. The nave is 110 feet long, 65 broad with ailes, total 263. Here is no croſs aile. Among ſeveral antient monuments are two very elegant ones of the Mathews family[u], whoſe deſcendants own the ſite of the biſhop's caſtle, of which only the gate remains: the reſt with the archdeacon's houſe was deſtroyed by Owen

[a] Saxton's and Speed's maps call it the Spittle.
[b] Lel. IV. 73. [c] Tan. 715. [d] Harris in Archæol. II. 10. [e] Wyndham, p. 25, 26.
[f] 17 annis in carcere ſervavit, & omnibus deliciis abundanter pavit. XII. p. 827. Vitalis calls Cardiffe Carduilis.
[g] Nihil præter ſolitudinem paſſus mali, ſi ſolitudo dici poteſt ubi & cuſtodum diligentia & jocorum præterea & obſoniorum non deerat frequentia. De geſt. reg. IV. ad fin.
[h] Horſl. 504. [i] Ib. 464. [k] Ib. 416. [l] Ib. 465.
[m] Harris, ubi ſup. 13. [n] Lel. IV. 70. [o] Wyndham, p. 28. [p] Ib. p. 29.
[q] Ib. [r] Lel. IV. 58.
[s] The ring of this ſecond biſhop of the ſee, a large amethyſt ſet coarſely in gold, found 1764, was given by biſhop Ewer to Dr. Keppel biſhop of Exeter, who gave it to Mr. Walpole.
[t] Tan. 712. [u] Willis's Landaff, 34.

Glendowr

Glendowr[x]. In a tower, now ruined, 42 feet ſquare ſouth-weſt from the church hung the Peter bell now at Exeter[y].

Ogor caſtle.

"Ogor caſtle ſtands on the eaſt ripe of Ogor, on "a plain ground a mile above the mouth of Ogor, "and is meatly well maintained. It longid ons to "Lounder, now to the king. Half a mile above "Ogor caſtle cometh Wenny river into Ogor by "the eaſt ripe. Newton Notes is a pretty village "on the eaſt ripe of Tidug, and there is a ſtation or "haven for ſhips[z]."

Newton Notes.

Ogmore caſtle ſtands in an angle formed by the junction of the rivers Wenny and Ogmore. It was probably built by William de Londres.

Bridge end.

On the river Ogmore ſeven miles north-eaſt of Cowbridge is Bridge end, a market town, divided by the river into two parts joined by a ſtone bridge.

Allowing the ſubterraneous noiſes mentioned by Giraldus to have been real, and not the effect of fancy or ſuperſtition, a thouſand accidents may have put an end to them ſince his time. The moſt diligent enquiry of biſhop Gibſon's correſpondent could find no ſuch thing. He found indeed ſomething like it in another ſpot; at Wormſhead point, a noted point ſo called becauſe the ſailors think it reſembles a worm creeping with its head erect, between the Naſh point and that of St. Goven in Pembrokeſhire. It runs from the main land more than a mile into the ſea, and at half flood the iſthmus which joins it to the ſhore being overflown it becomes a ſmall iſland. Towards the fartheſt point is a ſmall cleft in the ground into which if you throw a handful of duſt or ſand it will be blown back: but if you lay your ear to the cavity you hear diſtinctly the noiſe of a large bellows, occaſioned by the reciprocal motion of the ſea under the arched rocks here forcing out the air alternately. This was obſerved twice in ſummer and calm weather; and a rougher ſea may here produce many other ſounds for a lively fancy. But this Wormſhead ſeems too far to the weſtward to be miſtaken for Barry iſland.

Wormſhead point.

Burry r.

Burry is the moſt remarkable river next to that of Swanſea for trade in all Gower land, and its mouth is cloſe to Wormſhead, which is a much later name. We may therefore conjecture Wormſhead to have been called the iſland of Burry, and then admitting the eaſy miſtake of Barry for Burry, the report concerning theſe noiſes might be, that near Burry or as you ſail into Burry there is an iſland with a cleft producing ſuch and ſuch noiſes[z].

Bovivm. Lantwit.

Mr. Harris[a] is for removing Bovium to Lantwit, which ſeems the ſkeleton of ſome great town. Five or ſix roads lead to it, and a via vicinalis leads thence to Ewenny. Before Iltutus' time it was called the lordſhip of Boviarton alias Lantwit[b]. The road hence to Ewenny has many tumuli on the ſides, particularly the ſouth, which have given name to the village of Broughton in Monk Naſh pariſh. Pieces of ruſty iron were found on the top of one of them. On the hill above Ewenny where this road falls into the Julia Strata in Mr. Turbervill's park is an imperfect ſquare camp. Hence the great road to Nidum runs up to Newton Down leaving the preſent road on the right[c].

"Wenny a three miles from Cowbridge, a cell Ewenn
"longing to Gloceſter abbey, founded by ſir John
"Londres, lord of Ogmere caſtle[d]."

Wenny or Ewenny, a Benedictine priory, was founded by ſir John Loundres lord of Ogmore about 1140, valued at £.87. per annum[e], and once ſtrongly fortified. The church venerable and antient, the columns round and maſſive, the capitals ſimple, and the arches round. In the chancel, whoſe roof is ſtone with groined arches, is a monument aſcribed to Pain Turberville, conqueror of Glamorganſhire, whoſe family long inhabited the manſion-houſe, which is antient, and has a large hall[f]. Here is another monument for Morice de Londres. Two gateways, and part of the walls remain[g].

In the church-yard at Llaniltud vawr on the north Lanil vawr.
ſide of the church ſtand two remarkable ſtones. The firſt cloſe by the church-wall is pyramidal, ſeven feet long, adorned with antient Britiſh carving, ſuch as may be ſeen on the ſhafts of croſſes in many parts of Wales. It is encompaſſed with three circles in as many equidiſtant compartments, and from the lowermoſt to the ground is ingrailed or indented, but in other parts adorned with knots. Its circumference at the three higher circles is three feet and an half, at the middlemoſt above four, and at the loweſt about five; the top ſeems broken off. On See P one ſide from top to bottom it has a remarkable fur- fig. 1 row or groove about two inches deep and four wide. It ſeems plainly to have been a croſs. The other ſtone is alſo elaborately carved, and ſerved as a pedeſtal to a croſs. On one ſide is an inſcription ſhewing that one Samſon erected it for his ſoul. The inſcription on the other ſide ſets forth, that Samſon dedicated it to St. Iltud, and that one Samuel was the workman. In the middle of the church are two graveſtones engraved in Archæologia, vol. VI. Pl. III. p. 3, 4.

Beſides the remains of the celebrated ſchools founded by St. Iltut A. D. 508[h], in which ſo many nobles are ſuppoſed to have been educated, and the ruins of many other buildings, there are ſeveral ſtreets in different directions that retain their names, though the houſes on each ſide are deſtroyed. A large old building ſtill retains the name of the town hall[i].

"Colhow is on the ſhore betwixt W. Thawan and Col
"the lordſhip of Terbrennine two miles above
"Thawan mouth, and hither cometh ſometime boats
"and ſhippes to ſocour. Llan Iltuit is three quarters
"of a mile north-weſt into land from this place.
"There is a caſtle almoſt ſtanding on an even ground
"half a mile from Laniltute by eaſt north-eaſt called "Llanvais almoſt all down. It longith now to the L
"king. It was in hominum memoria the Male-in-
"fauntes, then commonly called the Malifauntes[k]."

"From Colehow about a mile beyond upper by "ſouth-weſt on Severn is St. Dinothe's caſtle. It
"ſtandeth on a mean hill a quarter of a mile from "the Severn ſea, in the which ſpace betwixt the "caſtle and the Severn is a park of falow deer.
"There is another park of red deer more by north-"weſt from the caſtle. The parks both and the "caſtle long to Stradeling a gentleman of very fair
"lands in that country[l]."

[x] Groſe. Willis. [y] Willis.
[z] G. [a] Lel. IV. 66, 67. [a] Archæol. II. p. 16. [b] Powel's Chron. of Wales, p. 127.
[c] Harris, Archæol. II. 17. [d] Lel. V. 12. [e] Tan. 713. [f] Groſe.
[g] Wyndham, p. 31. [h] Tanner, 712. [i] Strange in Archæol. VI. p. 22.
[k] Lel. IV. 65. [l] Ib.

Glendower[r]. In a tower, now ruined, 42 feet ſquare ſouth-weſt from the church hung the Peter bell now at Exeter[s].

Ogor caſtle.

"Ogor caſtle ſtands on the eaſt ripe of Ogor, on "a plain ground a mile above the mouth of Ogor, "and is meatly well maintained. It longid ons to "Lounder, now to the king. Half a mile above "Ogor caſtle cometh Wenny river into Ogor by "the eaſt ripe. Newton Notes is a fair village "on the eaſt ripe of Tidur, and there is a ſtation or "haven for ſhips."

Newton Notes.

Ogmore caſtle ſtands in an angle formed by the junction of the rivers Wenny and Ogmore. It was probably built by William de Loudres.

Bridge end.

On the river Ogmore ſeven miles north-eaſt of Cowbridge is Bridge end, a market town, divided by the river into two parts joined by a ſtone bridge.

Allowing the ſubterraneous ſpeculations of Giraldus to have been real, and not the effect of fancy or ſuperſtition, a thouſand accidents may have put an end to them ſince his time. The moſt diligent enquiry of biſhop Gibſon's correſpondent could find nothing. He found indeed ſomething like it in another ſpot, at Wormſhead point, a ſmall point ſo called becauſe the ſailors think it reſembles a worm creeping with its head erect, between the Naſh point and that of St. Goven in Pembrokeſhire. It runs from the main land more than a mile into the ſea, and at half flood the iſthmus which joins it to the ſhore being overflown it becomes a ſmall iſland. Towards the fartheſt point is a ſmall cleft in the ground into which if you throw a handful of duſt or ſand it will be blown back; but if you lay your ear to the cavity you hear diſtinctly the noiſe of a large bellows, occaſioned by the reciprocal motion of the ſea under the arched rocks here forcing out the air alternately. This was obſerved twice in ſummer and calm weather; and a rougher ſea may here produce many other ſounds for a lively fancy. But the Wormſhead ſeems to lie to the weſtward to be miſtaken for Barry iſland.

Wormſhead point.

Barry r.

Barry is the moſt remarkable river next to that of Swanſea for trade in all Gowerland, and its mouth is cloſe to Wormſhead, which is a much later name. We may therefore conjecture Wormſhead to have been called the iſland of Barry, and thus admitting the eaſy miſtake of Barry for Barry, the report concerning theſe noiſes might be, that near Barry or you ſail into Barry there is an iſland producing ſuch and ſuch noiſes.

Mr. Harris[t] for removing Bovium to Boverton, which ſeems the likeſt of ſome great names, ſee or fix none here to be had in the vicinity, leads thence to Eweny. [illegible] was called the lordſhip of Boviarton alſo Boverton. The road hence to Eweny has many ſmall [illegible] particularly the long, which have given [illegible] On the hill above Eweny where the [illegible] the Julia Strata in Mr. Tuberville's [illegible] perfect ſquare camp. Hence the [illegible] Nidum runs on to Neuton Down having the ancient road on the right.

Bovium. Lagwir.

[illegible] a mile from Cowbridge [illegible] jogging to Gloceſter abbey, to which [illegible] Loudres, lord of Ogmore caſtle[u].

Wenny or Ewenny, a Benedictine priory, was founded by ſir John Loudres lord of Ogmore, in 1140, valued at £.87, per annum[x], and was fortified. The church venerable and large, is lofty round and maſſive, the capitals of the pillars and arches round. In the chancel, whoſe roof is arched with groined arches, is a monument aſcribed to Turberville, conqueror of Glamorganſhire, who long inhabited the manſion-houſe, which is ſtrong and has a large hall[y]. Here is another monument of Morice de Londres. Two gateways, and ſome of the walls remain[z].

In the church-yard at Llanilid [illegible] of the church ſtand two remarkable [illegible] cloſe by the church-wall is pyramidal [illegible] feet long, adorned with ancient Britiſh carving, [illegible] as may be ſeen [illegible] of croſſes [illegible] of Wales. It is encompaſſed with three circles [illegible] many equidiſtant compartments, and from [illegible] lowermoſt to the ground is ingrailed or indented, but in other parts adorned with knots. Its circumference at the three higher circles is three feet and an half, at the middle moſt above four, and at the loweſt about five; the top ſeems broken off. On one ſide from top to bottom it has a remarkable furrow or groove about two inches deep and four wide; it ſeems plainly to have been a croſs. The other ſide is alſo elaborately carved, and ſerved as a pedeſtal to a croſs. On one ſide is an inſcription ſhewing that one Samſon erected it for his ſoul. The inſcription on the other ſide ſets forth, that Samſon dedicated it to St. Illud, and that one Samuel was the workman. In the middle of the church are two grave-ſtones engraved in Archæologia, vol. VI. Pl. III. p. 3, 4.

Beſides the remains of the celebrated ſchool founded by St. Illut A. D. 508[a], in which ſo many nobles are ſuppoſed to have been educated, and the ruins of many other buildings, there are ſeveral [illegible] threats in different directions that retain their names, though the houſes on each ſide are deſtroyed. The large old building ſtill retains the name of the [illegible] hall[b].

[illegible] is on the ſhore betwixt W[illegible] the boroughry of Tythegſtone two miles [illegible] Thavan ſouth, and further ſouth forteſts [illegible] and ſhips to ſcour. Llan Illut [illegible] of a mile north-weſt into land from the ſea. "There is a caſtle alſoft ſtanding on a level ground "half a mile from Lantrure by eaſt on a ſmall [illegible] "ſerpent runneth all down. So longeth now to the [illegible] "faunres, then commonly called the Mallenes.

"From Coleſhow about a mile beyond upon the "ſouth-weſt on Severn is St. Dinoth caſtle, [illegible] "Flanders on a much hill a quarter of a mile [illegible] "the Severn ſea, in the which ſpace between [illegible] "the and the Severn is a park [illegible]

"There is another park of red deer [illegible] "well from the caſtle. The park [illegible] "caſtle long to Stradeling a gentleman of very [illegible] "lands in that country[c]."

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Fig. 2. p. 500.

Fig. 1. p. 500.

Fig. 3. p. 500.

Fig. 4. p. 500.

Antient Monuments at Llanilltud

F. Cary sculp.

Fig.1.p.501.

Fig.3.p.502.

Fig.2.p.501.

Fig.8.p.503.

Fig.7.503.

Fig.4.p.503.

Fig.5.p.503

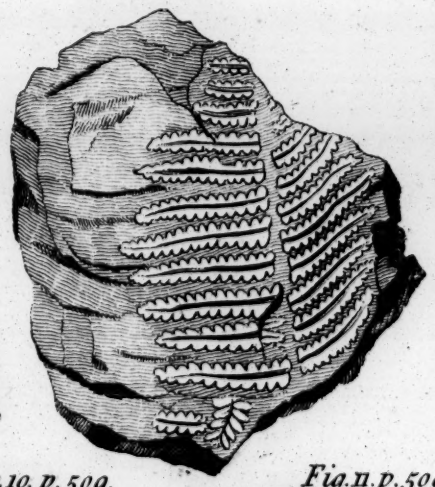

Fig.6.p.503.

Fig.9.p.509.

Fig.10.p.509.

Fig.11.p.509.

Fig.12.p.520.

Fig.16.

Fig.17.

p.571.

Fig.19.

Fig.18.

Fig.13.

Fig.14.

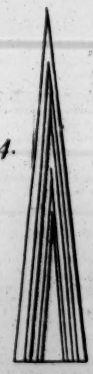

Fig.15.

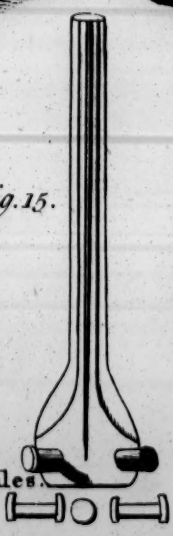

Fig.20.
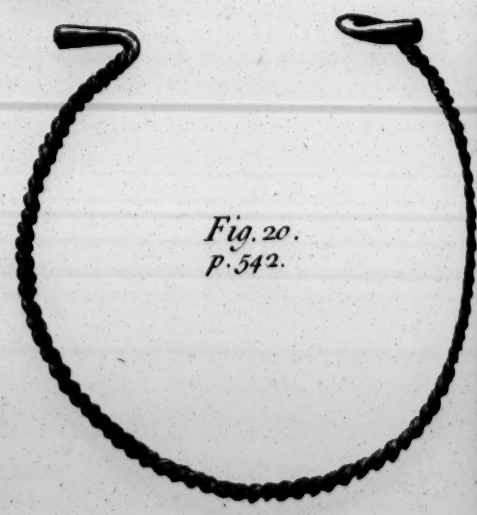
p.542.



Brafs weapons found in North Wales.

F. Cary sculp.

St. Donat's caſtle, defended by a ditch and in ſome places by a triple wall, ſtands on an eminence five miles ſouth-weſt of Cowbridge, and had a park well ſtocked with trees and deer, and gardens with terraces to the Severn. The preſent building ſeems to have been erected by the Stradlings, on the extinction of which family it came to Buſſey Manſel, eſq. 1740. In the park are ruins of a watch-tower for noticing ſhip-wrecks as a prey [m].

Dunraven houſe or caſtle [n] ſtands about nine miles ſouth-eaſt of Cowbridge, on a rocky headland running out a conſiderable diſtance into the ſea and forming a point called by the natives the Witches point. William de Londres gave it to Arnold Butler his ſervant, in whoſe heirs male it continued till it fell to William Vaughan ſiſter's ſon to Arnold the laſt of the Butlers. Of the Vaughans it was purchaſed by the Windhams, and it now belongs to Thomas Windham, eſq of Clearwell, c. Glouceſter. Many parts of the houſe have the appearance of great antiquity, and the whole ſeems to have been built at different periods. Some of the lodging-rooms are made out of what has undoubtedly formerly been a large chapel, and under one of the outhouſes is an arch walled up, ſuppoſed to have been the antient family burial-place. The entrance to the court is by a rude gate with a defaced coat of arms and other ornaments. The ſituation commands many beautiful extenſive proſpects, particularly to the weſt over the ſea which breaks againſt the lofty pictureſque rocks. The waves have formed two caverns known by the name of the Cave and the Windhole; the former a kind of rude piazza worn in the rocks, and entered from the eaſt and ſouth; the other at the end of it is a deep cavern 27 yards deep, ſo called from ſeveral ſpiracles on the top of the cliff at a diſtance from its edge, up which the tide and a freſh ſouth-eaſt wind raiſe a ſtrong air [o].

"From the mouth of Alein to the mouth of Oſcot river is three miles along by ſouth, and this is counted as a lordſhip by itſelf, and it was in Maurice Lowneder's lands in king Henry ad's days. Now it longeth to the king by the dukedom of Lancaſter. In this part of the ſhore is only a water place called Dowrough [ſince the] middle way. It longed alate to Boclare. The laſt Boccler ſiſter married to Richard Vehan of Aberdowrde is now lord of it [p]."

At Llanvithow, three miles from Cowbridge, and probably the ſame with Caerdiffe called, whoſe abbot aſſiſted at a council, A. D. 560, St. Cadoc is ſaid to have founded a monaſtery above 500 [q].

Caradoc, contemporary with Geoffrey of Monmouth, who wrote the hiſtory of Wales from the death of king Cadwallader, was a native of this town. His work was tranſlated into Engliſh by Humphrey Lloyd, and publiſhed with additions by Dr. David Powel 1584, 4to, and by William Wynne 1697, 12mo, 8vo.

The caſtle of Coire ſtands on a plain ground a mile north-eaſt by Peyton, a good market town ſtanding on Ogor. This caſtle is maintained, and ſome ſay that it belonged once to Payne, called from his ruffeling there Diable. Now Gamage is lord of it, and it is his principal houſe." Robert Sidney earl of Leiceſter married Barbara daughter of John Gamage, eſq, lord of Coity, which he had with her [r]. It now belongs to the Edwins [s]. Somewhere hereabouts they pretend to ſhew the ruins of king Caradoc's palace. On a hill cloſe by the church are remains of Old Caſtle, and on an open place at the ſouth weſt end of the town the ſite of New Caſtle.

At Pile in the road to Margam is a ſtrong handſome church with a croſs ſtory entire on its baſe. Pile.

"There is a little village on the eaſt ſide of Kenfik (a ſmall brook) and a caſtle both in ruin, "and almoſt chokid and devourid with the ſandes "that the Severne ſe ther caſtith up. Kenfik was "in the Clares' time a borow town. It ſtandith a "little within the mouth of Kenfik water [t]." It was burnt by the Welſh 1167 [u], and again by Owen Glendowr. Kynfig.

Cynfig caſtle ſtood on a mount about the ſize of a common keep. Scarce any traces remain of its walls ſurrounded by naked ſands [x].

Julia Strata paſſes through the remains of the antient borough of Kynfig, and ſo near Magdalen church and over Sandy Borrows to Margam, perhaps Mairgoh, q. d. Vallis Mariæ, as the church is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and lies in a bottom [y].

"Margan abbey and village ſtandith two miles of "Kenfik by north eaſt. It is the beſt village of "Teryalch, and in it was an abbey of White monkes, "where is a very large and fair church [z]." Margam.

Giraldus [a] calls the monaſtery founded here before 1147, nobile Ciſtercienſis ordinis monaſterium, and ſays that it excelled all others of the ſame order in Wales in the reparation of liberality in relieving the diſtreſſed. In his time one Conin a learned and diſcreet man was abbot. It was founded by Robert earl of Glocester 1147, valued at £.181. 7. Its annals were printed by Mr. Gale inter Script. Ox. 1687, fol. On the ſite of the abbey ſtands the ſeat of Thomas lord Mansell, whoſe grandfather was G created by queen Anne. He died unmarried 1744, and was ſucceeded by his uncle Chriſtopher who died alſo unmarried 1744, and was ſucceeded by his younger brother Baſſy, who dying 1750 without iſſue male the title became extinct. The coheireſs of this family was m. Mr. Talbot of Lacock, to whom it now belongs. The houſe ſeems to be on ſide of the quadrangle ſpoiled. Among the offices is the handſome circular chapter-houſe adjoining with two pointed windows, the roof reſting on a ſingle ſcarce cloiſtered column. Behind it are the cloiſters which joined it to the church, the arches of which have been cloſed. The ſtables and offices retain marks of antiquity in their ſtructure, &c. I ſaw here 1761 the head of an antique ſewer or drain. Pl. XVIII. fig. 1. In the garden under the ſouth ſide of the houſe the coloſſal Orange-tree, where the trees of the number of about 100, the largeſt 50 feet high, and in the thickeſt part of their trunks from 15 to 17 inches in circumference, ſtand in the ground, and near 200 planted round. In the ſheet is a rude ſtatue, part of the pedeſtal remains with knee and the top of the figure. On the top of the hill covered with [illegible] Plan of the ground as it

[m] Caradoc's Hiſt. of Wales.
[n] Tanner, Bibl. Brit. p.
[o] Pembroke, a beautiful large family picture of this lady with
[p] Lel. IV. 68, 69.
[q] Wyndham, p. 32.
[r] Hasted, Archæol. II. 17.
[s] Ib. V. 12.
[t] Leland, l.c.
[u] Wyndham, p. 32.
[x] Ib. VI. 69.
[y] Leland, l.c.
[z] Ib. VI. 69.
[a] Ib. IV. 68.

Fig. 1 p. 501.

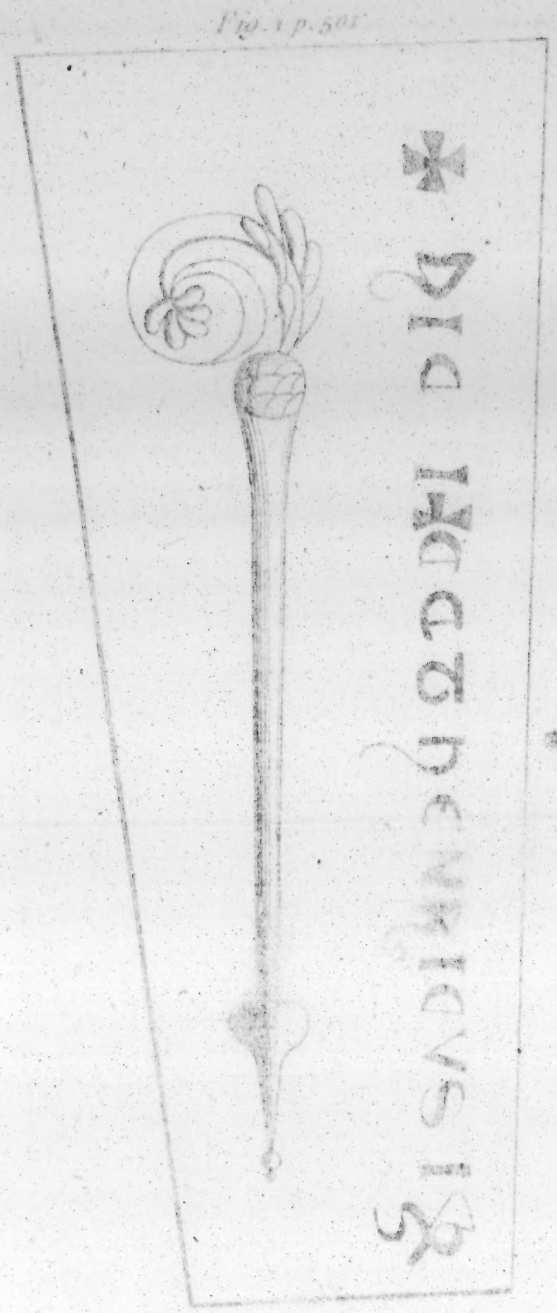

Fig. 3 p. 502.

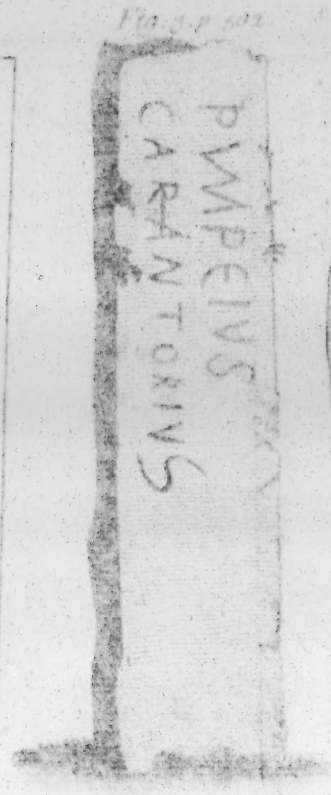

Fig. 2 p. 501.

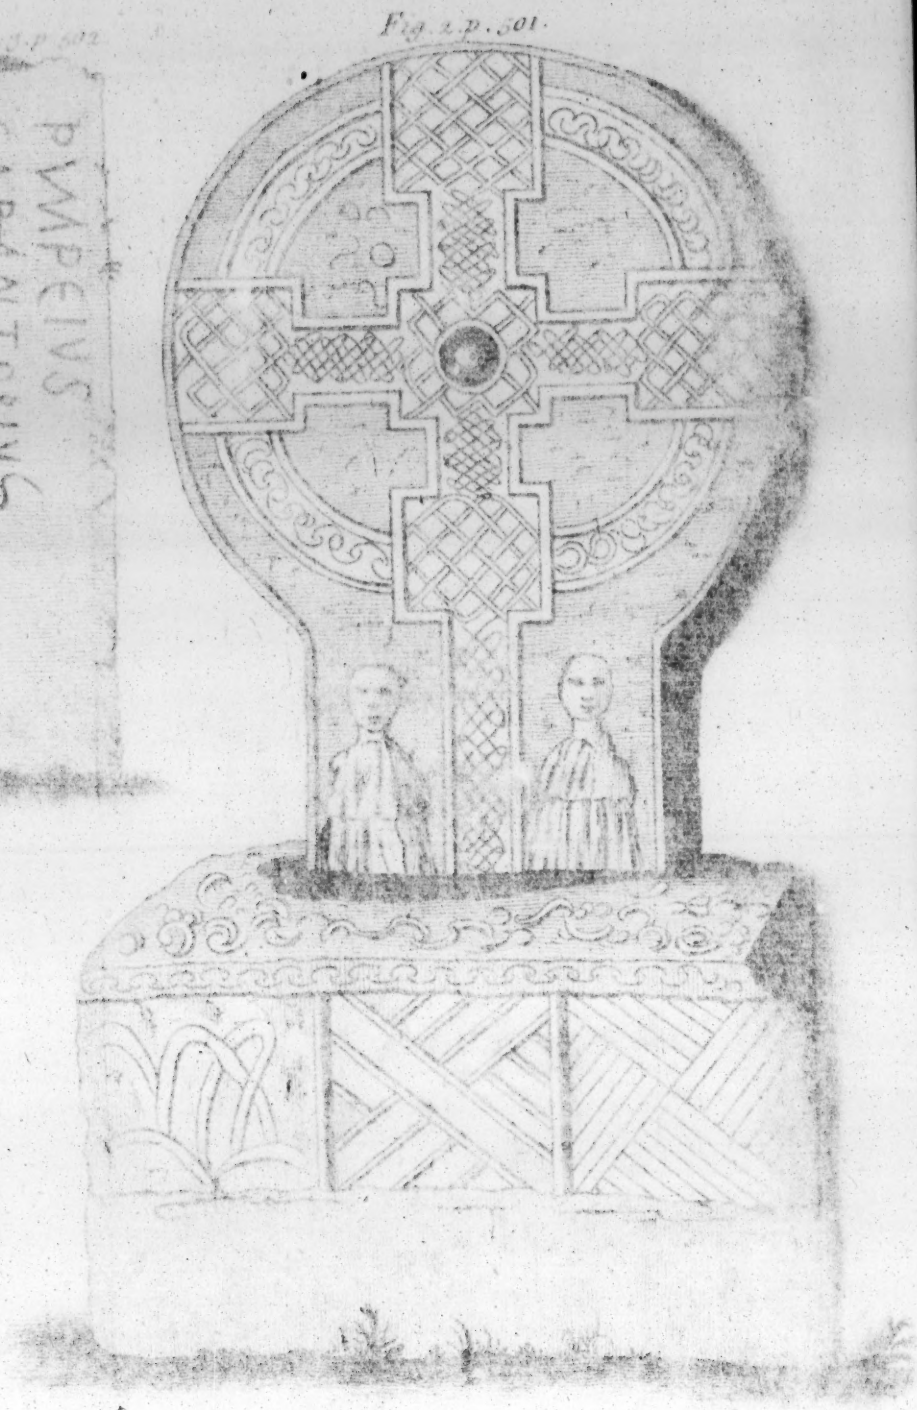

Fig. 4 p. 503.

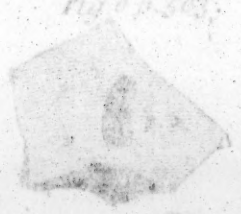

Fig. 5 p. 503.

Fig. 6 p. 503.

Fig. 7 p. 503.

Fig. 8 p. 503.

Fig. 11 p. 504.

Fig. 12 p. 504.

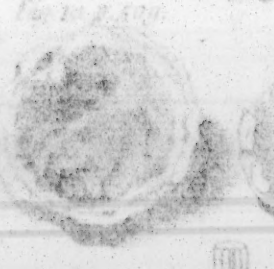

Fig. 13 p. 504.

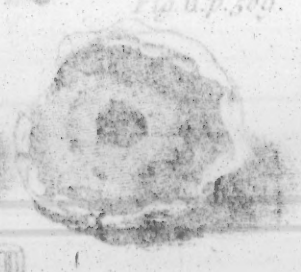

Fig. 14 p. 504.

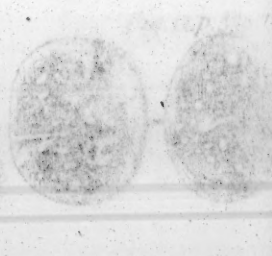

Fig. 16.

Fig. 17.

Fig. 18.

Fig. 15.

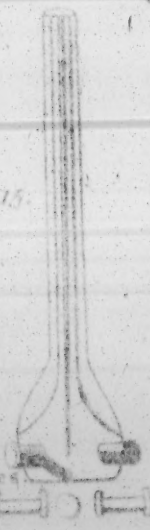

Fig. 20 p. 505.

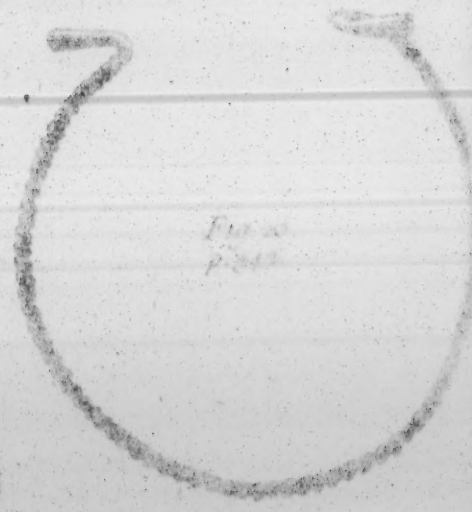

Fig. 19.

Fig. 21.

Brafs weapons found in North Wales.

F. Cary sculp.

St. Donat's caſtle, defended by a ditch and in ſome places by a triple wall, ſtands on an eminence five miles ſouth-weſt of Cowbridge, and had a park well ſtocked with trees and deer, and gardens with terraces to the Severn. The preſent building ſeems to have been erected by the Stradlings, on the extinction of which family it came to Buſſey Manſel, eſq; 1740. In the park are ruins of a watch-tower for noticing ſhip-wrecks as a prey [m].

Dunraven houſe or caſtle [n] ſtands about nine miles ſouth-eaſt of Cowbridge, on a rocky headland running out a conſiderable diſtance into the ſea and forming a point called by the natives the Witches point. William de Londres gave it to Arnold Butler his ſervant, in whoſe heirs male it continued till it fell to William Vaughan ſiſter's ſon to Arnold the laſt of the Butlers. Of the Vaughans it was purchaſed by the Windhams, and it now belongs to Thomas Windham, eſq. of Clearwell, c. Glouceſter. Many parts of the houſe have the appearance of great antiquity, and the whole ſeems to have been built at different periods. Some of the lodging-rooms are made out of what has undoubtedly formerly been a large chapel, and under one of the outhouſes is an arch walled up, ſuppoſed to have been the antient family burial-place. The entrance to the court is by a rude gate with a defaced coat of arms and other ornaments. The ſituation commands many beautiful extenſive proſpects, particularly to the weſt over the ſea which breaks againſt the lofty picturesque rocks. The waves have formed two caverns known by the name of the Cave and the Windhole; the former a kind of rude piazza worn in the rocks, and entered from the eaſt and ſouth; the other eaſtward of it is a deep cavern 77 yards deep, ſo called from ſeveral ſpiracles on the top of the cliff at a diſtance from its edge, up which the tide and a freſh ſouth-eaſt wind raiſe a ſtrong air [o].

"From the mouth of Alein to the mouth of Oxor "river is three miles along by ſouth, and this is "countid as a lordſhip by itſelf, and it was ſir "Maurice Lownder's lands in king Henry 2d's "days. Now it longeth to the king by the duke-"dom of Lancaſter. In this part of the ſhore is "only a maner place called Dounreven about the "middle way. It longid alate to Botelar. The laſt "Boteler ſiſter married to Richard Vehan of Aber-"dowrde is now lord of it [p]."

At Llancarvon, three miles from Cowbridge, and probably the ſame with Carbani vallis, whoſe abbot aſſiſted at a council, A. D. 560, St. Cadoc is ſaid to have founded a monaſtery about 500 [q].

Caradoc, contemporary with Geoffrey of Monmouth, who wrote the hiſtory of Wales from the death of king Cadwallader, was a native of this town. His work was tranſlated into Engliſh by Humyhrey Lluyd, and publiſhed with additions by Dr. David Powel 1684. 4to, and by William Wynne 1697. 1702. 8vo. [r]

"The caſtle of Coite ſtands on a plain ground "a mile north-eaſt by Penbont, a good market "town ſtanding on Ogor. This caſtle is maintained, "and ſome ſay that it belonged once to Payne, called "from his ruffeling there Diable. Now Gamage is "lord of it, and it is his principal houſe [s]." Robert Sidney earl of Leiceſter married Barbara daughter of John Gamage, eſq; lord of Coity, which he had with her [t]. It now belongs to the Edwins [u]. Somewhere hereabouts they pretend to ſhew the ruins of king Caradoc's palace. On a hill cloſe by the church are remains of Old Caſtle, and on an open place at the ſouth weſt end of the town the ſite of New Caſtle.

At Pile in the road to Margam is a ſtrong handſome church with a croſs flory entire on its baſe. Pile.

"There is a little village on the eaſt ſide of Kynfig. "Kenfik (a ſmall brook) and a caſtle both in ruin, "and almoſt chokid and devourid with the ſandes "that the Severne ſe ther caſtith up. Kenfik was "in the Clares' time a borow town. It ſtandith a "little within the mouth of Kenfik water [x]." It was burnt by the Welſh 1167 [y], and again by Owen Glendowr.

Cynfig caſtle ſtood on a mount about the ſize of a common keep. Scarce any traces remain of its walls ſurrounded by naked ſands [z].

Julia Strata paſſes through the remains of the antient borough of Kynfig, and ſo near Magdalen church and over Sandy Burrows to Margam, perhaps Mairgwn, q. d. Vallis Mariæ, as the church is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and lies in a bottom [a].

"Morgan abbey and village ſtandith two miles of Margam. "Kenfik by north-eaſt [b]. It is the beſt village of "Teryalth, and in it was an abbay of White monks [c], "where is a very large and fair church [d]."

Giraldus [e] calls the monaſtery founded here before 1147, nobile Ciſtercienſis ordinis monaſterium, and ſays that it excelled all others of the ſame order in Wales in the reputation of liberality in relieving the diſtreſſed. In his time one Conan a learned and diſcrete man was abbot. It was founded by Robert earl of Gloceſter 1147, valued at £.181. [f]. Its annals were printed by Mr. Gale inter Script. Ox. 1687, fol. On the ſite of the abbey ſtands the ſeat of Thomas lord Manſell, whoſe grandfather was ſo created by queen Anne. He died unmarried 1743, and was ſucceeded by his uncle Chriſtopher who died alſo unmarried 1744, and was ſucceeded by his younger brother Buſſy, who dying 1750 without male iſſue the title became extinct. The coheireſs of this family married Mr. Talbot of Lacock, c. Wilts, to whom it now belongs. The houſe ſeems to be one ſide of the quadrangle rebuilt. Among the offices is the beautiful circular chapter-houſe 50 feet diameter with twelve pointed windows, the roof reſting on a ſingle central cluſtered column. Behind it are the cloiſters which joined it to the church: the arches of whoſe nave are round [g]. The ſtables and offices retain marks of antiquity in their doors, &c. I ſaw here 1761 the tomb of an abbot laid over a drain. Pl. XVIII. fig. 1. In the gardens under the ſouth ſide of the hill is the celebrated Orangery, where the trees to the number of about 100, the largeſt 10 feet high, and in the thickeſt part of their trunks from 15 to 17 inches in circumference, ſtand in the ground, and bear well-flavoured fruit. In the ſtreet is a croſs which, with its pedeſtal, is covered with knots and fretwork, and ſome characters, and near the top two figures. On the top of this hill covered thick with trees, which humour the aſcent as if

See Pl. XVIII. fig. 2.

[m] Groſe. [n] Caradoc's Hiſt. of Wales. [o] Groſe. [p] Lel. IV. 66.
[q] Tan. 712. [r] Tanner, Bibl. Brit. p. 153. [s] Lel. IV. 71.
[t] At Penſhurſt is a beautiful large family picture of this lady with her three ſons and four of her eight daughters.
[u] Groſe. [x] Lel. IV. 66, 67. [y] Ib. VIII. 83.
[z] Wyndham, p. 32. [a] Harris, Archæol. II. 17. [b] Lel. IV. 67.
[c] Ib. 72. [d] Ib. V. 12. [e] I. c. 7. [f] Tan. 713.
[g] Wyndham, p. 33. 35.

cut by art, is the ſtone mentioned by Mr. Camden, well known by the name of Maen Lhythyrog. The inſcription is to be read thus: Bodvocus hic jacit filius Catotis, Irni pronepos, eternalive domau, i. e. eternali in domo. Reineſius[h] gives an inſcription at Niſmes to Boduacus, which he ſays is the Gauliſh way of writing the Roman Betulius. But it ſeems rather an original Gauliſh or Britiſh name, and Boadicea may have the ſame original. Domus æterna is not unfrequent in inſcriptions for a ſepulchre. Æternalis ſeems a corruption of æterna, and occurs in Reineſius[i], as does æterna in the epigram.

Docta lyræ grata & geſtu formoſa puella
Hic jacet æterna Sabis humata domo.

in both inſtances ſynonymous with our long home.

Baidon hill. On Baidon hill, weſt of Margan hill, is a Roman camp, and near it houſes called Bryn a gunnan, q. d. Beginning of the battle; a ſpot called Kevan Rhydvawr, q. d. Sounding to arms; another Gaed Leos, q. d. Gathering of the Army; a third, Maes y cadal Chŵar, q. d. the Defeat. Theſe may relate to ſome of the battles fought between the Silures and the Romans, or the Welſh and Normans. In ſome ſkirmiſh between the two firſt of theſe nations probably was ſlain the perſon commemorated in the ſecond inſcription which is plainly ſepulchral. The ſtone on which it is inſcribed lay as a bridge over a ditch ever ſince Mr. Lluyd copied it for biſhop Gibſon. The rev. Mr. Williams of Margan cauſed it to be ſet up as it now ſtands. I copied it 1761, as in Pl. XVIII. fig. 3.

There is another monument, which Mr. Lluyd thinks more remarkable than either of the preceding, at a place called Panwen Byrdhin, in the pariſh of Cadocſton, or Llan Gadoc, about ſix miles above Neath. It is well known in that part of the county by the name of Maen dau Lygad yr ych, and is ſo called from two ſmall circular intrenchments like cock pits; one of which had lately in its centre a rude ſtone pillar, about three feet high, with this inſcription, to be read downwards.

which Mr. Lluyd reads Marci (or Memoriæ) Caritini filii Berici (or Bericii), and ſuppoſes a duel was fought here, and that each party having previouſly prepared his grave, this ſtone was ſet up over the perſon ſlain. The name being in the ſingular number ſeems to imply there was but one ſtone here, and that is now removed to a gate in the road. But, query, if theſe pits do not reſemble Arthur's round table near Penrith.

On a mountain called Mynydh Gelhi Ounen in Llavo Gynelack pariſh, Mr. Lluyd ſaw a monument which had ſtood in the middle of a ſmall karn or heap of ſtones, but had been thrown down and broken in three or four pieces; differing from all he had ſeen elſewhere. It was a flat ſtone, three inches thick, two feet broad at bottom, and about five feet high. The top was formed round like a wheel, and thence to the baſe it became gradually broader. On one ſide it was carved with more labour than art. The round head was adorned with a kind of flouriſh, or knotted work; below this on each ſide was a man's face and hands; and thence almoſt to the bottom neat fret-work, beneath which were two feet as rude and ill-proportioned as the hands and face. It is ſurpriſing Mr. Lluyd could not ſee that this was evidently a croſs. We ſhall ſee ſuch a ſtone, but without human features at Langholm in Cumberland, and there are ſeveral ſuch in Cornwall; and at St. Burien's one leſs rude, with the wheel at top, and a human figure. That at Penrith had the wheel open. The heap of ſtones at the baſe ſeems paralleled by that at Weſt Lilford in Northumberland, where only the baſe and ſteps of the croſs remained.

Karn Lechart. Not far from hence within the ſame pariſh (continues Mr. Lluyd) is Karn Lechart, a monument which gives name to the mountain on which it is erected. It is a circle of rude flattiſh ſtones, ſuch as are here called Lechen, pitched in a diſorderly manner in the ground, about 17 or 18 yards diameter, the higheſt ſtone now ſtanding not above a yard high. There is but one entrance into the circle, about four feet wide, and in the centre of the area is a kiſtvaen, which is common in many parts of Wales, and like St. Iltyt's cell in Brecnocſhire. This before us is about five feet long, and four feet wide, and its large top ſtone is fallen off. Y Giſtvaen, on Mynnedh Drymmen mountain by Neath, ſeems to have been a ſimilar but ſmaller monument, and the circle about it was formed of maſon's work, as Mr. Lluyd heard from a gentleman who ſaw it intire. Q. if not ſuch an one in Angleſey.

Giraldus, who with his companions was in imminent danger of being ſwallowed up by the quick-ſands of the river Neath, and loſt in them the only ſumpter mule he had, calls them fabuloſi littoris & maris influentis alternæ viciſſitudines. They were forced to wait till the tide was out before they could croſs the Avon. This laſt river flows from the north-eaſt with a very winding courſe parallel to the river Neath, which enters the ſea at Briton ferry, a parcel of houſes, with an exceeding good inn, and the ſeat of —— Manſell, eſq; proprietor of large coal works here. The mouth of the Neath is here very wide, and on the ſouth ſide the ſands come up to great blocks of a kind of iron ſtone, mixt with grit, out of the clefts of which and others detached from the reſt, and forming as it were ſo many iſlands in the rivers mouth grow alders and ſuch kind of aquatic ſhrubs. This river conveys coals and iron from Neath. The road hither from Aberavon lies through Aberavon marſh, a ſandy plain on which the ſea is continually gaining and heaping up pyramids of ſand.

" There is a poor village on the weſt ripe of Avon,
" about two miles from its mouth called Aberaven.
" The grounds about it be barren and ſower. The vil" lage lieth in the great highway through Glamor-
" ganſhire. There is an haven for ſhips at the mouth " of this Avon. From the mouth of Avon to the " mouth of Neth river is about two miles and a half,
" chokid with Severn ſandes and ſome marſh
" grounds[k].

" Neth abbey of white monks a mile above Neth
" town ſtanding alſo in the ripe of Neth. It ſeemed
" to me the faireſt abbay of all Wales[l]."

" The little town and caſtle of Nethe ſtands four " miles from the mouth and on the eaſt ripe of Neth,
" and on the weſt ripe a little lower than the town
" was the abbey. There be coles half a mile above
" the town in a more, and again a little benith the " town. Shiplets come up almoſt to the town from [h] Synt. Inſc. p. 932. [i] Ib. p. 716. [k] Lel. IV. 68. [l] Lel. V. 12. " the

"the Severn, and boats to the timbre bridge, some"what lower on the water than the town. At the "very mouth of Neth, on the east side, is a little "village of three or four houses, called Britanne
"fery to pass to Swansey and Pembrokeshire. One
"Lysan a gentleman of antient stock but now of "mean lands dwelleth in the town of Nethe. The "Lysans say there family was there in fame afore
"the Conquest [m]." The landscape about Britan ferry exceedingly rich [n].

Neath is a large town, but overhung by the smoke of forges and coal works. The abbey, which seemed to Leland the fairest abbey of all Wales, founded for White Monks by Richard Granville, valued at £.132. per annum [o], stood on the east side of the river, not quite a mile from the town, and shews the shell of its church, built of rough stone, with lancet windows, which formed the north side of a quadrangle. The abbey house, or what succeeded it, is now converted into copper forges. The gates, hall, and gallery remain, and on the front of a contiguous room were in stone the arms of England and of John of Gaunt, and three chevrons quartering three horsemen's rests, Granville. In this abbey the unfortunate Edward II. sheltered himself till he was taken [p]. The castle on the opposite side of the river is a square building entered by a lofty arch. In the VIII. coal pits near this town they find the fossile plants,
6, 7. which are chiefly fern, reeds, and small flowers like daisies: they lie in the uppermost strata, which are very flaky, and resemble slate.

Swansea is a pleasant well built sea port on the river Tawi, which must be forded or ferried over to come at it. The town makes a handsome appearance from the approach to it, built on a semicircular rising bank near Tawey mouth, populous, with wide streets, a considerable trade in coals, pottery, and copper [q]. The castle, now the goal and workhouse, and burnt by Griffin prince of South Wales soon after its erection, was probably built by Henry earl of Warwick, when he fortified the town, of which one has a fine bird's eye view from a high round tower at one end. The market place is said to be covered with the lead of St. David's cathedral, given by Cromwell to a gentleman of this town. The old mansion of the lords of the manor built round a quadrangle is converted into a malthouse and stables. Over the gate the arms of William earl of Pembroke, t. Henry VIII. quartering sir George Herbert, lord of Swansea. Here was an hospital founded by bishop Gower 1332, valued at £.21. per annum [r]. Here is a very good harbour and dock, and a great trade in coals and culm.

r. "Lochor river parteth Kidwelli lordship from West
"Gower land [s]." Ward places LEUCARUM at Glastonbury in this county [t].

Logher, or Lwchur [u], eight miles from Neath, is a poor village on the river of the same name, which at low water is fordable for a considerable breadth. It has the shell of a square castle [x], fortified by a double trench. The antient church and part of the town are supposed to have stood nearer the river on the other side of the castle. Upon the north-west point of Kevyn bryn, the most noted hill in Gower, is a vast stone of alabaster, 20 tun weight, supported by six or seven others, about four feet high, and set in a circle, some on end, some edgewise. They are all like the rest of the mount of the mill-stone kind, and from the largest have been broken off several fragments for mills. The common people call this stupendous cromlech Arthur's stone, ascribing the fixing it as every other effort of extraordinary strength to that hero. Under it, if we may credit the tradition of the neighbourhood, is a well which ebbs and flows with the sea [y]. The duke of Beaufort is now lord paramount of Gowerland.

Llangennith. Robert de Bellomont, earl of Warwick, is said to have conquered Gowerland, and founded a priory at Llangennith, dedicated to St. Kenned [z].

Cungar, or Docuin, is said to have founded about A. D. 474. a monastery for 12 monks, or canons, dedicated to the Trinity, and endowed by Paulentus king of Glamorganshire [a].

Morelay castle. "Morelay castle stands in a good valley for corn "and grass on the ripe of Morelay brook. It is in "ruin, and longeth to the king [b]." Among its ruins Mr. Strange discovered an intire circular room, 30 feet diameter, the sides adorned with 12 flat arches for the doors and windows, and the roof supported by a central pillar like the chapter house at Margam. This room, which is one of the greatest curiosities on this side the country, is so buried by the ruins that there is scarce any appearance of it above ground [c].

Oystermouth castle. Oystermouth castle is finely situated on an eminence near the sea, five miles south-west of Swansea. It belonged to the lords of Gower, and now to the duke of Beaufort. "There is in Gowerland betwixt Swansey
"and Lochor a little promontory called Wormshead,
"from the which to Caldey is commonly called Sinus
"Tinbechicus [d]." On an eminence by this point stands Webley castle. Webley castle late belonging to the lord Mansel.

Pennarth castle. Pennarth castle stands in Oxwich bay, eight miles south-west of Swansea, and with its lordship passed from the lords of Gower to the duke of Beaufort.

Penrise. Penrise, a market town, has another strong castle near the west side of this bay, and came from the Penrises to the Mansels, and their representatives the Talbots.

Lords of Glamorgan. Edward Somerset lord Herbert of Chepstow, Ragland and Gower obtained of Charles I. 1645, the title of earl of Glamorgan in the life-time of his father marquis of Worcester. See the succession at the end of Worcestershire [e]. He died 1667 and was buried at Ragland, but the patent was cancelled 1660.

[m] Lel. IV. 68.
[n] Wyndham, p. 36.
[o] Tan. 714.
[p] Walsingh. p. 124.
[q] Wyndham, p. 36, 37.
[r] Tan. 714.
[s] Lel. V. 24, 25.
[t] Horsley, 464.
[u] British Kas Lychwr. Lluyd.
[x] Larger than Neath. Harris.
[y] Lluyd in Gibson.
[z] Tanner, 714. Dugd. Bar. I. 69.
[a] Tan, 712.
[b] Lel. IV. 57.
[c] Archæologia I. 500.
[d] Lel. V. 25.
[e] G. Sandford, p. 357.

Rare Plants found in Glamorganshire.

Adiantum capillis veneris. True Maidenhair; on rocks and moist walls: at Barry island and Porth Kerig.

Polypodium vulgare γ Cambricum. Jagged Polypody; on a rock in a wood near Dennys Powis castle not far from Caerdiff.

DIMETÆ.

DIMETÆ.

West Wales. THE reſt of this country, which extends farther weſt, is called by the Engliſh Weſt Wales, and comprehends the counties of Caermarden, Penbrok, and Cardigan. Pliny ſuppoſed it to have been occupied by the Silures; but Ptolomy, who was better acquainted with Britain, places here another people, whom he calls DIMETÆ and DEMETÆ *, and both Gildas and Ninnius uſe the name of DEMETIA for this country; whence the Britiſh inhabitants call it at preſent [a] Difed, by a change of M into F common to their language.

If it would not appear falſe curioſity, I ſhould be for deducing this name of the Demetæ from Deheu Meath, q. d. the Plain to the ſouth [b], as the Britans themſelves called all this South Wales Deheubarth, or the ſouth part, and the inhabitants of any other champain country in Britain Meatæ. Nor is the ſituation of the country at all againſt this derivation, the mountains as one approaches it gently ſloping down to a plain.

* Horſley agrees with Camden in the ſituation of the Demetæ, p. 368.

[a] Dyved.

[b] There is no ſuch word as Meath for a champain country, either in the antient or modern Britiſh language, nor is this county deſcribed as ſuch. It is more probable the Romans made the name Dimetæ out of Dyved. Lluyd in Gibſon.

CAERMARDENSHIRE.

THE county of Maridunum [a], called by the Engliſh Caermardenſhire, produces plenty of corn, abounds with flocks, and yields tolerable quantity of coal. It is bounded on the eaſt by Glamorgan and Brecknockſhires, on the weſt by Penbrookſhire, on the north by Cardiganſhire, from which it is parted by the river Tivy, and on the ſouth by the ocean, which forms ſo great a bay inland, that this county ſeems to have withdrawn itſelf for fear of it.

Kidwelly. On this bay firſt preſents itſelf Kidwelly, whoſe territory was a long time poſſeſſed by the ſons of Keianus the Scot till driven out by Cuneda [b] the Briton. It is now become the property of the houſe of Lancaſter, by the heirs of Maurice de Londres, who, invading it from Glamorganſhire, after a troubleſome war made himſelf maſter of it, and fortified the old town of Kidwelly with walls and a caſtle, which is now deſerted and decaying with age. For the inhabitants croſſing the little river Vendraeth Vehan [c] built new Kidwelly, invited by the commodiouſneſs of the harbour, which is now, however, almoſt choaked up with ſandbanks. When Maurice invaded theſe parts Guenlian, wife of prince Gryffin, a woman of uncommon intrepidity, in order to recover her huſband's declining affairs, fell furiouſly on Maurice, but was ſlain in battle with her ſon Morgan, and other noble perſonages, as Giraldus [d] relates. By Hawis, daughter and heireſs of Thomas de Londres, this fine eſtate came with the title of lord Ogmor and Kidwelly to Patric Chaworth, and by his ſon Patrick's daughter to Henry earl of Lancaſter. But the heirs of Maurice de Londres were, as an old inquiſition ſets forth, "bound for this eſtate whenever the king, or his chief juſtice came into theſe parts of Kidwelly with an army to conduct the ſaid army with its banners and all its train through the middle of the country of Neth to Loghor." A few miles below Kidwelly, the river Tovy, which Ptolomy calls TOBIUS [e], falls at length into the ocean, after croſſing this country from north to ſouth, firſt by Lanandiffry [f], ſo called, I believe, from the confluence of rivers, and deſtroyed by Hoel ap Rhys, out of hatred to the Engliſh. Thence by Dinevor, a royal caſtle of the princes of South Wales in their proſperity, ſituated on the top of a high mountain; then by Caer-Marden, which the Britans call Caer Firdhin [g], Ptolomy MARIDVNVM [h], Antoninus MVRIDVNVM; beyond which his Itinera are not continued, his work having here been greatly injured by tranſcribers, who have ſtrangely confounded the two Iters from Galena to Iſca, and from Maridunum to Viroconium [i]. This is the principal town of the whole county, pleaſantly ſituated among meads and woods, conſiderable for its antiquity, "nobly fortified with brick walls, part of which are yet ſtanding, ſays Giraldus, upon the noble river Towy," which is navigable by ſmall veſſels, though there has been for ſome time a bar of ſand at its mouth. Here was born the Britiſh Tages, our Merlin: for as that

The heroine Gwenliana.

[a] Kaer Vyrdin. Lluyd.
[b] Kynêdhav. L.
[c] Gwendraerh Vechan. L.
[d] It. I. c. 9,
[e] So Horſley, 376.
[f] Lhan ym Dhyvri. L.
[g] Caer Vyrdhin. L.
[h] So Horſley, 372.
[i] Viroconovium. L.

ſon

ſon of a genius antiently taught his countrymen the Etruſcans ſoothſaying, ſo this ſon of an incubus invented for our Britans prophecies or rather phantaſtical dreams; for which the ignorant credulous vulgar in this iſland account him a famous prophet. On the entrance of the Normans into Wales this town fell into their hands, but under whoſe conduct I know not; and long ſtruggled with many difficulties, being often attacked, and more than once burnt, firſt by Griffin ap Rhys, then by Rhys the ſame Gryffin's brother, at which time Henry Turbervill of England relieved the caſtle, and cut down the bridge. It was afterwards reſcued from theſe miſeries by the aſſiſtance of Gilbert de Clare, who repaired its walls and the neighbouring caſtles, and being freed from apprehenſions it more eaſily ſuſtained the ſucceeding ſhocks of war in future. The Princes of Wales, eldeſt ſons of the kings of England, have here their Chancery and Exchequer for South Wales.

To this town on the eaſt adjoins Cantred Bichan, q. d. the Leſſer hundred (the Britans giving the name of Cantred to a diſtrict containing 100 villages) in which beſides the ruins of caſtle Careg on a ſteep craggy rock, and ſeveral large pits or cavities now overgrown with freſh turf, which in war time ſerved as retreats to the weaker part of the people, is alſo according to Giraldus "a ſpring which twice in a "day is dry and as often overflows like the ſea "tides."

On the north ſtretches away Cantred Maur, q. d. the Great hundred, antiently a ſafe retreat for the Britans, being covered with woods, craggy, and the roads impracticable among the hills. On the ſouth are the caſtles of Talcharn and Llan-Stephan[k] on the cliffs, witneſſes of the valor both of the Engliſh and Welſh. Below Talcharn the river Taf runs into the ſea; on whoſe banks ſtood formerly the famous Tŷ Gwin ar Taf or the white houſe on the Taf, built of white hazel rods for a ſummer reſidence, where A. D. 914 Hoel ſurnamed the Good, prince of Wales, held an aſſembly, whereat aſſiſted 140 eccleſiaſtics beſides others, and abrogating the antient laws he enacted new ones for his people as the preamble to theſe laws ſets forth. On this ſpot was afterwards built a monaſtery called White Land. Not far from it is Kilmayn Lhoyd, where the country people lately found an earthen pot containing a great quantity of Roman coins of baſe ſilver, from the time of Commodus the firſt Roman emperor that debaſed the ſilver, to the 5th tribuneſhip of Gordian III. or A. D. 243. Among them were ſome of Helvius Pertinax, M. Opellius, Antoninus Diadumenianus, Julius Verus Maximus ſon of Maximinus, Cælius Balbinus, Clodius Pupienus, Aquilia Severa wife of Elagabalus, and Salluſtia Barbia Orbiana, which are highly valued by antiquaries for their ſcarcity.

Taf river.
Tŷ Gwyn.
White Land abbey.
Kilmaen Lhoyd.

I muſt juſt obſerve that on the river Tivy, which divides this ſhire from Cardiganſhire, ſtands New Caſtle as now called, rebuilt by Rhys ap Thomas, a great warrior, who aſſiſted Henry VII. in gaining the crown, and was by him rewarded with the honor of the garter. It was before called Elmelin, which name if given it by the Engliſh from Elms, they are not out in their conjecture who ſuppoſe it the LOVENTIVM Dimetarum of Ptolemy, Llwiffen[l] ſignifying Elms in Britiſh.

Tivi r.
New Caſtle.
LOVENTIVM.

As I cannot diſcover from hiſtory who of the Normans firſt wreſted this country from the princes of Wales, the order of my deſign calls me now to Pembrookſhire.

This ſhire contains 87 pariſhes.

[k] Llanſtefan and Talcharn counties on the ſea cliffs fell an eaſy prey to Rhys ap Gryffyd after the death of Henry II. the garriſons deſpairing of relief. (Gir. I. 9.)
[l] Llowyven. L.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Caermarthen is 35 miles long by 20 miles broad, and 102 in circumference, contains ſix hundreds, eight market towns, and 87 pariſhes. It was reckoned the ſtrongeſt part of all South Wales, being full of high mountains, great woods, and fair rivers: and in it were atchieved ſome of the nobleſt acts that the Britiſh hiſtory treats of [a]. The air is reckoned milder and more healthy than that of the neighbouring counties, and the ſoil more fruitful; ſo that it is well ſupplied with proviſions, and at a cheap rate. Coals alſo and lime are extremely plentiful. Gentlemen's ſeats ſtand thick about Caermarthen, eſpecially on the north and north-weſt ſides, where the country is beautifully wooded and hilly. The ſame landſcape preſents itſelf on the north ſide of the Tave and Towy, quite to the bottom of the dreary hills about Newcaſtle Emlyn, and all along the road from the town of Caermarthen to Brecknockſhire.

Kidwelly. "Kidwely, otherwiſe Cathweli, i. e. Cattilectus, is "a litle town now but newley made between Ven- "draeth vawr and Vendraith vehan rivers, but hard "upon Vendraith vehan. Vendraith vawr is half "a mile off. There is between New and Old Kid- "welly but a bridge over little Wendrath. The old "town is prettily walled, and hath hard by the "wall a caſtle, and three gates, over one of them "the ruin of a town hall, and under it a priſon. "The old town is nere all deſolated, but the caſtle "is metely well kept up, It longgid to the duke of "Lancaſter, is very fair, and double walled. Alice "de Londres, wife of ..... duke of Lancaſter, lay "in the caſtle, and repaired it, and it was again re- "paired againſt the coming of Henry VII. into "Wencelande. In the new town, which is three "times as big as the old, is only a church of our "lady, and by is the cell of black monks of Shir- "burne. Ther the prior is parſon of our lady church [b]." The priory of black monks was founded by Roger biſhop of Saliſbury 1130, a cell to Sherburn abbey, valued at £. 22. [c] "Since the haven of Vendraith Vehan "decayed the new town is ſorely decayed, and Caer- "marthen increaſed [d]." The intire ſhell of the caſtle ſtands on a high ground on the north-weſt ſide of the river, and appears to have been very extenſive. The church on the other ſide of the river in the preſent town has a lofty ſpire and two ruined tranſepts, and large piles of ruins at its weſt end. This town is twelve miles from Lwchwr in Glamorganſhire by a different road, a long ford at the mouth of the river, and ſo along the ſands by Penbre a ſmall village with a large church, and a little lordſhip belonging to Kidwelli land, two miles ſouth-eaſt from it [e].

"Vendraith Vaur and Vendraith Vehan riſith both "in Eſkenning commote, the leſs an eight miles "from Kidwelly, the other about 10 [e], and goith "into the ſe about a mile below the town, only a "little neſch of ſand dividing their mouth [f]."

Llanethli. "At Llanethli, a village of Kidwelli lordſhip, ſix "miles from Kidwelli, the inhabitants dig coles, els "ſcant in Kidwely land. Ther be ii maner of thes "coles; ring coles for ſmith be blowed and waterid; "ſtone coles be ſumtime waterid, but never blown, "for blowing extinguiſheth them. So that Vendraith "Vawr coles be ſtone coles, Llanethle coles ring "coles [g]. In Kidwelli is little wood, but in the "very little foreſt of Kidwelli, within a mile of the "town, on Vendraith Vehan towards the ſe ſide in "Kidwelli land is good corn [h]."

Some place at Kidwelli the battle which Bede ſays was fought at Catgwaloph between Aurelius Ambroſius and Vortigern, A. D. 458.

"Towe riſith four miles ſouth from Llintyve, and Tow "runs 22 miles eer he come to Llanamdevery [i]."

Llanimdovery, 13 miles from Caermarthen, is a neat Llan- town on the river Towy, of which, as well as of dove the town, we have a beautiful view opening from the end of the road which lies between hedgerows. It has a handſome ſtone bridge over the river, which in ſummer is almoſt dry, and two ſides of a ſmall caſtle on a mount with one trench at the back of the town. The pariſh church ſtands at a little diſtance on a hill, at the eaſt end of which have been found Roman bricks, &c. In Leland's time it had but one ſtreet, and that poorly builded of thatcht houſes, and a poor market much ſtanding by repears that carry fiſh from Caermarthen to the lower parts of Wales. One church within and another four miles out of the town [k]. The caſtle hath on one ſide Brane river, on the other Every brook.

Llandilovaur, "a lordſhip of the biſhop of St. Llan- "David's, a mile from Dinevor [l]," is a conſiderable en. market town, pleaſantly ſituated on a riſing ground on the river Towy, over which it has a handſome ſtone bridge. The pariſh is 13 miles long, and ſeven or eight broad. There are two good inns in the town, and a very good one called the New Inn a mile off. The deciſive battle between Edward I. and Llewellin is ſuppoſed to have been fought here [m]. A mile further on the ſummit of a woody hill which commands an extenſive and delightful proſpect, and is hid with beautiful woods, ſtand the poor remains of Dinevaur caſtle, built by prince Din- Rhys ap Theodore, t. William the Conqueror, who caſt removed hither from Caermarthen the reſidence of the princes of South Wales, whoſe kingdom took its name from it [n]. It is circular, fortified with a double moat and rampart, and on the left ſide of the aſcent is an outwork with a lodge whoſe arch fell down about 20 years ago. On the ſouth ſide of the caſtle they ſhew the ruins of the chapel between two round towers, and on the eaſt ſide a dungeon at bottom of a ruined tower. The view from the walls to the north and weſt preſents a country diſpoſed into agreeable landſcapes, and on a leſſer hill Druſ- Dr wllyn or Dryſton caſtle, whoſe name imports a place of difficult acceſs and defiles [o], belonged to the antient princes of this county, but is now a ſmall heap of ruins. Dinevaur caſtle ſtands in a park belonging to George Rhys, eſq; a lineal deſcendant of theſe princes. His ſeat called Newton, built as ſuppoſed Ne of brick, with ſmall vaulted roofs and earthen floors, at the time the ſovereignty ceaſed in the family, was [a] Price's Deſcription of Wales, p. xix. [b] Lel. It. V. p. 12. 24. [c] Tanner, 701.

[d] Lel. V. 24. [e] Lel. Ib. [f] Ib. 25. [g] Ib. [h]
[i] Lel. V. 79. [k] V. 73. [l] Lel. V. 23.
[m] Wyndham, p. 46. [n] Lloyd's Brev. of Britain [o] Lel. V. 22. 74. Wyndham, 52.

rebuilt

rebuilt by his grandfather, but very lately caſed and modernized. The eſtate being ſeized by one of our kings on a falſe charge of treaſon, only this caſtle and the lands about it were reſtored. The ruin of the caſtle was compleated in the late civil wars by a third battery after two had been erected without ſucceſs. Near Dinevaur Giraldus mentions a ſpring dry and filled twice a day. He adds, that the artifice of a prieſt ſaved this caſtle from being taken by Henry II.[p] Here was ſometime a long ſtreet, now ruinous[q]. The ſcenery around this caſtle is very beautiful, conſiſting of a rich profuſion of wood and lawn. The woods, which are clumped with great beauty, conſiſt chiefly of the fineſt oak, ſome of them of large Spaniſh cheſnuts, and a few young plantations[r].

Caraigcennin caſtle three miles from Dinevaur, occupies ſcarce an acre of ground on the point of an inſulated rock inacceſſible on three ſides, four miles eaſt from Llandilovawr. Mr. Wyndham[s] compares its ſituation to one deſcribed by Salluſt[t]. Inſtead of a gateway as uſual between two towers in front, the approach to it from the eaſt is by a ſtrong covered way on the brink of the rock leading to the gate on the ſouth ſide. In this caſtle is an extraordinary well, 150 feet deep, deſcended to not perpendicularly but by a large winding cave bored through the ſolid rock, from ſix to twelve feet wide; an arched paſſage 84 feet long on the northern edge of the precipice leads along the outſide of the caſtle to the opening, but the well contains very little water. At the foot of the rock were lately ploughed up 150 coins of Elizabeth and Charles I. Rhys Fychan 1248 won this caſtle from the Engliſh, to whom his mother had privately delivered it[u]. It was given by Henry VII. to ſir Rice ap Thomas, whoſe grandſon forfeited it; and it was given to Richard Vaughan, earl of Carbery.

Caermarthen, nine miles from Kidwelly, is a populous well-built market and borough town, though its trade has been greatly reduced by the violence of party. The caſtle ſtood on a ſteep rock commanding the river Towy. The gate, which is all that remains of it, is uſed as the county gaol. No part of the town walls remains, except the eaſt gate. The church is a large building without the town, and further eaſt in the ſuburbs are ſome remains of the priory of black canons, founded before 1148, valued at £. 164. per annum[x], down in Leland's time[y], delightfully ſituated on the river Gwily, on the oppoſite ſide of which is a range of well wooded hills following its courſe till it falls into the Towy, over which laſt river is a beautiful but narrow ſtone bridge. Here was alſo a houſe of Grey friars, cell to Briſtol[z].

Merlin, or, as the Britiſh writers call him Merdhin Emrys, flouriſhed A. D. 480. The firſt of our hiſtorians who mentions him is Nennius[a], who ſuppoſes him to have been called Embreys Gleutic. He ſays nothing of his fabulous diabolical birth; but tells us expreſsly that his mother [being a nun in a nunnery there, whoſe ſite was ſhewn to Leland[b]], was afraid of owning his father, leſt ſhe ſhould be put to death, but that the boy confeſſed to king Vortigern that his father was a Roman. He adds that Vortigern's meſſengers found him ad campum Electi in regione quæ vocatur Gleviſing, which by no means fixes his birth to this place. All our monkiſh writers make him either a prophet or a magician. But H. Lluyd[c] repreſents him as a man of extraordinary learning and prudence for the time he lived in, and that his ſkill in mathematics gave riſe to certain fables which were tranſmitted in writing to poſterity[d]. All we know of the writings aſcribed to him are certain prophecies[e].

They ſhew a grove called Merlin's on a hill about a mile from Caermarthen, and near it a cave and ſpring or ſmall lake. To this cave Spenſer[f] alludes, but places it among the woody hills of Dinevawr.

> It is a hideous hollow cave-like bay,
> Under a rock that lies a little ſpace
> From the ſwift Barry tumbling down apace
> Emongſt the woody hills of Dinevawr.

Caermarthen gave title of marquis to Thomas Osborn, earl of Danby, ſo created 1674, 26 Charles II. and advanced to the more honourable title of duke of Leeds 1694, 6 William and Mary, which is ſtill enjoyed by his grandſon Thomas, third and preſent duke, whoſe eldeſt ſon Thomas had the additional title of baron Oſborne of Kiveton conferred on him 1777.

Morlaſh.

"Marleis (q. Morlaſhe) broke maketh no grete "courſe, but coming through the park that he "givith name onto goith into Tewi. In Marleis "parke is a well favorid ſtone place motid, new "mendid and augmentid bi ſir Rheſe ap Thomas. "There now dwellith Thomas ap Jonys an eſquier[g]."

"Coming from Abremarlais, two miles towards "Cairmardine, I ſaw on the right hand about three "miles off, the deſolate priory of White canons "communely called Talley[g]." This houſe was founded for Premonſtratenſes by Rheſe ſon of Griffith prince of South Wales, who died 1197. At the diſſolution it had eight canons, and was valued at £. 36. 9s. 7d.[h]

Towy r. Llanſtefan caſtle.

"Towe river at Llanſtufan caſtle comes into the "Severn ſe, which at full water beats on the point of "Llanſtufan. It is five miles from Caermardine, "and about four miles above Llanſtufan on the ſame "ripe is a place or cliff called Grene caſtle, wherein "ſhips uſe to lye at ancre[i]." It is alſo called Caſtle Mole, and ſuppoſed the Humfreys caſtle of Dr. Powel[k], and built by Uchtred prince of Merioneth 1138. Grene caſtle.

Returning from Dinevawr into the road a noble ſcene opens before you. It is a diſtant view of a grand circular part of the vale of Towi (circular at leaſt in appearance), ſurrounded by hills one behind another, and forming a vaſt amphitheatre. Through this expanſe (which is rich to profuſion with all the objects of cultivation melted together into one maſs by diſtance), the Towy winds in various meanders. The eye cannot trace the whole ſerpentine courſe of the river, but ſees it here and there in glittering ſpots, which gives the imagination a pleaſing employment in making out the whole. The neareſt hills partake of the richneſs of the vale; the diſtant hills, which riſe gently above the others, ſeem barren[l].

Lacharne caſtle.

"Lacharne caſtle, at the mouth of Tave, which "a litle lower goith into Tewe. It longid ſometime "the earl of Northumberland[m]."

St. Clere.

Ten miles from Caermarthen is the town of St. Clere, now conſiderable only for a good inn. It had in Giraldus's time[n] a caſtle, whoſe ruins Leland[o] ſaw hard by the church, and an alien Cluniac priory founded before 1291, but ſuppreſſed 20 Henry VI. and given to All Souls College, Oxford[p].

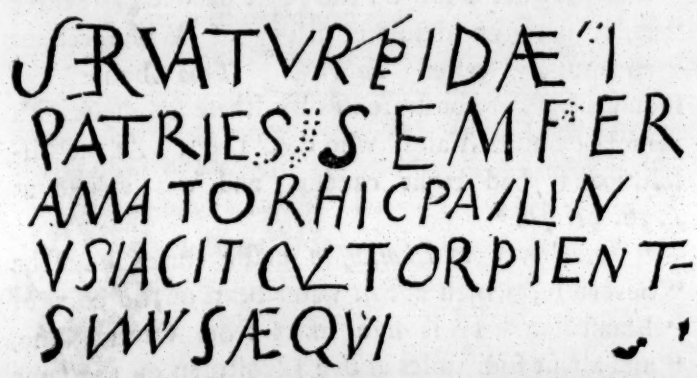
[p] I. 9. [q] Lel. V. 22. 73. [r] Gilpin, ubi ſup. p. 62, 63. [s] Tour, p. 48.
[t] Bello Jug. c. 92. [u] Wyndham, Ib. p. 47. 51. Leland calls it Kerikennen, V. 22. [x] Tan. 702.
[y] V. 23. [z] Tan. 703. [a] Eulog. Brit. c. 42. &c. [b] De ſcript. in art.
[c] Com. Brit. deſcript. p. 65. [d] Tanner Bib. Brit. in art. [e] Fairy Queen, III. 5.
[f] Lel. It. V. 73. [g] It. V. 23. 73. Collect. I. 45. [h] Tan. 702. [i] Lel. V. 25.
[k] p. 106. [l] Gilpin, p. 65. [m] Lel. V. 22. [n] I. 10. [o] V. 22. [p] Ib. 12. Tan. 703.

About

Abergwilly.

About two miles north-eaſt of Caermarthen, in Diffrin Towe, is Abergwily, which had once a collegiate church of 14 prebends longing to St. David[q], tranſlated to Brecon by Henry VIII. and here is now the only habitable palace belonging to the biſhop of St. David's. Leland ſays the collegiate church of was tranſlated hither for vitiating a maid, the canons being either killed or fleeing for it[r]. Bec, biſhop of St. David's, made this church collegiate for 22 prebends, 4 prieſts, 4 choriſters, and 4 clerks. Biſhop Gower, 1334, augmented it, but Henry VIII. annexed it to his new college at Brecknoc. It was valued at £. 42. per annum.[s]

The caverns mentioned by Mr. Camden in Cantred mawr are ſuppoſed to have been copper mines worked by the Romans. The place where they are is called Kaio (Q. if Kynvil Gaio four miles from Caermarthen, where 3000 coins of Allectus, &c. were found[t]), and as Caer Gai in Merionethſhire was a Roman ſtation, and the places whoſe names terminate in i or io as Bod Vari, Kevn Korvyni, Lhannio, Keidio, Kaio, are ſuppoſed to have been viſited by the Romans, the above conjecture receives additional confirmation[u]. Mr. Saunders alſo of Jeſus college, Oxford, communicated to biſhop Gibſon the following inſcription, which he copied from two ſtones at a place called Pant y polion in this pariſh. The firſt belonging to one Paulinus, whence undoubtedly the place takes its name, lay on the ground acroſs a gutter.



The other, which ſeems to be of ſomewhat later date, was about a yard in height and pitched on end.

Whether Odin in the ſeveral names of places in this neighbourhood be from the ſame Advent or Adven, whoſe monument this was, or ſome other origin, is recommended to the obſervation of the inhabitants. Certain it is there are more of them hereabouts than in all Wales beſides, as Galht yr Oding Pant yr Odin, &c.

"I cannot, ſays Mr. Lluyd, conjecture, what might be the original ſignification of the word Tav, but it may be worth our obſervation that the moſt noted rivers in South Wales ſeem to have been thence denominated. For beſides that there are three or four rivers of that name, the firſt ſyllable of Tawy, Towy, Teivi, and Dyvi, ſeems to me only ſo many different pronunciations of it: and for the latter ſyllable I have already obſerved in Radnorſhire that it only denotes a river or perhaps water. Nor would it ſeem to me very abſurd if any ſhould derive the name of the river Thames from the ſame original. For ſince we find it pretty evident that the Romans changed Dyved (the antient name of this country) into Dimetia and Kynedhav (a man's name) into Cunotamus, as in an inſcription in Pembrokeſhire, and alſo that in many words where the Latins uſe M the Britons uſe V, as Firmus, Firv; Terminus, Tervin; Amnis, Avon; Lima, Lhiv, &c. it ſeems not unlikely (conſidering we find the word Tav uſual in the names of our rivers) that the Britans before the Roman conqueſt might call the river Tàv, Tàvwy, or Tàvwys, which they afterwards called Thameſis. And this ſeems to be more than mere conjecture when we conſider further that the word Tàv was, according to the Britiſh orthography, written Tam; which ſhews not only that Tav or Taff in Glamorganſhire, &c. is originally the ſame word with Thame or Thames, but alſo that the Greek word Ταμος in Ποταμος is probably no other[x]."

Ty Gwyn five miles weſt from St. Clere was the palace of Hoel Dha the firſt ſovereign of all Wales. Here he ſent for the archbiſhop of St. David's with the reſt of the biſhops and principal clergy to the number of 140, all the barons and nobility and ſix of the ableſt and moſt conſiderable men of each commot. They paſſed the ſeaſon of Lent in prayer and faſting, imploring the divine aſſiſtance on their deſign of reforming the laws: and at the cloſe of the ſeaſon the king choſe twelve of the graveſt and moſt experienced men of this aſſembly, whom in concert with Blegored a very learned man and able lawyer he commiſſioned to examine the old laws, retain the good, explain the obſcure, and abrogate the improper and unneceſſary ones. So the preface to an antient MS. of the new code at Jeſus college, Oxford, ſets forth that "according to the "advice of his council, he retained ſome of the an-"tient laws, corrected others, and quite diſannulled "others, appointing others in their ſtead." Ac o gynghor y doethon hynny, rei or hen gyfreitheu a gynhalyaud ef, ereill a wellaawd, ereill a dileawd o gubyl, a goſſot kyfreitheu newyd yn eulle[z]. Theſe laws were divided into three claſſes, the firſt relating to the king's houſhold and court, the ſecond to the ſtate, and the third to particular cuſtoms of individuals and places. The whole body being publicly proclaimed and allowed of, three copies were written, one for the king's own uſe, and the others to be laid up in his palaces of Aberfraw in North Wales and Dinevwr in South Wales, that all the provinces of Wales might recur to them. To complete the confirmation of them, the king with the archbiſhop and others went to Rome and obtained the Pope's ſolemn ratification of them[y]. This was the firſt ſyſtem of written laws in Wales. The learned Mr. Clarke's preface to "Wotton's Leges Wallicæ," fixes this aſſembly to A. D. 942.

The remains of the Ciſtertian monaſtery of Whitland erected on the ſite of this palace are ſmall and indiſtinct. Here is a conſiderable iron work which has given to the ſpot the name of the Forge. Leland[a] ſays the Benedictine abbey of Teguin ar Tave was ſtanding in his time; and that "in "no place between Caernarvon and Whitland was "ſuch plenty of wood as at Whitland ſtanding in "a vaſt wood as in a wildernes[b]." The country is woody, hilly, and agreeably diſpoſed.

Not far from Kilmaen Lluyd at a place called Bronyskawen in Lhan Boydy pariſh, two ſhepherd [q] 20. Lel. V. 23.

[r] V. 23.
[s] Harris, Archæol. II. p. 18.
[t] Lluyd.
[u] G.
[x] Powel's Hiſt. of Wales, p. 50, 51.
[z] V. p. 23.
[a] Tan. 702.
[b] Archaion. Brit. p. 40. col. 2. and p. 268.

boys

boys 1692, found at the entrance of a ſpacious camp called the Gaer 200 Roman ſilver coins buried juſt under the ſurface of the ground in two very rude round leaden boxes, weighing about 5lb. with a round hole of the ſize of a ſhilling; one of which is here engraved Pl. XVIII. fig. 9, 10, 11. They were ſome of the moſt antient Roman coins found in this iſland, and of about thirty ſeen by Mr. Lluyd the lateſt were of Domitian's 15th Conſulate A. D. 91. He ſent biſhop Gibſon the following catalogue of them, in which thoſe marked * were in his poſſeſſion:

1 ANT. AVG. IIIVIR. R. P. C. Navis prætoria.
NS LEG. V . . . Duo vexilla caſtrenſia cum tertia in medio longe breviori in cujus ſummo aquila alis altius erectis.

2 *ANT. AVG. Navis prætoria.
LEG. X. Duo ſigna caſtrenſia cum aquila legionaria.

3 ANT. AVG. IIIVIR. R. P. C. Navis prætoria.
LEG. XIII. Tria vexilla caſtrenſia.

4 — — — — Caput forte Neptuni cum tridente a tergo.
INS. CVC. RE. Victoria in dorſo Delphini. Hic nummus etiam M. Antonii videtur.

5 *Q. CASSIVS VEST. Imago Virginis Veſtalis.
AC Templum Veſtæ cum ſella curuli & urna.

7 GETA IIIVIR. Imago Dianæ.
— — — — Nummus ſerratus.

8 *C. HOSIDI C. F. Aper venabulo trajectus cum cane venatico.
GETA IIIVIR. Imago Dianæ cum pharetra & arcu.

9 *MARC. Caput Romæ.
ROMA. Quadrigæ.

10 C. III. NAE. B. Victoria in trigis.
Deæ cujuſdam imago.

11 *L. PROCILI F. Juno Soſpita in bigis: infra, ſerpens Lanuvinus.
Juno ſoſpita. Nummus ſerratus.

12 M. THORIV. BALBV. Taurus decurrens.
I. S. M. R. Juno Soſpita.

13 * . . . TORI . . Victoria in quadrigis.
SC. R. Caput Romæ. Nummus ſerratus.

14 *CAESAR. Elephas cum Dracone.
Capeduncula, Aſpergillum, Securis, & Albogalerus; ſigna pontificis maximi & Flaminis dialis.

15 Caput Auguſti, ſine Inſcriptione.*
CAESAR DIVI F. Figura ſtolata ſtans, dextrâ ramum, ſiniſtra cornucopiæ.

16 TI. CAESAR DIVI AVG. F. AVG.
Figura ſedens, dextra haſtam, ſiniſtra ramum.

17 T. CLAVD. CAESAR AVG. GERM. TRIB. POT. P. P.
AGRIPPINAE AVGVSTAE. Caput Agrippinæ.

18 NERO CAESAR AVGVSTVS.
IVPITER CVSTOS. Jupiter ſedens, dextra fulmen tenens, ſiniſtra cathedræ innixa.

19 NERO CAESAR AVGVSTVS.
SALVS. Figura cathedræ inſidens, dextra pateram.

20 IMP. SER. GALBA CAES. AVG.
SALVS GEN . . . . MANI [forte Generis humani] Figura ſtans coram ara accenſa, ſiniſtra temonem, dextra pede globum calcans.

21 *IMP. M. OTHO CAESAR AVG. TR. P.
SECVRITAS P. R. Figura ſtans, dextra corollam, ſiniſtra bacillum.

22 IMP. CAESAR VESPASIANVS AVGVSTVS.
PONT. MAX. TR. P. COS. V. Caduceum alatum.

23 CAESAR AVG. DOMITIANVS.
COS . . . . . Pegaſus.

24 IMP. CAES. DOMIT. AVG. GERM. TR. P.
IMP. XXI. COS. XV. CENS. P. P. P. Pallas navi inſiſtens, dextra jaculum, ſiniſtra ſcutum.

The camp where theſe coins were found was of an oval form and about 300 paces in circumference. The rampart at the entrance near three yards high, but in general much lower. At the entrance, which is about four yards wide, the ends of the rampart are not directly oppoſite, but one is continued farther out than the other ſo as to render the paſſage oblique. On each ſide the camp is a tumulus, one ſmall and near it; the other larger and 300 yards diſtant: both hollow at top.

Newcaſtle Emlyn.

"New Caſtel, alias by the old name Elmelin, almoſt "on the very banke of Tyne, but in Carmardenſhire, "repaired or new builded by ſir Rheſe ap Thomas. "In this lordſhip of Elmelin is other litle fair build-"ing. Ther is a litle foreſt by Elmelin, and a park "was there ons palid[b]."

Newcaſtle Emlyn on the river Tewi and edge of Cardiganſhire is a miſerable town 20 miles north of Caermarthen, with an hotel de chaſſe much reſorted to in the ſhooting ſeaſon. No remains of its caſtle are now to be ſeen. The ſituation of this town and the road to it from Caermarthen is in general dreary and mountainous. Of two other roads between theſe towns one is extremely dangerous on account of a bog whoſe fair outſide deceives the unwary traveller, who is expoſed to equal hazard from innumerable turf-pits as they are called made by rain in ſpots where peat has been dug. Mr. Lluyd has ſhewn that Emlin is the true name of this town, its antient Britiſh name being Dinas Emlin, the moſt obvious interpretation of which appeared to him to be Urbs Emiliani, from ſome lord or proprietor of it. This name antiently common among the Britans and ſtill in part retained was Roman and the ſame with Æmilinus written on an inſcription in Denbighſhire Aimilini [or Aimilinus]. As he could not find it ever was called Elmlin either in Welſh or Engliſh he doubts of its being Ptolemy's Loventium, which he ſaw ſome reaſons to place in Cardiganſhire at Llandewi brewi or Cardigan[c], of which hereafter. 19 Charles I. Richard earl of Carberry in Ireland, was advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm by the title of lord Vaughan of Emlyn[d]. His ſon Francis married Rachel, ſecond daughter of Thomas Wriotheſley, earl of Southampton, re-married to the illuſtrious William lord Ruſſel. The title became extinct 1713.

Beſides the inſcription already noticed at Kaio, there are three or four others which deſerve our notice in this county. The firſt is not far from Caermarthen in Lhan Newydh pariſh; which by the names in it ſhould be Roman, though the form of the letters and the rudeneſs of the ſtone would make us ſuſpect it to be the epitaph of ſome perſon of Roman deſcent, but who lived later than their time. It is on a rude pillar erected near the highway, flattiſh, five or ſix feet high, and about three feet broad broad. The inſcription is to be read from left to right:

Lhan Newydh.

[b] Lel. V. 22. [c] Horſley, 372. [d] Dugd. H. 470.

Hen lhan amgoed.

i. e. Sepulcrum [or Memoriæ] Severini filii Severi.

The ſecond is in the pariſh of Hen lhan amgoed in a field belonging to Parkeu, and almoſt like the former. At preſent it lies on the ground, but conſidering its form it probably once ſtood upright, and then the inſcription muſt be read downward.

Sepulcrum [or Memoriæ] Caii Menvendani filii Barcuni. Both theſe names are obſolete and not to be found in any MS. genealogies. But near this monument is a place called Kevn Varchen perhaps from this Barcun or ſome other of the name.

Lhan Vihangel Jenverth.

The third inſcription was copied by Mr. Saunders beforementioned from a poliſhed free-ſtone at the weſt end of the church of Lhan Vihangel Jerverth.

i. e. Hic jacet Ulcacinus filius Senomacili.

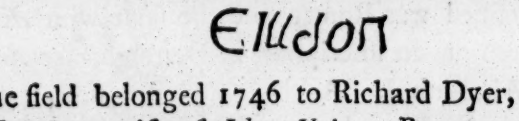
The fourth, which ſeems leſs intelligible than any, was communicated by the ſame hand. The ſtone whence he copied it is neatly carved on all ſides, ſeven feet high and two feet broad, and has a cavity on the top one inch and an half deep, and another within three inches deep, which makes it ſeem to have been the baſe of a croſs. It is to be ſeen at a place called from it Kaer Maen or the Great Stone field, not far from Aber Sannan. The meaning of the inſcription, if any other than the ſtonecutter's name, muſt be left to the reader's conjecture:

Llan Vair y Bryn.



The field belonged 1746 to Richard Dyer, eſq.[e]

In the pariſh of Lhan Vair y Bryn we find manifeſt traces of the Romans. Not far from the eaſt end of the church labourers frequently dig up bricks and other marks of Roman antiquity; and there is a very notable Roman way of gravel and ſmall pebbles from that church to Lhan Brân, the ſeat of a family of the Gwyns, which may be traced as they ſay between Lhan Vair and Llan Deilovawr, and in ſeveral other places.

Krig y Dyrn.

This country abounds with antient forts, camps, and barrows. The moſt remarkable of the latter is called Krig y Dyrn in Trèlêch pariſh. The circumference of it at bottom may be about 60 paces, the height about ſix yards. It riſes with an eaſy aſcent, and is hollow on the top, gently inclining from the circumference to the centre. It is ſuch an heap of ſtones as are called in Wales Karnedheu, covered with turf. In the centre of the cavity at top we find a vaſt rude Lhech or flat ſtone of an oval form, about three yards long, five feet over where broadeſt, and 10 or 12 inches thick. Mr. William Lewis of Lhwyn Derw having employed ſome labourers to ſearch under it, found after removing a large quantity of ſtone that it covered a kiſtvaen or ſtone cheſt about four feet and an half long and about three feet broad, but ſomewhat narrower at the eaſt than the weſt end. It was compoſed of ſeven ſtones, the cover, two at each ſide and end, and one behind each of the end ſtones to keep them up, all equally rude and about the ſame thickneſs, except the two laſt which were conſiderably thicker. They found both within and without the cheſt ſome rude pieces of brick (or ſtones burnt like them) and freeſtone, ſome of which were wrought, alſo ſome pieces of bones which they imagined had been brought thither by foxes: but they did not go to the bottom of the cheſt. Krig y Dyrn though a name now ſcarce intelligible Mr. Lluyd ſuppoſed to mean the King's barrow. He juſtifies the ſingularity of his conjecture by obſerving that Teyrnas the common word for a kingdom is only a derivative from the old word Teyrn, originally the ſame with Tyrannus, and ſignifying a king or prince. Conſidering the labour and ſtrength exerted about this rude mountain he thinks it the barrow of ſome Britiſh prince before the Roman conqueſt, after which it is not probable they had any chief of that denomination.

Gwaly

Gwal y Vilaſt or Burdh Arthur in Lhan Boudy pariſh is a rude ſtone about 10 yards in circumference and above three feet thick ſupported by four others about two feet and an half high.

Buarth Arthur

Buarth Arthur or Meineu Gwyr on a mountain near Kil y maen llwyd is one of thoſe circular ſtone monuments which the Engliſh hiſtorians aſcribe to the Danes, [though here they are plainly druidical.] The diameter of the circle is about 20 yards. The ſtones are extraordinary rude pitched on end at uncertain intervals of three, four, or ſix feet, and from three to ſix feet high. Only 15 are ſtanding, but 7 or 8 ſeem to have been carried off. The entrance for about three yards is guarded on each ſide by lower and ſmaller ſtones contiguous to each other. Oppoſite to this avenue at the diſtance of about 300 paces ſtand three other large rude ſtones, ſimilar to thoſe four or five at the ſame diſtance from that circle of ſtones called King's Stones near Little Rollrich in Oxfordſhire. The name of Buarth Arthur is derived from the vulgar notion of aſcribing every extraordinary monument not accounted for to that hero; as other ſtones of ſeveral tons weight are called his Coits, Table, Chair, &c. But Meineu gwyr is ſo old a name that it ſeems ſcarce intelligible. Meineu is indeed the common word for large ſtones; but gwyr in the preſent Britiſh ſignifies only crooked, which is ſcarce applicable to theſe ſtones, unleſs we ſuppoſe it reſpects their preſent inclining poſition. Perhaps it may refer to the bowing or adoration practiſed at theſe Druid temples. Near Capel Kirig in Caernarvonſhire is a ſingle upright ſtone called alſo Maen gwyr, which may be the only ſtone now remaining of a circle like this: and it has by it ſuch a Kiſtvaen (but ſmaller) as that obſerved in the centre of the monument called Karn Lhechart in Glamorganſhire.

[e] G. Ant. Soc. min. 1746.

Rare Plant found in Caermarthenſhire.

Siſon verticillatum. Narrow-leaved Carraway; in moiſt paſtures.

PEMBROKESHIRE.

THE ſea now turning back ſouthward with a vaſt compaſs and breaking in upon the ſhore with a variety of receſſes waſhes the county of Pembrook, commonly called Penbrokſhire (in old records the lawful county of Penbrok, and by ſome Weſt Wales) on all ſides except the eaſt where it borders on Caermardenſhire, and on the north on part of Cardiganſhire. It is a good corn country, well ſtocked with cattle, and furniſhed with marle and ſuch kind of manure, as alſo with pit coal. "It is, "as Giraldus[a] expreſſes it, a wheat country, plen- "tifully ſupplied with ſea-fiſh, wines imported, and "which is beſt of all its nearneſs to Ireland makes "the air extremely healthy."

The firſt place on the coaſt as you go ſouthward is Tenby, a neat walled town on a dry rock commanding the ſea, very conſiderable for its port and plenty of fiſh, (whence it is called in Britiſh Tenby-y-piſcoid[b]) and governed by a mayor and bailiff. The ſhore retreating to the weſt one ſees the poor remains of Manober[c] caſtle, which Giraldus calls Pyrrhus' manſion, and which in his time was, as he tells us, "ex- "cellently furniſhed with towers and bulwarks, "having on the weſt a ſpacious harbour, on the "north and north-weſt cloſe under its walls a fine "fiſh-pond, conſiderable both for its beauty and the "depth of water in it."

The ſhore runs hence not many miles, and the ſea at length cauſing the land to retreat enters a great way in, forming a harbour called by the Engliſh Milford haven, the nobleſt and ſafeſt in Europe for its many creeks and good anchorages which cleave the banks like ſo many fibres, and to uſe the poet's words,

Hic exarmatum terris cingentibus æquor
Clauditur, & placidam diſcit ſervare quietem.

The ſea defended by ſurrounding lands
Inclos'd a univerſal calm commands.

They reckon in it (to ſpeak in the ſea phraſe) 16 creeks, five bays, and 13 roads, each having diſtinct names. Nor is this haven more remarkable for its ſecurity than for the landing of Henry VII. of glorious memory, who here ſet up his ſtandard for the encouragement of England then expiring under inteſtine calamities. "On the lower and eaſt bay "of this haven in the pleaſanteſt ſpot of all Wales, "ſays Giraldus[d], ſtands the chief town of the "county and head of Dimetia (theſe are Giraldus' "words) on the ſtony and long ridge of a rock run- "ning out into the ſea from Milverd haven with "two ſummits, whence it is called by the Britans "Penbro[e] which ſignifies a ſea-head, and by us Pen- "broke. Arnulphus de Montgomery, brother of "Robert earl of Shrewſbury, in the reign of king "Henry I. of England, built a poor ſlight caſtle "here of ſtakes and turf, which afterwards on his "return to England he left to the care of a diſcrete "man Giraldus de Windeſor, his conſtable and chief "officer, with a ſmall garriſon, who were preſently "beſieged by the whole force of South Wales." But Giraldus made ſuch a vigorous defence rather by courage than ſtrength that they were obliged to retire without ſucceſs. The caſtle as well as the town were afterwards fortified by this Giraldus, who from thence ſcoured the neighbouring country, and to gain a firmer footing for himſelf and followers in theſe parts he married Neſt[f] ſiſter of prince Griffin, by whom he had a fine iſſue, "by whoſe means (as "Giraldus[g] ſays) the coaſts of South Wales were "ſecured to the Engliſh and the walls of Ireland "forced." For all thoſe noble families of the Giralds or Giraldines called Fitz-Gerald in Ireland derive their deſcent from this Girald. "By tenure "of this caſtle and town, the caſtle and town of "Tinbigh, the Granges of Kingſwood, the Commot "of Croytareth, and the manor of Caſtle Martin "and Tregoire," Reginald Grey, at the coronation of king Henry IV. claimed to carry the ſecond ſword *; but his claim was rejected, and he was anſwered, that at that time thoſe caſtles and lands were in the king's hands, as is at preſent Penbrook, which is a corporation with its mayor and bailiffs.

Origin of the Geralds in Ireland.

On another bay of this haven one ſees Carew caſtle, which gave name and riſe to the illuſtrious family of the Carews, who affirm themſelves to have been antiently called Montgomery, and believe themſelves deſcended from that Arnulph de Montgomery before-mentioned.

Carew caſtle.

Into this haven fall two rivers almoſt at one mouth, which the Britans call Gledawh[h], as much as to ſay ſwords, whence they name it Aberdugledhau or the Port of two ſwords. On the eaſtermoſt ſtands Sle- bach, antiently a commandery of the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, which Wizo and his ſon Walter formerly gave with other lands to that ſacred order that they might ſerve God for the recovery of the holy land.

Slebach.

That part of this country which lies beyond the haven, and is watered only by theſe rivers is called by the Britans Roſe or Ros, a name taken from the nature of the place, it being a graſſy plain. This is inhabited by the Flemings, who ſettled here by leave of Henry I. when the ſea breaking its banks over-

Rhos.

Flemings when ſeated in Wales.

* Roll of Services.

[a] I. c. 12. p. 852. [b] Dinbech y Pyſkod. Lluyd. [c] or Manurbwr.

[d] I. c. 12. Holland gives the ſentence thus. "In the moſt pleaſant country of all Wales ſtandeth Pembroke the ſhire town, one "direct ſtreet, upon a long narrow point all rock, and a forked arm of Milford haven ebbing and flowing cloſe to the town walls on "both ſides. It hath a caſtle, but now ruinate, and two pariſh churches within the walls, and is incorporate of a mayor, bailiffs, and "burgeſſes. But hear Giraldus."

[e] R. Brooke in Catal. p. 272, cenſures Mr. Camden for admitting this etymology, and will have Pen bro to mean the head or principal part of the valley or fruitful plain.

[f] Giraldus Cambrenſis was ſon of Angareth ſon of this Neſt who was daughter of Rhys and ſiſter of Griffin prince of South Wales. Ware de Script. Hib. I. c. 2. or of her ſon Maurice. Godw. de epiſ. Menev.

[g] I. c. 12. [h] Cledhau. L.

flowed great part of Flanders. They are ſtill diſtinguiſhable from the Welſh by language and manners, and in point of ſpeech are ſo connected with the Engliſh, whoſe language approaches nearly to that of Flanders, that this their little territory is called by the Britans Little England beyond Wales. " Theſe people (ſays Giraldus[i]) are ſtrong and ro- " buſt, and by a courſe of continual war inveterate " enemies to the Welſh, well experienced in woollen " manufactures and trade, inured to every kind of " labour and danger, and to get a living by land or " ſea. They are a very powerful people, and, ac- " cording to the various circumſtances of place and " time, they are alike expert at huſbandry or war, " and, for a concluſion, are extremely devoted to the " kings of England, and very faithful to the En- " gliſh." In Giraldus' time[k] they were wonderful maſters of the art of divining by the entrails of beaſts, and a work of theirs which proves they were a very induſtrious people is ſtill viſible here in the Flemings' way carried on for a great length. The Welſh have frequently with all their force attacked theſe Flemings to recover this their antient property, and have ravaged their borders; but the others have always been ready to defend their fortunes, fame, and perſons. Hence our hiſtorian Malmeſbury[l] makes this obſervation on them and William Rufus. " Many times was king William Rufus repulſed by " the Welſh, which may ſeem extraordinary as he " had ſuch good ſucceſs everywhere elſe. But I " aſcribe it to the roughneſs of the ſoil and incle- " mency of the air, which at once encouraged them " in rebellion and checked his progreſs. But king " Henry, that diſcerning prince, now on the throne, " has found out an expedient to diſconcert their " contrivances, by ſettling among them the Flem- " ings to ſerve as a barrier againſt them and to keep " them always in order." And in his 5th[m] book he ſays, " King Henry, by frequent expeditions, " drove the Welſh, who were continually rebelling, " almoſt to ſubmiſſion, and by a wiſe meaſure to curb " their inſolence, tranſplanted thither all the Flem- " ings from England. Many of thoſe people had " concealed themſelves in England, to which they " reſorted on account of their relation to his mo- " ther's father[n]; ſo that they were become a burden " to the kingdom by their numbers. The king " therefore cleared them all away to Ros a diſtrict " of Wales, as to a receptacle, both to rid his own " dominions and ſerve as a check upon the enemy."

Little England beyond Wales.

On the weſternmoſt of the two rivers called Cledheu, in a very unequal ſituation, ſtands Harfordweſt, called by the Engliſh antiently Haverford, by the Britans Hulphord, conſiderable for its neatneſs and populouſneſs, and for being a county of itſelf, governed by a mayor, ſheriff, and two bailiffs. The earls of Clare are reported to have fortified it with works and walls on the north; and I have read that Richard earl of Clare made Richard Fitz Tancred governor of this caſtle.

Haverfordweſt.
Hulford.

Beyond Roſeland runs out with a bold front to the Iriſh ocean a promontory called by Ptolemy OCTOPITARVM[o], by the Britans Pebidiauc and Cantred Devi; by us St. David's land. " A ſtoney, " barren, unimprovable territory (as Giraldus[p] repreſents it) " undecked with woods, undivided by " rivers, unadorned with meadows, expoſed only to " wind and ſtorms." It was, however, the retreat and nurſery of very holy men: for Calphurnius a Britiſh prieſt (as ſome, how truly I know not, relate) here in Rhos vale by Concha his wife ſiſter of Martin of Tours had Patric[q] the apoſtle of Ireland, and Devi that moſt religious biſhop transferred the archiepiſcopal ſee from Iſca Legionum to the moſt remote corner of this country Menew or Menevia, called afterwards by the Britans from him Twy Devi, q. d. the houſe of David, by the Saxons Dauid Mynſtep, and by the preſent Engliſh St. David's. It for a long time had an archbiſhop, but the plague making terrible ravages in this country the pall was transferred to Dole in Bretagne[r], which put an end to this dignity here. In later ages the Welſh brought a claim againſt the archbiſhop of Canterbury, metropolitan of England and Wales, for this dignity, but loſt their cauſe. What was the extent and condition of this town formerly is not eaſy to ſay, it having been ſo often deſtroyed by pirates. At preſent it is a very ſmall city, and has nothing to boaſt but a handſome church dedicated to St. Andrew and St. David, often ruined, but rebuilt in its preſent form by biſhop Peter in the reign of king John and his ſucceſſors, in Rhos Vale as they call it below the town. Near it is the biſhop's palace, and within a ſtrong fair wall handſome houſes for the præcentor (who is next to the biſhop, here being no dean) chancellor, treaſurer, and four archdeacons who make up the number of the two canons.

St. David's land.
St. Patric.
Ty Dewi.
St. David's.

OCTOPITARUM prom.

This promontory runs out ſo far to the weſt that in a clear day Ireland may be ſeen from it, and the paſſage acroſs is very ſhort, though Pliny falſely meaſures 30 miles from the Silures, whom he ſuppoſed to reach hither. But from Giraldus' account one may ſuppoſe the land to have run out further, and that its form of a promontory has been altered. " When Henry II. was in Ireland (ſays he[s]) an un- " uſually violent ſtorm on this ſandy coaſt[t] blowing " back the ſand diſcovered the appearance of the " land concealed for ſo many ages: ſtumps of trees " ſtanding in the ſea with the marks of the hatchet " as if done but the day before, a very black earth " and wood like ebony, ſo that it appeared not ſo " much like the ſea coaſt as a grove by the wonder- " ful alteration of things cut down probably from the " time of the deluge, or long after, but certainly from " remote antiquity, or gradually carried off by the vio- " lence of the ſea always gaining upon and waſhing " away the land." The ſaying of William Rufus ſhews that the land here was not divided by a wide channel; for that prince ſeeing Ireland from the rocks here ſaid, as Giraldus relates, he could eaſily build a bridge of ſhips in England on which to walk from thence to Ireland.

In theſe rocks build excellent and generous falcons, which our Henry II. as Giraldus[u] ſo often quoted reports, preferred to all others. They are of that ſort, if the natives do not miſinform me, which the

[i] I. c. p. 848. [k] P. 849. [l] De geſt. reg. IV. 68. b [m] P. 89. b.
[n] Maud, mother of Henry I. was daughter of Baldwin 5th earl of Flanders. [o] Horſley, 373.
[p] It. II. c. 1. [q] He founded this ſee about 470 at Caerleon, and David tranſlated it in the 6th century hither. Tanner.
[r] By archbiſhop Sampſon about 930. The biſhops of that ſee are ſaid to have conſecrated the Welſh biſhops, and to have been primates to them till t. Henry I. when Bernard, a Norman, biſhop here, profeſſed obedience to the ſee of Canterbury. The revenues of the ſee were valued at the diſſolution at 426*l.* and of the chapter at 193*l.*
[s] I. c. 13. [t] of Newgil. Giraldus. [u] I. c. 11.

ſportſmen

ſportſmen call Peregrines [z], to uſe no other words than thoſe of the beſt poet of our age [y] Auguſtus Thuanus of Eſmer in his excellent piece on Falconry, intitled HIERACOSOPHION.

Depreſſus capitis vertex, oblongaque toto
Corpore pennarum ſeries, pallentia crura,
Et graciles digiti ac ſparſi, nareſque rotundæ.

Low is the creſt, the body oblong rows
Of plumage grace, pale-coloured legs, whoſe toes
Are thin and wide, round beak.

The ſea beats with great violence upon a ſmall tract of this point, called Keimes [z], and accounted a barony. In it is firſt Fiſgard, ſo called by the Engliſh from the fiſhery there, by the Welſh Aber-gwain, q. d. the mouth of the river Gwain, ſtanding on a craggy rock, where is pretty good riding for ſhips. Next Newport on the river Nevern, Britiſh Trefdraith, q. d. the town on the ſand [a], built by Martin de Tours, incorporated by his poſterity, who beſtowed many privileges on it, conſtituting a portreve and bailif, and building a caſtle for themſelves above the town, which was their chief ſeat. They alſo founded a monaſtery of St. Dogmael [b] on the river Tivy in a valley ſurrounded with hills, to which the adjoining town owes its origin, as many other towns do to monaſteries. This barony was firſt wreſted from the Welſh by force of arms by Martin de Tours, from whoſe deſcendants called Martins it came by marriage to the lords Audley, who long held it till in the reign of Henry VIII. William Owen deſcended from a daughter of ſir Nicholas Martin proſecuting his claim by a long ſuit at laſt obtained it, and left it to his ſon George, who, by his great ſkill in antiquity, informed me that in this barony, beſides the three burroughs of Newport, Fiſhgard, and St. Dogmael, are 20 knights fees, and 26 pariſhes.

More inland on the Tivy before-mentioned is Kilgarran, which ſhews remains of a caſtle built by Giraldus, but being now reduced into one ſtreet, is remarkable only for a moſt plentiful ſalmon fiſhery. There is alſo that famous ſalmon-leap, where the river falls down a precipice, and the ſalmon making up the river from the ſea meeting with this obſtacle turn their tail to their mouth, and ſometimes to give themſelves a greater ſpring take it in their mouth, and in releaſing themſelves from this circle with a force like that of a bent rod ſpring from the bottom to the top to the aſtoniſhment of the beholders. Auſonius [c] deſcribes this circumſtance very exactly.

Nec te puniceo rutilantem viſcere, ſalmo,
Tranſierim, latæ cujus vaga verbera caudæ,
Gurgite de medio ſummas referuntur in undas.

Nor muſt I paſs the muddy bellied fiſh,
Whoſe broad tail daſhing on the extended wave,
Raiſes them from the boſom of the ſtream
Up to the top.

There have been earls of Pembroke of different families. I hardly give this title to Arnulph de Montgomery, who firſt reduced it, and was afterwards attainted, or to his Caſtellan Giraldus, whom Henry I. afterwards made governor of the whole country. King Stephen firſt gave the title of earl of Pembrook to Gilbert Strongbow, ſon of Giſlebert de Clare. He left it to his ſon Richard Strongbow, conqueror of Ireland, who, as Giraldus expreſſes it, "was deſcended from the famous family "of Clare [d]." His only daughter Iſabel conveyed it to her husband William, ſurnamed Mareſchall (from his anceſtors having been hereditary marſhals of the king's palace), a man diſtinguiſhed both in the field and cabinet; on whom there is this epitaph in Rudburne's annals [e]. 1138.

Sum quem Saturnum ſibi ſenſit Hibernia, Solem
Anglia, Mercurium Normannia, Gallia Martem.

Me Mars the French, their ſun the Engliſh own'd,
The Normans Mercury, Iriſh Saturn found.

His five ſons were ſucceſſively earls of Pembrook, viz. William, ſurnamed the Younger [f], Richard, who, revolting from king Henry III. retired to Ireland, where he fell in battle [g]. Gilbert unhorſed and killed in a tournament at Ware [h]; Walter [i], and Anſelm [k]. All theſe dying in a ſhort time without iſſue Henry III. gave this earldom by girding on a ſword to his own brother William Valence [l], of the family of Luſignan in Poitou, who took to wife Joan daughter of Gwarin de Mont Cheſney by the daughter of William Mareſchall. William Valence was ſucceeded by his ſon Audomar [m], who, under Edward I. was governor of Scotland, whoſe ſecond [n] ſiſter and coheir Elizabeth marrying John lord Haſtings carried the title into a new family. For Laurence Haſtings, his ſon's ſon [o], lord of Abergavenny, was confirmed earl of Pembrook by writ of king Edward III. which I ſhall here ſubjoin, that we may ſee what right heirs female gave to theſe titles of honour. "The king to "all, &c. greeting. Know ye, that the proſpect "we conceive of prudence and virtue [p] from the "promiſing appearance of our dearly beloved couſin "Laurence Haſtings, deſervedly induce us to pre-"vent him with our free favour in the grant of what "reſpects the due maintenance of his honour. For-"aſmuch, therefore, as the inheritance of Audomar "de Valence, of happy memory, commonly called "earl of Pembrook, long ſince deceaſed without "heirs of his body, is devolved to his ſiſters to be "divided between them and their heirs in due pro-"portions, we being well aſſured that the ſaid Lau-"rence who ſucceeds to part of the inheritance of "the ſaid Audomar is deſcended from the elder "ſiſter of the ſaid Audomar, and ſo by the informa-"tion of the learned ſkilled in thoſe matters, whom "we have conſulted upon this affair, is entitled to the "prerogative of name and honour, we think it juſt and "due that the ſaid Laurence, having a ſufficient right "from the elder ſiſter, ſhould aſſume and bear the "name of earl of Pembroke, which the ſaid Audo-"mar in his life time held, which, as far as in us "lies, we confirm, ratify, and approve to him: "willing and granting that the ſaid Laurence ſhall "have and hold the prerogative and honour of earl "palatine in the lands which he holds of the inhe-"ritance of the ſaid Audomar as fully and in like "manner as the ſaid Audomar had and held them "at the time of his deceaſe. In token whereof, "&c.

[z] See Pennant Brit. Zool. I. 156* 4to. Ed.
[y] I believe the Hiſtorian. See Hoffman Lex. voc. Jacob Auguſtus Thuanus.
[z] Kemaes.
[a] and in Latin records Novus portus. Holland.
[b] Brit. St. Tegvael.
[c] Moſella, f. 97.
[d] e clara Clarenſium familia.
[e] and Matthew Paris, 304. Dugd. I. 602. He is buried in the Temple, where ſee his monument. He died 1219.
[f] He died 1231, buried in the Temple.
[g] in Ireland 1234, 18 H. III. buried at Kilkenny. Dugd. Bar. I. 605.
[h] 1241. 25 Henry III. buried in the Temple. Ib. 606.
[i] He died 1246. and his brother ſoon after him. Ib. 607.
[k] who enjoyed this honour but a few days. Holland.
[l] Dugd. Bar. I. 774. He was ſlain at Bayonne 1296, 23 E. I. and buried in St. Edmund's chapel Weſtminſter, where ſee his tomb.
[m] murdered in France 1323, 17 Edward II. Dugd. Ib. 776. buried in Weſtminſter abbey on the north ſide of the choir, where ſee his tomb.
[n] eldeſt. Holland.
[o] Lord of Weiſhford and Abergavenny. Ib.
[p] elegantiæ.

"&c. Witneſs the king at Montmartre 13 Oct. "A. R. 13[p]." He was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who was taken in a ſea fight by the Spaniards, and after his redemption died in France 1375[q]. To him ſucceeded his ſon John, ſlain in a tournament at Woodſtock 1391[r], and it was obſerved by a ſingular fate, that for five generations in this family the father never ſaw his ſon. Upon failure of this line many conſiderable revenues devolved to the crown, as our lawyers ſpeak, and Pembroke caſtle was given to Francis Ati Court, a favourite courtier, who was thence commonly called Lord of Pembroke. Not long after John duke of Bedford, and after him Humphrey duke of Glouceſter, his brother, ſons of king Henry IV. obtained this title. Afterwards William De la Pole was created marquis[s] of Pembroke, and, upon his death, Henry VI. created his own brother Jaſpar[t] de Hatfield earl of Pembroke, to whom, being deprived of all his honours, Edward IV. ſubſtituted William Herbert[u], who loſt his life at the battle of Banbury [1469][x]. He was ſucceeded by a ſon of the ſame name, whom Edward IV. after he recovered the crown, created earl of Huntingdon, conferring the title of earl[y] of Pembroke on his own eldeſt ſon Edward prince of Wales. A long time after Henry VIII. upon his engagement with Anne Bollein created her marchioneſs of Pembroke[z]. Laſtly in our time Edward VI. beſtowed the ſame honour on William Herbert, lord of Caerdiffe[a]. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry[b] preſident of Wales under queen Elizabeth, and he by his ſon William[c], poſſeſſed of every perſonal and mental accompliſhment, who at preſent enjoys it. The family of Herbert is by far the moſt noble in Wales, and certainly very antient. For it derives its origin from Henry Fitz Herbert, who was chamberlain to king Henry I. and married that prince's miſtreſs, mother of Reginald earl of Cornwall, as I am informed by Robert Glover, a perſon eminently verſed in genealogical matters, by whoſe untimely death the ſtudy of genealogy has ſuſtained a very great loſs.

Families of Herbert

In this county are 145 pariſhes.

[p] 22 Edward III. Dugd. Bar. I. 576.
[q] buried at Hereford. Ib. 577.
[r] by ſir John St. John caſually. He was buried at the Greyfriars Newgate. Ib. 578.
[s] Earl. Dugd. II. 187, 188. Vincent, p. 422.
[t] Vincent, 424. Sandford, 292. Dugd. I. 241.
[u] for his good ſervice againſt Jaſpar in Wales.
[x] buried at Tintern. Vincent, 425. at Abergavenny. Dugdale II. 256.
[y] Kniveton MS. n. in Vincent, p. 426. takes him to have been both marquis and earl of Pembroke.
[z] Vincent, 427. with a mantle and coronet in regard both of her nobility and alſo her virtues, for ſo are the words of the patent. Holland,
[a] a. r. 5. He died 1569, and was buried in St. Paul's. Dugdale II. 259.
[b] He died 1601, and was buried at Saliſbury. Ib. II. 250.
[c] He died 1630. Ib.

ADDITIONS.

PEMBROKESHIRE is above 30 miles long by 22 miles broad and 120 miles round, contains one city, ſeven market towns, and 145 pariſhes. It is the moſt maritime in point of ſituation of any county in Wales; abounds with venerable veſtiges of antiquity, and is the moſt agreeable to a traveller unacquainted with the Welſh language, which conſidering the ſituation of the county intirely ſurrounded by Wales and cut off from England, is here ſurprizingly worn out, and ſucceeded by a better kind of Engliſh than ſir John Price would allow; for in his deſcription of Wales[a], he ſays, "the Normans and Flemings about "Tenby, Pembroke, and Rhôs, can ſpeak neither "Welſh nor good Engliſh to this day."

In the road from St. Clare in Caermarthenſhire to Tenby is the Green bridge of Wales, ſo called from a ſtream running under a cavity or natural bridge.

"Tenbigh town ſtandith on a main rokke but not "very high, and the Severn ſea ſo gulfeth in about "it that at the fall ſe almoſt three quarters of the "town is incloſed with water. It is ſtrongly wallid "and well gated, every gate having his portcollis ex "ſolido ferro. But that leading to Caermarthen is "moſt ſemelieſt as circled without with an embatled "but open roofid tower after the faſcion of the eſt "gate of Pembrook. Without this gate is a prety "ſuburb. In the midſt of the town is a fair paroch "church[b]. There is a ſinus and a pier made for "ſhips: The town is very wealthy by merchandize, "but not very big having but one paroch church. "It is ſaid there is no well in the town, ſo that they "are forced to fetch their water from St. John's well "without the town[c]." In the extremity of the town ſtood the caſtle, now reduced to a ſingle tower affording an extenſive ſea view. The harbour was always accounted a good one, and occaſions a good market for proviſions, corn, and fiſh, and dry goods from Briſtol. Here are large remains of the town walls with a breaſtwork on arches. The church is large.

"Againſt Manober, or between it and Tinby, "lieth Iniſper, i. e. Inſula Pirrhi, alias Caldey[d].

"There was in Caldey or Pyr iſland, a cell of "monks of S. Dogmail's," valued at £.5. 10s.[e]

"Mainoper, i. e. Manſio Pirrhi, is now commonly "called Manober, a town of huſbandry, the parſonage "whereof is impropriated to Chriſt college in Cam-"bridge. The ruins of Pirrhus caſtle there many "walls yet ſtanding hole do openly appear. This "place is three miles from Tenby and almoſt as "much from Pembrook[f]. It ſtandeth as it were "between two pointing hillets, between which the "Severn gulfith in almoſt half a mile[g]."

The ruins of Manwrbwr caſtle are not even now ſo ſmall as Mr. Camden deſcribes them. It is about three miles from Pembroke, and ſuppoſed to have been built by the Normans t. Rufi. Giraldus, who was born not far from Tenby[h], calls it Manwr Pyrr, q. d. the Manſion of Pyrrus. To his deſcription quoted by Mr. Camden, he adds, "a beautiful plantation of "trees, the prominency of the cliffs, and the height "of the hazles equally contributed to adorn it. On "the right ſide of the neck of land whereon ſtands "the caſtle between it and the church a conſtant "ſtream, ſupplying both the fiſh pond and the mill, "winds through a valley which the winds have "filled with ſand." The church here mentioned is that of Leadſtep. The caſtle belonging now to the Philips's[i] conſiſted of two courts: the ſhell of the hall and other apartments round the inner one remain, and ſeveral round towers in the circuit of both courts.

The road from Tenby to Pembroke is for the moſt part ſtrait along the Ridgeway a chain of hills; on ſeveral of which are artificial eminences, where have formerly been beacons. Both ſides of this ridgeway are cultivated.

Milford haven.

Milford haven looks like an immenſe lake, for the mouth not being at any diſtance viſible, the whole haven ſeems landlocked. Though it is a mile and three quarters wide it could not be defended againſt an enemy, nor is there a ſufficiency of timber in the neighbourhood[k]. This haven is formed by a great advance of the ſea into the land, it being above ten miles from the ſouthernmoſt point at Nangle to Pembroke, beyond which the tide comes up to and beyond Carew caſtle. It is capable of holding the whole navy of England, and the ſame is ſaid of Cork harbour[l]. The ſpring tides riſe 36 feet, the neap above 26. Ships may be out of this haven in an hour's time, and in eight or ten hours over at Ireland or at the Land's end, and this with almoſt any wind by day or night. At the ſouthernmoſt point ſtands Nangle, in Leland's time a poor village who calls it Angle[m], yet ſhewing the ruins of a caſtle and nunnery. On the oppoſite point called St. Anne's is an old light-houſe and block-houſe. The intention of erecting a fort on a rock in the middle of this haven has not ſucceeded.

Nangle.

Bangerſton.

More inland is Bangerſton, a modern houſe belonging to John Hook Campbell, eſq. Lyon king at arms, whoſe father has a ſeat at Stackpole court in the ſame peninſula. Near this is St. Gowen's point and chapel, a ſtone building deſcended into by many ſteep ſteps, having in it a niche ſhaped like a man, in which they ſay Chriſt, or more properly St. Gowen, turned himſelf. The well near it is very deep, the water freſh with an oily taſte, and good for agues and fevers.

St. Gowen's point.

Humberſtone.

Humberſtone priory is a ruin as of a gate-houſe, not [a] P. xix. [b] Lel. V. 75. [c] Ib. 26. [d] Ib.

[e] Lel. V. 12. Tan. 720. [f] Lel. V. 26. [g] Ib. 75.
[h] Lambarde's dict. ex Gir. Lel. de ſcript. [i] Groſe. [k] Wyndham, p. 72.
[l] Philoſophical Survey of Ireland. [m] Lel. V. 28.

far from Milford haven, but not mentioned as a religious houſe by Dugdale or Tanner[o].

Pembroke. "Pembroke ſtandith on an arm of Milford, which "about a mile beyond the town crekith it ſo that it "almoſt peninſulateth the town that ſtandith on a very "main rocky ground. The town is well watulled, and "hath three gates, of which the eaſt gate is the "faireſt and ſtrongeſt, having afore it a compaſed "tower not roofed, in the entering whereof is a port-"cullis ex ſolido ferro. The caſtle ſtands hard by "the wall on a hard rock, and is very large and "ſtrong, being double warded. In the utter ward I "ſaw the chamber where Henry VII. was born, in "knowledge whereof a chimney is now made with "his arms and badges. In the botom of the great "ſtrong round tower in the inner ward is a marvel-"lous vault called the Hogan. The top of this "tower is gathered with a roof of ſtone almoſt in "conum, the top whereof is covered with a flat mil-"ſtone. In the town be two pariſh churches. The "town has been well built, and the eaſt ſuburb, "almoſt as great as the town, now totally in "ruins[p]."

Pembroke conſiſts of one long ſtreet reaching from the eaſt to the weſt gates. On the north ſide are the church, caſtle, and market-place; but the houſes at the eaſt end are for the moſt part mean and ruinous, the trade declining as at Tenbigh, ſo that it is but half inhabited. It has a corporation, and market, and ſends one member to parliament.

The chamber in the caſtle where Henry VII. was born is now called the Queen's nurſery, and the wainſcot remained within theſe 80 years. To this adjoins the Dungeon tower, and weſt of that is a very large round tower, from whoſe top is an extenſive proſpect. In the weſt wall is a round tower and ſally port, near which was found a large parcel of leather money. In 1648 the colonels Langhorn, Powel, and Poyer, who thought themſelves ill requited by parliament, intended to declare for the king as ſoon as they heard the Scots had entered England. The arrival of a new governor here anticipated their deſign, and though ill provided with ammunition and victuals, and deſerted by their friends who promiſed them relief, they held out the town and caſtle four months till Cromwell obliged them to ſurrender. Poyer was ſhot in Covent garden, and the caſtle diſmantled. Many round ſtones, which the beſiegers fired againſt the caſtle to kill the beſieged by ſhivering the pavement, have been found in the area now a bowling-green. Many bones of the beſiegers killed in a purſuit, and buried on St. Cyrian's hill two miles from Tenbigh, were found 1761. The priory was founded for Benedictines by Arnulph earl of Pembroke about 1098, cell to Sayes abbey in Normandy, afterwards to St. Alban's, valued at 57*l*.[q]

Monkton. Montaine[r] or Monkton is a ſuburb on the other ſide of the harbour, which is croſſed by a bridge: part of the church and a granary called the Monkhouſe ſtill remains. The trenches againſt Pembroke caſtle were opened in this church-yard. This church and a third are all in Pembroke pariſh. R. Brooke, in his Catalogue, p. 272, quarrels with Mr. Camden for not interpreting Pembroke the head or principal part of a fruitful valley or plain.

Carew caſtle was given as a portion with Neſt before mentioned to Girald de Carrio, whoſe deſcendants by the name of Carew enjoyed it ſeveral generations till ſir Edmund mortgaged it to ſir Rhys ap Thomas. It was afterwards forfeited to Henry VIII. who granted it out by leaſes for terms of years to ſir John Perrot and others; the remainder of which terms were purchaſed by ſir John Carew kinſman and heir to ſir Edmund, to whom Charles I. granted the fee ſimple and inheritance, and from him it deſcended to the preſent owner his great great grandſon Thomas Carew, eſq.[s] Leland ſays it was repaired or magnificently builded by Rheſe ap Thomas[t]. It is beautifully ſituated on a branch of Milford haven, which incloſes it in a kind of fork. It conſiſts of a range of apartments built round a quadrangle with a round tower at each corner. The ſouth ſide is down: the north conſiſts of a noble hall 102 feet by 20, built by ſir John Perrot, who had like to have loſt the whole under queen Mary, and who entertained here the duke of Ormond 1533, and retired to it at the expiration of his deputyſhip of Ireland[u]. Above and under this hall and a room 52 feet long, are apartments and offices. In the weſt ſide is the gateway with the arms of England, duke of Lancaſter, and Carew, and contiguous to it a room 80 feet by 30. The church has a lofty ſquare tower, and in the farm-yard adjoining is a ruinous ſtone building called the parſonage.

A mile on this ſide Pembroke is the village of Lanſty, where among pleaſant fields are ruins of a palace of the biſhop of St. David's, good part of which was built by biſhop Gower 1335, but it was ſtormed and deſtroyed in the civil war. Here is a great hall or room 76 feet by 20, aſcended to by ſteps from without, and another beyond it 60 feet by 26, alſo the chancel of the chapel and a round tower: the whole was moated round and the bridge and ſouth gate remain. This was a lordſhip Marcher, and has adjoining to it a fine deer park. Henry VIII. alienated it with the manor from the ſee to William Devereux viſcount Hereford, afterwards earl of Eſſex, whoſe heirs ſold it to ſir Hugh Owen of Orielton, bart. whoſe ſon poſſeſſes it. Leland[x] calls it Llanfeth, and ſays this was "a place of ſtone after caſtle faſhion, on a brook "that goeth to the ſalt water by Pembroke."

"Dueglevi lordſhip is conteynid bytwixt the two "rivers of Glevi. In this lordſhip be few or none "notable buildings[y]."

"Llanhadein lordſhip on the eaſt ſide Gledi where "is a caſtle builded on a rock longing to the biſhop "of St. David and a village by, alſo a foreſt of red "deer called Lloydarth[z]." The biſhop of St. David's takes his baronial title from this caſtle which was his principal ſeat, and of which there are ſtill ſome remains. Biſhop Vaughan repaired it, and built a chapel, which biſhop Milbourn 1616 obtained the archbiſhop's licence to demoliſh. On the left hand of the road are the fine woods of Slebach[a].

"Slebych comaundry of the [knights of] Rodes "liith upon the E. Glevy[b]." It was founded in the cloſe of the 13th century, and valued at £.184. 10*s*[c].

"Roſe market. The market is loſt, and is now a "poore village in the mid way betwixt Harford Weſt "and Penbrok. Rowſe lordſhip hath corn ſufficient [o] Groſe.

[p] Lel. It. V. 12. 74.
[q] Lel. V. 12. Tan. 719.
[r] Leland. ubi ſup.
[s] Groſe.
[t] Lel. V. 74.
[u] Life of ſir John Perrot, p. 39. 140. 290.
[x] V. 74.
[y] Lel. V. 28.
[z] Ib.
[a] Wyndham, p. 67.
[b] Lel. V. 28.
[c] Tan. 720.

"and

" and to ſell to other, and eſpecially toward Milford " haven. There is wood alſo competent[d]."

" Gwalwin caſtle and lordſhip perteineth to Har- " ford Weſt. It longgid to the lord of Northum- " berland, and now to Perot[e]."

" Pille otherwiſe Pille Roſe, a houſe of monks of " St. Dogmael's order, ſtanding in Roſe country four " miles above Arford Weſt upon the further ſhore " of the haven of Milford[f]." It was founded about 1200 by Adam de Rupe for monks of the order of Tyron changed to Benedictines, valued at £52. 2s. 5d.[g]

" Towards this extrem part of Penbrokſhire be " the veſtigia of Martin caſtle[h]."

" Narbarth a little pretty pile of old ſir Rheſes, " given unto him by king Henry VIII. There is a " poor village, and by it a little foreſt[i]." Not far from it is Whiſton caſtle.

Giraldus further obſerves of the Flemings, that they were a brave and happy people, whether our ſovereigns were well diſpoſed to the Welſh, or provoked by their diſobedience and faithleſsneſs. Prince Llewellyn ap Jorwerth reduced them to his obedience 1217, Jorwerth biſhop of St. David's mediating a peace on condition they ſhould ſwear allegiance to the prince and acknowledge his ſovereignty, defray the expences of his expedition, and give 20 hoſtages of the principal men among them. Three years after they again revolted, but were ſoon reduced by the devaſtation of their country[k]. Beſides the Flemings' way many caſtles remain monuments of their induſtry. Of theſe Roch caſtle in Rouſeland[l] to the right of the road to St. David's, ſhews a round tower and ſome double outworks viſible at a great diſtance. It belonged to the lords Ferrars and old Langeville, knt. of Bucks[m].

Mr. Wyndham[n] remarked a peculiarity in the women's dreſs here, being even in the midſt of ſummer a heavy cloth gown and a handkerchief tied inſtead of a cap under their chins, probably retained from the Flemings.

Picton caſtle now the ſeat of ſir John Philips by marriage with a deſcendant of ſir William Donne, eſcaped the fate of all other caſtles in Wales in the civil wars, and retains much of its original external form, and has been always inhabited.

" Haverford Weſt lordſhip hath the waullid town " of Haverford and caſtle. In the town three pariſh " churches, one of them without the town in the " ſuburb. Blak friars within the town. Chanons " without ſuppreſid[o]." The country from hence to St. David's preſents a dry, barren, and mountainous aſpect.

Haverford Weſt ſtands on the ſide of a hill, on whoſe ſummit is the ſhell of the caſtle commanding the town and the river Cledhew, over which here is a handſome ſtone bridge. All its fortifications were deſtroyed in the civil war. Here are three pariſh churches, a mean town-hall, and the ruins of a houſe of Black friars[p]. An image dug up in the ruins of the priory in the laſt century is ſuppoſed to belong to David Chirbury, biſhop of Dromore, who died 1429. He directed to be buried here[q], leaving a legacy to rebuild the cloiſters.

" There remain tokens of Cairboias caſtle by " Alan riveret about a quarter of a mile lower than " St. David on the ſame riveret, and ſome ſay " there hath been a caſtle at or about Port Maure, Port Maure. " but the tokens be not very evident. At Portmaur " is a great ſand with a ſhort æſtuary into the land. " St. David's land beginneth at Newgalle, a crek Newgal. " ſerved with back freſh water; there is a bay be- " fore this creek. There be divers other little " crekets betwixt Newgall and St. David head, and " betwixt St. David and Fiſchard. At Llanrean Llanrean. " the biſhop of St. David hath a place. About " *Llan*unda (q. Llanwrda), is herring fiſhing[r]."

" There appere in divers parts of Pebidiauc hills " and dykes, with bulwarks of erth as camps of men " of war, or cloſures for cattle. The ſoil of Pe- " bidiauc is ſtony, yet there is metely good corne. " There is plenty of fiſh becauſe of the creeks[r]."

St. David's, though called a city, has neither market nor fair, and ſcarce a tolerable inn. They reckoned about 1200 inhabitants, and 261 within the pariſh, and theſe 290 inhabitants and 78 ſmall houſes in the town[s]. The cathedral and epiſcopal palace are quite at the bottom of a ſteep hill, ſo that the tower is ſcarce viſible in the town. Theſe and the prebendal houſes are ſurrounded by a ſtone wall 1100 yards in circuit, with four gates. The cathedral having been often demoliſhed, the preſent was built according to Giraldus in the reign of Henry II. or, as Willis, 1110. It is a handſome pile, with two tranſepts, in length from eaſt to weſt 300 feet, and the body with the ailes 76 feet broad. Behind the choir is a moſt beautiful chapel, with a rich roof of carved ſtone, built by biſhop Vaughan, t. Henry VIII. as a kind of presbytery between the choir and Lady chapel. In the laſt, whoſe roof, as well as thoſe of the ailes of the choir and tranſepts have been down ever ſince the civil war, are monuments for three biſhops, and in the nave, &c. four or five more. In the north wall of the choir is the ſhrine of St. David, a kind of altar tomb, with a canopy of four pointed arches, and in front four quatrefoil holes into which the votaries put their offerings, which were taken out by the monks at two iron doors behind. In the choir are alſo the monuments of Owen Tudor, ſecond huſband of queen Catharine, Rhys ap Tudor[t], biſhops Jorwerth and Anſelm in the 13th century, and Edmund earl of Richmond, father of Henry VII. This laſt monument is ſaid to have prevented Henry VIII. from removing the ſee to Caermarthen. Giraldus Cambrenſis, who was archdeacon of Brecon, canon of Hereford and rector of Cheſterton, Oxford, was buried here 1213[u]. On the north ſide of the church are ſome walls of St. Mary's college, founded by biſhop Houghton and John of Gaunt 1365, valued at £. 106. per annum[x].

St. David's

The little river Alan divides the church on the weſt from the reſt of the cloſe. Over it formerly lay a large block of marble, 10 feet long, called Lechlavar, or the ſpeaking ſtone; becauſe attempting to ſpeak once as a corpſe was carrying over it ſplit in two, on which account no more corpſes were carried over it. Merlin had foretold that a king of England returning from the Conqueſt of Ireland wounded Lechlavar.

[d] Lel. V. 28. [e] Ib. [f] Ib. V. 12. [g] Tan. 719.
[h] Lel. V. 28. [i] Ib. [k] Powel's Hiſt. of Wales, p. 243—245. [l] Lel. V. 28.
[m] Ib. [n] Ubi ſupra. [o] Lel. V. 28. [p] Tan. 720.
[q] Ware ſays he was ſuppoſed to be buried at Ludlow in a monaſtery of his own order, which was the Carmelite, II. 261.
[r] Lel. V. 28. 29. [s] B. Willis, Hiſt. of St. Davids, p. 36.
[t] To whoſe ſon a MS. t. Elizabeth, quoted by Willis, p. 69. gives Owen's monument.
[u] Tan. Bib. Brit. [x] Tan. 720. Grose.

by a man with a red hand ſhould expire on this ſtone. Whereupon, when Henry II. paſſed over it in pilgrimage at his return from Ireland a woman exclaimed aloud, "Deliver us, Lechlavar, deliver the "world and the nation from this man." The king ſtopped ſhort, and looking earneſtly at the ſtone, paſſed boldly over it, and upbraided Merlin with falſehood: but he was preſently anſwered that he was not the king mentioned, nor was he to conquer Ireland. Thus Giraldus. John Hooker, who tranſlated his Hiſtory of Ireland for Hollinſhed, came on purpoſe to ſee for this famous ſtone, 1575, but an arched bridge had been built in its place, and "a "report remained among the common people of "ſuch a ſtone to have been there in times paſt[y]." Giraldus adds, that in his time, under archbiſhop David II. this river and Piſtyl Dewi, a ſpring in the churchyard, more than once ran with wine[z]. On the other ſide this river ſtands the ſhell of three ſides of a magnificent palace built by biſhop Gower. The hall is 58 feet by 23, to which adjoins a parlour 25 feet ſquare, with an oratory. The kitchen is 23 feet by 28, with a central pillar ſupporting four wide arches which occupy the four ſides of the room forming four vaſt chimnies. The ſouth ſide of the quadrangle conſiſts of a very noble hall, built as they ſay to entertain king John on his return from Ireland, 90 feet by 30, with a beautiful catharine-wheel eaſt window, and over the porch two ſtatues called king John and his queen. To this room adjoins another 30 feet by 28, and a ſecond 46 by 20, beſides other apartments and offices. Within the cloſe are four or five good prebendal houſes; thoſe of the minor canons being mere cottages; and north-eaſt of St. Mary's college are ruins of the vicars chorals college.

As to the antient name of St. David's there is not far from it a place ſtill called Melin Meneu, but the original ſignification of the word Meneu is now perhaps irretrievably loſt. Mr. Lluyd, however, recommends it to the curious in Ireland and Scotland, where the names of places agree much with thoſe in Wales, to conſider whether it may not ſignify a frith or narrow ſea. For we find the channel between Caernarvonſhire and the iſle of Angleſea called Aber-meneu, and there is alſo a ſmall fretum called the Sound, between this place and the iſle of Ramſey, and another place called Meney, not far from a frith in the county of Buchan in Scotland[a]. Beſides the inſtance of the ſands being waſhed off this coaſt, related by Giraldus, we find another in 1590 thus deſcribed by that eminent antiquary Mr. George Owen in his MS. hiſtory of this county. "About 12 or 13 years ſince it happened that the ſea ſands at Newgal, which are covered every tide, were by ſome extraordinary violence of the waves ſo waſhed off that there appeared ſtocks of trees doubtleſs in their native places: for they retained manifeſt ſigns of the ſtrokes of the ax at the falling of them. The ſands being waſhed off in the winter theſe buts remained to be ſeen all the ſummer following; but the next year the ſame were covered again with the ſands. By this it appears that the ſea in that place has intruded upon the land. Moreover, I have been told by the neighbours of Coed Traeth near Tenby that the like has been ſeen alſo upon thoſe ſands, &c." To this an ingenious and inquiſitive gentleman of this county added, that the ſame had been obſerved of late years near Capel Stinan, or St. Juſtinian's, where were ſeen not only the roots or ſtocks of trees, but alſo pieces of ſquared timber. As for roots or ſtumps Mr. Lluyd had often obſerved them at a low ebb in the ſands between Borth and Aber Dyvwy in Cardiganſhire, but remembered nothing of any impreſſion of the ax on them: but, on the contrary, that many of them, if not all, were very ſmooth, and that they appeared as to ſubſtance more like the coalblack peat or fuel turf than timber.

Rocking. About one mile from St. David's on a high ridge of rocks lies the once famous rocking ſtone, or Y maen ſigl, which, though 20 yoke of oxen could not move it, might be ſhaken by the ſlighteſt touch[b]. It is ſaid to have been thrown off its balance by the Parliament's ſoldiers. From this ſpot is an extenſive view of Whitſand bay, otherwiſe called Porth maur, or the Great bay, in which are the ſix rocks called the Biſhop and his clerks. South of them is St. David's head, an huge rock, with a ſmaller like a man's head on it, above which is a round broad ſtone reſting on another ſtone, and called Coit y Artur, being probably a ſepulchral monument. This bay is almoſt dry at low water. The cliffs above are very high, ſteep, and full of clefts. Between this place and St. David's is the ſhell of Capel Stinen, St. Stinan's or St. Juſtinian's chapel, which has been as ſtrong and well built as any church in Wales, "a mile ſtrait weſt from St. David's betwixt Port-"clais and Porthmaur[c]." It ſtands on the edge of the ſhore oppoſite to the north point of Ramſey iſland, and the current between them is called the Sound, half a league over, and ſuppoſed to have been once land. The tide runs here at the rate of ſeven knots an hour. It is the ſafeſt harbour on this coaſt, but difficult to enter. Near the entrance are dangerous rocks called the Bitch and her Whelps, ſtretching from the iſland croſs the ſound: another called the Horſeſhoe, and in the middle another called the Horſe, and covered at high water.

Kemaes. The lordſhip of Kemaes is a dreary track full of vaſt rocks and piles of blue ſtone, and having no other proſpect except the ſea.

Fiſkard. At Fiſkard in Kemmiſland, is a little haven, having a reſort of ſhips[c].

Fiſhgard ſtands on a ſteep rock, having a convenient harbour formed by the Gwain river, overhung by an exceeding high mountain, along whoſe ſide is cut a narrow road ſcarce wide enough to admit two horſes abreaſt, and without any fence to the ſea. From hence is a fine view of the ſea and harbour, and the road leads down to the river Gwain, which divides Pebidiauc from Fiſhgard, and is croſſed by a long ſtone bridge. Here is a great herring fiſhery, but the village, though it has a market, is as miſerable as Nangle before-mentioned. Six miles from Fiſgard is Newport, a mean market town, called by Giraldus[d] Llanhever, or the town on the river Nevern. Leland[e] ſays a monk of Stratfluer told him it was called Tredraith. The caſtle was built by the deſcendants of Martin de Tours; and in it Rhys ap Gryffith prince of South Wales, who was ever contriving how to oppreſs his own family, was [y] Hollinſhed's Hiſtory of Ireland, p. 24.

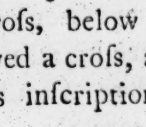
[z] It. II. 1.
[a] Lluyd in Gibſon.
[b] Owen's MS. Hiſt. in Gibſon.
[c] Lel. V. 29.
[d] It. II. 5.
[e] V. 79.

at laſt impriſoned. It was demoliſhed by Llewellyn, prince of South Wales, when poſſeſſed by the Flemings, and only the gateway left. In a cloſe between the church and the river is a vaſt ſtone of near five tons weight, and above nine feet diameter, reſting on three others. Mr. Lluyd ſays there are five of theſe cromlechs near one another, each on four ſtones placed edgewiſe, which from two ſtones ſtanding near them ſome ſuppoſed to have been ſurrounded by a circle of ſtones, and he thinks them rather kiſtvaens than cromlechs. Mr. Wyndham deſcribes them all four cloſe by the road within the circuit of about 60 yards, and one of them nearly perfect. In a field below this is an earthwork ſuppoſed to have been a battery againſt the caſtle. About one mile north-weſt of Newport is the village of Nevern, in whoſe churchyard, on the ſouth ſide, ſtands a ſingle ſtone, of a ſquare form, two feet broad, 18 inches thick, and 13 feet high, neatly carved on all ſides with knotwork of various patterns. The top is circular, charged with a croſs, below which on the eaſt and weſt faces are carved a croſs, and about the middle of the eaſt face this inſcription:



perhaps the initials of the names of the erectors. This ſtone, beſides being out of its perpendicular, appears to have a natural crookedneſs. On the north ſide of the ſame church-yard Mr. Lluyd mentions a rude irregular ſhaped ſtone, about two yards high, pitched on end, with this inſcription on its ſouth ſide:

i. e. Vitaliani Emeriti.

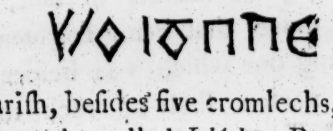
which evidently belonged to ſome Roman veteran: but the ſtone is now gone, as is that not 2 feet high round at the top, on which was the following inſcription, copied for biſhop Gibſon by Mr. William Gambold, of Exeter college, Oxford.



In this pariſh, beſides five cromlechs, is another monument commonly called Llèch y Drybedh (i. e. Tripodium), and by ſome the Altar ſtone. It is of an oval form, about 12 yards in circumference, placed on four ſtones ſcarce two feet high, one of which does not touch it. At the ſouth end it is about four feet and a half thick, diminiſhing at the other end to four inches, where is a duct or canal ſeemingly intended to carry off ſome liquor[f], and ſuch as Dr. Borlaſe calls a rock baſon.

Near Pentre Evan in this pariſh Mr. G. Owen's MS. hiſtory before cited deſcribes a monument called y Gromlech, conſiſting of a circle of ſeveral rude ſtones, whoſe diameter is about 50 feet ſurrounding a large ſtone, 18 feet long, and 9 broad, and 3 feet thick at one end, ſupported by three large rude ſtones about eight feet high, with five others which do not contribute to its ſupport. The area under this ſtone is neatly flagged. A piece about ten feet long, and five broad, and more than 20 oxen could draw, broken off the larger ſtone lay by it. The name of cromlech given to this monument, which was examined by a correſpondent of biſhop Gibſon's, and found to agree in the main with the above deſcription, is equivalent to that of Meineu gwyr[g], which we ſhall ſee given to a ſimilar one in Caernarvonſhire; Crom, as well as Gwyr ſignifying crooked or bending, and Llech a flat ſtone, which has induced late antiquaries to ſuppoſe them altars, or objects to which the antient inhabitants bowed. The Iriſh hiſtorians call one of their principal idols Cromcruach. This idol ſtood in the plain of May-ſleuct in Breſin, adorned with or wrought [cælatum] of gold and ſilver, and ſurrounded by 12 leſſer ones of braſs, all which, at the approach of St. Patrick, ſunk into the earth up to their heads, which remained above ground when one of the ſaint's biographers wrote[h]. We find monuments like the cromlechs in Scotland, where they are called chapels and temples, and ſaid to have belonged to the Drounnich, which ſome interpret the Picts, but by Dr. Garden, profeſſor of divinity at Aberdeen, the Druids[i]. In confirmation of the profeſſor's opinion, we may obſerve, that a village in Angleſea is called Tre Drw, or the Druid's town. Now the diminutive of Driw muſt be Druvin (whence perhaps Caer Drewin in Merionethſhire), and ch is well known to be an uſual Iriſh termination in ſuch nouns. Such monuments cannot belong to the Danes, who never were in Wales and the Highlands, where they are as frequent if not more ſo than in any other parts of Britain, and if that people landed in other parts of thoſe countries it was as pirates, and without making any ſettlement, or reſiding long enough to erect ſuch maſſive monuments, which ſeem to be rather the work of a ſettled people, and are alſo found in the mountains of Caernarvonſhire, and other places where the Danes do not appear to have been. And though there ſhould be a reſemblance between our ſtone circles and ſome in Saxo Grammaticus, Wormius, and Rudbeck, none of thoſe have a cromlech in the middle, ſo common in Wales both with and without circles of ſtones. But admitting an exact correſpondence in theſe monuments, we are not obliged to aſcribe them to the Danes: for as one nation ſince the planting of Chriſtianity imitated another in their churches, chapels, and ſepulchral monuments, ſo in the time of paganiſm the religious rites and cuſtoms muſt have been derived from one country to another. And ſome cromlechs occur in France and Italy, and probably on ſearch in Germany and Spain, if not alſo in Italy[k]. Mr. Aubrey in that article of his Monumenta Britannica intitled Druid Temples, gives inſtances of human ſkeletons found on the outſide of one or two of them in Wiltſhire, and Dr. Garden ſays that ſome perſons had dug aſhes out of the bottom of a little circle of ſtones ſet cloſe together in one of theſe monuments called the chapel of Tillegone, alias Capel Mac Mulach, which is full of graves, and was, till within memory, a burial place for poor people, and ſince continued for ſtrangers and children dying unbaptized.

St. Dogmael's abbey, about one mile weſt from Cardigan was founded in a vale encompaſſed by hills for Benedictines, or the reformed order of Tiron[l], by Martin of Tours, in the time of William the Conqueror, valued at £. 87. 8*s.* 6*d.*[m] Some ruins of the chapel remain: but the ſtone is not to be found, St. Dogmael's abbey.

[f] See before, p. 511. [g] Lluyd. [h] O Flaherty Ogygia, p. 196.
[i] See his letters to Mr. Aubrey, printed in the Archæologia I. p. 312, and extracted in the different parts of the Additions to Scotland. Mr. Aubrey firſt ſuſpected that theſe monuments belonged to the Druids.
[k] See one near Trent in Wright's Travels, p. 313. 493. See alſo Stukeley's Stonehenge and Abury, Keyſler, and Caylus, Recueil VI. pl. 115. 117. 120. 123.
[l] Leſ. V. 12. ſays Bonhomes. [m] Tan. 718.

whence Mr. Gambold copied the inſcription given by biſhop Gibſon.

SASRANI FILL CVNOTAMI

the laſt of which words the biſhop ſuppoſes to be Britiſh, and the ſame as Kynedha, but the former not to be parallelled by any to be met with in preſent uſe or genealogical MSS.

Barrows. In Kemaes barony are four remarkable barrows, in one of which opened by order of Mr. Lloyd of Kwn Gloin in the cloſe of the laſt century were found five urns containing a conſiderable quantity of bones and aſhes: one of which, with its contents, was by John Philips, of Dol Haidh, eſq; depoſited in the Aſhmolean Muſeum. Another urn was found not many years before in a barrow in the pariſh of Melineu, and another later on a mountain not far from Kil Rhedyn [o].

On a farm called Hondre, in Miline pariſh, ſome labourers hedging came to a number of ſtones of different ſizes, ſome thrown together promiſcuouſly, but the uppermoſt lying over one another like tiles on a roof. At about nine feet depth they came to a very large ſtone about ſeven feet long, four or five broad, and 20 inches thick. At its eaſt and weſt end were placed two ſtones on edge, and others under the ſides, and in the middle was a cavity of about two or three feet and an half high, and of the length of the ſtone, containing only a little black earth. Over the whole the ſoil had been ſomewhat raiſed in a circular form as a barrow, but the field having been in conſtant tillage, had much reduced its height. In the ſame or neighbouring pariſh on a high mountain called from its ſugarloaf form Voel dri gans, are three cairns of looſe ſtones very near each other, and on the ſame mountain veſtiges of a camp, double ditched, and the ſites of the tenth hollowed out very viſible [n].

Scalmey, Great and Little. "A good deal upward above Milford haven, "lyeth Great Scalmey and Little Scalmey, one almoſt "joining to another, and both longing to the king, "but not inhabited propter piratas & celi incle- "mentiam. Great Scalmey hath no houſe in it "that I remember. Mr. Hogan ſaid that there "was a chapel. The farmers bring over thither "ſhepe and colts, which feed very wildly there, Schoukold iſland. "but the colts taken from thence be larger and "better fed than harted or apt for war. Schoukhold "iſle joineth to Scalmey bigger iſle than ſhe, only "a paſſage for ſhips divides them. As I remember "it lyeth ſouther than Scalmey. Theſe iſles lie not "far from the ſhore in the ſide of the mouth of "Milford haven. Beyond Scalmey, further into Greſſeholme. "the end of the Severn ſea lieth a great black and "high rock like an iſle. Greſſe Holme is a good way Ramſey iſle. "into the ſe, and is but ſmall, and without habi-"tation. Ramſey iſle containeth three iſlets, whereof "the biſhop of St. David's is owner of the greateſt, "but the chanter of St. David's claymeth another of "them, and the archdeacon of Caermardin the "third, In them is good feeding for ſheep and "horſes [o]." This iſland is half a mile long, and three quarters broad, and divided into two conſiderable farms.

The rev. Mr. Nicholas Roberts, A. M. rector of Llan Deivi Velfri, communicated to biſhop Gibſon the following account of ſome migratory ſea fowl that breed in the iſle of Ramſey, with other curious particulars. "This iſland, formerly called Ynis Devanog, from a chapel dedicated to that ſaint, now ſwallowed up by the ſea, ſeems by the proverb to have been part of our Britiſh continent. In it is a ſmall promontory or neck of land iſſuing into the ſea, and called Ynis yr hyrdhod, or Ram's iſland, which I preſume is the name of Ramſay. To this iſland and ſome rocks adjoining, called by the ſeamen the Biſhop and his clerks, yearly reſort about the beginning of April ſuch a number of birds of ſeveral ſorts, that none but thoſe who have been eye-witneſſes can be prevailed upon to believe it, all which, after breeding here, leave us before Auguſt. They come to theſe rocks and alſo leave them conſtantly in the night time: for in the evening the rocks ſhall be covered with them, and the next morning not a bird to be ſeen: ſo in the evening not a bird ſhall appear, and the next morning the rocks ſhall be full. They alſo viſit us commonly about Chriſtmas, and ſtay a week or more, and then take their leave till breeding time. Three ſorts of theſe migratory birds are called in Welſh Mora [p], Poeth wy, and Pâl, in Engliſh Eligug, Razorbill, and Puffin: to which we may add the Harry bird: though I cannot at preſent aſſure you whether this bird comes and goes off with the reſt. The Eligug [q] lays but one egg, which, as well as thoſe of the Razorbill and Puffin, is as big as a duck's, but longer and ſmaller at one end. From this egg ſhe never parts unleſs forced till ſhe hatches it, nor then till the young one is able to follow her; but is all the while fed by the male. This and the Razorbill breed upon the bare rocks, making no manner of neſt, and ſometimes in ſuch a place, that being frightened thence, the egg or young one which was before upheld by the breaſt on a narrow ſhelving rock tumbles into the ſea. The Puffin [r] and Harry bird [s] breed in holes either thoſe of rabbits (wherewith Ramſey is abundantly furniſhed all black), or ſuch as they dig with their beaks. The Harry birds are never ſeen on land but when taken: and the manner of taking theſe and the Puffins is commonly by planting nets before their burrows, wherein they ſoon entangle themſelves. Theſe four ſorts cannot raiſe themſelves upon the wing from the land, but, if at any diſtance from the cliffs, waddle (for they cannot be ſaid to go, their legs being too infirm, and placed much more backward than a duck's, ſo that they ſeem to ſtand upright) to ſome precipice, and thence caſt themſelves off, and take wing: but from the water they will riſe to any [o] G. [n] Rev. Mr. How l's letter to me, Sept. 6, 1777. [o] Lel. V. 27.

Stinan a Devanog dau anwyl gymydog

[p] Murre. Willoughby, 323. Alca. Hoieri epiſt. ad Cluſ. It is alſo called Auk, and in Cornwall Murre. Ib. In the Weſtern iſlands Falk. Martin's Voyage to St. Kilda, 33. and in Scotland Marrot. Sibald's Fife, 48. Pennant, Zool. 8vo. 403. calls this the Razor bill.

[q] Lommia. Hoieri epiſt. ad Cluſium. In Cornwall it is called a Kiddaw, and in Yorkſhire a Skout. Willoughby Ornith. p. 324. Pennant, p. 410.

[r] Anas arctica Cluſii. Fratercula Briſſonii. Puphinus Anglicus, Geſneri. Willoughby, p. 325. Pennant, 407.

[s] Shearwater, Sir Thomas Brown. Raii Synop. av. 134. Willoughby 334. Pennant, who mentions the Shearwater, p. 433, ſays nothing of the Harry bird.

height. The Puffin lays three white eggs: and the reſt but one, which is ſpeckled."

The other particulars which biſhop Gibſon thought proper to extract from his correſpondent's letter relate to a remarkable cavern and a ſea weed. "Near Stackpool Boſher, or Boſherton, on the ſea ſide, is a pool or pit, called Boſherton mere, the depth whereof ſeveral who have ſounded have not diſcovered. This pit bubbles and foams, and makes ſuch a noiſe before ſtormy weather, that it is heard above ten miles off. The banks are of no great circumference at the top, but broader downwards; and from the bottom there is a great breach towards the ſea, which is about a furlong diſtant. So that conſidering the bubbling and the extraordinary noiſe this pit makes againſt ſtormy weather, I am apt to ſuſpect it may have a ſubterraneous communication with the ſea water. But there is much more ſaid of this place than I ſhall trouble you with at preſent, becauſe I take ſome relations of it for fabulous: and living remote from it myſelf I have had no opportunities of being ſatisfied of the truth from others. Its noiſe is diſtinctly known from that of the ſea, which alſo on theſe coaſts often roars very loud. And the neighbouring inhabitants to the ſea can give a ſhrewd gueſs what weather will enſue by the noiſe it makes. For when it proceeds from ſuch a creek or haven they will expect this or that ſort of weather will follow. And by theſe obſervations I have been told the evening before what weather we ſhould have next day, which has happened very true, and that not once as by chance, but often. Near St. David's, eſpecially at Eglwys Abernon, and in other places, they gather in the ſpring time a kind of Alga, or ſea weed, with which they make a ſort of food called Lhavan, or Lhawvan, in Engliſh Black Butter. Having gathered the weed they waſh it clean from ſand and ſlime, and ſweat it between two tile ſtones. Then they ſhred it ſmall, and knead it well, as they do dough for bread, and make it up into great balls or rolls, which ſome eat raw, and others fried with oatmeal and butter. It is accounted ſovereign againſt all diſtempers of the liver and ſpleen, and the late Dr. Owen aſſured me that he found relief from it in the acuteſt fits of the ſtone." This ſea plant biſhop Gibſon took to be the Oyſter green, or Lactuca marina. He found the ſame cuſtom obtain in Glamorganſhire, where it is called Laver bread, as alſo in ſeveral parts of Scotland and Ireland, and probably in ſome counties of England.

Kilgaran, two miles from Cardigan, ſtands on a ſteep ſtoney hill, with the caſtle at the end of the ſtreet. This caſtle was built by William Marſhall, earl of Pembroke, 1222[t]. The ſalmon leap is a mile or two from the town, between Kenmarth and Llan Dagwidh, and is occaſioned by a cataract over which the water runs out of the pool on the top of the rock above, formerly cultivated by St. Ludoc, and called Canarch Maur. Giraldus make the height of this fall equal to the height of the largeſt ſpear. The inhabitants of Cardigan differ in their accounts, and many of them repreſent it as no very extraordinary thing. Kilgaran.

William, the third earl of Pembroke of the name of Herbert, was ſucceeded 1630 by his brother Philip, and he 1649-50 by his 4th ſon and nameſake. He 1669 by his eldeſt ſon William; he 1674 by his half broiher Philip. To him ſucceeded 1683 his brother Thomas, the collector of the marbles at Wilton, who, dying 1732-3, was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry, and he 1750 by his ſon Henry, 19th and preſent earl. Earls of Pembroke.

[t] Wynne. Groſe.

Rare Plants found in Pembrokeſhire.

Cyperus longus. Sweet Cyperus or Engliſh Galingale; in and near a little ſtream that runs into Whitſand bay between St. David's town and St. David's head.

Melittis Meliſſophyllum. Baſtard Balm or Balm-leaved Archangel; in the woods about Haverford Weſt.

Scirpus ſylvaticus. Millet Cyperus-Graſs; in a brook near Haverford Weſt.

Siſon verticillatum. Narrow leaved Carraway; in meadows and paſtures: between Trecaſtle and St. David's.

CARDIGANSHIRE.

Cardiganſhire. THE ſhore bending back obliquely from OCTOPITARVM or St. David's head to the weſt admits the ſea into a ſpacious bay in form of a half moon, on which lies the third diviſion of the Dimetæ, called by the Engliſh Cardiganſhire, by the Britans Sire Aber-tivi, by antient writers Ceretica, which if any one ſhould ſuppoſe derived from king Caratacus, it will be mere conjecture not founded on the authority of the antients; and yet we read that the famous Caratacus was king here. This is a champain country to the weſt on the ſea, as alſo to the ſouth where the river Tivy divides it from Caermarthenſhire. But on the eaſt and north where it joins to Brecknock and Montgomeryſhires is a long chain of mountains yielding plenty of graſs; at the foot of which are ſcattered ſeveral lakes. This country like the reſt of Wales ſeems to have formerly been diverſified rather with huts than towns, from that ſaying of king Caratacus, who viewing the magnificence and ſplendor of Rome when he was priſoner there, ſaid, "When you can call theſe and ſuch like buildings yours, do you covet our poor huts?" I ſhall briefly run over the places moſt conſiderable for their antiquity.

K. Caratacus.

Zonaras.

Turobius fl. The river Tivy called by Ptolemy TVROBIVS [a], corruptly for Dwr Tivi, q. d. the river Tivi riſes in Lin-Tivy a lake under the mountains above-mentioned, rolling firſt over ſtones with great noiſe without a regular channel through a very ſtoney country near which at Roſs is held a very great cattle fair among the mountaineers, till it comes to Stratfleur late a Cluniac abbey ſurrounded by mountains. Then recovering its chanel it runs by Tregaron and Landevi brevi, built and named in memory of David biſhop of Menevia, where by the authority of Scripture and by a miracle, the ground as they ſay lifting itſelf up under him into a hillock from whence he preached to a numerous audience, he confuted the Pelagian hereſy, which had begun to recover itſelf in Britain. To this place and further ſouth the river Tivy runs to the town of Lan Beder. Thence turning weſt with a broader chanel near Kilgarran it throws itſelf down a precipice forming the Salmon leap beforementioned. It yields great plenty of ſalmon and was antiently the only river in Britain as Giraldus [b] Cambrenſis believed that had beavers. This is an amphibious animal, with fore feet like a dog and hinder ones like a gooſe; its ſkin of a dity aſh colour, its tail oblong, broad, and cartilagineous, which when in the water it uſes as a rudder. Giraldus has many obſervations on their dexterity, but none are to be found here now.

Roſs.

Stratfleur.

Tregaron. Lhandevi brevi.

Lhan Beder.

Beavers.

Cardigan. Scarce two miles hence is Cardigan, called by the Britans Aber Tivy, q. d. Mouth of Tivy, the principal town of this county, fortified by Gilbert ſon of Richard Clare, and deſtroyed by Rhys ap Griffin, to whom it was betrayed, and the governor Robert Fitz Stephens or Stephannides as ſome call him, taken, who having long lived in a ſtate of uncertainty among the Welſh, his inveterate enemies, was at length releaſed upon condition that he ſhould renounce all his poſſeſſions in Wales. He was the firſt Norman that ſucceeded in the invaſion of Ireland with a few troops, and by his valour opened the way to the Engliſh.

Fitz S.

From the mouth of the Tivy the ſhore recedes gently interſected by many ſmall rivulets, among which in the upper part of the country the principal is that called by Ptolemy STVCCIA [c], whoſe name ſtill remains intire in common uſe, Y-ſtwith. It has at its ſource lead mines, and at its mouth Aber-y-ſtwith, the moſt populous town of the whole county which Gilbert de Clare fortified with walls and Walter Bec an Engliſhman held a long time againſt the Welſh. Contiguous to this is Lhan Badern vawr, q. d. the church of great Paternus, who was a native of Bretagne, as the writer of his life expreſſes it, "and by feeding governed and by governing "fed the church of Ceretica." To his memory in after ages was founded a church and an epiſcopal ſee here. But the biſhopric, as Roger Hoveden writes, "early declined, becauſe the pariſhioners ſlew "their paſtor [d]."

Stuccia r. Aberyſt.

Lhan Vawr.

At the ſame mouth the river Ridol falls into the ſea riſing from Plinlimon, a very high mountain which bounds the ſouth part of the county and pours from its boſom the noble rivers Severn and Wye already mentioned. Not much above the mouth of the river Stuccia the river Devi falls into the ſea, ſerving as a boundary between this county and Mericnethſhire.

Rhidol. Plinlim.

Dyvy.

The Normans were ſcarce ſettled in Britain when they invaded this coaſt with a fleet, and met with ſucceſs. For the maritime parts were gradually in the reign of William Rufus wreſted from the Welſh: But they gave the greateſt part of them to Cadugan ap Blethin, a diſcreet Briton of great and univerſal influence all over Wales, and a faſt friend to the Engliſh. But his hot-headed ſon Oen averſe to peace harraſſing the Engliſh and the newly-arrived Flemings, his unfortunate father was deprived of his poſſeſſions, for his ſon's offences, and the ſon being forced to fly retired to Ireland. King Henry I. gave Cardiganſhire to Gilbert Clare, who placed garriſons, and fortified the caſtles about it. But Cadogan and his ſon Oen being afterwards received into favour by the Engliſh, recovered alſo his pro-

Lords of Card.

[a] Τουριβιος. Horſley, 377.
[b] II. c. 3.
[c] Horſley, 376.
[d] The additions to Camden, 1695, ſuppoſe this biſhop Idnert.

perty.

perty. But Oen returning to his natural bent and raiſing freſh diſturbances was ſlain by Girald of Pembroke, whoſe wife Neſt he had carried off. His father was carried to England, where after long expecting a favourable turn of fortune he returned at laſt in his old age to his own country, and was ſlain by ſurprize by his nephew Madoc. Roger de Clare afterwards had Cardiganſhire given him by king Henry II. but Richard earl of Clare, his ſon, if I miſtake not[e], being ſlain by the Welſh in his way hither by land, Rhys prince of South Wales defeating the Engliſh with great ſlaughter, by his victorious army at length reduced it to his obedience. It ſoon after, however, fell by degrees into the hands of the Engliſh without bloodſhed.

In this county are 64 pariſh churches.

[e] Giraldus Cambrenſis, I. 4.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Cardigan is in length from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt above 40 miles, in breadth from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt 20, and near 100 in circumference, contains five hundreds, ſix market towns, and ſends to parliament one knight of the ſhire, and one burgeſs for Cardigan.

That Caratacus was ſovereign here does not appear from Tacitus, or any other author, unleſs we may preſume that the Silures were his ſubjects from theſe words of Tacitus[a]: Itum inde in Siluras ſuper propriam ferociam Caractaci viribus confiſos. And granting him to have been king of the Dimetæ, they who are concerned for the antient reputation of this country may fairly urge that even admitting the authority of Zonaras who lived 1000 years after Tacitus, nothing can be collected from that ſpeech of Caractacus to prove this country to have been more poorly inhabited than other provinces, ſince he ſpeaks of his dominions in general, and Tacitus ſays he was ſovereign of many nations[r].

Notwithſtanding Mr. Camden's aſſertion, that the ſouth ſide of this county is champain, all the way from Newcaſtle Emlin in Caermarthenſhire to Cardigan is over bleak hills like thoſe between the firſt of theſe towns and Caermarthen, but the vallies below to the weſt are more cultivated. Leland ſays the paſtures of the mountains of Cardiganſhire be ſo great that the hundredth parts of it rots on the ground, and makes ſogges and quick more by long continuance for lack of eating it[b]. The beef both in ſize and quality is greatly inferior to that of Monmouthſhire, whoſe inhabitants give this county the nickname of the Devil's Grandmother's Jointure. Coals and fuel are very ſcarce. Lime for manure is fetched from Caermarthenſhire. The wealth of this county lies in its mines, and ſcarce ſhews itſelf above ground. Though there are many gentlemen's ſeats ſcattered about it, it is perhaps as little reſorted to by ſtrangers as any part of South Wales.

Tyve r. "Of al the pooles none ſtandith in ſo rokky and "ſtony ſoile as Tyve doth, that hath alſo within him "many ſtones: the ground all about Tyve, and a "great mile off, toward Stratfler, is horrible with the "ſight of bare ſtones as Cregeryri mountains be[c]." "Tyve [river] runnith from the head ſtill almoſt "playne weſt untill he toucheth within a ſix miles of "Cairmardin, and then he turneth towards the "north[d]."

Stratefleur. "Stratefleur is ſet round with mountains not far "diſtant except on the weſt part where Diffrin Tyve "is. The church is large, ſide iſlid and croſs iſlid. "The foundation of the body of the chirch was "made to have been 60 feet longer than it is now. "By is a large cloyſter, the fratry and infirmary be "now mere ruines. The cemeteri wherein the "country about doth bury is veri large and meanly "walled with ſtone. In it be 39 great hue trees. "The baſe court or camp afore the abbey is veri fair "and large[e]. It is an abbey of white monks on "Tine [l. Tive][f]," founded by Rhys ap Griffith, prince of Wales 1164. It was burnt down in the wars of Edward I. 1294, and ſoon rebuilt, and at the diſſolution valued at £. 118. 17ſ. per annum[g]. Manv of the Welſh princes were buried here, and their records kept here from 1156 to 1270.

Llan C. "Llan Clere, a nunnery of white nuns, cell of Strat- "fleur, ten miles from Stratflur on the high way to "Cardigan. The village by is called Taleſarne green[h], This Ciſtertian nunnery was valued at £. 57.[i] Llyn T. "Llyn Tyve is in compace three quarters of a mile, "and fed from higher places, with a little broket, "and iſſueth out again by a ſmall gut. There "are in it very good trout and eels, and no other "fiſh[k].

Llynlle. "Llin Heligna, or Lignante, has only trouts and "eels. The ſouth ſide of the pool has trouts as red as "ſalmon: the weſt ſide has white, likewiſe as hath "Lline Tyne[l]."

Devy r. "Devy divideth Cardiganſhire from Merioneth- "ſhire[m]."

A little below Llechryd bridge not far from Kilgaran are ſome large and expenſive works, lately erected by a company for making tin plates[n].

On the coaſt between Llanarch and Aberayron is the intrenchment of a ſmall caſtle, half of which has been long ſince waſhed away by the ſea. There are ſeveral old camps in this neighbourhood on the mountain tops and about the midway between Cardigan and Aberayron is a very large round one double trenched. About two miles beyond Llanrŵſted are two druidical monuments, upright ſingle ſtones, one of them 11 feet and an half above the ground and five feet and an half broad[o].

Llanſ. "There is a church called Llanſanfride, ſeven "miles from Aberuſtwith upper to Cardigan on "the ſea ſide, and there hath been great building. "But whether this was the abbey of Llanfride, of "the which mention is made in the book de dota- "tione eccleſiæ S. Davidis or no I cannot tell. Ther "is another Llanſanfrid in Comytother, and perad- "venture this is that Llanſanfride nunnery made in "a newer world, of which Giraldus ſpekith. There "hath bene great building at Llanruſtyt, a mile "lower on the ſe bank than Llanſanfride in Cardi- "ganſhire, and ſome ſuppoſe there had been a "nunnery[p]."

Treg. "At Tregaron, the chief town of Pennarth lordſhip, "is a church ſtanding on a round coppe of caſt erth[q]."

[a] Annal. XII. c. [r] G. [b] V. 78. [c] Lel. V. 77.
[d] V. 79. VII. 30. [e] Lel. V. 75, 76. [f] Ib. 12. VII. 31. [g] Tan. 706.
[h] Lel. V. 12. [i] Tan. 706. [k] Lel. V. 76. [l] Lel. Ib. 76, 77.
[m] Lel. V. 78. [n] Wyndham, p. 99. [o] Ib. 102, 103.
[p] Lel. V. 79. Tan. 707. [q] Lel. V. 75. 77. VII. 30.

"Llandewi brewi is but a ſimple or poor village "ſet among mountains on every way but the weſt, "where is the vale of Tyve. I paſſid over a little "brook to enter into it. The collegiate church of "prebendaries ſtandeth ſomewhat upon a high ground, "but it is rude[r]." It was founded for a precentor and 12 prebends by Thomas Bek, biſhop of St. David's 1187, in honour of St. David, who preached at the council held here 519, and thereby put an end to the Pelagian hereſy. It was valued at £. 38. 11s.[s] Biſhop Uſher ſays the ſynod for ſuppreſſing the Pelagian hereſy was held about the year 474 or 475, others 522. For we find in ſome Britiſh records, that St. Dubricius, archbiſhop of Caerleon, having aſſiſted at it, and reſigned his biſhopric to St. David, betook himſelf that year with moſt of his clergy who had met on that occaſion to a monaſtery at Ynys Enlhi or Bardſey iſland, where being free from the noiſe of the world they might with leſs interruption devote the remainder of their time to the ſervice of God. Of this retirement of St. Dubricius and his followers mention is alſo made by Aneurin Gwawdydh (or Gwawdrudh) Mychdeyrn Beirdh, q. d. Aneurin the ſatyriſt, king of the bards, an eminent poet of that age, in theſe lines:

Pan oedh ſaint Senedh Bhrevi,
Drwy arch y prophwydi,
Ar ôl gwiw bregeth Dewi,
Yn myned i ynys Enlhi, &c.[t]

At the church of Llan Devi Brevi Mr. Lluyd found this antient inſcription on a ſtone ſet over the chancel door.

He ſupplies the firſt line acobi, the ſecond redam, and the third Dawid. The inhabitants pretend this commemorates a perſon ſtruck dead by St. David for letting looſe a moſt miſchievous beaver after it had been with difficulty inſnared. He adds another inſcription on a ſtone by the church door without.

The ſexton ſhewed him a rarity called Matkorn yr ych bannog or Matkorn ych Dewi, which he ſaid had been preſerved there ever ſince the time of St. David, adding the fable of the Oxen called Ychen bannog which drew away a monſtrous beaver dead. If this Matkorn is not the interior part of an Ox's horn as its name imports, it very much reſembles it, and is ſo heavy that it ſeems abſolutely petrified. It is full of large cells or holes, and the circumference at the root is about 17 inches. At Lhannio i ſav in this pariſh about one mile from the church Mr. Lluyd found the two following inſcriptions, and was told that ſeveral others had been diſcovered by digging, but that they were diſregarded, and the ſtones were applied to other uſes:

He reads the firſt Caii Artii manibus [or memoriæ] Ennius Primus, and imagines the name of Brevi given to this church from this Primus; the Latin word primus being commonly expreſſed in Welſh by Priv. as forma by fyrv; turma by twrv; Terminus by Terwyn, &c. A Roman inſcription circumſcribed by lines like this may be ſeen in Reineſius, Syntag. Inſc. Cl. 3. LXIV. The C reverſed denotes frequently Caia and ſometimes alſo Caius in the ſame author, p. 722. ↄ SEMPRONIO, &c. This character added to the 1ſt, 5th, 6th, and laſt letters, is ſometimes obſerved in Roman inſcriptions[u]. The ſecond letter of this inſcription is frequent on ſtones and coins. Reineſius, p. 3. has HERCVLI L. ARTIVS, &c. which he is for reading Herculi Lartius; but as we have the name of Artius it may be two names. Roman coins, bricks, and large pieces of freeſtone neatly wrought, are ſometimes found here in a place called Kaer Keſtilh, which literally ſignifies the field of the caſtle, though there neither are nor have been for ſeveral ages any ſigns of building above-ground. This name, however, and theſe marks of Romanity, will not ſuffer us to doubt of there having been a fort, if not a conſiderable Roman town here. And probably what we now call Lhannio was the ſame with that which Ptolemy places among the Dimetæ by the name of Lovantinum or Lovantium which Mr. Camden before placed at Llandevi brevi. If the ſuppoſition that it was a caſtle and not a city or town is contrary to this conjecture, it may, Mr. Lluyd replies, perhaps be as unwarrantable to take all the places in Antoninus or Ptolemy for towns or cities inſtead of forts with a few houſes as occaſion required[x]. Mr. Ward ſays Cardigan, the principal town in the county, ſeems to ſuit Ptolemy's ſituation better, but the antiquities found in the other juſtly merit the preference[y].

That the mixture of fable which obtains in Giraldus's writings may not impeach his credit in general, it may not be amiſs to obſerve here, that the exiſtence of beavers antiently in Wales is confirmed by the laws of Howel Dha which fix the price of the ſkin of the Lloſtlydan or the broadtailed animal at 120 pence, a great ſum for that time[z]. Two or three lakes here ſtill bear the name of Llyn yr

[r] Lel. V. 75. [s] Tan. 77. [t] MS. of R. Vaughan of Hengwrt. G.
[u] Reineſius, p. 755. [x] Lhuyd in Gibſon. [y] Horſl. 372.
[z] Leges Wall. p. 261.

yr Avangk or the beaver pool: Avangk being obviouſly derived from Avon, a river, and an abbreviation of Avonag, q. d. fluviatilis. Some old poets deſcribe the animal in terms exactly anſwering to the beaver: though the name is now ſo little known that ſome have fancied it a ſpectre haunting rivers. Other animals are now extinct which were known to have been here. The Roebuck or Iwrch is valued in the old Welſh laws at the ſame price as a ſhe goat [a], and ſeveral places retain their name as Bryn yr Iwrch, Phynon yr Iwrch, Lhwyn Iwrch, &c. [b] Wolves ſwarmed in Wales and the bordering counties of England, Glouceſter, Worceſter, Hereford, Shropſhire, and Staffordſhire, ſo lately as Edward I. [c] Howel Dha permitted his grand huntſman to chace the Wild boar from the middle of November to the beginning of December [d].

Cardigan. Cardigan ſtands on the eaſt ſide of the mouth of the river Tewi, where it has a fine harbour. Over this river is a handſome ſtone bridge, at the end whereof was a chapel erected on the ſpot where Giraldus's friend archbiſhop Baldwin ſtood when he preached up a cruſade. The church is large and handſome, but too near the river, and contiguous to it are ruins of a priory of black monks cell to Chertſey in Surrey, valued at £.13. 4s. 9d. [e]. The town is large and regular having ſome good houſes. Its chief trade is in lead exported to Ireland.

Aberiſtwith. "Aberuſtwith a market town, once walled, "and hath greater privileges and a better market "than Cardigan [f]. Uſtwith riſith out of a mariſh "ground called Blain Uſtwith three miles from "Llangibihe on Wye. It is in Comeuſtwith, and "runs good ſix miles through it and ſix or ſeven "more to Aber Uſtwith [g]." The valley of Uſtwith "is ſo narrowly incloſed with rockky mountains that "in winter the ſtream occupieth all the bottom of "the valley [h]."

Aberyſtwith carries on an inconſiderable trade, the bar being practicable for large veſſels only in ſpring tides. The herring fiſhery flouriſhed here about 30 years ago, but that fiſh is now a ſtranger to the coaſt. In the warm months the beach favours bathing. Part of the old wall of the town remains ſtripped of its facing, and the caſtle built by Gilbert Strongbow 1107 and rebuilt by Edward I. 1277, is now reduced to a tower ſerving as a ſea-mark: before the gate is a regular modern raveline, probably the work of Cromwell's garriſon [i]. Here was a mint in the reign of Charles I. for the convenience of paying the miners.

Lead mines. "There hath been in times paſt a great mine "digging for lead in Comeuſthith ſix miles from "Stratefleur, wher is a grange longing to Stratefleur, "but ſome men ſuppoſed that it ceaſed: the wood is "ſore waſted [k]."

The moſt conſiderable lead mine within this county is that of Bwlch yr Eſkir his, diſcovered in 1690, late the property of ſir Carbery Pryſe of Gogherdhan, bart. who dying without iſſue the title became extinct, but the eſtate devolved to Edward ſon of Thomas Pryſe of Lhan Vred, eſq. The ore here was ſo near the ſurface that the moſs and graſs in ſome places juſt covered it, which ſeems to authorize Pliny's aſſertion [l], Nigro plumbo ad fiſtulas laminaſque utimur, laborioſius in Hiſpania eruto: ſed in Britannia ſummo terræ corio, adeo largo, ut lex ultro dicatur ne plus certo modo fiat. Mr. William Waller, ſteward to ſir Carbery Pryſe, publiſhed a map and particular account of theſe mines, 8vo. [m]

Lhech yr Aſt. In the pariſh of Lhan Goedmor ſtands Lhech yr Aſt, a vaſt rude ſtone eight or nine yards in circumference and at leaſt half a yard thick, in a reclining poſition, one ſide on the ground, the other ſupported by a ſtone about three feet high. Mr. Lluyd ſaw a ſomewhat ſimilar monument near Llan Edern in Glamorganſhire, called by a name of the ſame ſignification Gwal y Vilaſt, which literally means the Bitch's kennel. This laſt ſtone is much longer and of an oval form about four yards long and two broad, ſupported at one end by a rude ſtone about two feet high, ſomewhat of the ſame form, with thoſe at the head and feet of graves in country church-yards. By the firſt of theſe monuments is ſuch another but leſs and lower; and five kiſtvaens uncovered, ſcarce two feet long, formed of rude ſtones pitched in the ground; as likewiſe a circular area of the ſame kind of ſtones about four yards diameter, but moſt of the ſtones of this circle are now fallen; and about ſix yards from it lies a ſtone on the ground, and another beyond it at the ſame diſtance, which doubtleſs belonged to it [n].

Meinihir. Meini Hirion, near Nenodh, the ſeat of David Parry, eſq; high ſheriff of Pembrokeſhire, are perhaps ſome remaining pillars of ſuch a ſtone circle, though much larger, as that deſcribed in Caermarthenſhire by the name of Meini gwyr [o].

Meinkyvriol. Meini Kyvriol or the numerary ſtones near the ſame place ſeem to be the remains of ſome ſuch monument. They are 19 ſtones lying on the ground in ſuch diſorder as not to be eaſily numbered by the vulgar: only two of them ſeem to have ſtood upright [p].

Lech y gowres. Lhech y Gowres or the Gianteſs's ſtone, well known in this neighbourhood is a vaſt ſtone placed on four other large ones about five or ſix feet high. Beſides theſe four there are two others pitched on end but too low to bear any of the weight. Two large ones and a ſmall one lye on the ground at each end of this monument, and at ſome diſtance from it another rude ſtone which probably related to it. This Lhech y Gowres ſtands on ſuch a ſmall eminence in a plain open field as the Rollrich ſtones in Oxfordſhire [q]. It is eaſy to ſee the ſtone monuments above deſcribed are cromlechs.

Hir v. gwydhog. Hir vaen gwydhog or the conſpicuous coloſſus is a remarkable ſtone about 16 feet, three broad, and two thick, ſtanding on the top of a mountain in the confines of the pariſhes of Kelhan and Lhan y Krwys, and ſerving at preſent as a boundary between this county and Caermarthenſhire. Not far from it is Maen y pren vol which Mr. Lluyd did not ſee, but ſuppoſed by the name it was a kiſtvaen; Prenvol in this county (Prennol in North Wales) ſignifying a ſmall cheſt [r].

Gwyl Talieſin. Gwyl Talieſin, q. d. Talieſin's bed in the pariſh of [a] P. 258. Pennant Zool. I. 39, 40. 8vo. [b] Lluyd in Gibſon. [c] Pennant, Ib. 62 ex Rymer.

[d] Leg. Wall. 41. Pennant, Ib. 44. See end of Davies's Dict. Lluyd in Gibſon.
[e] Tan. 706. Lel. V. 13. [f] Lel. VII. 30. [g] Lel. V. 78. [h] Ib. 76.
[i] Wyndham, 105—106. [k] Lel. V. 79. [l] N. H. XXXIV. c. 17. [m] G.
[n] Lluyd. [o] Lluyd. See before, p. 511. [p] Lluyd.
[q] Lluyd. [r] Lluyd.

Lhan Vihangel geneu'r glyn by the high road about four miles from Aberyſtwyth by its name and the tradition of the neighbourhood about it ought to be the grave of the celebrated poet Taliesin ben beirdh, who flouriſhed about the year 540. It ſeems to be a ſort of kiſtvaen four feet long and three broad, compoſed of four ſtones, one at each end and two ſide ſtones: the higheſt about a foot above ground. It has within theſe five years been entirely plundered and the broken ſtones converted to gate poſts[r]. But all theſe monuments ſeem to be much older than Taliesin and prior to the coming of the Romans among us[s].

In Penbryn pariſh not far from the church on a rude hard ſtone, which once ſtood in a ſmall heap of ſtones, cloſe by which it now lies, is the following inſcription in large and very fair letters.

Mr. Lluyd was at firſt for reading it Cor Balencii jacit Ordous, and interpreting it The heart of Valenetus of North Wales lies here, ſuppoſing ſuch a perſon to have been ſlain there in battle. In old inſcriptions we often find B put for V as Balerius for Valerius, Bixſit for Vixſit, Militabit for Militavit, &c. and the word Ordous ſeems not very far from Ordovices. But that great Britiſh antiquary declares himſelf by no means ſatisfied with this conjecture. In the ſame pariſh he adds was found a Britiſh gold coin weighing he imagined about a guinea, and in the poſſeſſion of John Williams, eſq. of Aber Nantbychan, who communicated a drawing of it to biſhop Gibſon, inſerted in our Pl. XVIII. fig. 12. It is of the ſame kind with the coins found at Carnbre in Cornwall, engraved in our plate of Britiſh coins in the firſt volume, particularly fig. 52 and 54. Biſhop Gibſon compared it with three others leſs perfect in the Aſhmolean Muſeum. From this and many like coins found in other parts of the kingdom Mr. Lluyd concludes the Britans had gold and ſilver money of their own before the Roman conqueſt. For as ſuch of theſe coins as want inſcriptions are always a little hollow on one ſide, and have alſo characters different from the Romans, it is plain the art of coining them was not learnt of the Romans, for had that been the caſe we ſhould have rather met with Roman letters, ſuch as by ſome coins of Caſſivelaun (Britiſh Kaſwalhawn) and Cunobelin (Britiſh Kynvelyn) we find they made uſe of after their conqueſt[t].

Llanbadan Vaur is thought to have been alſo called Mauritanea, where Paternus in the 6th century founded a monaſtery and epiſcopal ſee afterwards united to St. David's. The church ſeems to have been given 1111 to St. Peter's at Glouceſter, and afterwards to Vale royal in Cheſhire[u]. Llanbadan Vawr.

"Paſſing over Wy and ſtying up a hill I looked "back and viewed Penlimnon the head of Wye. It "ſeemed to me a very high mountain and was diſ-"tant by gueſſe 16 miles[w]."

Leland[x] enumerates ten different lakes in this county: Llyn lanabeder, Llynrytthen Llyn Yridde, Llyn Creghant, Llynduy, Llynygorres, Llyngynon, Llyn Creglloydon, Llyn Winge, and another whoſe name is wanting.

Thomas Brudenel baron Brudenel of Stoughton was created earl of Cardigan by Charles II. April 20, 1661, and ſucceeded 1663 by his ſon Robert who was ſucceeded 1703 by his grandſon George[z], and he 1732 by his ſon George, who having married Mary youngeſt daughter of the duke of Montague after the death of his father-in-law aſſumed the name and arms of Montague, and was 1766 created duke of Montague and marquis Monthermer[y]. Earls of Cardigan.

[r] Wyndham, p. 107. [s] Ib. 77. [t] Lluyd. [u] G. [w] Tan. 706. [x] Lel. V. 80. [y] See before in Northamptonſhire.

Rare Plants found in Cardiganſhire.

Euphorbia Peplis. Small Purple Sea Spurge; on ſandy ſea ſhores, near Aberyſtwith.

Statice Armeria. Thrift or Sea Gilly-flower; on maritime and alpine meadows and rocks, near Aberyſtwith.

NORTH WALES.

ORDEVICES.

THE country of the Silures and Dimetæ, which we have hitherto been ſurveying, was in after-ages, when Wales was governed by three princes, called in their language Deheu-barth, q. d. the right hand part, by the Engliſh South Wales, as has been before obſerved. The other two principalities (which they called Guineth and Powis, we North Wales and Powis land), were formerly inhabited by the ORDOVICES, called alſo ORDEVICES and ORDOVICAE, and ſometimes by corruption Ordobicæ: a robuſt and powerful people, keeping cloſe to their mountains, and deriving their temper from their ſoil, who long lived independant both of the Roman and Engliſh government, not being ſubdued by the Romans before the time of Domitian, when Julius Agricola reduced almoſt the whole nation; nor made an Engliſh province before the time of Edward I. They long enjoyed their liberty, truſting to their own bravery and faſtneſſes, which ſeem formed by nature for ambuſcades and to prolong a war.

It is not difficult to mark their limits: but extremely ſo to define their name properly. I was of opinion, however, that as they ſettled above the two rivers Devi, which riſe from contiguous ſprings, and run different ways, and [a] Oar Devi ſignifies in Britiſh upon the rivers Devi, they might thence be called Ordevices; as the Averni received their name from their ſituation upon the Garonne, the Armorici upon the ſea, and the Horeſci upon the river Eſk. Nor indeed is the name of Ordevices totally extinct in this track, great part of it which lies on the ſea being ſtill called by the inhabitants Arduduwy, which the Romans ſeem to have ſoftened into Ordovic and Ordevices. But the whole country except one ſmall part is comprehended under the modern Latin name of Guinethia and Venedotia, by the Britiſh Guineth, as ſome ſuppoſe from the Veneti of Armorica, who, according to Cæſar, uſed frequently to come over in their ſhips. If I may be allowed to change one letter, I ſhould ſuppoſe this name to have been known to the Greeks and Pauſanias, who, in his Arcadica, relates that Antoninus Pius puniſhed our Brigantes for invading GENOVNIA, the Roman province in Britain. If I might ſubſtitute Genouthia to Genounia, that word comes ſo near to Guinethia, and this Guinethia lies ſo contiguous to the Brigantes, that unleſs Pauſanias meant this country, the ableſt critic cannot tell what he means.

But to return: To the Ordevices belonged thoſe countries which now go under the Engliſh name of Montgomeryſhire, Merionethſhire, Caernarvonſhire, Denbighſhire, and Flintſhire.

[a] Ar-Dhyvi.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE, called in Britiſh Sire Tre-Faldwin [a], from the chief town, has on the ſouth Cardigan and Radnorſhire, on the eaſt Shropſhire, on the north Denbighſhire, and on the weſt Merionethſhire. Though very mountainous, it is agreeably interſperſed with fruitful vallies, paſtures, and corn fields: and formerly produced horſes that were greatly eſteemed, which, as Giraldus expreſſes it, "deriving from nature a graceful figure, are "highly admired for ſtatelineſs of limbs and match-"leſs fleetneſs."

Fine horſes.

In the extremity of this county, to the weſt, where it terminates in a kind of cone, ſtands Machleneth, perhaps the MAGLONA of the Romans, where, in the reign of the emperor Honorius, under the Dux Britanniarum, was quartered the captain of the

Machlen
Machyn
MAGLO

[a] Sir Dre' Valdwin; Lluyd.

Numerus

7

Macblai
Macbyn
Maglo

MAP of NORTH WALES from the best AUTHORITIES

Engraved by J. Cary.

Statute Miles 69½ to a Degree of Latitude

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15

IRISH

CARNARVON BAY

Llanhaiarn Road

BARMOUTH Bay

CARDIGAN BAY

HOLYHEAD

CARNARVON

BANGOR

NEWBURGH

CONWAY

LLANRWST

HARLECH

ABERISTWITH

CARDIGANSHIRE

Llanaelhaiarn

Llanwenllwyfo

Llanerchmedd

Llanfechell

Llanfechell

Llanwaethly

Gronant

Llanwacraith

Llandifrydog

Llaneigrad

Bodedern

Llanvaier

Gwindu

Llangaffo

Llanbeder

Llandisnan

Enbol

Llanynewen

Llanbulan

Honeglos

Tresdraeth

Pennyuid

Llansdarn

Llandegvayne

Aberfraw

Hendre Gadock

Llandisilio

Llan Geinwen

Llanedwyn

Llanvaier Castle

Dinasorwerg

Llanvaglan

Llanhangel Enrage

Delbadern Castle

Llanuda

Llandurog

Glynn Llevon

Llevon R.

Bodichen

Llanihangel

Clenoc Vawr

Llanhaiarn

Llangyby

Penmorvay

Pennarth

KREKITH

Porthdinllaen

Llansylvadwy

Llanvihangel

Breach Church

Rodyan

Llangenvri

Llanesten

Llanberis

Penlas

Bryncrois

Bodvean Chap.

Blue Man

Tinwals Chap.

Penrhyn

Llanvihangel Tre-Tuth

Llandekwyn

Llyn Tekwyn

Trauswenith

Derr R.

Llyn Eytha

Llyn Comb

Llanvaier

Llanbedr

Llandanwg

Llandura

Llanvihangel

Llanaber

Barmouth

Llanvihangel-y-Tenant

Llangelynyn

Lingeril R.

Derwyn R.

Llandegai

Tower Hill

Llanyllin

Avonvawr R.

Llandogel

Llanrhyc wlien

Chapel Keiriog

Bettus Sreinon

Bryn Moyles

Llyn Lagoch

Llanwenmachno

Llanrwst

Llanrighlas

Eglos Rhos

Llochdre

Llanghynin

Crostworth

Llan Eligon

Llansanfraid

Dolenog

Bettus

Llanvyth

Melindidder

Eglos Vach

Llangurrow

Tregervul

Llanrhye wlien

Llandogel

Chwyrn Lake

Gwecherin

Llyn Alw

Llankeriged

Spitty Evan

Llyn Conwy

Farting og

Marnlurog

Llyn Tekwyn

Trauswenith

Derr R.

Llandekwyn

Llanvihangel Y Traeth

Llyn Eytha

Llyn Comb

Llanvaier

Arden R.

Llanbedr

Llandanwg

Corsceddau

Llandura

Llanvihangel

Llanaber

Barmouth

Llanvihangel-y-Tenant

Lingeril R.

Llangelynyn

Derwyn R.

Llandegai

Tower Hill

Llanyllin

Avonvawr R.

Llandogel

Llanrhye wlien

Chapel Keiriog

Bettus Sreinon

Bryn Moyles

Llyn Lagoch

Llanwenmachno

Llanrwst

Llanrighlas

Eglos Rhos

Llochdre

Llanghynin

Crostworth

Llan Eligon

Llansanfraid

Dolenog

Bettus

Llanvyth

Melindidder

Eglos Vach

Llangurrow

Tregervul

Llanrhye wlien

Llandogel

REFERENCES to the COUNTIES.

1 Anglesey
2 Carnarvon
3 Denbigh
4 Merioneth
5 Flint
6 Montgomery

E A

CHESHIRE

RIVER DEE

SHROPSHIRE

DENBIGHSHIRE

CARDIGANSHIRE

RADNORSHIRE

Nant
Warren Ho.
Mosty
Prestattyn
Meliden
Llan Asaph
Whitford
Dyfsart
Rhuddlan
Lodge
Rudland
Newmarket
Comb
HOLYWELL
Park Gate
Coal Pits Mountain
ST ASAPH
Llanerch
Bodrhyn
Llanrhaiadr
Henllan
Foxhall
DENBIGH
Llanrhaiadr
Llandrinog
Llannunis
Llanbedr
Llanbedr
Llanrhaiadr
Wimbren R.
Llan Rayder
Llanbedr
RUTHIN
Llanvarog
Cloghnocke
Veneghtid
Llanikangel
Llanvaier
Castle
Melynwig
Llan Elidan
Derwen
Bettus
Gruyddel Wan
Pont Alliven
Kevenreage
Llansanfraid
Dole
Corwen
Llangor
Crogen
Llandervel
Gadern
Llandrillo
Llanvaier
BALA
Llangkil
Ruddock
Pimble Mere
Llangower
Llanycil
Pont Raven
Pennant Melangil
Llangunnog
Tannat R.
Llansilin
Llangadwin
Pen y Pont
Llansunfraid
Llanvyllin
Llanyhangel
Llanuthin
Llanvyllin
Llanvyllin Monthey
Llanvyllin Wells
Llanvyllin
Llanvyllin
Llanvyllin

Numerus Solenſium, to awe the mountaineers, and two miles from it near Penall[b]. they ſhew a place called Keven Caer, or the Ridge of the city, where Roman coins are frequently dug up, and a circular fortification of no ſmall extent is to be ſeen.

Five miles from hence Mount Plinlimon[c] before-mentioned riſes to a great height, and on that ſide where it bounds this county pours forth the Severn, the ſecond river in Britain next to the Thames, and called by the Britans Haffren, The origin of this name I have not met with. Jeffrey's ſtory of Sabrina a virgin drowned in it ſeems fabulous: though copied from him by the poet:

——— in flumen præcipitatur Abren,
Nomen Abren fluvio de virgine, nomen eidem
Nomine corrupto deinde Sabrina datur.

——— Aber into the river caſt,
The river from the virgin takes its name,
Sabrina after called, though ſtill the ſame,
Whence after by corruption Severn came.

Immediately after its riſe it forms ſo many meanders that one would often think it was running back, though it is all the while advancing, or rather ſlowly wandering through this county, and thoſe of Salop, Worceſter, and laſt of all Glouceſter, greatly enriching the ſoil as it paſſes, and at laſt calmly emptying itſelf into the Severn ſea. In this county ſhrouded with woods it makes its way northward by Lanidlos, Trenewith, or Newtowne, and Caer-fuſe[d], which boaſts antiquity and antient privileges. Not far from its eaſtern bank it leaves Montgomery, the chief town of the county, ſituate on a bold rock, with a pleaſant plain below, built by Baldwin, warden of the marches of Wales, under William the Conqueror, whence the Britans call it Tre Baldwin, or Baldwin's town. But the Engliſh gave it the name of Montgomery, and Mons Gomerici, from Roger Montgomery, earl of Shrewsbury, whoſe property it was, who, as appears from Domeſday book, built its caſtle. But Henry III. recovering it from its aſhes in which it lay many years after the Welſh had ruined it, and ſlain the garriſon in the year 1095, Florilegus pretends he gave it the name of Mount Gomery, from the ſituation of the place. Certain it is that Henry III. by charter granted that the "Burgh of Montgomery "ſhould be a free Burgh, enjoying other liberties."

Near this Corndon hill riſes to a great height, on whoſe ſummit are certain ſtones placed in form of a crown * in memory probably of ſome victory: whence it has its name. Higher up Severn runs by Trellin[e], q. d. the town on the lake, whence the Engliſh call it Welch pool, with a caſtle contiguous to the ſouth called from the red ſtone of which it is built Caſtle Coch, containing within the compaſs of its walls two caſtles, one belonging to lord Powis, the other to baron Dudley. Cadugan, the renowned Britan already mentioned, ſon of Blethin, while engaged in building this caſtle, was ſlain by his nephew Madoc, as we read in Lancarvon's epitome. Oppoſite to this, on the other ſide of the river, lies Buttington, remarkable for the Danes wintering there, from whence Marianus tells us Adhered, earl of Mercia, diſlodged them A. D. 894. The Severn leaving theſe parts turns eaſt to meet the little river Tanet[f] after its union with which it enters Shropſhire. Tanet r.

I am firmly perſuaded, and I think I have truth on my ſide, that in this region of the Ordevices ſtood MEDIOLANUM celebrated by Antoninus and Ptolomy, whoſe traces I carefully ſought for, but with little ſucceſs, ſo completely does time prey upon cities. If I might, however, form a conjecture from ſituation, as the other towns placed here by Antoninus are eaſy to find, viz. BONIVM on one ſide, now Bangor on the Dee, and on the other RVTNNIVM now Rowton caſtle, from the latter of which he makes it 12 miles diſtant, and from the former 20 miles, the lines of poſition if I may ſo call them, or rather of diſtance interſect each other between Mathrafal and Lan-Vethlin, which are ſcarce three miles aſunder, and point out the ſituation of our Mediolanum almoſt to demonſtration. For this method of finding the ſituation of a third place by two already known cannot be liable to uncertainty, when neither mountains interpoſe, nor the courſe of the roads is obſtructed. This Matrafal, which is five miles weſt from the Severn, and (which in part proves its antiquity), though now but a bare name, was the ſeat of the princes of Powis, and is celebrated by writers who relate that in it, after the princes had abandoned it, Robert de Vieux pont or Vipont of England, built a caſtle. But Lan-vethlin, q. d. the Church of Vethlin, a ſmall market town, though ſomewhat further from the interſection of the lines, is yet nearer allied by name to our Mediolanum: for Vethlin, by the idiom of the Britiſh language, is formed out of Methlin, as Caer Verden from Caer Merden, Arvon from Ar-mon. Nor is Methlin further remote from Mediolanum than Milan in Italy, le Million, in Xaintoigne, or Methlin in Flanders, all which towns are generally allowed to have had antiently the name of Mediolanum. The reader is to judge which conjecture comes neareſt the truth, it being enough for me to propoſe the conjecture. If I ſhould ſay that this our Mediolanum, with the other towns of the ſame name in Gaul were founded by duke Medius, or prince Olen, or that while it was building, a ſow, half wooly (mediatim lanata) was dug up, I ſhould paſs for an egregious trifler: and yet all theſe fancies have been broached by the Italians about their Mediolanum. But ſince it is out of diſpute that theſe were built by people of the ſame language (as we have ſhewn the Gauls and Britans uſed one common language), it is very probable they had the ſame name on the ſame account. I know, however, of no agreement between our Mediolanum and that in Italy except that both ſtand in a plain among rivulets, and a learned Italian derives the name of his Mediolanum from its ſituation among Lanæ, which he explains rivulets.

MEDIOLANVM. Matbraval. Llan Vethlin.

This county gave name, title, and honour, to no earl till lately in 1605 king James, out of his ſingular affection for him, and the great hopes he formed of his virtues, created at Greenwich Philip Herbert, younger ſon of Henry earl of Pembroke by Mary Sidney, at the ſame time baron Herbert of Shurland, and earl of Montgomery.

Earls of Montgomery.

But the princes of Powis deſcended from the third ſon of Roderic Mawr[g], held this county with others

Princes of Powis.

* commonly called Magifold.

[b] Penalht in Merionethſhire. Lluyd.
[c] Vulgo Plynlymmon, an rectius Pen Llhuman, i. e. Jugum vexillare. L.
[d] Kaer Sws. L.
[e] Myrwy. L.
[f] from Bledhyn ap Kymyn. Powel, p. 109.

in Lords of Powis.

in uninterrupted ſucceſſion to Edward II's time, though Roger and Hugh Montgomery [h] had lopt off parcels of it. At that time Oen ap Gryffin ap Gwenzwinwyn, laſt lord of Powis of Britiſh race, left an only daughter Hawiſia, whom John Charleton, of England, the king's Valet married, and in her right was created lord of Powis by Edward II. and as we have ſeen in many places bore a lion rampant G. in a field O. Four of his male deſcendants enjoyed this honor till the male line ended in Edward. He by Eleanor daughter and one of the heireſſes of Thomas Holland earl of Kent, had Jane wife of ſir John Grey, knt. and Joyce wife of John lord Tiptoft, from whom the barons Dudley and others derive themſelves. This ſir John Grey by his bravery in the field, and by favour of king Henry V. had the earldom of Tanquerville in Normandy, "to hold to him "and his heirs male paying one baſſinet at the caſtle "of Rouen on the feaſt of St. George yearly." He had a ſon named Henry, lord of Powis, in whoſe family the title of Powis continued with honour till Edward Grey, who died in our time without legitimate iſſue.

This county has 57 pariſh churches.

[h] brothers. G. Q.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Montgomery is bounded by Shropſhire on the eaſt, Radnor and Cardiganſhire on the ſouth, Merioneth on the weſt, and by part of Merioneth, Denbigh, and Shropſhires on the north, is 30 miles from eaſt to weſt, 25 from north to ſouth, and 94 in circumference, contains ſeven hundreds, 47 pariſhes, and five market towns, all boroughs.

By its vicinity to England it partakes both of the nature and improvement of its ſoil. An agreeable mixture of cultivated vales and bold hills well ſtored with growſe is interſperſed among five market towns, many ſingle farms, ſmall villages, and gentlemen's ſeats.

Machynleth. " Mahenthle, the ſecond town of Montgomeriſhire, " and there ons a yere ſeſſion to be kept, 16 Welſh " miles from Montgomeri [a]."

Biſhop Gibſon received the following particulars concerning Machynleth [b] from a gentleman who had lived there many years. The main fort, which was on the higheſt part of the hill, was built quadrangularly, and encompaſſed with a ſtrong wall, and a broad ditch of an oval form, excepting that towards the valley it was extended in a direct line. On the outſide of the great ditch next the river Dyvi the foundations of many houſes have been diſcovered, and on a lower mount there ſtood a ſmall fort, which may be ſuppoſed to have been built of bricks, of which they find plenty there. All the outwalls were built of a rough hard ſtone, which muſt have been carried thither by water, there being none ſuch nearer than Tâl y Gàreg, which is diſtant from this place about ſeven miles. From the fort to the water ſide is a broad hard way of pitched pebbles, and other ſtones, continued in a ſtrait line through meadows and marſh grounds, which may be about 200 yards in length, and ten or twelve in breadth. It is very evident that this fort was demoliſhed before the building of the church of Penalht, as we find in the walls of the church ſeveral bricks mixed with the ſtones which were doubtleſs brought thither from this place. Roman coins have been found here ſince thoſe mentioned by Mr. Camden, particularly ſome ſilver ones of Auguſtus and Tiberius, and near the main fort in a field called Kae Lhwyn y Neuodh (i. e. the court or palace grove), was found a ſmall gold chain about four miles long, and at another time a ſapphire neatly cut. Some other things of leſs note have been diſcovered in the ſame place, as a very large braſs caldron uſed ſince as a brewing veſſel at Kaer Berlhan, ſeveral pieces of lead, and very odd glaſſes of a round form like hoops, ſome about 20 inches in circumference, others much leſs, &c. curiouſly liſted of various colours, which were found in ſome broken ones to proceed from ſand of the ſame colours incloſed in ſeveral cells within the glaſſes."

Mr. Ward [c] carries MAGLORE, or, as he writes it, Maglove, into Yorkſhire to Gretabridge, without taking any notice of Mr. Camden's placing it here.

Penalht. At Penalht on the Dovy is a conſiderable iron work. The old church, which was partly built of the ruins of the adjoining Roman fortreſs of Kevn Caer, has been lately taken down and a new one built with its materials, which are hid by ſtucco [d].

Kaer Sws. Kaer Sûs (for ſo Mr. Lluyd corrects Mr. Camden's Caer fuſe) appears to have been a town of antiquity from the ſtreet there and the lanes about it, on whoſe north-weſt ſides are hollow arched foſſes. The Roman road called Sarn Swſan runs hence pointing to Meivod, and is diſtinctly traced as far as the banks of the Vyrnwy near Llyſſin. It is to be met with in Llan Raider pariſh, at Street Vawr near Coed y Clawdh, croſs Rhos y Brithdw to Pen y Street, and thence to Llam y jwrch to Caerfach, which is ſuppoſed to be a ſmall Roman camp, and it is believed it tends to Cheſter [e]. On the ſide of the road on Gwyn Vynnyd is a ſmall ſuboval camp. It is not known whether Roman coins have ever been found at Kaer Sws, but that it was of Roman foundation ſeems highly probable from the finding there beſides ſome neat hewn ſtones for building ſeveral bricks of that kind which we frequently meet with in ſuch antient cities as were poſſeſſed by the Romans. One of theſe is copied from Mr. Pennant, Pl. XIX. fig. 13. Only one coin has been found. It has had a caſtle and at leaſt one church, and is ſaid to have been formerly the ſeat of the lords of Arwyſtli: but how far it extended ſeems at preſent altogether uncertain. It has three camps about it: one on the north on a mountain called Gwyn-vynydh; a ſecond to the eaſt near a place called Rhos dhiaberd, or the common where no quarter was given, in Llan Dhinam pariſh, a camp of a very uncommon form, having at the ſouth end a large conic mount ſurrounded with a very deep foſſe. In the north part of the foſſe is an oblong area, 70 yards wide in its greateſt diameter, with a very high rampart and outer ditch. In the lower part is an entrance opening into a great rectangular camp, 200 by 100 yards, and oppoſite to this entrance another at the extremity. The whole encompaſſed with a rampart and ditch. In a field oppoſite to Caer Sws are ſome trenches relative to the camp [f], where, beſides entrenchments, is a very large mount or barrow: a third at a place called Kevn Karnedh. About a mile ſouth from this laſt on the top of a hill above Lhan Dhinam church is a remarkable entrenchment called y Caer Vechan, which may ſignify the leſſer city, or fortification, but is doubtleſs here put for the latter [g], ſurrounded by a number of foſſes from one to five [h].

On the mountains of Carno was fought 1097 a bloody battle between the princes of South and [a] Lel. It. VII. 28.

[b] Machleneth.
[c] in Horſley's Britannia Romana, p. 477. 485.
[d] Wyndham, 110.
[e] Pennant I. 361.
[f] Pennant II. 363.
[g] Lluyd.
[h] Pennant II. 364.

North Wales, when the author of the war Trahaern ap Caradoc prince of the latter was ſlain in the field, and Gryffyd ap Cynan put into poſſeſſion of his rightful throne [i]. The church of Carno belonged to the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, who are ſaid to have had a houſe near it [k].

Montgomery. "Montgomerike, in Welſh Trevaldwine, ſtandeth "a mile from Severn bank, and is ſervid with ſmall "rills coming from the hills hard by. The ſoil of "the ground of the town is on mayne ſlaty rocke, and "eſpecially the part of the town hilling towards the "caſtel, now a late re-edified, whereby hath been a "park. Great ruines of the wall yet appere ad "veſtigia of four gates called Kedewen gate, Chyr-"byry gate, Artur's gate, Kery gate. In the wall "yet remain broken towres, of the which the whit "towre is now moſtly remarkable. One pariſh "church in Mountgomerike. There lieth a good "plentiful valley by the town of corn and "graſs [l]."

Montgomery ſtands on a gentle aſcent, and at the back of the town is a ſteep hill covered with fern, and called the Town hill; on part of which ſtands the caſtle, which was a ſecond time burnt by Llewellyn the Great, but afterwards made the ſeat of the lords Herbert of Cherbury and their anceſtors till reduced to its preſent ruinous condition in the civil war. It had been divided by four foſſes cut in the rock. At the bottom of the hill in the vale is a ſmall fortification of the ſame kind with thoſe uſed by the Saxons and Welſh having in it a high mount. On a hill not far from the caſtle is a ſtupendous Britiſh poſt, the approach guarded by four great ditches, with two or three entrances towards the main work, where two or three foſſes run acroſs the hill, the end of which is guarded by the ſteepneſs [m]. In the church is a monument for Richard, who died 1577, ſon of the firſt lord Herbert of Cherbury, and father of the famous lord Herbert. Blackhall, their family ſeat, was burnt. The chief trade of the town is tanning; but the new turnpike road may be a benefit to it. In a hollow way at a little diſtance from the town on the Engliſh ſide is a remarkable echo as of bells.

On Mynydd Digoll, or the mountain without loſs, called by the Engliſh the Long mountain, four or five miles from Montgomery, Madoc, couſin to Llewellyn, who, after his death, was ſet up by the North Welſhmen, was defended in a bloody battle by the lords Marchers [n]. Here alſo Henry VII. muſtered his friends from theſe parts [o].

Nantcribba. Between Montgomery and Welſhpool is Nantcribba, the ſeat of lord viſcount Hereford by deſcent from his grandfather Vaughan Devereux, eſq. Beyond this we deſcend to Glen Afrcy, a beautiful woody vale in which the Severn meanders with ſcarce any ſtream over a pebbly bottom in a narrow channel ſided by marſhes, and croſſed by a long wooden bridge ſcarce able to reſiſt its impetuoſity in ſudden floods. Salmon force their way up the river though but an inconſiderable ſtream beyond Llanidlos.

Mr. Pennant was diſſuaded from viſiting Plinlimmon as an unintereſting object; the baſe moſt extenſive, the top boggy, and the view very dreary and almoſt an uninhabited country. Part of it lies in this and part in Cardiganſhire. Beſides the Severn it gives riſe to the Ridal which empties itſelf into the ſea and Aberiſtwith, and to the Wye [p].

On the north ſide of Cornden hill in the county of Montgomery on the edge of Shropſhire is a circle of ſtones called Madges Pinfold, or Milking fold, from the vulgar tradition of a cow that gave milk there enough for all honeſt people that wanted, till ſome wicked perſon or witch milked her into a ſieve; from which time ſhe diſappeared. The greateſt diameter is 91 feet and an half, the ſhorter 86 feet and an half. There are 14 ſtones remaining, and the vacancies require 13 or 14 more. See Pl. XII. fig. 1. a is ſix feet high: o is as high but leans. Theſe two ſtones are ſix feet diſtant. The next in ſize is i, from whence is a proſpect weſtward between two ſloping hills to the cultivated part of the long mountain, which proſpect would have been loſt in any other ſituation of the circle: z is a ſtone 80 yards diſtant. This way is high land of Corn Atton foreſt.

The ſtones on Corndon hill are no other than four Carneds or rude heaps frequent on the Welſh mountains, and, as they bear no reſemblance to a crown, Mr. Lluyd thinks the name of the hill is derived from Karn, the ſingular of Carnen, with the addition of the Saxon dun ſignifying mountain or hill, as in Snowdon, Huntingdon, &c. which conjecture is much confirmed when we conſider that there are many hills in Wales denominated from ſuch heaps of ſtones: as Karn Lhechart in Glamorganſhire, Karnedh David, Karnedh Higin, and Karnedh Llewellyn in Caernarvonſhire, with many more in other counties.

There is a large double entrenchment on this ſide of Llanvyllyn, and another ſouth-weſt from Welſh Pool [q]. The entrenchment of Caerfuſe caſtle near Newtown appears from the oppoſite ſide of the Severn [r].

Newton. "Newton, five miles from Montgomerike, is meatly "well buildid after the Walche faſcion [s]." The houſes generally framed of timber, and the intermediate parts ſecured againſt the inclemency of the weather with lath and plaiſter. Newtown is a neat and agreeable town, ſituated on the Severn's bank at the extremity of a beautiful valley, called the Vale of Newtown [t]. In a pretty park near the town is the ſeat of Pryſel.

Llanidlos. "Llanindelas, 13 miles by W. from Montgomerie, about three miles from the head of Severn [u]."

Llanidlos is a ſmall town with a great weekly market for yarn. The church reſts on ſix arches, whoſe pillars have capitals of palm leaves, and are ſaid by the inhabitants to have been brought from Cwm Hir abbey in Radnorſhire: a date in the roof is 1542. This is a country of ſheep walks, and in the neighbouring hills is found coarſe ſlate [x].

Welſh pool. "Walſchpole, five miles from Montgomerik, the "beſt market of Powiſland, had two lord marchers "caſtles within one wall, the lord Powis, named "Greye, and the lord Dudley, caullid Sutton: but "now the lord Powys hathe bothe in his hand. The "Walch Pole is in compas almoſte as muche as a "little town. The lord Duddeley's part is almoſt "fallen down. The lord Powis' part is metely "good [y]."

Welſhpool ſtands on a low hill, and conſiſts of one principal ſtreet, in which is the town hall, but few good houſes. It is the great market for the Welſh

[i] Pennant, II. 363, 364.
[k] Ib.
[l] Lel. It. VII. 28.
[m] Pennant II. 374.
[n] Powell, 380. 387.
[o] Pennant, II. 375.
[p] Ib. 366.
[q] Wyndham, 188.
[r] Ib. 189.
[s] Lel. ubi ſup.
[t] Wyndham, 191. Penn. II. 359.
[u] Lel. Ib.
[x] Pennant, II. 364, 365.
[y] Lel. Ib.

flannel called Gwart or Webb, made in Merioneth and the Welſh counties, and uſed for ſoldiers cloaths. The name of Welſhpool and the etymology of Trallyn agree with the ſituations of the town: otherwiſe one would ſuſpect that Tralhwn might be the name of a place near the pool before this town was built. For in ſome parts of Wales it is a common appellation for boggy places on roads and elſewhere, particularly in the Glamorganſhire mountains, and a great deal of ground near this place is known to be ſuch. I ſuppoſe Trallwn an abbreviation of Traethlyn, a quagmire [y]. The Severn is navigable to within three quarters of a mile of this town, which is at leaſt 200 miles from its mouth in the Briſtol channel [z].

At Yſtrad Marchell, Val Crucis, or Pola, was a Ciſtercian abbey, founded 1170 by Owen Keviliog, or Madoc, in the 12th ceutury, and in the reign of Edward III. the Welſh monks were removed into Engliſh abbies and Engliſh monks placed here, and the abbey was made ſubject to the abbot of Bildwas, c. Salop. It was valued at £. 64. 14ſ. 3*d*. [a] Almoſt oppoſite to Poole on the other ſide of the Severn is Buttington the Butdigingtune of the Saxons, where A.D. 894 the Danes, under Heſten, after traverſing over great part of England, took their ſtation. Alfred's generals reduced them to great ſtraits by blockade, till in deſpair attempting to force their way through the Saxons they were defeated with ſuch ſlaughter that few eſcaped to their own country [b].

Llanymnack hill yields plenty of limeſtone; copper, lead ore, and calamine have been found there of late years: but there are undeniable proofs of its having been worked by the Romans. In a great artificial cave formed into ſeveral meanders in ſearch of ores have been found Roman coins, among them one of Antoninus and one of Fauſtina, and near them the ſkeleton of a man at full length having on his left arm a bracelet and by his ſide a battle ax. Burnt bones and aſhes are often found on the hill, and near the north-weſt part of the precipice are numbers of large pits in form of inverted cones, ſuppoſed to have been worked by the Romans. On the ſlope of the hill in the more acceſſible part runs from top to bottom a ſtupendous rampart of looſe ſtones with a foſſe at the foot of it: and at certain diſtances are two other parallel foſſes, in many places cut through the rock with vaſt labour, probably Britiſh. Offa's dyke may be traced on this hill, but is plainly different from the others. The wall of the church-yard is placed on the former [c]. Not far from hence ſtood Carreg Hwva caſtle, plundered 1162 by Owen Cyvilioc and Owen ap Madoc ap Mereddyd, which laſt was there ſlain 1187 [d]. The river Vyrnyw abounds with fiſh, and has a new bridge of ſeven arches over it about three miles above the ford [e]. The village and pariſh of Melverley lie on the oppoſite ſide of the Severn near its conflux with this river [f].

Caſtle Coch, now known by the name of Pow's caſtle, was built about 1108 by Cadwgan ap Blethyn when Henry I. had reſtored to him Powiſland, and, while he was thus employed, he was treacherouſly ſlain by his nephew Madoc, who was, however, no gainer by his crime. What Mr. Camden after Leland ſays of the different proprietors of the two caſtles here ſeems to mean no more than that the barons Dudley (of whom John t. Edward III. married Iſabel daughter of John de Charleton, lord of Powis [g], had a tower or apartment here. It was antiently called Pole caſtle, being conſidered as the caſtle of Welſhpool, from which it is ſcarce a mile diſtant. It came to the Charletons by John Charleton t. Edward II. marrying Hawiſe, ſiſter and heir of Gryffin ap Owen or de la Pole, and together with it he had the barony of Pole. Her uncle, laying claim to the caſtle, beſieged it 5 Edward II. but was obliged to retire. It was in danger of being forfeited by its lord's adhering to Thomas earl of Lancaſter, but he obtained his pardon. From this family it came to the Greys by marriage t. Henry V. with Jane daughter of the laſt lord Charlton. It was next purchaſed with the lordſhip by ſir Edward Herbert of Pool caſtle, younger ſon of William earl of Pembroke t. Elizabeth. His ſon William was 5 Charles I. created lord Powis, of Powis, in the marches of Wales, and died 1605 [h], being ſucceeded by his ſon Percy and grandſon William created earl and marquis of Powis by James II. [i] From him was lineally deſcended George Edward Henry Arthur Herbert, earl of Powis, ſo created 1747-8.

This caſtle commands an extenſive proſpect every way, and is built of red ſtone, whence its name, as I ſuppoſe Chateauroux the principal fortreſs in Berry, t. Henry II. The entrance is from the ſouth between two round towers under a colonade into an oblong court, on whoſe weſt ſide is a handſome range of ſtabling. The front of the houſe is a large round tower, and there are two more at the north and weſt ſides. Here is a gallery of family portraits, 117 feet by 20, once 167 feet long, but an apartment has been taken out of it. The curious waterworks in the garden are taken away. Seventeen manors in the county are ſtill dependant on this caſtle [k].

Llangynod. At Llangynod was diſcovered 1692 a lead mine, which was in moſt parts a vein of three yards and an half thick, and was worked near 40 years to the depth of one hundred yards, when the water broke in upon it. A ſlate quarry has been opened of late years, but the want of water-carriage is a great loſs to the work. Two miles hence in Pennant Melangle church was the tomb of St. Monacella, who protecting a hare from the purſuit of Brocwell Yſcythrog, prince of Powis, he gave her land to found a religious houſe, of which ſhe became firſt abbeſs. Her hard bed is ſhewn in the cleft of a neighbouring rock, her tomb was in a little chapel now the veſtry, and her image is ſtill to be ſeen in the church-yard, where is alſo that of Edward eldeſt ſon of Owen Gwynedd, who was ſet aſide from the ſucceſſion on account of a broken noſe, and flying here for ſafety was ſlain not far off at a place called Bwlch Croes Jorwerth. On his ſhield is inſcribed, Hic jacet Etwart [l].

Pennant Melangle.

Mathraval. Mathraval ſhews at preſent no remains of its antient ſplendor, there being only a ſmall farm houſe where the caſtle ſtood, whoſe ſite occupied about two acres, guarded on one ſide by the ſteep over the river, on the other by a vaſt rampart of ſtone and earth and a deep foſs. A high keep at one corner. In Gwern Ddu a wood overagainſt it on the oppoſite ſide of the river is a circular entrenchment, and in a field beyond a round mount. Burton ſeems rightly

[y] Lluyd.
[z] Wyndham, 185. Penn. II. 379.
[a] Tan. 716.
[b] Sax. Chron. 94. 95.
[c] Pennant, II. 384.
[d] Powel, 219. 241.
[e] Pennant, Ib. 383.
[f] Ib. 385.
[g] Dugd. Bar. II. 72. 215.
[h] Dugd. Ib. II. 261.
[i] Gibſon.
[k] Pennant, II. 379.
[l] Ib. 346—348.

to

to have placed Mediolanum hereabouts; this may have been the winter ſtation, and the low Meivod ſubject to overflowings the ſummer one [m].

On the Oſweſtry road above Bryn Gwyn the ſeat of William Moſtyn, eſq. is a circular Britiſh poſt. Numbers of them front the low country on the hills which jut into it as if to protect the internal parts from invaſion. Acroſs the road in one place are veſtiges of a very ſtrong rampart to defend a paſs into the vale of Meivod.

Llan Vyllin. Llan Vyllin is a market town of conſiderable note, firſt incorporated by Llewellin ap Gryffidh, lord of Mechain and Mochnant t. Edward II. It is governed by two bailiffs choſen annually, who, beſides other privileges granted to the town by Charles II. a. r. 25, are juſtices of the peace within the corporation during their office.

Notwithſtanding a great many Roman coins have been found here, there is this objection to its being a Roman ſtation, that it was not cuſtomary among the Britans to prefix the name of Llan, or church, to the name of Roman cities, but generally Kaer, q. d. fort, or fence, as Kaer Leon, Kaer Went, Kaer Vyrdhin, &c. But, admitting the word Llan might be introduced in later times, yet, conſidering a learned and inquiſitive gentleman of this town, who had particularly attended to the antiquities of his country, had not in 40 years time met with any coins and other tokens of a place inhabited by the Ramans, nor diſcovered the leaſt ſigns that this town was antiently of conſiderable note, I think we cannot ſafely, merely on account of its name and vicinity to the ſituation required, conclude it the old Mediolanum. It ſeems better to adopt the ſituation aſſigned by Dr. Powel, who, in his learned notes on Giraldus' Itinerary [n], aſſures us that it was not only the opinion of ſome antiquaries, that the antient Mediolanum was ſeated where the village of Meivod ſtands at preſent, but alſo that the ſame village and places adjoining afforded in his time ſeveral ſuch remarkable monuments as made it evident there had been formerly a conſiderable town at that place. Alſo this Meivod is ſeated about one mile below Mathraval on the north ſide of the river Myrnwy; and three miles ſouth of Llan Vylhin. At preſent there remain only a church and a ſmall village: but ſeveral lately living have ſeen there the ruins of two other churches. I am informed, that about one mile from the church is a place called Erw'r Porth, i. e. the Gate acre, which is ſuppoſed to have taken its name from one of the gates of the old city, and that in the grounds adjoining to this village, cauſeways, foundations of buildings, floors, and hearths are often diſcovered by labourers: but whether any ſuch monuments as we may ſafely conclude to be Roman (ſuch as coins, urns, inſcriptions, &c.) are found at this place, muſt be left to further enquiry. Meivod, as archbiſhop Uſher ſuppoſes, is called by Nennius Cair Meguid, and in other copies Cair Metguod; but what the word Meguid, or Metguod, or even Meivod, or Mediolanum, might ſignify is hardly intelligible at preſent, unleſs the name be taken from an hermitage; Meudwyfod ſignifying an hermit's habitation, for they have a tradition at that place that a hermit called Rhys (corruptly as ſome ſuppoſed for Gyris) lived there: and the word Metguod was, according to old orthography, the ſame with Medvod, or Meidwyvod, i. e. an hermitage, from Meiduy a hermit, and bod an habitation. What confirms this is, that at Llandiſtio in Denbighſhire is another Meivod, with the very ſame tradition, and both churches bear the name of the ſame founder Tiſſitio, ſon of Brychwel Yſkithrog, prince of Powis about the year 600 [o].

Ward in Horſley, p. 372, is of opinion that the MEDIOLANUM of Ptolomy and Antoninus are different places, the former among the Ordovices, and at Meivod, if the ruins are Roman, of which there is no certain proof; the latter among the Cornavii at Drayton in Cheſhire, or as Dr. Tyllton at Bonebury between Kinderton and Drayton. Meivod is ſaid to have been the archdeaconry of all Powiſland, and to have had two churches beſides the preſent. The principal church was the burial place of the princes and great men of Powys. The yard of the preſent is not leſs than nine acres, and yields to the miniſter as many pounds as a paſture [p].

Caſtelh Caerencon was built 1155 by a prince of Powis. Caſtell Dolforwyn ſtands on a woody ſteep, and reſembles Caſtle Dinas in its maſonry of the ſmall ſhattering ſtone of the country. It was built by that worthy prince Bleddyn ap Cynwyn between 1065 and 1073. Mr. Pennant inclines to refer its name Dolforwyn, or the meadow of the maiden to the ſtory of Sabrina, who gave her name to the Severn which runs in this neighbourhood [q]. Q. if it means Maiden Caſtle. Not far from it, in a bottom, is Bettus church, dedicated to St. Beuno, and formerly belonging to Llanlugan, a Ciſtertian nunnery, founded before 1239, valued at £. 22. 14s. [r] The ſteeple makes a figure in theſe parts; it was built by John Meredith its vicar 1531. A little further on the top of a hill to the left, is a great exploratory mount, and on the ſame range or poſt called Pen y Gaer triple trenched. Vaynor houſe, once the property of the Prices, but by marriage of the heireſs in the laſt century to George Devereux, eſq; tranſferred to the viſcounts Hereford, and on the death of Price Devereux 10th of that honor by will alienated to perſons foreign to the name and blood. In Fordin pariſh is a Roman camp called the Gaer, and near Nantcirbba, about 200 yards from Offa's dyke, a conſiderable rock, ſurrounded with a ditch, with remains of a ſmall ſquare fort with a round tower at each corner, one tolerably entire, nine feet diameter within, the walls ſeven feet and an half thick [s].

Bettus. Llanlug.

Llanvair is a mean market town, 12 or 14 miles from Welſhpool. The road thence to Dolgelly in Merionethſhire paſſes over hills (the river Wyrnyr meandering among trees at the foot of natural terraces, forming a picturesque ſcene), to others round whoſe ſides winds a narrow high terrace, with a wide moraſſy valley to the left part of the fen or of the precipice concealed by trees growing up againſt it. From this road one ſees Moel Abentrick, or the baldſtone rock. In Llyſſon pariſh is Luſig park belonging to lord Powis but diſparked. Here is a moat and bank called Caſtelh. Croſſing the Vyrnyw, which flows along a fine vale to the ſouth, we come to a ſingle inn called the Cannon office, principally reſorted to by grouſe ſhooters, but not abſolutely unfit for travellers, pleaſantly ſituated among meads, in a rich country with good roads, though the only carriages are ſledges with ſhafts, on which the ſmalleſt loads are drawn by horſes.

Llanvair. Llyſſon. Luſig.

[m] Pennant, II. 355.
[n] L. II. c. 4.
[o] Lluyd.
[p] Pennant, II. 353, 354.
[q] I. 357.
[r] Tan. 716.
[s] Pennant, II. 367, 368.

Rare Plants found in Montgomeryſhire.

Jaſione montana. Hairy Sheeps Scabious; in meadows and on heaths: near Machynleth.

Lychnis Viſcaria. Red German Catchfly;
Potentilla rupeſtris. Upright Baſtard Cinquefoil; } on the ſides of a mountain called Craig Wreidhin.

Sedum Anglicum. Engliſh Stonecrop; on the rocks at Machynleth, Veronica ſpicata β hybrida. Welch ſpiked Fluellin; on the ſides of Craig Wreidhin hill.

MERIONETHSHIRE.

AT the back of Montgomeryſhire lies Merionethſhire, called by the Britans Sir Verioneth[a], in Latin Mervinia, by Giraldus the land of the ſons of Conan, extending to the ſemicircular bay beforementioned and the ſea, which beats againſt it on the weſt with ſuch violence, that it is ſuppoſed to have carried off ſome part of it. On the ſouth it is divided from Cardiganſhire by the river Dovy[b] for ſome miles. On the north it adjoins to Caernarvon and Denbigh ſhires.

Very high mountains.

Covered with piles of mountains it is, as Giraldus[c] ſays, "the rougheſt and moſt dreary part of all "Wales. For its mountains are very high and "withal very narrow and tapering up like needles, "not thin but very thick ſet, and ſo equally grouped "together, that ſhepherds talking or quarrelling on "their tops would ſcarce in a whole day come to-"gether if they had agreed ſo to do." Innumerable flocks of ſheep feed among theſe hills without danger from wolves, which are ſuppoſed to have been extirpated all over England, when king Edgar impoſed on Ludwall[d], prince of this country, a yearly tribute of 300 wolves. For, after "paying this three "years" (as Malmſbury[e] tells us) "he left off on "the fourth, declaring he could find no more." But it appears from indiſputable evidence, that there were ſome remaining a great while after *.

Wolves deſtroyed in England.

The natives, who apply themſelves cloſely to feeding cattle, and live upon the produce of their milk, viz. butter, cheeſe, &c. (though Strabo formerly ridiculed our Britans as ignorant of the art of making cheeſe), in ſtature, fairneſs of complexion, comelineſs, and good features, are ſcarce inferior to any other people in Britain, but have among their neighbours a bad character for exceſſive venery and idleneſs. They have but few towns. On the eaſt, where the Dovy has its courſe, Commot Mouthwy[f] is moſt noted, which came by inheritance to William alias Wilcock de Mouthwy, younger ſon of Gryffin ap Gwenwynwen, lord of Powis, and by his ſon's daughter to Hugh Burgh, and by his granddaughters to the illuſtrious families of Newport, Leighton, Lingein, and Mitton.

Mouthwy.

Dolgethlè.

Ardudwy.

Harlech caſtle.

On the Avon, further to the weſt, is Dolgethle[g], a ſmall market town, called from the vale in which it ſtands. Near the ſea in the little diſtrict Ardudwy ſtands on a very craggy rock overhanging the ſea. Arlech caſtle, antiently called Caer Colun[h], built by Edward I. as the inhabitants report, and named from its ſituation, Arlech ſignifying in Britiſh upon a rock. Some, however, call it Harlech, and explain it Fair Rock. When England was torn in pieces with civil wars, David ap Jenkin ap Enion, a noble Britan who ſided with the houſe of Lancaſter defended it ſtoutly againſt Edward IV. till William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, forcing his paſſage over the Welſh Alps, made ſuch a furious attack againſt the caſtle, that he obliged it to ſurrender. It is incredible what difficulties he had to ſtruggle with in his march, his army creeping as it were up and then rolling down the hills; whence the natives call that road Le Herbert[i]. Higher up on the edge of the county flow in two famous æſtuaries Traith maur and Traith bochan, or the greater and leſſer Frith.

Herbert.

Not far from hence near the little village of Feſtiniog runs the high or military road paved with ſtones among theſe ſteep and almoſt inacceſſible mountains. The Britans call it Sarn Elen, q. d. Helen's way: whence we may reaſonably ſuppoſe it the work of Helena, the mother of Conſtantine, of whom there are many noble works throughout the Roman empire. Not far from it is Caer Gai, q. d. the Caſtle of Caius, built by ſome Roman of the name of Caius, of whom the neighbouring vulgar tell many wonderful ſtories.

Feſtiniog.

Caer Gai.

In the eaſt part of the county the river Dee riſing from two ſprings (whence they ſay it takes its name of Dwy, which ſignifies two, though ſome derive it from its divine[k] nature, others from its black[l] color) and preſently after paſſes unmixed through Llhin tegid, called by the Engliſh Pimblemeer and Plenlinmeare[m], a lake of great extent every way, and carries out juſt the ſame body of water it brought in. Nor will you ever ſee in the Dee the Gwiniad, a ſpecies of fiſh peculiar to the lake, nor in the lake ſalmon which are caught in plenty in the river. But take the following accurate deſcription of this lake in theſe lines of a poetical Antiquary:

Source of Dee.

Gwiniad.

Hiſpida qua tellus Mervinia reſpicit Eurum
Eſt locus antiquo Penlinum nomine dictus,
Hic lacus illimeis in valle Tegeius alta
Latè expandit aquas, & vaſtum conficit orbem,
Excipiens gremio latices, qui fonte perenni
Vicinis recidunt de montibus, atque ſonoris
Illecebris captas demulcent ſuaviter aures.
Illud habet certe lacus admirabile dictu,
Quantumvis magna pluvia non æſtuat; atqui
Aere turbato, ſi ventus murmura tollat,
Excreſcit ſubito rapidis violentior undis,
Et tumido ſuperat contemptas flumine ripas.

Where fronts the eaſt Mervinia's dreary lands,
A place of antient name Penlinum ſtands,

* See Derbyſhire and Yorkſhire.

[a] Varionydh. Lluyd. [b] Dyvy. L. [c] II. c. 5.
[d] No prince of this name in Wales. Q. if it ſhould not be read Idwal. L. [e] Degeſt. reg. II. p. 32. b.
[f] Kwmmwd Mowdhwy. L. [g] Dôl Gelbeu. L. [h] Kaer Kolhwyn. L. [i] Le Herbert. L.
[k] From Duw, God. G. [l] Du black. The Welſh call it Dubrdwy. See Radnorſhire. G.
[m] corruptly for Pen-llyn mere.

Llyn Tegid's waters circling without bound,
Spread wide its torrents in the vale profound.
The ceaſeleſs fountains from the neighbouring hills
Into its boſom pour their bubbling rills,
Whoſe murmur on the ear harmonious trills.
This wondrous quality this lake maintains;
It never riſes in the heavieſt rains:
Yet, if rude blaſts of wind deform the air
With ſudden motions ſwoln its waters are,
And with new rage the banks before 'em bear.

Upon the edge of this lake ſtands Bala, a little town, endowed with certain privileges, but thinly inhabited, and wretchedly built: notwithſtanding which it is the principal market town for the people of theſe mountains.

Hugh earl of Cheſter was the firſt Norman who poſſeſſed himſelf of this country, in which he placed garriſons, while he kept Gryffin ap Conan his priſoner; but he afterwards recovered this with the reſt of the principality, and left it to his poſterity till the period aſſigned them by fate being elapſed they ended in Llewellyn.

Here are 37 churches.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Merioneth is bounded by Caernarvonſhire and Denbighſhire on the north, by Denbigh and Montgomeryſhire on the eaſt, St. George's channel on the weſt, and by part of Cardigan and Montgomeryſhires on the ſouth. It is 35 miles from north to ſouth, 25 from eaſt to weſt, and 118 in circumference.

Its mountains are not the higheſt in Wales, being far exceeded by Snowden in Caernarvonſhire, and at leaſt equalled by it in rocky precipices. The proſpects are both romantic and diverſified; a mixture of high mountains and inacceſſible rocks, innumerable rivers, cataracts, and lakes, and a variety of lower hills, woods, plains, and ſome fruitful vallies. The higheſt mountains are Cader Idris, Aren Voudhwy, Aren Benllyn, Arennig, Moelwyn, Manod, &c. Theſe maintain innumerable herds of cattle, ſheep, and goats, and being frequently watered with ſhowers, and lodging much ſnow, are more fertile, though the graſs is coarſer than on the hills and ridges of lower countries. Cader Idris is probably one of the higheſt mountains in Britain, and, which is one certain argument of its height, affords ſome variety of Alpine plants. But Giraldus' account of the nearneſs of the hill tops and length of time requiſite to bring together perſons converſing from them ſeems exaggerated [a].

Bwlch y Groes, or the paſs of the croſs, is one of the moſt terrible in North Wales: the deſcent on the other ſide into the long narrow vale of Mowddwy is much greater and very tedious [b].

Dinas Mwthy.

The firſt town that preſents itſelf from Montgomeryſhire is Dinas Mwthy. By the name of Caer Lloi given to a few houſes juſt before one croſſes the river into this town, that of Dinas or city given to the town itſelf, and that of Moel y Dinas, or the mountain of the city, given to a hill ſeen from it, the important ideas which the inhabitants have annexed to this place, and the real powers exerciſed by its corporation over an extenſive diſtrict, one is led to expect ſomething conſiderable [c]. But nothing can be meaner than this city of Commot Mowthy, in which, except the church and Mr. Mytton's houſe, there is nothing above the rank of a cottage. The market is held in the broadeſt part of what hardly deſerves the name of the High ſtreet. It is 16 miles from the Cannon office in Montgomery and Dolgelly in this county. A handſome ſtone bridge was built over the river Avon Dowy here by the late Mr. Mytton, to whoſe heir the whole place belongs [c].

"Talebonte hundred touchith from Abermaw a "little upon the ſhore. The reſidew ſaving this "point is in the upland towards Keviliauc in Poy- "ſlande and there juſtly marchith on Keviliauc. "It is eight miles in length and five in breadth. "The beſt corn in this is toward the ſea. It hath "metely great plently of wood [d]."

Dolgelly.

"Dolgellhe is the beſt village in this commot [e]."

Dolgelly is another market town of ſomewhat better appearance than the foregoing, and is the place where the ſummer aſſizes for the county are held. But the town hall is ſcarce to be diſtinguiſhed from the better houſes in the town. The market houſe is a ſmall ſquare, and all the ſhops have penthouſes on poles before them. The church makes a decent appearance externally, but within is little better than a large barn with a coved roof ſupported by two rows of rude oak poles, the floor, as in moſt of the Welſh churches, earth ſtrewed with ruſhes. Here is one old monument of an armed knight, with a dog at his feet, and a lion paſſant guardant on his ſhield, on which is inſcribed, Hic jacet: Mauric: filius: Ynyr: Vychar. The town ſtands in a beautiful vale, fertile, well wooded, and embelliſhed with numbers of pretty ſeats [f]. The Avon Vawr, a broad clear ſtream, abounding with fiſh, runs at the back of the town to Barmouth, and is here croſſed by a handſome ſtone bridge. On its banks ſtood Cumnor, Kemmer [g], or Vaenor abbey, founded about A. D. 1200 for Ciſtertians by the two ſons of Conan ap Owen Gwynedh, to which prince Llewellyn ap Jorwerth was a benefactor. The eaſt end of the church with three long lancet windows and the hall and part of the abbot's lodging turned into a farm-houſe are now to be ſeen [h]. It was valued at £. 51. 13*s*. 4*d*. [i] Cumnor abbey.

Dolgelly ſignifies the woody vale, from Dol a dale, and Kelhe, or Kelh, q. d. Lhe Kylhe), a hazle wood, though at preſent there are not ſo many woods hereabouts as formerly. Some Roman coins have been dug up near a well called Fynon Vawr, within a bowſhot from the town; two ſilver ones were ſent to biſhop Gibſon by Mr. Maurice Jones then rector.

IMP. TRAIANO AVG. GER. DAC. P. M. TR. P. COS. V. P. P. S. P. Q. R. OPTIMO PRINC.

Trophæum de Dacis.

IMP. CAESAR TRAIAN. HADRIANVS AVG. P. M. TR. P. COS. III.

Mars gradivus cum haſta & ſpoliis.

Hengwrt, the ſeat of Robert Vaughan, eſq; great grandſon of Robert Vaughan, the learned Welſh antiquary, is pleaſantly ſituated under a hill among fine woods with the river behind it. It is large, and has a good front. Here was a choice library of Welſh MSS. collected by Mr. Vaughan in the laſt century. Edward Lluyd took a catalogue of them, not now to be found, any more than that taken by Mr. Carte. Moſt of Mr. Vaughan's collections relating to the hiſtory of North Wales are in the library of ſir Watkin Williams Wynne at Llanvorda. Hengwrt

Dolgelly ſtands at the foot of Cader Idris, to whoſe top from the inn is four miles. On this mount are pools Llyn Curry, Llyn Cay. Tal Llyn abounds with ſmall trouts. Near another lake, on the top, is the ſuppoſed chair of Arthur, a natural cavity in the rock. Between this mountain and the great rock Craig y Denin contiguous to it below, is another pool, and in it are ſaid to be birds whoſe note is wonderfully melodious, but they have never been ſeen. The mountain extends above a mile in length, and is at leaſt 1000 feet high, but the quickneſs of its aſcent and nearneſs of its ſummit make it appear higher than it really is, for Snowdon is indiſputably Cader

[a] Lluyd in Gibſon. [b] Pennant, Wales, II. 78. [c] Ib. 81.
[d] Lel. V. 43. [e] Ib. [f] Pennant's Wales, II. 87.
[g] Lel. V. 42. [h] Pennant, Ib. 98. Wyndham, 117. [i] Tan. 715.

higher.

Fig. 1. p. 541. Fig. 2.

Fig. 3. p. 541.

Fig. 6. p. 541.

Fig. 16. p. 583.

Fig. 17.

Fig. 10. p. 546.

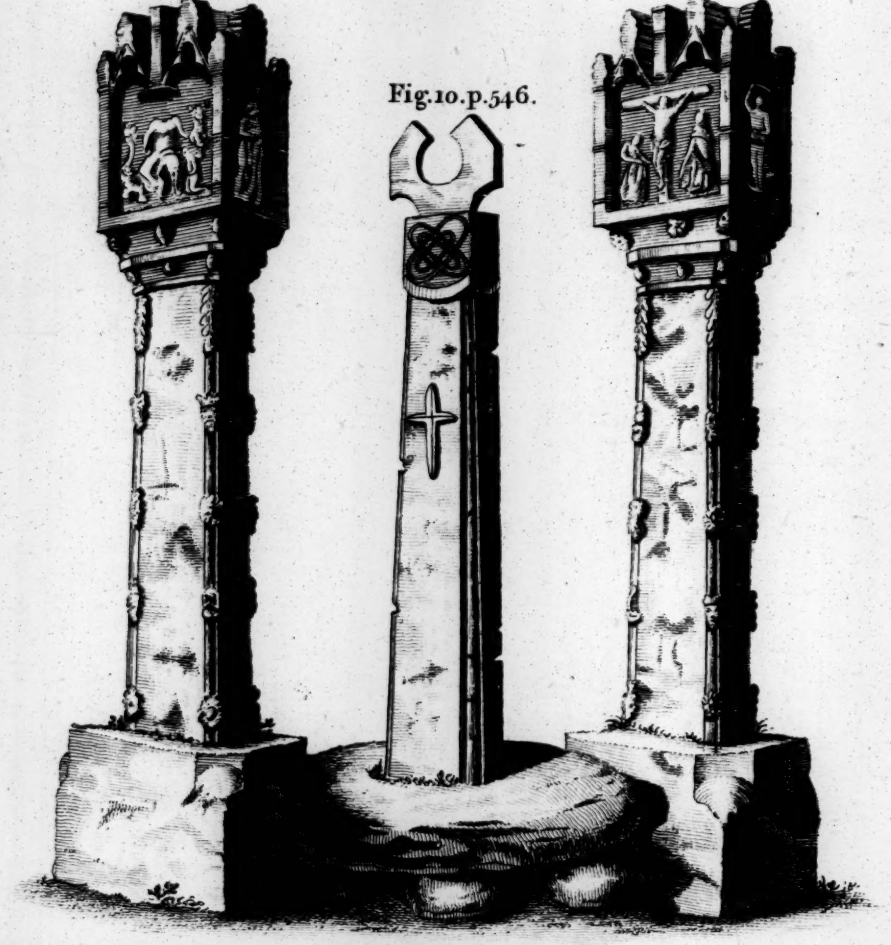

Fig. 4. p. 541.
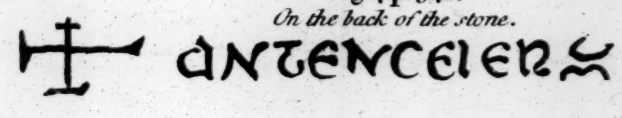
On the back of the stone.



On the other flat side.
Fig. 5. p. 541.

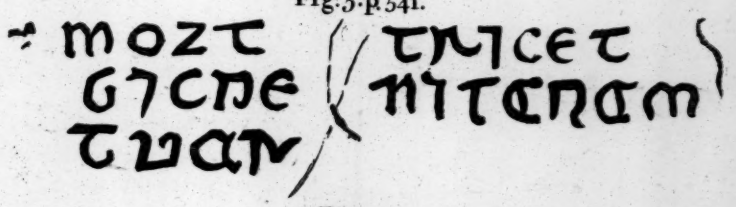


Fig. 8. p. 541. Fig. 9.

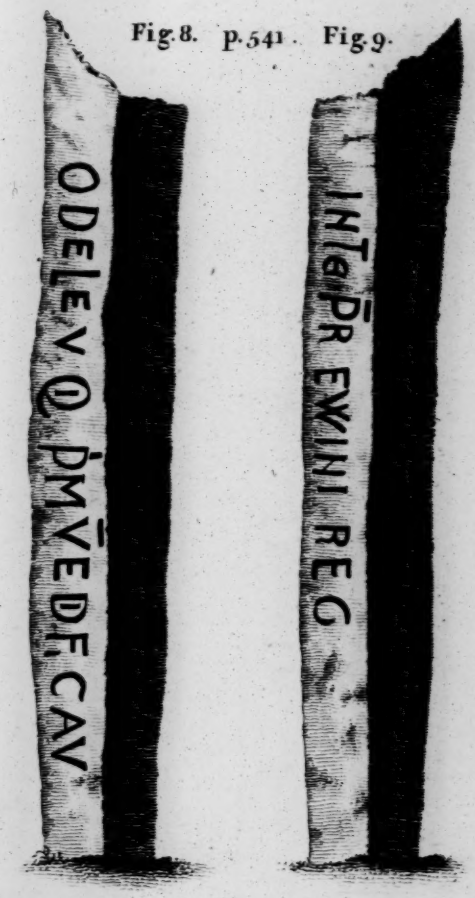

Fig. 12. p. 558.

Fig. 14.

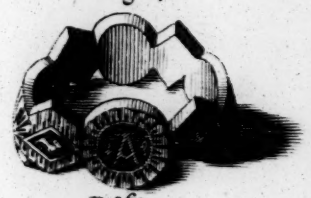

Fig. 11. p. 558.

p. 561.

Fig. 11. p. 558.

Fig. 15.

Fig. 13. p. 533.

Fig. 13. p. 558.

Fig. 7. p. 541.

Fig. 18. p. 593.

On the side of the road under this precipice is a lake called The Pool of the three grains, from three remarkable stones, or fragments of the rock lying near it close to the road, pretended to have been thrown out of the giant Idris' shoe. Though accounted fabulous by the vulgar, it has been found to be very fathom deep[1].

Mr. Pennant describes it as very rocky towards the bottom, covered with huge fragments of discoloured rocks very rugged and cemented by a ferruginous matter which gives them a very yellowish tinge, and with quantities of pumice like the coal-mines of Derbyshire, but of a green colour[2]. On the side where the hill recedes inwards from the precipice forming a sort of Corrie with a level bason, yet very high in comparison of the bed of the pool itself. On the other side at a nearer distance is Craig Cau, a great rock with a lake beneath lodged in a deep hollow[3]. Descending from the Corrie the same way another great valley opens itself, the whole space for a considerable way covered with loose stones like a stream of lava, many of them columnar but not jointed, or even round, but lying very disorderly in all directions and to a great thickness. The Pool of Cader is 950 yards above the green near Dolgelle, the other mountains Moel Penllyn, &c. above Llyntegid, Arenig only 22 yards short of Aran; and the fall from the lake to Dolgelle green 820 yards, so that the real difference of height between Cader and Aran is only 30 yards. Beneath Tyrrau Mawr one of the peaks of Cader Idris beyond on the right are some remains of circles of upright stones with many cairns. A Rome called craft to the top of a rock at several more, or rude upright columns. Mr. Wyndham has a triple spear head found with many others midway up this mountain[4].

At some distance beyond these near the river Kregennan are the remains of Llys Brydion, the palace of Edowain chief of one of the tribes of North Wales who died soon after the reign of Cynfyll ap Cynan. It is about 30 yards square, the entrance seven feet wide with a large upright stone on each side as a door case, the walls rude and unfrequented[5].

The river Dysynni falls into the sea a few miles lower. In its course it is named Towen[6]. On one side the river is the village of Tywyn, or Towyn, in whose church are the monuments of a priest, and in the church-yard two rude pillars, one called St. Cadvan's stone, shaped like a wedge, seven feet high with arrows and an inscription on each in old characters at Lloyd's MSS. engraved Pl. IX. fig. 1, 2, from Mr. Pennant[7]. Fig. 3, 4, 5, are copies of the same stone with the inscriptions on the west and other flat side, which last has the plumet taken upon by Dr. Taylor, who caused it to be removed from its place as a gatepost. Cadvan had at the north-west end of the church-yard a free chapel, some of whose walls were standing in last century, and the site still discernable. Edward VI. granted the rectory and lands to the ancestors of Mr. Price of Rhiwlas in Cardiganshire. St. Cadvan is said to have been abbot of Bardsey (Enlli) in Carnarvonshire about A. D. 490, and was succeeded by Dubricius. He was also said to have been buried in Towyn church, and this stone is known to have been part of his tomb. An old bell in the church, since re-cast, had the inscription fig. 6. Fig. 9. in the same plate is another inscribed stone in the same place. Fig. 8, 9. are a stone in Llanvihangel-y-Pennant church yard. To be read Hic est sepulcrum Meternani Odeni qui primum adquisivit hanc ecclesiam in tempore Eadni regis.

Craig y Deryn, or, the rock of birds, so called from the number of corvorants, rock pigeons, and hawks that breed on it. On another high narrow rock (Pool Pearry calls) a forrest of great trees, old and extinct, covering the whole surface, which probably is of the Bere, belonging to the last Llewelyn, and taken not long before the final conquest of Wales by William de Valence, earl of Pembroke[8].

Next Dolgelle is Nannau, the seat of the ancient family of its name, now of the Vaughans. By the road here is a venerable old oak, 27 feet and a half in girth, decaying and hollowed into an arch, and named Derwen Cadwgan y Bwlch, the hollow oak, the haunt of Cadwgan. Howel Sele, a Lancastrian, and enemy to Owen Glendwr, owned this house, and the two chieftains being brought together by the abbot of Cymmer for reconciliation, Howel, on presence of shooting a roe, directed his arrow against Owen, who immediately seized him, and burnt his house here, whose ruins are yet to be seen, a mere composition of cinder and ashes. His skeleton was supposed to be found 40 years after in an old oak[9]. Above Nannau is a high rock, whose top is encircled with a dike of loose stones. This has been a British poll, and called Moel Orthrwm, the hill of oppression[10].

The cataracts of Glyn Mawr are much celebrated. Dol y Mynllyn. The Onion and the Mawr water three vales near Dolgelle. Five miles from Dolgelle, at Dol y Mynllyn, the river Gamlan falls from various rocks till it reaches a lofty precipice, whence it tumbles into a black pool shaded by trees, which gives the cataract the name of Rhaiadder dû, or the black[11]. It is broken into two broad parts; the upper fall descending about 35 feet into a large bason, and running along a wide craggy channel for 100 feet comes to the lower precipice, whence it is thrown forward in a broad foaming sheet of water, 20 feet high, into a second bason below beautifully encircled with woody rocks[12]. Below Pont ar Gamlan the river falls into the Mawr, or Mawddwich, which, at its junction with the Eden, forms another fine scene. The Mawr running along a deep glen tumbles down a series of ledges of different heights into a very black and sullen pool, from whence it resumes its violence, and is lost among the woods[13]. This river falls down a cataract in two broad sheets, divided about half way down by a ridge of rock, the whole fall above 50 or 80 feet deep. The Kain, a quarter of a mile from it, falls down a narrow rock 150 or 200 feet[14], called Pystyll y Kain, or the spout of the river Kain[15], both but 500 yards asunder, near a farm house called Tyd y Gwlaw[16].

Barmouth is a small town at the bottom, and on Barmouth. the side of a steep hill near the sea at the mouth of the Mawr or Mawddwich; the tide at high water forming a bay about a mile over, but the entrance hazardous by sand banks. It is the port of Merionethshire, but not so much frequented because the high is a three near thak bott

[1] Wyndham, 109. [2] Pennant, II. 87. [3] Pennant, II. 89. [4] Wyndham, 107. [5] Pennant, II. 354. 8vo. [6] Pennant, II. 93. [7] Pennant, II. 200. [8] Wyndham, 114. [9] Lel. Collect. I. 178. Pennant ubi sup. [10] Pennant, II. 93. [11] Wyndham, 115. [12] This has been engraved by Mr. Willson.

60 f
M
the loure vitrif look ſtone one pend lake baſe diſtal neath
the ſtray cover many pent tion
950 mou only lake diff only poi rem carr
and Mr ma

Kr lac
W
Cy few fid

lo on in ar
S li o fi c b e h t
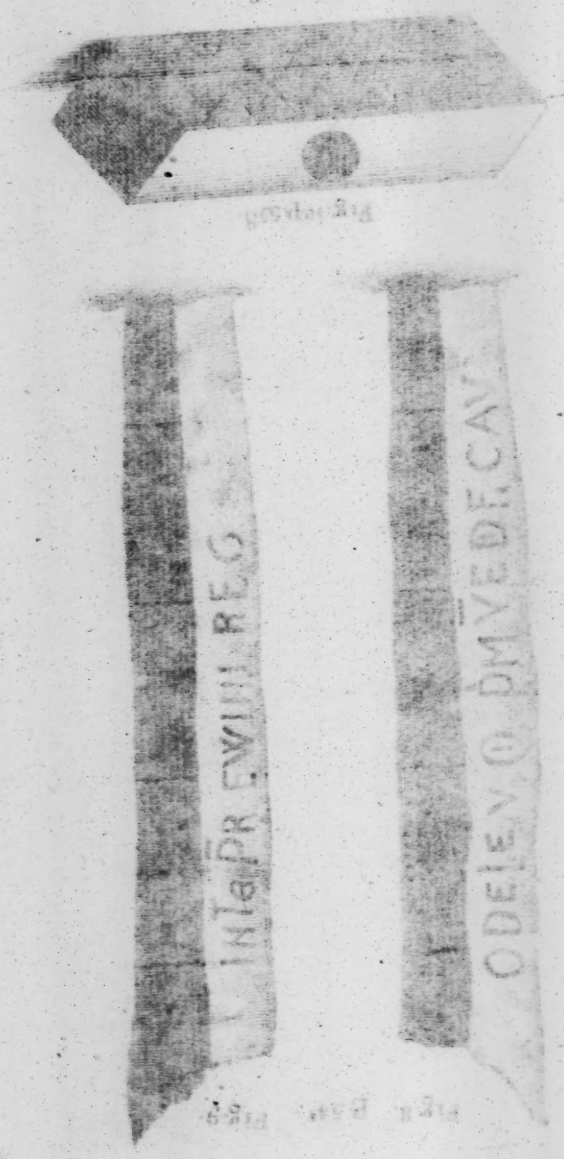
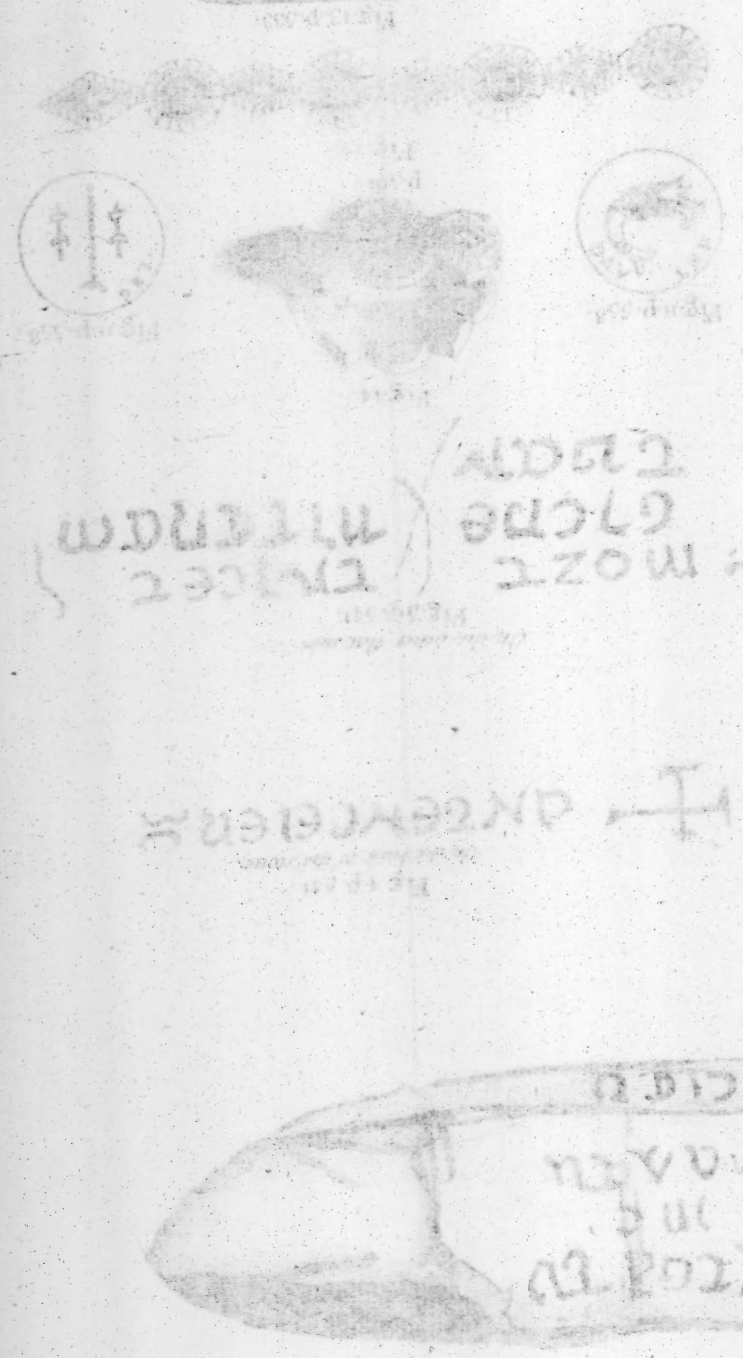
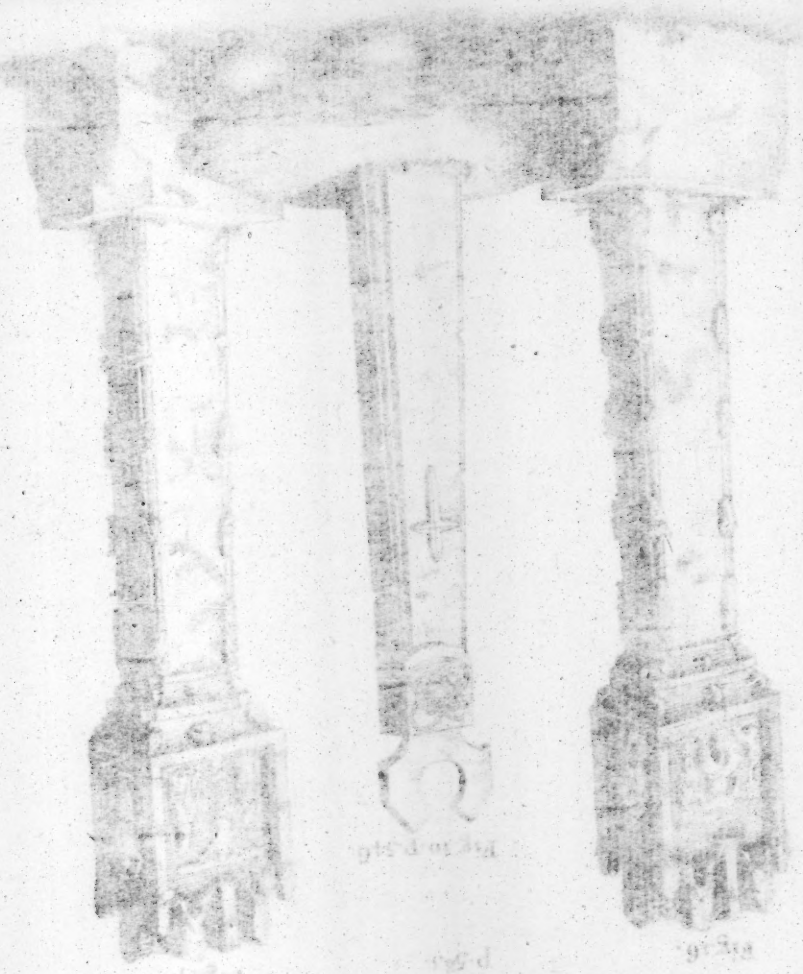
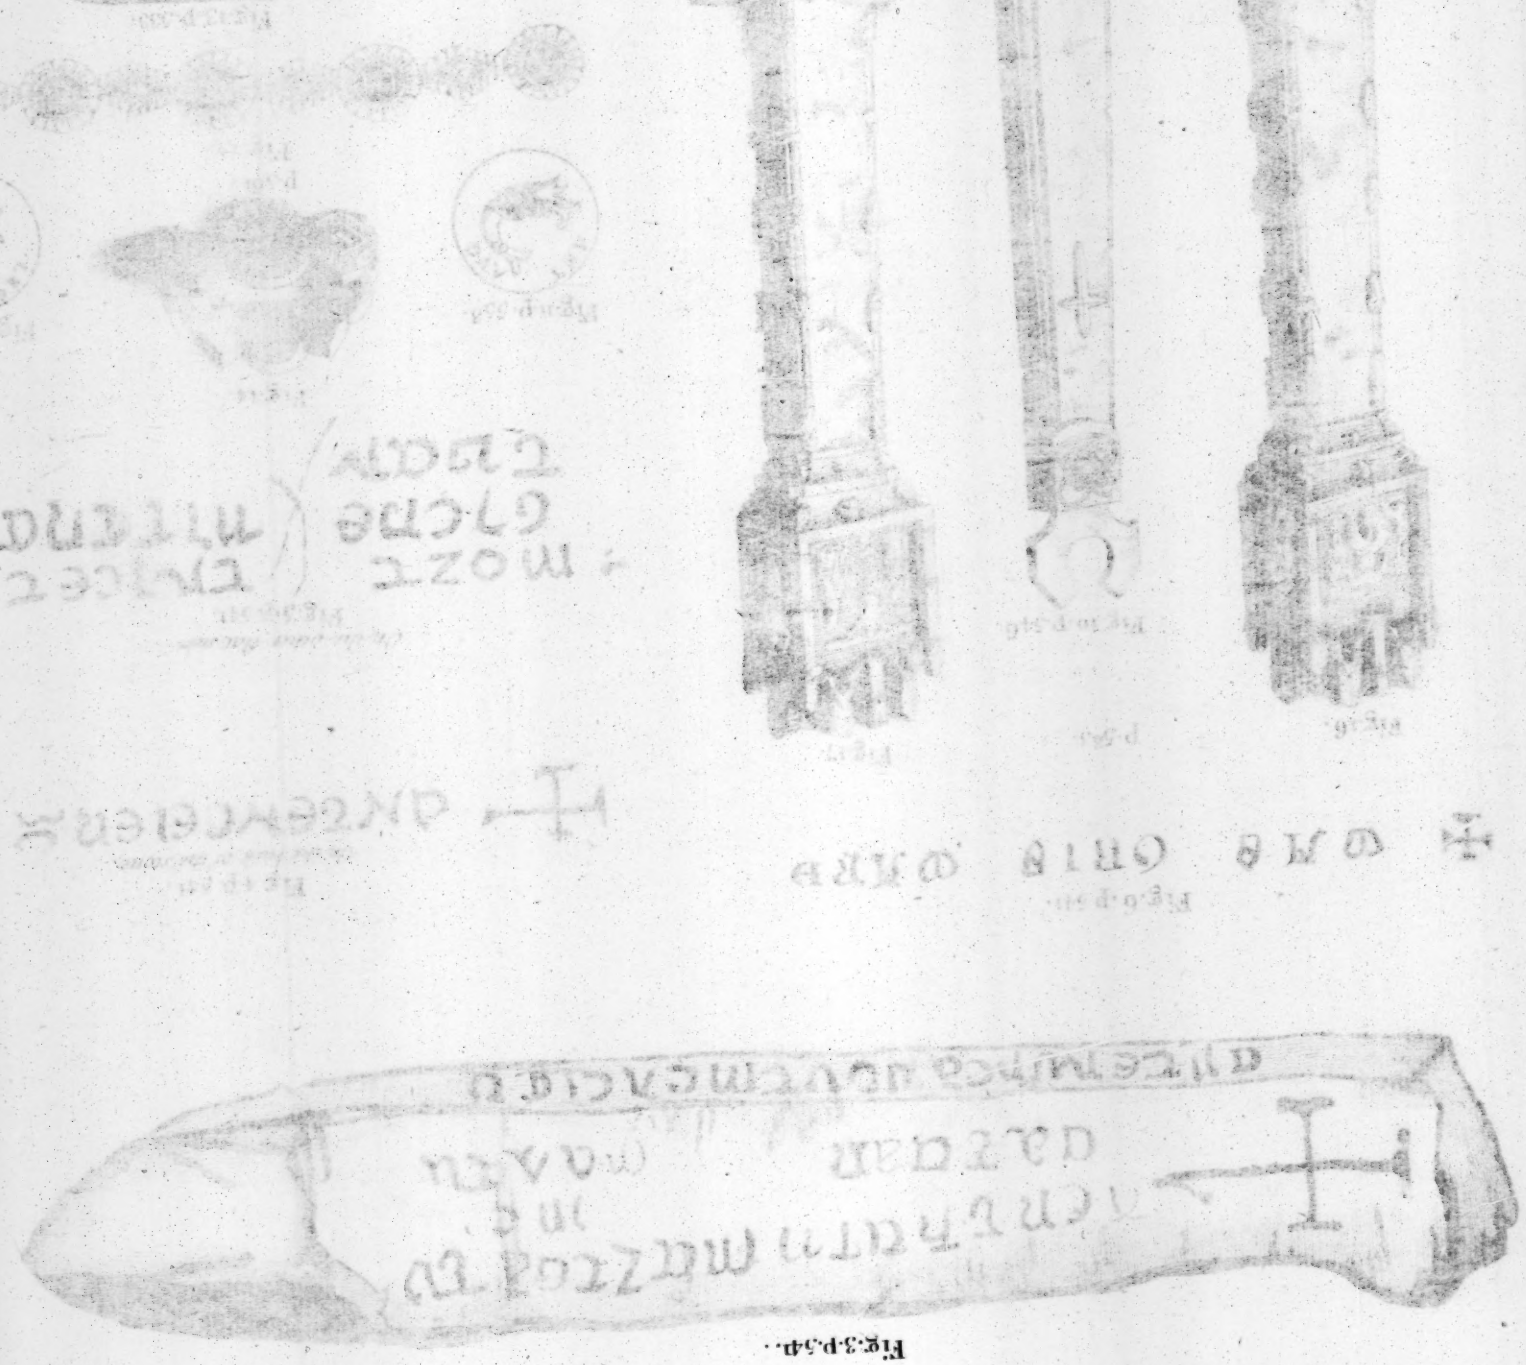
f
a









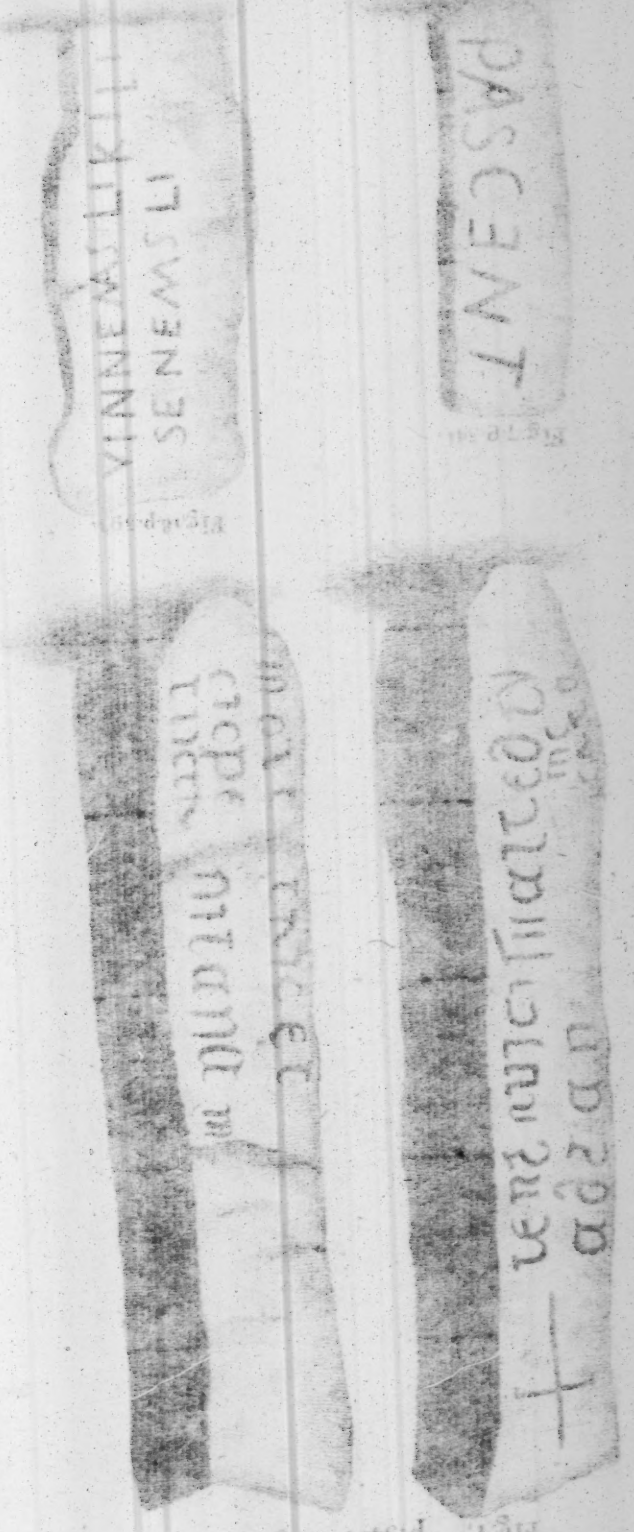


Fig. 3. p. 54.

Vol. II. Pl. XIX. p. 54.

higher. On the ſide of the road under this precipice is a ſmall lake called The Pool of the three grains, from three immenſe ſtones, or fragments of the rock lying near it cloſe to the road, pretended to have been ſhaken out of the giant Idris' ſhoe. Though accounted bottomleſs by the vulgar, it has been found to be 60 fathom deep [k].

Mr. Pennant [l] deſcribes it as very rocky towards the ſummit, covered with huge fragments of diſcoloured rocks very rugged and cemented by a ſemi-vitrified matter which gives them a very volcanic look; and with quantities of pumice like the toad ſtone of Derbyſhire, but of a green colour. On one ſide where the hill recedes inwards is a ſtupendous precipice forming a ſort of theatre with a lake at bottom, yet very high in compariſon of the baſe of the mountain. On the other ſide at a nearer diſtance is Craig Cay, a great rock with a lake beneath lodged in a deep hollow [m]. Deſcending from the Cader he came near another peak called Cyfrwy: the whole ſpace for a conſiderable way was covered with looſe ſtones like a ſtream of lava, many of them columnar but not jointed, ſquare, or pentagonal, but lying very diſorderly in all directions and to a great thickneſs. The Pen y Gader is 950 yards above the green near Dolgelle: the other mountains Aran Benllyn 740 above Llyntegid; Arrenig only 27 yards ſhort of Aran; and the fall from the lake to Dolgelle green 180 yards: ſo that the real difference of height between Cader and Aran is only 30 yards. Beneath Tyrrau Mawr one of the points of Cader Idris beyond on the right are ſome remains of circles of upright ſtones with many carns: a ſtone raiſed erect on the top of a rock and ſeveral maeni hirion or rude upright columns. Mr. Wyndham had a ſingle ſpear head found with many others midway up this mountain [n].

At ſome diſtance beyond theſe near the river Kregennan are the remains of Llys Bradwen, the palace of Ednowain chief of one of 15 tribes of North Wales in or ſoon after the reign of Gryffyd ap Cynan. It is about 30 yards ſquare, the entrance ſeven feet wide with a large upright ſtone on each ſide as a door caſe; the walls rude and uncemented [o].

The river Dyſynni falls into the ſea a few miles lower. "In commote Yſt maneir is Towen [p]." On one ſide the river is the village of Tywyn, or Towyn, in whoſe church are the monuments of a prieſt, and in the church-yard two rude pillars, one called St. Cadvan's ſtone, ſhaped like a wedge, ſeven feet high with a croſs and an inſcription on each ſide in old characters in Lluyd's MSS. engraved Pl. XIX. fig. 1, 2, from Mr. Pennant [q]. Fig. 3, 4, 5, are copies of the ſame ſtone with the inſcriptions on the back and other flat ſide, which laſt has the plaineſt characters, taken 1761 by Dr. Taylor, who cauſed it to be removed from its place as a gatepoſt. Cadvan had at the north-weſt end of the church-yard a free chapel, ſome of whoſe walls were ſtanding within memory, and the ſite ſtill diſcernable. Edward VI. granted the revenues and lands to the anceſtors of Mr. Price of Gogerthan in Cardiganſhire. St. Cadvan is ſaid to have been abbot of Enlli (Bardſey) in Caernarvonſhire about A. D. 250, and was ſucceeded by Dubritius. He was alſo ſaid to have been buried in Tovyn church, and this ſtone is known to have been part of his tomb. An old bell in the church, ſince re-caſt, had the inſcription fig. 6. Fig. 7. in the ſame plate is another inſcribed ſtone in the ſame place. Fig. 8, 9. are a ſtone in Llanvihangel y Traethew church-yard. To be read Hic eſt ſepulcrum Wledermatis Odeleu qui primum edificavit hanc eccleſiam in tempore Ewini regis.

Craig y Deryn, or, the rock of birds, is ſo called from the number of corvorants, rock pigeons, and hawks that breed on it. On another long high narrow rock ſtood Teberri caſtle, a fortreſs of great ſtrength and extent, covering the whole ſurface, which probably is caſtle Bere, belonging to the laſt Llewellyn, and taken not long before the final conqueſt of Wales by William de Valence, earl of Pembroke [r]. Teberri, or Bere caſtle.

Near Dolgelle is Nanny, the ſeat of the antient family of its name, now of the Vaughans. By the road ſide is a venerable old oak, 27 feet and a half in girth, decaying and hollowed into an arch, and named Derwen ceubren yr Ellyll, the hollow oak, the haunt of dæmons. Howel Sele, a Lancaſtrian, and enemy to Owen Glendwr, owned this houſe, and the two chieftains being brought together by the abbot of Cynmer for reconciliation, Howel, on pretence of ſhooting a doe, directed his arrow againſt Owen, who immediately ſeized him, and burnt his houſe here, whoſe ruins are yet to be ſeen, a mere compoſition of cinder and aſhes. His ſkeleton was ſuppoſed to be found 40 years after in an old oak [s]. Above Nanny is a high rock, whoſe top is encircled with a dike of looſe ſtones. This has been a Britiſh poſt, and called Moel Orthrwn, the hill of oppreſſion [t]. Nanny.

The caſcades of Glyn Maw are much celebrated. The Onion and the Maw water three vales near Dolgellè. Five miles from Dolgellè, at Dol y Melynllyn, the river Gamlan falls from various rocks till it reaches a lofty precipice, whence it tumbles into a black pool ſhaded by trees, which gives the cataract the name of Rhaidder ddu, or the black [u]. It is broken into two broad parts; the upper fall deſcending about 35 feet into a large baſon, and running along a wide craggy channel for 100 feet comes to the lower precipice, whence it is thrown forward in a broad foaming ſheet of water, 20 feet high, into a ſecond baſon below beautifully encircled with woody rocks [x]. Below Pont ar Gamlan the river falls into the Maw, or Mauddock, which, at its junction with the Eden, forms another fine ſcene. The Maw running along a deep glen tumbles down a ſeries of ledges of different heights into a very black and ſullen pool, from whence it reaſſumes its violence, and is loſt among the woods [y]. This river falls down a cataract in two broad ſheets, divided about half way down by a ridge of rock, the whole fall about 70 or 80 feet deep. The Kain, a quarter of mile from it, falls down a narrow rock 150 or 200 feet [z], called Piſtil y Kain, or the ſpout of the river Kaine [a], both but 500 yards aſunder, near a farm houſe called Tyd y Gwladys [b]. Doll y Myllynllyn fall.

Barmouth is a ſmall town at the bottom, and on the ſide of it a ſteep hill near the ſea at the mouth of the Maw or Mawddock; the tide at high water forming a bay about a mile over, but the entrance hazardous by ſand banks. It is the port of Merionethſhire, but not ſo much frequented becauſe the inhabitants Barmouth.

[k] Wyndham, 105.
[l] Wales, II. 87.
[m] This has been engraved by Mr. Wilſon.
[n] P. 107.
[o] Pennant Ib. 89.
[p] Lel. V. 43.
[q] 93, 94.
[r] Lel. Collect. I. 178. Pennant ubi ſup.
[s] Pennant, Ib. I. 324. II. 96.
[t] Pennant Ib. II. 97.
[u] Pennant, Ib. II. 99.
[x] Wyndham, p. 113.
[y] Pen. II. 97. 100.
[z] Wyndham, 115.
[a] Pennant, Ib. 100.
[b] Wyndham, 114, 115.

inhabitants vend the manufactures by factors. Yet a few years ago 40,000*£. worth of flannels have been exported in a year, and 10,000£*. worth of ſtockings[c]. "At the mouth of Maw river lyeth a "little iſlet ſcant a bow ſhot over without habita- "tion. At ebbe it is freſh water about, and at fludde "ſalt. There be divers rivers in this commot that "entre the ſe[d]."

Ardudwy. "Ardudwy ſtrechith from half Traitmawr to Aber- "mawr on the ſhore 12 miles. There be 10 pariſhes "in it. Towards the ſea ſide and low parts is ſome "good corne, meate good plenty of wood in this "commot[e]."

At Keil Wart is a ſtone now ſerving as a footbridge, inſcribed, Hic jacit Calixtus Monedo regi.

Cors y gedol was the antient ſeat of the Vaughans. Near it at Craig y dinas, the ſummit of an hill, ſurrounded with a vaſt heap of ſtones, are the ruins of a wall which in many parts retains a regular and even facing, with an oblique entrance faced with ſtones at the ſides. About a mile further is Llyn Bodlyn a ſmall lake well ſtocked with char. Llyn Cwm Howel, another lake in this neighbourhood, is noted for a race of trouts, with thick flat heads like toads, which probably gave riſe to the fabled accounts of the monſtrous ſpecies mentioned by Giraldus. On a plain beyond Llyn Irddin are two circles of ſtones, the firſt 56 feet in diameter, formed of piles of looſe ſtones with upright columns, five yards diſtant from each other. About 30 yards from this a leſſer with ſeveral upright ſtones among the ſmaller, but placed with leſs regularity. Half a mile from theſe, on the ſide of a hill, two large oblong carnedhs, compoſed of looſe ſtones; the largeſt is 55 feet long, and 12 high in the middle: at the eaſt end is a great cromlech altar, compoſed of two ſloping ſtones, one placed over the edge of the other on five flat upright ſtones, ſeven feet high in one part, and four feet 10 inches in the loweſt. About eight yards from this is the upright ſtone of a cromlech lying flat on the carnedh. Eleven yards farther is another great heap of ſtones, and in it a large cromlech ſupported with upright ſtones. In the ſame carnedh another magnificent cromlech whoſe upright ſtone is 12 feet by nine. Four vaſt columns, or main hirion, from 10 feet to 12 high, and between four and five broad, three of them fallen. North-weſt of theſe antiquities, on the top of a hill, is a ſtrong poſt called Caſtelh Dinas Cortin intrenched round with an advanced work on one ſide. This and Caſtelh Craig y Dinas were doubtleſs defences of ſacred grounds, together with two great carnedhs on ſmall eminences near one another, and within one the five ſquare flags of a kiſtvaen, whoſe top is deſtroyed. This place is called Bryn Cornyn Jau. The neighbourhood abounds with cromlechs of great ſize: one called Bryn y voel is ſixteen feet four inches long, ſeven feet four inches broad, and 20 inches thick, about two feet above ground ſupported by ſmall ſtones, and ſurrounded with a circle of ſmall ſtones. Moſt of the cromlechs of theſe parts lie very near to the ground, and horizontally, which is a difference from thoſe of other places[f].

The entrance or paſſage into the hundred of Ardudwy is called Drws Ardudwy, or the door of Ardudwy, formed by nature through the barren mountains, the ſides rent into 1000 precipices, forming at top rows of ſhelves called Carreg y Klommenod, or the rock of the pigeons, the bottom covered with ſtones that have ſlid from the ſides[g].

"Harlanch caſtel and market town in the hundred Harlech. "of Ardudwy[h]."

Harlech was once called Twr Bronwen, and afterwards received the name of Kaer Kolhwyn, from Kolhwyn ap Tagno, who lived there in the time of prince Anarawd about the year 877, and was lord of Ardudwy and Evionydh, and ſome part of Llyn, which countries are yet for the moſt part poſſeſſed by his poſterity. His arms were S. a chevron Arg. between three fleurs de lis. Though Harlech might receive the name of Kolhwyn from this petty prince, it ſeems probable that this place, or ſome other near it, was called Kaer before his time. Several Roman coins have been found hereabouts, and it is well known to all antiquaries that the Britans prefixed that name to moſt places fortified by the Romans[i]. The preſent caſtle, one of the moſt intire in Wales, may be the work of Edward I. It ſtands on a very high rock projecting in the Iriſh ſea, defended by a deep foſſe on the eaſt, the only pregnable ſide, and was taken by the earl of Pembroke 1468[k]. It afforded ſhelter to Margaret of Anjou after the battle of Northampton 1460, and was the laſt in North Wales which held out for the king, being ſurrendered to general Mytton 1647 on articles. Edward I. formed the town, which is but mean, into a borough[l]. In 1692 an antient golden torquis was dug up in a garden near this caſtle. It is a wreathed bar, or rather three or four rods twiſted together, about four feet long, flexible, but bending naturally only one way in form of a hatband. It had hooks at each end not twiſted or ſharp, but plain and cut even. It is of a round form, about an inch in circumference, and weighs eight ounces[m].

This ſeems to be the ornament called by Roman authors Torquis, a name derived from torquere, to twiſt or wreath, and not a chain compoſed of links or annulets, as our grammarians commonly interpret it, and as Scheffer ſuppoſes, who, in his learned diſſertation "de torquibus," tells us, that "the Torques "were moveable, and made of rings, the Circuli "ſolid and round, and the Monilia a little broader, "&c." The Britiſh word Torch, which is doubtleſs of the ſame origin with the Latin Torques, is never uſed for a chain, but generally for a wreath[n], and ſometimes, though in a leſs ſtrict ſenſe, for any collar or large ring: the Britiſh word for a chain being Kadwen, which alſo agrees with the Latin Catena. Whether the Torques here deſcribed was Britiſh or Roman is not eaſy to determine. Moſt antient nations uſed this kind of ornament. That the Britans had golden torques we learn from Dio Caſſius, who, in his deſcription of queen Boadicia[o], ſays ſhe wore a large golden torques, στρεπτον μεγαν χρυσουν εφορει. If it be objected that this ornament was worn by the Britans only ſince the Roman conqueſt, it may be anſwered that this ſeems not to have been the author's meaning, but that he thus deſcribes her for the ſtrangeneſs of her habit, adding that her garment was of divers colours, her yellow hair hung looſe down to her hips, &c. A further proof that the Britans wore golden torques is, that they were ſo common among the Gauls, their neighbours and their progenitors. For Livy tells us[p], that Publius Cor-

[c] Pennant Ib. II. 104. [d] Lel. V. 42. [e] Ib.
[f] Pennant, II. 109—112. [g] Ib. 112. [h] Lel. V. 42. [i] Lluyd.
[k] Pennant, Ib. 122. [l] Ib. [m] See it Pl. XVIII. fig. 20.
[n] Whence our heraldic word Torſe. [o] L. LXII. [p] L. XXXVI. c. 40.

nelius

nelius in his triumph over the Boii produced among other ſpoils 1470 torques: and we find in Propertius [q], that Britomarus, a commander among the Gauls, who is preſumed to have been a Britan, wore ſuch an ornament. If it be urged that the word Torch being derived from the Latin Torquis looks as if the Britans had no ſuch thing, Mr. Lluyd anſwers that he ſtrongly ſuſpects the word was Celtic before it was Roman. For allowing it derived from torqueo, torchi is a verb of the ſame ſignification, and ſeeing both the Britiſh noun and verb are in appearance derived from Troi to turn, and that grammarians know not whence to deduce torqueo, we may perhaps find the origin of it in the Britiſh word torch. There are hundreds of words in the Welſh language which agree in ſound and ſenſe with the Latin, yet could not be borrowed from the Romans becauſe the Iriſh who muſt have been a colony of Britans long before the Roman conqueſt retain the ſame; and the Welſh or Britiſh is one dialect of the old Celtic, whence as the beſt critics allow, the Roman language borrowed ſeveral words and I preſume by the help of the Iriſh, which was never altered by Roman conqueſt, it might be traced much further. For inſtance we muſt acknowledge theſe Britiſh words Tir, Awyr, Mór, Avon, Llwych, &c. (in Iriſh Tir, Aicir, Miur, Avon, Loch) to have one common origin with thoſe of the ſame import in the Latin, Terra, Aer, Mare, Amnis, Lacus: But ſeeing the Iriſh alſo have them, it is evident they were not left here by the Romans, and I think it no abſurdity to ſuppoſe them uſed in theſe iſlands before Rome was built. To return. It is plain that golden torques were much uſed by the Gauls, and I think it out of diſpute that they were uſed alſo among the Britans before the Roman conqueſt. This particular one in queſtion ſeems moſt probably to have been Britiſh. For though it appears from the inſtances of Boadicea, Britomarus, and the champion ſlain by Manlius Torquatus, &c. that the great commanders among the Gauls and Britans wore them, I do not know it appears that the Roman officers did ſo. As for the honorary rewards preſented to ſoldiers of merit mentioned in an inſcription in Gruter, p. 96. we need not preſume them to have been Roman, but rather ſpoils taken from the barbarous nations which they conquered. The uſe of this ornament ſeems to have been retained by the Britans long after the Roman and Saxon conqueſts. For we find that within theſe few centuries a lord of Iâl in Denbighſhire was called Llewellyn aur-dorchog or Llewellyn with the golden torques. And it is at this day a common ſaying in ſeveral parts of Wales when any one tells his adverſary that he will ſtrive hard rather than yield to him mi a dynna'r dorch a chwi, i. e. I'll pluck the torques with you [r].

This valuable monument of Britiſh antiquity and nobility here deſcribed and exhibited from a drawing by Mr. Pennant is now in the hands of ſir Roger Moſtyn of Moſtyn in Flintſhire, bart. By its length it ſeems to have ſerved for uſe as well as ornament perhaps to hold a quiver, as in Virgil's deſcription of the exerciſes of the Trojan youth, Æn. V. 558.

Pars læves humero pharetras: it pectore ſummo
Flexilis obtorti per collum circulus [s] auri.

We muſt not omit the account of that prodigious fire or kindled exhalation which annoyed this neighbourhood in 1694, as it was tranſmitted to the Royal Society by the rev. Mr. Jones before-mentioned, and printed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, N° 208.

SIR, Jan. 20, 1694.

This letter contains no anſwer to your querie about the locuſts, for I am wholly intent at preſent upon giving you the beſt account I can of a moſt diſmal and prodigious accident at Harlech in this county the beginning of theſe holidays. It is of the unaccountable firing of 16 ricks of hay and two barns, whereof one was full of corn, the other of hay. I call it unaccountable, becauſe it is evident that they were not burnt by common fire, but by a kindled exhalation which was often ſeen to come from the ſea. Of the duration thereof I cannot at preſent give you any certain account, but am ſatisfied it laſted at leaſt a fortnight or three weeks, and annoyed the country as well by poiſoning their graſs as firing the hay for the ſpace of a mile or thereabouts. Such as have ſeen the fire ſay it was a blue weak flame, eaſily extinguiſhed, and that it did not the leaſt harm to any of the men who interpoſed their endeavours to ſave the hay, though they ventured (perceiving it different from common fire), not only cloſe to it, but ſometimes into it. All the damage that was ſuſtained happened conſtantly in the night. I have encloſed a catalogue of ſuch as I received certain information of; and have nothing to add but that there are three ſmall tenements in the ſame neighbourhood called Tydin Siôn Wyn, the graſs of which was ſo infected that it abſolutely killed all manner of cattle that fed on it. The graſs has been infectious theſe three laſt years, but not thoroughly fatal till this laſt."

Mr. Lluyd further informed the ſociety, that it continued till Auguſt 1694. It did no great damage to hay or corn, except that of ſome particular perſons: but the graſs or air, or both, were ſo infected by it, that a great mortality of cattle, horſes, ſheep, and goats continued all the while. For a long time they could trace this fire no further than the adjoining ſea ſhores, but afterwards thoſe who watched it continually diſcovered that it croſſed the ſea from a place called Morva bychan in Caernarvonſhire, about eight or nine miles from Harlech, and deſcribed as a bay both ſandy and marſhy. That winter it appeared much more frequent than in the following ſummer, for whereas they ſaw it then almoſt every night, it was not obſerved in ſummer above one or two nights in a week, and that, which if true, is remarkable, about the ſame diſtance of time, happening generally on Saturday or Sunday nights: but afterwards it was ſeen much oftener. They add, that it was ſeen on ſtormy as well as calm nights, and in all weather: but that any great noiſe, ſuch as the ſounding of horns, firing of guns, &c. did repel or extinguiſh it, by which means it is ſuppoſed they ſaved ſeveral ricks of hay and corn, for it ſcarce fired any thing elſe.

This phænomenon is wholly new and unheard of.

[q] ——— vaſti parma relata ducis
Virdomari ——— ———
Illi virgatis jaculantis ab agmine brachis
Torquis ab inciſa decidit unca gula. IV. 11. 40.

[r] i. e. We ſhall have a hard ſtruggle together.

[s] Q. if this is not rather the Circulus before mentioned from Scheffer.

N°

No hiſtorian or philoſopher deſcribes any ſuch meteor. For we never read that any of thoſe fiery exhalations diſtinguiſhed by the ſeveral names of Ignis fatuus, Ignis lambens, Scintilla volans, &c. have had ſuch effects as thus to poiſon the air or graſs ſo as to render it infectious to cattle. We have no example of fires of this kind of ſuch a conſiſtence as to conſume ricks or buildings, nor are any deſcribed moving ſo regularly as this which was obſerved to proceed conſtantly to and from the ſame place for at leaſt eight months. Nor without a ſeries of obſervations on the ſpot can we venture to pronounce on the cauſes of this ſtrange effect. From the mortality among the cattle Mr. Lluyd ſuppoſed the locuſts that arrived hereabouts two months before might occaſion an infection either by dying of cold on land, or being drowned in the ſea, a gentleman having accidentally obſerved ſome quantity of them on the ſhores of Caernarvonſhire near Aber Dâran, and others were ſeen on the ſands of the Severn. Theſe animals being caſt aſhore dead have been known to occaſion a peſtilence[k], particularly in 1374, when Otho Friſingenſis informs us there was a great mortality both of men and cattle on the coaſts of France occaſioned by locuſts drowned in our channel, and caſt on theſe coaſts. Whether ſuch a contagious vapour meeting with a viſcous vapour in a mooriſh bay will kindle and fire hay and corn as the living creatures would do (for Pliny[l] alſo obſerves of the ſea ſtars that omnia in mari contacta adurunt), deſerves further conſideration. Many things might be objected, particularly the duration of the fire.

About two miles from Harlech is a remarkable monument called Koeten Arthur. It is a large ſtone table, ſomewhat oval, but rude and illſhaped, about 10 feet long, and ſeven where broadeſt, two feet thick at one end, but not above an inch at the other. It lies on two rude ſtones, each about half a yard broad; two that ſupport the thick end are between ſeven and eight feet, but the third at the other end about three feet high[m], and ſtill remain as Mr. Wyndham was told[n].

Between Harlech and a very ſteep hill one ſees ſeveral Maen hirion, and circles of common pebbles of different diameters, ſometimes one within another, ſometimes intermitting, ſuch as Dr. Borlace deſcribes at Botalleck[o]. The place is called Bon leff Hîr, or the ſhout to battle; where probably ſome chieftain was ſlain and buried[p]. From hence the road leads through the village of Llan Tegwyn by Llyn Tegwyn, a cryſtal lake about a mile round.

The Gwiniad. The Gwiniad, ſo called from the whiteneſs of its ſcales, is an inhabitant of ſeveral of the lakes of the Alpine parts of Europe, a gregarious fiſh of inſipid taſte, and as it dies ſoon after taking, muſt be eaten ſoon, and the ſpawning time in Lyntegid is December. The largeſt weigh between three and four pounds. Mr. Camden's obſervation of their never wandering into the Dee, nor a ſalmon in the lake, is in general true; but by accident the firſt has been known to ſtray as far as Llandrillo, ſix miles down the river, and a ſalmon has now and then been found treſpaſſing in the lake. Willughby juſtly ſuppoſes it the Albelen and Weiſſfiſch of Switzerland, and the Ferra of the lake of Geneva. They are never taken by bait, but in nets, keeping at the bottom of the lake, and feeding on ſmall ſhells, and the gladiolus lacuſtris of Cluſius, a plant peculiar to theſe mountain lakes[q].

The road from Dolgelly to Tanybwlch leads along a perpendicular terrace, under which the river Mwthwy makes a fine appearance. Further on you croſs a handſome ſtone bridge of one arch, under which rolls over rocks a ſtream called Rhaidr Duy, or the black ſtream, being the river Velen-rhyd, which, after ruſhing for 300 feet down a ſteep channel in the rock, falls ten feet from inacceſſible mountains into a beautiful baſon[r], and turns an overſhot mill. Three Welſh miles north-eaſt from this is a ſecond caſcade called Hyat Tewin Gladdys, formed by the confluence of two rivers ruſhing together down a brown rock broken into natural ſteps, the loweſt very high. From this it leaps off in a kind of arch. Aſpen trees are ſcattered over the ſides of the rock and the baſon, and a fine wood of the ſame trees covers the ſide of an oppoſite rock, in whoſe bowels are lead mines. By the ſide of the road before-mentioned is a mountain which ſeems to have been the ſcene of a battle in antient time, and thence is called Crag y Kay: a field on it has the name of Bath y Wr. The ſpot where the fight began is called Doly maes, mŵr. Many barrows are ſcattered about the plain. The road proceeds by Penſtraed, q. d. head of the ſtreet, a ſingle houſe; through Traſwynnydh, a miſerable village of huts built of looſe ſtones picked off the moors and piled on one another. In this pariſh on the demeſnes of Rhiw Goch Mr. Lluyd was told were a conſiderable number of graves near the cauſeway, like thoſe hereafter mentioned, and in 1687 he copied from a ſtone called Bêdh Porws, or Porus' Grave near Lhech Idris in the ſame pariſh this inſcription:

PORIVS
HIC IN TVMVLO JACIT
HOMO - - - - RIANVS FVIT.

He found afterwards this had generally been taken for the grave of one of the firſt Chriſtians in theſe parts by reading it Porius hic in tumulo jacit: homo Chriſtianus fuit. He acknowledges the inaccuracy of his tranſcript, but ſuppoſes it the epitaph of ſome Roman in the ſecond or third century.

The road which bears the name of Helen is to be traced in many other parts of Wales; as at one end of Kraig forwyn, where it is called Fordh gam Helen luedhog, i. e. the crooked road of Helen the great or powerful. Mr. Lluyd obſerved a way called Fordh, or Sarn Helen, in the pariſh of Llan Badarn Odyn in Cardiganſhire and that great part of the road from Brecknock to Neath is diſtinguiſhed by the ſame name. In Feſtiniog pariſh it is likewiſe called for three miles Sarn y Dhual (a name whereof Mr. Lluyd could give no account[s]), from Rhyd yr Halen to Kaſtelh Dollwydhelen, and ſome think Pont Aberglaſlyn and y Gwymynas in Caernarvonſhire a continuation of the ſame road. Mr. Lluyd queries whether the brook Rhyd yr Halen, as ſome others in Wales, was once called Halan, or whether the true name be Rhyd ar Helen, &c. with reſpect to the road.

Not two miles from Feſtiniog, on the road from Trawsfynnyd to Yſpytty, one falls again into Fford Helen, which is here quite bare, and exhibits the rude ſtones with which it was made[t]. Near it [k] See Mouſet's Theatr. Inſector. p. 123.

[l] N. H. IX. 60.
[m] Lluyd. See Lhchh y Drybedh in Pembrokeſhire, p. 521.
[n] P. 130.
[o] Antiq. of Cornwall. 188. Pl. XIV.
[p] Pennant, II. 126.
[q] Lluyd. Pennant Zool. III. 267. Mr. Barrington's letters to Dr. Watſon, Phil. Tranſ. LVII. P. I. p. 211, 212. 1767.
[r] Wyndham, 122.
[s] Q. if not the Devil's Cauſeway, a name frequently given to Roman roads.
[t] Pennant II. 130.

on a mountain named Mikneint Rhyd ar halen within a quarter of a mile of Sarn Helen are ſome remarkable ſtone monuments called Bedheu Gwyr Ardudwy, q. d. the graves of the men of Ardudwy. They are at leaſt thirty in number, and every grave is deſcribed to be about two yards long and diſtinguiſhed by four pillars, one at each corner, ſquariſh, two or three feet high and nine inches broad, but moſt of the ſtones are now removed. There are ſtill to be ſeen ſeveral circles of ſtones; the largeſt about 52 feet diameter, a vaſt carnedh with two upright ſtones on it as if to mark the entrance of the cell which it probably incloſes; and near it a leſſer heap and a ſmall circle, all of which had been ſurrounded by a larger circle: but the materials of all had occaſionally been employed for walls[u]. They are ſaid to be the ſepulchral monuments of ſome perſons of note ſlain here in a battle between the men of Dyffryn Ardudwy and thoſe of Denbighſhire. Mr. Lluyd was told by one of the neighbours that he had ſeen a ſtone with an inſcription brought among others to repair Feſtiniog church, but there were then no traces of it. He deſcribed it as a poliſhed ſtone two feet long by one and an half, and three or four inches thick, whence Mr. Lluyd preſumed it to be Roman. The graves Mr. Wyndham was told were much injured by time and violence, and that Mr. Vaughan had lately dug up one of them, but could not find the ſmalleſt veſtiges of human interment[x].

"In commote Yſtmaneir is Llin Teggy the hed of "Dee river[y]."

"Bale a litle poore market within a litle of the "hedde of Llinnetegy[z]." It is in Llanychel pariſh and noted for its great trade in woollen ſtockings, which are knit all round it, and ſold every Saturday at market to the amount of from 2 to 500*l.* worth. The town is regularly built, with a ſpacious ſtreet. Cloſe to it on the ſouth-eaſt is a great artificial mount, probably Roman, called Tommen y Bala, and one of a chain of forts, of which there is another within ſight on the mountain road to Ruthin called Tommen y caſtelh: another on the oppoſite ſide of Bala lake, probably Bala caſtle, founded by Llewelyn ap Jorwirth 1202[a], now cut through by the road. Caer Grwyni is a ſmall camp not far from it, overlooking the vale of Edeirnion; the mount in the garden at Rug is another. A more conſiderable one lies within ſight of this on the road to Gwyddelwern, and further on in Bettws pariſh is another called alſo Tommen y caſtelh[b]. The word Bala though now ſeldom uſed as an appellative denotes, according to Williams, the place where a river or brook iſſues out of a lake, as Aber ſignifies the fall of one river into another, and hence Dr. Davies[c] ſuppoſes this town to be denominated. In confirmation of this it may be added, that near the outlet of the river Seiont out of Llyn Peris in Caernarvonſhire, is a place called Bryn y Bala q. d. the hill of the outlet. Others contend, that Bala in old Britiſh as well as Iriſh ſignifies a village[d]. Mr. Lluyd inclines to the former opinion, and thinks other evidences of it might be found. The round mount or barrow at this town called Tommen y Bala, and that about half a mile from it called Brynlhyſk, and a third at Pont Mwngel y Llyn in the ſame neighbourhood are, he ſays, by their name, form, and ſituation, taken for watch-mounts caſt up by the Romans, and not ſepulchral.

Bala lake, Pimble meer, or Llyn tegid, lies at a ſmall diſtance from the town; a fine expanſe of water, near four miles long, 400 yards broad, and 46 yards deep, with three yards of mud. It riſes ſometime nine feet, and overflows the vale of Edeirnion, and on the north-eaſt end has encroached greatly on its ſhore. Its fiſh are pike, perch, trout, a few roach, and abundance of eels, and ſhoals of that Alpine fiſh the Gwyniad, which ſpawn in December, and are taken in great numbers in ſpring or ſummer, and have weighed 5lb. Sir Watkin Williams Wynne claims the whole fiſhery, which belonged to Baſingwark abbey. The Dee does not aſſume its channel till it quits this lake[e]. Spenſer derives this river from Rauran or Aran mountain. Llyn tegid.

Not far from Bala in the pariſh of Lhan uw Llyn are ruins of an antient caſtle not mentioned by any author. It is called Caſtelh Corndochen, and ſtands on the top of a very ſteep rock at the bottom of a very pleaſant valley. It ſhews ruins of a wall incloſing a ſquare, a round, and an oval or larger tower. The mortar was mixed with cockle ſhells which muſt have been brought hither by land-carriage near 14 miles. This caſtle and ſuch another but leſs called Caſtelh Pryſor[f] in Traws-vynydh pariſh were therefore probably built by the Romans. In a turbary or peat moſs called Mownog y ſtratgwyn near Maes y pandy was found about 1684 a wooden coffin ſo well preſerved that the gilding remained freſh, containing a very large ſkeleton. Caſtle Corndochen. Caſtle Pryſor.

Caer Gai, from the number of Roman coins found in its neighbourhood, was probably Roman. The Britans aſcribe it to Gai foſter-father to Arthur[g]. Caer Gai.

Llyn Conwy, the ſource of the river Conwy, is a large lake, with three iſlands in it. The river iſſues out of the end of the lake like a little rill, but in the courſe of a few minutes before it reaches Llanrwſt becomes a moſt conſiderable river by the addition of the various mountain ſtreams[h]. Llyn Conwy.

Two or or three miles below is the village of Yſpytti Jevan, or the hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem, having been a manor of the knights of that order, who made it a ſanctuary, and after the abolition of the order it became a den of thieves and murderers, who were in the reign of Henry VII. extirpated by the bravery and prudence of Meredydd ap Evan. Captain Richard Vaughan founded here an almſhouſe for ſix poor men. In the church are monuments for Rhys vawr ap Mereddyd, who was appointed Henry VII's ſtandbearer at the battle of Boſworth after the death of ſir William Brandon; another for his wife Lowry, and a third for his ſon Robert croſs bearer and chaplain to cardinal Wolſey[i]. Yſpytti Jevan.

Caerdrewyn is a Britiſh poſt on the ſteep ſlope of a hill in full view of the beautiful vales of Glyn dwrdwye and Edeirnion watered by the Dee. It is circular, about half a mile in circumference, defended by a ſingle wall, moſtly in ruins, yet in ſome parts the facings ſtill apparent, and in the thickneſs of the walls are evident remains of apartments. It had two entrances: near the north-eaſt is an oblong ſquare added to the main works, and as the ground there is flat, it is ſtrengthened with a great ditch and wall: within it are foundations of rude ſtone buildings, Caerdrewyn.

[u] Pennant, Ib.
[x] P. 130.
[y] Lel. V. 44.
[z] Ib.
[a] Powel, 258.
[b] Pennant I. 67, 68, 69, 70.
[c] Pref. to his Dictionary.
[d] H. Perry in Dr. Davies' Dict. but he is too apt to preſume Iriſh words to be old Britiſh.
[e] Pennant, Ib. 70.
[f] engraved by Mr. Pennant.
[g] Pennant, Ib. 75.
[h] Pennant, Ib. 131.
[i] Ib. 130, 131.

buildings, one of which is circular and ſeveral yards in diameter: the ditch is carried much farther than the wall, and ſeems part of an unfiniſhed addition to the whole. It is conjectured that Owen Gwynned occupied this part when Henry II. lay encamped on the Berwyn hills, and that it was after uſed by Owen Glendwr. This is one of the chain of poſts which begins at Diſerth, and is continued along the Clwydian hills into the mountains of Yale [l]. Not far from hence near Gwyddelwen is a place called Saith Marchog, from the circumſtance of Owen Glyndwr having there ſurprized Reginald de Grey and ſeven knights (ſaith marchog) in his train [m]. The road to Ruthin paſſes over a common where are many tumuli which Mr. Pennant thinks thoſe of the ſlain in ſome ſkirmiſh between the Welſh and Engliſh under Llewellyn 1255.

Rug. The houſe of Rug ſtands near the ſite of the caſtle, (the mount probably Roman being in the garden) where Gryffyd ap Conan, king of Wales, ſoon after his victory at Carno, was treacherouſly ſurprized, and confined 12 years in Cheſter caſtle till reſcued by the bravery of one Kynwric Hir. In after-times this place became the property of Owen Brogyntyn and his deſcendants the Saluſburys, whoſe male line exiſted till the preſent century, and to one of whom Henry IV. ſold the lordſhip of Glyndwrdwy on the attainder of Owen Glendwr [n].

Corwen. Croſſing the Dee on a handſome bridge you come to Corwen, a ſmall town on a vaſt rock at the foot of the Berwyn hills, and famous for being the rendezvous of the Welſh forces under Owen Gwynned, who from hence ſtopped the invaſion of Henry II. 1166. The place of encampment is diſtinguiſhed by a mound of earth and the ſites of tents from the church ſouthward to the village of Cynwyd. In the church is the tomb of Jorwerth Sulien a vicar. On the ſouth ſide of the church wall is cut a very rude croſs which is ſhewn to ſtrangers as the ſword of Owen Glyndwr. A moſt ſingular croſs in the church yard is engraved Pl. XIX. fig. 10. Near the porch ſtands a pointed rude ſtone, called Carreg y big yn y fach newlyd, which it is pretended directed the founder to place the church there. William Eyton of Plas Waryn in Shropſhire founded here 1709 an almſhouſe for ſix clergymen's widows of Merionethſhire, and the produce of lands to the amount of £. 60. per annum is equally divided among them [o]. Cynwyd was formerly noted Cy for the courts held there by the great men of the neighbourhood to ſettle their claims on the waſtes and commons, but they have long ſince been diſcontinued. The river Tryſtion burſting through the hills Tr forms Rhaider Cynwyd, or the fall of Cynvyd. The Berwyn mountains are the eaſt boundary of Corwen Be vale: their higheſt tops are Cader Bronwen, or the white breaſt, on which is a heap of ſtones ſurrounded by a pillar; and Cader Forwyn. Under their ſummits is ſaid to run Fford Helen, or Helen's way: and about them grows the rubus chamæmorus, cloud berry, or knot berry, uſed in tarts [p].

On the road to Bala beyond Llangar to the left, Ca in a field called Caer Bont, is a ſmall circular entrenchment, conſiſting of a foſs and rampart, and two entrances, and on a hill above called Y Foel, a circle of ſtones, ten yards diameter, now above three feet high, with an entrance to the eaſt, and 100 yards fronting this are the remains of a great carnedh [q].

Llandrillo ſtands on the brook Keidio at the mouth Ll of a great glen which extends upwards of two miles emboſomed in the Berwyn mountains, and leads to the noted paſs called Milter Gerrig, in the county of Montgomery. A little beyond the romantic part to the river ſtands the village of Llan Derfel, the church Ll which was dedicated to St. Derfel Gadarn, whoſe monſtrous wooden image was uſed 1538 to burn friar Foreſt in Smithfield for denying the king's ſupremacy [r]. On the left lies Rhiwaedog, or the bloody brow, noted for a battle between king Llowarch Hen and the Saxons. A ſpot not far from hence, called Pabell Llowarch Hen, is ſuppoſed the place where he reſted the night after the battle [s].

Pont Aberglaſlyn divides Merionethſhire from Pont Caernarvonſhire. It is a bridge of one wide ſtone gla arch over a roaring water-fall from two perpendicular precipices. An impending craggy cliff at leaſt 800 feet high projects from every part of its broken front ſtupendous rocks of the moſt capricious forms, and ſhadows a broad clear torrent raging like a cataract among the huge ruins fallen from the mountain. This paſs continues for near a mile [t]. The ſcenery is the moſt magnificent that can be imagined [u].

[l] Pennant, II. 58, 59.
[m] Ib. 58.
[n] Ib. 59, 60.
[o] Ib. 60, 61, 62.
[p] Ib. 62, 63.
[q] Ib. 63.
[r] Hall's Chron. 233. Stowe's Ann. 573. Pennant, Ib. 64.
[s] Penn. 66.
[t] Wyndham, 125—128.
[u] Pennant, II. 182.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Merionethſhire.

Athamanta Meum. Common Spignel, Meu, or Bawd-money; in mountainous meadows: near Dolgelhe.

Braſſica oleracea. Sea Cabbage; on ſea cliffs: near Harlech caſtle.

Campanula rotundifolia β. A variety of leſſer round leaved Bell-flower; on Cader Idris.

Cardamine petræa. Mountain Ladies Smock; on Moelyn rudh near Feſtiniog.

Cineraria paluſtris. Marſh Fleabane; in marſhes: at Aberavon.

Feſtuca ovina β vivipara. Graſs upon Graſs; amongſt the ſtones and moſs on Cader Idris.

Juncus acutus. Large prickly Sea Ruſh or Hard Ruſh; on boggy places near the ſea: about Harlech.

Jungermannia alpina. Mountain Jungermannia; ——— julacea. Round Jungermannia; } on Cader Idris.

Lichen centrifugus. Spreading Liverwort; on great ſtones near Dolgelhe.

——— fragilis. Brittle Liverwort; ——— paſchalis. Woody Liverwort; } on Cader Idris.

——— herbaceus. Green Lichen;
——— laciniatus. Jagged Lichen; } on the way ſide between Carno and Main Loyne.

——— pyxidatus ι cocciferus. Red Liverwort; ——— pyxidatus ζ digitatus. Fingered Liverwort; } in the way from Dolgelhe to Llanberris.

Lycopodium alpinum. Cypreſs Moſs, or Heath Cypreſs;
——— Selago. Firr Club Moſs; Mnium jungermannia. Purple Mnium; } on Cader Idris.

Orobus ſylvaticus. Engliſh Wood Vetch, or Bitter Vetch; in woods and hedges; Papaver Cambricum. Yellow wild baſtard Poppy; near a wooden bridge over the river Dee; } near Bala.

Polytrichum alpinum β urnigerum. Branched Polytrichum; at the bottom of Cader Idris near Dolgelhe.

Rhodiola Roſea. Roſewort; on the rocks of the high mountains of Cader Idris, plentifully.

Rumex digynus. Round-leaved Mountain Sorrel; by rivulets among the broken rocks of Cader Idris above a lake called Llyn y cau.

Saxifraga ſtellaris. Hairy Kidneywort; by the rills, and on the moiſt rocks of Cader Idris.

Spagnum Alpinum. Green Bog-moſs; on bogs in Cader Idris.

Thalictrum minus β. Variety of Leſſer Meadow Rue; on the ſteep ſides of Cader Idris near Dolgelhe.

CAERNARVONSHIRE.

ABOVE Merionethſhire lies the country called by the Britans Sir Caer-ar-avon, by the Engliſh Caernarvonſhire from the chief town, and before Wales was divided into counties Snowdon foreſt, by the Latin hiſtorians Snaudonia from that foreſt, and Arvonia from lying overagainſt Mona. The North and Weſt ſides lie on the ſea; the South is bounded by Merionethſhire, and the Eaſt parted from Denbighſhire by the river Conwy. On the coaſt, eſpecially where it runs out into a point to the ſouth-weſt oppoſing a crooked ſhore to Octopitarum or St. David's land the country is very fruitful and covered with towns.

Conwy r.

On the interior parts nature has reared gtoupes of mountains as if ſhe meant here to bind the iſland faſt to the bowels of the earth[a], and make a ſafe retreat for the Britans in time of war. For here are ſo many crags and rocks, ſo many woody vallies rendered impaſſable by ſo many lakes, that the lighteſt troops much leſs an army could never find their way among them. Theſe mountains may truly be called the Britiſh Alps; for beſides that they are the higheſt in the whole iſland, they are like the Alps beſpread with broken crags on every ſide, ſteep, and all ſurrounding one which towering far above the reſt in the centre, lifts its head ſo high as if it meant not only to threaten but thruſt its head into the ſky; and ſo well do they retain the ſnow that they are hoary with it or rather with the ſnow of ages all the year round[b]. On this account they are all called by the Britans by the general name of Craig Ereri, and by the Engliſh Snowdon, which in both languages ſignifies the ſnowy mountains. So alſo Niphates in Armenia and Imaus in Scythia have their name from ſnow according to Pliny[c]. Notwithſtanding this they afford ſuch plenty of paſture that it is a common ſaying among the Welſh that the mountains of Eriry would maintain all the cattle of Wales. I forbear to ſpeak of two lakes on their ſummits, one of which has a floating iſland, the other plenty of fiſh but all one-eyed, leſt I ſhould be thought to pay too much regard to fables, though ſome perſons have believed this on the authority of Giraldus. That there are lakes and ſtanding waters on the top of theſe mountains is certain; whence Gervaſe of Tilbury in his Otia Imperialia ſays, "In the land of Wales within "the bounds of Great Britain are very high mountains founded upon ſolid rocks, and on the top "the earth is ſo boggy with ſuch a cruſt of water "that you have no ſooner ſet your foot on it than "it moves off a ſtone's throw; whence upon an in-"vaſion of the enemy the Welſh ſpringing by their "agility over that boggy ſoil elude the enemy's "aſſault or await them at their peril." Joannes Sariſburienſis in his Polycraticon[d] calls the inhabitants of theſe mountains by a new word Nivicollini[e], of whom he wrote thus in the reign of Henry II. "The Nivicolline Britons make inroads and have "already extended their borders coming out of "their caverns and hiding-places in the woods, and "poſſeſſing themſelves of the plains belonging to "the nobility, in whoſe ſight they attack, take, de-"ſtroy, or keep poſſeſſion of them, while our youth "fond of ſhelter and ſhade, born to conſume the "fruits of the earth, ſpending all their time in "ſleep," &c.

The Britiſh Alps.

Snowdon hills.

But to deſcend from the mountains to the plains which lie intirely on the ſea, it will be enough for us to coaſt along the ſhore. The promontory before mentioned as running out to the north-weſt is called in the different copies of Ptolemy CANGANVM, IANGANVM, LANGANVM: which is right I know not, but it ſhould ſeem LANGANVM, as the inhabitants at preſent call it Lhein. It runs out with a narrow and ſtrait Cherſoneſus, with more level land than the reſt of the county, and yielding great quantities of barley. It has only two ſmall towns of note, the innermoſt on the bay called Pulhelly, q. d. the ſalt marſh: the outermoſt on the Iriſh ſea (which waſhes the other part of the Cherſoneſus) called Nevin, a trading town[f], where in the year 1284 the Engliſh nobility after their triumphs over the Welſh held a tournament and feaſt in honour of the great Arthur, as Florilegus[g] relates. If there were any other towns here, they were deſtroyed when Hugh earl of Cheſter, Robert de Rudland and Guarin of Shrewſbury, the firſt of the Normans who penetrated into theſe parts, ſo ravaged this promontory that it lay waſte ſeven years *.

From Nevin the coaſt broken into with ſeveral promontories runs out northward. Then turning about to the north-eaſt confining the ſtrait called Menai within narrow compaſs divides the iſland of Angleſea from the main land. On this ſtrait ſtood the city SEGONTIVM mentioned by Antoninus, ſome ruins of whoſe walls I ſaw near the little church[h] dedicated to St. Publicius. It had its name from the river which runs by it ſtill called Sciont iſſuing out of the lake Lin-Peris, in which is a ſingular fiſh called from its red belly Tor-coch. Since an old MS. of Ptolemy places on this bay SETANTIORVM PORTVS, which other copies carry up higher, if I correct it SEGONTIORVM PORTVS, and ſuppoſe it to have been at the mouth of this river, I may perhaps hit on the truth; at leaſt the candid reader will pardon my conjecture. This city Ninnius calls Caer Cuſtenith, and the writer of the life of Gryffin ap Conan tells us that Hugh earl of Cheſter built a caſtle at Hean Caer Cuſtenni, which the Latin tranſ-

* Life of Griffith ap Conan.

[a] Compages hujus inſulæ viſceribus terræ denſaret. Have compacted here the joints of this iſland within the bowels of the earth. H. Condenſe here within the bowels of the earth the frame of this iſland. G.

[b] ſenio nivium: a hardened cruſt of many ſnows felted together. H. A hardened cruſt of ſnow of many years continuance. G.

[c] N. H. I. c. 17. [d] II. c. 27. but this is not the paſſage cited by Mr. Camden.

[e] A literal tranſlation of Snowdun, q. d. the Snowdonians. [f] villa mercatoria. [g] P. 372. [h] Lhan Beblic.

lator renders in antiqua urbe Conſtantini imperatoris. Matthew of Weſtminſter informs us (but I do not vouch for the truth of his relation) that the body of Conſtantius the father of Conſtantine the Great was diſcovered here in the year 1283, and honourably buried in the church of the new town by order of Edward I. who out of the ruins of this place raiſed the town of Caernarvon a little higher up on the mouth of the river, ſo ſituated as to be waſhed by the ſea both on the weſt and north. As it took its name from its ſituation fronting the iſland Mona (for ſo the name ſignifies) it gave name to the whole county, which from it is called in Engliſh Caernarvonſhire. This little city is comprehended within a ſmall and almoſt circular extent of ſtrong walls, the weſt ſide being intirely occupied by a beautiful caſtle. The private houſes are handſome enough for the ſtyle of the country, and the inhabitants very well bred. They boaſt the honour of having Edward I. for their founder, and giving birth to his ſon Edward II. furnamed of Caernarvon, and the firſt prince of Wales of Engliſh blood. Here alſo the princes of Wales had their Chancery, Exchequer, and Court of Juſtice for North Wales.

Seven miles from hence on the ſame ſtrait between a very high mountain on the ſouth and a hill to the north lies Bangor or Banchor, ſo called from the fair choir, or as others think the place of the choir[i]. It is an epiſcopal ſee having 96 pariſhes under it. The church, no extraordinary ſtructure, is dedicated to Daniel formerly biſhop here. It was burnt by that deſperate rebel Oen Glendowrdy who threatened deſtruction to all the cities in Wales: but though it was afterwards rebuilt by Henry Denne biſhop here t. Henry VII. it has ſcarcely recovered its original ſplendor. The town at preſent is very ſmall, though it was formerly ſo large as to be called from its ſize Banchor vawr. Hugh earl of Cheſter built a caſtle at the mouth of the ſtrait[k], of which with all my ſearch I could not find the leaſt traces. Edward I. to carry his army into Mona or Angleſey, of which by and by, attempted in vain to build a bridge acroſs this ſtrait. Here alſo Paulinus Suetonius had before ſent over the Roman ſoldiers into Mona, the horſe by fording and the foot in flat-bottomed boats, as we learn from Tacitus[l].

Hence the ſhore proceeds with a ſteep aſcent along Pen-maen-maur, a high ſteep rock overhanging the ſea, having a narrow path for travellers, the impending ſtones on one ſide threatening ruin; on the other the ocean roaring at an immenſe depth below. But after you get over this and Pen-maen-bychan, q. d. the leſſer ſtone mount, a plain opens quite to the river Conwey, the boundary of this county on the eaſt. This river in Ptolemy by the abbreviations uſed in Greek writing is miſpelt Τοισόβιvς inſtead of Cονοvιvς. It riſes out of a lake of the ſame name in the ſouthern edge of the county, and runs to the ſea confined within a narrow chanel quite to its mouth, breeding ſhell-fiſh, which being impregnated with dew produce pearls, and giving its name to the town of Cονοvιvm mentioned by Antoninus. Though this is now ruined, and the name loſt thereabouts, yet its new name marks its antiquity. For a very mean village among its ruins is called Caer hean or the Old city. From the ſpoils of this Edward I. built the new town at the mouth of the river called thence Aber-Conwey, q. d. Mouth of Conwey, which place Hugh earl of Cheſter had before fortified. New Conwey is ſtrong by nature and fortified by art, having a handſome caſtle, and appearing more worthy the name of a little city than a town, except that it is thinly inhabited.

Conwey r.

Cονοvιvm.

Oppoſite to this on the other ſide of the river projects with a bend as if deſigned by nature for an anchoring place a vaſt promontory, which alſo is reckoned in this county, and called Gogarth. On it at the entrance of the Conwy into the ſea ſtood Diganwy, an antient town many ages ago deſtroyed by lightning. I take it for the town of Dιcτvm, where under the later emperors the præfect of the Numerus Nerviorum Dictenſium was ſtationed. As to its later name Diganwy it is obvious that Ganwey is derived from Conwey, and thence comes the Engliſh name Ganoc given to a caſtle afterwards built there by Henry III.

Gogarth.

Diganwy.

Dιcτvm.

Ganoc.

This county ſoon after the arrival of the Normans in this iſland was governed by Gryffin ap Conan, who not being able to ſtop the inroads of the Engliſh forces into Wales gave way to the ſtorm; and being afterwards for his integrity reſtored to favour with Henry I. eaſily recovered his poſſeſſions from the Engliſh, and left them to his deſcendants, who enjoyed them till the time of Llewelin. This prince having offended his brothers by ill uſage and his Engliſh neighbours by his inroads, was reduced to hold this mountainous county with the iſland of Mona or Angleſea dependant on Edward I. and on that account paid him yearly 1000 marks. But not complying with theſe conditions, and following his own and his perfidious brother's obſtinacy rather than any hope of ſucceſs, he hazarded once more the fortune of war, in which he loſt his life, and put an end to his own and the Britiſh empire in Wales[m].

This county contains 63 pariſh churches.

[i] See Davies' Welſh Dict. in voce. Gibſon. [k] Life of Gryffith. [l] Ann. XIV. 29.

[m] See a full account of this excellent prince in Powell's hiſt. of Wales, p. 314. His ſtatue is ſhewn at Shrewſbury, his tomb at Lanrwſt.

ADDITIONS.

CAERNARVONSHIRE is bounded on the north and weſt by the ſea, on the eaſt by Denbighſhire, on the ſouth by Merionethſhire and the ſea. It is in length from north to ſouth about 40 miles, in breadth from eaſt to weſt 20, and near 100 in circumference, is divided into ſeven hundreds, and contains one city, three market towns, one borough, and 68 pariſhes.

The river Traeth Mawr divides it from Merionethſhire.

" Caerarvonſhire about the ſhore hath reaſonable " good corne as about a mile upland from the ſhore " onto Caerarvon. Then more upward be Eryri " hills, and yn them is very litle corn except otes in " ſum places, and a litle barly, but ſcantly rye. If " ther were the deere would deſtroy it[a]." " All " Cregery is in Carrarvonſhire[b]."

Snowdon.

Mr. Lluyd ſays, that ſome obſerve that the Welſh name of Snowdon ſignifies the Eagle's rocks, from thoſe birds frequenting them formerly more plentifully than they did in his time, when they continued to haunt the rocks ſome years, though not above four or five at a time, and not more than one ſummer in five or ſix, coming as was ſuppoſed from Ireland[c]. It is more probable that this name alludes to their height than to the reſort of eagles or to the frequency of the ſnow on them, though Mr. Lluyd is of opinion that had they been called from Snow the name would have been Kragreu'r Eira, whereas the Welſh always call them Eryreu, Giraldus Eryri, and Nennius Heriri. The Engliſh probably miſtook or miſpronounced the antient name, and Kreigiau yr Trau might afterwards be written Kreigieu Eryreu[d]. But Mr. Pennant decides in favour of the deriyation from ſnow, which is more conſtant, though there are ſome whole weeks even in winter without it[e]. The earlieſt appearance is in October and November. Theſe falls are waſhed away by the rains, and the hills remain clear till Chriſtmas. Between that time and the middle of January are the greateſt falls, which are ſucceeded about the end of April or beginning of May by others that remain to the depth of ſome feet to the middle of June. But the fable of Giraldus concerning the continuance of the ſnow the whole year is totally to be exploded.

A writ in the reign of queen Mary orders a buck from her park of Snowdon. Mr. Pennant cites two others of Elizabeth. Sir James Price celebrates the fertility and woods of Snowdon hills, and Leland[f] ſays all Cregereri is foreſt. So Cambrenſis; " Antiquo proverbio dici ſolet ſicut Monam inſulam hominibus in annonam, ſic Eryri in paſcua, coactis in unum armentis omnibus toti Walliæ ſufficere poſſe[g]." I ſaw many ſheep on its heights, and large flocks on the neighbouring hills, as I had before ſeen them on the bare rocks and craggs of Merionethſhire, where one would not have thought it poſſible for any thing but goats to climb. The inhabitants of its faſtneſſes were the laſt who ſubmitted to the Engliſh, conſidering themſelves as by original right belonging to the prince of Wales.

Mr. Pennant thus deſcribes the aſcent to the higheſt peak of Snowdon. " After keeping on the ſide of the upper lake you turn to the left, and ſee not far from the road Caunant mawr, a noble cataract falling over two vaſt rocks. Near this place were found ſeveral beads, ſome of glaſs, and one of jet. Aſcend above Cwm Brwynog, a very deep bottom, fertile in gwair y rhoſydd, a compoſition of different kinds of ruſhes and graſs. This mountainous tract yields ſcarce any corn. Its produce is cattle and ſheep, which, during ſummer, keep very high in the mountains with their owners and their families. Theſe mountaineers paſs the ſummer in Havodtys, or ſummer dairy houſes, as the Swiſs of the Alps do in their ſennes: they manufacture and dye their own cloaths with lichens from the rocks; the men either working at harveſt or tending their flocks, the women milking or making butter and cheeſe. For their own uſe they milk both ewes and goats, and make cheeſe of their milk. Their diet conſiſts of butter, cheeſe, and oat bread, or Bara Cyrch, their drink whey. They are intelligent, wary, and circumſpect, tall, thin, and of ſtrong conſtitutions. Towards winter they deſcend to their Hên dref, or old dwelling, where they lead an idle life. Above the Cwm I ſaw Moel y Cynhorion, or the hill of council, paſſed through Bwlch y Maeſcwm, and ſkirted the ſide of Snowdon to Bwlch y Cwm Brwynog, where the aſcent becomes very ſteep and difficult, and travellers uſually purſue their way on foot clambering among the rocks. On the left were the precipices over Cwm Brwynog with Llyn du yr Arddwy at their foot. On the right thoſe over the ſmall lakes Llyn Glas, Llyn y Nadroedd, and Llyn Coch: the laſt is the higheſt on this ſide of the mountain. The ſpace between the precipices forms a ſhort but not very agreeable iſthmus till we reached a verdant plain, where we reſted before we laboured up another ſeries of broken crags; after theſe a ſecond ſmooth tract which reaches almoſt to the ſummit, which, by way of eminence, is called y Wyddfa, or the conſpicuous. It riſes almoſt to a point, or at beſt there is only room for a circular wall of looſe ſtones, within which travellers uſually take their repaſt. The mountain from hence ſeems propt by four buttreſſes, between which are four deep cwms or hollows, each excepting one having one or more lakes in its diſtant bottom. The neareſt was Ffynnon Las, or the green well, lying immediately below us, its waters appearing black and unfathomable, and the edges quite green. From thence is a ſucceſſion of bottoms ſurrounded with the moſt lofty and rugged hills. The Wyddfa is on one ſide; Crib y Diſtill, with its ſerrated tops on another; Crib Coch, a ridge of fiery redneſs, appears below the former, and oppoſite to it is the boundary called the Lliwedd. Another very ſingular ſupport to this mountain is Y Clawdh Coch, riſing into a ſharp ridge ſo narrow as not to afford breadth for a path. The view from hence is unbounded. It takes in the counties of Cheſter and York, part of the north of England, Scotland, and Ireland, a plain view of the iſle of Man, and that of Angleſea lay extended like a map. The night was remarkably fine, and the body of the ſun appeared moſt diſtinct till it roſe high enough to render its beams too brilliant for the ſight, and the miſts attracted by its heat from the various lakes in a ſlight degree obſcured the proſpect. The ſhadow of the mountain was flung many miles, and ſhewed its double head, the Wyddfa and Crib y Diſtill. I counted between 20 and 30 lakes in this county or Merioneth-ſhire. On a ſecond viſit to this mountain the ſky was obſcured very ſoon after I got up. A vaſt miſt enveloped the whole circuit of the mountain. The proſpect down was horrible, and gave an idea of a number of abyſſes concealed by a thick ſmoke circulating round us. Frequently a guſt of wind opening the clouds gave a fine and diſtinct viſto of lake and valley in one or more places: and then cloſing them alternately. A thunder ſtorm rolling in a manner inexpreſſibly awful brought on a heavy rain which ſwelled the rills on the ſides of the mountain into torrents. It is very rare that a traveller gets a favourable day to aſcend the hill. Its height has been variouſly reported. Mr. Caſwell, who was employed by Mr. Adams in a ſurvey of Wales 1682, meaſured it by inſtruments made by the direction of Mr. Flamſtead, and aſſerts it to have been 1240 yards[h]. Mr. Lluyd ſays its perpendicular height is about 1300 yards above the ſea level, but later experiments have aſcertained it at 1189 yards, reckoning from the quay at Caernarvon to the higheſt peak. The ſtone of which it is compoſed is exceſſively hard. Large coarſe cryſtal are often found in the fiſſures, and very frequently cubic pyritæ the uſual attendants on Alpine tracts. Theſe are alſo frequented by the rock ouzel, and ſome of the lakes are ſtocked with char and gwyniads, Alpine fiſh. Large flocks of goats are kept for the dairy, and milked with great regularity. The plants of the ſpecies called by Linnæus ætherææ are confined to the higher parts. The principal animals are foxes. Stags, ſo uncommon in Leland's time, were extirpated before the middle of the laſt century. Dudley earl of Leiceſter, who had by letters patent been appointed chief ranger of the foreſt of Snowdon, endeavoured but without ſucceſs, to extend it into Merioneth-ſhire and Angleſea; and though once a picked jury ſeemed to have carried the point for him, he met with ſo firm an opponent in ſir Richard Bulkeley that the queen recalled the grant by proclamation at Weſtminſter 1579. Snowdon was accounted ſacred by the antient Britons, and ſuppoſed to inſpire whomever ſlept on it. The Welſh had always the ſtrongeſt attachment to the tract. They eſteemed it the appurtenance of the principality of Wales from the time of Brute. Edward I. was told by its inhabitants, that, ſhould their prince yield him poſſeſſion, they would not do homage to ſtrangers[i]. Their princes had the additional title of Lords of Snowdon, where five barons held of them. Edward, after his conqueſt, held a triumphal fair on its ſummit, and adjourned thence to a tournament on the plain of Nevyn[k]."

[a] Lel. V. 47. [b] Ib. 43. [c] Lluyd. [d] Ib.
[e] Brit. Zool. I. 162. 8vo. 142. 4to. [f] V. 47. [g] II. 9.

Snowdon is a ridge of mountains three miles of aſcent, the extremity or ſummit three quarters of a mile perpendicular. Twenty-ſeven lakes are ſaid to be ſeen from it. Dywarchen, with a floating iſland as big as a cock pit, is one of the two placed on the top of the mountain by Giraldus, who ſuppoſed it formed of earth and roots matted together. Llyn Cadr almoſt circular at foot of a round hill called Cadr or the chair. Llyn Nadart, Llyn Nantlley, Llyn Trawdd Llanberis (ſeems Lluyd's Llyn Ykwn near Llanberis) Ffynon on las, or the green lake directly under the peak. All theſe are full of trout, and ſome have char. Lluyd mentions Llyns Teirn, Eigiau, and Llydaw. The Welſh call this mountain Moel y Wydwa, q. d. the conſpicuous hill, as well as Krag Eyreri. Giraldus (II. 9.) inſerts the fabulous ſtory of the eagle coming here at ſtated periods expecting war, and by whetting his beak making a hole in a particular ſtone on which he perches. In the Latin memorial printed in Wynne's Appendix, p. 393, it is always ſpelt Snawdon, and ſo in the old Engliſh maps. The ſtory of the ſnow lying on it for many years mentioned by Mr. Camden has been long exploded. The additions to the Britannia ſay it often continues till the middle of June, and rightly diſtinguiſh as fleet what has been thought ſnow in the months of May and June. For, generally ſpeaking, here is no ſnow from the end of April to the middle of September; ſome heaps excepted which often remain on the tops of Moel y Wydwa and Karn Llewellyn till the middle of June. Wagner mentions incruſtations of ſnow on the Alps in Switzerland[l]. "In ſummer time "the tops of the Alps have perpetual froſt and "perpetual ſnow. There are mountains crowned "with hillocks, and vaſt heaps of ſuch ice, called "by them Firn or Gletſcher, which may be pre-"ſumed to have continued for two or three thou-"ſand years, and for hardneſs may ſeem to be rather "cryſtal than ice," and theſe are deſcribed by all ſucceeding travellers; but in Wales no ſuch incruſtations are known.

The lakes in this tract may amount to 50 or 60. Mr. Lluyd noted 15 ſeen from the top of Moel y Wydva. They are generally denominated from the rivers they pour forth, or from the colour of their water. One under the higheſt peak is called Fynnon las, or the Green fountain, and Mr. Ray in his Travels obſerves that the waters of the Alpine lakes incline to the ſame colour. Others receive their name from ſome village or pariſh church adjoining, or from ſome remarkable mountain or rock under which they lie, and ſome though few are diſtinguiſhed by names ſcarce intelligible to the beſt critics in the Britiſh language, as Llyn Teirn, Llyn Eigiau, Llyn Llydau. Some interpret the firſt King's mere, from Teirn a king or prince; the other Shoal mere, from Eigiau ſhoals of fiſh. Llydaw is the Britiſh name of Armorica, but what other ſenſe it has is unknown[m]. Giraldus reports the ſtory of the monocular fiſh of two lakes in Scotland, and Mr. Lluyd ſays it is credibly reported that ſuch are ſometimes taken at Llyn ykwn near Llanberris. The better knowledge of later times

[h] Wren's Parentalia, I. 253.
[i] Powel, p. 369.
[k] Pennant's Wales, II. p. 160—170.
[l] Hiſt. Nat. Helvetiæ Curioſa § 2.
[m] Lluyd.

will

will account for moſt of the marvellous in antient natural hiſtory, and one cannot help regretting that any man of real curioſity and ſcience ſhould ſtill attempt to juſtify the credulity of a monk by the hearſy evidence of Welſh peaſants and fiſhermen in favour of the monocular trouts, or even by French or German academicians[n]. Moſt of theſe lakes are ſtored with trout and eels. The Torgoch is found in other lakes in this county and Merioneth: but that of Llanberris affords another kind of Alpine fiſh, which Mr. Lluyd takes for the gilt charr of Winander mere in Weſtmoreland, which Willughby and Ray conclude to be the carpio lacus Benaci of Rondeletius and Geſner, but Mr. Pennant[o] denies this. The ſeaſon here for catching both begins about 11th November, and continues a month. Theſe fiſh, as well as the Gwiniad of Llyn Tegid in Merioneth, are never taken by bait, but always in nets near Pontvawr in the river Seiont, which iſſues out of this lake, and is called now corruptly Avon y Sant, from St. Peris[p]. Mr. Pennant adds, it is the red char of the Weſtmoreland lakes, and is found in Llyn Quellyn near the foot of Snowdon, and before the diſcovery of the copper mines in thoſe of Llynberris, but the mineral ſtreams have entirely deſtroyed them in theſe laſt lakes. Llynallet in Denbighſhire is famous for an excellent kind of trout[q].

Among theſe mountains, ſays Mr. Lluyd, the moſt noted are Moel y Wydva, y Glyder, Karnedh Dhavidh, and Karnedh Llewelyn, which are very properly called Britiſh Alps, particularly, ſays Dr. Powell, the firſt and laſt. For, beſides their extraordinary height and craggy precipices, their numerous lakes and rivers, and their being covered with ſnow for a conſiderable part of the year, they agree with the Alps in producing ſeveral ſimilar plants and animals[r], particularly the Merula ſylveſtris Aldrovandi, called here and in Merionethſhire Mwyalchin y Graig, or Rock Ouzel, and in Switzerland Berg Awzel, or Mountain Blackbird[s], and the Torgoch, or Umbla minor of Geſner[t], which Mr. Ray[u] ſuppoſes the ſame with the Roetel of the Alpine lakes, both words ſignifying the ſame, or Red belly[x]. Here, as in the Alps, the rareſt plants are found in greateſt variety on the ſteepeſt rocks, viz. Klogwyn Karnedh y Wydwa, commonly called Klogwyn y Karnedh, which is probably the higheſt rock in the three kingdoms, Craig y Dyſkil (corrupted probably from Diſtil, from the water continually dropping down this precipice), Trig-vylchau, generally and perhaps more truly pronounced y Dugy vilcha, i. e. Treig-Vylcheû, and y Klogwyn du ymhen y Glyder, which are all near Llanberis, and well known to the ſhepherds. Theſe hills are heaped on one another, ſo that after climbing up one rock you come to a valley and moſt commonly to a lake, and paſſing by that, aſcend another, and ſometimes a third or fourth before you arrive at the ſummit. Theſe mountains, as well as Cader Idris, and ſome others in Merionethſhire, differ from thoſe in Brecknockſhire, and other parts of South Wales, in abounding much more in naked and inacceſſible rocks; and their ſkirts and vallies being covered and ſcattered over with fragments of rocks of all ſizes fallen from the cliffs above. More of this may be ſeen in Mr. Ray's Phyſico-Theological Diſcourſes[y]. Mr. Lluyd only mentions two inſtances; the firſt is the ſummit of the Glyder before-mentioned, and hereafter more fully deſcribed, where he obſerved prodigious heaps of ſtones, many of them as large as thoſe of Stonehenge, in moſt irregular ſhapes, and in the utmoſt confuſion, as if the ſkeleton of the mountain laid bare by torrents of rain and ſnow or the general deluge. The other is as regular and uniform as this is diſordered; a naked precipice called Klogwyn near Treigvylchau as ſteep as any he had ſeen, but adorned with naked pillars, and theſe again ſlightly croſſed at certain joints, that ſuch, continues Mr. Lluyd, as favour the hypotheſis of the ingenious author of the Sacred Theory of the Earth might ſuppoſe it one ſmall pattern of the antediluvian earth, whereas it was evident the interſtices between the pillars were occaſioned by a continual dropping of water down the cliffs, from the frequent rains and ſnow to which this high rock expoſed to a weſterly ſea wind is ſubject, and that the effects of ſuch ſtorms are more remarkably regular on this than on any other cliff proceeds partly from its ſituation, partly from the texture of the ſtone; or a natural regularity of the rock rendered more conſpicuous by the ſtorms.

The area of Glyder Bach is covered with groupes Glyder of columnar ſtones of vaſt ſize from 10 to 30 feet long, lying in all directions, often piled on one another, or half erect, ſloping down, and ſupported by others which lie without order at their baſes. The tops are frequently crowned with ſtones lying horizontally on them. One of them about 25 feet by ſix on being ſtamped on gave a tremulous motion from end to end. Another 11 by 6 in the thinneſt part, was poiſed like a rocking ſtone, and ſo was a third. Many of them have ſhells bedded in them, and ſeveral pieces of lava are found in this neighbourhood. One ſide of the mountain is formed into a gap, thick ſet with ſharp rocks pointing upwards one above another to a great height. In the midſt of a vale far below riſes the ſingular mountain Trevaen, aſſuming on this ſide a pyramidical form Trev naked and very rugged. Near its foot is Llyn Ogwen, Llyn O noted for its fine trout. The water of five lakes darts down the precipice of the middle of Benglog, Bengl the moſt dreadful horſepath in Wales, and forms the torrent of the Ogwen, which falls into the ſea a few miles lower. Near Cwm Idwal invironed with horrid precipices, ſhading a lake in its bottom, is an excellent quarry of ſtones, and a dreadful gap in a great black precipice called Twll Du, or the Devil's kitchen, 150 yards long, 100 deep, and only ſix wide, through which ruſh the waters of Llyn y Cwn. Klogwyn Du Ymhen y Glyder is as dreadful a precipice as any in Snowdon. Its neighbourhood is noted among botaniſts for rare plants. Glyder Vawr connected to the leſſer Glyder by the Weyn oer affords a noble proſpect. The plain on the top is covered with looſe ſtones like the ſea beach, in many places croſſing each other in various directions, and intirely naked[z].

[n] See Phil. Tranſ. vol. 57, art. 23. Gent. Mag. 1768, p. 622. Mr. Pennant prudently avoids giving his countenance to theſe monſtroſities. Zool. III. 262. and in his Wales, II. 156, he ſays, "At preſent there is not a fiſh in the lake to diſprove the relation."
[o] Ib. III. 258. [p] Lluyd. [q] Pennant Zool. III. 263.
[r] See Ray's Synopſis. Pennant's Wales, II. 156.
[s] Pennant, Zool. I. 229. [t] P. 1201.
[u] Willugh. Ichthyol. [x] Pennant Zool. III. 296. [y] P. 285.
[z] Pennant's Wales, II. 151—156.

"Linne Dolbaterne, two miles in length, and half a "mile in breadth. Linne Peris a mile in length. "Segent cummith firſt through Llin Peris, and a "bow ſhotte of ynto Dolbatern poole. Ther is but "a bridge betwixt theſe two. In theſe two pooles "be redde bely fiſhes called Thorgoughe, i. e. thori "aut pectoris rubri. Ther be alſo of them in Llyn "Tarthennine and in Llyn Boladulinne. They be "taken in theſe three poles in order, and taken in "the one and not ſeen in the other[a]."

The picturesque vale of Nant Beris, bounded by Snowden, Cefn Cwm Gafr, the two Glyders, and the two Lliders, each of them firſt rate mountains, is ſtrait and nearly of equal breadth, filled by meadows and two magnificent lakes communicating by a river. Leland ſays "the beſt wood of Caernarvon- "ſhire is by Glin Kledder, and by Glin Llughy, and "by Capel Kerigh, and at Llan Peris[b]." But the woods are cut down, and the road leading hither much improved. On the loftieſt part over one of the lakes ſtand the remains of Caſtell Dolbadern, a round tower, and a few fragments of walls. "Do- "lebaterne, on a rock between two linns. There is "yet a piece of a tour wher Owen Gough brother "to Llewellin laſt prince was in priſon[c]." In this valley are two groupes of wretched houſes, the fartheſt, with its church, dedicated to St. Peris, whoſe well is ſhewn here. The upper lake is the moſt beautiful, 140 yards deep in places; the lower, about 12 miles long, narrows into the river Rythell, and ſpreading to Caernarvon, aſſumes the name of Seiont[d]. This country is part of the woodleſs flat between the mountains and the Meinai. Its want of ſtrength is ſupplied with ſeveral ports fortified in the Britiſh manner. Dinas Dinorwig, half a mile ſouth of the church of Llandeniolen, is the chief: the area is very large, ſurrounded with an agger of ſmall ſtones backed by another of very large ones; then ſucceeds a deep ditch and rampart of earth, a ſecond vaſt ditch and a third rampart; within the area is a circle of ſtones, probably the poſt of commander in chief. Another poſt hereabouts is named Pen y Gaer, a ſmaller Bryn y Caſtrelau, ſingle walled, and on an eminence on the other ſide the Rythell is another called Caer Cwm y Glo, or Caer Caneg y Fran, from which is ſaid to have been a paved way to Llys Dinorwig[e].

Nevin, called by Leland[f] Treneven, "is a tounelet, "two miles up the lande, and there is a fair every "year, but no weekly market. From thence to Aber- "daron, 12 miles, the ground betwixt is ſumwhat "plain, and hath two or three paroches having very "good plenty of corne and graſſe, but very little "wode. The ſmale townlet of Aberdaron wher is "a 30 or mo houſes is on the very farther ripe of "Daron, the ſe a quarter of a mile of; the paroch "chirch above almoſt a mile on the ſhor as the ſalt "water compaſith about with a hedd. It is called "in Walch Llan engan Brening, i. e. fanum Nini- "ani reguli, wher was a late a great pilgrimage. "The hither end of Llene by the ſhore cummith in "a hill caullid Brith Rivil ubi vallis Vortigerni," a round craggy rock ſeen from Caernarvon and called Ryval hill. "Betwixt Vallis Vortigerni "and Aberdaron the cumpaſe of the ſea gathereth "an head and the ſea entereth at both ends[g]."

Nevyn, ſituated on a headland of its own name, is a contributary borough to Caernarvon, to which the Black Prince granted a Sunday market, and two farms. Here Edward I. held a round table 1284[h], as a triumph on his conqueſt of Wales[h].

A very ſteep road leads from Nantberris among the vales in the mountains. At the top of one is Llyn Llydaw, a fine lake, with one little iſland frequented by black backed gulls. The Wheatear and the Mwyalchen y graig, or rock ouzel, are the only inhabitants of theſe heights. Nant Gwinan is the moſt beautiful vale in Snowdon, guarded on each ſide with vaſt mountains with the pretty lake Llyn Gwinan, and a ruined chapel of the ſame name. At the end of the vale is the beautiful Llyn Dinas, and at the bottom of a tract of meadow riſes a vaſt inſulated rock cloathed with woods called Dinas Emris, on whoſe ſummit is a large area, on the acceſſible part of which are two great ramparts of ſtone, and within it the ruins of a ſtone building 10 yards long. This may have been the reſidence of Vortigern, and Merlin Ambroſius may have given it the name of Emris. A place cloſe by called Cell y Dewiniad, or the cell of the diviners, alludes to the magicians of Vortigern's court[i]. Dinas Emris.

Nant y Gwrtheyrn, or Vortigern's valley in this neighbourhood, is ſuppoſed by Mr. Pennant to have been the ſcene of that prince's retreat, though Nennius[k] places it near the Teivi in Caermarthenſhire. Certain it is that fancy cannot frame a ſpot fitter for the retreat or ſecurity of a profligate monarch, who might have fixed his reſidence on a high natural mountain above the ſea improved by art. Till the beginning of the laſt century a tumulus of ſtones covered with turf called Bedd Gwrthyrn was to be ſeen here, when it was opened, and found to cover a ſtone coffin containing the bones of a tall man[l]. Acroſs the hollow between two ſummits of the Eiſt mountains extends an immenſe rampart of ſtones, or ruins of a wall which blocked up the paſs. On the Eiſl is the moſt perfect and magnificent as well as moſt artful Britiſh poſt, called Tre'r Caeri, or the town of the fortreſſes. The acceſſible ſide is defended by three walls, the loweſt very imperfect, the next tolerably intire has the grand entrance, and in one part points up to the third wall, which runs round the edges of the hill top: the ſecond wall unites with the firſt, which runs into a point, returns and gains the higheſt in an inacceſſible part of the hill: about the middle of the area is a ſquare place ſecured with ſtones, a ſort of prætorium, ſurrounded with two rows of cells of various forms, ſome of the circular 15 feet diameter, of the oblong 30 feet long, with long entrances regularly faced with ſtone. The upper wall was in many places 15 feet high on the outſide, and often 16 feet broad, conſiſting of two parallel and contiguous parts, one ſerving as a parapet to the other. South of this fortreſs is Moel Garn Guwch, a conic hill, with a prodigious heap of ſtones on its ſummit, called Arffedaged y Goures, or the apron full of ſtones flung down by the gianteſs. From the Eiſl one ſees ſeveral other leſſer eminences, fortified in a manner nearly ſimilar: as Carn Madryn, the hill of Bodnan above Nevyn, Moel ben Twrch, Caſtell Gwgban, remarkable for a ſmall circular entrenchment, and Pen y Gaer, on the other ſide of the paſs leading from Arfon to Llyn; all which make it probable that this country was the retreat of multitudes of Britans from the firſt fury of the Saxon invaders[m]. Nant y Gwrtheyrn.

[a] Lel. V. 48. [b] It. V. 47. [c] Ib. 49. [d] Pennant Ib. II. 156—158.
[e] Ib. 156—166. [f] V. 49. [g] Ann. Waverl. II. 239. [h] Pennant, Ib. 201. 203.
[i] Pennant, II. 172—174. [k] Hiſt. Brit. c. 48. [l] Kennet's Parochial Antiquities. Alcheſter, p. 698.
[m] Pen. II. 206. 208.

Bethkelert. At Bethkelert under Snowdon, now a mean village, was a priory of black canons, the oldeſt foundation in Wales except Bardſey, or Bangor, now the property of lord Radnor, valued at £. 70. per annum [n].

In 1688 were found in a rock called Kareg Dhinin in Bethkelert pariſh under a great ſtone, about 50 braſs weapons engraved in Pl. XVIII. fig. 14, 15. which ſeem to have been ſhort ſwords or daggers from one to two feet long, ſome flat, ſome quadrangular, ſeveral gilt; but the greater part when firſt found were covered with a bluiſh ruſt; the handles which were probably of wood were all waſted, and a few of them had two braſs nails riveted on each ſide into holes in which they faſtened the weapons to the handles. Such have been found elſewhere in Wales and thoſe mentioned by Mr. Camden in Cornwall at the foot of St. Michael's mount were probably the ſame [o].

Canganorum Prom. Canganorum Promontorivm, Καγγανων, or, as the Palatine MS. of Ptolemy reads, Γαλγαιων ακρον, is evidently in Wales, and ſeems to be Branchipult point, or Llyn promontory in Caernarvonſhire. This and St. David's head are the only two remarkable heads of land in all Wales, which would be moſt in ſight of the Romans as they ſailed through the Iriſh ſea. This and Octopitarum promontorium Mr. Ward believed to be the two promontories which are all Ptolemy mentions in Wales [p].

Traeth Mawr. Traeth Mawr is a large extent of ſands between the counties of Caernarvon and Merioneth, which ſir John Wynne of Gwedir in 1625 conceived a deſign of gaining from the ſea, with a leſſer called Traeth Bychan, by embanking [q]. Beyond there lies Penmorva. the little town of Penmorva, in whoſe church is a monument for that valiant knight ſir John Owen. In former times this neighbourhood abounded with gentry who divided the hundred of Evionnyd, in which it is ſituate, and filled the country with their Dolben maen. bloody feuds. Near Dolbenmaen is a large mount, on which Mr. Rowlands conjectures ſtood a watch tower. Near Yſtymkiged are three cromlechs joining to each other, and near Clenenney on Bwlch Craigwen, a fine druidical circle, conſiſting at preſent of 38 ſtones. At a mile's diſtance, and within ſight of this above Penmorva is another [r].

Crickaeth. "At Criketh be two or three poor houſes, and "there is a ſmall rill. There hath been a fran-"chiſed town now clene decayed [s]."

Crickaeth is a poor borough town contributary to Caernarvon, having a caſtle on a high hill jutting into the ſea, the iſthmus defended by two ditches. It conſiſts of four ſquare courts, and on each ſide the entrance a round tower. It was the reſidence of ſir Howell y Fwyall, who diſputed the honor of taking the king of France at Poitiers with Denis de Morebeque, a knight of Artois. The Black Prince, however, made him conſtable of this caſtle, with the privilege of having a meſs of meat ſerved up before his pole ax, with a guard of eight yeomen at an allowance of 8*d*. per day from the king [t], and then given to the poor.

Aberdaron. Aberdaron is a poor fiſhing village on a ſandy bay under high ſandy cliffs at the extremity of the county. The church has two ailes ſupported by four handſome pillars. This being the place where devotees took boat for Bardſey iſland was greatly reſorted to. Leland [u] ſays it was called Llan engan Brennine, Fanum Niniani reguli. It was dedicated to Hywyn, a ſaint of that iſland, and was a ſanctuary. Ninian was ſon of a Welſh prince. Bardſey iſland, Bardſey. called alſo the iſland of ſaints and Ynis, Enlli, or the iſland of the current, is about two miles in circumference, a very fertile plain well cultivated. The abbot's houſe is a large ſtone building inhabited by ſeveral of the natives. Not far from it is a ſingular chapel or oratory, a long arched edifice with an inſulated ſtone altar near the eaſt end, where one of the inhabitants reads prayers [x]. It was founded before A. D. 516, and was valued at £. 46. per annum [y]. Dubricius, archbiſhop of Canterbury, retired to it on his reſignation. On a mount above was a chapel and well of our Lady. Great numbers of herrings are taken on this coaſt. The churches in this country are of very antient foundation. In that of Llangynodol is an in- Llangyn. ſcription to ſome holy woman. Hic jacet Gwen Hoedl. Another over a ſtable in Llannor pariſh has Dervon Llannor. hic jacet, and at Capel Yverack in Aberdaron is Capel Yverack. a third. On the ſafe ſandy bay of Porth yn Llyn are remains of a Roman entrenchment.

"Pollele bay a poore market, now a late ſtatio Pollele. "optima carinis. The prince had a place there as "yet appereth [z]."

Pullheli is the beſt town in this country, the magazine of goods which ſupplies all this tract, and has a tolerable harbour for veſſels of about 60 tons. The Black Prince made it a free borough by charter dated in the 12th year of his principality, and granted the fee farm of it and Nevyn to Nigel de Loryng, one of the gentleman of the bedchamber. Carn Madryn, five miles inland from hence a lofty rocky inſulated hill was the ſtronghold of the ſons of Owen Gwynedd: the bottom, ſides, and top are filled with cells of different ſhapes, once covered from the weather, and many of them pretty intire: the whole ſummit ſurrounded by a wall ſtill in many parts viſible [a].

South of Caernarvon is Clynogvawr on the ſea Clynog. coaſt, a village of about nine houſes, where Beuno ſon of a nobleman of Powiſland, having embraced a religious life, ſettled A.D. 616, and raiſed St. Winifred to life, and built a church, which he had in vain attempted to build at Gwardog near Caernarvon. This church was conventual, and Beuno firſt abbot. It is a moſt beautiful freeſtone building, the moſt magnificent in North Wales, 132 feet long by 27 wide, and the tranſepts from north to ſouth 63 feet. It was ſupported by oblations at Beuno's tomb on Trinity Sunday till the decayed ſtate of the roof has at laſt required a brief. The chancel windows were adorned with the hiſtories of Beuno and Winifred, now reduced to three whole-length nameleſs ſaints. To the ſteeple which is at the weſt end joins on the ſouth ſide by a very antient narrow vault or covered way covered with great flat ſtones Beuno's chapel 41 feet by 24, and almoſt in the middle his monument, a plain altar-tomb, on which the country people lay their children a whole night after bathing them in his well for epilepſies, and if they happen to ſleep imagine a cure. To it were formerly brought all calves and lambs with a particular mark called Beuno's mark which were redeemed or left for the [n] Tan. 703. 705. Pennant, II. 176. [o] Lluyd. [p] Ward in Horſley, p. 366.

[q] Pennant, Ib. 184. [r] Pennant, II. 187—189. [s] Lel. V. 50.
[t] Pennant, Ib. 192. [u] V. 50. [x] Pennant, Ib. 195. 196. [y] Tann. 703.
[z] Lel. V. 50. [a] Pennant, Ib. 193. 195.

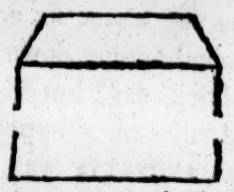
abbot. They are ſtill brought to the churchwarden and redeemed with money which they put into an old cheſt of one piece of wood, called Cyff St. Beino, and apply to the repair of the church. The eaſt window of this chapel had paintings of the ſaint and the Crucifixion 1718, now all gone. It ſerves at preſent for a ſchool. Leland calls this "the old "chirche wher St. Bennow lyith hard by the new "which is of new work almoſt as bigge as St. Da-"vid's[b]." He adds that the monaſtery of White monks (Ciſtercians) was ſuppreſſed many years ago. At the Lincoln taxation 1291 the church was collegiate, and ſo continued to the diſſolution[c]. It is a ſinecure rectory of £.200 a year belonging to Jeſus college, Oxford, who are bound to preſent their principal. The vicarage is worth £.50. On the ſhore juſt below the church they ſhew the place where Beuno landed his materials. It is a flat ſand ſurrounded by hills of pebbles, which in ſtorms are driven over the ſand but do not remain long, of which the credulous vulgar make a miracle.

In Bachwen tenement, about half a mile from this place, is a very uncommon cromlech; the upper ſtone inclined to the weſt has on its ſurface a number of ſmall ſhallow holes, with two or three larger than the reſt. At 30 paces diſtant is an upright ſtone. On the other ſide of the Llyfni is a ſtrong camp called Carreg y dinas, the three ſides to the river very ſteep, the fourth defended by two foſſes and two banks chiefly of ſtone, the inner one ſix yards high: in the middle a mount, the entrance at the eaſt end. Three miles to the eaſt is Dinas Dinlle, a mount of gravel and ſand in the verge of a great marſh on the ſhore, having at the top a large area ſurrounded by a vaſt agger: within which are remains of foundations of an oblong form of earth and round ſtones, and in one part a tumulus of the ſame materials. Without on one ſide is a very deep ditch, with another high rampart: a regular entrance at one end, but at the other the ground ſlopes to the ſea. This fortreſs Mr. Pennant aſcribes to the Romans, whoſe coins, particularly thoſe of Allectus, have been found there. Saxton's and Speed's maps ſeem to place another hereabouts by the name of Caer Jerienrodem. Between the former and Dinas Dinoethwy, which is four miles diſtance, is Dinas y Prif, or the poſt of the chieftain, a ſmall camp about 44 yards ſquare, each corner elevated above the ramparts, and within are foundations of ſtone buildings[d].

Glynllivon was the reſidence of Cilmin Troed du, nephew of Merfyn Frych, prince of Wales, ſlain A. D. 841, from whom deſcend the family of Glynn, who take their name from the place, though it now belongs by marriage to ſir John Wynne[e].

"Cairarvon on the hither ſide Segent river in If-"curvay hundrede[f]."

SETANTIORUM PORTUS (Σεταντίων Palat.) if we have any regard to Ptolemy's ſituation muſt be near the mouth of the river Ribble[g]. The courſe of the military way from Cheſter to the ſea coaſt is yet very viſible in ſeveral places, as Dr. Ward was aſſured by a good hand. It paſſes near Bangor, which it may do and yet terminate near Caernarvon, which is juſtly ſuppoſed to have ariſen from the antient SEGONTIUM[h] or as Ravennas calls it, Segantio, the boaſt of North Wales for beauty of ſituation, goodneſs of buildings, regularity of plan, and, above all, for the grandeur of the caſtle[i]. The town is a ſquare incloſed with embattled ſtone walls on three ſides, the caſtle defending it on the ſouth. In the weſt wall are three round towers, and two more on each ſide of a narrow gate. In the north wall two and in the eaſt two. The town and county halls and the cuſtom-houſe ſtand on the caſtle green. Edward I. built this caſtle in a ſingular and elegant ſtyle (and probably the town at the ſame time) with the revenues of the ſee of York then vacant. A deep narrow ditch defends it on the north ſide or in front, where over the principal entrance is ſeated a bare-headed figure in flowing locks, holding in his left hand a ſword which he draws with his right, or perhaps is ſheathing in alluſion to the Welſh war being ended. Under his feet a defaced ſhield. The gate leads into a narrow oblong court. At the weſt end a polygon tower with three hexagon towers above, on whoſe battlements are eagles, whence it has the name of Eagle tower. In a room of this tower 11 feet by 7 of this form



Edward II. was born April 25, 1284. A paſſage ſeparates it from a ſimilar apartment called the nurſery. On the ſouth ſide next the river Seiont are three hexagon and three octagon towers, and others on the north. On the eaſt a magnificent entrance with a lofty round arch and ſmall poſtern. Theſe towers communicate all round by noble galleries, and ſeveral of them are ſurrounded by ſmaller towers peculiar to this and Conway caſtle. In the north-eaſt corner is a deep well half filled up. One of the towers was a dungeon, and it is pretended that a man being let down into it to fetch up a dog found a hammer and a wooden door that he was afraid to open. The caſtle is founded on a rock, and almoſt intire; the outer walls of white hewn ſtones with an edging of red ones at the corners and about the windows, as alſo in ſeveral faſcias, which have a pretty effect. The conſtable of the caſtle is always mayor, having under him an alderman, two bailiffs, &c. His appointment is £.200 per ann. and he is to keep the caſtle in repair: 5*l.* was laid out on it a few years ago: for the reſt only its demolition is prevented. The caſtle was burnt by the Welſh 1294[k], and ſurrendered to the parliament 1646. On the eaſt ſide of the town is a large ſuburb with a wide ſtreet leading over the bridge and ditch through the eaſt gate, which is ſided with two round towers, and has over it a handſome aſſembly-room. The town is well built, the ſtreets at right angles with the principal one, wherein is the old town-hall falling to ruin. Here is a chapel built for the uſe of the garriſon, and ſerved by the vicar of Llan Beblic who performs the ſervice in Engliſh. The morning ſervice when I was there was opened with a hymn compoſed on purpoſe, and after the Nicene creed the miniſter gave notice that the charity of the congregation was deſired for a perſon who had been long ill, and it was collected by the church-wardens in copper baſons with long handles, which is the general method of providing for the poor in-

[b] V. 13.
[c] Tan. 705. Pennant, II. 210.
[d] Pennant, Ib. 211, 212.
[e] Ib. 213.
[f] Lel. V. 47.
[g] Ward in Hortl. 376.
[h] Ib. 456.
[i] Pennant, II. 214.
[k] Powel, 380.

ſlead

ſtead of a rate. On the oppoſite ſide of the river Seint about half a mile from the town are the ruins of a Roman fort, its walls intire on three ſides, about 10 feet high and near four feet thick, built of rude ſtones ſtrongly cemented together, and incloſing an area of about 80 yards from eaſt to weſt by 45 from north to ſouth; the weſt ſide overhanging the ſteep bank of the river has no traces of a wall. Helena the wife of Conſtantius is ſaid to have had a chapel here, and her name is alſo preſerved in a well half a mile below on the river ſide very good "for bathing little lads when they "be very ſeek for want of wind breath, after being "cleared by a broom from the ſlaver." Near it was found not many years ago a braſs pot full of money under a tree. Another the winter before I was there near the gallows on the bank of the marſh by the river ſide. Mr. Pennant meaſured one ſide 74 feet, the other pointing to the river 64 feet.

Segontium. He calls this an old Roman fort diſtinct from Segontium, which is at a ſmall diſtance from this and about a quarter of a mile from Mennai, an oblong of about ſix acres, on the ſummit of a riſing ground ſloping down on every ſide, divided by the publick road, but on ſeveral parts are veſtiges of walls and ruins of a hypocauſt: a gold coin T. DIVI AVG. FIL. AVGVSTVS was found here. Near the gallows is a ſtone bridge of three arches to which the tide comes up the river: the oppoſite ſhore is finely wooded. Some derive the name of the town from its walls, Caer-ar-fon. It had its own priſon for petty offences and a merchant gild, whoſe bondſmen by living in the town and paying ſcot and lot a year and a day gained their liberty. Jews were not permitted to reſide in the borough. It ſends one member, has four fairs, and a good weekly market. It gave title of earl 4 Charles I. 1628 to Robert lord Dormer, whoſe ſon Charles ſucceeded 1643, and died without iſſue. The title was revived 1 George I. in the perſon of James Bridges lord Chandos created marquis of Caernarvon and duke of Chandos 1719, ſucceeded 1744 by his ſecond ſon Henry, and he 1771 by his ſon James, third and preſent duke.

Aber Ogwen. Near Aber Ogwen at the mouth of a furious torrent Ogwen is a ruined old chapel and certain entrenchments. In a field called Car Gwilun Ddu is an artificial cave, in which tradition buries William de Breos executed by Llewelin the Great on ſuſpicion of too great familiarity with his queen. Carn Llewellyn and Carn Dafydd are two ſummits of Coed Mawr. mountains. At Coytmore or Coed Mawr houſe belonging to the Pughs of Penhryn, is a portrait by Lely of the dwarf painter Richard Gibſon and his fairy wife, neither of whom exceeded three feet 10 inches [l]. In Aber glen is a double caſcade, and at the entrance of the glen a large artificial mount, once the ſite of a caſtle belonging to Llewelyn the Great who there cauſed Breos before-mentioned to be hanged [m].

Bangor. "Bangor in Iſcurvay hundred hath two fayres a "year, but ſkant a market every week [n]." The town conſiſts of one ſtreet, in which are the market houſe and inn. The preſent cathedral is of the 15th century, the choir built by biſhop Dean between 1496 and 1500, the tower and nave by biſhop Skevyngton 1532, whoſe work is commemorated by an inſcription over the weſt door, moſt of the old tranſept being left ſtanding. The nave is 110 feet long by 60, the tranſepts 60 by 25, the choir 54 by 26. Here are monuments for biſhops Glynn 155', Robinſon 1584, Vaughan 1597, Rowlands 1616, Morgan 1673, and one with a croſs fleuri in the ſouth tranſept aſcribed to Owen Glendwr; but as he was buried at Monington in Herefordſhire, where he died, I ſhould rather aſcribe it to ſome of the earlier biſhops. Mr. Pennant gives it to Owen Gwynned. The palace was built by biſhop Skevington, and is ſurrounded by an embattled wall. The dean's houſe is the only one of the chapter remaining, the reſt with St. Mary's church and the old caſtle have been long down, but three ſides of the wall are yet to be traced on a ſteep rocky hill a quarter of a mile eaſt of the town [o]. Black friars founded without the town is converted into a free-ſchool, and over the chimney is a monument of one Gryffydh found in its ruins [p]. Bangor is the oldeſt epiſcopal ſee in North Wales, and the ſecond in Cambria, being founded about A. D. 516 [q].

Pen maen mawr. Pen maen mawr is eight miles along the ſands from Bangor, and 1400 feet perpendicular [r]. At the foot of this mountain is a lone inn improving ſince a turnpike road has been lately carried over the middle, finiſhed about 1772, and defended by a wall on the brink of the precipice [s]. The ſea breaks juſt before it at the ſide of the road which proceeded up the ſide of that ſtupendous mountain, whoſe ſummit is hard rock, and its ſide beſtrewed with fragments of ſtone fallen or ſtarting through the ſurface ſo as to leave a path only for a ſingle carriage concealed from the perpendicular declivity to the ſea by a wall five feet high of ſtones bedded in mortar, but with ſo little foundation that large portions of it were continually falling. "On the top of this mountain ſtands a lofty and impregnable hill Braich y Dinas. called Braich y Dinas, where we find the ruinous walls of an exceeding ſtrong fortification, encompaſſed with a treble wall, and within each wall the foundation of at leaſt 100 towers, all round and of equal bigneſs and about ſix yards diameter within the walls, which in moſt places were two yards thick and in ſome about three. The caſtle ſeems to have been impregnable, there being no way to aſſault it, the hill is ſo high, ſteep and rocky, and the walls ſo ſtrong. The way or entrance to it aſcends by many turnings, ſo that 100 men might defend themſelves againſt a legion, and yet it ſhould ſeem there were lodgings for 20,000 men within theſe walls. At the ſummit of the rock within the innermoſt wall is a well, which affords plenty of water in the drieſt ſummer. Tradition makes this to have been the ſtrongeſt retreat that the Britans had in all Snowdon: and the greatneſs of the work ſhews it to have been a princely fortification ſtrengthened both by nature and art, ſeated on the top of one of the higheſt monuments of that part of Snowdon which lies next the ſea." Thus a MS. written by ſir John Gwynn of Gwedyr t. Charles I. communicated to biſhop Gibſon by his worthy friend Mr. Griffith Jones, ſchoolmaſter of Llanrwſt. Mr. Pennant [t] confirms this account, and diſcovered among the looſe ſtones three if not four walls very [l] Walp. Anecd. of Paint. III. 64.

[n] Lel. V. 47.
[q] Ib. Tan. 704.
[o] Pennant, II. 284.
[r] Wyndham, 152.
[m] Pennant, II. 298—303.
[p] Willis, 47. Tan. 705.
[s] Pennant, II. 304.
[t] II. 306, 307.

diſtinct

diſtinct one above another. One was ſix feet high and a foot and an half thick. In moſt places the facings appeared very perfect, but all of dry work. Between theſe walls in all parts were innumerable ſmall buildings moſtly circular, regularly faced within and without, but not diſpoſed in any certain order, which had been much higher and in diameter from five to 12 and 18 feet. The walls were in certain places interſected with others equally ſtrong. On the north-weſt and ſouth-eaſt ſides are the plain marks of two roads of a zigzag form, with remains of walls on both ſides leading to the ſummit. On the ſmall area of the top had been a groupe of towers or cells like the former, one in the centre and five others ſurrounding it, three of them ſtill diſtinct. Near this had been a ſimilar groupe, but at preſent reduced to a ſhapeleſs heap of ſtones. Near one of theſe groupes is a well cut in the live rock, and always filled with rain water. Mr. Caſwell at the requeſt of Mr. Flamſtead meaſured the height of the mountain from the ſands 1545 feet. Mr. Pennant conſiders this as a ſtrong hold of the Britans exactly of the ſame kind with thoſe on Carn Madryn, Carn Boduican, and Tre'r Caeri before deſcribed. It was moſt judiciouſly calculated to cover the paſſage into Angleſea, and impregnable except by famine. Neither biſhop Barrington nor Mr. Holland of Conway, who went to the top of this mountain ſome years ago, could find any caſtle or any thing the leaſt remarkable except a common carnedd or heap of ſtones[b]. Governor Pownall has ſeen with very different eyes, and found on the ſummit of the third mountain Pen y Dinas, an oval incloſure about 30 or 40 yards by leſs than 20, conſiſting of two concentral walls clearly to be traced with ruins of a third ſcarce diſcernable under the ruins. Theſe walls are ſeven or eight feet thick and about five feet high, the innermoſt about 20 feet from the next, and that about 40 yards to the outermoſt, built of looſe rough ſtones piled up without cement. Within the incloſure and almoſt filling it is a long barrow of looſe ſtones bearing north and ſouth, and in a line with it a clear perpetual ſpring riſing from a well. The entrance was on the north, and the way to it wound up the weſt ſide of the hill from north to ſouth. Among the ruins on the weſt ſide near the outer wall is a rock baſon about ſix inches or more deep and three feet wide whelmed under ruins. He thinks it a Druidical high place with an outer line of ſeparation, a pronaos, and a Bre y Tinas or mount of the holy fire like Carnbrè in Cornwall and Mount Sinai as deſcribed Exodus xix.[x]

About a mile from Braich y Dinas ſtands the moſt remarkable monument in all Snowdon, called Y Meineu hirion, on the plain ſummit of the mountain in Dwy Gyvylcheu pariſh above Gwdhw glas. It is a circular entrenchment about 26 yards (Mr. Pennant ſays 80 feet) diameter, on the outſide whereof are certain rude ſtones ſet on end, of which about 10 are now ſtanding from five to ſix feet high, and eight feet three inches within a ſtone wall. Another ſtone 11 feet two inches long lies on the ground. Near this are four other circles far inferior in ſize. In the center of one is a flat ſtone, the remains of a cromlech. Near it ſtand three large ſtones placed triangularly. About three furlongs from this monument are two large Karneds, or heaps of different ſized ſtones, and not far from one of them a circle of ſmall ſtones. Near this laſt is a great rude ſtone ſtanding upright called Main y Campiau, or ſtone of the games, and almoſt contiguous is a carnedd and a ſmall circle of 12 ſtones. This tract had certainly been much inhabited, for all around are foundations of ſmall buildings made of rounded ſtones ſuitable to the rudeneſs and ſimplicity of diſtant ages. Small upright ſtones and numbers of ſmall carnedds are ſcattered in various places, and the veſtiges of a formed road are to be ſeen pointing from hence to the Conwy. Whatever purpoſe the leſſer circles might be deſigned for, there is great reaſon to ſuppoſe the greater, eſpecially that near Maen y Campiau, were the Britiſh circus for the exhibition of antient games, of which Dr. Davies in his Dictionary has preſerved 24. Probably the Eiſteddfods, or meetings for deciding the merits of rivals in our Britiſh Olympics, might have originally been held here or in ſimilar places[y]. Tradition ſays a bloody battle was fought here by the Romans and Britans; the latter gaining the victory buried their dead under theſe heaps to preſerve them from the wild boars then common in theſe parts, and to ſerve as memorials. About theſe Karneds are ſeveral graves with ſtones pitched on them, and covered by one or two large ones, ſuppoſed to be the graves of officers[z].

Near Bangor ſtands Penrhyn, an old houſe built on the ſite of a palace of Roderic Mwlwynog prince of Wales A. D. 720, rebuilt by Guilim ap Gryffyd in the reign of of Henry VI. repaired by ſir Rhys Gryffyd 1575, and going to be reſtored to its former luſtre by its preſent owner Richard Pennant, eſq; created lord Penrhyn 1784. The drinking horn of Piers Gryffyd, a naval officer in queen Elizabeth's fleet againſt the Armada, is ſtill preſerved here[a]. Penrhyn.

In Llandegai church is the monument of archbiſhop Williams, who was born at Aberconway 1582, and died 1650 in the houſe of ſir Roger Moſtyn at Gloddaeth[b]. Llandegai.

On the top of a lofty hill over Conway marſh is Caſtell Caer Lleion, a Britiſh poſt, ſurrounded by ditches and ſtrong ramparts of ſtones[c]. Caer Lleion.

Conwy river is probably one of the nobleſt ſtreams of its length in Europe. Though its courſe is but 24 miles, it receives ſo many brooks and rivulets from the adjacent mountain of Snowdon that it bears ſhips of burden for eight miles. Hence Mr. Lluyd ſuppoſes it received its name; for admitting that Gwy or Wy ſignifies a river[d], Kynwy muſt denote a great or principal river, the prefix Kyn being augmentative, as Kyn han very white, Kyndyn very ſtiff; or ſignifying firſt or chief, as Kynvid the old or Antediluvian world, Kyndydh day break, Kynverthyr protomartyr, &c. and he ſuſpects Cyn to be originally the ſame with the Iriſh Cean, i. e. head, whence Kyntav ſignifies the firſt, q. d. pennav, the chiefeſt; and Dr. Davies ſuppoſes the word Kyndharedh, Vertigo, to be the ſame with Pendharedh. Admitting this, the proper names of Cungetorix, Cunobelinus, Cuneglaſus, and Cunotamus[e], or according to the Britiſh orthography Kyntwrch, Kynvelyn, Conwy r.

[a] Archæol. I. 291.
[b] Ib. 294.
[c] Ib. 311.
[d] See Radnorſhire.
[e] See Pembrokeſhire inſcription.
[x] Ib. III. 302. 350 and plan.
[y] Pennant, II. 308, 309.
[z] Gibſon ex MS. G. Jones ut ſup.
[a] Pennant, II. 248—286.

Kynglas and Kynedhav, might be rendered Chærocephalus, Flavicornus, Canus, Capito, or Bucephalus (the latter from the Iriſh Damh or Dav, bos) ſince we find that perſons of the greateſt dignity bore thoſe names not only among the Britans but among the Romans alſo and probably moſt nations in theſe parts of Europe. "The pearls in this river are as large and well coloured as any found in Britain or Ireland, and have probably been fiſhed for ever ſince the Roman conqueſt, if not ſooner. For pearls were in eſteem if not among the Britans at leaſt among the Romans before that time, ſince Pliny tells us[f] that Julius Cæſar dedicated to Venus Genitrix in her temple at Rome a breaſtplate ſet with Britiſh pearls, and Suetonius ſays our pearls were one motive alledged for his invaſion of this iſle. His progreſs here was too limited to have collected them himſelf: he probably received them from the merchants or the natives. The Britiſh and Iriſh pearls are found in a large black muſcle figured and deſcribed by Dr. Liſter[g] by the name of Muſculus niger omnium craſſiſſimâ & ponderoſiſſima teſtâ, which ſufficiently diſtinguiſhes it from all other ſhells. They are peculiar to rapid and ſtoney rivers, and are common in Wales, the North of England, Scotland, and ſome parts of Ireland. In this county they are vulgarly called Kregin Diliv, i. e. Deluge ſhells: as if Nature had not intended ſhells for rivers but brought them hither at firſt by the univerſal deluge. The pearl-fiſhers know partly by the outſide of the muſcle if contracted or diſtorted, whether it contains any. Robert Wyn of Bod Yſkallen, eſq. a curious and accompliſhed gentleman, whoſe untimely death, ſays Mr. Lluyd, I have reaſon among many others to lament, ſhewed me a valuable collection of pearls from this river, among which I noted a ſtool pearl of the ſize and ſhape of a ſmall button mould, weighing 17 grains and marked on the convex ſide with a fair round ſpot of a Cornelian colour exactly in the centre[h]." Thoſe I got there were not larger than the largeſt pin's head. Mr. Pennant diſtinguiſhes this ſhellfiſh by the name of Mya margaritifera, or pearl muſcle, inhabiting great rivers, eſpecially thoſe which water the mountainous parts of Great Britain, and noted for producing quantities of pearl, for which there have been regular fiſheries in ſeveral of our rivers. Sixteen have been found in one ſhell. They are a diſeaſe of the fiſh analogous to the ſtone in the human body. On being ſqueezed they will eject the pearl, and often caſt it ſpontaneouſly in the ſand of the ſtream. A notion prevails that ſir Richard Wynne of Gwedir, chamberlain to Catharine queen to Charles II. preſented her with a pearl taken in this river, which to this day has a place in the regal crown. Notwithſtanding the claſſical writers honour our pearls with their notice, they report them to have been ſmall and ill-coloured: an imputation that in general they are ſtill liable to[i].

TOISOBIUS fl. CONOVIUM.

Ptolemy's Toiſobius ſeems to point to the river Conwy, and from the ſtation Conovium on the other ſide of the river it is probably ſuppoſed the Roman name of the river has been much the ſame; however, the firſt half of it in Ptolomy differs[k]. Antoninus places Conovium 24 miles from Segontium, and 16 computed Engliſh miles bring us to Conway. Dr. Gale[l] with great probability places it three miles above it at Caer Rhyn for Hyn; which ſignified the antient city, and where have been found ruins and bricks inſcribed LEG X.[m] The tradition of the country derives its name from Rhun ap Maelgwn Gwynedh who lived about the end of the 6th century; for his father whom Gildas calls Maglocunus by the fault of the tranſcriber for Maelocunus, and who is branded with the name of the Iſland Dragon, died about 586[n]. But this I take to be rather the conjecture formed from the affinity of the names which at length became a tradition. Whether Rhun ap Maelgun gave name to this place or not, it is certain that it was a city long before his time, there being no room to doubt but that this was the old Conovium of the Romans mentioned in the Itinerary. Not many years ſince a Roman hypocauſt was diſcovered at this place like thoſe at Kaerleion ar Wſk, mentioned by Giraldus, and near Hope in Flintſhire, in both which places Roman legions were ſtationed, as at this alſo was the Xth legion. Mr. William Brickdal, rector of Llanrwſt, had ſeen ſeveral bricks, inſcribed LEG. X. found near the church of Kaer hyn: not the 10th legion which Julius Cæſar brought with him, but that called Antoniana, which ſerved under Oſtorius againſt the Silures and Ordevices, as appears by a coin dug up in Caermarthenſhire, having on one ſide a triremis ANT. AVG. and on the other three ſtandards LEG . . . See Pl. XIX. fig. 11. And, as the two places above-mentioned were called Kaer Leion (i. e. Urbs Legionum) from the legions there ſtationed, with the addition of the names of the rivers on which they were ſeated, ſo this place might have been antiently called Kaer Lheion ar Gynwy, becauſe we find a hill near it is ſtill called Mynydh Caer Leion, or Caer Leion mountain. The late ſir Thomas Moſtyn, bart. ſhewed Mr. Lluyd among his valuable collection of antiquities ſome from this place; a hollow brick from the hypocauſt, 13 inches long, and five and a half ſquare, and about three quarters thick, having in the middle a round hole about two inches diameter, and a round piece of copper flat on one ſide and convex on the other, about 11 inches over, and 42lb. weight, the rim uneven and ragged, and on the flat ſide an oblong ſquare ſunk in the middle, with this inſcription: SOCIO ROMAE, and acroſs that NAT. SOL. See Pl. XIX. fig. 12, 13. This laſt he ſuppoſed a piece of bullion with the merchant's ſtamp or direction to his correſpondent at Rome. Mr. Pennant[o] ſuppoſes it ſmelted from the ore of the Snowdon hills, where of late much has been got, and that this maſs was conſigned by a merchant here to his partner at Rome. The other inſcription may be Natio ſolvit, or Natale Solum. Mr. Lluyd was told there were ſigns of a Roman copper work near Trevriw, about three miles from hence, and elſewhere in the neighbourhood, whence it was probably dug[p]. Near the church of Kaer Hen are ſome remains of walls which are all that are left of this once noted place[q].

[f] N. H. IX. 35.
[g] app. ad tract. de animal. Angl. p. 11.
[h] Lluyd in Gibſon.
[i] Penn. Zool. IV. 67—69.
[k] Ward in Horſley, 376.
[l] P. 122.
[m] Ward, Ib. 456.
[n] Robert Vaughan's MS.
[o] I. 63.
[p] Lluyd in Gibſon.
[q] Pennant, II. 322.

Conwy, ſurrounded with walls and round towers, and ſeated on the eaſt ſide of a high green hill, preſents a pictureſque and romantic appearance, whether viewed from the land or ſea ſide. The entrance from the former is by a narrow paved gate ſided with round towers leading to the high ſtreet, which terminates at a ſimilar gate. The walls are 12 or 15 feet thick, built on the ſolid rock, and have no towers to the north. The town contains but few inhabitants and much vacant ground. It has four gates. The caſtle built by Edward I. 1284, after the death of Llewelin, as alſo probably the town, ſtands at the ſouth-eaſt angle on a high rock commanding the river, with eight round towers in its circuit, whoſe walls as well as thoſe of the caſtle are 11 feet thick. Its principal entrance was from the town to the north over a bridge now down, leading into a large oblong area, on whoſe weſt ſide is a ſpacious terrace commanding the country all round. On the ſouth ſide next the river is the hall 130[r] feet by 32 wide and 30[s] high, having at one end a chapel with a large window. Its roof was ſupported by ſix noble arches as in Beaumaris caſtle; and it was warmed by a great fire-place at one end and another on the ſide, and lighted by ſix windows to the country and three to the court. Under it were ſpacious vaults. Near the eaſt end of this area is a deep well. Hence you paſs into a leſſer ſquare court ſurrounded by galleries and leſſer apartments. The eaſt ſide of the caſtle opened to a lower terrace by a ſmall gate in a wall with hanging battlements flanked by two towers. In the nothernmoſt called the King's tower is a vaulted room with a receſs or cell of ſeven pointed and groined arches, three open: and under them more arches and a baſement all round. This is called the King's ſeat. The other tower is named the Queen's tower. On the ſouth ſide of the caſtle half the ſouth ſide of a tower has fallen from the foundation, and the upper half remains ſuſpended. Many of the towers have ſmaller round ones riſing from them as at Caernarvon. The hills on the oppoſite ſide of the river are moſt beautifully wooded, and the tide comes up to the walls on two ſides. The church is a mean building with a few modern monuments for the Wynnes, who had an old houſe built round a quadrangle t. Elizabeth, now let to poor families. In the ſtreet leading to the caſtle are ſome remains of a Ciſtertian abbey, founded by Llewelin ap Jorwerth 1185, and tranſlated by Edward I. to Maenan in Denbighſhire three miles off[t]. It is now a ſtable called the Stoney with a vaulted ſtone roof and a Saxon door-caſe. A rock at the north part of the river juſt above the town has been laid out in ſhrubberies by Mr. Holland of Conwy, leſſee of the caſtle under the crown, who gives it the name of Arcadia. Edward I. made Conwy a free borough, the mayor to be conſtable of the caſtle. It is now governed by one alderman, a recorder, coroner, water-bailiff, and two ſerjeants at mace.

Hither Richard II. fled on his return from Ireland 1299, and agreed with the archbiſhop of Canterbury and the earl of Northumberland to ſurrender his crown to Henry IV. The caſtle was repaired and fortified for Charles I. by archbiſhop Williams at the king's particular deſire, and the principal effects of the country lodged in it. Prince Rupert next year appointing ſir John Owen governor of it he ſurprized and took it from the archbiſhop, who, not obtaining redreſs from the court, applied to col. Mitton a parliament general, who took poſſeſſion of it 1646, but moſt honeſtly reſtored to every one their own. It is now held of the crown by Owen Holland, eſq; at the annual rent of 6*s.* and 8*d.* and a diſh of fiſh to lord Hertford as often as he paſſes through the town.

3 Charles I. Edward lord Conway of Ragley was created viſcount Conway of Conway caſtle, which he reduced to its preſent condition, and 1679, 31 Charles II. his grandſon Edward, who had ſucceeded his father Edward, was created earl of Conway, and dying without iſſue, his couſin and adopted heir Francis Seymour Conway, ſecond ſon of ſir Edward Seymour, bart. by his ſecond wife was created lord Conway, baron Conway of Ragland, 1702-3 2 Anne, and died 1731-2. His eldeſt ſon Francis is now earl of Hertford by creation 1750[u].

At a ſmall diſtance from Taly y Caſn ferry is a large artificial mount called Bryn y Caſtell, probably the ſite of a watch tower belonging to Conovium. On a lofty hill, called Pen Caer Helen, is a very ſtrong Britiſh poſt, guarded with the uſual foſſes and vaſt ramparts of ſtones; but what ſtruck Mr. Pennant more particularly here were two conſiderable ſpaces of ground thick ſet with ſharp pointed ſtones ſet upright in the earth as if to ſerve as chevaux de frize[x].

From Llanſanſraid to Llandudno, the ground boundary of the entrance of the Conway, are moſt auguſt views of the vaſt expanſe of the river, and the majeſtic towers of Conway, which Mr. Pennant with a national partiality pronounces ſuperior to the views and fortified towns on the Rhine. At Bodſcallan is a ſmall ruined caſtle. Glod daeth, the ſeat of ſir Roger Moſtyn, bart. built by his anceſtor Thomas Moſtyn in the reign of Elizabeth, ſtands on the ſlope of a very extenſive hill cloathed with plantations, and preſenting a variety of beautiful and extenſive proſpects, and a valuable collection of books and MSS.[y]

Bodſcallan.

Glod daeth.

The city of Dyganwy, A. D. 816, in the reign of Conan Dyndaythwy, was deſtroyed by lightning, and never rebuilt, but its name remains, and Conway roſe out of its ruins[z]. In the year 880 a ſevere battle was fought near Aber Kynwy between Anarawd prince of North Wales and Eadred duke of Mercia, of which that judicious antiquary Mr. Robert Vaughan of Hengwrt gives the following account in ſome notes he wrote on Dr. Powel's hiſtory of Wales. "After the death of Roderic the Great the Northern Britons of Stratclwyd and Cumberland were (as H. Boetius and Buchanan relate), much infeſted and weakened by the continual incurſions of the Danes, Saxons, and Scots, which made many of them quit their country, and ſeek for more peaceful habitations. Under the conduct of one Hobert they came to Gwynedh, or North Wales, in the beginning of the reign of Anarawd, who, commiſerating their diſtreſſed condition, gave them the country from Cheſter to the river Conwy, if they could drive out the Saxons, who had lately poſſeſſed themſelves thereof. Accordingly they attacked them, and neceſſity animating their valour, ſoon drove them out. About three years after this, A. D. 880 Edryd Walthyr, or the long-haired king of the Saxons (called by the Diganwy.

[r] Wyndham. [s] Penn. II. 311—350. [t] Tan. 705. [u] G. Dugd. II. 452. MS. Le Neve.
[x] II. 322. [y] Ib. 323—327. [z] Lluyd. frag. Brit. deſc. p. 54. 6.

Engliſh

Engliſh hiſtorians Edred duke of Mercia), made great preparations for regaining the ſaid country; but the North Britons juſt ſettled there having intelligence thereof, removed their cattle and goods over the river Conway. Nor was Anarawd idle: but collected all his forces, and encamped near Conway at Kymryd, where he at length, after a bloody fight, gained a compleat victory over the Saxons. This battle was called Gwaeth Kymryd Konwy, becauſe fought in the townſhip of Kymryd near Conway, but Anarawd called it Dial Rodri, becauſe he there revenged the death of his father Rodri. In this action Tudwal, ſon of Rodri Mawr, received a wound in the knee, which made him ever after be called Tudwal Glof, or the lame. His brothers, to reward his brave ſervices, gave him Uchelogoed (or Uchelgoed) Gwynedh. The Britons purſuing their victory drove the Saxons quite out of Wales into Mercia, where, having burnt and deſtroyed the borders, they returned laden with ſpoil. Anarawd, to expreſs his gratitude to God for this great victory, gave lands to the church of Bangor, as the records of that ſee teſtify, and likewiſe to the collegiate church of Klynog[a] in Arvon as we read in the extent of North Wales. After this the North Britons came back from beyond the river Conwy, and poſſeſſed again for a long time in peace the lands aſſigned them between Conwy and Cheſter. Matthew of Weſtminſter, and ſome other Engliſh writers, not conſidering that the Britans had lands in Loegria and Albania after king Cadwalader's time, take thoſe of Cumberland and Stradclwyd for the Britans of Wales. Aſſer Menevenſis who lived 875, ſays that Halden[b] the Dane marched into Cumberland, which he ſubdued, having before conquered the Picts and Britans of Stratcluid. In regionem Nordan-hymbrorum perrexit, eamque ſubjugavit, necnon & Pictos & Stratcludenſes." The Oxford edition 1691 reads Strecledenſes. The Saxon Chronicle Sꝑæcleð pealaʒ and Sꝑæꝛleðpealaʒ. Ys trad Cluyd ſignifies Cluydſdale, or the vale of Clûyd, whence Strecled, Straecled, and Straetled, are ſo many variations[c].

DICTVM. DICTUM, or DICTI, which Mr. Camden fancied at Diganwy, was in Cumberland or Weſtmoreland, according to the arrangement of ſtations in the Notitia[d]. At Diganwy, however, were found about 50 years ago a number of braſs celts under a great ſtone placed heads and points. Such have been found in other parts of Wales. Biſhop Gibſon engraved one found in a quarry on the ſide of Moel yr Henlhys, a hill in Derowen pariſh, Montgomeryſhire. See Pl. XVIII. fig. 13. The arms found at St. Michael's mount, Cornwall, might have been the ſame, having been accompanied by ſwords of braſs, a metal not likely to be ſo applied by the Romans, and ſuch ſwords have been alſo found in Wales[e].

The ſmall remains of Diganwy, or, as it is called by the Engliſh, Gannoc, are on two little hills near the ſhore of the Conwy, the ſpace between which was croſſed by the walls running up their ſides. On the ſummit of one are veſtiges of a round tower, and a few foundations of walls ſcattered on the acceſſible parts. Robert de Rodland was here overpowered and ſlain by the Welſh 1088. Llewelyn the great deſtroyed the caſtle, but it was rebuilt 1210 by Randolph Blundeville, earl of Cheſter. King John lay encamped under its walls 1211, reduced to great ſtraits by Llewelyn, as was Henry III. on the ſame ſpot 1245. Llewelyn ap Gryffyd, laſt prince of Wales, totally diſmantled the caſtle[f].

Not far from hence, on the top of a low hill near Bryniau, is an antient round tower, 20 feet high, 12 inches diameter. Its walls compoſe only two thirds of a circle: the reſt is open to the top, and the finiſhing of the walls, which are of great thickneſs, complete without any appearance of there ever having been a door: and this opening is to the land: within are the marks of two floors.

Gogarth, a long narrow tract of great fertility, had been an appendage to the abbey of Conway. Gogarth

Llandudno is a beautiful ſheepwalk near four miles long, and one broad: the weſtern extremity a vaſt precipice frequented by various ſea fowls and peregrine falcons[g]. On the north ſide are remains of ſeveral rude walls without mortar. On a great eminence called Dinas is a rude encloſure, having within it multitudes of ſmall circular hollows, about 12 feet diameter, as on Caer Tre'ri and ſimilar places. Near it a Maen ſigl, or rocking ſtone, called Cryd Tudno, or St. Tudno's cradle, ſurrounded by a foſs, and a way leading to it. St. Trillo's chapel, two miles from Gloddaeth, is a ſingular little oblong building, having a window on each ſide, and at the end a ſmall door, a vaulted roof paved with round ſtones, and within it a well: the whole ſurrounded by a ſtone wall. Llandudno

Not far from the junction of the Conway with the Machno is a tremendous cataract of four falls. The river Lleder paſſes into the Conway under Pont or Lleder bridge. In the Conway is a deep wide ſtill water, called Llyn yr Afanc, or the Beaver's pool. Their ſkin was valued at 120*d*. while the martin only at 24*d*. the ermine, fox, wolf, or otter, 12*d*. Bettws Wyrcon Iddon, or the bead houſe of the great church of Iddon, has in its church a monument and figure of Gruffyd ap David Goch, ſon to Dafydd Goch, natural ſon of Dafydd, brother to the laſt prince of Wales. Pont y Parr is a moſt ſingular bridge of five arches on rude rocks over Llugwy, the work of a maſon of Penllyn 1468[h]. Machno Lleder Bettws Wyrcon Iddon Pont y Parr

Bettus Garmon, or Beadhouſe Garnman, q. d. St. German's oratory, built t. Henry VII.[i] Bettus Garmon

"Treurewe caſtle, a mile from Conway abbey, "where Llewellin lay that married Jane, king John's "daughter. It ſtandeth on Conway and Treurew "rivers[k]." Treurew

"Sinnodune, a mile from Conway, the foundations "of a great thing yet remain there[k]." Sinnodune

"Dolywethelan, 13 miles from Cairmanan (Caer-"narvon) by ſouth-eaſt, and as much from Con-"way[l]." It ſtands on a high incloſed rock, and has ſquare towers, one 40 feet by 25, the other 32 by 20, each of three ſtones. It was the reſidence of Jorverth Drwndwn, and here was born his ſon Llewelyn the Great, who began his reign in the time of Richard I. Meredydd ap Jevan, anceſtor of the Wynnes of Gwedir, purchaſed the leaſe of this Dolywethelan.

[a] q. Klynogvawr. [b] Healfden, Chron. Sax. [c] Lluyd.
[d] See Horſl. 113. and Ward, lb. 483. [e] Lluyd. [f] Pennant II. 339.
[g] lb. 329, 330.
[h] Penn. II. 133—135. [i] Willis, Bangor, 272.
[k] Lel. V. 49. He does not diſtinguiſh whether Lewellin lay at Treurew or Conway.
[l] lb.

caſtle t. Henry VII. and reformed the country there full of banditti. He founded the ſtrong houſe of Penamnaen, a mile from the caſtle, and rebuilt the church, in which is a monumental pedigree of the Wynnes [m].

At Llys faen, or vaen, in the north-eaſt corner of the county, was found the ring engraved Pl. XIX. fig. 14, 15. It is gold enamelled of good workmanſhip, weight about an ounce. The legend bears the name of ALHSTAN, and Mr. Pegge [n] conjectures that it belonged to a commander of that name in Egbert's army which invaded North Wales A. D. 818. Another gold ring of greater weight but quite rough was picked up near the ſame place.

[m] Pennant, II. 137, 138.

[n] Archæol. IV. 47.

Rare Plants found in Caernarvonſhire.

Acroſtichum ilvenſe. Hairy Fern; on the moiſt rocks called Clogwyn y Garnedh near the top of the Gwidhwa the higheſt mountain in all Wales.

——— ſeptentrionale. Forked or Horned Fern; on the top of Carnedh Lhewellyn near Lhan Lhechyd.

Agroſtis capillaris. Fine Bent Graſs; on Snowdon.

Aira cæſpitoſa. Turfy Hair Graſs; on Snowdon.

Ajuga pyramidalis. Mountain Bugle or Sicklewort; on Carnedh Lhewellin.

Aliſma natans. Creeping Water Plantain; in the great lake below the old caſtle at Llanberris.

Anthericum ſerotinum. Mountain Saffron; on the high rocks of Snowdon and near Llanberris on Trigvychau y Clogwyn du ynhem y Glyder, Clogwyn yr Ardhu, Crib y Diſtil, &c.

Arenaria laricifolia. Larch leaved Chickweed; on moſt of the high and ſteep rocks about Snowdon.

——— verna. Mountain Chickweed; in mountainous ſoils: about Llanberris, plentifully, and in the walks about Gloddaeth.

Aſplenium Ruta muraria β. A variety of White Maidenhair, Wall Rue, or Tentwort; on Snowdon.

——— lanceolatum. Spear Spleenwort; on rocks and old walls: at Bangor.

——— Trichomanes β. Branched Engliſh black Maidenhair; on the high rocks about Snowdon, plentifully.

Bryum alpinum. Alpine Bryum; on rocks ſlightly covered with earth near a ruined caſtle not far from Llanberris.

——— aciculare α and β. Mountain Bryum and a variety; on moiſt rocks and banks of rivers:
——— æſtivum. Water Bryum; on moiſt rocks and in mountainous places:
——— extinctorium. Conic Bryum; on mountainous heaths and on rocks:
——— flexuoſum. Soft Bryum; on rocks:
——— incurvum. Incurved Bryum; in paſtures and on rocks:
——— ſericium. Silky Bryum; on mountainous heaths:
} about Llanberris.

——— fontanum. Marſh Bryum; above Llyn Llydow:
——— hypnoides. Wooly Bryum;
——— pomiforme. Round headed Bryum; on Clogwyn dû yn yr Ardhu, } on Snowdon.

——— ſerpyllifolium punctatum. Thyme leaved Bryum; on the wet rocks of Clogwyn y Garnedh.

——— ſerpyllifolium ζ undulatum. A variety of the laſt; on Trigvylchau rocks near Llanberris.

——— verticillatum. Verticillated Bryum; on rocks near the ſea near Bangor.

Byſſus aurea. Saffron coloured Byſſus; on the rocks.

Campanula rotundifolia β. A variety of leſſer round leaved Bell flower; on mountains: at Llanberris.

Cardamine petræa. Mountain Ladies Smock; on the high rocks on Clogwyn du yr Ardhu, and Clogwyn y Garnedh near Llanberris.

Carduus helenoides. Great Engliſh ſoft or Gentle Thiſtle; aſcending the Glyder from Llanberris, and many other mountainous paſtures about Snowdon.

Carex atrata. Black Carex; on mountains: about Llanberris, plentifully.

Ceraſtium alpinum. Mountain Mouſe-ear Chickweed; by the water courſes on the ſides of Snowdon.

——— latifolium. Woolly Mouſe-ear Chickweed; on Clogwyn y Garnedh, plentifully.

Cheledonium Glaucium. Yellow horned Poppy; near the top of Griggogn near Llanberris.

Chieranthus ſinuatus. Sea Stock Gilly-flower; on ſandy ſea ſhores: at Aberdaron.

Cochlearia officinalis β. Small round leaved Scurvy-graſs; on the coaſt.

——— officinalis γ Groenlandica. Groenland Scurvy graſs; on mountains: near Llanberris, plentifully, Conferva fluviatilis. Horſe-tail Conferva; in a river near Bangor called Aſon Cegui between the mill called Pandu maes y Geirchau and Malun Eſcob.

——— violacea. Violet Conferva; in alpine rivulets near Llanberris.

Cotyledon Umbilicus veneris. Navelwort, Kidney wort, or Wall Penny wort; on old walls and moiſt ſtoney places: frequent.

Cratœgus Aria. White Beam; on Penmaen mawr.

Cucubalus acaulis. Leaſt Mountain Campion or Moſs Campion; on the mountains: near Llanberris, plentifully.

Ciſtus hirſutus. Hoary Thyme-leaved Ciſtus; in the walks about Gloddaeth.

Draba incana. Wreathen podded Whitlow-graſs; on the mountains.

——— incana β. A variety of the laſt; on the high rocks called Hyſva hanging over Nant Phrancon valley.

Epilobium anguſtifolium. Roſe bay Willowherb; on the top of Hyſva near Llanberris.

Euphorbia Portlandica. Portland Spurge; on ſandy ſea ſhores: near Caernarvon.

Feſtuca Cambrica. Welch Feſcue-graſs; on high mountains about Llanberris, plentifully.

——— ovina β vivipara. Graſs upon Graſs; amongſt ſtones and moſs on Snowdon.

——— Alpina. Sheep's Feſcue Graſs; on Snowdon.

Fontinalis ſquamoſa. Scaly Water Moſs; in rivulets near Llanberris.

Galeopſis villoſa. Yellow Betony; in ſandy fields about Bangor.

Galium boreale. Croſſwort Madder or ſmooth meadow dow Madder; on mountainous meadows: near Llanberris.

Geum rivale. Water Avens; in moiſt mountainous paſtures: on Snowdon.

Geranium maritimum. Sea Cranes-bill; on ſandy ſea ſhores: about Caernarvon.

——— ſanguineum. Bloody Crane's-bill. In the walks about Gloddaeth.

Gnaphalium dioicum. Mountain Cudweed or Cat's foot; on Hyſva and Trigvylchau rocks near Llanberris.

Hieracium alpinum. Mountain Hawkweed; on rocks on Glyder and Trigvylchau and about Llyn y Cwm.

——— murorum β. A variety of French or Golden Lungwort; on the rocks near the lake at Llanberris.

Hypnum ſcorpoides. Scorpion Hypnum; in turfy marſhes: about Pentir near Bangor.

Iſoetes lacuſtris. Quillwort; at the bottom of lakes about Llanberris, and about Lyn y Cwm, plentifully.

Juncus triglumis. Three flowered Ruſh; in bogs near the Trigvylchau rocks and about Llyn y Cwm.

——— ſquarroſus. Moſs Ruſh; on Snowdon.

Jungermannia alpina. Chocolate alpine Jungermannia: on wet rocks on the mountains.

——— julacea. Round Jungermannia; } on wet rocks ——— rupeſtris. Rock Jungermannia; } on Snowdon and Glyder.

——— trilobata. Trifid Jungermannia; on Crib y ddiſcil near Llanberris.

Juniperus communis β. Mountain Dwarf Juniper; on Snowdon.

Lathyrus ſylveſtris. Narrow leaved Peaſe-everlaſting; in woods and hedges: about Conway.

Lichen calcareus. Dyer's Liverwort; on limeſtone rocks.

——— cæruleſcens. Bluiſh Lichen; on trunks of trees near Pentir and Bangor.

——— caninus γ. A variety of Aſh-coloured Ground Liverwort; in woods, on heaths, and in ſtoney places about Bangor.

——— fuſcus. Brown Lichen; on rocks and large ſtones near Bangor.

——— lanatus. Woolly Liverwort; on rocks about Borth near Bangor.

——— craſſus. Thick Lichen; on the Glyder.

——— centrifugus. Spreading Liverwort; on large ſtones:

——— deuſtus. Sooty Liverwort; on rocks and ſtones:

——— fragilis. Brittle Liverwort; on rocks, ſtones, and mountainous heaths:

——— polyrrhizos. Fibrous Liverwort; on rocks and ſtones:

——— proboſcideus. Button Lichen; on rocks and ſtones:

——— ſaccatus. Pitted Lichen; on rocks and ſtones:

——— ſcaber. Scabrous Lichen; on rocks and ſtones:

——— velleus. Fleecy Lichen; on rocks and ſtones:

} about Llanberris.

——— furfuraceus. Branny Liverwort; on trunks of trees.

——— fragilis β globoſus. Round headed Liverwort; on Snowdon.

——— fluviatilis. River Lichen; in alpine ſtreams:

——— paſchalis. Woody Lichen; } on Snowdon.

——— radiatus. Radiated Liverwort; on the top of Cwn Brynog rocks towards Ardhu, on Snowdon.

——— Iſlandicus δ. A variety of Iceland Lichen; on the high mountains near Klogwyn Du.

——— marginalis. Marginal Lichen; on rocks and ſtones everywhere.

——— omphaloides. Purple Liverwort;

——— parietinus. Common Liverwort; } on rocks.

——— tartareus. Welch Liverwort;

Lobelia Dortmanna. Water Gladiole; in the lakes about Snowdon about Llyn y Cwm.

Lycopodium alpinum. Cypreſs-Moſs, or Heath-Cypreſs;

——— Selago. Firr Club-Moſs; } on Snowdon.

——— Selaginoides. Prickly Club-Moſs;

——— annotinum. Welch Club Moſs; on the mountains on Rhiwr Glyder above the lake Llyn y Cwm near St. Peris church, and elſewhere, on the ſame mountain.

——— inundatum. Marſh Club Moſs, in moiſt watery places, about ſprings and meadows about Capel Ceirig.

Mnium jungermannia. Purple Mnium; on Snowdon and Glyder.

Myrica Gale. Goule, Sweet Willow, or Dutch Myrtle; in an open ſpace called Bylch yr Nairn at Gwedir.

Oſmunda criſpa. Stone Fern, or ſmall flowering Stone Fern; on Clogyn y Garnedh.

Papaver Cambricum. Yellow Wild Baſtard Poppy; on the aſcent of the hill leading to Bangor, and on Clogwyn y Garnedh yſcolion du, on Dygvylche, aſcending the Glyder from Llanberris, and elſewhere about Snowdon.

Phalaris arundinacea β. A variety of Reed Canary-graſs; by the rivulet going to the old caſtle at Llanberris.

Phaſcum montanum. Mountain Phaſcum; on Alpine rocks covered with earth: about Llanberris.

Plantago maritima γ. Mountain Plantain; on Trigvylchau rocks above the lake Lhyn Bochlyn, near St. Peris church.

Poa pratenſis β alpina. Alpine Meadow-graſs; on Snowdon.

Polygonum viviparum β. A variety of Small Biſtort, or Snakeweed; in the ſteep paſtures of the high rock Grib Goch above the lake Phynon brech near Llanberris.

Polypodium fragile β. A variety of Brittle Polypody; on Snowdon.

——— Lonchitis. Great Polypody, or Spleenwort; on the mountains about Llanberris.

——— rhæticum. Stone Polypody; on the top of the Glyder over the lake Lhyn-Ogwan.

Potentilla vulgare γ cambricum. Welſh or jagged Polypody; in the lane leading to Conwy.

——— verna. Spring Cinquefoil; in the walks about Gloddaeth.

Pulmonaria maritima. Sea Bugloſs; by the river Eufni between Dinardinell and Clynog.

Ranunculus acris. Upright Meadow Crowfoot; a variety of this is found on the high mountains with a ſtalk bearing one or two flowers, and a very hairy large calyx.

Rhinanthis

Rhinanthus Criſta Galli β. A variety of Yellow Rattle, or Cockſcomb; in meadows and paſtures: at Llanberris.

Rhodiola Roſea. Roſewort; on the rocks of the high mountains of Snowdon, plentifully.

Rubia peregrina. Wild Madder; in the walks about Gloddaeth.

Rubus Chamæmorus. Cloud berries, Knotberries, Knoutberries, or Dwarf Mulberries; in turfy bogs on the mountains.

—— ſaxatilis. Stone Bramble; about Llyn y Cwm.

Rumex digynus. Round-leaved Mountain Sorrel; on moiſt high rocks, and by rivulets about Snowdon.

Satyrium albidum. White Satyrion; in moiſt meadows about Llanberris.

Saxifraga hypnoides. Trifid Sengreen; ——— oppoſitifolia. Mountain heath-like Sengreen; } on Snowdon.

——— nivalis. Mountain Sengreen, Welch Saxifrage, or Prince's feather; on Clogwyn y Garnedh or Du, Crib-y-ddeſcil, Glyder, &c. near Llanberris.

——— ſtellaris. Hairy Kidney-wort; by the rills, and on the moiſt rocks of Snowdon and Carnedh Lhewellyn.

Scilla verna. Vernal Star Hyacinth, or Squill; Scrophularia vernalis. Yellow Figwort; } in the walks about Gloddaeth.

Scirpus cæſpitoſus. Dwarf or Heath Clubruſh; in a deep bottom on Cwn Brynog and on Snowdon.

Sedum rupeſtre. St. Vincent's rock Stonecrop; on Hyſva rocks over Nantphrancon valley.

Serratula alpina. Mountain Sawwort; on Clogwyn y Garnedh, and moſt other high mountains about Snowdon.

——— alpina β. A variety of the laſt; by a rivulet on Gallt yr Ogo, near Capel Coirig.

Schœnus nigricans. Round black headed Bog-ruſh; in a deep bottom on Cwm Brwynog and on Snowdon.

Silene nutans. Nottingham Catchfly; in the walks about Gloddaeth.

Sparganium ſimplex β natans. The leaſt Bur-reed; in ponds, lakes, and gently flowing rivers: about Llanberris.

Sphagnum alpinum. Green Bog-moſs; in bogs on Snowdon.

Solidago Cambrica. Welch Golden-Rod; on mountains on Llanberris and about Llyn y Cwm, plentifully.

Sorbus aucuparia. The Quicken tree, or Mountain Aſh; in moiſt woods and hedges.

Statice Armeria. Thrift or Sea Gilly-flower; on Snowdon.

Subularia aquatica. Awl-wort; in alpine lakes, about Llanberris and Llyn y Cwm, plentifully.

Thalictrum alpinum. Mountain Meadow-Rue; on wet rocks, and near rivulets on the mountains, very common.

——— minus. The leſſer Meadow Rue; in the walks about Gloddaeth, and elſewhere.

Tremella verrucoſa. Warty Tremella; in alpine rivulets.

——— utriculata. Bladder Tremella; in rivulets upon ſtones about Pentir and Llanberris.

Trichomanes Tunbrigenſe. Tunbridge Trichomanes; on the left entering the mountains leading to the old caſtle at Llanberris.

Veronica ſpicata. Upright ſpiked Male Speedwell; in mountainous meadows and paſtures: near Snowdon and on Penmaen mawr.

Viola canina δ alpina. Welch Violet; on Clogwyn y Garnedh above Ffynnon-Lâs lake.

THE

THE ISLAND
MONA OR ANGLESEY.

IN my ſurvey of the county of Caernarvon I premiſed that it derived its name from its chief town, as did that town its name from the iſland MONA, which lies over againſt it. This juſtly ranking as a county requires that I now reſtore it to its place having before thoughtleſsly ranked it among the iſlands, and ſurvey it in its order. The Romans called it MONA, the Britans Mon and Tir Mon, q. d. the land of Mona, and Ynis Dowyll, q. d. the ſhady iſland, the antient Saxons Monez, and after the Engliſh got footing in it Enzleſ-ea and Anzleſea, q. d. the Iſland of the Angles. It is divided from the Britiſh main by the narrow ſtrait of Menai, being on every other ſide laſhed by the ſtormy Iriſh ſea. It is of an irregular form, its greateſt length from eaſt to weſt 20 miles, its greateſt breadth ſcarce 17. But though as Giraldus[a] informs us, "the "ſoil ſeems dry and ſtoney, of dreary and un- "pleaſant appearance, in external quality very like "the land of Pebidion[b] adjoining to St. David's, its "interior natural qualifications are far different. "For it is infinitely more productive of wheat than "part of Wales, ſo that it is proverbially called in "the Welſh language Mon mam Cymbry, q. d. Mon, "the mother of Wales, becauſe when all the other "countries fail this alone by its rich and fertile ſoil "ſupplies all Wales with plenty of corn." It is alſo at preſent well ſtocked with cattle, yields mill-ſtones, and in ſome places an aluminous earth, out of which ſome have lately begun to extract alum and copperas. But their ſcheme not anſwering their expectation they deſiſted.

This is that renowned iſland MONA, the antient ſeat of the Druids, invaded by Suetonius Paulinus, and reduced under the Roman power by J. Agricola. This Suetonius Paulinus in the reign of Nero, as Tacitus[c] relates, "made preparations for attack- "ing the populous iſland Mona, the receptacle of "deſerters, and ſet about making flat-bottomed veſ- "ſels proper for a flat and uncertain ſhore. In "theſe the foot were carried over, the horſe fording "after them or where they found themſelves out of "their depth ſwimming their horſes. On the "ſhore ſtood a motley army in cloſe array, and "women intermixed with the men, dreſſed like fu- "ries in a funeral habit, their hair diſhevelled, and "carrying torches in their hands. The Druids "around uttering execrations and lifting up their "hands to Heaven ſtruck the ſoldiers by the no- "velty of their appearance, inſomuch that they pre- "ſented their bodies almoſt motionleſs to the aſ- "ſaults of the enemy. At length animated by the "exhortations of their general, and encouraging each "other not to be afraid of an army of women and "frantic people they advanced, bearing down all "that oppoſed them, and deſtroying them by their "own fire. Garriſons were after this placed in the "towns, and the groves cut down which they had "dedicated to their bloody ſuperſtitions. For it "was their cuſtom to offer the blood of their pri- "ſoners on their altars, and they thought it no crime "to conſult the gods by the entrails of men." While the general was engaged in this work a ſudden revolt of the whole province obliged him to deſiſt. Afterwards, as the ſame author goes on[d], "J. Agricola applied himſelf to reduce the iſland "Mona, which I have already obſerved Suetonius "Paulinus was prevented from keeping poſſeſſion "of by a rebellion in Britain. But as in the uncer- "tain ſtate of affairs no veſſels had been provided, "the prudence and perſeverance of the general ſup- "plied this defect. For leaving behind all the bag- "gage he cauſed the choiceſt of the auxiliary troops, "who knew the fords, and were inured in their "own country to a method of ſwimming, at the ſame "time managing their arms and horſes, to advance "ſo ſuddenly that the enemy who expected a fleet "and operations by ſea believed nothing impracti- "cable or unſurmountable by troops who con- "ducted war in this manner. They therefore ſued "for peace, and ſurrendered the iſland, in conſequence "of which Agricola acquired great renown and glory."

Many ages after it was reduced by the Engliſh and took their name, being antiently called by the Saxons Enzleſ ea, now commonly Angleſea, q. d. Engliſh iſland. But as Humphry Lluyd in his moſt learned epiſtle to the learned Ortelius had aſſerted the name and dignity of this iſland, it will not be expected I ſhould enlarge on this ſubject. Thus much, however, I ſhall add, that upon the decline of the Roman empire in Britain certain people from Ireland crept in here. For beſides the hillocks ſurrounded with ditches and called Iriſh cotts, there is likewiſe a place called Yn hericy Gwidil from the Iriſh, who under the conduct of Sirigi there defeated the Britans, as we find in the Triades. Nor was it only harraſſed by the Engliſh but alſo by the Normans. For in the year 1000 king Ethelwerd's fleet ſailed round the iſland, and ravaged it in a hoſtile manner. Afterwards two Normans of the name of Hugh, one earl of Cheſter, the other earl of Shrewſbury grievouſly waſted it, and built Aber Llienoc caſtle to keep the natives in awe. But Magnus the Norwegian landing here at that time ſlew Hugh earl of Cheſhire with an arrow, and after pillaging the iſland made off. In after ages the Engliſh frequently attacked it, till Edward I. reduced it to his obedience. It had antiently 363 villages, and is very populous at this time. Its principal town at preſent is Beaumaris, built in a marſhy ſpot on the eaſt ſide by Edward I. who gave it this name from its pleaſant ſituation, the place being before called Bonover[e], and fortified it with a caſtle, which never appears to have been finiſhed, and whereof ſir Richard Bulkley, knt. is governor, of whoſe civility to me when I viſited this place I ſhall always retain in the moſt grateful ſenſe.

[a] II. c. 7. [b] Pebidiog. [c] Ann. XIV. 30. [d] Vit. Agric. c. 18.

Beaumaris.

To this adjoins Lhan-vays, antiently a noted houſe of friars minors, to whom the kings of England ſhewed themſelves very munificent patrons, both on account of the ſanctity of the friars dwelling there, and becauſe, to uſe the language of the records, there were buried "a daughter of king John, a ſon of "the king of Denmark, as alſo the bodies of lord "*Clifford, and other lords, knights, and ſquires ſlain "in the wars of Wales in the time of the moſt noble "kings of England."

Llanvays.

The next town after Beaumaris is Newburg, called by the Britans Roſſur, ten[f] miles to the weſtward, which has loſt much of its antient ſplendor by heaps of ſand caſt in upon it. Not far from hence is Aber-fraw, now of no great note, but formerly of ſuperior rank to all the reſt, as being antiently the reſidence of the kings of Venodotia, or North Wales, hence ſtiled kings of Aber-fraw. On the extreme point to the weſt, which we called Holyhead, ſtands a little village called in Britiſh Caer Guby, taking its name from Kubius, a holy man, diſciple of St. Hilary of Poitiers, who there devoted himſelf to God. From this place is the common paſſage to Ireland. The reſt of this iſland is beſprinkled with villages, which, having nothing remarkable, I ſhall return to the main land and viſit Denbighſhire†.

Newburg. Aberfraw. Holyhead. Caer Guby.

In this county are 74 pariſhes.

* Pat. 2 H. V. p. 2.

* This does not ſeem a Britiſh name.

† Of the iſlands adjoining to Mona, ſee among the Britiſh iſles.

[f] 12 miles. G.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

THE iſle of Angleſea is from eaſt to weſt 30 miles, from north to ſouth 26, about 80 miles in circumference, and contains about 200,000 acres. It is level except a few cliffs on the ſhores. It was originally divided into three Kantreds, or hundreds, and afterwards into ſix Commots. It was the reſidence of the princes of North Wales, from the time of Anarawd to Llewelin, near four centuries. It contains 74 pariſhes and four market towns, and Giraldus ſays in his time it had 363 villages. The ſoil is of three ſorts, ſandy, black, and ſtiff red. The common fuel is peat, under which they find trees probably felled by the Romans, and now uſed for laths. The crops of barley, oats, and rye are ſo plentiful, that in 1770 upwards of 90,000 buſhels of different grain were exported from their harbours. The chief trade is corn and cattle, and the principal manure lime, ſoapers waſte, and ſand. A century ago it was ſuppoſed to ſend 3000 head of cattle annually to England, and now from 12 to 15,000, and ſheep in proportion. Here are four inconſiderable rivers. The inhabitants are of middle ſtature, ſtrong and active, healthy and long-lived. Their number in the middle of the laſt century was computed at 12000, and the houſes at 1840[a], but they have ſo exceedingly increaſed that in 1776 the number of the houſes was 3956, and allowing five perſons to a family the whole number of inhabitants was 19,780, which wants only 340 of double the number in the intervening ſpace[b] The air is keen and pure, and the winters ſeldom ſevere.

As this iſland was the principal and lateſt reſidence of the Druids, one muſt expect many remains and traces of them. Thoſe deſcribed by Mr. Rowlands, but moſt miſerably repreſented, and, to the diſgrace of the editor of the ſecond edition, left unaltered, though greatly changed ſince his time, are on and about a farm of lord Boſton's called Trer Drw, rented at £. 35. per annum by one John Jones, an intelligent farmer, who ſpeaks tolerable Engliſh. There is a circular work of earth and ſtones, five yards perpendicular, ſloping upwards, encloſing an area of greenſward of 180 feet diameter. The people call it Caſtelh, and ſuppoſe it to have been antiently ſurrounded with a town. Mr. Rowlands calls it Bryn Gwyn, and takes it for a tribunal. But this name is given to a cottage, two bowſhots ſouth of it, whoſe gabel is formed of a monſtrous ſingle ſtone, 12 feet high, and eight wide. In a line with it ſtands another ſingle ſtone 11 feet high, but narrower and 23 feet in girth. Behind the cottage is a broken cromlech. The name of Bryn Gwyn ſeems to be given alſo to the circle of ſtones which Rowlands ſays were by the diſtances eight or nine great pillars, of which he ſaw three, and the ſtump of a fourth. This and the third may be hid in the fence of the cottage yard, or broken to make it. Between Trer Drw farm and Bryn Gwyn are ſome broken ſtones, whether parts of circles, or only ſcattered by the hand of nature as thoſe in the neighbouring moor, I cannot determine. Mr. Pennant deſcribes in its neighbourhood a Gorſedhau, now almoſt diſperſed, but once conſiſting of a great copped heap of ſtones[c]. Hereabouts is a well ſaid to be cold in ſummer and warm in winter.

I was told Tan Ben y Kefn the ſuppoſed Britiſh building lay half a mile to the ſouth of the cottage. As far to the weſt is a cromlech. Eaſt of Trer Drw farm, in a home field, is a large rude brown ſtone, bedded in the ground with two round cavities in it, which the farmer ſaid was intended to burn men or baptize children at. A good diſtance eaſt on a common is Caer Leb, an oblong double intrenchment, the inner vallum rounded at the angles, and near the ſouth-eaſt angles foundations of a round tower. The outer vallum is rectangular, its ſouth ſide much broken; a broad ditch between and a leſſer on the outſide. Mr. Rowlands repreſenting it according to his idea of its perfect ſtate, ſays it is 50 paces over, and ſuppoſes it the ſite of ſome wooden palace, of which the round tower was the ſtaircaſe. It is too much commanded by riſing grounds to have been a fortification or entrenchment. The river Breint probably filled its ditches. Rowlands' houſes at Tan Ben y Cefn ſeem of the ſame ſort, and I was told of ſuch at Bryn Shenkin. Near Caerleb, on the river is a piece of ground called Trw-Vry. Rowland mentions a great many circular foundations which to Mr. Pennant appeared ſo dilapidated as to be almoſt formleſs[d]. Bod drudan, or the habitation of the Druids, Tre'r Bardd or that of the bards, and Bodowyr that of the prieſts, are all of them hamlets nearly ſurrounding the ſeat of the chief Druid, compoſing the principal part of his ſuite[e]. At the laſt Mr. Pennant ſaw a thick cromlech on three ſtones.

What follows is taken from a letter from the rev. Mr. John Davis, rector of Newburgh, in biſhop Gibſon's additions, p. 809. "Oppoſite to the ſpot where it is ſuppoſed the Romans paſſed the frith of Menei into Mona is a hill called Gwydryn, corrupted perhaps from Gwydh Uryn, q. d. Conſpicuous hill, on one of whoſe two ſummits are the ruins of an antient fort, and on the other I obſerved a round pit, of about nine feet diameter, ſunk in a rock, and filled up with pure ſand. Its depth I cannot aſcertain, ſome who have ſounded it for three yards having found no bottom. I conjecture this might have been the place where the Druids offered the blood of their priſoners. About a mile from the place where we ſuſpect the Romans to have landed is Trer Druw, which doubtleſs took its name from ſome Druid, and may be interpreted Druid's town, as we find the adjoining townſhip is called Tre'r

[a] Hiſtory of Angleſea, 1775, 4to. p. 4-11,
[b] Mr. Panton in Phil. Tranſ. LXIII. part I. p. 180. Penn. Wales, II. 280.
[c] See Rowlands, p. 100. Pennant's Wales, II. 230.
[d] Ib. 231.
[e] Rowlands, p. 240.

Beirdh,

Beirdh, or the Druid's ſtone, within the Kwnmwd of Twrkelyn, in Lhan Elian pariſh, where doubtleſs was a Druid's ſepulchral monument, though it is now only the name of a houſe. On the confines of theſe two townſhips is a ſquare fortification, which may be ſuppoſed the firſt camp that the Romans had after their landing here: and oppoſite to it, about three furlongs weſtward, is another ſtrong hold of a round form and conſiderable height, which probably was that of our anceſtors. Farther weſt, under the protection of the fort, are about 12 ſtones pitched on end, whereof three are very conſiderable: the largeſt 12 feet high and eight broad. Theſe are known by the name of Kerig y Bryn gwyn, or Bryngwyn ſtones (Bryngwyn ſignifying white cliff, or hill, or as Rowlands Supreme court), from the place where they are erected. On what occaſion they were ſet up I cannot conjecture, unleſs as the burial place of ſome of the moſt eminent Druids. In Bed Owyr, on the north ſide of the ſame round fort, farther off, we find a remarkable cromlech[f] ſuppoſed by others as well as myſelf another ſort of ſepulchral monument ſince the time of heatheniſm. Theſe (for there are ſeveral more in the iſland) are compoſed of three or four or more rude ſtones pitched on end, and ſupporting a vaſt ſtone of ſeveral tons laid on them. They are thought to have received their name from the convexity or gibboſity of the upper ſtone: the word Krwn ſignifying crooked or gibbous, and Llech any flat ſtone[g]. The cromlech at Bodowyr is the moſt elegant I have ſeen: all the ſtones of others being rude and unpoliſhed; but in this wrought as neatly as the natural roughneſs of the ſtone would bear, and pointed into ſeveral angles. We have a tradition that the largeſt cromlech in this county is the monument of Bronwen daughter of king Lleir, who is ſaid to have begun his reign anno mundi 3105. But of this and the reſt of our cromlechs take the words of a late ingenious antiquary, Mr. John Griffith of Llan Dhyvnan, in a letter to Mr. Vaughan of Hengwrt, Bronwen Leiri filiam quod attinet &c. "As to Brownwen, the daughter of Leir, there is a "crooked little cell of ſtone, not far weſt of Alaw, "where, according to tradition, ſhe was buried. "But whether there ever was ſuch a king is doubted "by many: how juſtly remains to be proved. Such "little houſes, which are common in this country, "are called you know by an appoſite name Crom-"lechau. Laſtly, this iſland, which in thoſe days "was almoſt one continued wood, and, as it were "appropriated to the Druids, abounds with the "graves of noblemen, who were induced by a re-"verence for the place to be buried there." Some I know ſuppoſe theſe and the like monuments to be federal teſtimonies: but that I take to be a groundleſs conjecture, and the opinion of their being places of interment ſeems to be confirmed by a friend of mine, who remembers that an odd kind of helmet (and I am informed a ſpear alſo) was found by digging about a rude ſtone, which, with ſome others, is pitched on end at a place called Kae y maes maur at the ſouth-weſt point of the pariſh of Llan Rhwydrus[h]. Of theſe ſtones there are now but three ſtanding, and thoſe in a manner triangularly. One is 11 feet and half high, four feet broad, and 14 inches thick: another about nine feet high, and four broad: the third ten feet high, eight broad, and but ſix inches thick[i]. As to the Iriſh houſes the words Yn hericy gwidil ſeem to have been erroneouſly printed for Kerig y Gwydhel, q. d. Iriſh ſtones: for we find a place ſo called in Llan Griſtiolis pariſh, near which is Din Drivel, a fort near which the Iriſh were routed by Caſwallon. Not that I think we are thence authorized to conclude that the Iriſh had any ſettlement in theſe parts, or that there was any memorable action here between them and the Britans, ſince it relates only to one man, who might poſſibly be there buried, and a heap of ſtones caſt on his grave, as has been uſual in other places. I alſo doubt whether theſe monuments called Iriſh houſes are any proof of the Iriſh reſiding there, being only ſome vaſt rude ſtones laid together in a circular order, encloſing an area of about five yards diameter, and too ill ſhaped to be the foundations of any building, and as they are they afford neither ſhelter nor convenience. Thoſe I mean are to be ſeen in a wood near Llygwy, the ſeat of Thomas Lloyd, eſq, and are commonly called Kittieur Gwydhelod, or Iriſh cots. A monument of this kind, though much leſs, may be ſeen at Lhech yr Aſt in Lhan Goedmor pariſh near Cardigan, which was doubtleſs erected in the barbarous ages of heatheniſm, but for what I cannot ſay. The ſame may be ſaid of thoſe Kittieur Gwydhelad, which I preſume to have been ſo called by the vulgar merely from a tradition that before Chriſtianity the Iriſh poſſeſſed this iſland, and therefore they are apt to aſcribe to that people ſuch monuments as they cannot account for, as the Highlanders refer the ſtone pillars to the Picts[k]. For we muſt not ſuppoſe ſuch barbarous monuments can be ſo late as the end of the ſixth century, about which time the Iriſh commander Sirigi is ſaid to have been ſlain by Caſwallonaw hir, or Caſſivelaunus Longimanus[l]. We have many more places in Wales denominated from the Iriſh, as Pentre'r Gwydhel, in the pariſh of Rhos Golin in this county, Pont y Gwydhel in Llanvair, and Pentre'r Gwydhel in Lhyſvaen pariſh in Denbighſhire, Kerig y Gwydhel near Feſtiniog in Merionethſhire, Kwm y Gwydhel in Penbryn pariſh, and Karn Philip Wydhil in Llan Wennog pariſh in Cardiganſhire. But having no hiſtory to back theſe names, nothing can be inferred from them[m].

About the year 945, a battle was fought for this iſle between Howel Dha king of Wales and Kynan ap Edwal Voel, wherein the latter fell. Grufydh his ſon renewing the war was likewiſe overcome, and Kyngar, a potent man, being driven out of the iſland, Howel kept quiet poſſeſſion thereof[n].

At Plaſnewydd, the ſeat of Henry Baily Paget, earl of Uxbridge, a modern houſe, built like a caſtle at the bottom of a wood, commanding a fine view down the Menai, and of the oppoſite ſhores on the edge of the park, at a little diſtance from the houſe, is the largeſt and moſt intire cromlech in the whole principality. It is double, conſiſting of a greater and a leſs. The greater is 12 feet and an half long by 12 feet broad and ſix feet high, its upper edge but two feet thick. It reſted on five ſtones, but one being detached

Plaſnew

[f] See Rowlands, 93.
[g] See in Pembrokeſhire.
[h] Maes ſignifies properly only a large open field, but I am told that in the names of places in this country it is uſed for battle: ſo that Kaer maes maur implies ſome great battle fought here. A further confirmation whereof, as alſo of theſe ſtones being ſepulchral monuments, is that a ſmall brook on the ſouth of them is called Rhyd y Bedhen, or the ford of Graves. Lluyd in Gibſon.
[i] Lluyd.
[k] See Dr. Garden's Letters to Mr. Aubrey, Archæol. I. 312.
[l] See Deſcription of Wales before Dr. Powel's hiſtory.
[m] Lluyd.
[n] Robert Vaughan's MS. G.

tached and another thrown down four only bear its weight at preſent. Of theſe one is five, the other three, the third three feet and an half high. There is a ſpace under it five feet high, and nearly ſix feet ſquare. The ſmaller adjoins cloſe to the narrow end of this, and is ſix feet ſquare, reſting on three ſtones, and a fourth down; one of thoſe ſtanding ſeems to have flaked in two. Not far from thence is a large Carnedd, part of which being removed diſcovered a cell about ſeven feet long and three wide covered with two flat ſtones and lined with others. On the top of the ſtone were two ſemicircular holes big enough to take in the human neck[n]. Sir Nicholas Bailey and Mr. Rowlands ſon of the author of Mona Antiqua Reſtaurata, who has the living of Llanedwen and a good paternal fortune, have built on the road from hence to Beaumaris a number of neat brick cottages for the poor, who rent them with about 12 acres for £.6. Mr. Rowlands the author was buried in Llanedwen church, of which he was vicar, 1723. At Llaindan is the rude ſtone ſhrine of St. Aidan, to whom the church is dedicated, and of whom Bede makes hohourable mention[o]. At Pwll Keris is a furious ſwilly or current with whirlpools[p]. Hence to Beaumaris the country is hilly but ſandy, and covered only with fern. Llandogvan church, rather better than the generality of Welſh churches, is the mother church to Beaumaris, and dedicated to St. Tydecho, or St. Decuman. Beaumaris is a large and tolerably well built and walled town, with one or two inns entered by a gate at the ſouth end. The caſtle built as well as the town by Edward I. 1295, and ſurrounded by a ditch, is entered from the eaſt between two embattled walls, with a round and ſquare tower at the ends. The gate has four ſquare towers, and opens into a ſquare court, 57 yards by 60, a well filled up in the center[q], and on the eaſt ſide was the chapel in a round tower with three lancet eaſt windows, and compartments of archwork all round within. In the middle of the north ſide is the hall, 20 yards from north to ſouth by 12[r], with two round towers, a number of which range about the inner and outer walls, and the bluiſh ſtones intermixed with the ſquare ſtones of the walls produced a pretty effect. Two of the eaſt towers ſerved as dungeons, the deſcent to them dark and narrow, as are the galleries round them. The porter's lodge is a Bridewell[s]. A quantity of money is ſaid to have been found in the wall of the gate. On the ſouth ſide is an advanced work called the Gunner's walk[t]. The caſtle is the property of the crown, the preſent governor ſir Hugh Williams. Gillyflowers grow plentifully about the building, and nowhere elſe in the iſland[u]. The church is a handſome building with a lofty ſquare tower. Here is a free-ſchool founded 1603[x]. Juſt out of the town gate to the north-weſt is an almſhouſe, and another by the ſide of the road to Portaithwy ferry.

Juſt without the town alſo is Baron hill, the ſeat of lord viſcount Bulkeley, whoſe family deſcended from Robert lord Bulkeley, lord of the manor of that name in Cheſhire, t. John, have been hereditary conſtables of this caſtle, and chamberlains of North-Wales ever ſince the reign of Elizabeth. Charles I. created Thomas Bulkeley viſcount Bulkeley 1643, of Caſhel, in the kingdom of Ireland, who was ſucceeded by his great-great-grandſon James, and he by his ſon Thomas 8th and preſent viſcount. This houſe was built 1618 by ſir Richard Bulkeley a diſtinguiſhed perſonage in the reign of Elizabeth and James I. and a ſtout and ſucceſsful oppoſer of Leyceſter's oppreſſive practices. It has been much improved under the direction of Mr. Wyatt by the preſent noble owner. Near the town, on a ſpot where a battle was fought between the Saxons and Welſh A. D. 819[y], was Llanvaes abbey, founded by Llewellin ap Jerwerth for Franciſcans after the death of his wife Joan, daughter of king John, who was buried here 1237 at her own requeſt[z]. A ſtone coffin, ſuppoſed to be hers, is now a watering trough for cattle at a farm called the Friers, about one mile north of the town on the coaſt[a]. Four miles from Beaumaris ſtood Penmon or Glennarch priory of black canons, founded or at leaſt richly endowed by the ſame prince, and valued at £. 40. per annum[b]. It was burnt by the Danes 971[c]. Part of the refectory and church remain[d]. Hereabouts are good quarries of mill-ſtones and limeſtones, and in the harbour large oyſters[e]. Caſtelle Aber Llienag is a ſmall ſquare fort with round towers at the corners, built by Hugh Lupus and Hugh earl of Shrewſbury, the latter of whom was there ſlain by Magnus king of Norway 1098. It was taken by the king's troops 1645[f].

Llanvaes.

Penmon.

At Trevawr is a great rude cromlech and ruins of others. Traith Coch or Redwharf is a large bay covered with a firm ſand which on the weſt ſide has a bed of ſhells uſed for manure: on the eaſt ſide about three miles from Plas Gwyn the ſeat of Paul Panton, eſq. are two round mounts probably Daniſh. On a high hill called Bwrdd Arthur or Arthur's Round Table, is a great Britiſh poſt ſecured with a double row of rude pointed ſtones and a rampart of ſmall ſtones; in the area veſtiges of oval buildings, the largeſt formed of two rows of ſtones ſet on edge. In Llan Jeſtin church is the tomb of Jeſtin its tutelar ſaint engraved in Archæologia, V. 146, with this inſcription:

Llan Jeſtin.

" Hic jacet Santtus Yeſtinus cui Gwarllian filia
" Madoc & Gryffyt ap Gwilym optulet in oblac̃oem
" iſtam imaginem pro ſalute animorum."

Penmynyd two miles ſouth of Plas Gwyn was the reſidence of Owen Tudor who married Catherine dowager of Henry V. and fighting againſt Edward IV. at the battle of Mortimer's croſs was taken and beheaded and buried in the Grey friars at Hereford[g]. Part of the houſe and gateway and the hall chimney piece remain in a farm houſe. The Tudor family became extinct in Richard Tudor 1657, and the eſtate belongs to lord Bulkeley. In the church is one of their monuments, removed at the diſſolution from Llanvaes abbey. Tre Garnedd was the ſeat of the great Ednyfed Vychan; his great grandſon ſir Gryffyd Lluyd revolting from Edward I. 1322, fortified it, and made another ſtrong hold about three quarters of a mile hence in the moraſs of Maltraeth called Ynys Cevenni; the moats of both remain. The firſt of theſe places takes its name from an immenſe Carnedd ſuurrounded with great upright ſtones in an adjacent field ſeeming to have beneath it paſſages formed on the top and ſides with flat ſtones or flags. A few years ago under ſuch a carnedd on a farm called Bryn celli ddu near the ſeat of ſir Nicholas Bayly, was found a paſſage three feet wide, four feet and a quarter high, and about 19 feet and an half long, which led into a room three feet diameter and ſeven high, an irregular hexagon, the ſides compoſed of ſix rude ſlabs, one of which meaſured diagonally eight feet nine inches; in the middle was a rude ſtone pillar four feet eight inches in circumference ſupporting the roof, which conſiſted of one ſtone near 10 feet diameter; along the ſides was a ſtone bench, on which were found human bones which fell to duſt almoſt at a touch[h]. The weſt front of the bay is called Caſtell mawr, a ſmall flat cape compoſed of limeſtone. Roman coins have been found in the neighbourhood, but no veſtiges of a ſtation. On the lands of Llugwy, an eſtate of lord Boſton, is a moſt ſtupendous cromlech of a rhomboid form, the greateſt diameter 17 feet and an half, the leaſt 15: the thickneſs three feet three quarters, height from the ground only two feet, ſupported by ſeveral ſtones. It is called Arthur's Quoit. In the woods are ſome druidical circles nearly contiguous to each other. Dulas bay is a harbour for ſmall veſſels. Llan Elian church is dedicated to Elian, a ſaint ſo much reſorted to that with the offerings of the pilgrims the pariſhioners purchaſed three tenements for the uſe of the church which ſtill belong to the living. Near this place Caſwallon Lawhir beforementioned kept his court, and granted ſeveral privileges with that of ſanctuary to this church[i].

Penmynyd.

[n] Pennant II. 237, 238. [o] Ib. 229. Bede vita Cuthberti, c. 4. [p] Ib. 239. [q] Groſe. [r] Ib. [s] Hiſt. of Angleſea, 22. [t] Groſe. [u] Groſe. [x] Hiſt. of Angleſea, p. 22. [y] Ib. 23. [z] Tan. 700. [a] Hiſt. of Gwedir family, 23. n. [b] Tan. 699. Buck. [c] Ib. 79. [d] Penn. II. 247. [e] Hiſt. of Angl. 25. Penn. II. 229. [f] Penn. II. 248. [g] Lel. It. IV. 86. VIII. 36. Pennant II. 254—258.

Llan Elian.

On Parys mountain part of Tryſclwyn mountain is the moſt conſiderable body of copper ore perhaps ever known, lodged in a hollow having on one ſide a lake of diſtaſteful water. This mine ſeems to have been worked by the antients, but was re-opened 1762. The water lodged in the bottom of the bed of ore is ſo highly ſaturated with the metal, that iron being immerſed in pits of it the particles of copper are inſtantly precipitated by it, and the iron is gradually diſſolved into a yellow ochre; great part of it floats off by the water, and ſinks to the bottom; the plates or the old iron are frequently taken out and the copper ſcraped off till all the iron is conſumed. The copper thus produced differs little from native copper and is prized accordingly, and ſold from 25 to 45*l*. per ton. Above the copper ore (which is cut out of the bed as ſtone in the quarry) and not more than three-fourths of a yard under the common ſort is a bed of yelloviſh greaſy clay from one to four yards thick, containing lead ore, and yielding from 600 to 1000lb. weight of lead from one ton, and one ton of the metal yields not leſs than 57 ounces of ſilver. In the bottom of the pool was found an antient ſmelting hearth of grit ſtone and ſeveral bits of ſmelted lead four inches long, two broad, and half an inch thick. Theſe works employ 1500 perſons, who with their families are ſuppoſed to make near 8000. The little village of Amlwch increaſes, and the market grows conſiderable. The port is no more than a great chaſm running far in land between two rocks where ſloops lie ſecure[k].

Copper ore.

In the north weſt part of the iſland near Kemlyn bay, where is ſafe anchorage for ſmall veſſels, is in Llan fair yn hornwy pariſh the famous quarry of marble, which as well as the Aſbeſtos dug hereabouts, whoſe veins interſect and ſpoil the marble, is fallen into diſuſe[l]. A green amianthus or brittle aſbeſtos is found in great plenty in a green marble in Rhoſcolyn pariſh, but by reaſon of the inflexible quality of its fibres is not applicable to the ſame uſes[m].

Aſbeſtos.

Newburgh or Rhos vair was the reſidence of one of the princes of Angleſea: the foundations of whoſe palace were viſible in Mr. Rowlands' time a little ſouth of the church, which is ſuppoſed to have been its chapel. Edward I. made it a corporation, which occaſioned its preſent name. It now ſubſiſts by a manufacture of mats and ropes made of ſea reed graſs, a plant which queen Elizabeth wiſely prohibited the extirpation of as preventing the ſhifting of the ſands by tempeſts[n]. It has a ſhallow bay[o].

Newburgh.

Newburgh is a corporation, has a market and four or five fairs[p], and gives title of baron 1716 to George Cholmondely grandfather of the preſent earl of Cholmondely. Its Welſh name is variouſly written. In the deſcription of Wales prefixed to Powel's Hiſtory Rhoſſyr, in another impreſſion not publiſhed becauſe not complete Rhoſir, which alters or makes the ſignification more diſtinct. In a MS. copy thereof Rhosfir, which we are to read Rhos vir. Mr. Davies, rector, informed biſhop Gibſon it ſhould be read Rhos Vair as in the following Englin.

Mac Lhys yn Rhos-Vair, mac Lhyn
Mac cur-gluch, mac Arglwydh Lhewelyn
A Gwyr tâl yn ei gâlyn
Mil myrdh mewn gwyrdh a gwyn.

Newburgh was famous for John Morgan, an old blind muſician, who alone was ſaid to preſerve the antient inſtrument called the Crwth, not improbably ſuppoſed the original of our preſent violin. One Williams, a barber at Holyhead, was eminent in the ſame way, as alſo for making theſe inſtruments, which Morgan does not pretend to do any more than his children to touch them[q].

Near Newburgh at Vrondeg was a ſtone inſcribed Cur— filius Cunriani erexit hunc lapide, or Filius Ulrici erixit hunc lapidem[r], now illegible[s]. Davies in Gibſon calls it an inſcribed ſtone which the biſhop refers to ſome Dane or Norman, but this does not ſeem likely to have been part of a Cromlech.

Vrondeg.

About two miles north-weſt from Newburgh is Llangadwalader church, over whoſe door was on a ſtone like a coffin lid this inſcription for Cadvan who governed North Wales about the middle of the 6th century, and was at the battle of Bangor ys coed againſt the Saxons:

Llangadwalader.

Catamanus rex ſapientiſſimus, opinatiſſimus omnium regum[t],

[h] Pennant, II. 259—262.
[i] Ib. 263, 264.
[k] Ib. 265—272.
[l] Ib. 272.
[m] Ib. 275.
[n] Ib. 223--226.
[o] Hiſt. of Angl. 42.
[p] Ib. 43.
[q] See Mr. Barrington in Archæol. III. 30.
[r] Hiſt. of Angl. 43.
[s] Pennant II. 223.
[t] G. Hiſt. of Angl. 43. Pennant II. 227.

Aberfraw

Aberfraw palace is ſucceeded by a barn, in which are ſtones of better workmanſhip than uſual in ſuch buildings. Here was kept a copy of the antient code of laws. Near it are frequently found the Glain Naidr or Druid glaſs rings[u]. Of theſe the vulgar opinion in Cornwall and moſt parts of Wales is that they are produced through all Cornwall by ſnakes joining their heads together and hiſſing, which forms a kind of bubble like a ring about the head of one of them, which the reſt by continual hiſſing blow on till it comes off at the tail, when it immediately hardens and reſembles a glaſs ring. Whoever found it was to proſper in all his undertakings. Theſe rings are called Glain Nadroedh, or gemmæ anguinæ. Glûne in Iriſh ſignifies Glaſs. In Monmouthſhire they are called Maen Magl, and corruptly Glaim for Glain. They are ſmall glaſs annulets, commonly about half as wide as our finger rings, but much thicker, uſually of a green colour, though ſome are blue, and others curiouſly waved with blue, red, and white. Mr. Lluyd had ſeen two or three earthen rings of this kind, but glazed with blue and adorned with tranſverſe ſtrokes or furrows on the outſide. The ſmalleſt of them might be ſuppoſed to have been glaſs beads worn for ornaments by the Romans, becauſe ſome quantities of them, with ſeveral amber beads, had been lately diſcovered in a ſtone pit near Garford in Berkſhire, where they alſo dig up Roman coins, ſkeletons, and pieces of arms and armour. But it may be objected that a battle being fought there between the Romans and Britans, as appear by the bones and arms, theſe glaſs beads might as probably belong to the latter. And indeed it ſeems very likely that theſe ſnake ſtones, as we call them, were uſed as charms or amulets among our Druids of Britan on the ſame occaſion as the ſnake eggs among the Gauliſh Druids. For Pliny, who lived when theſe prieſts were in requeſt, and ſaw one of their ſnake eggs, gives the ſame account of the origin of them as our common people do of their Glain Naidr. "There is," ſays that Naturaliſt[x], "a kind of egg "in great repute in Gaul diſregarded [omiſſum] by "the Greeks. A great number of ſnakes in ſummer "rolling together form themſelves into a kind of "maſs with the ſaliva of their mouths and froth of "their bodies, and produce what is called the An- "guinum, or Snake's Egg. The Druids ſay this by "their hiſſing is borne up into the air, and muſt be "caught in a mantle before it reaches the earth. "The perſon who catches it muſt eſcape on horſe- "back, for the ſnakes will purſue him till they are "ſtopped by a river. The proof of it is if it floats "againſt the ſtream even when ſet in gold. As the "Magicians know how to conceal their ſecret arts, "they pretend it muſt be caught in a certain period "of the moon, as if it was in the power of man to "influence that operation of the ſnakes. I have "ſeen one of theſe eggs about the ſize of a ſmall "round apple covered with a cartilageneous cruſt like "the claws of the arms of the polypus, and uſed as "a Druidical ſymbol. It is ſaid to be wonderfully "efficacious in promoting the ſucceſs of lawſuits and "procuring favourable audience of princes, inſo- "much that I am well aſſured a Roman knight among "the Vocontii was put to death by the late em- "peror Claudius merely for having one of them in "his boſom at a trial." Thus, continues Mr. Lluyd, we find it very evident that the opinion of the vulgar concerning the generation of theſe adder beads, or ſnake ſtones, is no other than a relic of the ſuperſtition or perhaps impoſture of the Druids; but whether what we call ſnake ſtones be the very ſame amulets that the Britiſh Druids made uſe of, or whether this fabulous origin was aſcribed formerly to the ſame thing and in aftertimes applied to theſe glaſs beads I ſhall not undertake to determine. As for Pliny's Ovum Anguinum it can be no other than a ſhell (marine or foſſil) of the kind we call Echinus marinus; whereof one ſort, though not the ſame he deſcribes, is found at this day in moſt parts of Wales where they are found Wyeu'r mor, or ſea eggs. I had almoſt forgotten to add that ſometimes theſe glaſs annulets were ſtruck through a larger ring of iron, and that again through another much larger of copper, as appears by one found in the river Cherwell near Hampton Gay, c. Oxford, deſcribed by Dr. Plot in his Natural Hiſtory of that county, p. 385. Tab. XVI. fig. 4. Thus far Mr. Lluyd. Dr. Borlaſe, who had penetrated more deeply into the Druidical monuments in this kingdom than any writer before or ſince, obſerves that inſtead of the natural Anguinum, which muſt have been very rare, artificial rings of ſtone, glaſs, and ſometimes baked clay were ſubſtituted as of equal validity[y]. Mr. Pennant[z] ſays this wondrous egg ſeems to be nothing more than a bead of glaſs uſed by the Druids as a charm to impoſe on the vulgar. Our modern Druideſſes give much the ſame account of the Ovum Anguinum, Glain Naidr, as the Welſh call it, or the Adder gem, as the Roman philoſopher, but ſeem not to have ſo exalted an idea of its powers, uſing it only to aſſiſt children in cutting their teeth, or to cure the chin cough, or drive away the ague. Theſe beads are not unfrequently found in barrows[a], or occaſionally with ſkeletons whoſe nation and age is not aſcertained. We have copied three from biſhop Gibſon in Pl. XVIII. where fig. 16 is of earth enamelled with blue found near Dol Gelhe in Merionethſhire; fig. 17 of green glaſs found at Aberfraw; fig. 18, 19 a full view of one end of one found near Maes y Pandy, c. Merioneth.

An arm of the ſea divides Holyhead from the reſt of Angleſea, but except in very high tides is generally paſſable. At the end of the ſand and tide road is a very long ſtone bridge called Rhydpont to which ſmall veſſels come up. Further on a little hill is a ruined chapel of St. Fraid, of which the people can give no account[b], except that human bones and ſtone coffins have been dug up in it within memory, and it is ſtill walled round for burial. About a quarter of a mile north of it on the hill overlooking Holyhead are the remains of a double Cromlech in the ſame direction as the reſt, and ſeeming to have been conſiderable. It is called Trechen Tre rechthre. Tradition ſays that a very profligate debauchè owner of the adjoining farms of Trergow and Pentros, committed great exceſſes at theſe ſtones with his miſtreſſes, and at laſt in a fit of rage murdered them there, for which he was obliged to fly, and died in obſcurity, having conſumed all his eſtate in riot and neglect. In a field below to the weſt is a ſingle ſtone terminating almoſt in a point about five yards high.

In Boddedern pariſh on an eſtate of Mrs. Roberts

[u] Hiſt of Ang. 41.
[y] Antiq. of Cornwall, p. 142.
[b] See Hiſt. of Ang. 36.
[x] See alſo Religion des Gaulois, II. 204, 205.
[z] Zool. III. 23. 8°.
[a] See Stukeley's Abury, p. 44.

in the ſecond field oppoſite the 9th mile-ſtone from Holyhead, is a very large double Cromlech almoſt equal to that at Plaſnewydd: the larger is 10 feet by eight and two feet and an half thick, reſting on four ſtones, the higheſt five feet. The ſmaller is thrown down from its three ſtones and was nine feet ſquare. The dimenſions of the uppermoſt ſtones here exceed thoſe at Plaſnewyd, but like that their longeſt diameter points north and ſouth. I find no mention of this noble monument in any writer [c].

Holyhead. Holyhead takes its name from the mountain at the back about one mile and an half diſtant and a mile of perpendicular aſcent. It is little more than a fiſhing town rendered conſiderable by being the place of general paſſage to Ireland. Here are three good inns. The tide comes up to the houſes and frequently overflows the parapet. Six packets continually attend, and go every day in the week except Thurſdays, and return next day. The paſſage is performed at an average in twelve hours, and paſſengers pay 10*s.* 6*d.* The ſhorteſt paſſage has been ſix hours. Here is no freſh water, and all the bread uſed here comes from Dublin, 13 ſixpenny loaves to the dozen. A bath and aſſembly-room are lately erected in hope of alluring company from Ireland. Near the extremity of the village ſtands the church, in which St. Kebi A. D. 380 founded a ſmall monaſtery. He was ſon to a duke of Cornwall and pupil to Hilary biſhop of Poitiers, with whom he lived 50 years, or of Elian Ganniad or the bright, in Latin Hilarius, who has ſtill reſort at Llan Elian [d], and being then conſecrated biſhop for his diſtinguiſhed zeal againſt Arianiſm, ſettled here, and gave the name of his maſter to Hilary point. His monaſtery was ſucceeded by a college of preſbiters, founded by one of the lords of Angleſea in the beginning of the 12th century, under a provoſt or penclees [e], valued at £.24. per annum. The church is built in form of a croſs: on the pediment of the north tranſept is ſanctæ Kyb. ora pro nobis. The ſchool on the ſouth ſide may occupy the ſite of the chapel, dedicated to Sirigi [f], its eaſt front being included in a large Gothic arch. The walls of the church-yard are ſolidly built of ſtone, diſpoſed herring-bone faſhion, entered by an antient ſtone gate [g], with a round tower at the north-eaſt corners next the ſea, aſcribed to Caſwallon Lawhere (of whom before) lord of Angleſea A. D. 450, who ſlew Sirigi the Iriſh commander. It is a ſquare of 220 feet by by 130: the walls on three ſides 17 feet high and ſix thick, the maſonry of the whole evidently Roman. Along the walls are two rows of round holes, four inches in diameter, hollowed through like thoſe at Segontium, and merely plaiſtered over [h]. Two rocks with ruins on them oppoſite the church have the names of Ynis Gybi and Ynis Rug. Under the mountain that overhangs the town and is properly called the Head, is a large cavern in the rock ſupported by natural pillars, called the parliament houſe, acceſſible by boats and the tide flows into it. On its top is Caer Tŵr, a circular ſtone wall without mortar ſurrounding its ſummit 10 feet with a wall, probably a pharos [i]. Several other like fortifications appear on the tops of the hills on the coaſt in this iſland [k]. Baxter derives Caer Gybi from Caer Coib, Iriſh for forcas or troops. From this harbour alone are annually exported 40,000 buſhels of grain [l].

Prieſtholm iſle. Off Penmon lies Prieſtholm or Sinol or Glannauch iſle, where was a priory of black monks, valued at £.40. 17*s.* [m] only a ſquare tower left, much frequented by puffins. This bird is remarkable for the uniform change in the bill, and for not breeding till three years old [n].

Skerry iſland. About three leagues north north-weſt of Holyhead and half a league from the main is a ſmall iſland called Skerry, Britiſh Ynys y Moelrhoniad from the ſeals on it; it has now a moſt ſerviceable lighthouſe [o].

Llanidan. At Llanidan is a ſeat of lord Boſton. In the church a reliquary of very ordinary grit ſtone with a roof like cover. The celebrated Maen Mordhwyd, or ſtone of the thigh, is now chained to the church walls, having defied the orders of Hugh Lupus to caſt it into the ſea, whence it returned to its uſual place [p].

Llanidwy. Llandwy is ſaid to have been a houſe of friars minors is between Newburg and Abermenai. It was a prebend of Bangor, had large poſſeſſions ſwallowed by the ſea, and ſhews ſtill ſome remains of its former ſtrength and greatneſs [q].

Cerngyboth. In Cerngyborth an open place in Llandiſilion pariſh is ſuppoſed to have been the place where archbiſhop Baldwin, Giraldus Cambrenſis, and Prince Roderic ſolicited the contributions of the iſlanders for the Cruſade. The ſpot where the archbiſhop ſtood is called Kilbegle or the begging-place, the archdeacon's Carreg yr Archjagon, and the prince's Maen Rhoderic [r].

Treffos. About two miles north-weſt of Portaithwy is Treffos, ſaid to be a palace of the biſhops of Bangor and the capital of their barony [s].

Tregain. Tregain village on the river Cefni is remarkable for giving birth to William David ap Hewel ap Jorworth, father of 43 children, 36 of whom were lawfully begotten on three wives. He died at the age of 105 in the middle of the 16th century, and was attended to his grave by 300 deſcendants: his eldeſt ſon was 82 when his youngeſt brother was born [t].

Llan Elian. Llan Elian has a more modern church than is common in Wales, adorned with ſome good paintings of the Apoſtles ſaid to have been ſhipwrecked in their way to Ireland; another of St. Elian and a third of Paul at Malta. The ſhrine of St. Elian here was much reſorted to antiently and is not now neglected [u].

Llandyfrydog. Llandyfrydog is remarkable for an accident that befel Hugh earl of Shrewſbury in one of his invaſions here; his dogs put in the church one night run mad, and the earl himſelf died miſerably in leſs than a month after [x]. Here are ſome remains of ſtone circles and one ſtone ſhaped like an inverted cone in Clorach farm by the road ſide is diſtinguiſhed by the name of Lleiderdyfrydog, and ſaid to be a ſacrilegious robber of this church turned into a ſtone [y].

Llan Pabo. In Llan Pabo pariſh is a ſtone 10 feet high by one ſquare, now broken in two with this inſcription:

Hic jacet Pabo poſt Prud [Prydhain]
Corpors - - - - te - - prima.

[c] Q. if not in Hiſt. of Angleſea, p. 36, 37. and Gibſon, p. 812 from Aubrey.
[d] Hiſt. of Angleſea, 28.
[e] Pencolas, præfectus collegii.
[f] See Hiſt. of Angl. 34.
[g] Groſe.
[h] Penn. II. 277.
[i] Ib. 278.
[k] Hiſt. of Angl. 34.
[l] Ib. 37.
[m] Ib. 25. Tan. 699.
[n] Penn. II. 250—252. Zool. I. No. 232.
[o] Hiſt. of Angl. 39.
[p] Penn. II. 228, 229. Girald. It. Camb. II. 7.
[q] Hiſt. of Angl. 43.
[r] Ib. 46.
[s] Ib. 47.
[t] Ib. 48.
[u] Ib.
[x] Ib. ex Girald. p. 193.
[y] Ib. 49, 50.

called

called Maen Llanol for Llineol, q. d. lapis lineis exſculptus; ſuch another being at Penbryn in Cardiganſhire. Mr. Rowlands[z] ſays, Pabo, called Poſt Prydhain, q. d. the ſupport of Britain, for his valour againſt the Scots and Picts, retired hither and was the principal ſaint of the iſland, and next to him Elian.

The iſland gave title of earl, 1623, to Chriſtopher Villiers brother of George duke of Buckingham, whoſe ſon Charles dying 1659-60 without iſſue it was conferred on Arthur Anneſley created lord Anneſley of Newport Pagnel, Bucks, and earl of Angleſea 1661, who was ſucceeded by his ſon James, his grandſons James, John and Arthur, which laſt was a perſon of great eloquence and diſtinguiſhed abilities[a]. He was ſucceeded by Richard the 5th lord Altham and 6th earl of Angleſea and 7th viſcount Valentia, but this earldom is at preſent an undetermined title[b].

[z] P. 158. [a] Gibſon. [b] Scot.

Rare Plants found in the Iſle of Angleſea.

Anthyllis vulneraria ß. A variety of Kidney Vetch or Ladies Finger; in chalky and lime-ſtone meadows and paſtures.

Aſplenium marinum. Dwarf Sea Fern; on the rocks oppoſite Puffin iſland and at Llandwyn.

Braſſica monenſis. Yellow Rocket; on ſandy ſea ſhores:
Bunias Cakile. Sea Rocket; on the ſand
Chieranthus ſinuatus. Sea Stock-gillyflower; on ſandy ſhores } near Abermeney ferry.

Ciſtus guttatus. Annual Ciſtus; on ſandy meadows: at Holyhead.

——— hirſutus. Hoary Dwarf Ciſtus; on Burdd Arthur.

Cochlearia Danica. Daniſh Scurvy graſs; on the ſea ſhore near Llanbadrick church.

——— officinalis ß. Small round leaved Scurvy-graſs; on the coaſt about Beaumaris.

Conferva æruginoſa. Sea-green Conferva; among fuci: at Llanfaethly.

——— atra. Bead Conferva; in a ſmall rivulet flowing into Gors Velen lake near Llanfaethly and in a ſpring called Ffynnon bach y Luſg in Gors Bach between the church and Trefadog.

——— foeniculata. Fennel-leaved Conferva; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones.

——— polymorpha. Palmated Conferva; among fuci particularly, Fucus nodoſus.

——— rupeſtris. Sea Beard or Rock Conferva; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones and in rivers.

——— ſcoparia. Broom Conferva; on ſea ſhores: at Llanfaethly.

——— ſpongioſa. Spunge Conferva; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones.

Cucubalus baccifera. Berry-bearing Chickweed; in hedges.

Fucus alatus. Winged Fucus; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones:
——— pinnatifidus. Jagged Fucus; on marine rocks and ſtones.
} at Llanfaethly.

Fucus digitatus. Fingered Fucus; ——— ſpiralis. Twiſted Fucus;
} on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones.

——— veſiculoſus γ divaricatus. Shrubby Fucus; on marine rocks and ſtones.

Geranium maritimum. Sea Crane's bill, on the ſhore.

Hypericum montanum; on Burdd Arthur.

Inula crithmoides. Golden Sampire; in ſea marſhes of a clay ſoil: at Llandwyn.

Lichen craſſus. Thick Lichen; on Lhanwellyn rocks near Newborough.

——— vulpinus. Gold Liverwort; on trunks and branches of trees, on branches of heath, and on mountainous heaths.

Lycopodium ſelaginoides. Prickly Club moſs; on mountainous paſtures and on heaths: at Towyn Trewan.

Lyſimachia thyrſiflora. Tufted or round leaved yellow Looſeſtrife; in marſhes and on banks of rivers: in Nynnechytiked.

Melica cærulea. Purple Melic graſs; among the copper works on Mount Parys.

Ononis inermis ß repens. Creeping Reſtharrow; on ſea ſhores: between Newborough and Abermenai ferry.

Oſmunda regalis. Flowering Fern or Oſmund Royal; in clefts of the rocks.

Polypodium aculeatum α and ß. Prickly Polypody; in woody and ſhady places: at Beaumaris.

Pulmonaria maritima. Sea Bugloſs; on ſandy ſea ſhores: near Trefarthen.

Santolina maritima. Sea Cudweed or Cottonweed: on the ſand near Abermenai ferry, plentifully.

Smyrnium Oluſatrum. Alexanders; on the rocks about Preſtholm iſland near Beaumaris, plentifully.

Ulva flaveſcens. Yellowiſh Laver; on marine rocks and ſtones.

——— pavonia. Turkey feather; on ſubmarine rocks and ſtones.

DENBIGH-

DENBIGHSHIRE.

ON this ſide of the river Conway is the county of Denbigh, called by the Engliſh Denbighſhire, by the Britans Sire Denbigh, retiring inland from the ſea, and running eaſt to the river Dee. The ſea bounds good part of it on the north, and Flint, Merioneth and Montgomeryſhires on the weſt, Cheſhire and Shropſhire on the eaſt. The weſtern parts are barren, the middle, which ſubſides in a vale, extremely fruitful. Nature has been unkind to the eaſtern part immediately ſucceeding the vale, but much more favourable to that on the Dee.

The weſt part, except on the ſea, where it is pleaſanter [a], is but thinly inhabited, and riſes in ſmooth bare mountains, whoſe hungry nature on their ſlopes however here, as in other parts of Wales, the diligence and ſkill of cultivation begins to conquer. For paring off the upper ſurface with a broad iron inſtrument made on purpoſe in turfs or ſods, they pile them up ingeniouſly in heaps, and burn them to aſhes, which being ſprinkled over the lands ſo pared, ſo improves them that they produce greater quantities of rye than could be conceived. Nor is this method of burning turf a new one, but very antient, as may be ſeen in Virgil [b] and Horace [c]. Among theſe mountains is a place commonly called Cerig y Drudion, or the Druids Stones, and ſome little pillars at Y-voellas, inſcribed with ſtrange characters, which ſome ſuppoſe Druidical; and not far from Clocainog is this inſcription on a ſtone:

AMILIN TOVISATOC.

On a rock overhanging the valley where the mountains begin to leſſen ſtands Denbigh, whoſe antient Britiſh name was Cled Fryn yn Ros, or the craggy hill in Rhos, for ſo they called that part of the county given by Edward I. with other lands, to David the brother of Llewellen: but he, being ſoon after attainted of treaſon, and executed, Edward gave it to Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, who fortified it with a ſtrong wall of no great extent, and a caſtle with many towers on the ſouth ſide, in the well of which his only ſon being accidentally drowned, the afflicted parent deſiſted from his work before he had laid on the roof. Upon his death the town, with the reſt of the eſtate, fell by his ſurviving daughter Alice to the houſe of Lancaſter, from whom, when that family was totally reduced, it came by the bounty of Edward II. to Hugh Spenſer, and from thence, by covenant with Edward III. to R. Mortimer. For his arms are over the principal gate. But upon his execution it came to William Montacute, earl of Saliſbury, and preſently after to the Mortimers, and by them to the houſe of York. Hiſtory ſays that it ſuffered greatly from the Lancaſtrians out of hatred to Edward IV. who was of the houſe of York. From that time, whether from a diſlike taken by the inhabitants to its ſteep ſituation, which made carriage inconvenient, or from want of water, they gradually abandoned it in ſuch a manner that this old town is now quite deſerted, and a new one much larger has ariſen below the rock, and is now became ſo populous that, the church not being capable of containing the number of inhabitants, they have begun a new one in the old town, partly at the charge of their lord Robert earl of Leiceſter, and partly with money collected throughout England. Queen Elizabeth in 1566 created this Robert baron of Denbigh. There is no barony in England that has more noble perſonages holding of it.

Dyffryn Clwyd.

We come now to the heart of the county, where nature having removed the hills on every ſide, to ſhew what ſhe could do in this rugged country, has formed a moſt beautiful vale, reaching 17 miles from ſouth to north, and about five in breadth, open only to the ſea and the clearing north winds, confined on every other ſide by high mountains, which on the eaſt have a kind of battlements, the wonderful contrivance of nature having given their ſummits that form. Among them the higheſt is Moil-enlli, on whoſe top I ſaw a fortification and a clear ſpring. This vale is bleſt with health, fertility, and pleaſure. The inhabitants are of a healthy complexion, have perfect features [d], clear eyeſight, and live to a great age. The vale itſelf charms the view with the variety of verdant meads, yellow cornfields, number of villages and churches. The river Cluyd, increaſed by the ſtreams that fall into it from every ſide, runs through the middle of the vale from its ſource, whence it was antiently called Strat Cluyd (for Marianus mentions a king of the Strat-Clud-wallans, and at preſent Diffryn Cluid, q. d. the Vale of Cluid, in which ſome have reported the Britans that came from Scotland founded a kingdom after driving out the Saxons [e]. On the eaſt bank of the Cluid, in the ſouth ſide of the vale, ſtands Ruthin, as the Engliſh, or as the Britans call it Ruthun, the largeſt market town in the vale, populous and well built, and famous not long ſince for a large handſome caſtle, capable of lodging a numerous family. This, together with the town, was built by Roger [f] Grey by licence from the king, the biſhop of St. Aſaph, and the rector of Lhanruth, in which pariſh it is. Edward I. beſtowed on him almoſt the whole vale for his ſervices againſt the Welſh: and it was the reſidence of his poſterity, who bore the title of earls of Kent, till Richard Grey, earl of Kent, and lord of Ruthin, having no children, without regard to his brother Henry, ſold this eſtate to Henry VII. From that time the caſtle being unroofed fell to decay.

Moel Enlli.

Clwyd.

Yſtrad Clwyd.

Ruthin.

[a] lætior, more fruitful. [b] Georg. I. 84. [c]
[d] capitum firma ſyncritas, ſound and of a firm conſtitution. H. heads of a ſound conſtitution. G.
[e] See before in Caernarvonſhire.
[f] Reginald. Dugd. I. 712. who ſays the king gave him the caſtle; as if it was built before.

Queen Elizabeth's bounty lately beſtowed it on Ambroſe earl of Warwick with fine revenues in the vales.

Yale. As one aſcends out of the vale eaſt opens to the view Yale, a ſmall tract of mountainous country, and in compariſon of the country below and around it very high, inſomuch that it receives no river from other quarters, but diſcharges ſeveral from itſelf. From this higher ſituation it is rough, cold, and every way expoſed to winds. Whether it has its name from the little river Alen, which riſes here and more than once hides itſelf as it were burrowing, I know not. Theſe mountains abound with cattle, ſheep, and goats; the vallies in ſome places yield plenty of wheat, eſpecially in the eaſt on this ſide the Alen: but the weſt part is leſs fruitful, and in many places heathy and barren. It has nothing remarkable but a little ruined monaſtery moſt delightfully and pleaſantly ſituated among woody hills, built in the form of a croſs, whence it is called Vale Crucis, in Britiſh Lhane Gweſt.

Alen r.

Vale Crucis or Llan Egwęſt.

From hence farther eaſt the diſtrict called in Britiſh Mailor Cymraig, q. d. Welſh Mailor, in Engliſh Bromfield, extends quite to the Dee, a pleaſant tract abounding with lead, eſpecially near Moinglath, a little village which takes its name from the mines. Here we ſee Wrexham, called by the Saxons Writtlesham, remarkable for its very elegant ſteeple, and for its organ: and near it is Leon caſtle, probably ſo called from the Legio XX. Victrix ſtationed a little higher up on the other ſide the Dee, now commonly called Holt, and ſuppoſed to have been repaired of late by William Stanley, and formerly by John earl of Warren, who being left guardian to Madoc a Britiſh prince, wronged his ward of this ſmall province and that of Yale. From the earl of Warren it came to the Fitz Alans earls of Arundel, and from them to William Beauchamp baron Abergavenny, and afterwards to William Stanley, who, being beheaded, this and his other eſtates were forfeited to the crown.

Mailor Cymraig or Bromfield.

Moinglath.

Wrexham.

Leon caſtle.

Holt.

South of Bromfield lies Chirke land, in Britiſh Gwain, very mountainous but diſtinguiſhed by two caſtles; Chirk, which gave it its name, built by Roger Mortimer, and Caſtle Dinas Bran on the higheſt point of a very lofty mountain, of which only the walls remain. The common people believe this laſt to have been built by Brennus the Gauliſh general, and called after him: others explain it the caſtle of the royal palace, for Brenn in Britiſh ſignifies a king; whence perhaps that moſt potent king of the Gauls and Britans was called Brennus by way of eminence. But others I think with greater probability derive its name from its high ſituation on a high hill, which the Britans call Bryn. In Henry III's time it was the ſeat of Griffin ap Madoc, who ſiding with the Engliſh againſt the Welſh uſed to ſhut himſelf up here: but on his death Roger Mortimer, who was left guardian to his ſon Llewellin, ſeized upon Chirk for himſelf, as John earl of Warren before-mentioned did on Bromfeld.

Chirk or Gwain.

Chirk caſtle.

Caſtle Dinas Bran.

Upon the decline of the Welſh affairs by their quarrels among themſelves and the inroads of the Engliſh the earls of Cheſter, Warren, the Mortimers, Lacy and the Greys already mentioned were the firſt Normans who gradually reduced this little province to their obedience, and left the poſſeſſion of it to their poſterity. Nor was it made a county before the time of Henry VIII. when Radnor, Brecknock, and Montgomery were alſo made counties by act of parliament. 27 H. 8.

ADDITIONS.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Denbigh is 118 miles in circumference, 31 from east to west and 17 from north to south, contains about 410,000 acres, is divided into twelve hundreds, has four market towns, one borough, and 57 parishes. The air is good and sharp, the soil hilly interspersed with fruitful vallies particularly that of Clwyd.

Mr. Lluyd observes of Kerrig y Druidion, it seems highly probable that this place was so derived from the Druids though not altogether unquestionable: for that the word Druidion signifies Druids is for what he could learn only presumed from its affinity with the Latin Druidæ, and because we know not any other signification of it. In the British Lexicon we find no other word than Derwydhon for Druids used by Lhywarch Brydydh y Moch, who wrote A. D. 1240, and Kyndhelw Brydydh mawr in 1250, which may be fitly rendered in Latin Quercetani, Derw signifying in Welsh oak trees, which agreeing in sound with the Greek, must occasion Pliny[a], who was better acquainted with the language than with the Celtic or British, to conjecture that Druides was originally a Greek name. The singular of Derwydhon is Derwydh, which the Romans could not write more truly than Deruida, whereof Druida seems only an easier variation. The word Druidion might likewise vary only in dialect from Derwydhon, and so the name of this place is rightly interpreted by our countrymen and others Druid stones; but which stones they were that have been called thus is a question which Mr. Lluyd could not be thoroughly satisfied in though he had made some inquiry. The most remarkable stone monuments remaining in the parish in his time were two of the kind called Kistieu maen or stone chests, whereof several have been mentioned in other counties. These he had not seen himself, but had the following account of them in a letter from an ingenious gentleman of that neighbourhood. They are two solitary prisons, generally supposed to have been used in the time of the Druids. They were placed about a furlong from each other, and were such huts that each prison could contain but one single person. One was called Karchar Kynrik Rwth or the prison of Kynrik Rwth. The other was known by no particular name but that of Kistvaen or Stone chest, which indeed was common to both, and seemed to be lately given them because they were somewhat in form of large stone chests, from which they chiefly differed in their entrance or opening. They stood north and south, and were each composed of seven large stones. [I was told the first was a single stone on five others and opposite to the latter.] Of these four being above six feet long and about three broad were placed like the square tunnel of a chimney, a 5th not so long but of the same breadth pitched firmly at the south end: at the north end was the 6th stone closing and guarding the entrance, but as it was necessary to remove it when the prisoner was put in or released, it was not heavy enough to be a sufficient guard; and on the top lay a 7th larger stone, removed towards the north to keep in the door stone. Mr. Lluyd himself contradicts the idea of these being prisons, and adds, that one of them got its name from the application of it to that use by a much later tyrant who shut up there somebody that had affronted him[b]. These may have been surrounded by circles of stones long since removed[c].

The light that has been thrown upon the Druid religion and monuments by Mr. Borlase and other writers in this present century, supersedes all the incorrect conjectures of the last with which the late editor of the Britannia has crouded his Welsh pages. The only stone monuments remaining at Kerig y Druidion were the two Kistvaens close to the road side about two or three miles from the village and really in Llan ufydd parish in Tir abbot ucha. A cottage or farm a mile from Careg Duddwis, but in its parish in Prys townships, is called Aelwyd Brys or the hearth . It is not improbable that this neighbourhood might have formed a capital assemblage of Druidism. Mr. Pennant[d] from drawings among the Sebright MSS. describes one of them as consisting of one stone at top placed inclining to the north 10 feet long, supported by a stone on each side about seven feet long and near two feet and an half broad. Under one end was a stone three feet long, at the other one two feet long. The hollow beneath was only seven feet long by two feet and an half broad, and only two feet and an half high, which sufficiently shews these were sepulchral monuments. Round this was a circle of stones about 40 paces diameter, formed perhaps to keep people off from the remains of some mighty chief. Some petty tyrant of the neighbourhood in succeeding ages might cram those who offended him into these cavities, but even this is too unlikely to have any thing but vulgar error for its foundation. The other kistvaen was nearly similar to the first, but as no mention is made of a circle of stones round it they were probably taken away before Mr. Lluyd visited the place.

Leland[e] says "Llanvair Vadelen parish is called "in Welsh Kereg Edridion."

At Giler in this parish was born that upright and able judge Robert Price, esq; baron of the Exchequer, and finally justice of the Common Pleas. His famous speech in the House of Commons against the grant of the great Welsh lordships to the earl of Portland, will ever testify his love to his country. His speedy promotion by king William does equal honour to his majesty and Mr. Price[f]. In the middle of the village is an almshouse erected by the baron 1716, for six poor men, whose badge is a lion rampant, and round him Rhodh Duw a Barwn Prys. Giler.

[a] Nat. Hist. XVI. 44.
[b] MS. pen. Thomas Price of Llan Vylhin, esq.
[c] Lluyd, V. 57.
[d] Wales, II. 73,
[e] Ib. 74, 75.

An inſcription in Welſh and Engliſh is fixed over the front of the houſe.

Voelas. The inſcription at Voelas may have been miſtaken for Druidical characters in Mr. Camden's time, when the different rude hands uſed in inſcriptions were not ſo well underſtood as now. It is on a hard ſquariſh ſtone or column about 10 feet long. I have copied it Pl. XX. fig. 1. from biſhop Gibſon fig. 1. as read and explained by Mr. Griffith Jones, ſchool-maſter of Llanrwſt.

Ego Joh de Tin i Dyleu Kuheli leuav
Fford gudve Braech i Koed Emris
Leweli op priceps hic hu thus rendered in modern orthography:

Ego Johannes de Ty'n y Dyleu Gwydhelen levaf
[ar] ffordd gyddfau braich y coed Emris
Levelinus op[timus] *princeps hic hu*matur.

q. d. "I John of the houſe of Dylen Gwydhelen, &c. on the road of Ambroſe hill, erected this monument to the memory of the excellent prince Lhewelin."

By the mention of Dolyweddhelen where the firſt Llewelyn was born, and by the diſtance of this houſe from Conwy where he was buried, I ſhould preſume it was a memorial or cenotaph erected to him by ſome one of the ſame family. I ſee not any probability of its belonging to other princes of that name. Mr. Lluyd confeſſes the inſcription to be very obſcure. It is part Latin, part Welſh; and if meant of any of the three princes of Wales, muſt intend Llewelyn ap Sitſilt, who was ſlain, it is not ſaid where, by Howel and Meredyth ſons of Edwyn A. D. 1021, but where buried is not ſaid.

But as it is allowed that Llewellyn ap Jorwerth was buried at Conwy, and Llewellyn ap Gryfydh, laſt of the name, moſt probably near Bualht, where he was ſlain, the concluſion of the inſcription is too imperfectly made out to authorize any conjectures of this ſort.

I have ſubjoined in the ſame plate another copy fig. 2. taken 1772 with great accuracy by Mr. Meredith Hughes an excellent penman, with which I was favoured by the honourable Daines Barrington, and which ſeems materially if not totally different from the former.

The river Conway divides Denbighſhire from Caernarvonſhire, and is croſſed by ferry at Talacavan. In the road thence to Llanrwſt are two cataracts called Rhaiadr Gigyfran or the Raven fall. At Maynan three miles higher up the river, in a valley at the foot of vaſt craggs covered with fern and ſhort graſs, ſtood an abbey, transferred by Edward I. from Conwy, where Llewellyn ap Jorwerth prince of Wales founded it for Ciſtercians 1285. It is now a private houſe built with the old materials, and ſhews no remains of antiquity [g].

Maynan.

Llanrwſt. Llanrwſt is pleaſantly ſeated in a vale divided by the river Conwy, which overflows and enriches the meads on both ſides. This town ſmall and ill-built is famous for harp makers, and has a good corn market. The church is a handſome building with ſome curious carving ſaid to have been brought from the neighbouring abbey; and a large chapel, ſuppoſed the work of Inigo Jones, built 1634, belonging to the Wynnes of Gwedir, who have many monuments here; ſome of them capital engravings of portraits on braſs by Vaughan and Crew, and a long detail of the family on a marble tablet. Here is alſo preſerved the ſtone coffin of Llewelyn the Great brought from Conwy abbey. Inigo Jones has been ſuppoſed a native of this place. About two miles beyond Llanwrſt is the village of Trefriw where Llewelyn had a palace, whoſe hewn ſtones have been found in ploughing a field called Gardd y Nevodd. He alſo built the church for the eaſe of his princeſs [h]. Trefr

Upper Gwedir houſe, begun 1604, and chiefly built of timber, was pulled down by the late duke of Ancaſter, who inherited the eſtates of this antient family by marriage of his grandfather Robert marquis of Lindſey with Mary daughter of ſir Richard Wynne 1678. It was a ſort of ſummer-houſe, the walls covered with inſcriptions: the porch and fine chapel are ſtill ſtanding, ſuppoſed to be deſigned by Inigo Jones in his firſt manner before he went to Italy and in a ſingular ſtyle. To him is alſo aſcribed the bridge here over the Conwy, built 1636 of three arches, the centre one 61 feet wide, and 24 high at low water; the others 30 feet and an half wide and 15 high; the angle of the piers 10 feet, the whole bridge 173 feet long and 15 wide. On the centre of the parapet are the Wynne arms and the plume of feathers. A perſon ſtanding at one centre may perceive the whole fabric ſhake by a blow given at the other centre. One of the two ſide arches has been rebuilt 1703. Gwe

Lower Gwedir houſe is built round a greater and leſſer court. Over the gate is the date 1558 with J. W. initials of John Wynne ap Meredydd, grandfather of the famous ſir John author of the memoirs of the family publiſhed by Mr. Barrington 1770, 12mo. The place takes its name from Gwaed-dir, the bloody land, from the battle fought here A. D. 610 or 952 [i].

In Llanrwſt pariſh a very antient braſs ſhield was lately found four feet under ground in a turbary near Capel Kerrig, and exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries 1784.

South of Llanrwſt is Gwytherin, which had an antient nunnery [k], where St. Winifrid is ſaid to have been buried; and in the church-yard they ſhew four rude upright ſtones, on one of which ſhaped like a priſm is the rude inſcription, Pl. XIX. fig. 18. The box in which her reliques were kept before their removal to Shrewſbury is ſhewn in the church, but her chapel on the ſouth ſide is totally deſtroyed [l]. Gwyth

"There is a hill with paſture in Guitherine pariſh "in Denbigh lande called Penbere, i. e. caput ſepul-"chri, where a ſtone like a flat ſtone of a grave "lyith, and one as it is ſaid lyeth under it buried [m]."

The moor at the bottom of Hiraithog mountains through Llyn Abatrain was drained becauſe a man was drowned in it. Pont Abatrain is a ſtone bridge over Cluyd. On a hill to the river is a camp, double trenched, with ſtone walls called Kefn mawr, q. d. Great ridge. The Berwyn mountains at diſtance to the river, and this part of the county is chiefly mountainous covered with heath. In Llocaenog pariſh on a dreary heath three miles from Ruthin, and a mile out of the road are two ſtones at each end of a grave, four feet aſunder, the ſhorteſt three feet and an half high, the other ſix and an half, and out of its upright on the broadeſt face of which (being two feet and an half) are theſe letters two inches long in lines of 10 inches each. See Pl. XX. fig. 3. Mr. Lluyd reads it Aemilini Toviſag, and explains it Aemilianus Dux. He ſuppoſes Aemilinus ſuch a corruption as Aemilimus in Reineſius, p. 228. where [n] are A's of the ſame form as here, and Toviſag or Llocaen

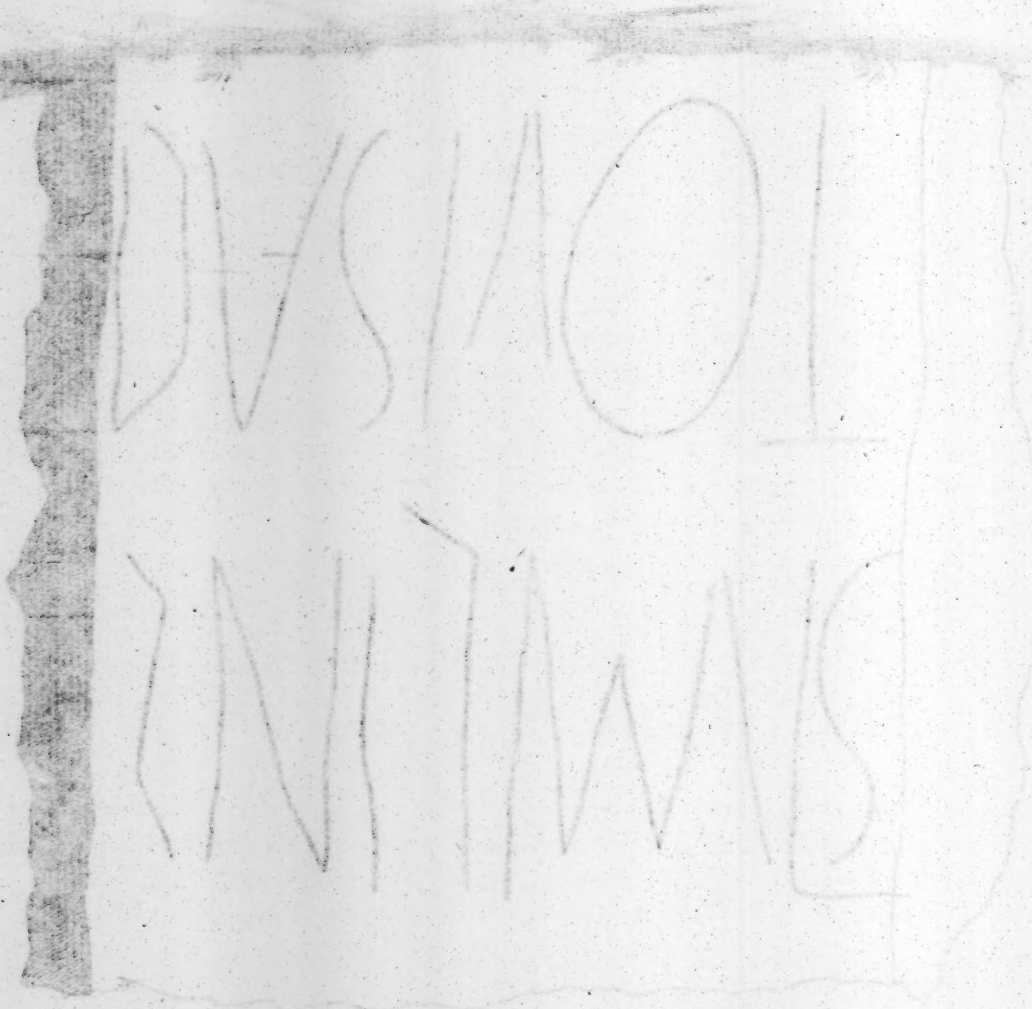
[g] Penn. II. 145. 315.
[h] Ib. 146.
[i] Ib. 139, 140.
[k] Tan. 708.
[l] Penn. II. 46—49.
[m] Lel. V. 62.
[n] P. 560.

Toviſaci



An inſcription in Welſh and Engliſh is fixed over the front of the houſe.

Vedas. The inſcription at Vedas may have been miſtaken for Druidical characters in Mr. Camden's time, when the different rude hands uſed in inſcriptions were not ſo well underſtood as now. It is on a rude ſquarish ſtone or column about ſix feet long. I have copied it Pl. XX. fig. 1. from biſhop Gibſon's fig. 1. as read and explained by Mr. Griffith Jones, ſchoolmaſter of Llanrwſt.

Ego Ieh de Tiur Dylen Kuben Ewre
Dfed gudei Braeck i Reed Emre Lewch ap gerraps ei he thus read in modern orthography

Ego Johannes de Tŵr y Dylan Cwppill ap Ieuan
Tudur gwedy dfod brwydr yrodd Emrys Lewelinus (primus) princeps hic primus.

q. d. "I John of the houſe of Dylen Gwynllian, &c. on the road of Ambroſe hill, erected this monument to the memory of the excellent prince Llewellin."

By the mention of Dolgynwallon where the firſt Llewelyn was born, and by the diſtance of this houſe from Conway where he was buried, I ſhould preſume it was a memorial or cenotaph erected to one by the name of the ſame family. I ſee not any probability of its belonging to other princes of that name. Mr. Lhuyd confeſſes the inſcription to be very obſcure. It is part Latin, part Welſh, and if meant of any of the three princes of Wales, named Llewelyn ap Sitsilt, who was ſlain, it is not ſaid where, by Howel and Meredyth ſons of Edwyn A. D. 1021, but where buried is not ſaid.

But as it is allowed that Llewellyn ap Iorwerth was buried at Conwy, and Llewellyn ap Gryfydd, laſt of the name, moſt probably near Builth where he was ſlain, the concluſion of the inſcription is too imperfectly made out to authorize any conjectures of this ſort.

I have ſubjoined in the ſame plate another copy, fig. 2. taken 1772 with great accuracy by Mr. Meredith Hughes an excellent penman, with which I was favoured by the honourable Daines Barrington, and which ſeems materially if not totally different from the former.

The river Conway divides Denbighſhire from Caernarvonſhire, and is croſſed by ferry at Tal-ucavan. In the road thence to Llanrwſt are two cataracts called Rhaiadr Gwyfrau or the Raven fall. At Maynan three miles higher up the river, in a valley at the foot of vaſt craggs covered with fern and ſhort graſs, ſtood an abbey, tranſferred by Edward I. from Conwy, where Llewellyn ap Jorwerth prince of Wales founded it for Ciſtercians 1185. It is now a private houſe built with the old materials, and ſhews no remains of antiquity [a].

Maynan.

Llanrwſt. Llanrwſt is pleaſantly ſeated in a vale divided by the river Conwy, which overflows and enriches the meads on both ſides. This town ſmall and ill-built is famous for harp makers, and has a good corn market. The church is a handſome building with ſome curious carving ſaid to have been brought from the neighbouring abbey; and a large chapel, ſuppoſed the work of Inigo Jones, built 1634, belonging to the Wynnes of Gwedir, who have many monuments here; ſome of them capital engravings of portraits on braſs by Vaughan and Crew, and a long detail of the family on a marble tablet. Here is alſo preſerved the ſtone coffin of Llewelyn the Great

[a] Penn. II. 145. 315.
[b] Penn. II. 46—49.
[c] Ib. 146.
[d] Leſ. V. 62.

brought from Conwy abbey. Inigo Jones ſuppoſed a native of this place. About [illegible] beyond Llanrwſt is the village of Trefgarn. Llewelyn had a palace, whoſe [illegible] found in ploughing a field called Garde [illegible] He alſo built the church for the eaſe of his Upper Gwedir houſe, begun 1604, and [illegible] of timber, was pulled down by the late [illegible] caſtle, who inherited the eſtates of this [illegible] by marriage of his grandfather Robert [illegible] Lindſey with Mary daughter of Sir Rich. [illegible] 1628. It was a fort of ſummer houſe, [illegible] vered with inſcriptions: the porch and [illegible] ſtill ſtanding, ſuppoſed to be done by [illegible] in his firſt manner before he went to [illegible] Engliſh ſtyle. To him is alſo aſcribed [illegible] however the Conwy, built 1636 of [illegible] the caſtle was 60 feet wide, and [illegible] deep; the other 50 feet and an half [illegible] high; the angle of the ſides to [illegible] bridge 171 feet long and 13 wide. [illegible] of the parapet are the Wynne arms and [illegible] of feathers. A perſon ſtanding [illegible] receive the whole ſalute diſcharged [illegible] the other end. One of the two [illegible] been robbed 1703.

James Gwedir houſe is built round a [illegible] leſſer court. Over the gate is the date [illegible] W. Initials of John Wynne ap Meredith [illegible] father of the famous Sir John Wynne, author of the Hiſtory of the Gwydir family, published by Sir Barrington [illegible]

The place takes its name from Gwedir [illegible] land, from the battle fought here A. D. [illegible]

In Llanrwſt parish a very curious [illegible] lately found four feet under ground in [illegible] Capel Ior[illegible], and exhibited to the [illegible] ſquaries 178[illegible].

South of Llanrwſt is Gwydyr, which [illegible] ſent nunnery [illegible], where St. Winifrid [illegible] been buried; and in the churchyard [illegible] rude upright ſtones, on one of which [illegible] prim is the rude inſcription, Pl. XIX. [illegible] box in which her reliques were kept [illegible] moval to Shrewſbury is ſhewn in the [illegible] chapel on the ſouth ſide is totally defa[illegible]

"There is a hill with paſture in Gwaſt [illegible] "in Denbigh lande called Perbere, i. e. [illegible] "chri, where a ſtone like a flat ſtone [illegible] "lyith, and one as it is ſaid lyeth under it buri[illegible]

The moor at the bottom of Hirdrefor [illegible] through Llyn Abatrain was drained before [illegible] was drowned in it. Pont Abatrain is a ſtone [illegible] over Clwyd. On a hill to the river is a camp [illegible] trenched, with ſtone walls called Kefn [illegible] Crwst ridge. The Berwyn mountains [illegible] the river, and this part of the county is chiefly [illegible] tainous covered with heath. In Glaſcwm [illegible] a dreary heath three miles from Ruthin, [illegible] out of the road are two ſtones at each [illegible] grave, four feet aſunder, the ſhorteſt [illegible] an half high, the other ſix and an half, [illegible] upright on the broadeſt face of which [illegible] feet and an half) are theſe letters [illegible] long in lines of 10 inches each. See [illegible] Mr. Lhuyd reads it Aemilius Tertius, [illegible] Aemilianus Dux. He ſuppoſes Aemilius [illegible] ruption as Aemilianus in Reinelius, p. [illegible] are A's of the ſame form as here, [illegible]

[illegible] Ib. 159. 140.
[illegible] P. 560.
[illegible] Tan. 70.

Vol. II. pl. XX. p. 578.

Fig. 1. p. 378

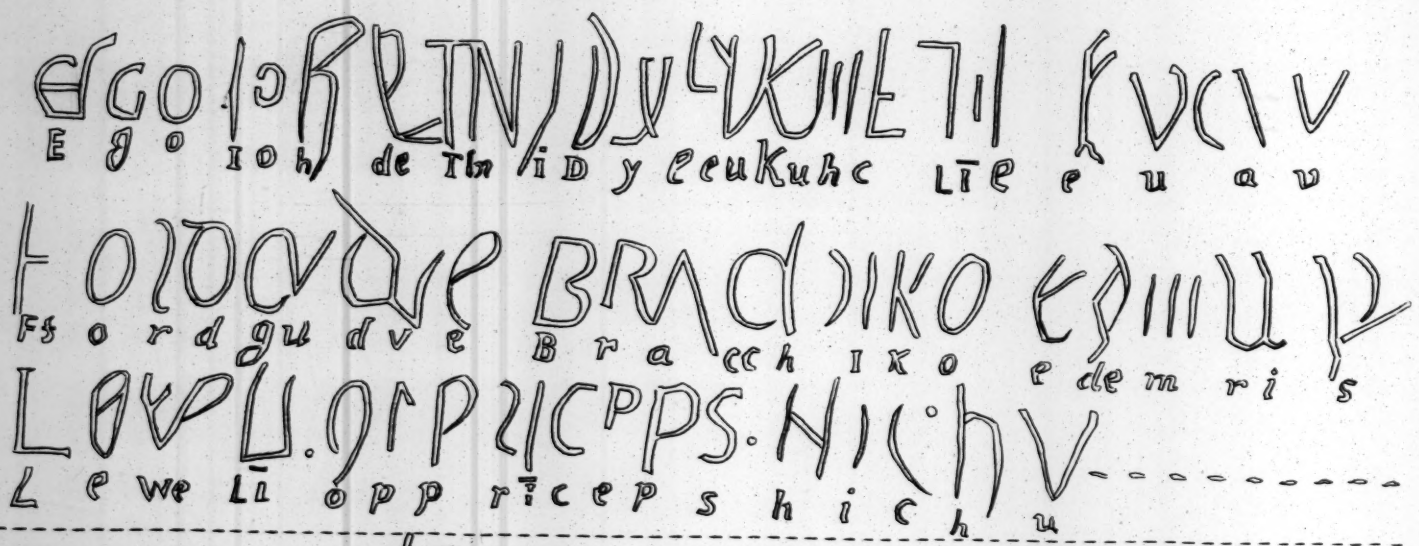

Fig. 2. p. 378.

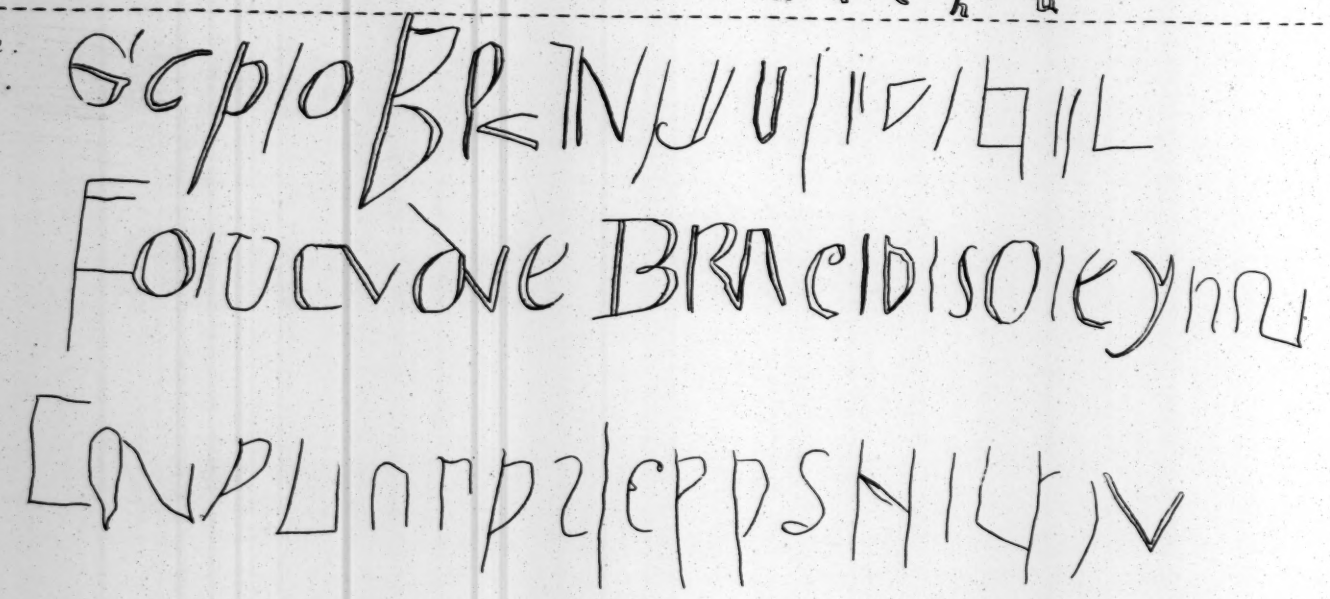

Fig. 4. p. 381.

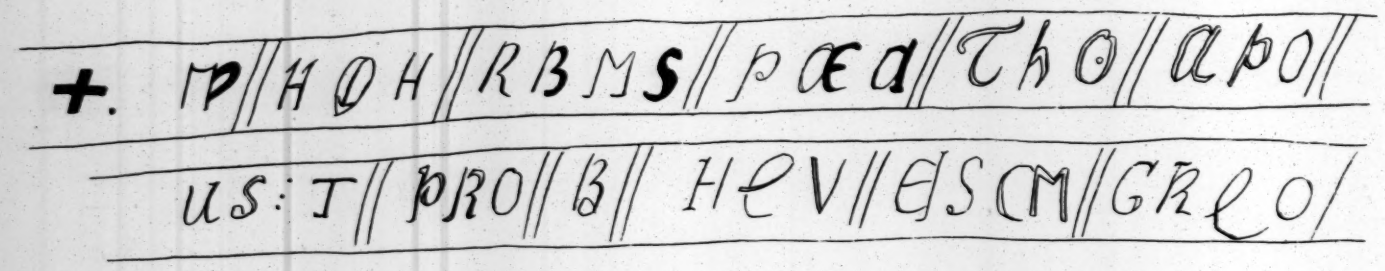

Fig. 3. p. 378.

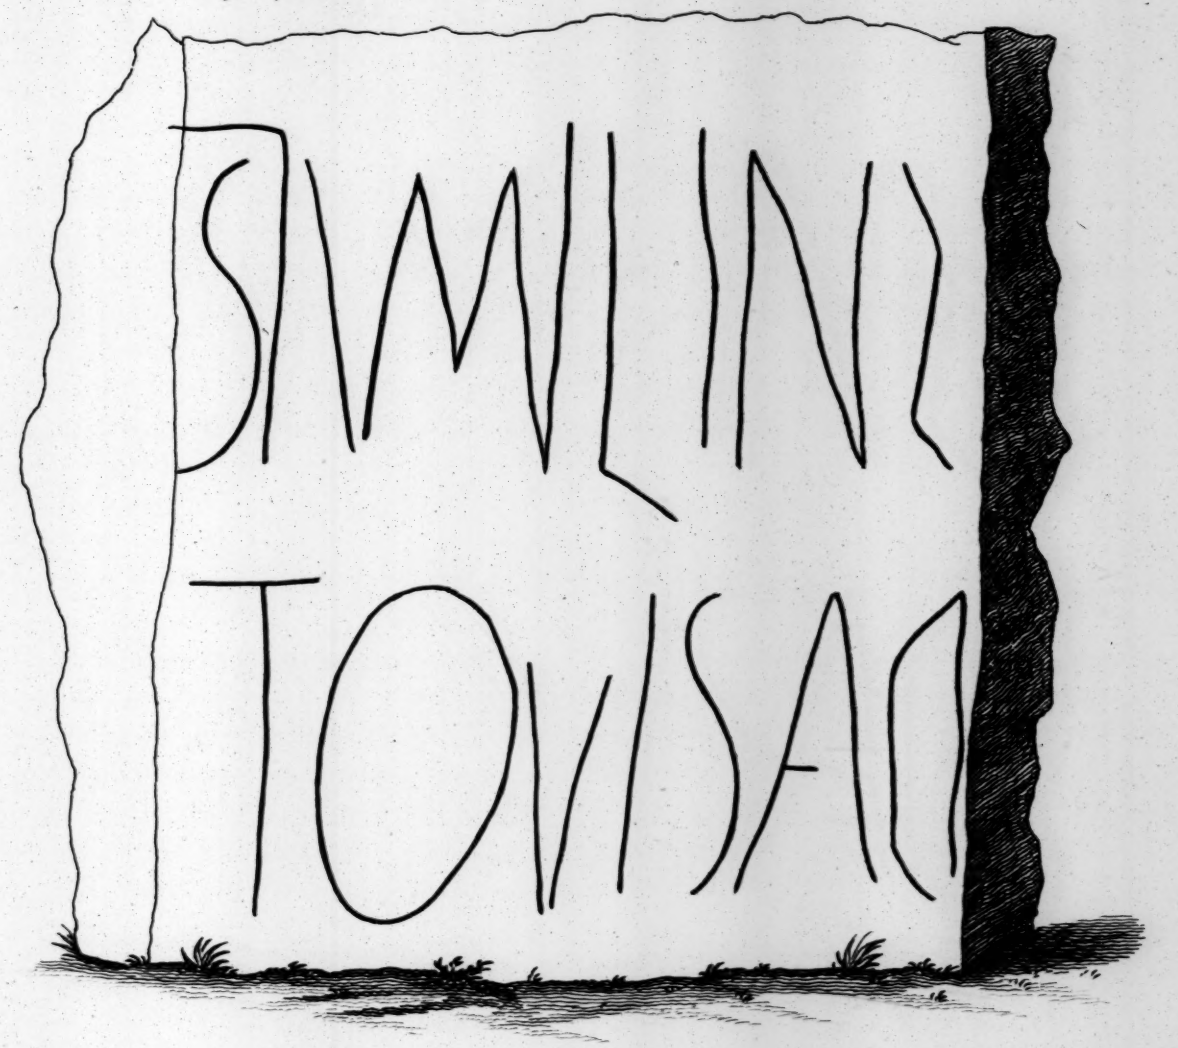

Cook fc.

Tovisaci to mean the same as Tywysog, a leader from Tywysso to lead, as dux from duco. Perhaps it should be read Aimilinus Tovisaci, Aimilinus son of Tovisacus as in other Welsh and Cornish inscriptions, and the sides of the stone denied room. The grave is in a hollow eight feet diameter, and just below it is the tumulus which Mr. Lluyd calls Krig Vryn, q. d. Barrow hill, but scarce to be noticed, and the spot where the stone lies he calls Bryn y Bedhen or the hill of graves. The hill below it is called Kevn Tyr, q. d. long backed field. A farmer's man who conducted me to the inscription assured me it had never been made out, and on my shewing him that Tovisoci was the same word as is put for the Prince of Wales in the Welsh Common Prayer, he could not help going out of his way at his return to tell another countryfellow that the gentleman had made out the reading, affirming it by a Welsh oath Man Diawl, by the Devil: to which the other replied with less transport, Ddary vo man Duw? Has he by God? Mr. Lluyd adds, that on the adjoining hills are several circles of stones, by which he seems to mean forts as before described. I could hear of no more: but his neighbouring Rhos y Gadva or Battlefield is well known. Among the hills to the left of Clocainog lies a vale called the heavenly, q. d. the aerial, from its depth between perpendicular hills which seem to make it inaccessible: the other sense better suiting the vale of Clwyd.

" After that king Edward had extinct the princes " of Wales, and had holely all Wales in his possession, " he much studied to the fortification especially of " North Wales and the marches of it, and by this " means Lacy, a man of great estimation about Ed- " ward I. had the land of Denby given onto him. " And I have hearde say that it was partly in consi- " deration that he married in the bloode of the " prince of North Wales. Lacy was a great lord " marcher afore in Wesland bearing the name " of Lacyes. This Lacy first began the town of " Denbigh, walling it, and making a castelle there. " Afore his time I cannot learn that there was other " town or castelle. The town and castelle standith " on a craggie hille, and is nere a mile in cumpace, " and ys pene orbiculari figura. The castelle lyeth " south on the town, and the town lyith to the " castelle by north and east. In the town be but two " gates, the escheker gate and the burges gate. In " the first was the lorde's court kept, and in the other " the burgesis. The escheker gate lyith plaine west, " and the burgeses gate plaine north. These two gates, " as the cumpace of the waulle goith be a great " flite shotte one from another, and between them " in the waulle is never a tower: and from the " escheker gate to the castell is never a tower, but " ther is a galery out of the castelle into it. Thes " towers be in the town waulle by east from the " burgess gate to the south-east side of the castle, first " a great quadrata toure caullid ----- secondly, the " countes tower being square, a goodly tower of " two loftes high. The third, the Goblin hole semi- " circulari figura, the leads of which in hominum " memoria, about an 80 yeares ago, were with tem- " pest carried away as farre almost as St. Marcelles " the paroche church, and so hath layen uncovered. " Ther be two round towers beside. There have " been divers rowes of streetes within the walled " town, of which the most part be now doone in " manor, and at this time ther be scant 80 howsolders. " There is a goodly and large chapel of ease in the " old town of St. Hilarie, wither yet most of the " new town come. I have not yet learned the cer- " tente how this wallid town decayed within, whether " it were by fire or for lak of water, whereof ther " is little or none, or for lak of good carriage into " the town, standing sumwhat high and on rokky " ground, I cannot telle. But the town of Denbigh, " now occupied and joining neere to the old town, " hath been totaly made of late tyme, and set much " more to commodite of carriage and water by many " welles in it. And the encrease of this was the " decay of the other. At this present tyme the new " is three tymes as byg as the old. It lyith al in one " street. The market place is fayre and large and well " buildid, and was pavid but of late yeeres. The " confluence to the market on Tuesday is exceeding " great. There is a chapel of ease in the midle of " the new town of St. Anne, built by one Fleming, " and still called Capel Fleming, and of good large- " ness. Ther was an almose house hard by this " chapel ex lapide quadrato made by the same " Fleming. But now it is desolate. The new town " of Denbigh was clere defacid with fier by hostilitie " 1468. Sum say that this was done by the earl of " Pembroke. The castel is a very large thing, and " hath many towres yn it, but the body of the work " was never finished. The gate house is a mervelus " strong and great piece of work, but the fastigia " of it were never finished, if they had it might have " been countid among the most memorable peaces of " work in England. It hath divers wards and diverse " portcullices. On the front of the gate is set the " image of Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, in his " stately long robes. Ther is another very high " toure and large in the castelle called the Red towre. " Sum say that the earl of Lincoln's son fell into the " castelle welle, and ther dyed, whereupon he never " passid to finish the castle. King Edward IV. was be- " sieged in the castle, and ther it was pactid bytwene " king Henry's men and him that he should with life " depart the realm never to return. If they had " taken king Edward ther debellatum fuisset. Ther " is every Sunday prayers made in St. Hilarii chapel " for Lacey and Percy. St. Marcelles, a mile off, was " paroch chirch to the ould town, and so it is to the " new *."

It seems plain by Leland's account that the town was within the castle walls, and that what passes now for the principal gate of the castle was what he calls the exchequer, or north gate of the town. The castle is delightfully situated, commanding a view over the vale of Clwyd to St. Asaph and the sea. The statue of the founder over the castle gate is inclosed in a frame of buds and stalks, and a figure of his wife Margaret, daughter of William Longespee, earl of Salisbury, in another on his left hand was lately pulled down. The walls are of prodigious thickness, and built on a sandy red rock. Large blocks are fallen down on the south and west. It was garrisoned for the king 1646, and surrendered to the parliament after a siege of three months. Buck says it was blown up at the Restoration. The principal strength, and the most towers seem to have been on the north and east, the south and west had a squarish area within, and the site of the hall. On the north is now a bowling green. A noble church was begun 1579 within the caſtle, with weſt and ſouth walls, and foundations of a double row of pillars. The well wherein young Lacy was drowned was in the red tower [p]. There is daily ſervice and weekly ſermons at the chapel of St. Hilary, built about the end of Elizabeth or beginning of James I. except once a month at Whitchurch, where all parochial duties are performed. The aſcent up the hill to the town is capable of being made a magnificent ſtreet if ſided with handſome buildings. At preſent it has but two tolerable houſes: on the top are the market houſe and town houſe, handſome and ſpacious, and two or three inns. The principal trade is in ſhoes and gloves, there being 27 ſhoemakers in the town [q]. It is a corporation governed by aldermen, bailiffs, and burgeſſes. St. Marcelle's at Whitchurch, a mile from Denbigh, the mother church, has monuments for ſir John Saluſbury of Lleweny, 1578, Humphry Lluyd, 1568, and Richard Middleton 1575, governor of Denbigh caſtle under Edward VI. Mary and Elizabeth, and father of ſir Hugh, who planned the New river. The White friars houſe was founded by John Saluſbury, who died 1289, or by John de Sunnimore, of Lleweni, who died 1289. The chapel is entire, converted into a ſtable [r]. Queen Elizabeth created Robert Dudley baron of Denbigh Sept. 28, 1566, the day before ſhe created him earl of Leiceſter, but the title expired with him [s]. 20 James I. 1622. William Fielding, viſcount Fielding, was created earl of Denbigh, and being ſlain in a ſkirmiſh near Birmingham 1643, was ſucceeded by his ſon Baſil [t], he 1675 by his nephew William, he 1685 by his ſon Baſil, he 1717 by his ſon William, and he 1755 by his ſon Baſil, ſixth and preſent earl.

* Lel. V. 60, 61.

church

Whitchurch.

Lleweni.

Lleweni is the ſeat of the hon. Thomas Fitz Maurice by purchaſe from ſir Robert Saluſbury Cotton, bart. of Cumbermere abbey, Cheſhire, who had it by marriage of his anceſtor ſir Robert Cotton with Heſter ſiſter to ſir John Saluſbury, laſt baronet of the name in the reign of Charles II. [u]

Henllan.

Gwaenynag, two miles from Denbigh, is the ſeat of the Myddletons. The church of Henllan ſtands in a bottom, its ſteeple on a hill. In Llanufydd pariſh are remains of a ſeat of Meredydd ap Meirchion, lord of Iſdulas, the chapel ſerving for a farm houſe [x].

"Some take the parochial itſelf of Denbigh for "a commote, and it lieth much by eaſt, and is a "quarter of a mile in compace or more. Some ſay "that afore the town of Denbigh was made it was "in Hughe Duleſſe commot, but ſince of late time it "hath been proved by ple to be a county and com- "mot of itſelf. There is no place in all theſe "commots where the people dwell vicatim, but all "ſparſim, ſaving at Denbigh town itſelf. And in "all theſe commotes was no howſe of priory or "abbay ſaving a place of white friars at the very eaſt "end of the town of Denbigh. There be divers "pariſh churches in each of theſe commots ſaving "that if Denbigh paroch be a commot there is but "one paroch church in it, and that is St. Marcelles, "a mile and more out of the town of Denbigh by "eaſt. There be two of eaſe beſides within the "town ſelf, whereof one is called St. Hilaries, very "large and well ſervid [y]."

"Commotes in Denbigh land. Iſc Duleſſe and "Hughe Duleſſe, both by north towards Llan Elwys "alias St. Aſaph, and both be named of Duleſſe a "brook there running. Iſc Aleth and Hughe Aleth lye "both flat weſt towards Conway, and hath the name "of Aleth river. Kinemarth cometh from within a "mile and half of Ruthin to the very town and "caſtle wall of Denbigh, and lyith moſt by ſouth- "ſouth-eaſt. It is the greateſt commot of all the "reſidew, and yet hath but two or three pariſhes. "Llan Rayhader, ſeven miles in length, and La- "nienis, that is not all in Kymmarth, but part in "Diffryn Cluid. It is called Llanienis becauſe the "church is ſet betwixt the rivers of Cluid and "Cluedog, as in an iſle [z]. In this commote be two "places, where by likelihood hath been ſome "caſtleletts or piles of defence. Lleſguenllean is the "one, and that is three quarters of a mile out of "Denbigh toward ſouth on the way to Ruthine on "the right hand. There appeareth no building "now, but great ditches and hilles overgrown with "buſhes. Place Amedowe is the other, wher is a "great dich and a hill, the name declareth it to "have been the place of an hermit. There is no- "thing now but a fox borowe. It is a mile and "more from Denbigh ſouth in the way to Ruthin on "the left hand [a]."

"Iſe Duleſſe is good for corn, as whete, rye, "peaſon and beanes, and hath very good fine paſture "and medow, and litle waſt ground in it, and good "wood, as in the leſſe park longing to Denbigh, and "in other places. There is a quarry of hard ſtone, "of a blackiſh or ſad marble colour, much uſed for "ovens and chimnies in this little park, called in "Welſh Gorſenodiog, and there alſo they dig out "ſlate ſtones to cover houſes. Hughe Duleſſe is leſs "fruitful than Iſe Duleſſe and more hilly and rocky. "There is plenty of wood in it, and the great park "by Denbigh, called in Welſch Moel evig, i. e. of "the bald hinds, is as I learned in this commot. "Other parks than the two aforeſaid be not in "Denbigh land. Iſe Aleth cometh to the very ſhore "of Rethelen bay. The north part of it as to the "ſhore is metely fruitful of corn. The ſouth part "hilly, good for goats, and hath little wood in "reſpect. Hughe Aleth cometh by weſt to Conway "river bank again the town of Conway, and there "meetith Corne Credine a piece of Caernarvonſhire "cis Conway river. In it be many bogs, rocky hills, "and mooriſh ground, and the ſoil is too cold to "have good corn, yet in diverſe places it beareth "oats and ſome rye. It hath in ſome places wood. "In theſe hills be kept nete [q. neats] horſe and "ſheep. This commot is the worſt part of all "Denbighland, and moſt barren [b]."

On the road to Ruthin, on an eſtate of lord Bagot, are to be ſeen ſome very fine cheſnut trees, one of which is 24 feet in circumference [c].

Llanruth.

In the little mother church of Llanruth near Ruthin are monuments for the family of Thelwall who have been ſettled in this county for many centuries from Thelwall in Cheſhire [d].

Llanrhaiadr.

Between Ruthin and Denbigh is Llanrhaiadr, a village in a vale with a handſome church, having a rich eaſt window of a chapel, wherein is painted the genealogy of Chriſt from Jeſſe, the prophets, &c. A. D. 1533, and ſome almſhouſes for eight women, founded by Mr. Jones of this place 1729. A quarter of a mile from the church is a cold bath which formerly had a chapel, the images of the 12 apoſtles remaining on the lower part, this is called Fynnon ddyffnog, or the deep well, q. if Leland's "Fonnon Dunoc, or St. Dunoc's well, a mighty ſpring "that maketh a broke running ſcant a mile [e]. There "is in the eaſt end of Llan Rhaidr pariſh very goodly "corn and graſſe, but by weſt ſouth weſt it is barren "and hilly, with bogges; wood enough in Raihaidr "pariſh. Ther is good corne as whete growne about "Llaneinys metely wooded. Llanvoir Vadelen is much "barren but for otes with grate labor: no wode but "turfe; full of hilles and bogges [f]."

[p] Dugd. Bar. I. 104. [q] Pennant II. 38. [r] Ib. [s] Dugd. Bar. II. 221. [t] Dugd. Bar. II. 441.
[u] Pennant II. 25. [x] Pennant II. 44, 45. [y] Lel. V. 57 [z] Ib.
[a] Ib. 59. [b] Ib. 58, 59. [c] Penn. II. 51 [d] Ib. 56, 57.

Ruthin is backed by fine ſheep downs, and has on the ſouth beautiful woods intermixed with corn fields. Before you enter the town from the downs you deſcend into Llanvwrog, a long village or hamlet, with a handſome ſtone bridge over the Clwyd, through whoſe overflowings we enter the narrow weſt gate of Ruthyn, which, coming down to the water's edge, makes a very pictureſque appearance. A broad ill-built ſtreet leads to the market houſe, near which is the town hall, another at right angles to the church, where is a monument and buſt of Mr. Camden's friend and patron Dean Goodman, and this inſcription:

Memoriæ Gabrielis Goodman ſacræ
Theologiæ doctoris & digniſſimi
Weſtmonaſterienſis decani qui in hoc oppido ſolo natali hoſpitale pauperibus ſublevandis ſcholamque pueris inſtituendis pie fundavit
Obiit in Chriſto 17 Junii
1601.

Alſo a braſs for his father a mercer here, who died 1560, aged 84, his mother 1583, 90. John ſon of Reginald Grey made this church (which is only a chapel to Llanrydd), collegiate for ſeven regulars 1310 [g]. Leland [h] mentions a cell of Bonhommes afterwards tranſlated into a pariſh church here, but biſhop Tanner could find nothing of it. He alſo mentions a houſe of White friars in the town, probably in the ſtreet called Prior's ſtreet [i]. The new gaol does honour to the architect [k]. The hoſpital is for 12 poor men, under a warden, who is a clergyman. Here is alſo a freeſchool, founded as well as the hoſpital by the Goodmans. The caſtle built as well as the town walls by Edward I. has been greatly reduced within theſe 40 years. The north ſide is levelled and made cornfields; the eaſt built upon in the town, the weſt or principal front is entire, the gate a ſquare tower with corbeil battlements, and in this and the ſouth ſide are five round towers. It was demoliſhed by order of parliament 1646. In 1640 it reverted to ſir Charles Longueville, heir to the title and eſtate of Grey. It now belongs to Richard Middleton, eſq; This is the moſt populous town in the vale, and has the greateſt market, and is five miles from Denbigh [k].

"Yale Lordſhip joineth to Bromfield on the fur-"ther ſide of Dee river, and there is no part on the "hither ſide of Dee. There are in it four or five "pariſhes [l]."

From the height above Rhiw Velen is a very extenſive proſpect of the hundred of Yale, hilly, fertile in graſs, abundant in cattle, but in this part dreary and deſtitute of hedges and woods [m]. Leland deſcribes its "whole ſoil as rokky, and by that not thoroughly "fruitful of corn, yet in divers places and vallies "betwixt the hills is meatly good corn, medow and "paſture, and eſpecially for corn about Llanegwiſt "and Llanarmon. In Yale is plenty of kine, ſheep, "and goats. There is metely good wood in the valley "places of Yale, and eſpecially at Llanegwiſt, alias "Vallis Crucis. The mountains of Yale ſtanding "north be baren of wood. The people there for "the moſt part burn turfs [n]."

"Llanegwyſte, alias Vallis crucis, ys yn Yale, half a "mile from Dee ripe; meatly good wood there [o]." Llanegweſt.

Two miles ſouth-weſt from Llangollen, following the courſe of the Dee, is the beautiful romantic abbey of Llan Egweſt, or Vale Crucis, at the foot of Bron Vawr, or Dur, a high hill in the townſhip of Maes yr Ychen. It is ſurrounded by hills and hanging woods, and a winding ruſhing river with good meadows in front. It was founded for Ciſtertians by Madoc ap Griffith Maelor, prince of Powis, about 1200, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Its revenue at the diſſolution was near £. 188. per annum [p]. Three ſucceſſive biſhops of St. Aſaph appropriated to it the tithes of Wrexham and Llangollen. Of this abbey, the fineſt remain in all North Wales, are ſtill ſtanding two gabels and the ſouth tranſept: the weſt front has a round arch door, half filled up, two of its mouldings adorned with a kind of nail head quatrefoil: over it in a round arch three lancets of two days, and over them a marigold window of 8, over which is a mutilated inſcription [q]: AD. ADAM. DMS. fecit hoc opus pace beata quieſcat. Amen: and underneath M. D.... The weſt gabel has three long lancets below from the ground, and over them two others, with a ſingular kind of pilaſter dropping from them. The north tranſept had an eaſt aile, at its north end an arch as of a tomb. The ſouth-eaſt pillars of the nave are ſtanding, but every thing to the north is down. The tradition of the country is that this monachlog, or monaſtery, as they call it by way of eminence, had a number of chapels governed by their own prieſts, and ſo diſtinguiſhed that the ſervice in one did not diſturb the other. The cloiſter adjoining to the ſouth, only a ſhell in Buck's time, is now a good farm houſe, with two doors and two windows (one with rich tracery), three rows of groined arches on ſingle round pillars ſupport the dormitory, now a loft approached by ſteps without that half block up the only window in it with tracery. One of the chimney pieces was a ſepulchral monument [r], with this broken inſcription: Hic jacet - - - - ARVRVEI. Fig. 4. Pl. XX. is another inſcription in the ruined walls communicated to Mr. Barrington by the rev. Mr. Price 1775. The abbey and farm are rented of Mr. Lloyd of Trevawr at £. 60. per annum.

About two fields to the north-weſt lie the baſe and part of the croſs that gave name to the valley, though Buck derives it from a piece of the true croſs given by the religious to Edward I. who in return granted [e] V. 63. [f] Ib. 57. [g] Tan. 708. [h] It. III. 96.

[i] V. 47. [k] Pennant II. 52. 56. [l] Lel. V. 35. [m] Pennant I. 377.
[n] Lel. V. 35. [o] Ib. [p] Tan. 707.
[q] Pennant I. 371. [r] Pennant, 372.

them ſeveral immunities. The baſe on the ſides of an eminence or tumulus whereon it once ſtood, is five feet three inches broad, 18 inches on every ſide from the ſocket of the ſhaft, which is two feet two inches in diameter, and the ſtone 13 inches thick. The ſhaft eight feet long, and about ſix in girt is now reſtored and erected on its pedeſtal, being only the upper half of the original pillar. It is flatted on two ſides, and ſomewhat tapering towards the end, Pl. XXI. fig. 1. The inſcription, as far as can be judged from its preſent ſituation, ſeems nearly in the ſtate as Mr. Lluyd copied it, whoſe copy is engraved Pl. XXII. from the Harleian MS. N° 3777, p. 57. His letter to Mr. Wanley on the ſubject is as follows:

" Rev. Sir, Swanſey, Sept. 14, 1696.

" I have here preſumed to trouble you with a copy of an inſcription, which amongſt ſeveral others I met with this ſummer in Wales. The monument whence I took it was a ſtately pillar of very hard ſtone of the ſame kind with our common mill-ſtones. 'Twas of a cylinder form, above 12 feet in height, ſeaven in circumference at the baſis where it was thickeſt, and about 6 near the top where ſmalleſt. The pedeſtal is a large ſtone 5 feet ſquare, and 15 inches thick, in the midſt whereof there's a round hole 12 inches deep, wherein the monument was placed. Within a foot of the top 'tis encompaſſed with a round band or girth reſembling a cord, from whence 'tis ſquare to the top, and each ſquare adorned with a ring reaching from this band to the top and meeting at the corners. It was erected on a ſmall mount which ſeems to have been caſt up for that purpoſe: but in the late civil wars or ſooner 'twas thrown down and broke in ſeveral pieces, whence the inſcription is ſo imperfect. The reaſon I trouble you with it is becauſe I remember amongſt Uſher's letters one from Dr. Langbaine to him[s] wherein he writes thus: " I have received both your inſcriptions; and ſhall ſend you my thoughts of that at Vale Crucis, but the other I give over for deſperate." Now this I ſend you is the inſcription at Vale Crucis, and I doubt not but the vale received its name from this very ſtone, though 'twas never intended for a croſs. The copy Dr. Langbaine received was perhaps taken before the ſtone was broke, and you may poſſibly meet with it among his papers and letters if you know where they are lodged, or direct to me to ſearch for it when I come to Oxford, which will be a month hence at furtheſt[t]. It would be legible enough were it intire. It begins Concenn filius Catelli, Cattel filius Brochmali, Brochmal filius Eliſeg, Eliſeg filius Guvillanc. Concenn itaque pronepos Eliſeg ædificavit hunc lapidem proavo ſuo Eliſeg, &c. 'Tis remarkable that adjoining to this monument there's a townſhip called Eglwſig, which name is corrupted doubtleſs from this Eliſeg, tho' our greateſt critics interpret it terra eccleſiaſtica. Thus in Caermardenſhire we find this epitaph:

Seratur[u] fidæi patrieque ſemper amator
Hic Paulinus jacet cultor pientiſſimus æqui.

The place where the ſtone lies is called Pant y Polion, i. e. the vale of ſtakes, corruptly for Pant Powlin, planities Paulini. I find other places denominated from perſons buried at or near them, whence I gather they were antiently men of great note who had inſcriptions on their tombs be they never ſo rude and homely; but I trouble you too much with trifles ſo ſhall add no more but that I am, worthy ſir, your moſt obedient and humble ſervant,

EDW. LHWYD."

Concenn filius Catteli, Catteli filius Brohcmail, Brohmail filius
Eliſeg, Eliſeg filius Guoillauc.
Concenn itaque pronepos Eliſeg edificavit hunc lapidem proavo ſuo Eliſeg; ipſe eſt Eliſeg qui necr
. at hereditatem povos. ipc .. mort.
ca[u]tem per viſſi .. ep . o. t. eſtate anglo
. . . . . in gladio ſuo parta in igne
. . . . . imque recituerit maneſc . p
. . . . . mdet benedictionem ſupe
. . . . . Eliſeg. + ipſe eſt Concenn
. . . . . tus . c . emeiunge. manu
. . . . . e ad regnum ſuum povos
. . . . . bani .. quod
. . . . . ais . ucaveſmec
. . . . . ein . . montem
. . . . . .
. . . . . il e . . . . . monarchiam
. . . . ail maximus britanniae
. . . nn paſcen . . . . . mavi . annan
. . . britua t . m filius Guarthi
. . . que bened . que bened. germanuſque
. . . peperit ei Se . ira filia Maximi
. . . gis qui occidit regis Romano rum + Conmarch pinxit hoc chirografum rege ſuo poſcente Concenn + Benedictio dñi in Con cenn in tota familia ejus et in tota regione povois uſque in . . . . . .

It commemorates Concenn, or Congen, grandſon of Brochmail Yſcithrog who was ſlain in the battle of Cheſter 607[x]. One of the ſeats of Concenn and Eliſeg was in this country. The habitation of this prince of Powis was probably Dinas Bran, at the head of the vale of Gliſſeg. Mr. Lluyd conjectures that this place took its name from the interment of Eliſeg. The tumulus was opened about three years ago, and found to contain ſome bones incloſed between flat ſtones[y]. The vale of Gliſſeg, long and narrow, is bounded on the right by aſtoniſhing precipices, divided into numberleſs parallel ſtrata of white limeſtone often giving birth to vaſt yew trees, and on the left by ſmooth verdant hills bordered by pretty woods. One of the principal rocks is honoured with the name of Craig Arthur: that at the end of the vale is called Craig y Forwyn, or the Maidens[z]. " Llangotlan village is on the ſouth " ſide, and Dinas Bran ſtandeth on a high hill " on the north ſide of Dee, three miles off[a]." Llangollen is a ſmall market town, four miles from Chirk caſtle, and 12 from Oſweſtry, in a moſt romantic ſituation. Here the Dee foaming over ſhelves of rock in a very wide and deep chanel is croſſed by an extraordinary ſtone bridge, one of the three beauties of Wales, of five large pointed arches, the largeſt not above 28 feet

[s] Mr. Langbaine's letter here referred to is printed among archbiſhop Uſher's, 1686, p. 551. After mentioning that he had taken copies of this and another antient Britiſh inſcription, he adds, " I may poſſibly hereafter give ſome better account than as yet I can of that of Vale Crucis. What character the antient Britons uſed, whether that which the Saxons after, as your lordſhip (if I remember well), is of opinion, or the ſame with your antient Iriſh (which I conceive to be not much different from the Saxons, and to which this monument of Concenn, &c. both as to the form of ſome letters, and the ligatures of them, ſeem to come nearer than to the Saxon), I dare not take upon me to determine.

[t] No ſuch letter is to be found there.

[u] pro Servator. Servatur. Camd.

[x] Bede II. 2.

[y] Pennant I. 400. 2d edition.

[z] Pennant I. 374. 376.

[a] Lel. V. 53.

Gliſſeg

Llangollen

diameter,

Inscription on the pillar at Little Orme's

COPCEPP FILIVS CATTELI CATTELI
FILIVS BROHOMAGIL BROHOMAGI FILIVS
ELIVETS ELIVETS FILIVS TVOHILLAVC
COPCEPP ITAQVE PROPEPOR ELIVETS
EDIFICAVIT HVNC LAPIDEM PROAVO
SVO ELIVETS + IPSE ET ELIVETS QVI NEGR
AVIT hereditatem potior. ipse . in ORC
CATTEN. PER VITAM . EPO. C. ERCALEANSLO
- - - - - IPSLADIORVO PARTAIN ISPE
- - - - - INQVE RECITAVERIT IMPERCP_P
=NDET BENEDICTIONEM VVPE
- - - - - NELIVETS + IPSE ET COPCEPP
- - - - - CVI - C CNEIHPSC-MAPV
- - - - - EAD REGIMINIVM potestas
- - - - - =ET HVIVS BARN-TEQVOD
- - - - - VIRTVTIS HVIVS MILES
- - - - - IMP. EIP - - IMPETRAVIT

- - - - - ILE KOMOPARCHIAM
- - - - - AIL MAXIMVS BRITANNIAE
- - - - - PP PATRES - - MAXIMVS IMPER
- - - - - BRITVA C - - FILIVS SVA RCHI
- - - - - QVE BEPES SEMPERQVE
- - - - - =PEPERIT ELIVETS ILIA MAXIMI
- - - - - BIRQVI OCCIDIT REGEM ROMANO
- - - - - RVM + COMMARCH PVER HOC
- - - - - CHIROGRAFVM RESERVATA PORTIONE
- - - - - CONCEPIT + TRIBVS ANNIS DEINDE CON
- - - - - CEPIT ET ITAQVE FAMILIAE SVAE
- - - - - ET IN HOC A EADEM POTESTATE
- - - - - VIRQVE IP - - - them several immunities. The base on the sides of an eminence or tumulus whereon it once stood, is five feet three inches broad, 18 inches on every side from the socket of the shaft, which is two feet two inches in diameter, and the stone 13 inches thick. The shaft eight feet long, and about six in girt is now restored and erected on its pedestal, being only the upper half of the original pillar. It is flatted on two sides, and somewhat tapering towards the end, Pl. XXI. fig. 1. The inscription, as far as can be judged from its present situation, seems nearly in the state as Mr. Lluyd copied it, whose copy is engraved Pl. XXII. from the Harleian MS. N° 3771, p. 57. His letter to Mr. Wanley on the subject is as follows:

"Rev. Sir, Swansey, Sept. 14, 1696.

"I have here presumed to trouble you with a copy of an inscription, which amongst several others I met with this summer in Wales. The monument whence I took it was a stately pillar of very hard stone of the same kind with our common mill-stones. 'Twas of a cylinder form, above 12 feet in height, seaven in circumference at the basis where it was thickest, and about 6 near the top where smallest. The pedestal is a large stone 5 feet square, and 15 inches thick, in the midst whereof there's a round hole 12 inches deep, wherein the monument was placed. Within a foot of the top 'tis encompassed with a round band or girth resembling a cord, from whence 'tis square to the top, and each square adorned with a ring reaching from this band to the top and meeting at the corners. It was erected on a small mount which seems to have been cast up for that purpose: but in the late civil wars or sooner 'twas thrown down and broke in several pieces, whence the inscription is so imperfect. The reason I trouble you with it is because I remember amongst Usher's letters one from Dr. Langbaine to him[a] wherein he writes thus: "I have received both your inscriptions, and shall send you my thoughts of that at Vale Crucis, but the other I give over for desperate." Now this I send you is the inscription at Vale Crucis, and I doubt not but the vale received its name from this very stone, though 'twas never intended for a cross. The copy Dr. Langbaine received was perhaps taken before the stone was broke, and you may possibly meet with it among his papers and letters if you know where they are lodged, or direct to me to search for it when I come to Oxford, which will be a month hence at furthest. It would be legible enough were it entire. It begins Concenn filius Catteli, Catteli filius Brochmail, Brochmail filius Eliseg, Eliseg filius Guoillauc. Concenn itaque pronepos Eliseg edificavit hunc lapidem proavo suo Eliseg, &c. 'Tis remarkable that adjoining to this monument there's a township called Eglwys-Eliseg, which name is corrupted doubtless from this Eliseg, tho' our greatest critics interpret it terra ecclesiastica. From Llangollen we find this epitaph:

Sexta[tur] fidei pectique super marore
Hic Paulinus jacet cultor pientissimus equi

The place where the stone lies is called Vale Crucis, Pont Faen, i. e. the vale of stakes, corruptly for Pant Powis, Pontes Pavimi. I find other places denominated from persons buried at or near them, whence I gather they were anciently men of great note whose inscriptions on their tombs be they never so rude and homely; but I trouble you too much with this, and shall add no more but that I am, worthy Sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

EDW. LHWYD.

Concenn filius Catteli, Catteli filius Brohcmail, Brohmail filius Eliseg, Eliseg filius Guoillauc. Concenn itaque pronepos Eliseg edificavit hunc lapidem proavo suo Eliseg; ipse est Eliseg qui nece . at hereditatem povos. ipc . . mors. ca^tc . . per viffi . . ep . o. t. eſtate anglo . . . . . in gladio ſuo parta in igſe . . . . . inque recituerit manele . p . . . . . rnder benedictionem ſupe . . . . . Eliseg. + ipſe eſt Concenn . . . . . tus . c . emeiuage. manu . . . . . e ad regnum ſuum pov . . . . . bani . qu . . . . . ais . ucavcinn . . . . . ein . . monten . . . . . il c . . . . . monarch . . . all maximus britanniac . . . nn paſcen . . . . mavi . annan . . . britua t . . milius Guarthi . . . que bened . que bened . germanuſ . . . peperit ei Se . ira filia Maximi . . . gis qui occidit regis Romano rum + Conmarch pinxit hoc chirografum rege fuo poſcente Concenn + Benedictio dñi in Con cenn in tota familia ejus et in tota regione povois uſque in . . . . . .

It commemorates Concenn, or Congrenn of Brochmail Yscithrog who was slain in of Chester 607[x]. One of the sons and Eliseg was in this country. of this prince of Powis was pro at the head of the vale of Glut conjectures that this place took its interment of Eliseg. The cumulus was three years ago, and found to contain some clos'd between flat stones[y]. The vale of and now, is bounded on the right by precipices, divided into numberless of white limestone often giving birth mines, and on the left by smooth verdured by pretty woods. One of the is honoured with the name of Craig the end of the vale is called Craig the Britons[z]. "Llangollen village fit, and Dinas Bran thereof on the north side of Dee, three Llangollen is a small market town, Castle, and 12 from Oswestry romantic situation. Here the Dee finishes of rock in a very wild and nel is crossed by an extraordinary one of the three beauties of Wales, large pointed arches, the largest not above

[a] Mr. Lhwyd's letter here referred to is printed among archbishop Usher's, 6866, p. [illegible], after mentioning copies of this and another ancient British inscription, he adds, "I may possibly hereafter give some better account of Vale Crucis. What character the ancient Britons used, whether that which the Saxons after, as your lordship (if I remember) is of opinion, or the same with your antient Irish (which I conceive to be not much different from the Saxon, and great of Concenn, &c. both as to the form of some letters, and the ligatures of them, seem to evince nearer than to take upon me to determine.

[x] No such letter is to be found there.

[y] Pennant I. 300. 2d edition.

[z] pro Lavarar. Senator. Cand. Pennant I. 314, 315.

[a] Lel. V. 3.

Inscription on the pillar at Valle Crucis

COMCEMM FILIVS CATTELI CATTELL
FILIVS GROHCMAIL GROHMAIL FILIVS
ELISEG ELISEG FILIVS GVOILLAVC
COMCEMM ITAQUE PROMEPOR ELISEG
EDIFICAVITHVNC LAPIDEM PROAVO
VVO ELISEG + IPSE ERT ELISEG QVI NECR
AT HEREDITATEM POVOR. IPC.. MORT
CAVTEM PER VIRVI.. EP.O.T.ERTATEANGLO
--------IMGLADIORVO PARTAIM IGME
-------- IMQVE RECITVERIT IMPERCR._P.
---------=M DET BENEDICTIONEM VVPE
----------MELISEG + IPSEERT COMCMM
----------VVR_C..CMEIVMGC.MAVN
----------EAD REGMMMRVVM POVOREA
--------=EIRTIVGAVI.R.EQVOD
.....VIRSEAIR-VCAVERMEC
----------JVN-EIM-.MONTEM

----------ILE..KOMONARCHIAM
--AIL MAXIMVS BRITTANNIAE
---MM PARCEM ...MAVI:AMMAN
...BRITVA-T-M FILIVS GVARThi
..QVE BENED-GERMANVRQVE
..EPEPERITEI.RREIRA FILIA MAXIMI
..GIRQVI OCCIDIT REGEM ROMANO
RVM + COMMARCH PINXIT hOC
CHIROGRAFVM REGERVO PORCENTE
CONCEMM + BENEDICTIO DNI IR COM
CEMM TRR. ITOTA FAMILIA EIVS
ET INTOTA EAGIONE POVOIR
VRQVEIM ----------

Cook sc.

Fig.1.p.582.

Fig.11.p.595.

IHS·MARIA·SALVOR·MERCV·

GRACI·HA· VAF· VRI· ~

Fig.12.p.595.

IATCIMA·AOV·VYIIIES·ATNPVS·

IVICAS·

Fig.7.

Fig.3.p.593.

Fig.4.p.593.

Fig.2.p.590.

Fig.9.

Fig.10.

Fig.5.

Fig.8.

Fig.6.

Fig.13.p.595.

90WIVE —

·VA· —

Fig.14.p.595.

PVS·EAC· ~

VFRHPE·BVAD·

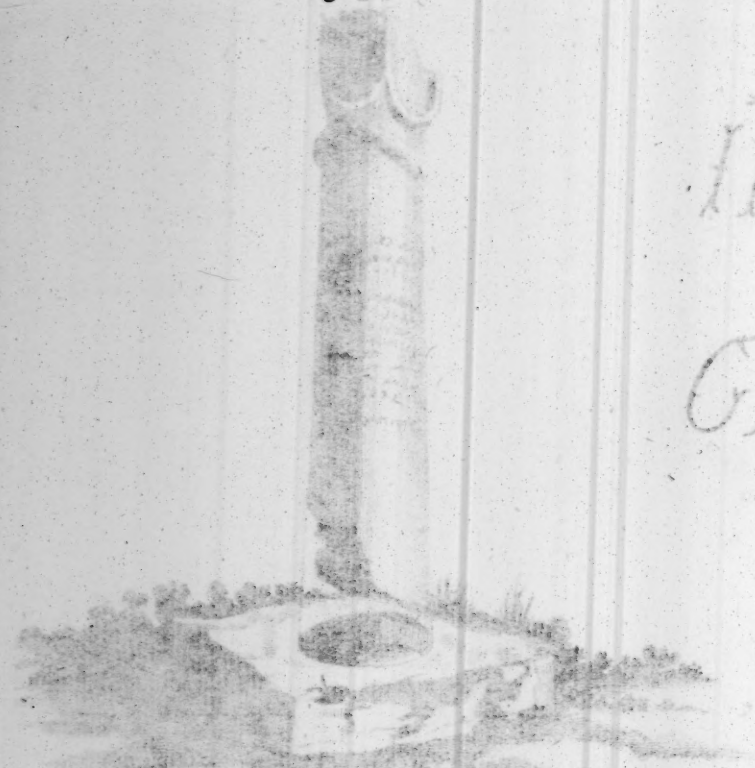
·RVS· ~

P.593.

F. Cary fculp.

DENBIGH

Fig.1.p.582.



Vol.II.Pl.XXI.p.583.

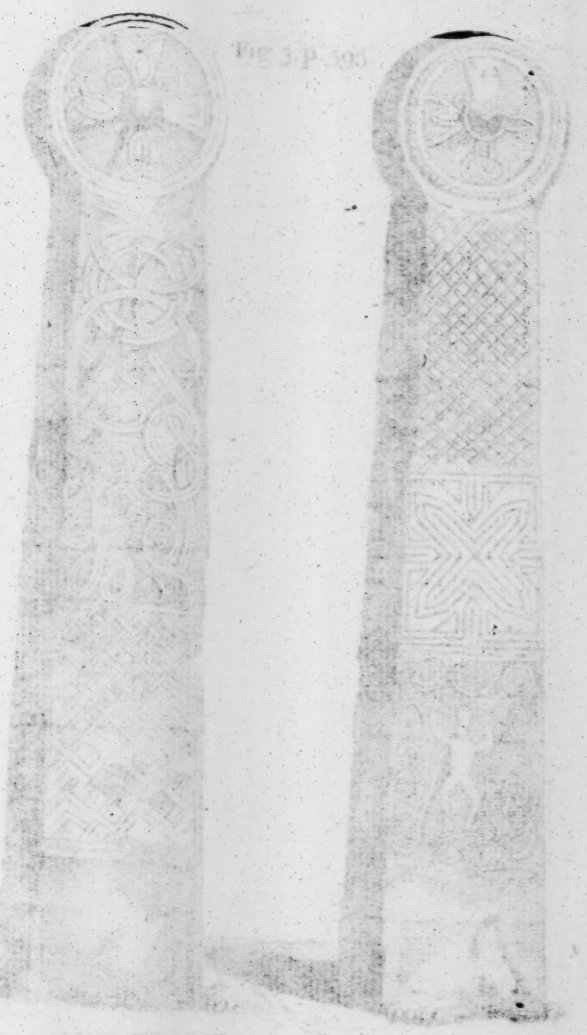


Fig.10.

Fig.8.

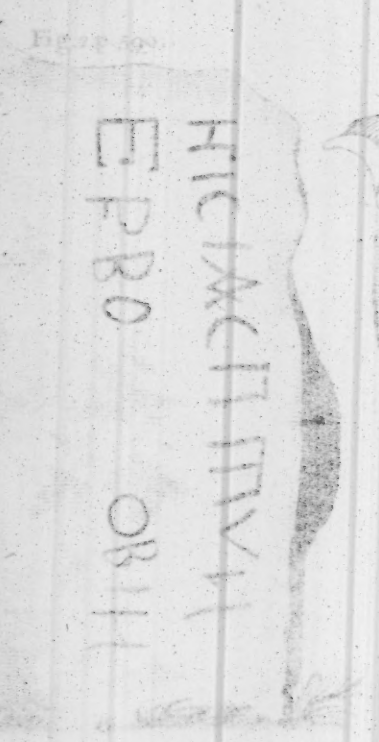

Fig.6.

Fig.5

diameter, the river running only under one wherein is formed a black deep chaſm [b], built on a ledge of rock on which it ſeems impoſſible to fix a foundation, and accounted one of the wonders of Wales, and aſcribed to John Trevawr biſhop of St. Aſaph 1344-56. The town is ſurrounded with hills, but mean, as well as its church. The pariſh is ten miles round, divided into 21 townſhips, containing 2100 ſouls, of whom 700 communicated on Eaſter day. The church rate or mize is included in the poor rate, being 3*d.* in the pound, ſometimes only half as much; 12*d.* would be thought a monſtrous ſum. The vale through which the Dee rolls over cataracts at almoſt every ten yards with rapidity and meanders is beautifully diverſified with meads, arable and woodland ſpread on the ſides of the river, or hanging on hills interſperſed with houſes. The part of the ridge weſt of Llangollen is called Moel y Vachla, beyond which is Kwn Bewr hill. On the road hence to Ruabon is Trevawr, a houſe pleaſantly ſituated under an hill, with an eſtate of £. 2000. per annum belonging to the Floyds. On Llwybyr y Gath, or the Cats path hill, was Brwn y Vryan caſtle, the extent of Chirk lordſhip.

Havod yr abad is the ſite of a country ſeat of the abbot of Valle crucis. Cloſe to the road lies Tommen y Rhodwydd, once a fortreſs known by the name of the caſtle of Yale [c], built by Owen Gwynedd about the year 1148. Leland [d] miſtakes in calling this Rågarth caſtle belonging to Owen Glyndwr. It conſiſts of a vaſt artificial mount, with another ſtill loftier near one end, the keep of the place: theſe are ſurrounded with a foſs and rampart, and have only a ſingle entrance. It was burnt nine years after its erection, and probably therefore was of wood [e].

In Derwen church-yard is the croſs Pl. XIX. fig. 15, 16.

"Welch Maylor, callid in Engliſh Bromefield, lying "on the north ſide of the Dee, and lower than Yale, "and joining hard upon Yale. It lyith eſt upon Holt "bridge, the which devideth Cheſterſhire from "Bromefield. Flintſhire lyith north on it; Diffrin "Cluit weſt, and Engliſh Maylor alis Mailor Seſneg, "i. e. Saxonica, ſouth of it. Bromefield is a plain "country, and hath plenty of wood and good corn "and paſture, and ſe coals at Harwood, and at a place "caullid the Mines [f]. The Holt is a pretty rich "Walch town, governed by a maire, having ons a yere "a faire, but ſurely now no celebrate market. Yn "it is a praty chirche and a goodly caſtel, the church "is but a chapel to Gresford. It is five miles from "Cheſter, and there is a great ſtone bridge over "Dee river [g]."

Holt, though a ſmall town in the pariſh of Greſford, is an antient borough and corporation, incorporated under a mayor, two bailiffs, and a coroner, 1410. Its inhabitants, together with Ruthin and Denbigh, contribute to ſend a burgeſs to parliament. It is in the dioceſe of Cheſter, and the only remains on this ſide Dee of the vaſt grant made by Edward the Confeſſor to that ſee of all the land on the ſide of the river which he firſt gave and then took away from prince Gryffyd ap Llewelyn [h]. The ſite and moat of the caſtle are near the river. It had originally been a ſmall outpoſt to Deva. Some famous outworks may be ſeen near the caſtle and on the oppoſite ſide of the water, and Roman coins. Its Roman name might have been Caſtra Legionis, in Welſh Caſtelh Llcon, corrupted to Lion caſtle, as it is ſtyled when it came into poſſeſſion of earl Warren and his ſucceſſors by grant of Edward I. 1281. Richard II. on his departure for Ireland, depoſited here his valuable jewels, which were ſurrendered to Bolingbrooke before his depoſal. Henry VIII. gave the lordſhip to his natural ſon Henry Fitzroy duke of Richmond 1534. Thomas Seymour the lord admiral, brother to the protector, had it in the next reign, and formed here a magazine of warlike ſtores, but forfeited it at his execution. The parliament ſeized it 1643, but the royaliſts recovered it, and 1645 it was ſurrendered and demoliſhed. The lordſhip is now in the crown under the direction of the ſteward of Bromfield and Yale, but a grant of the minerals was made to the Groſvenor family in the reign of Charles I. William III. withdrew his intended grant of theſe important domains to the earl of Portland [i].

This country formed part of POWISLAND, which, when intire, reached in a ſtrait line from Broxton hills c. Cheſhire ſouth to Pengwern Powis or Shrewſbury, including a large tract in both counties, thence through the eaſtern limits, then turning northward including the cwmmwds of Mowddwy, Edeyrnion, and Glyndyfrdwy, Merionethſhire, and circuiting part of Denbigh come along part of the Clwydian hills to the top of Moelfanma, excepting the parts which now conſtitute the lordſhips of Denbigh and Ruthin; hence ſouth-eaſt to Broxton hills, taking in Moleſdale, Hopedale, and Maelor in Flintſhire. The kingdom of Powys was reduced in the defeat of Brochmel Yſcythrog by the Saxons at Cheſter, and ſtill more by Offa, whoſe dike drove the princes from Shrewsbury to Mathraval. Roderic the Great added it to his dominions. The two heirs male of Powiſland were drowned under Holt bridge by John earl Warren and Roger Mortimer [k]. POWISLAND.

"Wrexham, truly called Wrigteleſham, is the "only market town of Walſch Maylor, having a "goodly church collegiate as one of the faireſt in "all North-Wales. Ther longgid no prebendes to it. "Ther be ſum merchantes and good bokeler makers [l]." It is the largeſt market town in North Wales, and has a large cannon foundery. It is much celebrated for its church, which, however it might ſtrike the inhabitants of Wales, has diſappointed moſt travellers. It is 178 feet from eaſt to weſt, which is within three feet of St. Aſaph, and 62 from north to ſouth, which is within four of that. The tower, dated 1506, is to the top of the pinnacles 135 feet, and 22 ſquare, adorned on three ſides with rows of 25 ſtatues. The ſouth door is unuſually low and called the Wedding door. The organ was deſtroyed 1641. Here is a modern monument to Mrs. Middleton, daughter of ſir Richard Middleton, of Chirk caſtle 1747, copied from Gen. Hargrave's in Weſtminſter abbey, and a knight, inſcribed, IRℰnγℰRI. ℵP. ÞOVℰL, falſely aſcribed to ſir William Stanley of Holt, and a monument for Hugh Bellot, biſhop of Bangor and Cheſter 1596. Here is a freeſchool [m]. Wrexham.

[b] Pennant I. 279. [c] Powel, 201. [d] V. 35. [e] Pennant, I. 377.
[f] Lel. V. 34. [g] V. 53. [h] Domeſday in Leiceſter's Cheſhire, p. 405.
[i] Penn. I 201—215. [k] Ib. 206. [l] Lel. V. 34. [m] Pen. I. 291. 296.

At

Acton. At Acton, 2 miles off, the ſeat of Mr. Young, are good whole lengths of chancellor Jefferies in his robes by Kneller, his brother ſir Thomas and his father John, aged 82, 1690 [n]. The original of the former from Guildhall, taken down and ſold on his diſgrace, is at Mr. Harnage's at Belfardine, near Creſſage in Shropſhire.

Erthig. Wat's dyke continues to Erthig, the ſeat of Philip Yorke, eſq; whoſe lands are bounded by two little vales well watered and wooded. The dike runs along one ſide of the bank, and at the end between the two vales impending over them are ſmall ſtrong entrenchments; one of a pentagon form, beyond which at the very verge is a mount. Theſe compoſe what is called the Roman fort, though no coins or other antiquities have been found there: and only a fragment of wall cemented with mortar remains [o].

Llan Armon. The moſt famous pariſh in Yale is Llan Armon, "i. e. Fanum St. Germani and Llan Tegla, Fanum "Teclæ. Great pilgrimage and offering was a late "to S. Armon [p]." St. Germanus' image the object of pilgrimage in the wall [q]. Here is a monument inſcribed Hic jacet Gruffydd Lhewelyn ap Ynyr, with five bloody fingers on his ſhield, and a dog at his feet on the lid of a ſtone coffin [r]. In this pariſh are many tumuli, compoſed of looſe ſtones and earth under a layer of ſoil two feet thick, and a coat of turf, and containing ſeveral urns reverſed on a flat ſtone, with other urns over them, and among the looſe ſtones fragments of burnt bones [s]. An entire ſkeleton placed between ſtags of a proportionable ſize was found near this place.

Llandegla. Llandegla is a village noted for its vaſt fairs for black cattle. The church is dedicated to St. Tecla, and about 200 yards from it is Anwell, ſacred to her, and to this day held to be beneficial againſt the falling ſickneſs [t].

"Owen Glindour had a place in Yale on the north "ſide of De called Ragarth, five miles above Dinas "Bran [u]." This is Tommen y Rhodwydd, miſtaken by Leland for a work of Owen Glyndwr, but really built by Owen Gwynedd [x].

"Almoſt in the middle way betwixt Llaneg Whiſt "and Rithyn appere veſtigia of a caſtle of Owen "Glendour (as it is ſaid), called Keven de, i. e. the "bakke of the black hill, where now ſhepherds keep "ſheep [y]."

"In Yale is plenty of kine, ſheep, and goats [z]." On the left the road between Ruabon and Wrexham. Mr. Pennant [a] deſcribes a fortification on a high hill called Caerthen, or Caerden, containing about four acres, ſingle and double trenched as neceſſary: the inner dike of looſe ſtones, with a very thick wall on the top, and foundation of buildings within the area.

Chirk. Chirkland. "Chirke and Chirklande lyith on the hither ſide by "ſouth of De againſt Yale. Ther is never a market "toun in this lordſhip. At Chirk ſelf be a few "houſes, and ther is on a ſmaull hill a mighty large "and ſtronge caſtel, with divers towers, a late well "repayred by ſir William Standeley, the yerl of "Darby's brother. There hath bene two parkes, "one yet remainith caulled Blake park. The moſt "part of Chirk and Chirkland on the ſouth towards "Poys lande is great plenty of mervelous good woode "and thorough reaſonable wood. Moch of the lord-"ſhip ys hilly, but yn valleys by De and Keiriog "good corn and medow, and in ſum other places. "This lordſhip in Welſh is called Guaine, and is "divided into low and high Guayne [b]." From Langollen to Chirk is five miles over Kefn Yucha, a very ſteep hill, from whoſe ſummit covered with grenſwerd and fern may be ſeen a proſpect of 50 miles, including the different hills that now and then break in upon or bound it. Chirk caſtle ſucceeded Caſtle Crogen. It ſtands on no very high hill among the different hills ſurrounded with woods and cultivated country. The river Keiriog runs below it to the weſt and ſouth, giving name to the vale of Keiriog if not of Chirk. This vale was guarded by two mounts ſtill remaining on each ſide of the road through it [c], and in this vale was fought the battle of Crogen 1165, where Henry II. made a moſt inglorious retreat from the Welſh under Owen Gwynedd. The place is ſtill called Adwy 'r Beddau, or the paſſage of the graves [d]. The territory round the caſtle, called by the Welſh Tref y Wayn, or Gwayn, was a diſtinct comot in one of the cantrefs of Powisland. The preſent caſtle was probably the work of Roger Mortimer, who died after being impriſoned in the Tower four years and a half, 16 Edward III. without being brought to trial for his injuſtice. His grandſon John ſold this caſtle to Fitz Alan, earl of Arundel, whoſe ſon Richard was conſtituted governor of it 7 Edward III. with a confirmation of his father's grant, whence it ſhould ſeem the eſtate was forfeited as ſoon as Roger was impriſoned if not before t. Edward II. who Dugdale ſays [e] gave it to Edmund Fitz Alan his father a. r. 15. It does not appear among his grandſon Thomas' eſtates [f], whoſe heirs had no property in the principality. It paſſed to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, in right of his wife Elizabeth, elder ſiſter to Thomas earl of Arundel, and on his diſgrace 1397 was probably reſumed by the crown. It was granted again to William Beauchamp, earl of Abergavenny, the other ſiſter and his granddaughter conveyed it to the Nevils. It came afterwards to the Stanleys, and at length to the crown, and was granted by Elizabeth to her favourite the earl of Leiceſter, from whom it came to lord St. John of Bletſo, whoſe ſon ſold it 1595 to ſir Thomas Middleton. It now belongs to Richard Middleton, eſq; whoſe father John communicated the following particulars to the Society of Antiquaries 1729: "That it was begun 1011, and "finiſhed 1013: the repair of one of the wings "in Cromwell's time coſt £.28,000. The front is "250 feet long, the court 165 by 100, and five "round towers 50 feet diameter. Adams tower, "80 feet high, the wall near the dungeon nine feet "deep, and the dungeon as deep as the walls of the "caſtle are high." Thomas revolting from the parliament made a ſhort defence of this caſtle, when one ſide and three towers were pulled down, but rebuilt by ſir Thomas in one year [g]. The entrance is between two round towers by a high narrow arch not in the centre of the front. The eaſt ſide within has a colonnade. In front were a pair

[a] Ib. 296. 297.
[b] Lel. ubi ſup.
[c] Pennant, I. 267.
[d] Ib. 268.
[e] Ib. 291.
[f] Ib. 321.
[g] Bar. I. 155.
[n] Pennant, I. 380.
[o] Lel. V. 35.
[p] Lel. V. 35.
[q] Pennant, I. 377.
[r] Ib. 381.
[s] Ib. 387.
[t] Ib. 278.
[u] Pennant, I. 267. 272.
[x] Ib. I. 290.
[y] Lel. V. 35.
[z] Ib.

of iron gates of matchleſs beauty, and wrought in ſo rich and coſtly a ſtyle by a common ſmith (who alſo made thoſe at Leeſwood in this neighbourhood) as to paſs for one of the wonders of Wales. From the top of the houſe is a view into 17 counties. The caſtle was diſmantled in the civil war, and the eſtate plundered by Lambert to the amount of £. 80,000. Sir Thomas Middleton was offered a coronet for his ſervices and ſufferings. South of the caſtle below the hill is New hall, an old ſeat of the Middletons, forſaken becauſe haunted, and lately rebuilt for a farm houſe. Chirk church is full of Middleton monuments.

as Bran. "Dinas Bran caſtle, on a rokky hill, ſtondith "almoſt as neere as Vallis crucis to Dee ripe, and "going up on De water, is ſomewhat lower than the "abbey [g]." "The caſtel was never big thing, but "ſet all for ſtrength as in a place half inacceſſible for "enemies. It is now all in ruin, and there breedith "in the rock ſide that the caſtle ſtandith on every "year an eagle, and the eagle doth ſorely aſſault "him that deſtroyeth his neſt going down in one "baſket and having another over his head to defend "the ſore ſtripe of the eagle [h]."

Dinas Bran is vulgarly called Crow caſtle, from Bran a crow, but more probably derived by E. Lluyd [i] from the brook Bran, which is croſſed by a bridge near Llangollen. It ſtands on a vaſt conical hill ſteeply ſloped on every ſide. The approach to it is by a narrow path from the eaſt under an arch. The area conſiſts of little more than ruins whoſe tops have been whitewaſhed for objects from Elleſmere in Shropſhire miles off. A ſide of a building with two windows as of a chapel, and ſome pieces of towers, are all that remains within its double trench. Great ſearch has been made for ſuppoſed treaſure, and the large flagged vault was found 1766.

abon. "The beſt wood of Bromefelde is in Ruabon, a "bigge paroch by part whereof De cometh. There is "a good quarry of grind ſtones in Ruabon pariſh [k].

Ruabon is a mean village on the top of an hill among coal pits. In the church are monuments of Henry Wynne, eſq; 10th ſon of ſir John Wynne of Gwedir, 1671; his ſon ſir John Wynne, bart. of Winſtay, who died blind 1718, 90; ſir Watkin Williams Wynne, bart. 1749; lady Harriet Somerſet, firſt wife of the preſent baronet, and one of John ap Elis Eyton 1526. Here is Winſtay, the ſeat ſtay. of ſir John Wynne, a former lord of theſe eſtates, an old houſe pleaſantly ſeated on a hill in a good park. Part of it is of the 16th century, part built by the late ſir Watkin, which gives the whole an irregular appearance, and the back front makes the beſt figure. It was once the reſidence of Madoc ap Gryffydd Maèlor founder of Vale Crucis. This eſtate came from ſir John Wynne to the late ſir Watkyn Williams, who thereupon added their name to his own. Sir John Wynne changed the name from Watſtay to his own name [l].

A little beyond this place the turnpike road runs for two miles on the bank of Offa's dike (or Clawd Offa) [m], broad enough to admit two carriages, and ten feet high, and on the long narrow hill called Llwybyr y gath, or the Cats path, from a narrow winding path down its almoſt perpendicular ſide. On this hill is a long bare plain, where it is ſaid nothing ever grows, and a tumulus. Here the Dee comes in ſight in a delightful deep and woody valley to the left. To the right are the Gluſig rocks, a ridge of mountains formed of looſe fragments and preſenting a number of broken points of the ſame compoſition; on the ſlope hang ſome ſcattered aſh trees. At the bottom woods, hedgerows, and incloſures. To the left is the great ridge called Kevn Yrch ucha, a contraſt to the other, being clothed with verdure and fern, and with them forming an ellipſe, in whoſe point is the ſingle round hill on which ſtands Dinas Bran.

At Llangedwin is an eſtate of ſir Watkin's, with a large plain houſe. Llanrhaiadr is a mean town with a tolerable church and rich vicarage and populous pariſh, partly in this county, partly in Montgomeryſhire, conſiſting of 17 townſhips, all rated ſeparately, and having 600 communicants. Dr. William Morgan, who firſt tranſlated the bible into Welſh, was vicar here, and ſucceſſively biſhop of Landaff and St. Aſaph, at which laſt place he died, and was buried 1604. Dr. South was the laſt rector, and on his death the rectorial tithes were appropriated by act of parliament to the maintenance of the choir and repair of the church of St. Aſaph [n]. Five computed miles or an hour's ride from hence over rough mountains and precipices, is Piſtil Rhaiadr, the moſt celebrated caſcade in all Wales, falling down from a black crag 210, 185° feet perpendicular, and forming the river Rhaiadr, the boundary of Merioneth and Denbighſhires, which rolls over ſmall ſtocks in a woody valley to the Severn. The water at about half way meets with a projection in the rock, before which is a rude arch which the ruſtics will venture to croſs, and behind this a ſmall hollow or baſon. Thence it continues its fall in an even ſtream with a large baſon at the foot of the rock. There is a reſervoir on the hill above, which affords plenty of water when perſons come to ſee it. Nothing can be imagined more dreary than the ſcenery of the hills and rocks which incloſe this fall and the maſſes of ſtone, among which it paſſes in the form of a river ſmothered with alders. Llangedwin. Llanrhaidr.

Mr. Lluyd mentions theſe fortifications in this county. Pen y gaer vawr, or Kader Dhinmael, about a mile from Kerig y Druidion, but in Llanvihangel pariſh, a circular ditch and rampart of ſtones of at leaſt 100 paces diameter before-mentioned. Kaer Dhynod in the ſame pariſh cloſe to the river Alwen, of an oval form, compoſed of ſtones rudely heaped together, 300 feet perpendicular next the river, but elſewhere not half that height. On the other ſide of the river is a ſteep hill about twice the height of this, on which is Kaer Forwyn, i. e. Maiden fort, a large circular entrenchment, much more artificial than the other. Mr. Lluyd ſuppoſes Kaer Dhynod a Britiſh camp, ſince it agrees exactly with Tacitus' deſcription of Caratacus' camp when he engaged Oſtorius Scapula ſomewhere in this county of the Ordevices [p]. Dinas Melin y Wyg he ſuppoſes a Britiſh oppidum, being [g] Lel. V. 35. [h] Ib. 53. [i] Pen. I. 284—290.

[k] Lel. V. 34. [l] Adverſaria at end of Baxter's Gloſſ. Brit. p. 267. [m] M. Paris vit. Off. p. 18. ſays this ditch was made and Offkirk church built in 12 days. [n] Pen. II. 350. [o] Wyndham. Pen. II. 351. [p] Ann. XII. 33.

much ſuch a place as Cæſar deſcribes. This place, as the word Gwyg implies, is full of woods, dingles, &c. The vallum riſes about 15 or 20 yards where loweſt, and is faced for the moſt part with a craggy rock encompaſſed with a deep ditch, having two entrances called Porth ucha and Porth iſa, or the upper and lower gates [q].

Vale of Clwyd.

The vale of Clwyd, ſo juſtly celebrated by the Welſh for its fertility and pleaſantneſs, extends from about four miles ſouth of Ruthin through the heart of Denbighſhire to the mouth of the river which gives name to it, and runs through it from the fountain head, receiving a number of leſſer ſtreams on each ſide. It is in length from north to ſouth 26 meaſured miles, and in breadth from 5 to 8 [r], bounded by high mountains to the eaſt and weſt, and almoſt ſhut up by them to the ſouth, open only to the ſea and north wind, ending in a marſh at Rudland. To the eye looking down from Ruthin and Denbighſhire on one ſide, and from the lofty and leſs improved mountains on the other, this vale preſents a proſpect of cultivation moſt enchantingly diverſified. Such a mixture of corn and paſture, and here and there woodlands hanging or gently ſloping down the declivity of the hills interſperſed with churches and villages. 30 or 40,000 £. worth of corn is annually exported from this vale at Rhudlan. The Welſh have a ſaying about the richneſs and fertility of this vale, that a ſtick thrown into it would be covered with graſs in one night. Through the Clwydian hills is a remarkable paſs called Bwlch Agricle or the paſs of Agricola, and ſince there is no other tranſlation to be given of the Welſh word, we may conclude this to have been his route to Mona. That the Romans were in aftertimes reſident in theſe parts is evident from the number of coins found in this neighbourhood particularly in the pariſh of Llanvirres, whoſe church dedicated to St. Berres or Britius, biſhop of Tours, is rebuilt by Mrs. Jones of Clommendy, having been repaired 1650 by John Davies the author of the Welſh Latin dictionary, a moſt ſkilful antiquary and native of this place. Moel Benlli or Venlli's hill is a ſtrong Britiſh poſt probably poſſeſſed by the chieftain of that name mentioned by Ninnius [s].

Gresford.

Gresford, three miles from Wrexham, has a beautiful church built on the plan of thoſe of Wrexham and Mold, but in ſituation as well as architecture ſuperior to both, though the boaſt of its ſix bells is now transferred to the ten in the former. It ſtands on riſing ground at the end of the village, built of free-ſtone, and in length 123, broad 59, height of the tower 90 feet. On one ſide of this laſt is a ſtatue of Henry VII. The eaſt window 21 feet by 14 has been full of beautiful groupes, ſeeming the hiſtory of the ſeveral ſaints to which the church is dedicated, with the Virgin Mary in the middle, and under each groupe ſentences in her praiſe: her hiſtory is alſo in the eaſt window of the north aile. In the ſouth aile is a figure completely armed with mail, and a ſurcoat and round helmet, his legs not croſſed, and a lion at his feet and on his ſhield. On the ledge of the tomb Hic jacet Madoc ap Llewellin ap Gruff [t]. A ſimilar figure in the north aile, the inſcription concealed by pews.

Againſt one of the pillars is the following inſcription:

H. S. E.
Joannes Robinſon
tribunus Caroli martyris, fortunas ejus, hoc eſt eccleſiam monarchiamque, ſuſtinebat ſtrenuè:
rege cadente,
Carolum exulem non deſeruit exul; cum reduce redux
apud Gwerſilt
ubi omnia ſua a rebelli manu direpta relinquerat edificiis ab eodem eleganter conſtructis gaviſus eſt:
Ab uxore Margareta filia Edwardi Norris de Speak in com. Pal. Lanc. arm.
Gulielmum, Joannem, Margaretam & Janam ſuſcepit prolem.
Corpus e meliori licet luto compoſitum vulneribus tamen pronis fractum pariter ac honeſtatum animam ad cœlum aſpirantem ultra a. æt. 65. retinere non volens
Mart. 15. reddidit, æræ Chriſtianæ 1681.

Tradition ſays Mr. Robinſon came over in diſguiſe to the perſon to whom Cromwell had given his eſtate at Gwerſilt; and as he was rebuilding it, he ſuggeſted a plan which was adopted, and ſo got a houſe built to his mind at another's coſt, and recovered it again at the Reſtoration.

In the chancel are 14 ſtalls, and under it a room rather than a vault, and an oak floor intended to be replaced with ſtone. It is a vicarage of £. 300. per annum, the dean and chapter of Wincheſter impropriators.

Not far from Gresford is a ſtrong Britiſh camp, treble trenched, and at one corner a vaſt exploratory mount or keep. It is called the Rofts [u].

[q] Lluyd's letter to Gibſon.
[r] Wyndham.
[s] P. 30, 31. Pennant, 388, 389.
[t] 1331. Pennant.
[u] Pennant I. 300.

Rare

Rare Plants found in Denbighſhire.

Acroſtichum ſeptentrionale. Forked or horned Fern; on old walls of Llan Dethyla, near Llan Rŵſt.

Cardamine bellidifolia. Daiſie-leaved Ladies-ſmock; on alpine rocks and ſtones: about Denbigh.

Inula Helenium. Elecampane; in moiſt meadows and paſtures between Denbigh and St. Aſaph.

Lichen propoſcideus. Button Lichen; on Berwyn mountain.

Lithoſpermum purpuro-cæruleum. Leſſer creeping Gromwell; on the top of a buſhy hill on the north ſide of Denbigh.

Myrica Gale. Goule, Gale, Sweet Willow, or Dutch Myrtle; on Bwlch yr Haiarn.

Papaver Cambricum. Yellow wild baſtard Poppy; about a mile from a ſmall village called Abler, and in the midway from Denbigh to Gwedir.

Rubus Chamæmorus. Knout berries, Knot-berries, or Cloud-berries; on Berwyn mountain, not far from Llan Rhaidar ym mochnant, plentifully, where it is called Moyar Berwyn.

Sorbus aucuparia. Mountain Aſh; in woods and hedges.

Sorbus hybrida. Baſtard Service-tree; on the walls of Caſtel Dinas Brân.

FLINTSHIRE.

TO Denbighſhire on the north adjoins the county of Flint or Flint ſhire, longer than broad, waſhed by the Iriſh ſea or rather the mouth of the Dee on the north, bounded on the eaſt by Cheſhire, and on the other ſides by Denbighſhire. It is not mountainous, but riſes a little into hills which ſpread themſelves gently into very fruitful plains, which eſpecially next the ſea, for the firſt year in ſome places produce barley, in others wheat, in general rye twenty fold and upwards, and afterwards oats for four or five years. But the weſtern part declines to that part of the vale of Cluyd on the ſea and occupies the upper part of it.

In the confines of this county and Denbighſhire where the mountains decline gently and afford an eaſy deſcent and paſſage into the vale, in its very entrance was the town of VARIS, built by the Romans, and by Antoninus placed 19 miles from Conovium. This has loſt no part of its name, being ſtill called Bod-vari or the Manſion of Varus, and ſhews the remains of a ruined town on a neighbouring hill, which they call Moyl y Gaer, q. d. the hill of the city. The meaning of the name is by no means clear. I have elſewhere ſuppoſed Varia among the antient Britons to mean a paſs, and have therefore tranſlated Durnovaria and Iſannæ Varia, the paſſage of waters and of Iſanna. And this ſenſe is countenanced by the ſituation of this VARIS in a place where is the only eaſy paſſage among theſe mountains. Not three miles from hence is Caer Wiſk[a]. But though this name carries with it ſome antiquity, I found there nothing antient or remarkable.

VARIS. Bod-vari. Caer Wyſk.

Below this VARIA in the vale runs the Cluid, and preſently after unites with the little river Elwy. At their confluence is an epiſcopal ſee called by the Britans from the river Llan Elwy, by the Engliſh from the patron Aſaph St. Aſaph. The town is not remarkable for beauty nor the church for ſtyle or ornament, but its antiquity intitles it to ſome regard. For about A. D. 560, Kentigern biſhop of Glaſgow fleeing from Scotland, ſettled here an epiſcopal ſee and an abbey, and aſſembled 630 brethren, of whom 300 of the more illiterate were to cultivate the ground, as many more to perform the various offices within doors, and the reſt to attend to divine ſervice. Theſe he ſo diſtributed in companies[b], that there were conſtantly ſome engaged in the church. But upon his return to Scotland he left the government of his monaſtery to Aſaph, a perſon of great integrity, from whom it takes its preſent name. The biſhop of this ſee has about 128 pariſhes ſubject to him, the benefices of which on a vacancy of the ſee, as I find in the hiſtory of Canterbury, uſed till the reign of Henry VIII. to be diſpoſed of by the archbiſhop of Canterbury by archiepiſcopal, now royal, authority.

Elwy r. Llan Elwy or St. Aſaph.

Higher up is Ruthlan, ſo called from the red bank of the Clyde on which it ſtands, having a handſome caſtle but almoſt decayed by age. Llewellin ap Sitſylt prince of Wales, firſt built it: but Robert ſurnamed de Ruthlan nephew and lieutenant to Hugh earl of Cheſter firſt wreſted it from the Welſh, and afterwards added new works to it. Afterwards, as the abbot de Monte writes, Henry II. repaired this caſtle, and gave it to Hugh Beauchamp. Juſt below it the Cluid falls into the ſea, and though the valley at its mouth ſeems to be below the level of the ſea it is never overflowed by it, but by a natural obſtacle by the wonderful appointment of Providence the water ſtops at its banks. Hence the ſhore gradually declining eaſt proceeds firſt by Diſart caſtle, ſo called from the declivity of its ſituation, or as others ſay, quaſi Deſert; then by Baſingwerk, which Henry II. gave alſo to Hugh Beauchamp. Below this I ſaw the little town of Halywell or Holywell, where is a ſpring famous for the memory of Winifred, a Chriſtian virgin, who atoned for the loſs of her chaſtity with her life, being ſlain by the tyrant, and for moſs of a moſt agreeable ſmell. Out of it riſes or rather ruſhes among ſtones of a blood colour a ſmall rivulet, which runs with ſuch force as ſoon after its riſe to turn a mill. Over the ſpring ſtands a beautiful chapel of hewn ſtone[c], to which adjoins a little church, in a window of which is painted the hiſtory and death of Winifred. Near this place in Giraldus' time was, as he writes[d], "a rich vein and profitable ſearch for ſilver, where men have penetrated into the bowels of the earth in queſt of money."

Ruthlan. Diſart. Baſingwerk.

This part of the county, from the charms of its ſituation and its falling early into the hands of the Engliſh, the Britans called Teg-Engle or fair England. The reader muſt be cautioned not to believe a certain writer who calls it Tegenia, and ſays the Igeni were ſettled there. A corruption of the name of Iceni led that learned man into this miſtake[e]. Next on the ſhore one ſees Flint caſtle, begun by Henry II. and finiſhed by Edward I. which gives name to this county. Afterwards on the eaſt border of the county next to Cheſhire is Hawarden or Harden caſtle, not far from the coaſt, from which David brother of Llewellin having carried off Roger Clifford juſtice of Wales, occaſioned a war moſt fatal to himſelf and his country, which proved the total ſubverſion of the Welſh power. But this caſtle which was held by the office of ſeneſchal of the earls of Cheſter, was Teg Engle. Hawarden.

[a] Caer Wys.

[b] per Conventus: by Covents, H. into Convents, G.

[c] pereleganti opere e ſaxo vivo ſacellum: with great art hewn out of the live rock. G. built of ſtone right curiouſly wrought. H. Gibſon has brought here from its proper place in Caernarvonſhire the legend of St. Beuno from Vaughan's MS.

[d] II. 10.

[e] I do not find either of theſe Latin names in any author except Hoffman's Lexicon, who calls it Igenia, and directly underſtood it as Camden cautioned him not to do; but the ſame Lexicographer puts the Igeni in Tac. Ann. XII. 31, 32. XIV. 32. for the Iceni, and then carries them to Northumberland.

the ſeat of the barons de Montealto or Monthault, who became a very honourable family, and bear Az. a lion rampant Arg. and advanced themſelves by marriage with Cecily one of the coheirs of Hugh de Albini earl of Arundel. But the male line failing Robert laſt baron of this family left [f], as I before obſerved, Iſabel queen of England wife of Edward II. his heir. But the property of the caſtle came afterwards to the Stanleys, now earls of Derby.

The ſouth part of the county below this is watered by the little river Alen, near which on a hill at the little village of Kilken is a ſpring which ebbs and flows like the ſea at ſtated times; Hope caſtle, in Britiſh Caer Gurle, to which Edward I. retired when the Welſh fell upon his army by ſurprize, near which mill ſtones are hewn out of the rock; and Mold, Britiſh Guid-cruc [g], formerly a caſtle of the barons of Monthault, ſtand on this river Alen, bearing many marks of antiquity. Near Hope, while I was writing this, a gardener digging ſomewhat deeper than ordinary diſcovered a very antient work, upon which many conjectures were formed; but whoever reads Vitruvius with attention will ſee it could have been nothing more than an hypocauſt begun by the Romans, who, as luxury increaſed with wealth, made great uſe of baths. It was five ells long, four broad, and about half an ell high. It was incloſed with walls of hewn ſtone [h], the pavement of brick ſet in mortar; on brick pillars reſted a vault formed of poliſhed tiles, and in ſeveral places perforated, on which ſtood brick flews, by which the heat was leſſened, and as the Poet [i] expreſſes it, the hypocauſts diſpenſed the ſteam [k].” It is eaſy to ſee that what Giraldus [l] deſcribes at Uſk were of the ſame ſort, when he gives this account of the Roman works: “ What is very ſurprizing among “ other things are on every ſide ſtoves of admirable “ contrivance, emitting heat by certain concealed “ narrow vents of brick.” Whoſe work theſe were appears from the words LEGIO XX ſtamped on the tiles, which legion we before ſhewed [m] was quartered at Cheſter ſcarce ſix miles from hence.

Near this river Alen in a woody defile is Coleſſhut, which Giraldus calls Carbonarius collis, where, when Henry II. had made the greateſt preparations for the war with the Welſh, the Engliſh marching in a diſorderly manner were ſurprized and ſlain, and the royal ſtandard deſerted by Henry de Eſſex, hereditary ſtandard bearer to the kings of England. For this he was afterwards accuſed of high treaſon, and being worſted by his accuſer in ſingle combat, his eſtate was confiſcated, and he, aſhamed of his cowardice, took the cowl among the monks. Coleſhull.

There is another ſmall part of this county on this ſide the river Dee, torn as it were from this, and called from the Engliſh Engliſh Mailor. But having already treated of this under Banchor in Cheſhire, we ſhall not repeat what was there ſaid. Here is nothing remarkable except Han-mere, on a lake, whence an antient and illuſtrious family which live there take their name. English Mailor. Hanmer.

The earls of Cheſter occaſionally ſkirmiſhing with the Welſh, were the firſt Normans that reduced this county, whence in old records we read “ the county “ of Flint belongs to the honour of the ſword of “ Cheſter,” and the king of England's eldeſt ſons were antiently ſtyled Earls of Cheſter and Flint. But after it was annexed to the crown Edward I. who thought it very conveniently ſituated to ſecure his own acquiſitions and awe the Welſh, kept this and all the ſea coaſt of Wales in his own hands. The interior parts he diſtributed among his lords as he thought proper, imitating the policy of Auguſtus, who took upon himſelf the management of the ſtronger and exterior provinces, leaving the reſt to proconſuls appointed by lot. This was done in appearance for the defence of the empire, but in reality that he might have all the troops at his own command. Earls of Cheſter.

In the county of Flint are only 28 pariſhes.

[f] P. 330 of this volume.
[g] Gwyddgryg.
[h] ex vivo ſaxo; of hard ſtone. H. hewn out of live rock. G.
[i] Statius Sylv. I. 5. 59.
[k] Volvebant hypocauſta vaporem.
[l] I. 5.
[m] P. 423. of this volume.

ADDITIONS.

THE county of Flint, the leaſt of the Welſh counties, is 70 miles in circumference, 13 miles long and only nine broad, contains about 160,000 acres, and is divided into five hundreds with two market towns and 28 pariſhes. The air is good and pleaſant; the northern part produces plenty of grain eſpecially wheat, but at preſent no rye. The chief commodities are cattle, butter, cheeſe, coal, lead, mill-ſtones, and honey: the lower parts abound with coal, freeſtone, lead, and calamine. It is extremely populous, and the inhabitants in the mineral parts are compoſed of a mixed people who come from England for employment, and whoſe children born of Welſh mothers have intirely forgotten their native language.

VARIS. Dr. Gale on Antoninus, p. 122. ſuppoſes the antient name of the ſtation or fort mentioned by Mr. Camden was VARIA, which ſignifies a paſſage over Bodvary. a river, and he places it at Bodvary on the Clwyd. This river ſeems to be nearly at a due diſtance; the change of XIX into XXI makes it exact, and it is not much to be doubted but that the ſtation has been on it. The diſtance of this river from Deva is too little for the XXXII miles of the Itinerary. If a X be thrown out it becomes very exact[a]. Baxter places it at Bala, deriving it from Uar iſc, q. d. on the water, as that town ſtands on Pemblemere. "The eaſt "part of the paroche of Potvarry is in Flintſhire, "and part of the ſame paroche toward the ſouth yn "Diffrin Cluid[b]." Mr. Lluyd denies that Var ſignifies a paſs. Moel y Gaer certainly takes its name from a fortification on it, which was not neceſſarily a city, the name Caer being given to any encloſure from Kai to ſhut up, and hence the church-yard wall is in ſome places called Kaer y Vynwent. Mr. Pennant ſays the poſt is Britiſh, and no Roman remains can be found[c].

The deſcription given by Mr. Lluyd of Moel y Gaer near Bodvari belongs in reality to a fortification of the ſame name near Northop in this county, to which on the authority of Mr. Pennant[d] we have transferred it.

Caerwys. Caerwys from Caer city and gwys ſummons appears to have been a place of judicature, and particularly a Roman ſtation. It conſiſts of four ſtreets croſſing each other at right angles. Roman coins have been Pl. XXI. fig. 2. found here, and this inſcription remains on a ſtone in the pariſh: HIC JACIT MVLIER BO ..... OBIIT, and many tumuli round it. It was the place of the Eiſteddfod or ſeſſions of the bards and minſtrels for many centuries[e].

From Denbigh to St. Aſaph is ſix miles over Pont yr allt goch, q. d. Redhill bridge, a new ſtone bridge over the river Elwy, conſiſting of a ſingle arch 28 yards wide, 10 high, 20 feet thick, the road over it 18 feet and an half wide, the high water mark 12 feet. On the eaſt ſide of the river are hanging woods reaching almoſt to St. Aſaph, which is one mile and St. Aſaph. an half from this bridge. The town conſiſts of about 50 houſes moſtly of brick. Biſhop Anian 1283 calls it vicus campeſtris ubi rarus eſt acceſſus hominum: the wars alſo are taken into the account as a third reaſon at that time for removing the ſee to Rhuddlan, where was a good caſtle under the protection of the king of England. St. Aſaph is now the beſt ſee in Wales. The cathedral is a ſimple building, built chiefly ſince 1441, in length 182 feet, in breadth 50. The weſt tower is 93 feet high. It has monuments for biſhops Owen 1512, Griffiths 1666, Barrow 1680. The dean and chapter out of a fund veſted in them for that purpoſe are now rebuilding the choir, the eaſt window of which is copied from Tintern abbey[f]. The palace and deanry are commodious good houſes. It being peculiar to St. Aſaph that the cathedral is not uſed for a pariſh church as the other Welſh cathedrals are[g], the pariſh church ſtands at a little diſtance from it within the town, with its two ailes called Eglwys Aſaph and Eglwys Kyndern from the Saints Aſaph and Kentigern.

Under the lofty precipice of Cefn Ogo is a moſt magnificent cavern, and near it lies the ſmall market town of Abergelleu. Hereabouts begins the Abergelleu. rich arable flat which extends over Rhuddlan marſh and beyond Preſtatyn in Flintſhire. The ſea has gained on this coaſt ſome miles, and at low water, far from the clayey banks, is a long tract of hard loam filled with the bodies of oaks tolerably entire, but ſo ſoft as to be cut with a knife like wax. On one of the high limeſtone cliffs over Abergelleu, named Coppa yr Wylfa, or the mount of the watch tower, is a very ſtrong Britiſh poſt. Above Cegidoc, or St. George's pariſh, on a hill called Pen y parc, is another, ſaid to have been occupied by Owen Gwynedd after his fine retreat before Henry II. whom he here prevented from farther invaſion of his country. On the acceſſible ſides are double and treble ditches and ramparts: the area is near three quarters of a mile round, and near the edge of the ſteep part facing Rhuddlan, is ſmoothed into the form of a terrace. St. George had in this pariſh his holy well, at which horſes were offered: all that were diſtempered were ſprinkled with water, and bleſſed by a form[h], as at the church of St. Hippolytus in Hertfordſhire[i].

On the banks of the Elwy is Y fynnon vair or our lady's well, a fine ſpring incloſed in an angular wall formerly roofed, and the walls of a croſs-ſhaped chapel finely over-grown with ivy[k].

Rhuddlan. "Rethelan, commonly called Rudelan, cometh of "rethe roone color or pale redde and glan the "ſhore[l]."

Rhuddlan is a ſmall borough though once a conſi-

[a] Ward in Horſl. 456. [b] Lel. V. 56. [c] Pennant, II. 24.
[d] I. 82, 83. [e] Penn. Ib. 425. [f] Penn. II. 12. [g] Willis, p. 20.
[h] Penn. II. 332—336. [i] Chauncey, 398. Salmon, Herts. 167. [k] Pennant, II. 21. [l] Lel. V. 56.

derable

derable town. The burgeſſes with thoſe of Rhudlan franchiſe contribute to elect a repreſentative for Flint. Edward I. kept three Chriſtmaſes in its caſtle, which is ſquare, ſurrounded by a double ditch on the north and a ſtrong wall and foſs all round. In this wall below the hill on the river's bank is a ſquare tower called Twr Silod. The principal entrance is from the weſt flanked by two round towers There is another at the ſouth-eaſt corner, and one of theſe is called Twr y Brennin or the King's tower. The walls incloſe an irregular ſquare with galleries and apartments all round; the north ſide is moſt ſhattered, the other three pretty intire. Major Ingoldſby in the laſt age is reported to have ſold the timbers. General Mytton took it from the king 1646. To the ſouth of the caſtle they ſhew a mount called Tut hill, whence they ſay it was battered. But it is a more antient fortification ſurrounded by a very deep ditch including alſo the abbey and falling into that of the caſtle. It may have been the reſidence of the antient Welſh princes burnt by Harold[m]. Robert de Rodelent or Rothelan is expreſsly ſaid on his epitaph at Cheſter to have built this caſtle, and long poſſeſſed it, firmiter indigenis oppoſitum rabidis. Gryffydd ap Kynan prince of Wales burnt it while in Robert's poſſeſſion. Here Randal earl of Cheſter was ſurpriſed and reſcued by the troops of minſtrels as before-mentioned. He loſt his life by venturing too far among the ſavages with only one ſoldier[n]. Henry II. rebuilt or refortified this caſtle, and Giraldus was nobly entertained in it. It derived its greateſt ſtrength and magnificence from Edward I. Queen Eleanor was delivered of a princeſs here 1283. Northumberland ſeized this caſtle 1399 previous to the depoſition of Richard II. who dined here in his company in his way to Flint caſtle. They ſhew in a houſe in the village the gabel of the houſe where it is pretended Edward I. held the parliament that paſſed the ſtatute of Rothelan or Rhuddlan 12 Edward I. 1284. "It is no "more than a ſet of regulations made by the king in "council for the government of Wales, which the "preamble informs us was now totally ſubdued. It "not only informs us what were the cuſtoms of "Wales at that time, but, by the remedies provided, "what was the law of England. Edward had the "year before directed inquiſitions on oath before "certain commiſſioners, whoſe returns are printed "in the appendix to Hoel Dha's laws, and contain "many curious particulars with regard to the cuſ-"toms which prevailed in Wales before Edward's "conqueſt, ſome of which are ſtill retained, others "altered, and ſome entirely aboliſhed by this ſtatute. "It ſhews the abſolute power of the Welſh princes "to make laws and allodial tenures, the general "prevalence of gavelkind, and that Wales was con-"ſidered jure feudali ſubjecta to England[o]." In this among other excellent inſtitutions ſheriffs and coroners were introduced and their powers defined. On this occaſion Edward actually introduced to his new ſubjects his new-born ſon as one who never ſpoke a word of the Engliſh language, and whoſe life was irreproachable. Another old houſe where they pretend that the king reſided is ſhewn on the north ſide of the caſtle. More to the ſouth is the ſhell of a priory of Black monks, founded before 1268, when Anian de Schonan its prior was made biſhop of St. Aſaph. His cathedral having been burnt in Edward I's wars he had obtained that king's leave to tranſfer the ſee hither with a grant of land and 1000 marks toward the building, but his application to the Pope failing, the deſign came to nothing. The church here appears to have been a large one with tranſepts and lancet windows, converted into a dwelling-houſe ſince Buck drew it 1742. Biſhop Tanner ſuppoſes the gate mentioned in the additions to Camden half a mile from the village to have belonged to an hoſpital as old as Edward I's time[p]. Biſhop Gibſon ſays, Offa king of Mercia and Meredydh king of Dyved died in the battle fought at Rhudlan A. D. 794; but Matthew Paris in vita Offæ, p. 19. ſays he defeated with great ſlaughter Mannodiu king of Wales, who had juſt before by croſſing his ditch, which he filled up, ſurprized him at Chriſtmas, and repulſed him. As to his death he adds, ſome ſay it happened at Offelug. Leland[q] at Rome or in his return from Jeruſalem. The Saxon Chronicle[r] dates it a year ſooner. Dr. Powel[s] calls the Welch prince Caradoc. The fine plaintive Welſh tune called Morfa Rhuddlan from the marſh where the battle was fought is ſuppoſed to have been compoſed on the occaſion. The tide comes up to the caſtle. The grounds on each ſide the river are as ſubject to be overflowed as any others at the mouth of ſuch a river. The bridge conſiſting of two arches was rebuilt or refounded 1595, that date with the arms of Hughes biſhop of St. Aſaph being on the battlements. The tide brings hither flat veſſels of about 70 tons, but the port of theſe parts is three miles further at the vorryd or great ford, where the river diſcharges itſelf into the ſea, and from whence much corn and timber is exported[t].

Bod Rhyddan.

Between Rhudlan and Diſerth is Bod Rhyddan, a pleaſant retreat in woods on the ſea ſhore belonging to the late ſir John Conway of Bodrhyddan, who uſed to ſay the wheat produced hereabouts was equal to any in Hertfordſhire. On his death 1721 the eſtate was divided[u].

Diſerth.

"Thiſarte or Diſarte caſtle in Flintſhire, by the "name in Welſh is thus expounded; Thi is privativa "particula as not; Sart is ſtepe up[x]."

Diſerth is a ſmall village among hills, from whoſe top fell a beautiful caſcade forming a fine coup d'œil and riſing from a ſmall well with a reſervoir called Ffynnon Aſa or St. Aſaph's well in a dingle in Cwm pariſh about a mile off[y]. Its perpendicular height was about 17 yards, and it was concealed between two arches of the rock, behind which it had worn itſelf a paſſage; and being collected in a baſon afterwards turned a mill, the enlarging whoſe ſtream has now deſtroyed it. Juſt below is the church or chapel dedicated to St. Bridget with ſome good painting on the eaſt window. On a ſouth window of the chancel is cut Sir John Conway 1636; on the ſouth porch 1603 a. reg. 45. In the yard is an antient croſs adorned with wreathed or chained work: another with ſome traces of a human figure ſerves as a ſtyle: an altar-tomb has a rude croſs and ſword. Juſt beyond this village to the north of the rock,

[m] Powel, 100.
[n] Dugd. Bar. I. 30.
[o] Barrington on the Statutes, 4th Ed. p. 120.
[p] P. 711.
[q] Coll. I. 210-11. 220. 330.
[r] P. 65.
[s] P. 20.
[t] Pennant, II. 9—17.
[u] Ib. p. 8.
[x] Lel. V. 56.
[y] Pennant, II. 6, 7.

out of which the caſcade ſprings, on a higher and more diſtant mountain are the ſmall remains of Gerri Caſtle or Caſtelh y craig, in ſituation and form not unlike Dinas Bran, but the hill much lower. It probably was the laſt of the chain of Britiſh poſts on the Glwydian hills, and was Diſerth caſtle fortified by Henry II.[z] and Llewelyn ap Gryffyd raſed it 20 years after At the ſiege of this place was ſlain Eineon ſon of Ririd Vlaidd. A croſs was erected on the ſpot called Croes Eineon, the ſhaft of which is ſuppoſed to form the ſtyle beforementioned[a]. The biſhop of St. Aſaph has a farm hereabouts called Tre'r Caſtel. Tre'r Caſtel, q. d. the town of the caſtle, and (ſtill in Dyſart pariſh) a houſe as archdeacon, the archdeaconry having been united to the biſhopric ever ſince 1573, as was that of Bangor 1685. Farther on appears in ſight a hill with a conical one on its centre called Gwlch, q. d. the hill. In a field a little ſouth of the caſtle is a ruinous building called Siamber Wen, ſaid to have been the ſeat of ſir Robert Pounderling once conſtable of the caſtle, who loſt an eye in a tilting match with one of his countrymen[b]. Moel Hiraddug a Britiſh poſt on a very ſteep rocky hill with an immenſe agger of looſe ſtones forms the next poſt to this caſtle. On the eaſt ſide on a place called Marion are long deep trenches, out of which iron appears to have been antiently dug[c].

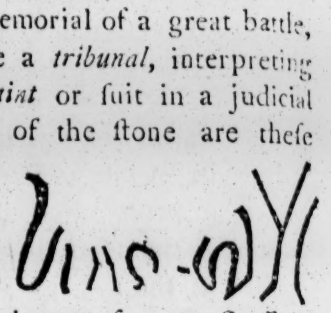
Newmarket. We come next to Newmarket a miſerable hamlet not mentioned in the maps, the name of the pariſh Trelawnyd. being Trelawnyd, where a manufactory of nails was attempted without ſucceſs. In the church-yard is a handſome old croſs. Here is one of the charity ſchools founded 1726 by Dr. Daniel Williams, a diſſenting miniſter, in every county in North Wales, endowing them each with £. 8. per annum, and that at Wrexham, his birth place, with £. 15. Each has alſo a fund for apprenticing children at £. 5. apiece[d]. On the downs beyond was a famous courſe, now diſuſed. On the edge of it cloſe by the road a large barrow, and a ſecond half dug down; eight or ten more on the hill beyond. Another abutts on the road ſouthward. About a mile farther in a corn field to the ſouthward ſtands a ſtone called Maen achwynfan or the Stone of lamentation. Its height from the ground to the top of the croſs is 12 feet, breadth from north to ſouth two feet and a quarter, from eaſt to weſt 10 inches. All the ſides are adorned with chequered work, various wreathings and flouriſhes within about two feet of the ground. On the middle of the eaſt ſide below another croſs is a very rude figure of a man holding a ſpear. Another like it without a ſpear on the ſouth ſide. On the top is a circle carved with ſeveral others with a knob in the centre, whence iſſue rays imitating a croſs. The pedeſtal now buried was five feet long, four feet and an half broad, and about 14 inches thick; and the monument being let through it reaches about five inches below the bottom, ſo that the whole height is about 13 feet. The name occurs in a deed dated 1388. A barrow in which ſkulls and bones were found was within a furlong of it, and 20 more ſuch called Gorſedheu in its neighbourhood[e]. On a hill to the ſouth is a ruined building named Capel Gelli, probably a chapel to Baſingwerk abbey. To the weſt about a ſtone's throw, a cottage called by the ſame name as the ſtone, and ſaid o have its name from the ſick folks (the wounded in the battle) lying there. Juſt behind this was a barrow opened 1767, to mend the road, when human bones were found on it. This is about 100 feet north-weſt from the ſtone. Theſe circumſtances are ſo many proofs that this ſtone (which inclines a little to the north) is the memorial of a great battle, and not as as ſome ſuppoſe a tribunal, interpreting planctus as the French plaint or ſuit in a judicial ſenſe. On the ſouth ſide of the ſtone are theſe ſtrokes, whether letters or not uncertain, but omitted in the print. Mr. Pennant inclines to think it a croſs of penance like the weeping croſs near Stafford. We have engraved it Pl. XXI. fig. 3.



Glol an incloſed mountain a little further on has among the buſhes various circular foundations of rude ſtones[f].

A mile hence near the ſea ſtands Moſtyn hall the ſeat Moſtyn.
of the family of that name lineally deſcended with many other Welſh families from Tudor Trevor earl of Hereford before the Conqueſt, and firſt ſettled here in the reign of Richard II. though they did not aſſume the name till Henry VIII. The houſe is irregular with an antient hall and kitchen, few good apartments, but ſome good antique buſts and family pictures, a capital library of books and MSS. collected by the late ſir Thomas Moſtyn, and ſeveral antiquities found in Wales[g], and occaſionally mentioned. Henry VII. was concealed here, and narrowly eſcaped the ſearch of Richard III. In the adjoining townſhip of Tredenowen and pariſh of Whiteford among fine woods of oak of ſpontaneous growth, ſtands Downing, a ſeat of Thomas Pennant, Downing.
eſq; to whoſe indefatigable reſearches the natural hiſtory and topography of Great Britain have ſo great obligations. The collieries of Moſtyn and Bychton have been worked for a very conſiderable ſpace, and in the laſt century ſupplied Dublin and the eaſtern coaſt of Ireland. The Dee has ſince gained two miles. The ſmelting houſes and the improvement of land by lime make a large conſumption of coal at home. That the Britans were early acquainted with this foſſil is evident from their having a primitive name for it, Glo: and from the diſcovery of a flint ax in one of the beds[h]. On the ſhore is a coal mine, which ſome years ago took fire and burnt out: the rocks appear flaked with the heat[i]. This eſtate abounds with coal works as do the environs with lead mines. In one of the hills is a large cavern, ſuppoſed to be made by the Romans when they worked the mines. In a deep valley the ſtream from Holiwell turns nine mills, viz. one for braſs pans, one for iron wire, one for white and red lead, one for copper, one for paper, one for ſnuff, and three for corn. On the oppoſite or eaſt ſide of the valley are beautiful hanging woods belonging to ſir Piers Moſtyn of Trelacre and Greenfield, a younger branch of the Moſtyn family.

On the ſummit of Copa'r'leni, the hill above Newmarket, is an enormous carnedd of limeſtones; probably a ſpecula or tumulus. The tract from hence to Caerwys was certainly a field of battle. No place in North Wales exhibits an equal quantity of tumuli covered with turf and covering urns. Part of the [z] Wynne, p. 262. Powel, 307. 326.

[a] Pennant II. 7.
[b] Lel. It. VI. 24.
[c] Penn. II. 7, 8.
[d] Ib. 2, 3.
[e] I. 12.
[f] II. 2.
[g] Penn. II. 14—17.
[h] Pennant, I. 16, 17.
[i] Phil. Tranſ. N° 136. Pennant I, 422.

brow

brow of the hill is ſtill called Bryn y Saethiau or the hill of arrows. Under this hill is the little church of Gwaen yſkor; remarkable for its antient regiſter[k]. Gronant moor has been greatly incroached on by the ſea before the reign of Henry V. On approaching Preſtatyn about two miles from Trelacre the flat becomes extremely fertile in corn, particularly wheat; and ſo continues on to Rhuddlan. A little below Preſtatyn mill in a meadow are the ſmall remains of its caſtle; foundations, and a foſs at ſome diſtance. It was deſtroyed by Owen Gwynedd 1167[l].

On the hill of Garreg or the rock above Whiteford, a high and moſt conſpicuous part of the country, ſtands a Pharos, erected by the Romans to conduct navigators to and from Deva, along the difficult channel of the Seteia Portus. It is tolerably intire, built of rude limeſtone bedded in hard mortar, of a circular form and conſiderable height; the inner diameter 12 feet and an half; thickneſs of walls three feet four inches; the doors or entrances oppoſite to each other, each having over it a ſquare funnel like a chimney, opening on the outſide about half way up the chimney. On each ſide is a window. About four feet from the ground are three circular holes through the whole wall lined with mortar as is frequent in Roman buildings. Within are traces of a ſtaircaſe leading to the upper ſtory, in which are eight ſmall ſquare openings caſed with free ſtone, and each ſeparated by wooden panels, now gone though the grooves in which they were placed remain. In each of theſe partitions were placed the lights which the Romans thought neceſſary to keep diſtinct leſt they ſhould be miſtaken by ſeamen for a ſtar, as we learn from Pliny[m]: "Periculum in corrivatione ignium ne ſidus exiſtimetur." To this building is very evidently a broad raiſed road pointing from the eaſt, and near its upper end are marks of a trench round this uſeful edifice[n].

Greenfield or Maes Glas is the older name of Baſingwerk, where almoſt at the mouth of the Dee, a mile from Holiwell, ſome princes of Wales or Ranulph 3d earl of Cheſter, began a monaſtery 1131, much encreaſed and made an abbey for Ciſtercians by Henry II. after 1150. It is beautifully ſituated under the hills among woods, and great part of the refectory and dormitory remain above, and the ſhell of the chapel of the Knights Templars: the weſt end of which has lancet windows as throughout the whole, and is converted into a barn. The abbey was valued at £.150. 7s.[o] The abbot had ſummons to parliament five times t. Edward I.[p] Some ſay Henry II. founded the houſe of Templars here[q]. A brick barn ſtrengthened with timber may have been the monks' granary, and here is kept an epitaph on George Petre ſon of William lord Petre[r], who married a widow Moſtyn, and died at Wexford 1647. This abbey was inhabited within theſe 70 years. Lady Moſtyn grandmother of ſir Piers pulled down great part of the remains to build a houſe hard by. A little weſt of it is an antient decayed oak called the Abbot's, meaſuring 15 feet in girth[s]. Part of Wat's dyke, miſcalled Offa's, is viſible near the ſouth bounds of the monaſtery[t]. Wynne[u] mentions the caſtle of Baſingwerk, fortified by Henry II. of which now remains only a piece of a foundation of a wall on the edge of Wat's ditch, built by Richard earl of Cheſter 1119, demoliſhed by the Welſh t. Stephen, refortified by Henry II. 1157[x], finally deſtroyed by Owen Gwynedd 1165[y].

Holiwell is a well-built town of one long handſome ſtreet running from eaſt to weſt. It has the moſt flouriſhing market in North-Wales, renewed 1703. Under the hill is the celebrated ſpring which breaks out with great rapidity diſcharging 22 tuns in a minute. It riſes in a long baſon 12 feet by 7, containing 240 tons of water as demonſtrated by experiment of Mr. Price the miniſter here 1731; four feet deep, ſurrounded by a ſtone wall with pillars ſupporting the roof and making a walk all round, and on the other ſide of the chapel with iron rails. The roof over this well is exquiſitely carved in ſtone with the legend of St. Winifred and the ſeven ſculptures, Pl. XXI. fig. 5—10.[z] alluding to the houſe of Stanley, who erected both it and the beautiful Gothic chapel, built over it t. Henry VII. by the counteſs of Richmond[a], traces of whoſe buſt and her huſband's the earl of Derby are carved in one ſtone, and ſurrounded by badges of the houſe of Stanley, &c. The roof is hung round with crutches and hand-barrows left by perſons who have received a perfect cure. At the bottom of the well are ſeveral round ſtones with red ſpots, a kind of Jungermania moſs, odoriferous, which they pretend ſtained with Winifred's blood, and others on which grows a long odoriferous biſſus iolithus called her hair, and found alſo in an holy well in Caernarvonſhire before-mentioned[b]. The conferva gelatinoſa is alſo found here. The inner part of this well is ſet apart for bathing, the outer for common uſes. The little reſort is chiefly from Lancaſhire. James II. was the laſt crowned head that came here. The cures performed by bathing in this clear cold ſpring, either by its coldneſs or by the mixture of lead or clay aſcribed to it after rains, are ſo ſpeedy and well atteſted as well by proteſtants as catholics as to be almoſt miraculous. At the end of the front walk a rich niche held a ſtatue of the patroneſs, taken away 1637, and her legend was painted againſt the wall. The upper part level with the hill is a ſchool aſcended to from the weſt; the chancel a lumber room. The chapel is the property of John Davies of Llanerch, eſq. Sir Thomas Egerton of Heaton near Mancheſter, now lord Grey of Wilton, is lord of the manor, and great part of the town belongs to Mr. Pennant of Downing. On Bryn y caſtel ſtood the caſtle of Treffynnon or St. Winifred, fortified by the earl of Cheſter 1209[c]. The pariſh church on the hill above is alſo dedicated to St. Winifred. She was daughter of Thewith, a nobleman of theſe parts, and inſtructed in the Chriſtian religion by her uncle St. Beuno. Being remarkably beautiful, Cradoc, the king's ſon, fell deſperately in love with her, and finding her one day alone, ſolicited her to comply with his deſires. She fled out of the back door to the church, which had been built by Beuno with her

Holiwell.

[k] How antient it is, Mr. Pennant has not told us.
[l] Pennant, II. 3—6.
[m] N. H. XXXVI. c. 12.
[n] Pennant, II. 1, 2.
[o] Tanner, 716.
[p] Pennant ib. 26.
[q] Tan. 716. n. Pennant ib.
[r] Pennant, I 448.
[s] Ib. 28.
[t] Pennant, I. 22.
[u] P. 175.
[x] Mat. Par. 129.
[y] Powel, 223. Pennant, Ib. 22, 23.
[z] Fig. 4, 5, 6. are arms and badges of the houſe of Stanley, Fig. 8. a rebus of Elizabeth Hopton wife of ſir William Stanley, who was beheaded 1495. Fig. 7. the wolf's head, the arms of the earl of Cheſter, incloſed in a garter, is a compliment in ſir William who had been chamberlain of that city and juſticiary of North Wales. Fig. 9. the arms of Catharine of Arragon beſpeak her to have been a benefactreſs here: the eagle fig. 10. ſeems alſo to belong to her. Pennnant, I. 31.
[a] Wyndham, 167.
[b] Pennant, I. 38.
[c] Ib. 38.

father's liberality. But before ſhe could get down the hill the prince overtook her, and in the violence of diſappointed paſſion ſtruck off her head with his ſword. As ſoon as Beuno and the congregation recovered from their ſurprize at ſeeing this ſtream of water guſh out from the place where her head firſt fell, Beuno ruſhed up the hill with the head in his hand, and after ſending the murderer to the devil by his curſes[d], raiſed the murdered maiden to life by his prayers. She took the veil, and maintained here a company of virgins not aſſociated under any rule: Beuno having before he quitted this part of the country, aſſured to her three great privileges, that her blood ſhould never be waſhed out of the ſtones, that her merits ſhould be all prevalent in one or other world, and that all letters or preſents ſhe ſhould ſend to him would come ſafe to his hands at Clynogvawr 50 miles off by this well which communicated with the ſea. Seven years after ſhe removed to Gwytherin in Denbighſhire, where ſhe ſucceeded to the preſidency of a nunnery, and was buried in the church, where four rude upright ſtones, one of them charged with a rude inſcription, (ſee Pl. XIX. fig. 18.) are ſhewn for her ſhrine or tomb. Thence ſhe was removed in the reign of Stephen to Shrewſbury, where ſhe remained till the diſſolution. There is great reaſon to believe this legend is of modern coinage, perhaps by the monks of Shrewſbury, the place being called Treffynon or the well, without the epithet of Holy[e]. Dr. Powel aſcribes the firſt invention to the monks of Baſingwerk, no writer before the foundation of that abbey 1312 mentioning it, not even Giraldus who lodged there a night. Some ſuppoſe the well a ſubterraneous current turned hither by miners[f], but ſuch a ſtrong ſpring might break out by natural as well as artificial means ſince the time of Giraldus, or that credulous man be more ſtruck with a legendary wonder of nature or art than a real one.

Nantglin. "There is in the countery of Denbigh a chapel "by a pariſh church in a place corruptly called "Nantclin for Nantglin by Aſtract brook, whereas "divers ſaints were of antient time buried[g]."

Flint. Flint is called in Domeſday Coleſul, which name is ſtill retained in the hundred. The county town was incorporated by Edward I. but has no market. It has indeed nothing but its antiquity to make it conſiderable. Agreeable to Speed's plan it is of an oval or elliptic form, encloſed with a vaſt ditch and double wall of earth, which at the eaſt end next the caſtle unites in one, and in it are four entrances. The caſtle, built of red grit ſtone, ſtands cloſe to the ſea on a rock, and is a right-angled parallelogram incloſing about three quarters of an acre, treble ditched, or rather divided into three parts by as many ditches. The firſt is formed by the high bank of the town, and the firſt bank of the caſtle, beyond which is a large ſquare area. Another ditch ſeparates this from a ſmaller ſquare court with round towers. One ſide of this court is entire with many pointed windows. The caſtle is defended by three round[h] towers at three of the angles, and at the ſouth-eaſt by a fourth larger than the reſt, and detached from the wall, which runs concentrically with it.' This is called the double tower, and is the keep or dungeon to which Richard II. retreated. Its outward diameter meaſures 40 feet. It is formed by two concentric walls, each ſix feet thick, having a gallery eight feet broad and 14 high, arched, with another over it, and between them opening by four doors into the circular area in the centre, about 20 feet diameter. Towards the weſt end of the ſouth ſide of the caſtle in the ditch is a draw-well communicating with the ſecond ſtory. From the ſouth ſide runs a low wall encircling a conſiderable area, having earth on the outſide piled up to the top, and ſeeming of later date than the reſt[i]. Richard II. on his return from Ireland diſguiſed like a prieſt landing at Milford haven[k], retired firſt to Conwy caſtle, then fled to Beaumaris, thence to Carnarvon[l]; but finding no proviſion nor beds in either of theſe caſtles returned to Conwy[m]. In one of the deep bottoms near Llandulas he was ſurrounded by a troop of ſoldiers which the earl of Northumberland had planted in ambuſh there. Theſe conveyed him to Rhudlan caſtle, where he dined, and afterwards to Flint caſtle, of both which the earl had poſſeſſed himſelf. He ſlept here, and next day after dinner being inveſted by 10,000 men, he had an interview, Auguſt 22, 1399, with Henry duke of Lancaſter in this caſtle[n]. The ſhort conference ended, the king and duke rode together to Cheſter the ſame night with the army, and thus the king with all his treaſure and furniture came into the hands of the duke. This caſtle was diſmantled by the parliament 1647, and ſtood two ſieges during the civil wars. It belongs to the crown, which appoints the conſtable, who is alſo mayor. The church three miles off is but mean, and a chapel to Northop. In the yard is a croſs of one ſtone eight feet high, a yew tree four feet ſquare, and ſix high, and on the north ſide a headleſs figure praying and recumbent.

About a mile from the town on the lower road to Cheſter ſtood a croſs, called Atis croſs, the ground round which is ſtill called Croes-ati, which at the Conqueſt gave name to the hundred then part of Cheſhire but now enirely in Flintſhire. Tradition places a large town here in antient times, and it is ſaid foundations of buildings are often diſcovered. That here was a Roman ſtation hereabouts and alſo a Roman ſmelting work is evident from the great quantities of ſcoria of lead, bits of lead ore, and fragments of melted lead diſcovered on ſeveral ſpots here and along the country juſt above the ſhore in the adjoining pariſh of Northop; and from multitudes of Roman coins, fibulæ, variety of antique inſtruments and fragments of melted lead found here, as alſo wedges, pickaxes, and bracelets dug up in and near Ledbrook and among the Croes Atti ruins. Among the leſſer articles were an ornament of gold of twiſted wire ſtudded with little bits of ſolid gold in form of a button, with a ſhank, probably belonging to a gold bracelet or necklace, ſtudded alternately with bits of blue glaſs, of which there were other pieces: a ſmall bronze head, the back part affixed to iron; a ſtylus, a kind of ſpoon, an inſtrument bent in a hook at the end like a picklock, a bodkin, a forceps, ſeveral fibulæ, ſurgeon's inſtru-

[d] The devil was tho iredy and body and ſoul nom
So that no man wyſte whodyr that he ly com. Legend.

[e] Fleetwood. [f] Gibſon. [g] Lel. VI. 46. [h] Not polygonal as Mr. Groſe. [i] Groſe.

[k] Barclowlie caſtle in Wales. Hollinſhed, II. 499. Herelowlie, Vita R. II. p. 149. Carte, II. 632. Otterbourne's Chron. p. 207. who adds, the king went to Holt caſtle alſo.

[l] Stowe, 320, 321. [m] Hollinſhed ubi ſup. [n] Froiſſart calls it Fluich, perhaps Flinch.

ments,

ments, keys, rings, a braſs nail, a bulla, a locket, a bronze weight, &c. engraved by Mr. Pennant in two plates in the firſt volume of his Welſh Tour [o]. The whole eſtate belongs to Owen Saluſbury Brereton, eſq. conſtable of Flint, whoſe horſe drinking in the brook kicked up many of theſe articles, which led to the diſcovery.

Hawarden. Hawarden is a long paved town, and at the extremity is a ruined caſtle called in Welſh Pen y Llwch, or Pennardh Lach, or the head land above Saltney, now vulgarly Pennard y Las, the ſeat of ſir John Glynne, bart. The caſtle being on the frontiers of England was very ſtrong, ſituated on a high hill in the park, ſurrounded with a double ditch, and a wall on the innermoſt. On the ſummit is half a round tower commanding an extenſive proſpect, and a ſmall part of the outer wall remains. Henry VI. granted it to ſir Thomas Stanley, in whoſe family it remained till the civil war. After the execution of the gallant James Stanley, earl of Derby, it was purchaſed by ſerjeant Glynne, whoſe deſcendant ſir John Glynne now poſſeſſes it. It was ſurrendered to the king's troops in their return from Ireland 1643, but retaken after the taking of Cheſter 1645. On ſome diſturbances among the parliament ſoldiers in North Wales 1647, it was diſmantled; but remained pretty entire. Sir William Glynne demoliſhed it before 1680 [p].

Weſt of the church by the road is a mount called Truman's hill, with a cavity on the top as a ſmall camp. Another mount called Conna's Hê is near Broadlane houſe, the ſeat of the Glynnes, built 1752. The Roſt, a round eminence, with foſſes and an exploratory mount, lies in Gresford pariſh, and at Caer Eſtyn was a fourth [q].

The ſpring, called Fynnow Leinw, or the flowing well, in Kilken pariſh, has loſt the ſingular property aſcribed to it by Mr. Camden [r]. Dr. Powel ſuppoſed this to be the fountain to which Giraldus [s] aſcribed that quality: but that was more probably Ffynnon Aſſa, of which the ſame phænomenon is related [t].

Kilken church carved roof is ſaid to have come from Baſingwerk abbey [u].

" Hope, alias Quene Hope lordſhip, longing chiefly " to the king, contains but one pariſh. The ground " is hilly: in the vallies is metely good corn. Alan " river cometh through it. The town of Hope, " now decayed, was ſumtime burgeſid and privilegid, " and is caullid in Walſch Cairgorles. Ther ſtond yet " grete waulles of a caſtle ſet on an hylle, wher " be diggid good mille ſtones of a blew girthe [x]." The church with a large ſquare tower ſtands on a hill. The ſmall remains of the caſtle make a pictureſque termination to the village. Edward I. excepted it and its land from Warren's grant, annexing it to Flintſhire, from which Henry VIII. ſeparated it, and added it to Denbighſhire, but afterwards reſtored it to this county. Much limeſtone and entrochi are found on the hill [y]. Edward I's queen lodged in this caſtle in her way to Caernarvon, and it was ſoon after burnt. The king beſtowed it on her, and from her it had the name of Quene Hope. This manor of Hope is the only one at preſent poſſeſſed in Wales by the earl of Derby. Richard II. had granted it to John Holland, earl of Huntingdon [z]. At the end of Caergurly village is a fine bridge over Alen. The form of the place viewed from the ſummit of the adjacent rock beſpeaks it to have been a Roman ſtation, rectangular, one ſide formed by the ſlope of the river, with three broad parallel ſtreets, interſected by three narrower at right angles. Roman bricks were found in the ruins of the old houſe of Hope, and large beds of iron cinders ſuppoſed works of the Romans near Caer Eſtyn in this pariſh. A Roman road points from the village towards Mold viſible more than once in the fields on this ſide Plas Tog. An artificial mount ſtands cloſe on its courſe. Another road points towards Hawarden; there might have been a third on the Wrexham ſide of Caergwrle, Croes y ſtreet there paſſing over Cefn y bedd, or the hill of Grace, and leading to the caſtle. Theſe roads were one way into the mineral parts of Wales, where Roman money has been found. Mr. Edwards makes a happy conjecture concerning the etymology of this place Caer Gawr Lle, or the camp of the Giant Legion, Lleon Gawr, the Britans beſtowing that title on the 26th Legion, analagous to Victrix, giving it the ſtrength of a giant [a].

On Rhyddyn demeſne belonging to ſir John Glynne adjoining to the Allan are two ſalt ſprings, formerly reſorted to as antiſcorbutic [b].

In Moleſdale, a delicious tract of rich land, is " but one great paroche called Plouhe Wriothegrig, " of ſome communely Moleſdale. Ther longgith " three chapels unto it. Some ſay it was ons a market " town. The name of a maire, and a great number of " howſes be withowt token almoſt deſtroyed, and ther " hath been two ſtreates as Streate Byle and Streate " Dadlede in Walſch, in Engliſh the Courthowſe " ſtreet, beſides other little lanes. Now in all be " ſcant 40 houſes. At the north ende of Byle " ſtreet appere diches and hilles yn token of an " antient caſtle or buildings there. It is now caullid " Mont Brenebyly, [now the Bailey hill [c]], and on " the ſide of it is a fair ſpring [d]." The Welſh name Yr Wyddgryg ſignifies the conſpicuous hill or barrow anſwering to Monthault and the Bailey hill. All that remains of the caſtle is the long hill, having at the north end a keep and at the ſouth end a long ſquare area, both divided from it by a ditch, and another ditch ſurrounds the whole divided into three parts. In one have been found bones of beaſts. A gold coin of Veſpaſian was found here [e]. The church, built probably about the end of Henry VIII. in imitation of that at Gresford, is a ſtately ſtructure, 124 feet from eaſt to weſt, and from north to ſouth 61: the tower rebuilt by Mr. Turner of Hawarden in a happy imitation of the reſt of the building. In a ſouth chapel in a ſmall nich is a ſtatue of a biſhop, to whom an angel holds this ſcroll, Robertus permiſſione divina epus Aſſav for Robert Parfew, biſhop of St. Aſaph from 1536 to 1554, when Mary tranſlated him to Hereford, where he died and was buried 1557 [f]. But this memorial of him was erected by one John ap Rhys as an inſcription now defaced ſet forth.

Moleſdale Mold.

Againſt a pillar of the nave is this unuſual epitaph:

[o] Pennant, I. 51, 52. 67—73.
[p] Groſe. Pennant I. 89—101.
[q] Penn. I. 89, 90.
[r] Ib. I. 411.
[s] Itin. II. 10.
[t] Gibſon.
[u] Pennant, I. 410.
[x] Lel. V. 38.
[y] Pennant, I. 404, 405.
[z] Dugd. Bar. II. 78.
[a] Ib. 403.
[b] Ib. 407.
[c] Pennant, I. 407.
[d] Ib. 391.
[e] Ib. 395.
[f] Ib. 393.

William

William Wynne, of Tower, D.D. ſometyme fellow of All Souls college in Oxford, and rector of Llanvechan, in this dioceſe, departed this life, aged [g]
In conformity to antient uſage, from a proper regard to decency, and a concern for the health of his fellow creatures, he was moved to give particular directions for being buried in the adjoining churchyard, and not in the church; and as he ſcorned flattering of others while living, he has took care to prevent being flattered himſelf when dead, by cauſing this ſmall memorial to be ſet up in his life time.
God be merciful to me a ſinner.
Heb Duw heb ddim.

The inſcriptions Pl. XX. fig. 11, 12, are on the pillars of this church, and fig. 13, 14. on two inſcribed ſtones in the north ſide of the middle aile. In 1783 was dug up in the churchyard a ſtone inſcribed:

Fundamentum
eccleſiæ Chriſtus
1547
W. H. epus.
William Hughes, biſhop of St. Aſaph.

In taking down the old ſteeple they found a foot under the ground floor burnt wheat, barley, rye, and beans laid three inches deep on an earthen floor over bones which were laid regularly for the depth of half a yard, and four or five yards ſquare [h]; alſo worked into the foundation a ſtone inſcribed

Here lieth the body of Gwenllean daughter of Evan ap David ap Yorworth, of which Evan it is ſaid on his tomb in Angleſea that 300 of his deſcendants ſung a pſalm at his funeral.

Near Trenddyn chapelry is a vaſt maen hir or monumental ſtone called Carreg y Llech, five feet high, ſeven broad, and 18 inches thick, ſet erect on a tumulus coarſely paved.

Near Mold the learned Uſher places the ſcene of the famous victory, which he calls Victoria Alleluiatica, becauſe the Pagans, Picts, and Saxons were put to flight by the repeated ſhouts of Alleluiah by the Britans commanded by Germanus and Lupus. In memory of the firſt of theſe generals, the place about a mile weſt from Mold is called Maes Garmon, or German's field. To the objection that St. German died in the year 435, and the Saxons under Hengiſt and Horſa did not arrive here till 449 [i] he anſwers that Ammianus Marcellinus, Claudian, and others, tell us that the Saxons long before made inroads into this iſland [k]. An obeliſk with an inſcription is erected on the ſpot by Mr. Griffith [l].

Alen r.

"The river Alen cometh within a myle of Mo-
"leſdale church in Moleſdale, called in Welſch
"Stratalen, and thet be coal pittes a three quarters
"of a mile from Moleſdale toune [m]."

On the firſt regulation of the Welſh counties by Henry VIII. Moleſdale, with the continuation of it which went under the name of Hopeſdale, were annexed to the county of Denbigh, but 33 Henry VIII. were given to Flintſhire [n].

In the coal pits at Leeſwood in this pariſh are found foſſil plants, as biſhop Gibſon was informed [o]. Upon enquiry of Mr. Richard Edwards, who rented the pits, I could not learn that he had ever met with any, though he had heard of their being found in the upper ſtratum, which he called a kind of ſlate. The coal cuts into large maſſes, which flake aſunder on beating. It is a ſpecies of kennel coal, and will burn in a candle, and bear working into knife handles, &c. I ſaw ſeveral pieces of peacock coal among it. Leeſwood.

At Upper Leeſwood is the ſeat of ſir George Wynne, the late baronet of that name, who acquired a fortune by a lead mine, which in 20 years yielded £.360,000. This he ſpent in every kind of extravagance, electioneering, draining a bog and building his houſe on it, which ſtands pleaſantly under a hill, with good gardens and a pair of wrought iron gates made by the ſame hand as thoſe at Chirk, and the ſecond wonder of Wales after them. Plas Teghe on this road, the ſeat of the antient family of the Trevors, built 1610, aſcribed to Inigo Jones, and having in the centre a hall 43 feet by 23, now inhabited by a farmer, is built round a ſquare court, with four towers at the corners, in each a room 23 feet by 19 with a cloſet 15 feet and an half [p]. Saeſ- Plas Teghe Tower the ſeat of the late Dr. Wynn a ſquare ſtone tower of three ſtories was, in Leland's time, inhabited by John Wynne ap Robert, and called Bron coit or Regnault's tower [q]. Tower.

Northop, q. d. North Hope to diſtinguiſh it from the other Hope, is named in Britain Llan Eurgain, from a female ſaint of that name. In the church are ſeveral old monuments, engraved by Mr. Pennant [r]. Northop. ld.

By the road ſide are ruins of Eulo caſtle, a ſmall double fortreſs with a ſquare area and two round towers. In the adjoining woods, ſtill called Coed Eulo, Henry II. received a ſevere repulſe, which was followed by the other mentioned by Mr. Camden at Coleſhill, from which laſt he retreated to a ſecure ſtation, probably now called Gadlys, q. d. Palatium caſtrenſe. He afterwards attempted to cut off the retreat of Owen Gwynned, who retired to a plain near St. Aſaph, ſtill called Cil Owen or Owen's retreat, and from thence to a ſtrong camp called Bryn y Pin, and at preſent Pen y parc in the pariſh of St. George. Bryn Dychwelwch or the eminence on which Owen founded the retreat, lies over Pentre Bagilt below Gadlys [s]. Eulo caſtle

"Hoel, a gentleman of Flyntſhir, that by
"antient accuſtume was wont to give the bagge [badge]
"of the ſilver harpe to the beſt harper of North Wales
"as by a privilege of his aunceſtors, dwellith at Pen-
"rine in Flintſhire. He hath alſo a ruinus caſtelet or "pile at a place called Caſtelh Yollo. This word
"Yollo is the ſame in Walſhe that Lluelen is and "Ludovicus in Latin. Yollo is two miles from [g] He died March 3, 1776, aged 77.

[h] A ſtratum of wheat was found in digging down the hill of the prætorium at Burgh caſtle, Suffolk, among urns, &c. It was pure and unmixed with earth, black as if burnt; great part of it reſembled a courſe powder, but the granulated form of the reſt plainly ſhewed what it had been. Rye was found in the ſame ſtate at Thetford. Ives's Garionenum, p. 36.
[i] See article Anglo Saxons, Introd. p. ciii. [k] Gibſon. [l] Pennant, I. 409.
[m] Lel. V. 37. [n] Pennant, I. 404. [o] Of theſe foſſil plants ſee Neath, p. 503.
[p] Penn I. 402. [q] Lel. V. 56. Penn. I. 399. [r] I. Pl. X.
[s] Penn. I. 87.

"Northop

"Northop village a little on the left hand in the "high way to Cheſter[t]." It belongs now to John Davies, eſq. of Llannerch. A great manufactory of coarſe earthen ware is carried on here[u].

On this road is Moel y Gaer, deſcribed by Mr. Lluyd, to which belongs a fortification of the ſame name near Bodvaris.

This camp is round, about 160 paces diameter like a round hill with the top cut off level: the vallum is of earth and almoſt oppoſite to the entrance is a tumulus[x]. It was probably one of the chain of poſts before-mentioned on the Clwydian hills, where the Ordovices diſputed their country with the Romans inch by inch. Here Howel Gwynedh of the tribe of Edwyn ap Gronw who ſided with Owen Glyndwr againſt Henry IV. was beheaded. He had long annoyed his Engliſh neighbours, but was at length taken by his enemies of the town of Flint, and his eſtate given to one Saxton. Before him one Owen ap Aldud had alſo oppoſed the Engliſh in theſe borders and kept all Tegaingl ſubject to him for three years, till he obtained his pardon[y].

Maelor Saeſneg is a hundred of Flintſhire, comprehending the pariſhes of Worthenbury, Bangor, Hanmer, Erbiſtock, and Hope, and the chapelry of Overton and ſome others inſulated in Denbyſhire, and ſeems to have taken its name from being the jointure of Emma, an Engliſhwoman, widow of Gryffydd ap Madoc, and was declared to conſtitute part of Flintſhire by Edward I. by the ſtatute of Wales[z].

Hanmer lake contains about 50 acres, having on one ſide the town the church and the ſeat of the Hanmers, a modern brick building. The church is a handſome building of the time of Henry VII. having monuments of ſir Thomas Hamner, bart. knight of the ſhire for Flint, ſpeaker of the Houſe of Commons in the reign of Anne, who died 1678, and his grandſon and nameſake editor of Shakeſpear, who died 1746[a]. Bettesfield two miles off is another old ſeat of this family, a daughter of which married ſir John Warner, of Parham, c. Suffolk, who turned papiſt, and lived in a convent abroad[b].

Not far from Kilken in the ſame vale of Nanerch is Penbedw the ſeat of Watkin Williams, eſq. who poſſeſſes ſome remains of ſir Kenelm Digby's library, the ſuperb pedigree of the Digby family, illuminated with drawings of all their arms and tombs. In the meadows below the houſe are part of a druidical circle and a ſmall tumulus[c].

On one of the ſummits of the mountains, at a great height above the houſe, is a very ſtrong Britiſh poſt, called Moel Arthur, with two very deep ditches, and ſuitable dikes on the acceſſible ſides. This is one of the chain of forts traced by Mr. Pennant that defended the country of the Ordevices and their ſucceſſors from invaſion. They conform in ſhape to the hills, and are generally unprovided with water. The firſt is called Moel Hiraddig, about two or three miles from the ſea in Cwm pariſh, unleſs Diſerth caſtle may be ſuppoſed to have ſucceeded the firſt poſt, and the great artificial mount above Newmarket called Cop yr Golenni or mount of light may have been the beacon to give notice of an enemy from ſea. Moel y Gaer, in Bodvari pariſh, is the ſecond. The third are the vaſt intrenchments on Bryn y Cloddiau or the hill of ditches, the largeſt a mile and half in circumference, defended by ſingle, double, triple, or even quadruple ditches where neceſſary, and in the foſs next the area a number of hollows as for lodgments. The 4th is Moel Arthur. Almoſt oppoſite to it on Halken mountain is Moel y Crio, that ſeems a middle poſt between Moel y Gaer in Northop pariſh and this. The next in order is Moel Fenlli, and below it another poſt on a leſſer hill, called by the common name of Moel y Gaer. Caer Eſtyn and the oppoſite poſt in Caergwrle rock defended that front. Caer Eſtyn is a Britiſh poſt on the oppoſite ſide of the vale above the village, the entrance through this paſſage into Wales. Further on was Havarden and the Roſts before-mentioned[d]. Mr. Pennant propoſes to point them out in Mr. Evans's map.

Wat's dike is firſt diſcovered on the ſouth part to Maeſbury mill in Oſweſtrey pariſh, where it is loſt in a moraſſy ground: thence it runs north to Hen-dinas and by Pentre'r Clawdd to Gobowen, the ſite of a ſmall fort in Whittington pariſh: then croſſes Prys Henlle common into St. Martin's pariſh, near which is a mount called Bryn y caſtell. It croſſes the Ceiriog between Brynkinallt and Pont y Blew forge, and the Dee below Nant y Bela; whence it paſſes through Wynſtay park by another Pentre'r Clawdd or townſhip on the ditch to Erthig where there was another ſtrong fort on its courſe; thence it goes above Wrexham near Melin Puleſton by Dolydd, Maeſgwyn, Rhos-ddu, Croes-oneiras, Mr. Shakerly's at Gwerſyllt; croſſes the Alun, and through the townſhip of Llai to Rhydin in Flintſhire, above which is Caer Eſtyn a Britiſh poſt before-mentioned: hence it runs by Hope church along the ſide of Moleſdale, which it quits towards the lower part, and turns to Mynydd Sychdyn, Monachlog near Northop, by Northop mills, Bryn-moel, Coed y Llys, Nant y Flint, Cefn y Coed, through the Strand fields near Holiwell to its termination below Baſingwork abbey. This dike is little known not withſtanding it is equal in depth though not in extent to that of Offa, which it attends at unequal diſtances from 500 yards to three miles till the latter with which it is ſo often confounded is totally loſt[e]. Wat's dike.

[t] Lel. V. 56. [u] Pennant, I. 84, 85.
[x] Lluyd. [y] Vaughan MS. Pennant, I. 82, 83. [z] Penn. I. 215.
[a] Ib. 218. [b] Ib. 219. [c] Ib. 411.
[d] Ib. 412—414. [e] Ib. I. 259.

Rare Plants found in Flintſhire.

Anemone nemoroſa. A variety with the leaves dotted on the back like the fructifications of a polypody; in Mr. Pennant's woods at Downing.

Arenaria verna. Mountain Chickweed; in mountainous ſoils: near Holywell.

Campanula latifolia. Giant Throatwort; in buſhy places and hedges: near Holywell.

PRINCES OF WALES.

THE princes of antient Wales of Britiſh race may be found in the printed chronicles of Wales: but it ſeems agreeable to my plan that I ſhould briefly recite thoſe of the blood royal of England. Edward I. to whom when a young man his father Henry III. had ceded the principality of Wales, after he had by the death of Llewellin ap Gryffith, laſt prince of the Britiſh race, almoſt cut the ſinews of the Welſh government in the 12th year of his reign, united it to the kingdom of England, and the whole province ſwore fealty and allegiance to his ſon Edward of Caernarvon whom he had created Prince of Wales[a]. But this prince, afterwards Edward II. did not beſtow on his ſon Edward the title of Prince of Wales, but only the honour of earl of Cheſter and Flint, as far as I have yet been able to diſcover from the public records. But Edward III. firſt ſolemnly inveſted with this title Edward, ſurnamed the Black Prince, whom death ſnatched away in the career of glory, and afterwards conferred the ſame on his ſon Richard of Bourdeaux heir to the crown, who was depoſed by Henry IV. and came to an untimely end without iſſue. This Henry IV. beſtowed the title of Prince of Wales on his eldeſt ſon afterwards diſtinguiſhed by the name of Henry V. But his ſon Henry VI. who was left an infant in the cradle, at his father's death conferred this honour, which he never himſelf received on his infant ſon Edward, who had his brains cruelly daſhed out by the Yorkiſts at the battle of Tewkſbury. Not long after king Edward IV. having gained the crown created his infant ſon Edward, afterwards king Edward V. prince of Wales, to whom his uncle Richard III. who cauſed him to be made away, ſubſtituted his ſon Edward, whom Edward IV. had created earl of Saliſbury, as I have lately diſcovered, and who ſoon died. Afterwards Henry VII. firſt created Arthur, and on his deceaſe Henry, well known by the name of Henry VIII. princes of Wales. Each of theſe were inveſted with the principality of Wales by patent in theſe words, "to hold to themſelves and "their heirs kings of England." For our kings would not loſe ſo fine an opportunity of gratifying their eldeſt ſons, but thought it moſt prudent to confer this obligation on them at pleaſure. Mary, Elizabeth, and Edward, the children of Henry VIII. though they had not this inveſtiture and patent were ſucceſſively ſtyled princes of Wales. For at that time Wales was ſo annexed and united by act of parliament to the kingdom of England as to be governed by the ſame laws. I now return from Wales to England, and haſten to the Brigantes.

29 E. I.

[a] See vol. I. p. cxxxv.

ADDITIONS.

SINCE Mr. Camden's time Henry and after him Charles ſons of James I. and Charles eldeſt ſon of Charles I. were all ſucceſſively created princes of Wales by patent: as was alſo George Auguſtus only ſon of George I. Frederic eldeſt ſon of George II. and George eldeſt ſon of his preſent majeſty.

END OF THE SECOND VOLUME.

INDEX TO THE SECOND VOLUME.

A

AARON, a Britiſh martyr, 490. Abatrain Llyn & Pont, 578.
Abberton, 371.
Abbo Floriacenſis, 72.
Abbot's chair, 162.
Abbotſton caſtle, 381. — wood, 371.
Abel, John, architect, 460.
Aber Avon, 495, 502.
Aberconway, 549.
Aber dau Gledheu, 513.
Aber Dâran, 553, 554.
Aber-Dyvy, 520.
Aber Fraw, 566, 571.
Abergavenny, 479. — caſtle, held by homage, ward, and marriage, ib. — lords of, 479, 486, 487. — title diſputed, 479.
Aber Gelleu, 590.
Aber Glyn fall, 556.
Aber Gwain, 514.
Aber Gwilly, 508.
Aber Hondhy, 470.
Aber-Kynwy, 559.
Aberlenoc caſtle, 565.
Aber-meneu, 520.
Aber Nant-bychan, 529.
Aber Ogwen, 556.
Aber Sannan, 512.
Aber Tawi, 495.
Aber Yſtwith, 524, 528.
Abetot family, 351.—Roger, 354.—Urſo, ib.
Abingdon, family, 364.—Mrs. wrote the obſcure letter about the gunpowder plot to lord Mounteagle, ib.
Abone, 268.
Abontrus, 278.
Abren river, 531.
Abrincis, Henry de, his verſes, 302.
Abtot, Urſus de, 354. — Sheriff of Worceſterſhire in the time of William I. 364.
Abus æſtuarium, 230.
Ack, 371, 372.
Aconbury hill camp, 450.
Acres, Joan de, 73.
Actæon, figure of, on a pavement, 208.
Acton, 15, 584.
—— Weſt, 15.
—— Burnel, 411.
—— manor, 315.
Actun, 398.
Ad Abum, 267.
Ad Anſam, 45, 53, 57, 83.
Ad Aquilam minorem, 54.
Ad Columnam. 54.
Ad Covecin, 74.
Ad Fines, 45.
Ad Herculem, 45.
Ad latus, 497.
Ad Pontem, 227, 250, 287, 290.
Ad Pontes, 12.
Ad Rotam, 45.
Ad Septem fratres, 45.
Ad Sturium amnem, 57.
Ad Taum, 94, 105.
Ad Tres tabernas, 45.
Adam, Sir Thomas, 404. —William, 90.
Adams, architects, 21.
Addington, 166, 177, 179.
Addiſon Mr. 24.
Adheredus, duke of Mercia, drove the Danes into Buttington in Montgomeryſhire, where they wintered, 531.
Adminius, 44.
Adrecy, Norman de, 230.
Adw yr Beddaw, 584.
Ædelmeton, 11.
Æglesburn, 310.
Ælfi, abbot of Peterborough, 223*.
Aelwyd brys, 577.
Æſica, 179.
Æſtuarium Tameſis, 42.
Affleck family, 81.
Agard family and Arthur, 306.
Agelocum, 252, 284, 291.
Agle, 169.
Agnes, wife of William de Creketot, 73.—ſiſter of Ranulph earl of Cheſter, 376.—and wife of William de Ferrars, earl of Derby, 376, 427.
Agricola, Julius, in Angleſea, 565.
Agrigentum, its bituminous ſpring, 397.
Aid of boroughs and villages to marry the king's daughter, 335.
Aidan, St. 569.
Ailby abbey, 272.
Aileſham, 278.
—— priory, 249.
Ailsbury family, 168.
Ailsford, earl of, 344.
Ailwin, ſurnamed Healf Koning, 141*, 153, 154.—epitaph on his tomb, ib.
Aimilinus Toviſog, 578.
Ainsbury, or Ainulph'sbury, 153.
Ainulph, a pious perſon, 153.
Aio, inſcription to, 237.
Airmin family, 230.
Alabaſter, 377. — where found, 233, 281.
Alabaſter works, 327.
Alan river, 519.
Alan, earl of Bretagne, where buried, 80.
Alans ſerved in Britain under the Romans, 328.
Aland, Sir John Forteſcue, 50.
Alate temple, 52, 278.
Alauna, 63.
Albenies, 113, 225, 244, 589.—of Belvoir, 249.
Albeney, William de, earl of Arundel, 227.—Stephen, 237.
Albeniaco family, 93, 94. —Willielmus de, 227.
Albini family, 403, 589.
Albrighton, 413.
Alcock, John, biſhop of Ely, founded Jeſus College, 124.—his monument, 143.
Aldborough, 87.
Aldburgh, 76.
Aldby, 109.
Aldermannus totius Anglie, 141*, 154, 160, 161.
Aldermen, why ſo called, 10.
Alderminſter, 370.
Alderſgate, 3, 16.
Aldford, 423.
Aldgate, 3, 16.
Aldred, biſhop of Lincoln, 209.
Aldric, 3, 16.
Aldridge, 384.
Aldwalton, 180.
Aldwin, Sir Nicholas, 239.
Aldwinkle, 180.
Ale, whence derived, 302.—conduceth to long life more than wine, ib.
Alençon, duke de, taken by Faſtolfe, 110.
Alen river, 329, 576, 589, 596.
Alesborough and title, 371.
Alesby, 27 .
Aleth, Hugh and Iſecomot, 580.
Alexander, biſhop of Lincoln, 225, 229. —repaired Lincoln cathedral, 254. — founded Lowth abbey, ib.
—— II. king of Scotland, 156.
Alfhelm, prince, ſlain, as he was hunting, by Edric Streon, 398.
Alfhun, biſhop, 87.
Alford, 230, 272.
Alfred, king, 202.—after he had got Godrun to embrace Chriſtianity, rewarded him for it, 74.—beſieged the Danes in Nottingham caſtle, but in vain, 283.
Alfreton, 302, 308.—Ranulph de, ib.
Alfric, earl of Leiceſter, ſlain by Hubba the Dane, 226.
Alfrith, archbiſhop of Canterbury, 377.
Algar, earl, 241.—of Leiceſter, 196.
Algarkirke, 242.
Alhſtan, his ring, 561.
Alica, 302.
Alice, daughter of Hugh Grantmaiſnill, 193.—counteſs of Oxford, 133.
Alkborough, 280.
All Saints gild, 206.
Allectus, defeated and ſlain by Aſclepiodotus, 2.
Allen, Thomas, 394.
Allenceſter, 329.
Allerton, 162, 182.
Allington family, 72, 140.
Almshouſes, 53, 83.—in London, 24.—lady Margaret's, 25.
Alne, or Alenus, 329.
Alnesborne priory, 86.
Alnwick, biſhop, his works at Lincoln cathedral, 260.
Alphonſus, ſon of king Edward I. 71
Alpine fiſh, 5, 44.
Alps, 548.—Britiſh, 543.
Alſton field, 305.
Altar piece, 310.
Altar of eternal dominion, 45.
Altar and temple of Claudius, 140.
Altars, 141*, 179, 291, 480.
Alterynnis, 442, 445.
Althorp, 165, 175.
Alton, 394.
Altringham, 440.
Aluminous water, 197.
Alured de Marleberg, 442.
Alvechurch, 359.
Alveley, 53.
Alvingham, 230, 274.
Alwin, when a child dedicated to a monkiſh life, 394.
Ambre river, 309.
Ambresbury banks, 49.
Ambry camp, 459.
Amcott, 348.
Amicia, daughter of Robert Boſſu, earl of Leiceſter, 454.
Amlwch, 570.
Amphibalus, St. the Britiſh protomartyr, who, 480, 490.
Amphitheatre at Lexden, 59. — Aſh, 488.

INDEX.

Anarawd, prince of North Wales, 542. —gave lands to the Stratcluyd Britons, to drive away the Saxons, 559. —gave the Saxons a compleat overthrow, 560. — gave lands to the church, out of thankfulneſs to God, ib.
Anarhaith, who, 71.
Anc's hills, 380.
Ancaſter, 227, 250.—heath, 250.—camp, ib.—inſcription, ib.—duke of, ib.
Anchor-church houſe, 236.
Andates, or Andraſte, a tutelar deity in Eſſex, 71.
Andle ſtones, 311, 312.
Andredſy, 392.
Androgeus, a name, why given, 1.
Angles, eaſt, 71, 72.
Angleſey, 142*, 565, 567.—plants, 574 —earls, 577.
Angli mediteranei, 375.
Angoleſme, Guiſcard de, 156.
Angotby, 230.
Angre, Cheping, 41.
Anguinum ovum, 571.
Angus, earls of, 225.
Ankam, river, 230.
Anker, river, 313, 331.
Anna, king, his ſuppoſed monument, 88.—ſlain in battle with Penda, 76.
Anne, daughter of Thomas of Woodſtock, 47.
—— queen, where buried, 24.
Anniſley, 286.
Anſæ, what, 45.
Anſley, 347.—caſtle, 331.—earl, ib.
Anſon, Sir George, 390.—lord, ib.
St. Anthony's hoſpitol, 21.
Antimony, 303.
Antiquaries, ſociety of, 28.
Antiquities, Roman, 55, 599. — at Layton, 53.
Antona river, 166.
Anytoft, 235.
Apley, 409, 413, 419.
Apollo, his temple at Weſtminſter, 7.
—— buſt of, 318.
Apoſtle's oak, 371.
Appleby, 201, 266.
Apthorp, 168.
Apthorpe, 185.
Aqualat, 380.
Aquis, 280, 323.
Arabic numerals, 171.
——— profeſſor at Cambridge, 414.
——— inſcription on a ſeal, 200.
Aram, 291.
Arbour cloſe, 383, 395.
Arbury banks, 137, 138, 170, 174.
Arcadia, 559.
Arca ius, coins of, 31.
Archbiſhops of Canterbury, 7. a claim by the Britans againſt them for the ſtyle of metropolitan of Wales loſt 514.
Archenfield and its cuſtoms, 442, 446, 447, 448.
Archer, 49.
——— Nicholas de, family and title, 344.
Archeſter, 173, 179.
Archiepiſcopal ſee of London tranſlated to Canterbury, 5.—of Kaer Lheion in Wales tranſlated to Menevia, and thence to Dole in Bretagne, which ended that dignity in Wales, 514.
Arcley and hermitage, 359.
Arcol, 392.
Arcoll, 414.
Arden, what, 329, 342.—lantern of, 348.
——— Turkill de, 329.
Ardenburg, 349.
Ardern family, 430.
Ardudwy, 540, 542.
Arduena, or Arduina, 329.
Aren Voudhwy, 540.—Benlhyn, ib.—Nig, ib.
Arfaſt, 93.
Arfeddaged y goures, 553.
Argenton family, 71.
Arkwright, his ſpinning mill, 310.
Ariconium, 450.
Arlech, what, 540.—caſtle, ib.
Arlington, 14.—earl, 12, 89.
Armada, Spaniſh, defeat of repreſented in tapeſtry in the Houſe of Lords, 25.
Armilla, 266.
Arminian nunnery, 161.
Armour, old pieces of, where dug up, 116*.
Arms of Montfitchet, 47, 63, 339.—Mortimer, 376 —Bardolph, 384.—Zouche, 198, 247, 413.—Ferrers, 419. — St. Paul's, 433. — De Alfretons, Chaucumbs, 453.—Segraves, ib.—442. — Muſards, ib. — archbiſhop Stafford, 25.—Ralph lord Boteler of Sudeley, 25 —Edward the Confeſſor, —in Oldburne hall, 26.—Carew, 26.—Vere, 58.—Mortimer, of Attilborough, 94.—Ufford, 86.—Bardolph, 98.—at Angleſey abbey, 142*.—Clare, 142*.—Palavicini, 138.—at Fotheringhay, 181.—Samuel, 82.—Ferrars, 222.—Wyvil, 198. —Granville, 503. —— Kelhwyn ap Dagno, 542.—at Aſlackby, 247.—Locton, 242.—Orme, or Oram, ib.—Meres, Darcy, Digby, Brown, ib.—Bulbec, or Boſon, ib.—Johnſon, ib.—Beaumont, 246.—Jeruſalem, ib. — Rye, 247. — Lovell, ib. — Skipwith, ib. — Hebden, ib. — Ellis, and Ayſcough, 250. — Cantelupe, Sutton, Beauchamp, 262, 348.—Ralph earl of Cheſter, 233.—France and England, Alnwyk, 262.—on Lincoln conduit, 264.—Gegge, 265.—Ulſter, 266.—Poucher and Engayne, 267.-Everingham, Darcy, Southill, ib. —at Halton, Mablethorpe, 273.—Wellow at Seal, 275.—Segrave, 331.—Abetot, 331.—at Balſhall, 342.—Shuckborough, 334.—Muſard, 302.—Lancaſter impaling Ferrars, 306.—Down, 439.—Harald, 442. — Bohun, 444. — Spence, 445.—in Chelſton chapel, 449.—on White croſs, 450.—Lenthall, 460.—in Abergavenny church, 486, 487.—Winderley, 462.—Henbury, 463.—Montalt, 589.
—— in windows, 108.—teries of, in windows, 113.
Arms and inſtruments of braſs, where found, 130.
Army of God, 165.
Arnold bell founder, 159.
Arra, what, 329.
Arrewe, 60.
Arrow river, 329, 342, 445.
Arthgallan, 43.
Arthur, king, footſteps of his hound, where to be ſeen, 470.—his chair, 470.—gave audience to the Roman ambaſſadors at Kaer-Lheion, 480.—his round table, 489.
——— hill, 472.—hall, 448.—ſtone, 503.
——— prince, his heart, 403. — his marriage in tapeſtry, 390.
Artleborough, 179.
Arundel marbles, 21, 172.
Arvonia, 548.
Arwe, 60.
Arwerton, 74, 83.
Aſaph, St. 580, 590.
Aſbeſtos, 570.
Aſclepiades long lived, 302.
Aſerby mineral ſpring, 301.
Aſhbourn, 305.
Aſhby, 270, 274.—de la Zouch, 194, 200, 201.—baron, 194.—Puerorum, 272.—St. Leger, 165.
Aſhdown, 42, 53, 61.
Aſhele manor, held by the tenure of overſeeing the table-linen at the coronation, 98.
Aſhfield, 81, 293.
Aſhill and tenure, 116*.
Aſhmole, Elias, 392.
Aſhwell, 123.
Aſhwellthorpe, 103.
Aſhwood heath, 380.
Aſlackby, 210, 246.
Aſlakton, 287.
Aſperton, 463.
Aſphaltites, a lake in Judea, 397.
Aſpeland monument, 87.
Aſſandune, 53.
Aſſenden, 42, 53.
Aſſingdon, 53.
Aſſurance offices, 28.
Aſtbury, 425.
Aſtley, 347, 359. 382.—caſtle, 331.
Aſton, 343, 387.
—— family and title, 390.
—— Epiſcopi, 357.
Aſtroites, or ſtar-ſtones, where found, 225.
Aſtrop and water, 170.
Aſtures,
Atwell, 165, 171.
Aſwardby, 246.
Aſwic grange, 235.
Atylum, 28.
At-court, Francis lord of Pembroke, 516;
Atcham, and bridge, 411.
Atchievement of Frances counteſs of Eſſex and Somerſet, at Walden, 61.
Athanaſius, the firſt that introduced monkery in the Weſtern church, 422.
Athelſtan, king, made the princes of Wales tributary, 442.
Athelwolf rebels againſt his brother, 126.
Atherſton, 348.—family, 331.
Athol, earl of, 230.
Atis croſs, 594.
Atlinge, king, 105.
Atterbury, biſhop, 24.
Attleborough, 94, 105.
Attlebridge, 105.
Attleſham, 97.
Aucher family, 49.
Audley inn, 46, 61.
——— family, 514. — lord, 46. — Thomas, baron Walden, 61.—his tomb, ib. — Henry, 387. — lord James, where ſlain fighting for king Henry VI. 388.—lord, founds Magdalen college, 124.—barons, 375.—Catharine, 456.
Audre, 127.
Aufric, 371.
Auguſta, a name of London, 2. — a moſt honourable title, 3.
Auguſtoritum, 123.
Aukborough, 280.
Aukley, 281.
Aulceſter, 329, 342.
Aulfric, 371
Aulne river, 341.
Aulton, 378.
Aulus Plautius ſlew Togodumnus, 44.
Aungerville, biſhop of Durham, where born, 80.
Auſonius, his deſcription of a ſalmon leap, 315.
Auſtin, conſecrated Melitus the firſt biſhop of London under the Saxons, 5.—diſputed with the Britiſh biſhops about matters relating to the church, 354.—his oak, ib.—his well, 200.
Auſtin friars, London, 21.
Avangk, what, 528.
Aveline counteſs of Lancaſter, her tomb, 7.
——— counteſs of Albemarle, 475
Avenel family, 123.
Avenglaſs ceſtre, 459.
Averell family, 129.
Averham, 291.
Avitus, coin of, 90.

INDEX.

Avon river, 328.—dale, 166.—leſſer, 168.
Avotettas, 271.
Awkenbury, 155.
Axel, 233.
Axelholm iſland, 280.—its extent, 233, 280.
Axes, flint, 348.
Axey, 233.
Aye, 183.
Aylmer, biſhop, 276.
Aynho, 170.
Ayſbury, 157.
Ayſcough, Anne, 276.—biſhop, 276.
Ayſcough fee hall, 239.

B.

BABERHAM, 138.
Babingley, 97, 114.
Babington, Anthony, 291.
Bacon, lord Verulam, where born, 29.—lord keeper, 90.—his monument, 90.
—— Sir Nicholas, 73.—Sir Nathaniel, 82.
—— claimed at Dunmow, 53.
—— family, 74.
Baconthorp, John, called the Reſolute Doctor, 112.
——— priory, 112.
Baddeley, 424.
Bade and Baden, what, 303.
Badeſley, 325.
Badew, 55.—Richard, 55. 132.—founds Clare hall, 124.
Baggeworth, 210.
Bagginton, 328. 335.
Bagot, family, 328. 335. 377. 392.—Bagot Bromley, 392.
Baidon hill, 502.
Bail of Lincoln, 251.
Baiting of beaſts, 9.
Baker, admiral, 24.
Baker, Mr. Thomas, monument intended for, 143*.
Bakewell, 303.
Bakewell, Mr. his breed of cattle, 211.
Bala, 535. 539.
Balchen admiral, 24.
Bale, John, a Carmelite, 88.
Ballot, family, 273.
Balſham, 139.
Balſham, Hugh, founder of Peterhouſe, 124.—biſhop of Ely, 132, 133, 140, 329, 342.
Balun, Hamelin, lord of Abergavenny, 479.
Bambridge, Dr. J. 201.
Ban river, 229, 267.
Banchor, 423, 556.
Bancroft's almſhouſes, 30.
Bane river, 268.
Bangerſton, 517.
Bangor, in Cheſhire, 422, 429.—called Iſkoed, to diſtinguiſh it from a town of that name in Wales, ib.—monks maſſacred, ib.—bridge, ib.
Bangor, in Wales, 549, 556.
Bank-ſide, 27.
Bank of England, 27.
Banna Leuca, 73.
Bannaſter, 322.
Bannerets, 384, 381.
Bannie hills, 475.
Bannovallum, 268.
Baptiſtery, 117*.
Banquetting-houſe, 25.
Bar river, 53.
Bara cyrch, 550.
Barbican, 9.
Barbaco, 9.
Barbolt, 443.
Bardney, 226, 267.
Bardolph, lord's, monument, 88.—family, 98, 46*.
Bardſey iſland, 554.
Bareham priory, 138.
Bartord, 341.—Sir Hugh, 275.
Barham, 88, 117*.
Bariden river,
Barker, Thomas, 223*.
Barking, 18, 52.
Barkley, William, marquis, 285.
Barklow, 46, 61.
Barleborough, 326*.
Barlings, 248.
Barlow, biſhop of Lincoln, 157, 240.
Barmaſter, 322.
Barmoot court, 310, 323.
Barmouth, 541.
Barn, 342.
Barnard's inn, 18.
Barnet, 31.—battle of 31.—friarn, 31.
Barnwell, 124.—abbey, 136.—parliament at, 137.
Baromagus, 53.
Barons and barony, conjugates, 396*.
Baron-hill, 569.
Barow, 439*.
Barr beacon, 384.
Barret family, 53.
Barrington hall, 47, 54.
Barrow, 46, 59, 81, 82, 83, 90, 195, 198, 210, 230, 278, 311, 380, 390.
Barrow, iſland, 24.
Barrow hill, 380, 579.
Barrow, Dr. Iſaac, 24.
Barrows, 453, 510, 522, 544.—groupe of, 43.—ſix, 273.
Barry and family, 494, 500.
St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, 28, 32.
Bartlow, 51, 52, 61.
Barton, 80, 230, 278.—in Nottinghamſhire, 287, 334.—pariſh, 319—Segrave, 179.
Baruch, St. 494.
Baſham, 112.
Baſingwerk, 588, 593.
Baſkerville family, 443.
———, John, and his types, 373.
Baſon offertory, 372.
Baſſet family, 168, 301, 375, 377.
Baſſingburn, 181.
Baſſingburn, lady, her almſhouſes, 142.
Baſſington, 129.
Baſtwick, John, 55.
Bateman, William, biſhop, founder of Trinity hall, 108, 124.
Batham gate, 323.
Batherton, 424.
Bathgate, a Roman cauſeway, 303.
Bath houſe, 6.
Bath y cor, 544.
Battle, of Barnet, between the Yorkiſts and Lancaſtrians, 31.—of Brentford, 14.—between the Engliſh and Danes at ſea off Harwich, 446.—of Aſhdown, 42, 53, 61.—of Fernham Genevieve, 73.—of Edgcote, 170.—of Naſeby, 179.—of Boſworth, 193, 200.—of Winceby, 268.—of Stoke, 284.—of Edgehill, 333.—of Bloreheath, 388.—of Drayton, 398.—of Shrewſbury, 399.—of St. Amor heath, 289.—of Hopton heath, 390.—of Cheſterfield, 309.—of Mortimer's croſs, 457.—of Buttington, 534.—of Carno, 534.—of Mynyd, 534.—Cragen, 584.
Battle bridge, 53.
Battlefield, 416, 417.
Battlewic, 49.
Battisford, 35.
Baud family, 6, 17.
Baum's hole, 157.
Bawdſey haven, 75, 86.
Baxter, Mr. 357.
Bays, and ſays, manufacture of, 59.
Bayard's green, 171.
Bayley, biſhop, 370.
Bayley ſtreet, 117.—hill, 389.
Baynard, the noble family of, 4, 43.—caſtle, 4, 43.—William lord of Dunmow, 43.—deprived of his barony for felony, 43.—Juga, 43.—her tomb, 54.
Beacon hill, 273, 389.
Beaconsfield hill, 87.
Beads, 113, 176, 183, 187, 311.
Beale's ſtate papers, 178.
Beamfleet caſtle taken by Alfred, 42.
Beared, or Beornred, aſſaſſinated and ſlew king Æthelbald. 331.
Beauchamp, William de, 341, 353, 354. 479, 495—Pagan de, 328.—earl of Warwick, 329, 348.—of Holt, 359.—Thomas, 331, 335, 347.—Richard de, earl of Warwick, 335, 354, 359.—Henry de, crowned king of the Iſle of Wight, 348.—by a particular grant made premier of all England, 331.—William, 348.—John, baron of Kidderminſter, 351, 353.—baron of Powick, 352, 529.—Walter de, conſtable of England, 354.—Guy de, the famous martial earl of Warwick, 348.
Beauchamp's court, 329, 341, 367.
Beavers, what, 524, 527, 528.—where plentiful formerly, 560.
Beauchief monaſtery,, 308.
Beauclerk, lord Aubrey, 24.
Beaudeſert, 376, 390.
Beaufoe, Thomas de, 329.
Beaufort, duke of, his houſe at Chelſea, 15.
Beaufort, Thomas earl of Dorſet and duke of Exeter, where buried and found, 80.
Beaulieu, 44.
Beaumanor park, 195.
Beaumaris, 566, 569.
Beaumont, 24, 201, 211.—Sir Thomas, 211.—Henry, lord, 194.—William, viſcount, 195.
Beaumont fee, 265.
Beauvale, 286.
Beawdley, 351.
Beby, 200.
Beby, Richard, inſcription on, 183.
Bec, patriarch of Jeruſalem, 6.
Becket, Thomas, archbiſhop of Canterbury, his chair, 450.
Beckington, Elias, his epitaph, 142*.
Bed of queen Catharine, 241.
——— Henry VIII. 334.
Bed Gwyrthryn, 553.
Bede's houſe, what, 135.
Bedeves, 491.
Bedford level, 142, 143.
Bedel, biſhop, 55.
Bederick, what, 72.
Bedh Morgan Morganwg, 502.
—— Porws, 544.
Bedingfield, 77.—family, 108.
Bedingfold family, 116*.
Bedw Ardudwy, 545.
Bedworth, 347.
Bee, biſhop, 227.
Beer regis, 111.
Beeſton caſtle, 424.
Behn, Mrs. 24.
Beighton, Mr. Henry, 347.
Beke, family of, 229.
Belaſyſe family, 278.
Beldeſert, 329.
Beler, Hamon, his monument, 212.
Beleſme, earl of Shrewſbury, his cruelty to his ſons, 399.—Roger de, earl of Shrewſbury, 399.
Belfry at Weſtminſter, 25.
Belgæ, 54.
Belgrave park, 280.
Belhe, 54.
Beliſama, port of, 106.
Beliſar, *140.
Bell houſe, 53.
Bellhammond, 12.
Bellew, 273.
Bellew, 272.
Bellomonte, family, 225, 227.—Robert de, earl of Leiceſter, 196.—earls of, 331.
Bells, hung in arches, 275.—great, at Lincoln, 261.—in a frame, 186.
Belſar's hill camp, 144.
Belton, 211, 251.

Belvoir,

INDEX.

Belvoir, or Beauvoir caſtle, 325.—vale of, 227, 249.
Benbow, admiral, 416.
Bene't college in Cambridge, 124, 132.
Bengworth, 370, 353.
Benifield, 181, 186.
Bennline, 467.
Bennaventa, 193.
Bennet, St. in the Holm, 97.
Bennet family, 139.
Bennevenna, 165, 173, 174.
Bennington, Long, 251.
Benningworth, 268.
Bennones, 193, 335.
Bensford bridge, 193.
Bentinck, William, earl of Portland, 24.
Bentley, 34, 74, 84.
Benglog, 552.
Bere caſtle, 541.
Bercing, 18.
Berden, 63.
Bergholt, 59.
Beric, 72.
Berking, 51.
Berkeley, Elizabeth, 8.—Charles, baron Bottetort, viſcount Fitzharding and earl of Falmoth, 24.—barons of, 331.—lords, 213.—monuments, 301.
Bermondſey abbey, 9, 27.
Bernah family, 229.
Bernak, 187, 188.—quarries, 188.
Bernard, Dr. Edward, 172.
Bernard's hoſtel, 134.
Bernardi, major, 370.
Berneck, 168.
Berners, William, and ſtreet, 86.—barony, 103.
Berrihill, 166.
Berry bank, 138.
Berry, mount hill, 171.
—— ſtead, 182.
Berthelin, a pious hermit, 389.
Bertie, Peregrine, baron Willoughby of Ereſby, 9.—family, 229, 271.
St. Bernes, or Britius, 586.
Berwyn mountains, 546, 578.
Bethlem hoſpital, 22.—monaſtery, 2, 22.
Bethkelert, 554.
Betheny, 376, 389.
Bettesfield, 597.
Betterton, John, 24.
Betrichelworth, 90.
Bettus Wynon Iddon, 560.
Bettus Garnon, 560.
Beveridge, biſhop, 210.
Bewmanor, 211.
Bever, 248.
Bettus, 536.
Bevil, Sir Robert, 163.
Beuno, St. 554, 555, 536.
Bewdley, 358.
Biddulph, 387.
Bickley family, 105.
Bicknacre, 56.
Bigod family, 35, 36.—Roger, 98, 102.—Hugh, 83, 98.—Ralph, 93.
Bigrame family, 162.
Bildwas, 418.
Bilford, 329.
Bilney, earl, 116*.
Bileigh abbey and hoſpital, 57.
Billeſton, 85.
Billericay, 42, 53.
Billeſby, 272.
Billing, T. lord chief juſtice, 161, 171.—borough, 173.—great and little, 177.—
Billingſgate, 3.
Billington, 389.
Billington, Long, 217.
Bilſon, biſhop, 24.—village, 381.—boy of, 382.
Bingham, 289.—William, 132, 133.
——'s hoſtel, 134.
Birch, 60.
Birchover, 311.
Birdſwaſh, 317.
Birches, 418.
Birthen river, 479, 487.
Bird's fenn, 271.
Birdenbury camp, 457.
Birds, flight of, 230.
Birmingham, 242-3.—manufactory, 343.—family, 342.
Biſhopſgate, 4, 16.
Biſhop's water, 207.—fee, 202, 206, 207.—fees tranſlated from ſmall towns, 377.
Biſhop's barn cloſe, 207.—moat, 51.—and clerks, 522.
Biſhop's Teignton, 395*.
Biſſet, family, 351.—benefactors to Maiden Bradley hoſpital, 357.
Biſus, biſhop, divided Bury into two fees, 76.
Bitham caſtle, 249.—Little, ib.
Bituminous well, 397.
Bizacium, richneſs of its ſoil, 96.
Blackborough priory, 116.
Blackborow hill, 337.
Black friars, 4, 22.—hall, 534.
Black ſoil, 96.
Blacklow hill, 328.
Blackmore, 53.
Black ſalt pit, 425.
Blackſtone edge hills, 377.
—— hermitage, 358.
—— judge, 29.
Black tail point, 42.
Black field, 287.
Black-hall, a college of Stamford univerſity, 244.
Blackmere, barons, 240.
Black mountains, 479.
Blackwater, 44, 45.—bay, 42, 44, 45.—river, 234.
Blain Lheveny caſtle, 471, 476.
Blanchemaines, Robert, earl of Leiceſter, 190, 193, 196, 225 —whence named, 213.
Black Annis hole, 209.
Blakeney, 97, 112.
Blankeney, 226.
Blatherwick, 168.
Blecca, governor of Lincoln, converted, 263.
Bledhyn ap Maenyrch, lord of Brecknock, defeated and ſlain by Bernard Newmarch, 476.
Bleſenſis, Petrus, vice-chancellor to Henry II. 224.
Bleſtium, 441.
Blickling, 95, 110.
Bliſworth, 173, 166.
Blitheborough, 76, 88, 393.
Blithe, 293, 294, 392, 394 —bridge, 382.—hall, 344.
Blithefield, 377, 392.
Blind well, 257.—lane, 50.
Blockley, 370.
Blood gate, 114.
Bloet, Robert, biſhop of Lincoln, his work, 258.—amerced 50,000*l.* by William Rufus, 228.
Bloodmore hill, 90.
Bloomſbury, 25.
Blond, what, 396*.
Blore heath, 388.—battle of, ib.
Blorenny, 486.
Blount, family, 351, 396*, 453.—Thomas, 453.
Blow, John, 24.
Blow wells, 275.
Blund, Gilbert, ſlain at the battle of Lewes, 173.
Blunt, family, 372, 396*.—meaning of the name, 376, 396*.—Hugh, 372.—St. John, 396*.—created earl of Devonſhire for his ſervices, 302.—Walter, baron Montjoy, 302.
Blunt's walls, 53.
Bluntſham, 159.
Boadicia, queen of the Iceni, cruelty of the Romans to her and her daughters, 71.—deſtroys Camalodunum, 55.—buſt of, 326.
Boar monſtrous, 330.
Bocking, 44, 55.—deanry and hoſpital, 55.
Boddedern, 571.
Boddrudan, 567.
Bodewyr, 567.
Bodnan hill, 553.
Bodſcallan, 559.
Bodies, human, dried, 17.—dug up, 89, 276.—female in a moſs, 280.
Bodvoc, 502.
Bod vari, 588, 590.
Bod Rhyddan, 591.
Bog-t otters in Wales, 548.
Bohun, conſtables of England, 444.—lords of Brecknock, 471.
Bohun family, 62, 44.—Humphry, 46.—Eleanor, ib.—earl of Hereford and Eſſex, 44.—William de, earl of Northampton, 169, 188.
Bollen family, 44, 110.—Anne, her work, 13.
Bolingbroke caſtle, 270, 229.—family, 270.—pottery, 241.
Bolinglong, 3.
Bollington, 266.
Bollen, marchioneſs of Pembroke, 516.
Bolſover caſtle, 302, 310.
Bolton's hoſtel, 134.
Bolton, William, prior, 13 —his rebus, 29.
Bolyl river, 439.
Bomels weort, 375.
Bone well, 443.
Bones, 265.—human, 12, 116*, 130, 141*, 182, 210.—of elephants, 59.—petrefied, 199.—foſſil, 59, 179.
Bonium, 422.
Bonner, biſhop, 369.
Bonover, 566.
Booth, biſhop of Durham, 134.
Booth, 441*.
Booth, family and title 439.—Barton, 24.
Boothby Panel, 249.
Bordeſley abbey, 360.
Borcham, 56.
Bonnium, 494, 499, 500.
Bonſal, 310.
Borough family, and ſir John, 279, 280.
Borough hills, 57, 212.—games, 212.—barons, 230.
Boſberie, 453.
Boſcobel, 419.
Boſherton, 523.
Boſton, 224, 240, 241.—fair plundered, 224.
Boſtock, and Sir Adam de, 425.
Boſſu, or Crook back, Robert earl of of Leiceſter, 194, 196, 202.—built a monaſtery at Leiceſter, and became a canon regular there, 201.—his monument, 202. — his wife founded Nuneaton nunnery, 331, 347.
Boſworth, 193, 200.—a bloody battle fought here between Henry earl of Richmond and Richard III. 200.—ſuppoſed carving of this battle, 85.
——— Huſband's, 197.
Boteſdale, 90.
Boteler family, 413.
Boteſuenes, 328.
Botontines, what, 168.
Bottesford, 212.
Botterwic and barony, 233.
Bottle bridge, 155.
Bottiſham and biſhops, 142*.
Botolph, 224.—his town, ib.—bridge, 155.
St. Botolph's church, Colcheſter, 58.
Boughton, 166, 177, 178.
Boughton family, 335.—Sir Edward, poiſoned, ib.
Boulter, archbiſhop, 24.
Bounds of the antients, 45, 169.
Bourchier family, 43, 93.—earls of Bath, 93.—Humphry, 8.—archbiſhop, 58.—Henry, earl of Eſſex, 48.
Bourbon, John de, impriſoned, 301.
Bourn caſtle, 401.—town, 473.
Boutetort, ſir Ralph, his eſcape, 112.
Boverton, 494.
Bovium, 499, 500, 494.

INDEX.

Blundeville, Ranulph de, earl of Chester, 427.
Boadicea defeated and slew 80,000 of the Romans, 71.
Boivile family, 86.
Bollin river, 426.
Bordarii, 153.
Borough English, what, and where used, 224.
Botereaux, William, 329.—Reginald, ib
Bottetort family 75.
Botontines, what, 168.
Bourchier, Robert, chancellor in the time of Edward III. 46.—William, earl of Ewe in Normandy, 444.
Bourdeaux, Richard de, made prince of Wales by his grandfather Edward III. deprived of the crown by Henry IV. and died miserably, 598.
Bow bridge, 202.
Boxworth, 129.
Boys, two green, of the satyr kind, came up at Wulpett from the antipodes, 74.
Brabant, Henry, duke of, 76.
Braceborough, 173.
Bracelet, 116*.—silver, 311.
Brackenbury, family,
Brackley, 165, 170, 171.
Bradbourn, 301.
Bradford, 382.—bishop, 24.
Bradfield, 61.
Bradgate, 210.
Bradley rocks, 311, 312.
Bradnor mountain, 462.
Bradwardin castle, 442, 448.—Thomas, archbishop of Canterbury, 442. 448.—for his knowledge in abstruse learning styled Doctor profundus, ib.
Bradley, 198.
Bradwell, 53.
Braibrook castle, 166.—barons, ib.
Braich y Dinas, 556, 557.
Braintree, 55.
Brainscroft, 411.
Brakespear, Adrian, 349.
Brame, John, a monk of Thetford, 105.
Brampton, 159.
——— de family, 453.
——— chapel, 309.
Brampston, his monument, 142*.
Bramscroft, 411.
Bran, 585.
Bran, abbot of Peterborough, 242.
Brancaster, 97, 114.
Brancroft, 396*.
Branchynalt point, 554.
Brand, 331.
Brandon family, 89, 347, 365.—title, 89.
——— a Roman camp so called, 402, 453, 78.
——— Frances and Mary, 7.
——— Mary, where buried, 80.
——— Henry, earl of Lincoln, 233.
Brankeland, Joscelin de, a monk, 73.
Brannodunum, 97, 114.
Brannogenium, 365, 352.
Branonium, 355, 365, 352.
Bransford bridge, 193.
Brant ditch, 141.
Branton, 398.
Brasmatia, what, 443.
Braunch, brass monument of, 115.
Bravinium, 365.
Bravonius, prior of Worcester, 367.
Bravonium, 403.
Braxted great, 56.
Bray family, 171.
Braybrook, bishop, 167.—his body found in St. Paul's, 17, 185.
——— castle, 185.
Brazen nose college in Stamford, 244.
Breakspear, Nicholas, rector of Tydd St. Giles, Lincolnshire, afterwards pope, 234.
Brechanias, a British prince, gave name to Brecknockshire, 470.
Brechiniauc, 470.
Brecknock, 470, 474.—mere, 470.—lords of, 470, 471.
Brecknockshire, 470, 472.—plants, 476.—lords of, 471.—earls of, 476.
Brecon, 470.
Bredon, 201, 309.
Bredon and hills, 354.
Bredsol, 308.
Breede croft, 242.
Breerwood, 385, 413.
Bremicham and family, 330.
Bren, what, 576.
Brennich river, 472.
Brennus, a Gaulish general,
Brent river, 3, 14.—well, 14.—hill, 141, 389.
Brentford, 3, 14.—old, 14.—battle, ib.—earl, ib.
Brentwood, 42.
Breosa or Breos, 303, 471, 479, 495.
Brereton, sir John, 133.—Sir William, family, 425, 438.
——— town, 425, 438.
Bretenham, 74, 84.
Breteuil, Emma, and Roger de, 444.
Breton, Mr. 29.—bishop, where born, 117*.
Breton, his rebus, 262.
Breton family, 225, 303.—river, 74.
Brett family, 283.
Breun Morear de, 240.
Brey Tinas 557.
Brian castle, 443, 453.
Briavel's castle, its privilege, 352.
Briceneaumere, 471.
Bricks, 116*.—Roman, 16. 58. 60. 62. 77. 81. 116. 317. 485. 488. 533. 595.—British, 7*.—white, 84.—vault, 110.—work curious, 113.—large, 234.—Chepstow, 483.—inscribed, 589.
Bride stones, 386.
Bridewell, 6.—palace and hospital, 21.
Bridge, London, 9. 26.—Blackfriars, 16.—Westminster, 25.—timber, 395.—great and cycloidical at Cambridge, 134.—Bury, 161.—long, 180.—Croyland, 236.—Stour, 357.—iron, 411.—Atcham, 411.—Llanruft, 578.
Bridgeford on the hill, 283.
Bridgend, 500.
Bridgeman, 343.
Bridgeford, 283.
Bridgenorth, 408. 396*.
Bridge ward, 29.
——— ward without, 179.
Bridges, James, earl of Caernarvon, .—duke of Chandos, 556.
Brief, 129.
Brigcasterton, 162, 219. 225. 244.
Brigend, 246.
Brigg, 230.
Brill, 30.
Brimington, 309.
Brindhim river, 478.
Brindley's navigation, 357.
Brinne, John de, king of Jerusalem, 195.
Bringwin, 4.
Brinkhill, 272.
Brinklow, 331. 347.
Briset, 85.
Brisley, 116*.
Brisset, Jordan, built the house of the knights hospitallers, 9. 26.
Britans, driven into the mountains, out of Caer Caradoc, by Ostorius, 395*.—Northern of Stratclwyd and Cumberland, 560.—forced to quit their country, to escape the fury of the Danes and Saxons, 559.—received the land from Chester to the river Conway, from prince Anârawdh, to settle in, ib.—engaged and drove the Saxons quite out of Mercia, ib.—afterwards enjoyed the lands given them peaceably, 560.—stormed the temple of Claudius, and killed 70,000 Romans and allies, 45.—their deities, 71.—their manner of computing by nights, ib.—their longevity, 302.
Britain's burse, 22.
Britannicus, 44.
Brith rivil, 553.
Brithnoth, earl, gave large possessions to the church of Ely, in case he died in a battle with the Danes, with whom he fought fourteen days together, at Maldon, and was slain there, 143.—his bones found, ib.—abbot of Ely, ib.
Brithun, iv.
British camp, 12.
——— ocean, ports, 597.
——— towns, what, 3.
——— plants, 551.
——— animals, ib.
——— Alps, 543.
——— pearls, 558.
Briton ferry, 502.
Broc, Ralph de, 74.
Brocard's castle, 397.
Brocas, sir Bernard, 24.
Brodholme, 291.
Brokesby family, and Francis, 213.
Broke, 117*.
Brooke, 223*.
Brooke house, 30.
Broom close, 116*.
Bromehall, 439.
Bromley Abbots, or Pagets, 392. 393.—Kings, 393.—Gerard's, 376.
——— town, 30.—family, 289. 335. 359.
——— Thomas, 376.—lord chancellor of England, 8.
Bromwich West, 383.
Bron coit, 596.
Brome, 76. 89.
Bromesgrove, 352. 359.
Bromfield, 55, 271, 405, 555, 576, 583.
Bromholme, 117*.—monastery, 97. 111.
Bronyskawen, 508.
Broseley, 411.
Brotherton, Thomas of, 80.
——— Thomas, where buried, 98.
Brough, 276. 317.
Broughton, 266.—Richard, 161.
Brounford, Robert de, 401.
Brounsover, 335.
Browcastle, 414.
Brown's well, 14.—hospital, 225.
Brown, William, 98.
Brownlow family and baron, 251.
Broynlly, 474.
Bruce family, 44. 153.—castle, 29.—lord of Annandale, 161.—James taken, 112.—Mary confined, 267.
Brudenell family, 168.—Sir Edmund, ib.—baron Stoughton and earl of Cardigan, 529.
Bruern, 296.
Bruges, Winifred, 7.
Brugh, 291.
Brun family, 42.
Brutus, said to have been founder of London, 3.
Bryn agunnan, 502.
Brynian, 560.
Bryn Shenkin, 567.
—— Celli du, 570.
Brwn y vryan, 583.
Brwynen, in British, what, 411.
Bryn, what, 576.
Bryn y Saethan, 593.—y Cloddian, 597.—y castelh, 593. 597.—y Pin, 597.
Bryneck river, 472.
Bryn gwyn, 536, 567, 568.—cornyn Jan, 542.
Brynbyga, 479.
Bryn y castleran, 553.
Bryn yr Iwrch, .—y Bedhyn, 579. y castell, 559.
Brynlhysk, 544.—cornyn Jan, 542.—y voel, 542.—y Bala, 544.
Buâlht, 470. 472.
Buarth Arthur, 510.
Buckenham, in Norfolk, 93. 102. 103.—held by the tenure of being butler at

INDEX.

at the king's coronation, 93.—new, 102, 103.
Buckhurſt houſe, 6.
Buckingham, duke, founds Magdalen college, 133.
Buckingham houſe, 21, 25.
Buck given by the Bawd family, to St. Paul's, 5. 17.
Buckminſter, 212.
Buda, 303.
Buddeſdale, 90.
Buddle, what, 322.
Buelht, what, 470. 473.
Bueno, St. the ſon of a Britiſh prince, raiſed St. Winifred to life, 593, 594.
Buers, king Edmund crowned here, 83. 245.
—— ad montem, 60.
Bugden, 153. 157.—church and palace,
Bulæum Silurum, 470. 473. 497.
Bulch in Britiſh, what,
Buldewas, 397.
Bulkley, 424.—family, 566. 569.
Bulleyn, Dr. 144.
——— ſir Geofry, 117*.
Bulley, a Norman nobleman, 285.
Bulley hill, 389.
Buller, 293.
Bull's head, 272.
Bullio, what, 352.
Bullitiones, what, 361.
Bulmar Bevis, 27.
Bulwick, 188.
Bumſted Helion, 46. 61.
Bunbury, 424.
Bunbury, ſir Charles, 81.
Bungey, 77. 90.
Bunney park, 287.
Burbach, 198.
Burbot, 393.
Burch, 168.
Burd Arthur, 569.
Burdeaux, family, 112.
Burdeleys, 104.
Burdos, 94. 104.
Bure river, 110.
Burenbegi, 396*. 407.
Burford, held by the ſervice of a barony to find five men towards the army of Wales, 396.
Burgage, 289.
Burgeſſes of Warwick, twelve of them by tenure obliged to accompany the king in his wars, and he that defaulted to forfeit five pounds, 328.
Burgh caſtle, 90, 132.—village, 303.
Burghleigh, Mildred, 8.
Burghmorſe, 397*.
——-hill, 463.
Burgherſh, or Burghwaſh, family, 443.—monument, 228.—chantry, 262.—biſhop, his apparition, 263.
Burghſted, 42. 53.
Burgoin family, 123.
Burgh, Burh, and Borough, in the end of towns names, a mark of their antiquity, 30. 48.
—— caſtle, 77.
—— family, 139. — ſir John, 24. — green, 139, 276.
Burgo de, or Burgh, Hubert de, 42.—counteſs de, 132.
Burgundus, Hugo, biſhop of Lincoln, canoniſed, and his corpſe carried to burial by king John and his nobles, 229.
Burgundy, Philip of Auſtria, duke of, delivered up Edmund earl of Suffolk, who had rebelled againſt Henry VII. 78.
Burham, 117*.—chapel, 277.
Burial place, Roman, 9.—of Danes and Saxons, 114.
Burlewas, 137.
Burleigh, 168. 187.—on the hill, 222.—park, 211.—William, 225.
Burlington, earl, his houſe, 15.—his opinion of York and Lincoln cathedrals, 261.
Burna, 84.
Burne, what,
——— family, 129.
Burne caſtle, 225. 245.—barons, 225.
Burnel, family, 381. 396*.—Robert, biſhop of Bath, 396. 398.
Burnham, 112.—creek, 53.
———, Norton and Thorpe, 113.
Burning of ſoil for manure, 575.—well, 411.
Burnt Ely, 84.
Burnt walls, 173.
Burunr, Burva, } 83.
Burridge, 289.
Burrium, 473. 479. 487.
Burrow bank, 47.—hill, 171. 173. 195.—field, 287.
Burrough field, 62.
Burroughs, the, 113.
Burrows, 173.
Burry river, 500.
Burſe, 10.
Burſlem, 386.
Burſtal, William, maſter of the rolls in the fifty-firſt of Edward III. 19.
Burſton, 387.
Burthred, or Burhred, king of the Mercians, 283.—dethroned by the Danes, 301.
Burton, and baron, 166.—Latimer, 179.—Lazars, 155. 212.—well, 212.—Stather, 233.—Pedwardin, 246.—upon Trent, 377, 392.
—— William and Thomas, 598.—William, 303 —Robert, 304.
Burton Crocun, barons, 225.
Burwell, 141.
Burwell, 273.
Burwell, ſir George, his charity, 178.
Burwyſh family, 129.
Bury, 161.—ſtreet, 29.—St. Edmund's. See St. Edmund's.
Burying place, Roman, 187.
Burying ground, Roman, 51.
Buſby, Dr. maſter of Weſtminſter ſchool, 24. 234. his benefactions, 24.
Buſh hill, 29.
Buſhbury, 382.
Buſley, or Buſſey, family, 225. 251. 246. 293. 285.
Buſt, Roman, 262.
Buſtler family, 125,
Butler, family, 44.—earls, 42.—barons Wem, 329.—viſcounts Thurles, 8.—Thomas, 8.—James duke of Ormond, 4.—Samuel, 371.—John, 476.—the poet, 49.—earl of Brecknock, and duke of Ormond, 476.
Butter, 116.
Butterwick, W. 281.
Buttevillein, William, 167.
Butts, or tumuli, 277.
Buttington, 531. 534.
Buxton, 303. 323. 324.—baths, 323.
Bwlch yr Elkirhir, 528.—y Goes, 540.
Bwlch, y maeſcwin, 550.—cwn brwynin, 550.—craigwen, 554.—Agricle, 586.
Bwrd, Arthur, 569.
Byne, what, 103.
Byrdhyn river, 478.
Byron, family, 283. 286.—Ralph de, ib.—his opinion on York and Lincoln cathedrals, 261.
Byrſa, 230.
Byzantine coins, 10.
Byc, 230.

C.

CADEBY, 200, 273.
Cader Arthur, 470.
Cader Idris, 540, 541.
Cader Bromvyn Formyn, 546.
Cadney, 278.
Caducan, biſhop. 442.
St. Cadvan, a Britiſh king, 570.—ſtone, 541.
Caer Au, 491.
Caer Arvon Sir, 548.
Caer Bont, 546.
Caer boias cas, 519.
Caer Caradock, 402.
Caer Colin, 46.
Caer Colwyn, 542.
Caer Coluh, 538.
Caer Cuſtenith, 548.
Caer David, 556.
Caer Darithou, 413.
Caer Dhynod, 585.
Caer Diff, 493, 498, 499.
Caer Dorm, 155.
Caer Drewyn, 545.
Caer Eſtyn, 595, 597.
Caer Egarry, 230.
Caer Eu, 498.
Caer Forwyn, 585.
Caer Fuſe, 531, 534.
Caer Gerly, 595, 597.
Caer Gai, 538.
Caer Guaruic, 328.
Caer Guorangon, 352, 365.
Caer Guntin, 94.
Caer Guorcon, 352.
Caer Gwent, 477, 484, 557.
Caer Gwortigern, 465.
Caer Gwerly, 589.
Caer Gybi, 566, 572.
Caer Hean, 549.
Caer Hyn, 558.
Caer Leb, 567.
Caer Legion, 423.
Caerleon, 557.
Caer Leon, 328, 423, 479, 488.
Caer Leon Vawr, 423.
Caer Leon ar Dufyr Dwy, 423.
Caer Llewelyn, 558.
Caer Lerion, 194.
Caer Lud, 4.
Caer Mancegued, 331.
Caermarthen, 506, 507.—marquis of, 507.
Caermarthenſhire, 505.—plants, 510.
Caer Meguid, 536.
Caer Merden, 531.
Caer Metgod, 536.
Caernarvon, 549, 555. — title, ib.—Edward II. born there, ib. — chancery and exchequer of North Wales there, ib.
Caernarvonſhire, 448, 549, 550, 561.—plants, 561.
Caer y Gaereig, 488.
Caer cwm y glo, 553.
Caer carreg y fram, 553.
Caer Philli, 493, 496, 497.
Caer Tue, 531.
Caer Twr, 572.
Caer Vechan, 533.
Caer Uſk, 479, 487.
Caer Verden, 531.
Caer Wik, 586.
Caer Wrangon, 352.
Caer Wys, 590.
Cagthorp, 268.
Cæſar Auguſta, or Saragoſa, 42.
Cæſarea, or Cherburg, 42.
Cæſar's camp, 12, 29.
Cæſaromagus, 42, 53, 54.
Caiagcennin caſtle, 507.
Caireg Hwvacas, 535.
Caius, Dr. 124, 132.
Caius and Gonvil college in Cambridge founded by Edmund Gonvil and John Caius, 124.
Calceby, 273.
Caldecot, 347, 477, 485.
Caldey iſle, 517.
Caldron, braſs, 533.
Calendar, antient, 187.
Caligula, Caius, ſent boaſting letters of his ſucceſs to Rome, 1.
Calthrop family, 74, 113. — braſs, 113.
Caltoſt family of, 284.
Calves heath, 385.
Cam river, 123.
Camboritum, 62, 81, 123.
Cambridge, 123, 130, 131. — earls, 123, 143*.—dukes of, 123.—ruined by

INDEX.

by the Danes, 124, 131.—caſtle, 131. — government, ib. — almſhouſes and ſchool, 136.—conduit, ib — natives, ib. — univerſity, 124, 131.—chancellor, 132.—colleges, 124, 132, 133.—hoſtels, 134.—round church, 135.
Cambridgeſhire, dimenſions, diviſion, product, 123.—religious houſes, 135.—domeſday, 124.—bounds, cultivation, dioceſe, 129.—plants, 144.
CAMDEN, Mr. his father, 392.—intended for a profeſſor at Chelſea, 15.—monument, 24.—where born, 29.
Camden houſe, 15.
Camel river, 123.
Camera Dianæ, 17.
Cameringham, 280.
Camletmeta, 129.
Camps.
—— Hedgerley, 12.
—— Greenford, ib.
—— by Shepparton, ib.
—— near Cranford, 15.
—— Cæſar's, 12, 29.
—— Britiſh, 29.
—— queen Elizabeth's againſt the Spaniſh invaſion, 52.
—— Roman, round Cheſterford, 22.
—— Littlebury, 63.
—— Walbury, ib.
—— Danbury, 56.
—— Caſter, 94.
—— Stow Langtoft, 81.
—— in Norfolk, 111, 105.
—— Wighton, 113.
—— Belſar's hills, 144.
—— Daventry, 173.
—— Gildſborough, ib.
—— Raunborough, 170.
—— South Farndon, 185.
—— Ratby, 209.
—— Hunnington, 250.
—— Ingelſby, 251.
—— Coningſby, 271.
—— Ormeſby, 272.
—— Erthig, 584.
—— The Rotts, 586, 595.
—— Owen Gwynned's, 590.
—— Caerthew, 584.
—— Kemerton hill, 369.
—— Waſſal, 358.
—— Whichbury, ib.
—— Iccumbe, 369.
—— Caſtle ring, 311.
—— Mam tor, 317.
—— Clun church yard, 355.
—— Whichbury hill, 355.
—— Barton, 289.
—— Daniſh, 113, 343.
—— Prince Rupert's, 343.
—— Coleſhill, 344.
—— Woodbury hill, 372.
—— Glendwr, ib.
—— Brandon, 402.
—— Coxall, ib.
—— Tongley, 404.
—— Kemſey, 367.
—— Malvern, 368.
—— Warmington, 325.
—— Roman, 14, 29, 30, 56, 49, 51, 60.
—— Shakeſbury hill, 115.
—— Ancaſter, 348.
—— Manceſter, ib.
—— Colemore, ib.
—— Edgehill, 333.
—— Nadbury, ib.
—— Caer Eſtyn, 595, 597.
—— Conna's He, 515.
—— Tumman's hill, 595.
—— Moel y gaer, 597.
—— Pen y parc, 596.
—— Bradnor mountain, 462.
—— Fownhope, ib.
—— Wobury, ib.
—— Etheſberts, ib.
—— Caradoc, 463.
—— Geercop, ib.
—— Warrelocks, ib.

Camps.
—— Llan Boydy, 509.
—— Yfoel, 546.
—— Porth y llyn, 554.
—— Caireg y dinas, 555.
—— Dinas y prif, ib.
—— Caerfach, 533.
—— Gwyn vynydh, 533.
—— Rhos dhiaberd, ib.
—— Kevn Karnedle, ib.
—— Caer vechan, ib.
—— Montgomery, 534.
—— near Llanvyllyn and Welſhpool, ib.
—— Gwerndu, 535.
—— Bryn Gwyn, 536.
—— near Meivod, ib.
—— Pen y gaer, ib.
—— Gaer, ib.
—— Canon row, 461.
—— Credon hill, ib.
—— Burghill, ib.
—— Letton, ib.
—— Ivington, 462.
Camps, 138.—Caſtle and Shudy, 140.
Campgreen, 325*.
Campbell, John duke of Argyle and Greenwich, 24.
Campſey, 87.
Campſhill, 395.
Camvil family, 331, 394, 396.
Camalodunum, 44, 57, 58.
Camulodunum, 44, 56, 61, 63.
Camulus, the god Mars, 44,
Can, wooden, for a ſign, 113.
Can river, 54, 55, 56.
Candike, 163.
Cane wood, 30.
Canewdon, 53.
Canford, 54.
Canganum promontory, 548, 554.
Canganus, a fiſh, 572.
Cangi, 79, 426.
Cank, or Canock wood, 376, 377, 387.
Can office, 536.
Canal navigable, 387.
Cannant mawr fall, 550.
Canon piou, 561.
Canonburgh, 39, 44, 54, 55, 56.
Canonium, 44.
Canons, 30.
Cantaber, 124, 130.
Cantelupe family, 168, 479.—Nicholas de, his monument, 328. —— chantry, 262.
Cantre bychan 479.—mount, 505.
Cantred Mawr, 505.
Canvey iſland, 20, 52.
Canvil family, 168.
Canute, in vain beſieged London, 6.—ſo ſtraitened the city of London that they admitted him to winter in it, 18.—built a church at Aſſington, in memory of a defeat given to Edmund Ironſide, 42.—rebuilt Bury to expiate his father's ſacrilege there, 80. his ditch, 79.—his birds, 230.
Capel, Sir William, 83.
Capel Guerah, 554.
Capel Kerig, 536.—Gelhu, 592.
Caps, Dutch, and ſailors, 358.
Captains under Sir H. Vere, their portraits, 106.
Caractacus defeated by Aulus Plautius, 4.
Caradoc, 463.—of Lancarvon, 501.
Caraigcennin caſtle, 507.
Caraticus, king, 524, 526.
Carauſius, coin of, 222.
Careliffe rocks, 311, 312.
Cardigan, lords of, 545.—earls of, 186.
Cardiganſhire, 524, 528, 526.—plants, 529.
Cardinal of St. Paul's, 18.
Cardyke, 234, 242, 252.
Careg y clommeciod, 542.
Careg caſtle, 505.—well, 386.
Carew, Nicholas, 8. — Henry and George, 8.
—— George, baron Clopton, 329.
—— caſtle, 513, 518.
Carhow, 108.
Carig yr arch jagon, 572.
Carlton, 274.—ring camp, 311.
Carleton, in Norfolk, held by the tenure of finding an hundred herrings in pies when they firſt came in ſeaſon, 93.—in Leiceſterſhire, 193.—family, 93.
Carleton, 103, 186.
Carmelites houſe in London, 6.
Carn, 502.
Carn madrin, 554.
Carneddau tewion, what, 397.—y bach, 476.
Carnedh, 510, 534, 542, 557, 569.
Carn Madryn, 553.
Carneg Hun caſtle, 535.
Carn y Bach, 476.
Carno mountains and battle, 533.—church, 534.
Caroline, queen, buried, 24.
Carpet manufactory, 357.
Carles work, 325*.
Carr family, 246.
Carreg, y Dinas, 555.—y Llech, 596.—Huw caſtle, 535.
Carſbrook, 105.
Carſdike, 142*, 183.
Carte's account of Leiceſter, 202—208.
Cartoons by Raphael, 13.
Cartwright, family, 290.—Thomas, introduced extempore prayer, 336.
Carvill family, 97.
Carew caſtle, 513. 518.
Caſaubon, 24.
Caſcade at Dyſert, 590.
Caſcades of Glyn, 541.
Caſtelh, 536.
—— Caereneon, 536.
—— Dolforwyn, 536.
—— Yollo, 597.
—— Aberleweny, 569.
—— Colwen, 465.
—— of Comfort hills, 459.
Caſter, 94, 95, 155, 162, 166, 173, 182, 193.
—— camp, 94.
—— church, 183, 276.
—— caſtle, 110, 111.
Caſtle Bitham, 249.—hills, 273.
—— at Cam, 318.
—— acre, 98. — caſtle and priory, 117.
—— Aſhby, 166. 177.
—— banks, 348.
—— at the ford, 385.
—— field, 182.
—— Dinas, 471.
—— Dinas Cortin, 541.
—— Coch, 531, 534.
—— Gwrghan, 553.
—— dikes, 174, 175.
—— Corndoch, 545.
—— Creg, 448.
—— Bromwich, 343.
—— in the Peak, 303, 319.
—— Hymel, 187.
—— Maud, 465.
—— Mawr, 569.
—— Riſing, 97.—caſtle, 117.—hoſpital, ib.
—— Pryſor, 545.
—— Rous, 398.
—— Payne, 465, 467.
—— Goch, 498.
—— Gwent, 477.
—— Morton, 364.
—— Hean, 442.
—— hill, 391.
—— town, 321, 442.
—— Clun, camps, 140.
Caſtleton and caſtle, 319.
Caſtlow croſs, 385.
Caſtor, 230, 276.
Caſtra legionis, 583.
Cat wild, 174.
Catacratus, 44.
Cateſby, Robert, of Aſhby St. Leger, one of the gun powder plotters, 8, 165.—Robert, 173.—John, 174.
Cateſbridge, 243.

Cate-

I N D E X.

Categrove corner, 243.
Catſcove, 235.
Catſtone, 312.
Cattleby, 246.
Cattler, 243.
Catbroys, 243.
Cateby and deed, 281.
Catworth, 162.
Catgwaloph, 506.
Catherine, queen dies, 162.—ducheſs of Suffolk, 9.—her tomb, 183.
Catharine's St. hoſpital, by the Tower, 22.
Catherine hall in Cambridge, founded by Robert Woodlark, 133.—hoſtel, 124.
Catherlogh, lord, 341.
Cathorp, 250.
Catmoſs, vale, 230.
Catts hill, 383.
Catwade bridge, 57.
Catwick, 243.
Caug yr arch jagon, 572.
Caverns, 52.
Caverfield, 52.
Cave family, 188, 197.—William, 212.
Cavendiſh bridge, 212.
Cavendiſh, 301, 302.—family, 83.—William, 83.—bridge, 212.—general, ſlain, 280.—earl of Devon, inſcription on his tomb, 309.—William duke of Newcaſtle, 24.
Caverns, 494, 500, 508, 523, 572.
Cauſennæ, 244, 251, 277.
Cauſe caſtle, 397, 414.
Cawſton mace, 118.
Caylus on Roman coinage, 410.
Ceada, St. 377.
Ceangs, 426.
Ceasford hundred, 42.
Cecil, lord, 168.—Anne and Elizabeth, 8.—Thomas earl of Exeter, 24.—ſir William, 245.—baron Burleigh, ib.—family, 442.
Cecily ducheſs of York buried at Fotheringay, 166.
Cedar, 29, 30.
Cefn Ogo, 590.
Cell of Duvinniadd, 553.
Celts, 15, 49, 114, 193, 368, 382, 384. 476.
Cenimagni, 71, 79. 88.
Ceolred, 209.
Ceoſtefne, 225.
Cerdick ſhore, 97, 109.
Cerrig borth, 572.
—— y druidion, 575.
Ceſter over, 193, 331, 347.
Chadſhunt, 333.
Chad's well, 334.
Chadwell, 52.
Chair, antient, 268.
—— abbot's, 160, 162.
Chalcides, 96.
Chalcott, 328.
Chamber in foreſt, 424.
Chamber, kings or camera regis, 6.—ſtar, 8.
Chamberlain gate, 4.
Chamberlan hanged, 224.
Champion, king's, 229.—office transferred from Freville to Dymoc, 384.
Chain, gold, 533.
Chandos, James, duke of, 30, 556.—family, 461.
Chancel, round, 159.
Chancellors bags, 187.
Chancery, court of, 8. 25.
Chapel, in the foreſt, 326*.—on Lonbridge, 27.—on Wakefield bridge, ib.—Saxon, 452.
Chapel in the ſee, 142*.—with road through it, 364.
Chapman, John, 116*.
Chapter houſe at Margan, 501.
Χαραξ, what, 166.
Chardin, ſir John, 24.
Charing croſs, 25.
Charity ſchool, 15.
Charitable foundations in London, 28.
Charlecot, 34.
Charles I. treaty with at Uxbridge, 12.—impriſoned at Hampton court, 13. beheaded, 25.—paintings of, 347.—defeats the Parliament's forces at Brentford, 14.
Charles II. ſtatue of, 15.—equeſtrian ſtatue, 25.—buried, 24.—founded the mathematical ſchool of Chriſt hoſpital, 22.
Charlton, 353. 369. 534.
Charlton, 170.—caſtle, 398.
Charlton family, 398, 454.
Charnley foreſt, 195, 210, 211.—ſtones, 210.
Charnwood foreſt, 195.
Charter, 170.
Charterhouſe, 26.—ſchool, ib.
Chartley caſtle, 376.—lords Ferrers, 390.
Charwell river, 170.
Chater river, 221, 242.
Chatſworth, 301. 307.
Chatteris, 142*.
Chaucumb, 170.
Chaworth, or de Cadurcis, family, 284. 291.
Cheadle, 378. 394.
Chebſey, 376, 388.
Checkley, 378.
Chedeſley, 364.
Cheeſe, Cottenham, 137.
——— Suffolk, 72, 421.
Chefford hundred, 42.
Chee torr, 325*.
Cheke, ſir John, 136.
Cheleyſmore, 355.
Chelmer river, 43.
Chelſea, why ſo called, 4, 15.—hoſpital, 15.—college intended, 15.—water works, 15.
Chellington, 575.
Chelmsford, 44, 53, 54.
Cheney, William, lord, 76.
Chepping Warden, 8.
Chepſtow, 477, 483.—bridge, 477.
Cheriton, 418.
Cherries, in Worceſterſhire, 396.
Cherry Hinton, 141.
Cheſhire, 421.—its cheeſe excellent, 421.—dimenſions, extent, ſoil, 428.—plants, 440*.—no knights fees in the county, 428.
Cheſnut trees, 580.
Cheſter, 173, 179, 423, 427.—Weſt, 423.—ſee 423.—earls, ib.—Domeſday, ib.—privileges of, 427.—barons, 427, 441.—earls, 427, 428, 441, 589.—county palatine of, 427.
Cheſterfield, 302, 309, 385.—a battle fought here between Henry III. and the barons, 302, 309.
——— crofts, 385.
Cheſterford, 47. 62.
Cheſterton, 155, 328.—under Lyme, 376.
Cheſter over, 335.
Cheſwarden, 399.
Chetwynd family, 390.—viſcounts Beerhaven,
Cheveley, 140.
Chevening, 227.
Cheyneis, 314, 318.
Chich, 46, 59.—barons, ib.
Chicheley, his college, 166, 179.
Chigwell, 51.
Child, Ailwin, 9, 27.—Richard, viſcount Caſtlemaine, 30.—family, ib.
Child, premature, 140.
Childerley, 130.—caſe of the living, ib.
Chillington, 341.
Chilmore, 330.
Chilverſcoton, 347.
Chimney piece, 171.
Chippenham, 142.
Chirbury, and hundred, 491.
Chirk and caſtle, 576.—land, 583, 585.
Chiſwick, 15.
Choir of angels, 260.
Cholmondeley, or Cholmley, ſir Roger, 30.—family, 424.
St. Chriſtopher le Stock's church taken down for the Bank, 27.
Chriſt's hoſpital, 17, 22.
Chriſt college, Cambridge, 133.
Chriſt church, London, 10.—Wales, 484.
Church of the Holy Sepulchre at London, 6, 28.—at Cambridge, round, 19.—with a circular eaſt end, 58.—firſt chriſtian, wooden, 73.
Churches, in London, 10, 28.—fifty new, 18.—wooden, 51, 80.—round, 135, 136. 246.—Saxon, 359.—three in one yard, 115.
Church over, 335.
Churchyard, Thomas, 416.
Church Langton, 197.
Churchill, John, duke of Marlborough, 24.
Churnet river, 278, 394.
Cibber, the carver, 307.
Cicero, ſtatue of, 172.
Cidium, 84.
Cil Owen, 597.
Circles of ſtones, 554.
Circutio, 463.
Ciſtern, great, 381.
City, what, 52.
——— meaning of the word, 52.
Clagg, Staffordſhire, 379.
Clare, village, 73, 83.—priory, 83.—earl and marquis, 73, 83.
Clare de, family, 43, 73, 293, 514.—Richard, 74.—Gilbert, earl of Glouceſter, 74, 353, 505.—Eliſabeth, counteſs of Ulſter, founds Place hall, 124.
Clare, Roger, 74.
Clare hall, founded by Richard Badew and Eliſabeth Clare, counteſs of Ulſter, 124, 132.
Clarence, dukes of, 73, 74.—Lionel, 74.—George, 74.
Clarendon, Edward, 24.
Claines, 365.
Claudh Offa, 465, 467, 468, 585.
Clark, ſir Francis, 133.—Andrew, 144.
Clarke, Dr. Samuel, 108.
Claudius, his altar and temple, 45. 56. where he croſſed the Thames, 52.
Clavering, 47, 62.—family, 47. 88.—John, baron, 76.
Claxton, 95, 108.
Claxby, 270. 271.
Clay, 96.
Claypole, Mr. 172.
Clebury, 407.
——— Mortimer's, 403, 407.
Cled fryn yn Rhôs, 575.
Clee, Brown, 407.—Caderton's, ib.—St. Margaret's, ib.—Tiderton, ib.
Clee hill, 407.—Clee, 275.
Clements Inn, 18.—hoſtel, 134.
Clent, 381.
St. Clere, 507.
Clere, family, 110.
Clercks, 474.
Clergymen's widows, alms houſes for, 201.
Cleve, 371, 417.
Cley, 112.
Cleybrook, 193.
Cleyceſter, 192. 197.
Cleyſole family, 183.
Clifford hill, 173, 177.—inn, 18.
Cliffs, ſhining, 486.
Clifton, 286. 372, 425.
Clifton family, 60, 283, 286.—ſir Gervaſe, 162.
Clink, 27.
Clinton, family, 225, 269, 329, 330.—earl of Lincoln, 233.—William, earl of Huntingdon, 156.—Edward, earl of Lincoln, 281, 325.—Roger, biſhop of Lichfield, 377.
Clipſton, 96, 176.—palace, 293.
Clive, lord, 402.
Cloathing trade, 55.
Clocaning, 575.
Clocainog, 578.

INDEX.

Charwell river, 170.
Cheſhire, dimenſions, extent, ſoil, 428. earls, 428.—privileges, court, and and officers, 428.—no knights fees, ib.
Cheſter, 430, 431.—trade, ib. 432.—Domeſday and laws, 431.—ſee, 432.—principality, 433.
Chinton, 333.
Cholmondley, or Cholmley, family, 429, 435.—Robert, baron Nantwich, 435.—Hugh, earl of, ib.—of Vale Royal, ib.
Cidwm, in Britiſh, what, 84.
Cities, turned into little villages, 481. ſunk into lakes, 470.
Clare, earls of Strighull and Pembroke, 478.—lords of Glamorgan, 495.—lords of Cardiganſhire. 524.
Clarembaldus, 237.
Clark, ſir Francis, 133.
Clerk, Gilbert, 422.—Thomas, 204.
Clay, the, in Nottinghamſhire, 283.
Clipſby and family, 96.
Clock by Tompion, 13.
Clopton, Hugh, 329.—family, 84.
Cloudſly buſh, 347.
Clow croſs, 128, 167, 222.
Club ſtone, 309.
Clud, Edward, 290.
Clumber park, 294.
Clun river and caſtle, 401.—hoſpital, ib.
Clwyd river and vale, 575, 586.
Clynnoc Vawr, 554.
Cnoberſburg, 77.
Cnouts delf, 155.
Coal mines, 347.—burning under ground for ſeveral years, 201.
Coal, 194, 381, 382, 506.—pits found, 382.—known to the Britans, 592.—kennel, 406.
Coal tax, 18.
Cob's croſs, 463.
Cobler, captain, 248.
Coccillim, inſcription on an urn, 56.
Coccillus, 56.
Cockain, family, 178, 301.
Cockerington, S. 175.
Cockhill, 276.
Cocklow, 383.
Cockſey, 351.
Codenor caſtle, 302, 308.
Coddington, family, 422.
Coed Eulo, 597.—Traeth, 520.
Coel, king, 58.—his kitchen, 59.
Coenobia, 422.
Coetmaes, 219.
Coffin, 155, 248.—ſtone, 17, 21, 61, 162, 183, 238, 240, 249, 266, 307, 382, 490, 553, 569.—Roman, 53, 54, 56, 62.—with inlaid top, 137.—wood, 265.
Cogenhoe, 172.
Coggeſhal, 44, 56.
Coggeſhal, Ralph de, 43, 75.
Cokerington, 230.
Coinage among the Romans, 409, 414, 416.
Coins, 9, 12, 15, 16, 114, 287, 347.—Greek, 485.—gold, Roman, 30.—Flemiſh, 498. Saxon, 83, 222.—of Valentinian, 182.—of Avitus, 90.—Carauſius, 222.—Conſtantine, 210.—Britiſh, 141*, 529.—Henry III. 200.—Elizabeth and Charles I. 507.—gold, 556.—Roman, 17, 28, 46, 52, 58, 60, 61, 62, 77, 81, 85, 86, 88, 94, 105, 110, 116*, 138, 140, 141*, 159, 163, 166, 173, 178, 179, 183, 209, 210, 212, 222, 234, 235, 239, 245, 247, 248, 250, 251, 265, 266, 273, 275, 276, 278, 291, 294, 306, 307, 310, 342, 343, 344, 353, 370, 376, 384, 385, 595, 397, 473, 475, 475, 478, 483, 485, 505, 506, 508, 509, 533, 535, 530, 540, 556, 558, 570, 590.
Coitmaur, 555.
Coity caſtle, 501.
Coke, earl of Leiceſter, 214.—Sir Edward, 113, 116*.—Sir Thomas, accuſed of high treaſon, acquitted by the integrity of judge Markham, but fined to near the value of his whole eſtate, 42.
Cokefield, Cokehill } nunnery, 360.
Cokenford, 113.
Cokeſey, Sir Edward, 322.
Cokeſey family, 351, 372.
Cokesfield, Walter de, 329.
Col, a brook, 339.
Colana, 227.
Colcheſter, 44, 45, 58, 59.—abbot, 24.—viſcount, 59.—biſhoprick, ib.
Cold, degree of, 212.
Cole, 4.
Cole, Mr. his death and MSS. 142*.
Cole Overton, 194, 201.
Cole church, Peter de, 27.
Colebrook dale, 411, 417.
Colemore camp, 348.
Colepeper family, 230.—ſir John, 276.
Coleſul, 594.
Colet, John, 30.
Coleſhill, 330, 344.
Colham, 412.
Colhow, 500.
Collieries, 592
Collingham, 250, 291.
Colles' tomb, 117*.
Colliweſton, 168.
Collier, Jeremiah, 137.
Colne, 159.—river, 45.
Colne, Earl's, 46, 58.—Wake's, ib.—Engain, ib.—White's, ib.
Col. Devana, 423.
Colrane, lord, 29.
Colſterworth, 249.
Colonia, in what it differs from Municipium, 4, 57.
——— Victricenſis, 44.
Coloſſal ſtatues, not Arundelian, 183.
Colſhull, 589.
Colt family, 55.
Colton, archbiſhop, where born, 116.
Colvil, family, and barons, 227.
Colwal, 368, 453.
Colwick, 293, 396.
Colyweſton, 187.
Comb abbey, 331, 347.
Combat ſingle, 347.—between Alan de la Zouch and John earl of Warren, 194.
Comberton, 137.
Combretonium, 74, 84.
Comdon well, 534.
Comites Maſſegetenſes, 465.
Common council of London, 27.
Common Pleas, court of, where held, 8, 27.
Companies, 27.—their halls, ib.
Compes, John, 55.
Compton, Long, 334.—in the Hole, 327, 334.—Wynyate, 344.—Scarten, ib.—Littel, ib.—Murdak, 328, 324.
——— Sir William, 341.—family, 166, 177, 334.—Henry, baron, 327.—Spencer, earl of Northampton, 188.—biſhop, 334.
Comvetonium, 74.
Comus, maſk of, performed, 403.
Concen, inſcription to, 582.
Condate, 425, 437, 438.
Conde, Adeliza de, 229.
Conduit at Lincoln, 268.
Conduits, 28.
Confectioner, firſt in England, 29.
Congamos, 426.
Conganii, 426.
Congel, ſettled monkery in Britain and Ireland, 422.
Congham, 117.
Congreve, 214.
Congreve's ſeat, 305.
Coningſby, 271.—family, 443, 460.
Conjugal affection, inſtance of, 8.
Congham, 117.
Congleton, 341, 425, 437.
Conna's Hê camp, 595.
Lady Conneyborow's way. 183.
Connington, 154, 161.
Connos, 20.
Conovium, 549, 558.
Conſtable of England, 43, 166.
Conſul of Glouceſter, 101.
Conſtance, wife of John of Gaunt, her monument, 204.
Conſtantius, Conſtantine jun. 210, } gold coins of, 31.
Conſtantine the Great, walled London about with hewn ſtone and Britiſh bricks, 4.
Contenour, 302.
Convenos, 20.
Conventria, 330.
Converſion of St. Paul, painting of, 26.
Convetoris, 84.
Conway family, 342, 549.—Francis, baron Ragley, 341.
Conway river, 559.—title, ib.—muſcles and pearls, 557.
Conyers family, 162.—Mr. John, 26.
Cook, ſir Edward, chief juſtice of the Common pleas and King's bench, a great lawyer, 981.—ſir Thomas, 42.
Cooke, ſir Thomas, 360.—biſhop, 308.
Cooperſale, 51.
Cooper, biſhop, 229.
Cop ar leni, 592.
Coplow, 395.
Coppa yr wylfu, 590.
—— yr golenni, 597.
Copper mine, 394.—ore, 570.
Copper mines, Roman, 558.
Copt hall, 20, 49.
Corbet, family, 397, 398, 414, 424.—Robert, 329.
Corboyle, William,
Corbuchin, John Fitz, 329.—Peter, 375.
Corby, 291.
Cordal, ſir William, 74.—family, 83. houſe, ib.
Corfe, 411.
Coritani, 165.
Corn, burnt, found, 593.
Corn fields, pools ſo called by the Lincolnſhire fenmen, 224.
Corn rick, extraordinary circumſtances of, 163.
Cornavii & Cornabii, 325.
Corndon hill, 534.
Cornu Ammonis, 266, 279, 333.
Cornwall, earl of, his palace, 13.—family, 404.
Cornwall, captain, 24.
Cornwalle, or de Cornubia, Geoffrey, 371.
Cornwallis family, 76, 82, 89.
Coronet, gold, found, 453.
Corpeſſon, lord, 341.
Corporation of London, 10.
Corpſes, 266.
Corpus Chriſti college, Cambridge, 124, 132.—plays, 344.—gild, 206.
Cors y gedol, 542.
Cortham, 411.
Corve river, 395*, 396*.
Corveſdale, 396*.
Corveſham caſtle, 396*.
Corwen, 546.
Coſin, biſhop, 108.
Cotes, 293.—North, South, and Great, 275.
Cotenham, Walter of, a great man, hanged for rebellion in the time of Henry III, 123.
Cotgrave, 422.
Cotham, 276.
Coton Clanford, 394.
Cotherſtoke, 182.
Cotheridge, 372.
Cottenham, 137.—cheeſe, ib.
Cotenham, univerſity at, 124.
Cotteſbrook, 173.
Cottington, ſir Francis, 24.
Cotton, family, 137, 142, 231.—ſir Robert,

Robert, 161.—intended hiſtory of Huntingdonſhire, 157.—his library, 25, 29.—ſir John, 161.
Cotton mill, 173.
Cotſmore, 223.
Cove, 88.
Covenham, 275.
Coventry, 315, 330, 344, 352.—croſs, priory, St. Michael's church, St. John's hoſpital, St. Mary hall, and inſcriptions, ib.—navigation, 346.—walls, ib.—earl of, 308. 368.
Coughton, 329.
Council of Kirtlington, 140.
Counde, 412.
Counos, 20.
Counteſs cloſe, 280.
Counties palatine, 421.
Court for the marches, 358.—of Chancery, 8, 25.—Common pleas, 8, 25.—Requeſts, 8, 25.—wards, ib.—duchy of Lancaſter, ib.—King's bench, ib. lawleſs, 52.
Courtfield, 825.
Courtenhall, 172.
Courtney, biſhop, 24.
Couſin's place, 134.
Coway ſtakes, 412.
Cowbatch, 381.
Cowbit, 240.
Cowbridge, 494.
Cowcaſtle hill, 307.
Cowholme, 54.
Cowleigh, 367.
Cowley, the poet, 24, 29.
Cowling caſtle, 82.
Cowper, Anthony Aſhley, 29.—Thomas, biſhop of Lincoln, 263.
Coxall, 402, 453.
Coxwell, 453.
Coytmoſs hill, 325*.
Cradiden, 127.
Cradoc, a lord of North Wales, put St. Winifred to death becauſe ſhe would not yield to his ſollicitations, 593.
Crag y kay, 544.
Craggs, Joſeph, 24.
Craig Ereri, 548.—Artur, 582.—y forwyn, ib.—y Denis, 540, 541.—Dinas, 542.—Crugas, 545.
Crane, Sir Francis, 105.
Cranfield, earl of Middleſex, 24, 31.
Cranmer family, and Thomas, archbiſhop of Canterbury, 287, 290.
Craſhaw, Richard, his monument, 307.
Cratendune, 143.
Creden river, 461.—hill, 450, 461.
Cregeri, 548, 550.
Creke, 113. 165, 174.—North, 114.
Creketot, William de, 73.
Crenn, family, 246.
Creſſing, 56.
Creting, St. Olave's and St. Martin's, 85.
Crew, 425, 437.—family, 171, 425, 437.
Creſſy hall, 241.
Creoun, Creun, } Alan, 225.
Crib y diſtil, 552.—crib y coch, 550, 551.
Crickhowel, 475.
Crida, founder of the Mercian kingdom, 427.
Crikaeth, 554.
Cripplegate, 4, 16.
Crococalana, 250, 291.
Croes Aty, 596.
Croeun, barons of, 225.—Alan and Petronilla, ib.
Croft caſtle, 443, 459.
Croft, William, 24.—family, 82. 443.—lord, his monument, ib.
Crogen and battle, 584.
Croke river, 425.
Cromb d'Abetot, 318.
Cromer, 96, 111.
Cromlech, 476, 503, 521, 542, 554, 555, 557, 568, 570, 571, 572.
Cromwell family, 142, 153, 161*—164*, 225, 229.—Thomas, 117*. lord, 161*, 186, 302.—high treaſurer, 229.—baron Okeham, 161*, 219, 222.—earl of Eſſex, 46, 161*. Richard, 157, 158, 161*.—Thomas, ſheriff, 161*.—ſir Henry, 161*.—ſir Oliver, 161, 161*.—Robert, 161*.—Henry of Upwood, 161*.—ſir Philip, Ralph, Richard, 162.—Joan, 162*.—Henry, 162*. Oliver, protector, 163*.—born, 158.—ſuppoſed to be buried at Narborough, 183.—ſir Richard, 161.—Gregory, 196.
Cromford and moor, 305.
Cropthorne, 369.
Croſs keys waſh, 242.
Croſs, St. hoſtel, 134.
Croſs, Cheapſide, 28.—Ovinus', 141*.—Caſter, 183.—Thorpe, ib.—Eleanor, 11, 29, 242, 251.—Montforel, 210.—templars, 248.—Guthlac's, 235, 236.—Edenham, 245.—Lincoln, 263.—Coventry, 345.—Derwen, 583.—Dyſert, 591.—Croes Eineon, 592.—Maen achwynfan, ib.—Cob's, 463.—Pile, 501.—Corwen, 546.——Cymon's, 603.——wooden one dug up, 27.—inſcribed, 249.—relic of, 111.
Croſſes about Croyland, 236, 237.
Croſs-legged figures, 287.
Croſby, ſir John, benefactor to Theydon Gernon church, 51.—his houſe and tomb, ib.
Crouch river, 42.
Crowe river, 73.
Crowehall, 85.
Crown, ſilver, found, 85.
Crown and Rolls tavern, 26.
Croughton, 171.
Croxton, 129, 276, 301.
Croyland, 223, 224.—devils of, 223, 235.—Richard de and William, maſter of the works, 236.—bridge, ib.
Crowle, 280.
Croxden abbey, 394.
Crutched Friars, 24.
Crux Oſwaldi, 399, 418.
Cryd Tudno, 560.
Cryſtal, of ſeveral colours, where found, 60, 239, 326*.—a cloſet lined with, 13.
Crwth, 570.
Cuentforder, 330.
Cukeney manor, held by the tenure of ſhoeing the king's horſe, when he came to Mansfield, 293.
Culferth, 73.
Culford, 82.
Cullum family, 81.
Cumbehire, 469.
Cumberland, William, duke of, 24.
Cumlur, 469.
Cumnor, 540.
Cuna, what, 431.
Cunobelinus, king of the Iceni, his reſidence, 44.—his coin, 186.
Cup, ſilver, antient, 52.
Curia Pentucarum, 431.
Curſon, ſir Roger, 306, 409.—family, 306.—lord's houſe, 135.
Cuſtom of Wales, 447.
Cuthbert's law, 367.
Cuthwin, biſhop, 209.
Cutts, lord, 130.
Cyder, various kinds, 445.
Cynebart's minſter, 357.
Cyntis, 501.
Cynnyd, 546.
Cwm Brynog, 550.—Idwal, 552.

D.

D'ABETOT Cromb, 368.
Dacre, Humphry, family, 53, 398.
Dadlington, 200.
Dagenham and breach, 52.
Dagworth, family, 110.
Daintry, 165, 173.
Dalby, William, his hoſpital, 222.
Dalby, 211.
Dale abbey, 308.
Dalmatian horſe, 97, 328.
Dalyſon family, 280.
J. F. Dammini, painter, 261.
Dan river, 425, 437.
Danbury, 44, 56.
Dancing hundred, 53.
Danes, take London, 6.—and ſubject the citizens to a tax, 18—winter at Fulham, 15.—harraſs the country of the Eaſt Angles for fifty years, with wars, 71.—torture king Edmund to death, 72.—land, 112.—take Lincoln, 228.—defeated, 242.—burn Bardney, 229.—beſiege Nottingham, 283.—king ſlain, 225.
Danes bank and money, 173.
Danes blood, 46, 56.
Danes moor plain, 170.
Danes wort, 114, 222, 223.
——- graves, 116*.
——- camp, 116, 343.
——- hills, 209.
Daniel, founder of Black friars, Hereford, 452.
Dannigſchow river, 425.
Danvers, Elizabeth, lady, her monument, 175.
Darcy, family, 47.—ſecretary and baron, 59, 230, 270.
Darcy, Thomas, baron Chich, viſcount Colcheſter, and earl Rivers, 59.——Norman, of Nocton and Knaith, 230.
Darlſton, 386.
Darley abbey, 308.
Darſham, 89.
Darwent river, 307.
Dawall, 455.
Daubeney, Giles, 8.
D'Audeville, William, abbot, 353.
David, earl of Huntingdon, kept priſoner in Odiam caſtle, 121.—ap Jenkin ap Enion ſided with Lancaſter houſe againſt Edward IV, 538.—the brother of prince Lhewelin, ruined himſelf and country, 588.—
Davies, Mary, horned, 434.
Date, 21, 59, 170, 366, 534.
Davenant, William, 24.
Davenport, 438, 439.—family, ib.
Daventry, 165, 173.—camp, 173.
Davers, ſir Robert, family, 81.
David, Saint, biſhop of Menevia, brought the Britons from Pelagianiſm by a miracle, 524.—promontory or land, 514.—town, 519.—head, 554.
Dawling field, 112.
Dawn family, hereditary forreſters of Delamere foreſt, 424.
Daws, ſir William, 55.
Dead bodies preſerved in moors, 218.
Deadheadland, 89.
Deane, 168, 180, 181.—family, ib.—town, 186.
De Albineio, See Albiny.
De Alto Pecco, 303.
Deben river, 75.
Debenham, 85.
De Bello Capite. See Beauchief.
De Bello Fago. See Beaufoy.
De Caſineto, 76.
Dedham, 69.
De Diviſis, nunnery, 167.
Dee, Dr. John, 369.
Dee river, 421.—ſource, 535, 528.
Deed, 281.
Deeds, 457.—how confirmed, 43.
Deeping, 224, 225, 240.—fens, 224.
Deerfald, 455.
De Gaunt, 226.
De Gernon, 427.
De Glanville, 116.
Degge, ſir Simon and family, 395.
Deheu meath, 505.
Deheubarth, ib.

INDEX.

De Inſula, 72.
Delacres abbey, 378. 427.
De la Pole, mayor of Hull, 77.—Michael, earl of Suffolk, 77.—marquis and duke of Suffolk, ib.—Michael, his wealth and untimely death, ib.—John, earl of Lincoln, ib.—Edmund and Richard, earls of Suffolk, ib.—William, duke of Suffolk, 91.—Michael, ſlain at Agincourt, where buried, 87.—family monuments, 88.—earl of Pembroke, 514.
Delalande family, 246.
Delalaund family, 213, 230.
De la Ligne, 251.
De Liſle, 72.
Delapre abbey, 165, 176. 194.
Delphi, pillar from, 172.
Delves family, 424.
Demetia, 504.
De Monte Caniſio. See Monchenſey.
Denbigh, 575, 579, 580.—barons, 579, 580.—earls, 580.—one killed, 343.
Denbighſhire, 575, 577, 587.—plants, 587.
Dengy, 43, 59.—hundred, 42.—marſh, 54.
Denham, ſir John, 24.
Deniſon, William, his mauſoleum, 290.
Denwall, 434.
Denne, Henry, biſhop of Bangor, rebuilt Bangor cathedral, 542.
Dennington, 88.
Denny abbey, 142*.
Denton, 251.
Denton family, ib.
Deny, Edward, lord, 41.
St. Derfeld image burnt, 546.
Denny, ſir Edward, 41. 49.
Depeham, 75, 104.
Depenbache, 422.
De Petræ Ponte, 284.
De Pratis abbey, 194.
Derannings ſlate, 60.
Derby, 301, 307.—reaſon of the name, ib.—counteſs of, 24.—her monument, 202.—lords and earls of, 326*, 303.—houſe, 28.
Derbyſhire, 301, 305.—dimenſions, 305.—its people called in Bede's time Mercii Aquilonares, 304.—plants, 325.
Derham, 30, 52, 117*, 98.—Weſt, 116.—family, ib.—ſir Thomas, ib—Dr. William, 52, 303, 371.
Derventio, 307.
Derwent river, 351.
Dèrw, in Welch, what, 577.
Derwydhon, what, 577.
De Saint Pierre, 422.
De Saliſbury, family, 91.
Deva, 422.
Devereux family, 48, 462, 463, 536.—Walter, viſcount Hereford, 463. earl of Eſſex, 48.—Robert, earl of Eſſex, 463.—ſir Edward, ib.—ſir ſir George, ib.—Price, ib.
Devils of Croyland, 223, 235.
Devil's arſe in the Peak, 303, 319, 320, 321.
Devil's dike, 72, 141.
Deunana, 423.
Devonſhire, Charles, earl of, 8.
Dewes, ſir S. 81.
Dial, cut in box, 110.
Dial Rodri, 560.
Diana Arduena, 329.
Diana, temple of, 5.—image, 480.
Dianæ camera, 5.
Dice, antient, 19.
Dictum, 549, 559.
Dictum de Kenelworth, 330.
Didlington, 113.
Dieulacres, 394.
Diffring Divr, 450.
Diganwy, 549, 559.
Digby, Everard, one of the powder plotters, 219.
Digby family, 222.—pedigree, 597.
——— Dr. 344.——ſir Kenelm's library, 597.
Dilhorne, 394.
Dillon, earls of Roſcommon, 24.
Dimetæ, 504.
Dimetia, 504.
Dimock family, 225, 229, 230.—champions of England, 229, 286.
Dinan, Fulk de, 396*.
Dinant, or Dinham, Alan de, received the barony of Burton from Henry I. for killing the French king's champion in ſingle combat, 166.
Dinas, what, 3, 586.—caſtle, 476.
Dinas Melin y craig, 585.
Dinas Melin y Wyg, 585.
Dinas Belin, 4.
Dinas Bran, 576, 585.
Dinas Emry, 553.
Dinas y Pryf, 555.
Dinbech y Pyſkod,
Dinder, and camp, 450.
Dinemore, 462.
Dingle, what, 496.
Dingley, 186.
Dingley, or Din'ey family, 353.
Dinley, family, 353.
Dinorwig, 553.
Dinothus, abbot of Bangor,
Diocleſian engaged in a difficult war in the eaſt,
Diſart caſtle, 588, 591.
Diſci, Roman,
Diſewort, 212.
Diſh, ſilver, with an inſcription, 308.
Diſhley, 211.
Diſney and family, 249.
Diſs, 93, 104.
Ditton, or Ditchton, 72.
Ditton Fen, 141.
Divinity, attributed to rivers, 422.
Dixie, ſir Wolſtan, 162.
Doctors Commons, 18.
Doctor's gate and head, 317.
Docklow, 457.
Dodo, 375.
Dodington, 113, 142, 424, 437.—family, 437.
Dogs, Britiſh, 9.
Dogmael's, St. monaſtery, 514, 521.
Dolbatern caſtle and lake, 553.
Dolben, family, 179.
Dôl Gelheu, 538, 540.
Dolichenus, Jupiter, 489.
Domeſday book, where kept, 25.—printing, 25.
——— for Middleſex, 12.—Eſſex, 49.—Suffolk, 79.—Norfolk, 100.—Cambridgeſhire, 120.—Huntingdonſhire, 157.—Northamptonſhire, 170.—Leiceſterſhire, 197.—Rutlandſhire, 221.—Staffordſhire, 379.—Shropſhire, 401.—Lincolnſhire, 234.—Nottinghamſhire, 286.—Derbyſhire, 305.—Warwickſhire, 333.——Worceſterſhire, 355.——Cheſhire, 428.——Herefordſhire, 445.
Domus converſorum, 19.
Dolymaes mawr, 544.
Dolbenmaen, 554.
Dolywethelan, 560.
Don river,
Donat's, St. caſtle, 500, 501.
Donnington, 241, 413.
Doodle Oak, 54.
Dore and river, 445.
Dorman gate and pence, 182.
Dormanton, 182.
Dormeceaſter, 155, 182.
Dormer family, 315.——Robert and Charles, earls of Caernarvon, 556.
Dormundceaſter, 155.
Dor river, 442, 446.
Domus Æternalis, 495.
Dorn, 370.
Dornford, 162.
Dorn's pence, 182.
Dorrerran, 45.
Dorſton, 446,
Dothill, 417.
Dotterel, a bird, 230.
Dove river, 301, 377, 378, 394.—dale, 305.
Dour, or Dowgate, 4,
Dover court, 60.
——— baron, 81.
——— Thomas, earl of, 24.
Dovy river, 538.
Douglas, Margaret, counteſs of Lennox, 8.
Dow river,
Doward, Great and Little, 448.
Dowbridge, 165*, 165.
Dowgate, 4
Down family, 439.
Downing, 592.
Downing college intended, 129, 134. ſir George and ſir James, 129.
Downton, 457.
Downham, 90, 116.—butter, 116.—hall, 105.
Dowrdwy, Owen Glyn, 465.
Drayton Baſſet, 375.
——— Fenny, 201.
——— in Middleſex, 42.—Northamptonſhire, 166, 179.—Shropſhire, 398, 419.—battle fought here between Lancaſter and York, 398, 413.
——— family, 155.
——— the poet, 24, 201, 348.
Driby, 273.
Drinkeſton, 84.
Droitwich, 352, 360.
Dronfield, 309.
Dropping well, 358.
Droves, 235.
Druid amulet, where found, 293.
Druidion, 577.
Druidiſm monuments of, 521.
Druids, 565, 567.—who, and what nations had them, 577.—temple, 311.—monuments, 521.
Drury family, 81.
Drws Ardudwy, 542.
Dry Stoke, 219, 222.
Drybie family, 229.
Dryden, the poet, 24, 180.—John, his charity, 160.
Dryſlan caſtle, 506.
Dubritius, archbiſhop of Caerleion, tranſlated the ſee to St. David's, 499, 527.—reſigned and retired, with ſeveral of his clergy, to a monaſtery, 527.—biſhop of Landaff, 493.
Ducket, Andrew, 132.
Ducks, wild, 271.
Dudley, John, viſcount Liſle, 148.—Edmund, ib.—Robert, earl of Leiceſter, 196, 336, 342.—Robert, 342. 380.—barons, 534.—family, 370.—title, ib. 380.—Ambroſe, earl of Warwick, 332.—and Ward 380.—Robert, baron of Denbigh, 575.
Dudley, 370.—caſtle and honor, 379.—foſſil, 370.
——— Dean, his ſeal, 59.
Dudo, a Saxon, 375.
Dueſbury porcelain, 307.
Duffield, 306.
Dugdale, ſir William, 344.
Dugeneſſe, 54.
Duglevi lordſhip, 519.
Duina, the firſt biſhop of Lichfield, 337.
Dules river, 446, 473.
Duleſſe Hugh, and Iſe commot, 81.
Dun, what, 227.
Dunham, 425.—Maſſey, 440.
Dunmow, 43, 53.—Little, 53.—cuſtom of claiming a gammon of bacon here by the couple that had not repented within a year and a day, ib.
Dunnington caſtle, 211.
Duhnington in Suffolk, 76, 87.—in Leiceſterſhire, 195.

INDEX.

Dunraven houſe, 501.
Dunſmoor, 170.
Dunſtan gave Hendon to the monks of St. Peter in Weſtminſter, 11.—his eſcape, 88.—his tools, 205.
Dunſettan, who, 481.
Dunsford ferry, 162.
Dunſton, 267.
Dunſton hill, 105.—Baſſet, 198.
Dunwich, 76, 87.—biſhop, 88.
Durance, 29.
Durley, 353.
Durham houſe, 6, 21.
Durobrivæ, 155, 182.
Durocaſes, 166, 182.
Durolitum, 41.
Duroliponte, 153, 158.
Duroſiponte, 153.
Durwood, 34.
Dutton, 425, 438.
——— family, 425.—one of it reſcued the earl of Cheſter from the Welſh, with a crew of fidlers and pipers, from whence they have a peculiar authority over the Cheſhire fidlers, 435, 439.
Dwarf elder, from what thought by the country people to be produced, 46.
Dwarfes money, 449.
Dwr Teivi, 524.
Dwy, what, 421.
Dwy Gyvylcheu, 557.
Dyffrin Ardudwy, 545.
Dyffrin Dore, 442.
Dyffynn river, 541.
——— Clwyd, 575.
Dyffyr Dwy, 421.
Dyleu Gwydhelen, 578.
Dymocke family, 268.
Dynders, what, 413.
Dyved, 504.
Dyvrod, a Britiſh proper name, 498.
Dyvy river, 524, 526.
Dywarcher Llyn, 551.

E.

EADESBURG, 424.
Eadulph, archbiſhop of Lichfield, 377.
Eadulphneſs, 46, 59.
Eagle, 249.—braſs, 278, 241.
Eagle's tower, 555.
Ealing, 15.
Eanbert earl of Worceſter, 373.
Earth moves at the Birches, 412.
Eaſt India company, 27.—houſe, 28.
Eaſtney, abbot of Weſtminſter, 29.
Eaſton, 88.—little, 54.—ad turrim, ib.
——— Mauduit, 178.
Eaſton neſſe, 76, 88.
Eaſtwood, 52.
Eatheme, 353.
Eatingdon, Nether, 334.
Eaton, 324, 328, 430, 459.
Eaton wall camp, 450.
Ebonith, 491.
Ebulum, 114.
Echo, 187, 534.
Eccles, 96, 111.
Eccleſhall, 37, 388, 389.
Eccleſton, 434.
Eccleſwall caſtle, 463.
Ecton, 177.—hill, 394.
Edale, 321.
Edelfleda repaired and fortified Leiceſter, 194, 426.
Edenham, 245.
Eden tree, 317.—river, 541.
Edeſbury hall, 434.
Edgar, his charter to Wirecot, 311.—rowed up the river Dee in triumph, by three kings and all the princes of Wales, 423, 430.—his palace, 430. aſſiſted biſhop Ethelwolph in building Peterborough monaſtery, 167. ——— where crowned, 245.———impoſed a tribute of three hundred wolves ſkins yearly on Ludwal, prince of Wales, 538.
Edgebaſton, 343.
Edgehill, a battle there between king Charles I. and the parliament, 333, 327.
Edgecote battle, 170.
Edgeworth, 30.
Edilfred, king of Northumberland, ſlew twelve hundred monks, for praying for the Britiſh Chriſtians againſt the Saxon infidels, 422.
Eddinghall, 392.
Edith Weſton, 223*.
Edinſor, 307.
Edmonton, 11, 29.
Edmund, king, crowned, 225.
Edmund, St. where crowned, 83.—engaged the Danes, for ſeven hours, with equal ſucceſs and loſs, 93 — martyred by the Danes at Hoxon, becauſe he would not renounce Chriſtianity, 71, 76.—his body tranſlated to St. Edmund's Bury, 73.—its removals, 51.—his cape, 97, 112.—chapel, 97, 112, 114.—reſided twelve months at Hunſtanton, to get David's Pſalms by heart, 114.
Edmund, earl of Lancaſter, 7.
Edmund Crouchback, earl of Leiceſter, 196.
Edmund Ironſide ſlew great numbers of the Danes at Brentford, and obliged them to raiſe the ſiege, of London, 3.—got the better of the Danes at Aſhdown, but by treachery loſt the day again, 42.—recovered Lincoln from the Danes, 228.
Edmund, St. promontory of, 114.—ditches, and liberty, 126. — where he landed, when adopted by king Offa, ib.
Edmund's Bury, St. 72, 73, 79—81. juriſdiction, church, abbey, revenues, churches, parliament, 80.
St. Edmund's diviſion, 71.—hill, 80.
——— franchiſe, 79.
Edmund de Langley begins Foderingay college, 166, 181.
Edward, William, a bridge builder, 498.
Edric Sueon, a Mercian duke, waylaid prince Alfhelm, and killed him, as he was hunting, 398.
Edric Weald, a Saxon, overcome and diſpoſſeſſed of his territories by the Mortimers, Edulfineſſe, 46.
Edward the Confeſſor builds Weſtminſter abbey, 7, 24.—grant to Rand. Peper, knt 43.—will, 219.—received a ring from a ſtranger as a preſent from St. John, at Havering, which gave that name to the place, 42.—gave Waltham to Harold, earl Godwin's ſon, 41.
Edward I. attempted to build a bridge from Bangor to Angleſea for his army, 549.—his children, where buried, 7.—how healed of his wound in the Holy Land, 26.—his ſtatue, 555.
Edward II, his birth-place, 555.
Edward III. where buried, 7.
Edward IV. married privately Elizabeth, daughter ro the lord Rivers, and was the firſt of our kings ſince the Conqueſt that married a ſubject, 172.—married privately Elizabeth, daughter to the lord Rivers, and was the firſt of our kings, ſince the Conqueſt, that married a ſubject, 166*.—made away his brother George, duke of Clarence, 166.—his coins, 273. ——— finiſhed Foderingay college, 181.—children, 7.
Edward V. murdered by his uncle Richard, ſuppoſed to have been thrown into the Thames, but found in the Tower, and buried in Weſtminſter abbey, 24.—monument and bones, 24.—tomb of, 269.
——— VI. monument, 24.—bed in which he was born, 14. — founded Chriſt church hoſpital, 27.
Edward, ſon to king Alfred, fortified Maldon, 45.
——— the Elder got the country of the Iceni from the Danes, and added it to the kingdom of the Weſt Saxons, 71. — cut off the Danes at Tetnal, 375.
Edward, ſon of Henry III. earl palatine of Cheſter, 439*.
Edward, the ſon of George, duke of Clarence, earl of Warwick, put to death by Henry VII. 332.
Edward, the ſon of Edmond Langley, earl of Rutland and duke of Albemarle, 220.—earl of Cambridge and duke of York, 24.—ſlain in the battle of Agincourt, 128. — began Foderingay college, 181.—his death and monument, ib.—ſon of Owen Gwynedd, ſlain, and his tomb, 534.
St. Edward's hoſtle, 134.
Edwardeſton, 84.
Edwyn, claims againſt the Conqueror, 114.
Eel pout, 393.
Effeceſtra, 53.
Egbert, king of the Eaſt Saxons, conquers Suthred, 4.
Egbert, king of Kent, defeats Wiglaf, 276.
Egelric, abbot, made cauſeways through the fens and did ſeveral good works, 224.
Egelward, duke of Dorſet, 354.
Egerton family, 171, 422, 424.—Thomas, lord chancellor and baron Elleſmere and viſcount Brackley, 400.
Egfrid, king of Northumberland, demoliſhed Cheſter, 421.
Egga, officiary earl of Lincoln, 233.
Eglwys, Aſaph and Kyndem, 591.
Eike, 71.
Eikon baſilikè, its author, 58.
Eiſl mountain, 553.
Eiſtedfods, what, 557.
Elbe gate, 4.
Elden hole, 303, 321.
Eldred, king, family, 81.
Eleanor, dutcheſs of Glouceſter, 7.—queen where ſhe died, 293.—her affection to her huſband, 8.—where buried, 7.
Elder tree on a church tower, 275.
Ellenhall, 376, 389.
Elleſmere, 400.—barons, ib.
St. Elian's ſhrine, 572.
Elirch, road, 224.
Eliſeg, 582.
Elizabeth, queen, where buried, 7.—her eloge, 7.—her gallery, 55.—her elm, 15 —her porter, 245.
Elizabeth, queen of Bohemia, 24.
Elkington, N. 274.
Ellaſton, 396.
Ellingham caſtle, 461.
Elliot, family, 98.
Elm, 141*.
Elm, queen Elizabeth's, 15.
Elmham, North, 98, 116*.—biſhopric, ib.
Elmeley, 353.
Elmley caſtle, 369.
Elſebienſis, Alexander, 481.
Elſham, 278.
Elſing, 98.—ſpitle, 24, 117*.
Elſtob, Mrs. 370.
Elrich road, 161.
Eltham, John de, the ſon of Edward II. earl of Cornwall, 7.
Elton, 182, 166.
Elton, 155.
Eltiſley, 129, 153.

I N D E X.

Eadred, duke of Mercia, ſurnamed Walhthîr, 559.—defeated by prince Anarawdh, ib.
Eagle rocks, } 550.
Eagles, where bred, }
Eaſter, diſpute about keeping it, between St. Auſtin and the Britiſh biſhops, 354.
Eaſterling, William, a companion of Fitz Haimon, the conqueror of Glamorganſhire, 493. — his poſterity called Stradlings, ib.
Eccleſiaſtical benefices, inheritable, 398.
Eclipſes in Aries, fatal to ſome places, 400.
Edeva, queen, 75.
Edgar, (ſurnamed the Baniſhed) the ſon of Edmund Ironſide, 154.
Ediſbury hall, 434.
Editha, declined marriage out of reverence to the virgin-ſtate, and was canonized, 375.
Edward II. born at Caernarvon, and the firſt prince of Wales of Engliſh extraction, 549.
Edward, the ſon of king Edward II. made earl palatine of Cheſter and Flint, and ſummoned to parliament, when a child, 439*.
Edwin, a Saxon potentate, gave Ledbury to the church of Hereford, thinking he was cured of a palſy, on the interceſſion of St. Ethelbert, 443.
Edwin, a Dane, 114.
Edwin Mercia, 370.
Edwin, placed on the throne of Northumberland by Redwald, having been before excluded, 284.
Egbert conquered Cuthred, 1.
Egerton, Scroop, earl of Bridgewater, 71.
Eglwys Abernon, 37.
Egwine, biſhop of Worceſter, 353.
Ein Albelen fiſh, 544.
Eldeſt ſons of the kings of England, earls of Cheſter and Flint, 427.—princes of Wales, 135.
Eleanor's body where buried, 23.—her bowels buried at Lincoln, 228. her croſſes, 11, 271, 532.
Eleanor, ſiſter to Henry III. 332.
Eleanor, daughter of Thomas Holand earl of Kent, 532.
Elephantiaſis, a diſeaſe, whence ſuppoſed to have come hither, 195.
Elephants bones, where found, 112.
Elfrid, earl, 153.
Elie river, 493
Eligug, a bird which lays but one egg, 522.
Elizabeth, her epitaph, 7.
——— the wife of Henry VII. where buried, 7. — counteſs of Ormond, where buried, 8.—— the daughter of the earl of Rutland, where buried, ib. —- daughter of William de Burgo, earl of Ulſter, 74. —— Clare, counteſs of Ulſter, founded Clare hall, 124, 132.—— wife of Edward IV. perfected Queen's college in Cambridge, 132. counteſs of Shrewſbury, 301, 302. —the daughter of Henry Grey, lord Codenor, 302.
Elmham, 38, 93, 116*.
Eltham, John de, where buried, 7.
Elveden and title, 89.
Elwaſton, 302, 308.
Elwell, high and low, 467.
Elwy river, 588.
Ely houſe, 9, 26.—hoſtle, 134.
Ely iſle of, 143.—biſhop's rights, ib.—church, ib.—lantern, ib.—monuments, ib.—palace, porta, caſtle, hoſpitals, vineyard, council, ſiege, 144.
Emanuel college in Cambridge, founded by ſir Walter Mildmay, 124, 133.
Emeline, the daughter of Urſus D Abtot, 353, 354.
Emlin, 509.
Enermeve, Hugh, lord of Deeping, 225.
Enermue, Hugh de, 225.
Enfield, 11, 382.—chace, 24.—palace, 24. 29.
Engain family, barons, 168, 52.—title, 29.
Engeaſton, 42.
Engerſton, 42.
England, Little, beyond Wales, 514.
Englerea, 565.
Engliſh, invaded and reduced Angleſey, in the time of Edward I. 566.
Engliſh Maelor, 589.
Eniawn, in Welch, what, 466.
Enion ap Kadîvor, a Welch nobleman, invited Fitz Haimon into Wales, 93.
Enville, 382.
Eoves, ſwineherd to Egwine biſhop of Worceſter, 353.
Epitaph on a wreſtler, 159.
Epiton, 293.
Epping, 55.—foreſt, ib.
Epworth, 280.
Erca land title, 414.
Erdborough, 195, 347.
Erdeſwick, Sampſon, 387.—family, ib.
Erdſley family, 443.
Ereinuc, 441.
Ereri, 550.
Ereſby, 271, 229.—barons Willoughby, ib.
Erming ſtreet, 2, 123, 187, 248, 250.
Error of Polydore Vergil, in Angelo Capella and Cay, concerning the Ordovices, 94.
Erthig, 584.
Erwaſh river, 284, 293, 302.
Erw'r Porth, what, 536.
Erytheia in Ionia, 219.
Erythræum prom. 219.
Eſchallers, Stephen de, 123.
Eſkerbrock, 475.
Eſkithrog, 476.
Eſlington, 385.
Eſſenden, 219, 223.—baron of, ib.
Eſſex, Mr. altar-piece by, 132.—his obſervations on Lincoln cathedral, 258.
Eſſex, family, 42.—fort at Colcheſter, 59.—Swain de, 42.—Robert, earl of, 24.
Eſſex houſe, 6, 21.
—— county of, 41, 49.—foreſt, ib.—bounds, and ſoil, ib.—cheeſe, 42. earls, 47, 48, 63.—plants, 64. — Domeſday, 49.
—— counteſs of, her atchievement, 61.
Eſſex, Robert de, 42.—Henry de, hereditary ſtandard bearer to the kings of England, ib.
Eſtanes ad turrim, 43.
Eſton, 43, 172.
Eſtoteville family, 225, 66.
Eſtrange family, 414.
Eſtre, 43.
Eſtrighill, 478.
Ethelardus, viceroy of Worceſter, 340.
Ethelbald, king, founds Croyland abbey, 223.
Ethelbald, betrayed by his own ſubjects, 301.—aſſaſſinated by Beared, 331.—where buried, 301.
Ethelbert, the firſt founder of St. Paul's, London, 5.—the firſt Chriſtian king of the Saxons, gave Tillingham to St. Paul's monaſtery in London, 43. —murdered at Hereford by Quendreda, Offa's wife, whilſt he courted their daughter, 443.—where buried, ib.
Ethelfleda, 101. — fortified Leiceſter, 194.—took Derby by ſurprize from the Danes, and put them all to the ſword, 301 — rebuilt Tamworth, 375.—built a caſtle at Stafford, 389. —another at Cherbury, 403.—built Bridgenorth, 396*. — built Eadeſburg, 424.—built Runckhorn, 426. —governed eight years, after her huſband's death, in very troubleſome times, ib.—took Bricenemaure and the wife of a Britiſh king in it, 471. —beautified and adorned Warwick, 328.— repaired Cheſter, 423.
Ethelred, king, drove Canute the Dane out of Lincoln, and retook it, 228. — divided Mercia into five biſhoprics, 356.—ſailed round Angleſey, and waſted it. 565.
Ethelred, king, his well, 451.
Ethelred, brother to Wulpher, king of Mercia, 167.
Ethelreda, virgin daughter of king Anna, canonized, 72.—liberty, ib.
——— the wife of Tombertus, governor of the Girvii, 143.
Ethelwold, biſhop of Wincheſter, rebuilt St. Audrey's nunnery demoliſhed by the Danes, 127.—rebuilt Thorney abbey and filled it with monks ib.—rebuilt Peterborough monaſtery, 167.
Ethered, king of Northumberland, defeated by king Redwald near Idleton, 284.
Ethiopum terras, what, 181.
Etocetum, 375, 378, 384.
Etruria, 386.
Ettoh, 185.
Etwall, 307.
Eudo, a Norman nobleman, 229.
Eudo dapifer, 46.
Everingham family, 293.
Everſden, monk of Bury, 73.
Everſden, 335.
Eveſham, 353, 370.
Eugenius, pope, 226.
Evionydh, 542.
Eulo, 596.
Eure or Ewer family, 47.
Evremond, St. 24.
Euſtace, earl of Bologne, 44.
Euſton, 89.
Ewenny, 500.
Ewias family, 442.—Robert, earl of 442.
Ewias caſtle, 442, 445, 446, 477.
Ewias, vale of, 442.
Ewias Harold, 442, 445, 446.
Exchange, royal, 28.
Exchequer, whence the name is derived, 25.
Exeter, 187.
Exning, 127.
Εξοχη, where, 88.
Extenſio, promontory of, 76.
Exton, 222.
Exuperius, biſhop of Bayeux, 308.
Eye, 76, 89.—honour of, 89, 43.
Eyewell,
Eyewell brook, 221.—wood, 453.
Eyre, Simon de, builds Leadenhall, 11, 89.
Eyſteney, 76.

F.

FABIAN, John, 53.
Fairfax, a noble family ſo called from their fair hair, 340.
Fairfax, Samuel, lived, at one time, with his father and mother, grandfather and grandfather, great grandfather and great grandmother, 340.
Fairwell, 393.
Faith's, St. church, 5.
Fakenham, 106.
Falcons, where bred, 514.
Falkborn, 56.
Falkſley, 375.
Falſtaff, ſir John, 95, 110.—his letters, 111.
Fane, ſir Thomas, 479.
Fanelhen, in German, what, 115.
Farmer, family, 166, 172.—captain, 105.
Farndon, 434.

INDEX.

Farndon, South and camp, 185.
Farthingſtone, 175.
Faſeley, 383.
Fatneſs of cattle, 235.
Faunconberge, Henry, 284.
Fauſtus, the ſon of king Vortigern, 493.
Faweſley, 165, 174.
Faweſley, family, 165.——H. de, founded a houſe for Auguſtine friars at Daventry, ib.
Fawley, 463.
Feckenham foreſt, 352, 360.—abbot, 360.
Feldon, 327, 333.
Felix, biſhop, 77.
Felixtow, 61, 77, 86.
Felley, 286.
Fen Ditton, 125.
Fenmen, 126.
Fennor family, 113.
Fens in Northamptonſhire, 167.—W. and E. 269, 235.
Fenton, Elijah, 386.
Ferminus, his monument ſpurious, 88.
Fernby, 278.
Fern, 209.
Ferne, biſhop, 24.
Fernham, St. Genovef, 73.—battle, ib.
Fernleg, 398.
Ferra, a fiſh ſo called, 544.
Ferrer, or de Ferrariis, family, 166, 222, 219, 329, 334, 375, 378, 384, 398 —William de, earl of Derby, 326*.—Henry de, 331.—Robert de, earl of Nottingham, 285.—Robert, count de, ib.
Ferrers, of Grooby, 195, 443. — of Chartley, 376, 443.
Ferrers, changed their names to Shirley, and are now earls of Ferrers, 334.—Robert, dedicated a monaſtery to God and the Virgin at Merival, and lies there buried in a bull's hide, 331.
Feſtineog, 538.
Fetherſtone, 382.
Fetney, 275.
Fetter lock, 166.—meaning of the device, 182.—keep in form of, ib.
Fetters, votive, 127.
Ffynno Aſa, 591.
Ffynnon tas, 550, 551.
Fibula, 116*, 242. — Roman, where found, 15, 62.
Field, maſter of Foderinghay college, decorates the windows, 181.
Fielding, William and Baſil, earls of Denbigh, 580.
Fiery meteor, coming from the ſea, that burnt ſixteen ricks of hay and two barns, poiſoned the graſs and killed the cattle, preceded by ſwarms of locuſts, extinguiſhed by firing of guns, 543.
Filloughley, 357.
Finbarrow, 434.
Finborough, 4, 424.
Finch, Heneage, baron of Daventry, 173.—earl of Nottingham, 294.
Finchingfield manor, held by the tenure of turning the ſpit at the king's coronation, 55.
Finchley, 30.
Findon, 179.
Fineſhed, 187.
Finiſheved monaſtery, 168.
Finſet, 237.
Fire of London, 19.—Burwell, 141.—Newmarket, 140.—Ramſay, 160.—Croyland, 235.—Oſweſtry, 400.
Fire, uſed in the manuring of ground,
Firn, what, 551.
Firv, 508.
Fiſcard, 514, 520.
Fiſh, where plentiful, 230.—feeding on ſhells, 544.—monocular, 551, 552.
Fiſher, biſhop, his tomb, 133.
Fiſherton, 289.
Fiſhwick's hoſtel, 124.
Fiſkerwick park, 394.
Fitch family, 289.
Fitton, family, 426. 427.
Fitz Alan, lord Marcher of Wales, 395*.
Fitz Alan family, 398, 400, 401.
Fitz Archer family, 41.
Fitz Auſculph, William, 375.
Fitz Corbet, Roger, 398.
Fitz Hamon, invited into Glamorganſhire by Jeſtin ap Gwrgant, 493.—divided Glamorganſhire among twelve knights, his followers, to hold of him in fee, ib.—reſerved to himſelf, and erected a court of juſtice at Caerdiff, Cowbridge, and Kynfig caſtle, 494.
Fitz Hamon, Robert, ſlew prince Rhys ap Tewdwr in battle, and turned his arms againſt his inviter, 493.
Fitz Herbert family, 301, 306.—Anthony, chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, 302.
Fitz Hugh, Robert, baron Malpas, 422.
Fitz John, Robert, 47.
Fitz Lewis family, 42.
Fitz Maurice, 43.
Fitz Nigel, William, 301.
Fitz Oſbert family, 77.
Fitz Oſborn, earl of Hereford, 444.
Fitz Otho, H. 75.
Fitz Parnel, Robert, earl of Leiceſter, 196.
Fitz Patrick, 422.
Fitz Petre, or Piers, Geoffrey, chief juſtice and earl of Eſſex, 47.
Fitz Ranulph family, 94.
Fitz Richard, Robert, 371.
Fitz Robert, John, lord of Clavering, 47, 94.
Fitz Robert, governor of Cardigan, 524.
Fitz Roger Robert, John, lord of Clavering, 47.
Fitz Roy, Henry, baron of Sudbury, viſcount Ipſwich, and earl of Euſton, 89.—duke of Grafton, ib.—earl of Nottingham, 285.—James, duke of Monmouth, 492.
Fitz Roy family, 87.—George, duke of Northumberland, 24.
Fitz Stephens, 521.—his account of London, 5.
Fitz Tancred, Richard, governor of Haverford caſtle, 514.
Fitz Walter family, 4, 54, 94.—hereditary ſtandard-bearers of London, 4.
Fitz Walter, Robert, 94.
Fitz Warren, barons, 400.—Fulk, 397.
Fitz Williams family, 273.
Flaccet, abbot of Weſtminſter, 24.
Fladbury, 371.
Flamen, what, 4.
Flamſted, John, 308.
Flansford, 448.
Flaold, a Norman, 395*.
Flaſhmire, 278.
Flatbury, 354.
Flavius Poſthumius Varus, 480.
Flawford, 287.
Fleam dike, 140.
Fleet ſtreet, 4.
Fleg, 110.
Fleming family, 495.—ſir William, 105.
Flemings, invited over by the nobility to aſſiſt againſt Henry II, 75.—tranſplanted from England to Wales, 513, 519.
——— way, 514, 519.
Flemings-way ſtone, 495.
Flete, 235.
Flete river, 30; 4, 16.
Fletton, 163.
Flint caſtle, 588, 594.
Flints, 81.—ſquared, 108.
Flintham, 289.
Flintſhire, diviſion, produce, inhabitants, 558, 597.—plants, 597.
Flitcham, 114.
Flitton, 185.
Flixton, 77.
Floats, what, 399.
Floharſbrook, 434.
Florence of Worceſter, 367.
Floods, 142*.
Fludgate, 4.
Fœlix, biſhop, a Burgundian, reduced the Eaſt Angles ready to apoſtatize to the Chriſtian faith, 76, 97.—his book of the goſpels, 90.—built the firſt Chriſtian church at Babingley, 114.
Foley family, 372.—earl, 372 —Thomas, founds a ſchool, 356.
Foljamb family, 246, 302.
Folkingham, 225.
Folliot, 166.—baron, ib.
Font, 291, 241, 242.—at Ufford and Worlingworth, 86.—Orford, 87.
Fontibus, Jeffrey de, 83.
Food, a ſea plant uſed for, 523.
Ford Helen, 544, 546.
Fordham, 144.
Fordin, 536.
Forehoe hundred, 105.
Foreign troops in the Roman garriſons, 329.
Foreſt of Delamere, 424.
Fornham St. Martin, &c. 82.
Fortenſes, band of, where ſtationed, 43.
Fortibus, de William, earl of Albemarle, 47.
Fortifications, 112.—Oſtorius', 165.
Forton, 380.
Forts, chain of Roman, 173.
——- 545, 553, 586.
Fortuny, 21.
Forty-feet way, 166, 168, 187.
Foſs, 252, 278.—nunnery, 252.—dike, 227. 252.
Foſſe-way road, 250, 266.—wade, what, 331.
Foſſil horns, 185.—ſhells, 185.—teeth, 141.——trees, 280, 424, 435, 428.—vertebræ, 146.—wood, 185.—plants, 417.
Foſſington, 210.
Foſton, 306.
Fotheringhay caſtle, 166, 181.—demoliſhed, 162. 182.——ſcaffold and wainſcot of the hall, 162.—college, 181.
Foulneſſe, 42.
Foulſham, 117*.
Foundling hoſpital, 28.
Fountain, ebbing and flowing contrary to the ſea, 494.—ebbing and flowing at Cadiz, ib. — ebbing and flowing as the ſea, 505.
Fountaine, ſir Andrew, 116*.
Fourtree hall, 29.
Fowl, migratory, 522.
Fowler houſe, 29.
Fownhope, 463.
Fox family, 456.—Richard, biſhop of Wincheſter, 227.—founder of Corpus Chriſti college, Oxford, 250, 251.—George, a ringleader of the Quakers, where he firſt ſhewed himſelf, 241.—John, author of the Acts and Monuments, where born, 241. earl of Holland, 234.
Foymore, what,
St. Fraid chapel, 571.
Frame-work knitting, 287.
Framlingham caſtle, 75, 86.
Francerius, mayor of London, 4.
Frances, daughter of Lionel, earl of Middleſex, 31.
Frank marriage, 72.
Frankley, 360.
Franks, where deſtroyed, 3.
Frederick, Thomas, enlarges St. Thomas's hoſpital, 28.

INDEX.

Freeby, 212.
Freeſchool, 51, 83.
Freind, Dr. 24, 171.
Fremundus, the ſon of king Offa, where ſlain by treachery, 327, 335.
Freſheville, T. de, and family, 302.
Freſſingfield, 88.
Freſton, 242.—priory, 225.
Frevil family, 375, 123, 329.—monument, 139.
Frevil, Alexander, champion of England in the time of Edward II. the family loſt this honour at the coronation of Richard II. 375.
Freville family, 384.
Friars minors, 566.
Frodſham caſtle, 426.
Froom river, 446.
Froſhwell, 44.
Froſt, Henry, 123.
Fulbrook, 333, 341.
Fulburn, 125.
Fulburne, two churches, 140.—braſs plate and bell in one of them, 141.
Fulcher, the Shirleys deſcended from him, 301.
Fulham, 4.—derivation of the name, ib.—Danes winter at, 15.
Fuller, the hiſtorian, 180.
Fulmer, 125.
Fulmerſton, ſir Richard, 102.
Furbarrow, 434.
Furneſs, Henry, 15.
Furnival family, 285, 293, 378.
Furſæus, a Scot, 77.—his monaſtery, 90.
Fyfield, 51.
Fynes, ſir Henry, 269.
Fynon Vair, 540.
—— Dyffnog, 581.

G.

GADLYS, 597.
Gaedleos, 502.
Gaer, 474, 475, 536.
The Gaer, 402.
Gage family, 82.—ſir Thomas, ib.
Gaid y Newod, 578.
Gainſborough, 230, 289.—earl of, 299. biſhop, 280.
The Gainſborough at Leiceſter, 207.
Galaxy called Walſingham way, 112.
Galeazzo, viſcounts of Milan, 73.
Galht y Odyn, 508.
Gall, where produced, 233, 281.
Gallows at Melton Roſs, 278.
Gallowdale, 279.
L. Gallus, where ſlain, 4.
Gam, ſir David, hated by Owen Glyn dwr the rebel for adhering to the houſe of Lancaſter, went to the parliament at Machynlbeth, with an intention to murder Owen, and had like to have ſuffered for it, 474.
Gamage, family, 494.
Gambold, William, 521.
Gamlawn, 541.
Gamlinghay, 123, 129.
Gamul, ſir Francis, 434.
Ganoc caſtle, 549, 560.
Gar river, 104.
Garden, Dr. James, 521.
Gardner, biſhop, where born, 86.
Garganus, 271.
Garianonum, 77, 93, 95, 96, 109.
Garienis river, 77.—oſtium, 77, 93, 95, 96.
Garienum, 114.
Garnet and Oldcorn, Jeſuits and gunpowder plotters, where taken, 364.
Garonne, 530.
Garte, 9, 593.
Garret's hoſtle, 133.
Garric, 173.
Garveſton, 104.
Gaſteney family, 301.
Gaſtrell, biſhop, 171.
Gatacre, 409.
Gate of brick, 83.—Roman, 430.—at Layer Marney, 60.
Gates, ſir John, 54.
Gauden, biſhop, where born, 57.
Gaveſton, Piers, the favourite and corrupter of king Edward II. 328.—taken by Guy de Beauchamp at Wallingford, and beheaded without proceſs, 337.—croſs and inſcription, 337.
Gaunt, ſir Henry, tomb of, 174.—family, 225.—quitted the title, 246, 233.
—— John, duke of Lancaſter, his palace, 264, 265.—ſtables, 266.—
—— earl of Leiceſter, 196.
Gauſennæ, 287, 244.
Gawdy family, 108.—ſir Thomas, chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, 95.
Gay, John, 24.
Gayton, 176.
Gaywood, 115.
Gedding, 161.
Geddington, 178.
Gedney hill, 234.
Geer cop, 463.
Geeſe, wild, 271.—plucked, 235.
Geldable, a diviſion of Suffolk ſo called, 72.
Gemina Martia Victrix, a Roman legion ſo called, 44.
Genounia, 530.
Geoffrey of Monmouth, where born, 477.
George, St, an antient family, barons of Hatley, 132.
St. George's well, 590.—hoſpital, 28.—riding of, 205.—gild, ib.
George I. earl of Cambridge, 143*.—gives biſhop Moore's library to the univerſity of Cambridge, 134.
George I. where buried, 24.
George prince of Wales, 599.
George, duke of Clarence, drowned in a butt of malmſey by the order of Edward IV. 74.
Gerald, earl of Deſmond, family, 513.
Gerard's hoſtle, 134.
—— Bromley, 376. —— Thomas, baron, ib.
—— Charles, earl of Macclesfield, 24.
Germaine, lady Elizabeth, 180.—— tombs, ib.
German, St. biſhop of Auxerre in France, conducted the Britans, who defeated the Picts and Saxons, 493.
German's St. chapel, 596.
Gerne river, 94.
Gernon family, 43.
Gernſton, 94.
Gerri caſtle, 592.
Gervii, Southern, 167.
Geſſoriacum, 4.
Geta, emperor, inſcriptions with his name eraſed out, 480.—coin of, with Deva on it 30.
Gevenney, 479.
Gevenny, river, 479.
Gherbod, a nobleman of Flanders, 439.
Giants' bones, 46.
Gibbon, Grinlin, 26, 28. 507.
Gibſon, Mr. his intended hiſtory of Caſter, 183.
Giddy hall, 42, 52.
Giffard or Gifford family, 375.—biſhop of Wincheſter, 9.
Giffard, Peter, 375.
Gifford, John, of Brimsfield, 400.
Gigvran towers, 498.
Gilbert of Sempringham inſtituted the order of Gilbertine friars, 225.
—— William, phyſician, 59.
Gilbert, earl of Ewe, 74.
Gilbert's hill, 397.
Gilbertine friars, 225.
Gilded acre, 82.
Gildſborough, 165, 173.—camp, ib.
Giles, biſhop of Hereford, 471.
Giles', St. hoſpital in the fields and without Cripplegate, 21.
Gimel family, 155.
Gimels, R. 155.
Gimmingham, 96, 111.
Ging abbatiſſæ or ad petram, 53.
Gipping river, 74.
Gipps, ſir Richard, 81.
Girton and pippins, 137.
Girvii, 126.
Y giſtvaen, 502.
Glade, what, 496.
Glamorganſhire, 493-503.—lords and earls, 445, 503.—conqueſt of, 493.—plants, 503.
Glandford, 230.
Glandford bridge, 278.
Glan-lhin, 228.
Glannarch iſland, 572.
Glanvil family, 96, 77.—not earls of Suffolk, 77.
Glanvil, Bartholomew de, 75.—Ralph, chief juſtice of England, 116.
Glapthorn, 182.
Glaſs veſſels, 311.—beads, 571.
Gledrewh, 513.
Glemham, 75.—family, 75.
Glen Afry, 534.
Glenarch priory, 569.
Glen Leven, 555.
Glen Naidr, 571.
Glene river, 126.
Gletſcher, what, 551.
Gleviſing, 507.
Glingbok, 474.
Glinog park, 498.
Gliſſeg vale, 582.
Glo, what, ib.
Gloddaeth and library, 559.
Glol, 592.
Gloſſop, 318.
Glouceſter, William, duke of, 24.—Henry, duke of, 24.
Gluſig rock, 585.
Glyder, bach and vawr, 552.
Glyn Dowrdwy, Owen, a rebel againſt Henry IV. laid Radnor caſtle in aſhes, 465.—deſtroyed the houſes and eſtates of the adherents to Henry IV. 473.—called a parliament at Machynlheth, ib.—pardoned ſir David Gam, who intended his death, 474.—burnt Bangor cathedral, 549.—monument aſcribed to him there, 559.—his camp, 372.
Goadby, 198.
Gobannium, 479.
God's houſe, 133, 134.
Goda, ſiſter of Edward the Confeſſor, 444.
Goderich caſtle, 444, 448.
Godfrey, brother to Henry, duke of Brabant, 43.
Godiva, earl Leofric's wife, built a monaſtery at Stow in Lincolnſhire, 346.—freed Coventry from a heavy tax by riding naked through the city, the ſtory examined, 346, 330.
Godmancheſter, 143, 159.
Godolphin, Sidney earl of, 24.
Godric, biſhop, 271.
Godrun had lands given him by Alfred as a reward, 74.
Godwick, 98, 117.
Godwin, Francis, biſhop of Landaff, 480.—where born, 178.
Godwits, birds, 230. 271.
Gogarth promontory, 549, 560.
Gogmagog, a giant, 138.—hills, ib.
Gokewell, 267, 277.
Golborn, 422.
Gold, where found, 74.
Gold cliff, 477, 485.
Golden vale, 442.
Gonnalſton, 289.
Gonora, the wife of Richard, the firſt duke of Normandy, 466.
Gonvil, Edmund, one of the founders of Caius and Gonvil college in Cambridge, 124, 132.
Goodman, Dr. Gabriel, 24, 581.
Goodmancheſter, 153.

Good-

INDEX.

Goodmans fields, many pieces of antiquity found there, 16.
Goodrick caſtle, 443, 448.
Godwood, 193, 196.
Gopſall, 201.
Goring or the foreſt houſe, 50.
Goring, George, earl of Norwich, 24.
Gorlſton, 90.
Gormanchester, 153.
Gormo, a Dane, 74.
Gormon, 153, 154.
Gornay, Hugh de, a traitor, 94.
Gorſe ſtone, 312.
Gorſeddau, what, 312, 567, 592.
Gorſendiog, 580.
Goſpels, MS. of three, 178.
Goſſeford, 330.—green, 347.
Gotes, what, 227.
Gotewell, 267.
Gotham, 293.
Gough family, 343.
St. Gowen's point, 517.
Gower, John, a famous poet, his tomb, 27.
Gower, Eaſt and Weſt, 495.—land, 503.
Grabe, Dr. 24.
Grace dieu nunnery, 195, 491.
Grafton regis, 172, 166, 352, 360.—honor, 166, 173.—duke of, 89.
Grandiſon, John, family, 442, 445, 446.—barons, 442.
Grant antient, 49.
Grant river, 123.
Granta, 130,
Grantbridge, 123.
Grantbridgeſhire, 129.
Granteeſter, 130.
Grantcheſter, 123.
Grantham, 227, 251. —— ſuffragan biſhop, ib.—church, ſteeple, lecture, earl of, ib.
Grantham, Seman, 263.
Grantmaiſnil, Hugh, 193.
Grants, their ſimplicity in antient times, 43.
Granvil family, 495.—hole, 326*.
Granvil gave his part to God and the monks of a monaſtery he built at Neath, 495.
Gratian, gold coins of 30.
Grave, 293.
Gray, the poet, 24.—family, 170.—Richard, a chemiſt, 170.
Gray's inn, 6.
Grayling-fiſh, 446.
Grebes, 271.
Green family, 166, 179, 198.——N. 250.
Green lanes, 30.
Green bridge of Wales, 517.
Green's Norton, 166.
Greenfield, 593.
Greenford, camp, 12.
Greendale oak, 293.
Greenfield, 272. 593.
Greenſhill, 418*.
Greenſted, 51.—its wooden church, 51.
Greeſtone ſtairs, 255.
St. Gregory's hoſtle, 134.
Grendon, 446.—biſhop, 447.
Grene caſtle, 507.
Gresford, 586.
Greſham, 111.
——— ſir John, 110.—ſir Thomas, 111.—his birth-place, 29.——built the Royal Exchange, and ſettled Greſham college, 10, 28.—his ſeat, 14 —profeſſors, 28.
Greſholm, 522.
Greſley, 286.
Greſſenhall, 98, 117*.
Greetham, 221.
Gretland well, 280.
Grevil family, 331.—ſir Fulk, 193, 329.—baron Brooke, 341.—earl of Warwick, 349.
Grew, Nehemiah, 348.
Grey family, of Rotherfield, 98, 302, 331, 382, 479.—barons of Wilton, 463.—biſhop and family, 575.—earl of Kent, ib.—ſir Henry, baron of Grooby, 195.—marquis of Dorſet, 210.—duke of Suffolk, 210.—ſir Henry and Jane, ib.—Anthony, earl of Kent, 197.—earl of Stamford, 244.—Henry, lord Codenor, 302.—Reginald, lord of Ruthin, 331.—ſir John, lord of Powis and earl of Tanquerville, 532.—Roger, 575.—Richard earl of Kent, ib.
Grey, of Sandiacre, 302. — barons of Codenor, ib.
—— friars, 28.—friars, London, 21.
Greyſtock, John, lord, 329.
Grieſley caſtle, 301.
Griffyd m, 201.
Grimeſgraves, 117*.
Griphin, 166.—barony, ib.
Gronant moor, 593.
Griffin family, 167, 424.
Griffin, prince of South Wales, 443.
Griffith, John, 568.
Griffy dam, a mineral water, 201.
Grim, 230.
Grimeſby, 230, 274.
Grime's dike, 30, 59.
Grimſthorp, 245.
Grimſton family, 61.—ſir Harbottle, ib.
Grindſtones, where dug, 303.
Grom, what, 521.
Gron, what, 123.
Gronant moor, 593.
Groningen, ib.
Grooby, 195, 209, 210.
Groſſmont, 477, 478, 482.
Groſthead, Robert, biſhop of Lincoln, a perſon of great learning, 229.
Groſvenor family, 430.
Gruffyn ap Conan, kept priſoner by Hugh, earl of Cheſter, and deprived of his poſſeſſions, 539. — yielded Caernarvonſhire to the Engliſh, 549.—defeated by Howel Dha, 568.
Gryffyn, prince of Wales, 504.—ap Rhys burnt Caermarthen, 505.—ap Gwenwynwyn, lord of Powis, 532.—ap Madoc, ſided with the Engliſh againſt the Welch, 576.
Gryphin family, 185.—lord, 186.
Guar, earl of Warwick, 331.
Guarin, of Shrewſbury, 548.
Guarth, what, 328.
Guarthrenion caſtle, 466.
Guaſh, river, 225.
Guaſtedin, 467.
Gueniad or Gwiniad, a fiſh, 534, 538.
Gueord, what in Saxon, 72.
Guerne, river, 94.
Gueſt, general, 24.
Guert, earl, 75.
Guideruic, 589.
Guildhall, 10, 28.—library, 28.
Guildhall or London college, 29.
Guinethia, 530.
Guivara family, 277.
Gulls, 271.
Gului, 495.
Gundreda, 117.
Gunnerſbury houſe, 15, 31.
Gunora, the celebrated Northern heroine, 443.
Gunpowder-plot, how diſcovered, 8, 219.—the contrivers of the, 165.
Gunter, family, followed Bernard Newmarſh into Brecknockſhire, and aſſiſted to reduce it, 471.—Roger, ib.
Gunton, 112.
Guortigern mawr, 466.
Gurmon, Gurmundus, Guthrun, Guthrus, 74.
Gurtani, what, 165.
Guthlac, St. 187, 235, 223. — life by Felix, ib.—croſs, 235.—inſcription, 236, 237. — knives, 237, 328. — ſtatue, ib.—ſtory, ib.
Guthrum, his tomb, 84.
Guttiſdam, 201.
Guy of Warwick, where he lived and died an hermit, after his martial deeds, 328.—ſaid to have ſlain a monſtrous wild boar, 331.—his renown, ib.
Guy of Warwick, 337.—ſtatue, ib.—ſtory, ib.—cliff, 328.
Guy, Thomas, his hoſpital, 27.
Guyſe, family, 351.
Gwaen y nag, 580
Gwaen Yſkew, 593.
Gwain, 276.
Gwal, or Gwel, what, 528.
Gwa y Vilaſt, 518, 527.
Gwlad Gaer Lheion, 485.
Gwalwm caſtle, 519.
Gwart or web flannel, 535.
Gwarth Enian, in Britiſh, what, 466.
Gwaſtedin hill, 468.
Gwayn, 576
Gwayne, 584.
Gwedir houſe, upper and lower, 578.
Gwen-draeth-vechan river, 504.
Gwenlhian, the wife of prince Gryffydh, a lady of great courage, defeated and ſlain in battle, with her ſon and ſeveral of the nobility, endeavouring to reſtore her huſband, ib.
Gwent, 477, 485.
Gwerndu. 535.
Gwerſilt, 586.
Gwerthrenion caſtle, demoliſhed by the Welch, out of hatred to Roger Mortimer, 466.
Gwgan, the ſon of Bledhyn ap Maenyrch, lord of Brecknock, received back part of his inheritance from Bernard Newmarch, who ſlew his father, ib.
Gwinniad, 552.
Gwy, or Wy, what, 468.
Gwydryn, 567.
Gwyg, what, 586.
Gwynedh, 530.
Gwynedhia, ib.
Gwyn-vynydh, 533.
Gwyr, what, 510, 521.
Gwytherin, 578.
Gyſe, 351.

H.

HACKNEY, Alice, 17, 30. Haddenham, 141*.
Haddon W. 188, 303.
Hadleigh, 34, 42.—caſtle, 52.
Hadley, 31, 74 417.
Haffren river, 531.
Hagar family, 129.
Haghmon abbey, 414, 420.
Hagley, 357.
Hagnaby, 271.
Hagoneth caſtle, 74, 85.
Hailweſton, 153.
Hainault foreſt, 49.
Hainault, John of, earl of Cambridge, 128.
Hair of cattle changes colour, 322.
Hakeds, what, 154.
Halden, the Dane, ſubdued the Northumbrians and North Britons, 560.
Hales hall, 49.—Dr. 24.—Mr. his charities, 345.
Hales Owen, 410.
——, abbey of, 263.—Alexander de, ib.—John, 81, 301.—Dr. 243.
Haleſworth, 76, 89.
Halton hall, 272.—caſtle and honour, 439.
Hall, biſhop, 201.—his monument, 107.
Hall wood, 182.
Hallaton, 198.
Haller, Mr. 15, 30.
Hallingbury Great, or Morley, 33.
Halſtead, 58.
Ham, 50.
Hamborough merchants, 28.
Hames, 130.
Hamilton, duke, dies, 366.

INDEX.

Hamilton, James, duke of Brandon and Hamilton, 89. — marquis of Hamilton and earl of Cambridge, 143*.
Hamley, 368, 369.
Hamme caſtle, 372.
Hamme court, 369.
Hammerman, painter, 261.
Hammerſmith, 15.
Hammond family, 159. 230.
Hamp river, 305.
Hampſtead, 30.—heath, 10.
Hampton, 380.—biſhop, 453.
——— Lovet, 365.
——— court, 2, 13, 443, 365, 460.—honour, 13.—palace, ib.—ſtatute, 375.—bridge, 423.
Hanbridge, 423.
Hanbury, 194, 327, 364.
——— Mr. his charities, 198.
Handel, George Frederic, 24.
Handſworth, 383.
Hanſield caſtle, reſigned by Hubert de Burgh to Henry III. to be reſtored to his favour, 477.
Hanger walk, 172.
Hanley, 419*.
Hanley, chalybeat water, 417*.
Hanley caſtle, 353.
Hanmer family, 393, 597.——monument, 597.—lake, ib.
Hanmer, 597, 589.
Hannington, 178, 272.
Hanſacre family, 353.
Hanſe company, 28.
Hanſe river, 378.
Hanſelin, Ralph, 284.
Hanſlap, William de, 331.
Hanſley, 347.
Hanworth, 2, 13.
Hapton, 103.
Harbarow, 381.
Harbord family, 112.
Harborough, 193, 197.
Harbury, 327.
Harcourt family, 200, 376.—Richard, 193.
Harden, or Hawarden, caſtle, 467.—held by ſeneſchalſhip to the earls of Cheſter, 588.
Hardingſtone, 176, 177.
Hardingwood peculiar, 437.
Hardwicke, 308.—hall, ib.——Beſs of, 308.—houſe, 81.
Hare, Hugh, 116.—Nicholas, ib.
Haregate, 240.
Hare ſtreet, 50.
Haregham, 273.
Haresfield, 4, 12.
Harewood, 479,
Harlanch caſtle, 542.
Harlaxton, 251.
Harlech caſtle, 538, 542.
Harleſton, 250.
Harleſton family, 42.
Harley, 412.
Harley family, 130, 433, 443.—Anne Sophia, 8.—Thomas, his benefactions, 201.—library, 453, 28, 29.
Harling E. 105.
Harlington, 14.
Harlow, 54.
Harlow greaves, 383.
Harold, built Waltham abbey, and was buried there, 41. —his tomb, 49.
——— family, 442.
——— lord of Ewias, 442, 445, 446.
Harwood, William, indented to build Fotheringay college, 181,
Harox, John, 240.
Harp, ſilver, 596.
Harps, Welſh, where made, 578.
Harpsfield family, 382.
Harpedon, ſir John, 24.
Harrington family, 331, 219, 222, 250.
Harriſon, carpenter, 268.
Harrodlow, 325.
Harrow on the hill, 13, 22.-ſchool, ib. church fired by lightning, ib.
Harrowden, 178.
Harry bird, 522.
Harſnet, archbiſhop, 59.
Hartingfield, 225.
Hartop family, 212.
Harvey family, James, 177.
Harwich, 46, 60.—foſſils, 60.——cliff, ib.——Charles, marquis of, 24, 60.
Haſelberg, 322.
Haſlingbury, 47.—field, 137.
Haſten a Dane, 42.
Haſtings family, 798, 194, 228, 292, 331, 429.—earl of Huntingdon entertains James I. 201.——Edward, 195.—George, earl of Huntingdon, 156, 211.—Edward, lord of Loughborough, 211, 314.——no father of this family ever ſaw his ſon, for five generations, 516.
Haterianus, proprætor of Cilicia, 480.
Hatfield Peverel, 43, 55.——Broad oak, 54.
Hatfield, Thomas de, earl of Pembroke, 514.
Hatley St. George, 123, 130.—Hunger, 130.
Hatterel hills, 441, 447.
Hatton family, 138, 186.—ſir Chriſtopher, 165, 175, 186.—his garden, 26.—Hugo de, 329.—title, 175.
Haugh, 272.
Haugham, 273.
Haughley caſtle, 74, 85.
Hauter, 378.
Haveloc, firſt ſcullion in the kitchen, married the king's daughter, 230.
Haverburg, 193.
Haverford-Weſt, 514, 519.
Havering, 42.
Havering bowr, 52.
Haverill, 83.
Havod y nabod, 583.
Hawarden caſtle, 588.
Hawenby, 275.
Hawkwood, ſir John, a great ſoldier, 45, 57, 58.—manor, 58.
Hawſted, 46.
Hay, 470, 473.
Hay in Brecknockſhire, 470.—caſtle, 473, 470.
Hayes, 12.
Hayford nether, 175.
Haynton, 275.
Hayton, 293.
Hazelbury walk, 172.
Healey caſtle, 376.
Hêan Caer Kuſtenni, 548.
Heart, prince Arthur's, 403.
Heathorne, 353.
Hecham, 200.
Hedgerly, 12.
Helena, mother of Conſtantine the Great, 58 —where born, 46.—perſuaded her ſon to wall London about, 4.——cauſed ſeveral highways to be made in Wales, 538, 534.——chapel and well, 556.
Helen's, St. nunnery, 22.
Helenſtow, 327.
Heling, 275.
Helgay, 116.
Helig, what, 127.
Helion, family, 46.
Helions, 461.
Hellath Wen, what, 425.—Du, what, ib.
Helmet found, 200.—of gold ſtudded with jewels, where found, 227.
Hely caſtle, 388.
Hellath wen, 425.
——— dwr, ib.
Hemingſtow, held by ſerjeantry to perform a ſaltus, ſufflatus and bombulus before the king every Chriſtmas-day, 75.
Hemlock ſtone, 286.
Hempton, 113.
Hemſted, 55.
Henbury fort, 440.
Henchmar, biſhop, 24, 179.
Henclouds, 393.
Hen-dinas, 400, 418.
Hendon, 10, 30.—cedar, 30.
Hen pref, 550.
Heneage family, 275.——ſir Thomas, 41.
Hengiſt, routed the Picts and Scots at Stamford, 225.—built Thong caſtle on the ground he had begged of Vortigern, 230.
Hengrave, 73. 82.—houſe, ib.
Hengwrt, and library, 540.
Henham park, 89.
Henley, 329, 341.
Hen-lhan-amgoed, 510.
Henlip, 364.
Henllan, 588.
Henry I. defended Ludlow caſtle againſt king Stephen, 395*.—tranſplanted the Flemings into Wales, to curb the natives, 514.
Henry II. defeated by the Welch and loſt his ſtandard at Coleſhull, 589. —his narrow eſcape, 396*.
Henry III. taken priſoner by Simon Montfort, 369.——builds Weſtminſter abbey, 7.—his children, where buried, ib.
Henry III. emperor, 413. — not at Cheſter, 433.
Henry IV's ſtatue, 417.
Henry VI. founded King's college, 124.
Henry VII. his chapel at Weſtminſter, 7, 24.—his children, where buried, 7.
Henry VIII. founded Trinity college in Cambridge, 124.
Henry of Huntingdon, his verſes on London, 10.
Henry of Lancaſter, duke of Lancaſter, 132.
Henry, William, ſon of the king of Scotland, his narrow eſcape, 395*.
Henſol, 499.
Hentzner's account of Hampton court, 13.
Henwood, 344.
Henllan, 580.
Henllan am goed, 518.
Heralds' college, 28.
Herbert family, 495.—Edward lord of Cherbury, his life, 358.——earl of Pembroke, 515.—ſir Edward, baron of Cherbury, 24, 401.—monuments, 486.—William, marquis of Powis, 535.——William, earl of Pembroke paſſed the Britiſh Alps with great danger, and took Harlech caſtle, 538.
Herbert's way, 538.
Herdby, 293.
Hereditary ſtandard-bearers, 42.
Herefelle, 2.
Hereford, 446, 447, 450, 451.——church, 450, 452.—Saxon chapel, 452.—earls, 444.—viſcounts, 463. —monuments, 450.—ſee, 451.
Hereford parva, 463.
Herefordſhire, 441, 445.—Domeſday, 445.—plants, 463.
——— beacon camp, 457.
Hereward's caſtle, 144.
Herfaſt removes the ſee from Thetford to Norwich, 102. 108.
Heringworth, 168.
Herlaxton, 227.
Herman ſtreet, 163.
Hermandſworth, 12.
Hermione, 160.
Hermitage, 166, 179, 393. 311.——Brandon bridge, 39.—Black Tor, 358.—Areby, 358.—Britiſh, 287.
Heron family, 241.
Heronry, 241.
Herring, archbiſhop, where born, 116.
Herringby, 109.
Herringſlete, 90.
Herrings, 287, 96.—pies, 93, 103.
Herringworth, 186.
Herthehithe bridge, 287.
Herthei, 153.
Hertiſthorne, 305.
Hertlebury, 351, 359.

INDEX.

Hervey family, 81 —Dr. 55.—rebuilds Bury abbey, 80.
Herward, the Engliſhman, 325.
Heſdin, Emulph de, earl of Perch, 150.
Heſilrige, Mr. 89.
Hetfham, what, 431.
Heſton, 2, 13.
Heveningham, 76.-family, 42, 76, 89.
Heverland, 117*.
Hewell grange, 360.
Hewet family, 163.
Hexgreve, 289, 290.
Heybridge, 53.
Heydon family, 112.
Heyningham 279.
Heywood park, bridge, and barn, 392.
Hicham cauſeway, 52.
Hickes, Dr. 359, 365.
Hickling, 117*.
Hickman family, 280
Hicks, ſir Baptiſt, viſcount of Camden, 219.
High croſs, 331.
Higham, 84, 107, 200.
Higham, ſir Clement, 82.
Higham Ferrers, 166, 179.--croſs, 179.
Highbridge, 393.
Highbury barn, 29.
High-croſs, 198, 331.
High doles, 234.
High-dike, 229, 225.
Highdike road, 250.
High-gate, 10, 30.
High-ſtreet, 167.
Highworth croſs, 193.
Hilary family, 302.——of Poictiers, 572.
Hilcote, 389.
Hilton caſtle, 388
Hinchingbroke, 153, 158.—magnificent room at, 158 ——Charles I. brought to, 158.
Hinckley, 193, 198.—honour, 200.
Hingham, 104.
Hinge, inſcription on, 52, 53.
Hingar and Hubba land, 109.
Hingeſton barrows, 62.
Hir vaen gwydhog, 528.
Hiraithog mountains, 578.
Hitcham, ſir Robert, his foundations, 85, 86.
Hibbalſtow, 266.
Hibberſtow, ib.
Hill family, 411.—ſir Noel, ib.—ſir Rowland and his benefactions, ib.
Hillebiri, 434.
Hillingdon, Great, 12.
Hills paſture, 317.
Hobart, ſir James, 109.—family, 110, 112, 108.
Hobwell, 368.
Hoby, 213.
Hobby-horſe dance and money, 393.
Hockley in the Hole, 53.
Hodier, 398, 419.—family, 413.
Hodney river, 472, 477.
Hodington, 367.
Hodſox, 293, 294.
Hoel Ddha's laws, 508.
Hog, braſs, 178.
Hogarth, where born, 29.
Hokington, 137.
Holbech, 272.
——— biſhop, 235, 257, 263.
Holbein, portraits by, 15.
Holbone, 206, 208.
Ho burn, 9, 26.
Ho croft, 425.—family, 425.
Holdenby houſe, 165, 175.——title, 175.
Hole haven, 41.
Holgate caſtle, 113. 410.
Holinſhed, Ralph, 440.
Holiwell, 30.
Holkham, 116.
Holland in Lincolnſhire, lower, 223.—upper, 224.—earls of, 234.
——— houſe, 15.
——— paſſage, 60.
——— family, 165.—Gilbert de, 242.—Philemon's monument, 345.
Holland, earl of, riſes for Charles I. 157.
Holland, John earl of Huntingdon, 43, 155.
Holles, ſir George, 24.—duke of Newcaſtle, 24.—ſir John, baron Houghton and marquis of Clare, 83.
Hollis, Francis, 24.——John, earl of Clare, 286.
Holm, 233.
Holm, what, 223.
Holm abbey, 110.——wainſcot from, 108.
Holm Pierpoint, 284, 287.
Holme, 253.
——— hall, 328.
Holms chapel, 425.
Holman, ſir John, 445.
Holt, what, 351.
Holt, 197, 110, 96, 351.——family, 342, 583.—caſtle, 359, 576.—monument, 91.
Holy bones, 206, 208.
Holy well, 159.—head, 566, 571, 572.
Holywell, 200, 588, 593.—chapel and ſpring, 593.
Home Lacy, 444. 462.
Hondy river, 472.
Honeywood, dean, his portrait, 261.
Honorius, gold coins of, 31.
Hooton, 484.
Hope, 112, 595.——caſtle, 319, 462, 589.
Hopeſdale, 596.
Hopkins, Dr. 370.
Hops, 356.
Hopton, 306.—heath, 390.
Hopton, family, 78.—ſir Ingram, his epitaph, 268.—baron, 78, 396*.—ſir Ralph, 99.
——— caſtle, 396*.
Hopton, Corbet, 410.
Hornchurch, 42.—hoſpital, 52.
Hornecaſtle, 229, 268, 557.
Horndon, W. 53.
Horning, 110.
Horningſea, 141.
Horns, ſtag's, 52, 179, 210.—leaden, 42.—of tenure, 306.—manufacture, 342.
Horns, Utkinton, 439.
Hornſey, 30.
Horſe-ferry, at Weſtminſter, 25.
Horſeheath, 140.
Horſes, fine, 530.
Horſes ſhoes at Oakham, 219.
Horſes ſprinkled, 590.
Horsford barony, 75, 106.
Horſham, 205. 237.
Horſham, St. Faith's, 117*.
Horſe-fair, 141.
Horſey bridge, 167.
Horſley, Little, 60.
Horton, 178.
Hoſpital, of St. Thomas, 9.—of St. John of Jeruſalem, ib.—Bethlem, ib.
Hoſpitallers, knights, 6, 9.
Hotham, John, biſhop of Ely, 9, 127.
Hough, 251.
Hougnam, 251.
Houghton ſtables ſlated, 211.
Houghton, 97, 286.—hill, 113.—dale, 113 —pariſh, 177.
Hounſlow, 14.—heath, 15.
Houſe of converts to Judaiſm, by whom built, 19.
Houſes of nobility in the Strand, 21.—of induſtry, 88.
Houſes of Lords and Commons, 25.
Hoveringham, 289.
Howards, dukes of Norfolk, 86, 99.—earls of Stafford, 306.—John, 99.—Thomas earl of Suffolk, 62, 91.—Henry earl of Suffolk and Bindon, 62.—Thomas lord of Walden, 78.—Thomas duke of Norfolk, 78.—Theophilus, James, Henry, Charles, and Edward, earls of Suffolk, 91.—Henry Bowes earl of Berkſhire, ib.—Thomas earl of Arundel, 306.—William, Henry, and John-Paul-Stafford, earls of Stafford, 306.—John Paul, earl of Stafford, 24.—earl of Nothampton, 180, 188.—Charles, earl of Nottingham, 294.—Douglas and Frances, 8.—Thomas, earl of Surrey, routed the Scots, and killed their king, at Flodden, and received an honorary eſcutcheon to his arms for the victory, 99.
Howe, George Auguſtus, viſcount, 24.
Howel ap Flywall, 554.—James, 475.
Howgate, 396*.
Howty, river, 425.
Hoxne, 89.
Hoxon, 75, 89.
Hoxton, 30.
Hoy family, 229.
Hubba ſlew Alfric, earl of Leiceſter, 226.
Huctred, earl of Worceſter, 373.
Huckſtow foreſt, 397.
Hudardus, 426.
Huddleſton, family, 125, 139.
Hudibras, author of, 371. — where written, 403.
Hudſon's bay company, 627.
Hudſon, Dr. murdered, 185.
Hudſon, Jeffery, the dwarf, 222.
Huelebec, 398.
Hugh, the Burgundian, biſhop of Lincoln, 229, 259.—his ſhrine, 261.
——— child crucified, 264.
Huiccia, 79.
Hull bridge, 53.
Humber, 230.—ſtreet, 266.
Humberſton and family, 274.
Humberſtone priory, 517.
Humbert, biſhop, anointed king Edmund at Buers, 83.
Humez, Richard de, 225.
Humfrevil, William, a follower of Fitz Haimon, the conqueror of Glamorganſhire, 493.
Humphrey caſtle, 507.
——— duke of Glouceſter, cut off by the means of Margaret of Lorrain, the wife of Henry VI. 73.—condemned at Bury, 80.
Hundeſlit, 398.
Hundon, 83.
Hunnington and camp, 250.
Hunſhil, 165, 176.
Hunſtanton, 94, 114.—hall, 114.
Huntebuneycyne, 153.
Huntingdon, 152, 157, 163. 443, 446.—caſtle, 158.—Dr. 270.—earls of, 155, 163.—monument, 158.
Huntingdonſhire, 155, 153, 157.—hiſtory of by ſir R. Cotton, 157. —plants, 163.
Huntingfield, 75, 89.
Huntingſtone hundred, 158.
Hurd, biſhop, his library, 359.
Hurſt, 280.
Hurſt Old, 158.—Wood, ib.
Huſband's Boſworth, 197.
Huſcarles, who, 353.
Huſey or Huſſey family, 250.—lord's houſe, 241, 247.—houſe, 265.
Huthoft, 272.
Hwlforch, 514.
Hyat tewyn gladdys, 544.
The Hyde, 200, 347.
Hyde, earl of Rocheſter, 24.
Hyetus } in Bœotia, 352.
Hyettus }
Hyle, 434.
Hymel, 168.
Hynts, 383.
Hypocauſt, Roman, 209, 257, 258, 486, 489, 589.
Hywgi ap Gwyhlliw ap Glywis ap Tegid ap Cadell, lord of Glewiſig, 99.

I.

IÄ, 19.
Jack Straw's caſtle, 29.
Jacob's well, 223*.
James I, king of England, entertained at

I N D E X.

at Burleigh on the hill, 219.—at Lincoln, 265.—where buried, 7, 24.—his child, ib.
James II's children, where buried, 24.
James's St. palace, 8, 25.—park, 25.
St. James, or Lamb's chapel, 24.
Janganium priory, 548.
Jaſper, duke of Bedford, uncle to Henry VII. 495.
Icaldule, 47.
Icborough, 98.
Iccumbe, 369.
Iceni, 71.—ſignification and name, 79.
Ichingdon, Long, 327.
Ichlingham, 71, 81.
Iciani, 98.
Ichingford, 319.
Ickworth, 81.
Ickbirig, 117*.
Ickleton, 141.
Ickneild ſtreet, its courſe, 318, 343, 355.
Idil river, 280.
Idle river, 284.
Idlecote, 334.
Idols, Saxon or Roman, 319.
Idumanus river, 45.
Idumanceſtre, 53.
Jebb, Sir Richard, his houſe, 29.
Jefferies, judge and family, portraits, 584.
Jennens, Charles, account of, 201.
Jermin, family of, 73, 81, 123.—Henry lord, 81.
Jernegan family, 77, 90.
Jerſey, earl of, 24.
Jeſtin ap Gwrgant, lord of Glamorganſhire, rebelled againſt prince Rhwys ap Tewdwr, and called in Robert Fitz Haimon to aſſiſt him, 493.—loſt his inheritance by it, the forces being afterwards turned againſt himſelf, 493.
Jeſus college in Cambridge, founded by John Alcock, biſhop of Ely, 124, 133.—and St. John's hoſtle, 134.—hoſpital, 222.
Jeſus Nazarenus, &c. inſcription, 53, 174.
Jewels, Saxon, 334.
Jewry wall, 208.
Jews, becoming converts to Chriſtianity allowed 1½d. per diem for maintenance, 15.—baniſhed, 19.
Jews' ſynagogue, 80.—houſes at Lincoln, 263.
Jew's way, 114.
Jilſon, George, founds an hoſpital, 222.
Ikborrow, 71.
Iken, what, 71.
Ikenild ſtreet, 71.
Ikenſworth, 71.
Ikenthorp, 71.
Ilam, 305.
Il bre iſland, 424.
Iltut's, St. ſchools, 500.—hermitage, 476.
Iltutus, or Ilhtyd, St. his croſs, 500.—ſchools founded by him, 500.
Image of an armed man, 237.
Imanuentius, governor of the Trinobantes, 1.
Immured man, 277.
Indenture, 281.
Indulgences found at Fotheringhay, 181
Induſtry, houſe of, 117*.
Infeoffment, mode of, 54.
Infirmary at Weſtminſter, 25.—London, 28.
Ingateſtone, 53.
Ingeſtre, 390.
Ingham, 110.—monument, ib.
Ingleby family, 225.
Ingoldſby and camp, 251.
Ingot, ſilver, ancient, 16.
Ingulphus, 224.
Ingulph, 235.
Iniſpir, 517.
In Medium, 266.
Inn, ancient, at Spalding, 237.
Inns of court and chancery, 6, 17.
Inoculation hoſpital, 28.
Inſcribed plate found at Sutton, 144.

Inſcriptions.
——— Roman, found at Ludgate, 16.
——— on a ſeal, 17.
——— to Camulus, 44.
——— on a pillar in Weſtminſter hall, 25.
——— on Camulodunum, 44.
——— to Thomas Beaufort, duke of Exeter, 51.
——— on Theydon Garnon ſteeple, 51.
——— on Runwell church porch, 53.
——— on Eaſtwood church door, 53.
——— on Sir John Croſby, 51.
——— on a brick, 62.
——— on Edenham croſs, 245.
——— on a lock, 234.
——— on an indenture, 281.
——— on Guthlac's croſs, 235, 236.
——— at Aſhburn, 305.
——— on brats eagle, 241.
——— on Kirton font, 242.
——— at Sleford, 248.
——— on rocks, 312.
——— Roman, 318.
——— on lead pigs, 310.
——— on Ludlow gate, 403.
——— on a ſilver diſh, 308.
——— at Hopton, 306.
——— on a plate found at Sutton, 114.
——— on Warley church porch, 53.
——— on a ring, 57. 291, 561.
——— Roman to Mercury, found at Colcheſter, 58.
——— on Chelmsford church, 55.
——— on Lucas and Liſle, 58.
——— at St. Oſithe, 59.
——— in Ipſwich college, 85.
——— at Stow Langtoft, 81.
——— at Long Melford, 83.
——— at Stratford, 84.
——— on Dr. Taylor, 84.
——— Roman, at Cambridge, 133.
——— on a bell, 141, 174.
——— on Ovinus' croſs, 141*.
——— on Richard Beby, 183.
——— at Caſter, 183.
——— at Fotheringhay, 181.
——— on baſe of Cotherſtock croſs, 182.
——— in Stanton Harold church, 201.
——— on a milliary, 209.
——— High croſs, 198.
——— Arabic on a ring, 200.
——— at Ancaſter, 250.
——— Roman, at St. Mary's, Lincoln, 264.
——— on a croſs, 249.
——— on Todeni, 249.
——— on Paunton ſteeple, 250.
——— at Lincoln, 254.
——— in lead at Lincoln, 261.
——— at Fetney, 275.
——— at Woodthorpe, 273.
——— on Marſh chapel, 274.
——— at Clee, 275.
——— at Saltfleet, 274.
——— at Caiſtor, 276.
——— on Mold church, 596.
——— on Maenachwynfan, 592.
——— Voelas, 575, 578.
——— at Gwitherin, 578.
——— at Clocainog, 573, 578, 579.
——— at Vallecruis, 581, 582.
——— at Caer Wys, 590.
——— on a coffin at Morfe, 382.
——— on a pig of lead, ib. 426.
——— at Stone, 386.
——— on Bloreheath, 388.
——— on Tixall houſe, 389.
——— on Lichfield cathedral, 391.
——— on Robert Mauveſin, 393.
——— on Bangor bridge,
——— Roman, at Cheſter, 430, 431.
——— on Perkin a Leigh, 440.
——— Roman, at Wroxeter, 413.
——— Roman, in Wales, 473, 475, 476.

Inſcriptions.
——— at Uſk, 480, 481, 485, 487, 489, 490.
——— on St. Pierre, 485.
——— at Llangynodol, Llannor, and Capel yverach, 554.
——— on a piece of lead, 558.
——— at Llan dewi brewi, 527.
——— at Llannis y fan, 527.
——— at Penbryn, 529.
——— at Vrondeg, 570.
——— at Nevern, 521.
——— at St. Dogmael's, 522.
——— in Pembrokeſhire, 521.
——— at Kaylwort, 542.
——— to Cadvan, 550.
——— at Pant y polion, 508.
——— at Lhan Newydh, 509.
——— at Henlhan am goed, 510.
——— in Lhan Vihangel Jorverth church, 510.
——— at Towyn, 541.
——— at Llanvihangel, 541.
——— on Pabo, 572.
——— at Winderley, 462.
——— two in Glamorganſhire, 502.
——— on Porius, 544.
——— at Maigan, 495, 502.
——— at Kevn gelhi gaer, 497.
——— at Llaniltud, 500.
Inſtrument of braſs, 141*.
Inundation, 477.
Joan, counteſs of Weſtmoreland, her monument, 227.
Joffred, 224.—abbot of Crowland, 124.
John, king, not poiſoned, 241.—where he died, 283.—his bowels where buried, 212, 365.—his palace, 26, 55.
John, St. family, 495.
John's, St. Clerkenwell, 26.—college in Cambridge, founded by Margaret counteſs of Richmond, 124, 133.—hoſtle, 134.
St. John of Jeruſalem, knights of, 9.
Johnſon, Samuel, 392.
——— Maurice, 239.
——— Robert, 244.
——— Robert, founder of Oakham and Uppington ſchools, his epitaph, 221.
Jones, Inigo, 26, 578, 596.
Jonſon, Ben, where buried, 24.—born, 29.—maſk by, 229.
Joſephus Iſcanus, his verſes, 352.
Ipſwich, 75, 85.
Ire river, 94.
Irchenfield, the men thereof by cuſtom had the avantward going againſt, and rereward returning from the enemy, 442.—revenues out of it for two prieſts to go on embaſſies to Wales, ib.—cuſtoms, 442, 446, 447.
Ircheſter, 179.
Irtleborough, 179.
Iriſh, monuments of, in Angleſea, 568.
Irford, 278,
Irnham, 225.—and title, 246.
Iron, ſtone, 417.—bridge, 417.—in Shropſhire, 412.
Irwell river, 74.
Iſannaventa, 165.
Iſembert of Xante, 27.
Iſelham, 141.
Iſca, 487.—river, 479.
Iſe river, 178.
Iſlington, 29.
Iſted family, 177.
Iſlip, 179.
Iſlip, abbot, 24.
Iſter river, 422.
Itchingdon, Long, 335.
Ithanceſter, 43, 53.
Ive's, St. 19, 158.—Roger de, 158.
Juga Baynard, 43.
Ivington, 462.
Julia Strata, 485, 501.
Julian's bower, 266, 268, 288.
Julius, a Britiſh martyr, 490.
Julius Frontinus, 441, 481.
Ivo, biſhop, 153.
Jupania, 499.

Juſtin,

INDEX.

Juſtin, prince of Glamorgan, 492.
Juſtinian's St. 520.
Ivy croſs, 284.
Iwich, a roebuck, places named from, 528.
Ixning, 72, 79, 81.
Ixworth, 81.

K.

KADER, a name of many mountains in Wales, its meaning, 482.
Kader Arthur hill, 470, 482.
Kader Dhinmael, 482.
Kader Idris, 482.
Kader Verwin, 482.
Kader yr Ychen, 482.
Kadocſton, 502.
Kadvan, prince of North Wales, his monument, 571.
Kadwen, what, 542.
Kadwgan ap Blèdhyn, a great man in Wales, in the time of the Normans, deprived of, and reſtored twice, to Cardiganſhire, murdered by his nephew, 524, 525.
Kaer, what, 590.
—— Vol, 497.
—— Lhuyd y New, 533.
—— Berlhan, ib.
—— Lhwyn y Newodh, 533.
—— y maes mawr, 568.
——Lheion, 479.—an academy of philoſophers and aſtronomers there at the time of the Saxon conqueſt, 481.—formerly an archiepiſcopal ſee, ib.
——— ar Wyſk, 479.
—— Maen, 510.
—— Drewin, 521.
—— Keſtilh, 527.
—— Vyrdhin, 504.
—— Kolhwn, 538.
—— Gai, 508.
—— Cuſtenith, 548.
—— Hèan, 549.
—— Rhûn, 558.
—— Gybi, 572.—Gubi, 566.
—— Dinas, 585.
—— Dhynod, ib.
—— Forwyn, ib.
—— y Vynwent, 590.
—— Wys, 588, 590.
—— Gwrle, 595.
—— Sws, 533.
—— Ar ſon, 556.
Kaereg dinian, 554.
Kaereu, 473.
Καγκανων promontory, 426.
Kai, what, 473, 590.
Kainſham, 411.
Kaio, 508.
Kalendar meadow, 173.
Kam river, 541.
Kantred, what, 505, 567.
Kantrev bychan, what, 505.
——— Dewi, 514.
——— Seliv, 476.
Karadock ap Ynir, 478.
Karchar Kynrik Rwth, 577.
Karchar Kynrych rwth, 577.
Karn Lhechart, 502.
Karn Vradwr, 468.
—— Lhadron, ib.
——Dafydid, 556.
—— Llewellyn, 556.
—— Philip Wydhil, 568.
Karn ardy wynob, a Welch proverb, what, 469.
Karnedh David, 552.
Karnedh Llewellin, ib.
Karnedh Lhewelyn, 556.
Karnedheu, what, 468.
Karneu, what, 468.
Kaſtelh Karreg, 505
——— Kôch, 531.
——— Dôl Wydhèlen, 544.
——— Dinas Brân, 576.
Kaſwalhawn law hîr, 568.
Kathair in Iriſh, what, 482.
Katharine, queen, her bed, 241.
Kaye, Dr. John, 108.
Kayland, 173.
Kebi, St. 571.
Kefn mawr camp, 578.
Kefn yucha, 584.
Keian, or Kaianus, a Scot, 45, 504.
Keidelſton, 301, 306.
Keidio brook, 544.
Keilwart, 542.
Keimes barony and lords, 515, 520.
Kelh, or Kelhe, what, 540.
Kelham, 290.
Kelhan, 528.
Kellingholme, 277.
Kellington, 21.
Kemaes barony, 522.
Kelſay, 230.
Kelſey, 276.
Kemble, Robert, 461.
Kemerton hill, 369.
Kemmer, 540.
Kemſey, 367.
Kencheſter, 442, 446.
Kenel coal, 404.
Kenelm, king, 381.
———'s St. well, 381.
Kenelworth, 329, 330, 342.
———— caſtle, in drawing and tapeſtry, 342.
Kenning hall, 93, 103.
Kenog river and vale, 584.
Kenred, ſon of Wulpher, king of the Mercians, 353.
Kenric. See Cynric.
Kenſington, 15.—palace, ib.
Kent, Sir Charles, 82.
Kentford, 81.
Kentigern, biſhop of Glaſgow, fled from Scotland, erected a ſee, built a monaſtery at Lhan Elwy, and ſet over it St. Aſaph, who gave name to that ſee, 588.
Kereg Edridion, 577.
Kerig y Gwydhel, 568.
—— y Bryngwyn, ib.
—— y Druidion, 577.
Kerriog river and vale, 584.
Kerſey, 84.
Keſteven, 223, 225.
——— diviſion, 242, 245.
——— foreſt, 243.
Ketelby, 212, 230.
Keteſby, 273.
Ketley, 417
Kett family, 105.—William, a rebel in Norfolk, 94, 95.—hanged on Windham ſteeple, 94.
Kettering, 166, 178.
Kevn digolh mountain, 467.
Kevn Korvyni, 508.
—— Varchen, 510.
—— Lhys caſtle, 465.
—— Keido, ib.
—— Caer, 531.
—— Gelhi Gaer, 498.
—— bryn, 503.
—— hir vynedd, 476.
—— Rhyd Vawr, 502.
—— Karnedh, 533.
—— Tyr, 579.
—— Bwr hill, 583.
—— de, 584.
—— ych ucha, 585.
Kew, 177.
Key, 348.
Keys, Roman, 17, 117.
Keynton, 462.
Keyſerſwert, 375.
Kidderminſter, 351, 357.—barons, ib.—ſtuffs, 357.
Kidwely, 504, 506.
Kilbegh, 572.
Kilburn, 30.
Kilgaran, 515, 523, 524.
Kilken, 589, 595.
Killeſthorp, 267
Killgury, 424.
Killingworth, 329, 330.
———— dictum de, 330.
Kiln, Roman, 16.
Kilpec caſtle, 442, 448.
——— family, ib.—champions of England, at the beginning of the Normans, ib.
Kil y maen Lhwyd, 505.
Kimberley, 105.
Kimbolton, 155, 162.
Kime, 220.—de, family, 205.
Kinaid ferry, 233.
Kinard, 280.
Kinardſey, 417*.
Kinderton, 438.
Kind ſtreet, 438.
Kineburga, 155, 167.
Kineceſter, 155.
Kineton, 327, 333.
Kinith, St. 494.
Kinſeage, 495.
King, Dr. 24.
King's arbour, 14.
King's Bench, 8, 25.
King's cliffe, 187.
King's college in Cambridge, founded by king Henry VI. 124, 131.
King's delf, 124, 154, 166.
King's ditch, 131.
King's hall, 133.
King's houſe, Iſlington, 29.
King's Norton, 360.
King's Sutton, 170.
King's Thorpe, 177.
Kingleigh family, 424.
Kingſland, 416.
Kingſton, 291, 395.
Kingſton, earl of, ſlain, 280.
Kinlet, 351, 409.
Kinmarth, 579.
Kinneburga, 183.
Kinneburg caſter, ib.
Kinnerſley, 443.
Kinnibantum, 155.
Kinnington, 277.
Kirkby Bellers, 213.
Kirkby, Eaſt, 271.
Kirkby, Weſt, 434.
Kirkby rood, 109.
Kirkſted, 269.
Kirkton, 224, 242.
——— Lindſey, 266.
Kirtlington, 140.
Kirton abbot, 183.
Kiſlin bury, 177.
Kiſtvaen, 510, 577.
Kitſon family, 73. 82.
Klawdh Offa, 465, 467.
Kledvyrn yn Rhôs, 475.
Klogwyn y Garnedh, 552.—du ymhèn y Glyder, ib.
Klokainog, inſcription at, 575.
Klynog in Arvon, 554.—Vawr abbey, 560.
Klyttieu'r Eglwys, 468.
Knaith, 279
Knaptoft, 198.
Knapton's hoſtle, 134.
Knath, 230.
Knebworth, 335, 343.
Kneller, ſir Godfrey, 24.
Knetchts, cxli.
Knevet family, 92, 102, 103.—John lord chancellor in the time of Edward III. 93.—Sir Henry, ib.
Knife handle, 346.
Knife faſtened to a deed by a harpſtring, 34.—for a grant, 117*.
Knight, Dr. 157. 159.—his monument, 187.
Knight of the king, 154.
Knight's fee, cxlii.
Knights, 141.—their original, cxl.—of the order of the garter, ib.—bannerets, ib.—of the bath, ib.—how made, cxli, cxlii, cxliii.—how degraded, cxliii.—batchelors, cxliii.—hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, 6, 9.—of the Garter painted in windows, 244.—five, ſtones ſo called, 296.
Knightley family, 165, 174.
Knighton, 465, 467.
Knipe, Dr. 24.
Knives, ancient, 114.—Guthlac's, 236.
Kniveton, 301, 306.—family, ib.—St. Lo. ib.

Knock-

INDEX.

Knocking, 418, *420.
——— barons L'Eſtrange of, 399.
Knoll, 173, 227.
Knoll hill, 78.
Knolles, William, baron of Rotherfield, 290, 310.—Sir Robert, 233.
Knolton, 54.
Knot, a bird, why ſo called, 230.
Knots, 271.
Knotsford, 426, 439*.
Knowle, 51.
Koeten Arthur, 544.
Koetie caſtle, 495.
Kolhwyn ap Tagno, 542.
Konken, a king of Powis, 17.
Konken, 582.
Kongſtolen, 295.
Κοσνος, 52.
Κωσνος, 235.
Kor lan, Korph lan, } 482.
Kraig forwyn, 544.
Kregin Diliw, what, 558.
Kreigieu'r Erery, 548.
Krib y Diſtil, 551.
Krig y Dyrn, 510.
Krigennau river, 541.
Krigeu, what, 468.
Krigeu Kwn Keido, 468.
Krigvyrn, 578.
Krig Vryn, 579.
Krwn, what, 568.
Kum, what, 30.
Kumero, Kumeji, Kumeraes, and Kumraeg, what, vii.
Κυνητα, 209.
Kwmmwd Mowdhwy, 538.—of Twrkelyn, 568.
Kwn Gloen, 522.
Kwrw, 302.
Kydweli, 504, 508..—lords of, ib.
Kymryd, 560.
Kyme, R. de, 264.—title, 248.
Kyn, in compound words, what, 557.
Kynan ap Edwal Voel ſlain in a battle for Angleſey by Howel Dha, 568.
Kynaſton, Nicholas, his tomb, 143*.
——— Sir Francis de, 420.
Kynaſton's cave, 418, *420.
Kyndharedh, 557.
Kyndhydh, what, 557.
Kyndyn, what, 557.
Kynedhav, a Britiſh king, 494, 558.
Kynedhaw ap Ichdinoa, a Britan, 13.
Kynedhow, 558.
Kynfig caſtle, 501.
Kyngar, 568.
Kynglas, what, 558.
Kynharedh, what, ib.
Kyn kan, what, ib.
Kynric. See Kenric.
Kyntav, what, 557.
Kyntwich, 557.
Kynverthyr, 557.
Kynvid, 557.
Kynwy, 557.
Kyre, 372.
Kyrys ap Kynvor, 16.
Kyrle, John, 462.

L.

LACHARN, 507.
Laſt, 175.
Lachrymatory, 162.
Lacy family, 396*, 403, 443, 477.—earls of Lincoln, 195, 233.—Henry earl of Lincoln, 123.—builds Denbigh caſtle, 576, 567, 568.—his ſon drowned, ib.—ſtatue of him and his wife, ib.—Walter, 477,—John earl of Lincoln, 195.
Ladbroke and family, 334.
Lady chapel at Bury, 79.
—— ſpring, 83.
Lakes, in Wales, 470.—in Cardiganſhire, 529.
Lamb's chapel, 24.
Lamborne, 51.
Lameley, 293.
Lamp, Roman, 16, 144.—braſs, in form of foot and frog, 106.
Lampries, where plentiful, 351, 359.—a fine way of dreſſing them, uſed by the Italians, 351.
Lancaſter duchy court, 8, 25.
——— Henry duke of, founds Lancaſter college, 201.—earl and dukes, 201.—Henry earl of Lincoln, 233.—Henry de, earl of Hereford, 169, 444.
Landaff, 493, 499.
Landguard fort, 60.
Landwade, 142.
Landbeach, 142*.
Lands on the borders of Wales, generally held by the tenure to find ſoldiers for the defence of the frontiers, 396*.
Lanfty, 518
Langadwalader, 570.
Langanum, promontory of, 548.
Langar, 290.
Langdon, 365.
Langer, 284.
Langerſton, 75.
Langerfort, 60.
Langham, John, his charity, 173.—archbiſhop, 24.
Langley, 117*, 201.—King's, 396*.
Langton and family, 270.
Langton, Walter de, biſhop of Lichfield and lord high treaſurer, in the time of Edward I. 389.—walled Lichfield cloſe, 391.—built lady chapel, and was buried in his cathedral, ib.
Langworth ſtreet, 266.
Lanheath, 126.
Lanthony, 477, 482.
Lantoni abbey, 443.
Lantriſſant, 498.
Lantwit, 500.
Lapley, 385.
Lapwings, 271.
Lardner, ſervice of, 104.
Lares, Roman, 53.
Lark river, made navigable by an act of parliament in the 11th and 12th of William III, 80.
Laſeby, 275.
Latimer, what, 400.
——— barons, 166.—family, 167.—lady Lucy, her monument, 30.—biſhop, his oak, 210.—J. baron, where buried, 5.
Latinarius, 480.
Latton, 54.
Lavan, Laver } herb, 523.
Lavenham, 84.
Laver, High, 51.
Laughton, 280.
Laund, 198.
Laundon, 247.
Laurence, Dr. 159.
Lawford hall, 334.
Lawleſs court, 52.
Lawyers limited in Norfolk and Suffolk, 101.
Laxton, held by the ſervice of hunting in ſeveral of the king's foreſts, 293.
Laxton, or Lexington, 188.
Laxton hoſpital, 166, 180.
Layard, Dr. 159.
Layer Marney, 60.
—— John, his collections, 141.
Layton, antiquities found at, 50.
Lazimon, the hiſtorian, 359.
Lea river, its courſe ſhortened, 50.
Lead, where plentiful, 303.—pig, 310.—inſcribed, 426, 441.—mines, 310, 322, 528.—ſtep, 511.—maſs of, 558.—market, 28.
Lead pig inſcribed, 426, 441.
Lead works, 303.
Leaden hall, 10, 28.
——— coffin, 162.
Leak family, 302.
Leake, Nicholas, his peculiarity, 310.
Leame river, 327.
Leamington, 327.
Leamington, Haſtings, ——— Prior, } 334.
Leanſille, 445.
Leaſe, 239.
Leaſowes, 357. 410.
Lechmere family, 369.
Lechen, what, 502.
Leck, 378.
Ledbury, 443, 453, 455, 456.
Ledden river, 443, 444, 445.
Leddet family, 166, 167.
Ledeceſtreſcyre, 193.
Lee, in Cheſhire, 426, 437, 439*.
Lee family, 437, 440.—William, 287.
Leech, vicar of Walden, 61.
Leeds family, 129.
Lees priory, 43.
Leeſwood, 596.—coal, ib.—copper, ib.
Legburne, 274.
Legaceaſter, 194. 423.
Legeceſtria, 194.
Legereceaſter, Legoraceaſter, Legraceaſter, } 202.
Legio ſecunda Auguſta, at London, 16.—viceſima victrix, 423.—victrix, 576.—decima Antoniana, 558.
Leiceſter, 194, 201.—biſhop, ſiege, caſtle, college, and hoſpital, 194.—abbey de pratis, 194.—St. Leonard's hoſpital, 203.—St. John's 204.—and St. Urſula's, 203.—St. Mary's de caſtro church, ib.—St. Mary's, &c. gilds, 205.—ſpittle houſe, 203.—caſtle, 202, 208.—college church, 203.—Newark, 202, 203, 208.—almſhouſes, 201.—black friars, 204.—grey friars, 204.—Lazar houſe, walls, churches, 205.—corporation, 206, 207.—biſhops, 207, 209.—elections, 207.—ſee, 209.—earl of, defeated, 73.
Leiceſter, lady, her munificence, 113.
Leiceſterſhire, 193.—earls of, 196.—extent, ſoil, Domeſday, heptarchy, 197.—earls, 214.—plants, 215.
Leigh, 41, 42, 52, 55, 395, 367.
Leigh family, and lady's hoſpital, 334.
Leighton, 155, 162.
Leighton, baron, 162.
Leike, 378.
Leir, king, 194.
Leire river, 194.
Leland cited, 7, 73, 129, 157, 158, 161, 162, 170, 171, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 198, 200, 209, 210, 211, 212, 221, 222, 240, 241, 243, 244, 245, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 261, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 274, 275, 276, 277, 279, 280, 286, 287, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 305, 307, 309, 325*, 334, 335, 336, 338, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 357, 358, 359, 360, 365, 366, 368, 369, 370, 371, 380, 381, 382, 383, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 394, 395, 398, 401, 402, 403, 404, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 429, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 439*, 440, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 453, 454, 457, 459, 460, 462, 467, 469, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 506, 507, 508, 509, 517, 518, 519, 520, 522, 526, 527, 528, 533, 534, 540, 541, 542, 545, 550, 553, 554, 555, 556, 570, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 584, 585, 590, 591, 595, 596.
Leman family, 166.
Lemington, 334.
Lemſter, 443.—ore, ib.
Len river, 286.

INDEX.

Lennard, family, 54.
Lenthal, 460.—Starker and Earls, 457.
Lenthal, Rowland, 443.
Lenton, 283, 286.
Lentwardine, 453.
Leofric, earl of Leiceſter, 196.—earl of Mercia, 350.
Leofſtan, earl of Leiceſter, 176.
Leofwin, 403.
Leogora, 194.
Leominſter, 443, 457, 458.
Leonard's, St. well medicinal, 185.
Leon caſtle, 576.
Leon hall Stretford, 462.
Leon minſter, 443.
Leon Vawr, 423.
Leoſtoffe, 77, 351.
Lepers, hoſpital for, 57.—firſt hoſpital for, 351.
Leproſy, or elephantiaſis, in England, 195.
Leſſingham, S. 248.
L'Eſtrange family, 114, 399.——ſir Roger, 114.—barons of Knockin, 400.—of Blackmore, ib.
Letheringham houſe and church dilapidated, 86.
Letton, 462.
Leucæum, 8.
Leucarum, 495, 503.
Levant company, 26.
Leven river, 470.
Leverington, 142*.
Leverſton, 242.
Leveſon, lady Catharine, her almshouſe, 342.
Lewing bridge, 213.
Lewknor's hoſpital, 359.
Lexden heath, and works there, 59.
Ley river, 41.
Leymouth, 41.
Leyſton, 87.
Lewelin ap Grufydh, incorporated Lhanvylhin, in the time of Edward II. 536.—reduced by the Engliſh to hold his country in fee by paying one thouſand marks yearly, 549.—broke his conditions, went to war, and was ſlain, 578.
Lewes, Thomas, re-built Stamford church, 280.
Lewis, viſcount Robſert, 7.
Lewis of France, took Norwich, 95.—created an earl of Lincoln, 233.
Lhan Armon, 584.
—— Carvon, 501. 531.—Caradoc of, ib.
—— Degai, 557.
—— Degvan, 569.
—— Deilaw Vawr, 506.
—— Deilovawr, 510.
—— Deinolen, 553.
—— Derfel, 546.
—— Dhewi Brêvi, 524, 527.
—— Drillo, 546.
—— Badarn Vawr, 524, 528.
—— Ewrgain, 596.
—— Bedr, 524.
—— Body, 508.
—— Dudno, 560.
—— Edvin, 576.
—— Engan Brening, 533, 554.
—— Elian, 571, 572.
—— Eiken, 71.
—— Elwy, 588.
—— Ethle, 506.
—— Egweſt, 576.
—— Genith, 503.
—— Goedmor, 528.
—— Ymnach hill, 535.
—— Gynodol, 554.
—— Gyvod, 535.
—— Haiden, 518.
—— Helignoe, 526.
—— indelas, 534.
—— Idan, 569, 572.
—— Idlos, 531, 534.
—— ienis, 580.
—— Iltud Vawr, 500.—and ſtones, ib.
—— nio y ſav, 527.
Lhan Jeſtin, 569.
—— Andifry, 504, 506.
—— Lieni, 443.
—— lugan, 536.
—— Newydh, 509.
—— Peder, 467.
—— Peris, 553.
—— Pabo, 572.
—— Rwſt and bridge, 578.
—— San Frid, 526.
—— Stephen caſtle, 505, 507.
—— Vâes, 500, 566, 569.
—— Tyve, 526.
—— Vair, 536, 510.
—— Vair y Bryn, 509.
—— Vethlin, 530.
—— Vihangel Jerwerth, 509.
—— Virres, 586.
—— Tegwin, 543.
—— Ufydd, 577.
—— Vylhin, 536.
—— Ychen, 545.
Lhech yr Aſt, 528.
Lhech, or Llech, what, 520, 521, 568.
Lhech laver, 519, 520.
Lhech y Gowres, 528.
Lhêch y Drybedh, 521.
Llech rhyd, 526.
Lhê Herbert, 538.
Lhein, 548.
Lhewelyn aur dorchog, 543.
Lhewelyn ap Jorwerth, 418.—buried in Conway abbey, 559.
Lhewelyn ap Sitſyhlt, ſlain by Howel and Meredith, 578.
Lhewelyn, the laſt prince of the Britiſh line, deſtroyed Tinbod caſtle, 465.—hanged a nephew of Giles, biſhop of Hereford, for adultery with his wife, 471.—betrayed and ended his life at Caer Vortigern, 465.
Lhewelyn the Great, 260.—coffin and palace, 578.—ſlain, 467.
Lhewen river, 471.
Lhiv, what, 508.
Lhoegria, 560.
Lhong, what, 3.
—— port, 3.
Lhowdhad, abbot of Enlli,
Lhug, 468.
Lhugwy, what, 468.
Lhwn, what, 3.
Lhwyn, what, 528.—Iwrch, ib.
Lhwynen, what, 505.
Lhyn, what, 97, 228.
—— Bodley, 542.
—— Cwm Howel, 542.
—— Currig, 540.
—— Kay, 540.
—— Irddin, 542.
—— Conwy, 545.
—— Lavathan, 470, 472.
—— Savadhan, 470, 472.
—— Tegid, 71, 538, 545.
—— Til, 540.
—— Bradwen, 451.
—— Teivi, 524.
—— ycwn, 553
Lhyſvaen, 568.
Lhywarch Brydydh y Moch, 577.
Library, Cottonian, 25.—St. Martin's, ib.—Sloane, 28.—Harleian, ib.—Royal, ib.—Norfolk, ib.—public in Cambridge, 131.—Gloddath, 559.
Lichfield, 376, 377.—ſee, 397.—archbiſhop, ib.—ſee tranſlated to Coventry, 377.—pool, 377.
Lightfoot, John, 386.
Lightning, 13, 197.
Ligoraceaſter, 202.
Lilborne, 168.
Lilburne, 188.
Lilford, 180.
Lilly, William, 212.
Limberg, Peter de, 230.
Lime, 210.
Liberty, of St. Edmund, 72.—of St. Ethelred, 75.
Lin river, 283.
Linacre, Thomas, 307
Lime tree, large, 104.
Limſey, Robert de, biſhop of Litchfield and Cheſter, 330.—family, ib.
Lincoln, city, 252, 229.—bail, gates, cloſe, 252.—caſtle, 252, 256.—Old, 252, 254.—hoſpital, ib.—conduit, ib.—grammar ſchool, market houſe, town hall, bridge, companies, ſchools, feefarm rents, quarries, 265.—Scotch hall, 265.—vicars' college, 262.—St. Paul's church, 263.—St. Swithin's, 264.—St. Martin's, 263.—Trinity, 264.—churches united, 264.—St. Andrew's and rows, 269.
——— cathedral, 258.—Leland's account of, 261.—built by Remigius, ib.—burnt, 259.—continued by Bloet, ib.—eaſt end rebuilt by Hugh the Burgundian, ib.—enlarged by Lexington, 249.—nave by Wells and Groſthead, ib.—rood tower, Longland and Ruſſel's chapels, 260.—ſtatues of kings in front, ib.—pictures of biſhops, 261.—bell, ib.—inſcription on lead, ib.—library, ib.—cloſe, chequer gate, pottergate, deanery, chantries, poor clerks' houſe, regiſtrars, biſhop's palace, 262, 263.—ſee, juriſdiction, and revenues, 262, 263.—officers, 263.—mint, ib.—churches, 264.—religious houſes, ib.—heath, 266.—earls of, 233, 281. houſe, 29.
Lincoln's inn, 5.
Lincolnſhire, 223, 282.—bounds, 223.—air, ib.—plants, 282.—dimenſions, 234.—Domeſday, ib.
Lincolnia, 228.
Lindaw, 228.
Lindcoit, 227.
Lindecollina, 227.
Lindis, 228.
Lindis river, 228, 252.
Lindiſi, 227.
Lindridge, 372.
Lindſey, 223, 227.
——— family, 223.
Lindum, 227.—date of, 254.
Lindwood, 173.
Linen manufacture, 110.
Linford 117*.
Lingas, and family, 458.
Link, the, 368.
Linlethquo, 228.
Linternum, 228.
Linton, 138, 463.
Lindwood, William, 268.
Liquorice, where produced, 285.
L'iſle, family, 72, 479.—baron, 140.
Liſours, family, 285.
Linwood, 267.
Liſter family, 397.
Little eye, 221.
Littleborough, 284, 291.
Littlebury, 62.
Littlecheſter, 301, 307.
Littleton, North, 371.
Livingſton, 86.
Liz, St. earl of Lincoln, 233
Llampeder, 491.
Llan, what, 482.
Llan rhaiadr, 580, 581.
—— Andre, 465.
—— Badarn Odyn, 544.
—— Dhewi Velfrey, 522.
—— Bran, 510.
—— Drinio common, 467.
—— Gadwaladwr, 370.
—— Ruth, 575.
—— fair yn hornwy, 570.
—— Vihangel geneu'r glyn, 529.
—— Vihang, 476.
—— ruth, 580.
—— frydd, 580.
—— vou vadelan, 581.
—— van vadelan, 577.
—— vrog, 581.
—— egwaſt, 582.
—— gollen, 562.
—— gedwyn, 584.

INDEX.

Llan drindod and wells, 469.
—— St. Fryd, 476.
—— Hammwlch, 476.
—— Clere, 526.
—— Gubi, 488.
—— Degla, 584.
—— Dwy, 572.
—— Difilion, 572.
—— Dyfrog, 572.
—— iho, 474.
—— cot, 483.
—— davailog, 476.
—— edeu, 475.
—— tarnam, 491.
—— frynach, 475.
—— vair ys coed, 485.
Llanir, 473.
——— gwin, 482.
Llanor, 554.
Lleir, king, 568.
Lleweni, 580.
Lleder river, 560.
Llefgneullian, 580.
Llevenni, 472, 476.
Llider river, 560.
Lloyd, 371. — biſhop founds two ſchools, 367.
Lloydarth foreſt, 518.
Lluſwy, 570.
Lluyd, Humphry, a great Britiſh antiquary, his monument, 580.
Lluyd's letter to Gibſon, 464.
Llwyffin, what, 505.
Llybyrgath, 583, 585.
Llyfwy, 570.
Llygwy, 568.
Llyn Ardudas, —— Glaſs, —— y Naddroedd, —— Coch, } 550.
—— Nadurl, —— Nantly, —— Cadv, —— y ranid Llanberis, —— Teirn, —— Eegian, —— Lhyduw, } 551.
—— Ogwen, 552.
—— Dolbatern, —— Peris, —— Kleddeu, —— Llyghy, —— Llydaw, —— gwinam, —— dinas, } 553.
—— yr Afange, 560.
Llys faen, 561.
Llyſſan, 536.
Lobſters, 111.
Lochho, 308.
Lochor river, 495, 503.
Lock and key, 239.—and inſcription, 234.
Lock, antient, 102.
Locke, John, his tomb, 51.
Locuſts, 238.
Lodbrog lands and is murdered, 108.
Loddon and church, 109.
Loddington, 178.
Lodge hill, 30.
—— on wold, 213.
Loghor, 495.
Lollards burnt, 118.
Lomeſbury, 25.
Londinum, 3, 15.
London, 3, 15.—ſtone, why ſet up, 3. — tower and gates, 4, 16. —— called Auguſta, 3.—a mint ſettled here in Conſtantine the Great's time, 4. — fires, 18. — walls, 4, 15, 16.—biſhopric, 4, 5.—founder, 3.—trade, 3, 10.—reſcued by Theodoſius, 5.—in the hands of the Saxons, 5.—Mercians, 6.—Danes, 6, 18.—recovered by Alfred, 6.—Canute in vain attacks it, 6.—privileges, ib.—churches, ib.—Fitz Stephen's account of, ib.—bridge, 9.—corporation, 10. — wards, ib.—aldermen, ib.—portrieve, ib.—mayor, ib.—ſheriffs, ib. — water conveyed about, ib.—churches, ib.—inhabitants, 10, 18.—longitude and latitude, 10.—bridge, 26.—infirmary, 28.—military government, ib.—natives, 29.
Londres, or Londra, 3.
Londres, De, family of, 504.
Lonet, family, 301.
Long Melford, 83.
—— Stratton, 102.
—— Stow, 129.
—— Stanton, 137.
—— Thorp, 183.
Longchamp, family of, 224.
Longditch, 167.
Longdon, 364.
Longevity, 395, 417.
Longford, 301, 306.
Long Ichingdon, 327.
Longidinum, 3.
Longland, Robert, 404.
Loomb's ſilk works, 307.
Lophamford, 76.
Lord's place, 207.
Lothing land, 77.
Lovain, lords of, 43.
Lovantium, 505, 509, 527.
Lovel, 396*.—family, 165, 94, 74, 168, 225, 289.—ſir Thomas, 11.—lord, 113.—tomb, 171.—John, lord of Tichmerſh, 227.
Lovel houſe, 29.
Loventium, 471.
Lovet family, 301.
Lovetoft, family, 285, 293.
Lovingland, 77.
Loughborough, 195, 211.—park, 211.
Louth, 230, 274.—ſteeple and ſpire, ib.
Lowe and family, 372.
Loweſtoffe, 90.
Loy's, St. well, 170.
Lozinga, biſhop, 94.
Lucas, family, 82.
Lucas and Liſle, ſhot, and inſcription on, 59.
Lucia, grand-daughter of earl Leofric, 330.
Lucian, a monk, 421, 423, 424.
Lucy, family of, 94, 328.—Richard, chief juſtice under Henry II. 41.
Lucy tower, 225.
Lud river, 229.—ford, 454.—brook, 459.
Ludford, 267. 278.
Ludgate, 4, 16.
Ludham, 96, 110.
Ludlow, 402, 403.—family, 229, 268, 398.
Luffeld wick, 180.
Luffenham, N. 223*.
Lugdunum, 490.
Lug river, made navigable by acts of parliament, in the 14th of Charles II. and in the 7th of William III. 443.—meadow, 460.
Luggun, 473.
Lugwardine, 453.
Luke, ſir Samuel, 371.
Luke's, St. hoſpital, 28.
Lundenbyrig, Lundenpic, Lundenceaſtep, } 3.
Lundinum, Lundayn, } 3.
Lupus, Hugh, 427, 441.
Luſy park, 536.
Luthing lake, 77.
Lutterworth, 193, 198.
Lutton, 234.
Luttrell family, 225, 246.
Luxemburg family, 233.
Lwchwr, 503.
Lydgate, 73, 83.
———John, a monk of great wit, born there, 73, 81.—buried 80.—epitaph, 81.—ſuppoſed monument, ib.
Lydington, 222.
Lye, Mr. 178.
Lygon family, 353.
Lygraceaſter, 369.
Lying-in hoſpital, 28.
Lyn lane, 385.
Lyndon, 223*.
Lynn Biſhop's, 115.--Weſt, 97.—river, 117.
Lyon's hall caſtle, 459.
Lyon's inn, 18.
Lys Noyſoe, 395*.
Lyſonby, 212.
Lyttelton, biſhop, his opinion of the Romans in Worceſterſhire, 355.

M.

MABLETHORPE family and hall, 273.
Machno river, 560.
Machutus, St. 158.
Machynlheth, 530, 533.
Macclesfield, 426, 446 —foreſt, 426, 439.
Madeley, 395, 449, 417.
Madoc murders his uncle Kadwgan, 525, 531.—defeated, 534.—deprived of his property by earl Warren, 576.
Madoc's tower, 418.
Madresfield, 369.
Maelor Gymraeg or Welſh, 576.
Maelor Saeſneg, 507.
Maen, what, 321.
Maen y Morynnion, 475.—Ilhtud, 476.—Llythyrag, 502.—dau lygad yr ych, ib.—Lhanol, 573.—Campiau, 557.—hirion, 541, 544.—Mordwyd, 572.—Rhodene, ib.—Achwynfan, 592. — hir, 596. — y cadral chwan, 502.—glas, 593.—Gwyr, 510.--y Prenvol, 528.--Magl, 571.
Maeſyved hên, 465.
Maglore, 533.
Magdalea, 378, 395.
Magdalen hoſpital, 28.—college in Cambridge, founded by Thomas Audley, lord chancellor, 133.—enlarged and endowed by ſir Chriſtopher Wray, lord chief juſtice, ib.
Magi, 465, 467.
Magiſtri de la Brechin, 361.
Maglona, 530.
Magnis, 450, 474.
Magnus Maximus, gold coins of, 31.
Magnus the Norman, 565, 569.
Magus, what, 93.
Mahel, ſon of Bernard Neumarch, baſtardiſed and diſinherited by his mother's oath, 471.
Mahunthle, 533.
Mahudel M. on moulds for forging coins, 409.
Mahul mountain, 378.
Maidenburg, 115.
Maiden caſtle, 536.—Boure, 112.
Maiſcar, 475.
Malandri, who, 265.
Malbedeng, 425, 436, 435.
Malcolm, king of Scots, did not build a monaſtery at Chelmsford, 55. — built one at Cambridge, 133.—Huntingdon, 156.
Maldon, 56, 45.—deſtroyed by the Danes, ib.—repaired by king Edward, ib. — caſtle, 57.——Little, ib.—priory, ib.—title, ib.
Mall in St. James's park, 25.
Mallet family, 76.
Malmeſbury, his account of London, 5.
Malmington, 280.
Malpas, 422, 429.
Malt, where plentiful, 123.
Maltby, 274.
Maltraith, what, 223.
Malvern hills, 358, 353.—Great and Little, 368.—chace, ib.—proſpect, ib.—camp, ib.—waters, ib.
Mamble, 372.
Mamtor hill, 317.—Little, ib.
Manceſter, 331, 348.
Mandeville family, 46.—Geoffrey de, earl of Eſſex, 47. his monument, 20. 46,

INDEX.

46, 47.—William, 46, 47.—houſe of on Enfield chace, 11.—Geoffrey de, 160.
Manduesſedum, 331, 342.
Mandute family, 396*.
Mandurcum, 504.
Manifield, William, 53.
Manifold river, 305.
Mann river, 294.
Manod mountain, 540.
Manſel family, 501.—Thomas, baron, ib.
Manſfield, 284, 293.
Manſfield, an antient German family, 284.
Manſuræ, 101.
Manton, 223*, 280.
Manwaring family, antiently Meinilwarren, 426, 425, 438.
Many, Walter, 9, 26.
Manners, barons of Truſbut, 229.—earls of Rutland, 226, 229, 249.—dukes of Rutland, 224.—George, 224*.—Roger earl of Rutland, ib.—Francis, ib.—John duke of Rutland, ib.
Map Harold, 442.
Mapleſted, Great, 58.
Maplethorpe, 272.
Mapleton and bridge, 305.
Maps in tapeſtry, 334.
Marble hall, 14.
Marble ſtones, 325*.
Marbury, 438.
Marcaute, 272.
St. Marcelle's church, 579, 580.
Marceſtow, 278.
March, 141*.
March, earls, 466, 469.
Marcher, lords, 395*.
Marchers, what, 395*.
Marchiones, 395*.
Marcley hill, 443.—Great, 461.
Marcus, ſtatue of, 172.
Marden, 443.
Mareſchal, William and Gilbert, monuments of, 21.
Mareſton, 443.
Marga, what, 227.
Margan, 495, 499, 501.
Margaret of Anjou, foundreſs of Queen's college, 124, 132.
——— counteſs of Richmond founds St. John's college, 124, 133.——Chriſt college, 133.
——— Douglas, 24.
——— almſhouſes, 25.
St. Margaret's hoſtel, 134.
Margidunum, 219, 227, 249, 287.
Marine ſociety, 28.
Marion, 592.
Markby, 272.
Market Overton, 219.
Market Raiſin, 230.
Markham, 107*.
Markham family, 270, 293.—John, lord chief juſtice, 293, 284, 251.—his integrity, 42.
Marlborough, Sarah, dutcheſs of, born, 273.
Marmion family, 229, 268, 348.—hereditary champions of England, 375.—Robert, 331.
Marney, lord, 60.—monuments, 60.
Marquiſſes, mode of making, 77.
Marquiſſes of the Marches of Wales, 395*.
Mars Camulus, 56.—bronze figure of, with inſcription, 281.
Marſh chapel, 274.
Marſhal, William earl of Pembroke, 515.—monument, 20.—Stephen, 158.
Marſhalſea, 179.
Marſhland 97, 116.
Marſon, 592.
Martin family, 515.
Martin's, St. ſchool and library, by whom erected, 25.—church, 25.—le grand, 26.—Thorpe, 223*.
Martley, 372.
Marton, 280.
Marvell, Andrew, 141.
Mary, St. 97.
Mary, Virgin, her image, pilgrimage to, 85.
Mary, queen of France, where buried, 80.
Mary's, Hoſpital of Bethlem, 22.—of Grace, 24.—Rounceval, 22.—ſpital, 22.
Mary's, St. de Pré's nunnery, 201, 203.
Mary, queen of Scots, 249.—portrait and motto, 309.—kept priſoner 17 years in the cuſtody of George, duke of Shrewsbury, 308.—beheaded, 181. where buried, 183.—tomb, ib.
—— hall, 181.
—— queen of William III. 24.
St. Mary hoſpital, London, 17.—hoſtel, 134.—Over, 27.
Maſcy, Hamo de, 426.
Maſerfield, 418.
Maſham family, 51.
Maſon, ſir John, 5.
Maſſes, globular, of ſtone, 358.
Maſſinberd family, 273.
Mathematical ſchool at Chriſt's hoſpital founded by Charles II, 28.
Mathern, 485.
Mathon, 369.
Mathraſal, 530.
Mathraval, 535.
Matilda Fitz Walter, 54.
Matkorn ych deewi, 527.
Matlock and moor and bath, 310.
Matterſey, 294.
Mauduit de Hanſlap, 331.
Maurice, Peter, 10, 27.
St. Maw's river, 541.
Mawcop hill, 385.
Maxey caſtle, 185.
Maxtock caſtle, 330, 344.
May, Robert, 167.
Mayer, 391.
Mayland, 57.
Maynard family, 54, 89.—William, baron of Eſtains, 54.
Mayor of London, 10.
Maynan abbey, 578.
Maze, 61.
Mead, Dr. 24, 30.
Meals, the, 97, 112.
Mearclond, 426.
Medard, St. family, 230.
Medborn, 197.
Med, what, 395.
Medes hampſtead, 167.
Medeſwell, 167.
Medicinal waters, 171.
Mediolanum Ordovicum, 531, 516.
Medvod, 536.
Meer, 395.—what, 322.
Meer Shingle, 87.
Μεγαρις, 115.
Meguid, 536.
Meiduy, what, 536.
Meidwyvod, 536.
Meineu gwyr, 510.—hirion, 528.—kyvrivol, ib.
Meinill family, 230.
Meivod, 536.
Melandra caſtle, 318.
Melbourn, 301, 307.
Melford, Long, 74, 83.—place, 83.
Meldreth, 141.
Meliènydh, 465, 467, 468.
Melin Meneu, 520.
Melineu, 522.
Mellent, Waleran earl of, 353.
Melton Mowbray, 196, 212.
Melton Ros, 278.
Melwood, 280.—family, 230.
Menai, 548.
Mendham, 90.
Mendleſham, 75, 85.
Mendwyfod, 536.
Meneu, what, 520.
Menevia, 515.
Menew, ib.
Meney, 520.
Mentaris, 115.
Merbury and family, 426.
Mercaſton, 301.
Mercers' chapel, 22.
Merchants of the ſtaple, 27.—adventurers, 27.
Mercia, 427.
Mercians, northern, 304.
Mercury, inſcription to at Colcheſter, 58.
Mere, 267.
Meriden, 344.
Merionethſhire, 538—547.—mountains, 540.—plants, 547.
Merival, 331, 348.
Merks hill, 54.
—— biſhop, 79.
Merlin Sylveſter foretold the defeat of the Britans by Henry II, 504, 507.
Merſey iſland, 60, 294.—river, 426, 439.
Merſh, 159.
Mertenbrook river, 301.
Merton hall, Cambridge, 134, 135.
Mervinia, 538.
Meſchines, Ranulph de, 427.
Meſſing, 60.——ſir William de, his tomb, ib.
Meſtesford, 310.
Metaris æſtuarium, 97, 115, 223.
Metburn, 186.
Metguod, 536.
Methwold, 116*.
Mettingham, 77. 90.
The Mews, 8, 25.
Mi a dyana'r dorch a chwi, a Welch ſaying, 543.
Michael's, St. mount, 486.—church, 483.—college, Cambridge, 124.—hoſtle, 133, 134.
Michell, John, 81.
Middleſex, 2—40.—name, diviſion, air, ſoil, ib.—dimenſions, 12.—Domeſday, ib.—hoſpital, 28.—earls, 31.—plants, 32—39.
Middleton, 116.
Middleton and bath, 311.
——— family, 584, 585.—Hugh, the projector of the New river, 580.—Richard, ib.
Middlewich, 424, 425, 436.—caſtle, 414.
Mikneint, 545.
Milburga, a devout virgin, 396*.
Mildenhall, 82.
Mildmay, ſir William, 55.—family, 168.—founds Emanuel college, 124.—ſir Walter, 133.
Mile end, 30.
Mileham, 117.
Milford haven, the landing place of Henry VII, 513, 517.
Miline, 522.
Millfield, 182.
Milliaries, Roman, 117*, 183, 209, 250, 473.
Milling, biſhop, 24.
Mills family, 117*.
Milo, earl of Hereford, 444, 471.
Milter Gerig, 546.
Milton, 143*.
——— Erneys, 249.
Milton, John, 24.
Mims, South, 31.
Minchenden houſe, 29.
Mineral water, 74, 84, 101.
Miners' cuſtoms, 322.
Minerva, ſtatue of, 172.
Mines, Roman, 535.
Minories and minoreſſes, 24.
Minors family, 395, 445.—captain Rutland, 395.
Minſhull and family, 425, 437.
Minſter Lovel, 289.
Minſtrels, 426.—of Tutbury, 395.
Mint, at London and Southwark, 27. Lincoln, 283.—Roman, 16.
Minting, 268.
Mintwall, 254.
Mirmaud, 142*.

INDEX.

Miſterton, 193.
Mitton family, 417, 420.——collections, 420.
Moberley, 441.
Mochas, 445.
Modney, 116.
Modwena, an Iriſh virgin, 377, 392.
Moel y Wydhva, 552.—Glyder, ib.—Cynhorion, ib.—garn gwch, ib.—ben Twrch, ib.—Wyn, 540.—Enli, 575.—Enli and fort, 575.——Abentric, 536.—Evig, 580.—y Vachla, 583.—Benlli, 586.—y Gaer, 586, 590.—Artur, 597.—Hirradig, 592, 597.—y gaer, 597.—y crio, ib.—Fenlli, ib.
Mohun, Philippa, 24.
Mold, 595, 596.—inſcription, ib.—battle, ib.
Mole caſtle, 507.
Moleſdale, 595.
Momerfield, 415.
Mona, 565, 567.
Monaſteries, 422.
Monaſtic life, why firſt inſtituted, 422.
Monacella, St. and her tomb, 535.
Mones meadow, 457.
Monk, biſhop, 24.—earl of Torrington and duke of Albemarle, ib.
Monketon, 218.
Monkey mead plain, 31.
Monklow, 461.
Monkſdale, 235.
Monks Kirby, 335.
—— Britiſh, ſlain, 422.
Mon maur Cymbry, 565.
Monmouth, 447, 482, 483.——lords, 477, 491.——title, 491.—plants, 492.
Monmouthſhire, 477—492.
Montacute family, 166, 180.—William earl of Sarum, 575.
Montague family, 162, 166, 178.—Charles marquis of Halifax, 24.—Edward earl Sandwich, ib.—ſir Edward, 157.—duke, 186.—Simon, 353, 330.
Montalt family, 98.
Montchenſy, barons of, 74.
Mont d'Or, 486.
Montegle family, 63.
Montfitchet, barons of, 63.—William de, 41, 47.
Montfort family, 329.—lord, 140.—title, 417*.—earl of Leiceſter, 196.
Montgomery earl of Shrewſbury, 123, 398.——Arnulph de, 513.——Hugh, 400.
Montgomery, 531, 533, 534.
Montgomeryſhire, 530—537.——earls of, 531.—plants, 537.
Monthault, Roger de, 330.—family, 589.
Montjoy, 117*.
Montſorel, 195, 210.
Mont Turold, 167.

Monuments.

——— in St. Paul's, London, 5, 17.
——— lord Strange of Knocking, 12.
——— Sir Thomas More, 14.
——— Richard earl of Warwick, 15.
——— in the Temple church, 19, 20, 21.
——— Geffrey de Mandeville, 20.
——— William Marſhall, ib.
——— Rahere, 22.
——— in Weſtminſter abbey, 24, 25.
——— biſhop Andrews and J. Gower, 27.
——— Joice Typtoft, 29.
——— Harold, 49.
——— Sir John Croſby, 51.
——— biſhop Winniffe, ib.
——— Mr. Locke, ib.
——— of Oxylus in Elis, ib.
——— Juga Baynard, and the Fitz Walters, 54.
——— Radcliffes, 56.

Monuments.

——— Sir John Vere, 57.
——— Sir John Hawkwood, ib.
——— Veres, earls of Oxford, at Earls Colne, 58.
——— baron and ſerjeant Darcy, 59.
——— Sir William de Meſſing, 60.
——— Marneys, ib.
——— in Walden priory, 61.
——— Lord Audley, ib.
——— Leech vicar of Walden, ib.
——— Lydgate, 80.
——— Mary queen of France, ib.
——— lord Crofts, 82.
——— Areth. Vernon, 83.
——— Guthrum, 84.
——— deſtroyed at Letheringham, 86.
——— Lord Bardolf, 88.
——— Anna & Firminus, ib.
——— John Southwell, ib.
——— Wingfields and Delapoles, ib.
——— Sir Richard Bacon, 90.
——— lord chief juſtice Holt, 91.
——— biſhop Hall, 108.
——— Hebert de Loſinga, ib.
——— Sir James Hobart, ib.
——— Stapelton, 110.
——— Boys, ib.
——— Ingham, ib.
——— Calthrope, 113.
——— Braunch, 115.
——— Hugh Haſtings, 117*.
——— intended for biſhop Fiſher, 133.
——— Frevile, 139.
——— North, 140.
——— at Fulburne, 141.
——— Elias Beckington, 142*.
——— at Ely, 143.
——— Kinaſton, Nicholas, 143*.
——— Sneteſham, 144.
——— biſhops Barlow, Sanderſon, Reynolds, Green, 157.
——— biſhop Ruſſel, ib.
——— earls of Huntingdon, 158.
——— Ailwin, 160.
——— Longueville, 163.
——— Vere, 166.
——— Lovel and Holland, 170.
——— Archdeacon Sponne, 172.
——— Gaunt, ib.
——— Dr. Turner, 174.
——— lady Elizabeth Germaine, 179.
——— Edward and Richard, dukes of York, at Fotheringay, 181.
——— braſs of Wintringham, 182.
——— abbots and monks at Peterborough, 183.
——— Mary queen of Scots, ib.
——— queen Catharine, ib.
——— Zouches, 186.
——— Mr. Knight, 187.
——— at Bernak, 188.
——— Conſtance, wife of John of Gaunt, 201.
——— Robert Boſſu, earl of Leiceſter, 201.
——— earl and duke of Lancaſter, ib.
——— counteſs of Derby, 202.
——— Hamon Belers, 212.
——— Thomas, Roger, Henry, and George Manners, earls of Rutland, 212.
——— Harrington, Bruce, Green, and Noel, 222.
——— Joan counteſs of Weſtmorland, 228.
——— Welby, 234.
——— Littlebury, 235.
——— Irby, ib.
——— John Harox, 240.
——— John Brown, 243.
——— Burghleys, 244.
——— Carres, 247.
——— Kyme, 248.

Monuments.

——— Sir Dudley Ryder, 251.
——— judge Markham, 251.
——— in Lincoln cathedral, 260.
——— biſhop and ſir Robert Burwaſh, 228.
——— queen Eleanor's bowels, 228.
——— Nicholas Cantilupe, 228.
——— Wymbyſh
——— biſhop Fleming,
——— biſhop Sutton,
——— biſhop Chadworth,
——— biſhop Ruſſel,
——— biſhop Longland,
——— Fitz William,
——— Catherine Swinford, 228.
——— Jane counteſs of Weſtmoreland, 228. } 261.
——— biſhop Groſthead,
——— biſhop Wike,
——— biſhop Dalderby,
——— ſir John Multon,
——— biſhop Gynwell,
——— biſhop Bloet,
——— biſhop Alexander,
——— biſhop Cheſney,
——— biſhop Blois,
——— biſhop Remigius,
——— biſhop Hugh the Burgundian,
——— biſhop Welles,
——— biſhop Graveſend,
——— biſhop Smith,
——— biſhop Fuller,
——— John lord Welles,
——— biſhop Holbech, 263.
——— biſhop Cooper, ib.
——— ſir Robert Dymoke, 268.
——— Walter Bek, 272.
——— ſir William Skipwith, 273.
——— James Preſcot, ib.
——— William Ballot, ib.
——— Adam Veſtram, 274.
——— Ayſcough family, 275.
——— biſhop Wainfleet's father, 276.
——— Hunden, ib.
——— ſir Robert Gonfill, 289.
——— two archbiſhop Booths, and Corbridge, ib.
——— archbiſhop Sandys, 290.
——— Cartwright family, ib.
——— lord chief juſtice Markham, 293.
——— Lovetoft, ib.
——— Furnival, ib.
——— earl and counteſs of Devonſhire, 307.
——— Comptons, 334.
——— Richard and Thomas Beauclerk, earls of Warwick, 336.
——— Ambroſe Dudley, earl of Warwick, ib.
——— Robert earl of Leiceſter, ib.
——— ſir Thomas Greville, ib.
——— ſir F. Greville, 341.
——— ——— his grandfather, 342.
——— Tankervilles, ib.
——— Birminghams, 343.
——— Digby family, 344.
——— John Clinton, ib.
——— Dugdale family, ib.
——— Philemon Holland, 345
——— Mr. Henry Beighton, 347.
——— grey monuments, 346, 347.
——— Coney, 357.
——— Sir J. Philip, ib.
——— Blount's, ib.
——— judge Lyttleton, 359.
——— biſhop Hall, ib.
——— Stafford, Sir Humphry, ib.
——— Talbot, Sir J. 360.
——— Windſor, ib.
——— Cooke, Sir T. ib.
——— Hammond, Dr. 365.
——— in Worceſter cathedral, 366.
——— Somers, 371.

INDEX.

Monuments.
——— Frevilles and Ferrars, 384.
——— Arderne, Stanley, Smith, ib.
——— Sampſon Erdeſwick, 386.
——— at Lichfield, 391.
——— Robert Mauveſin, 393.
——— John Talbot, earl of Shrewſbury, 400.
——— Roger de Montgomery, 415.
——— Sir Thomas Bromley, 416.
——— the Newports, ib.
——— Sir Francis, 419.
——— J. Talbot, ib.
——— Sir Hugh Calveley, 434.
——— Peter Leigh, 440.
——— in Hereford cathedral, 452.
——— ſir William Pembridge, ib.
——— biſhop Cantelupe, ib.
——— Bohuns, ib.
——— Dr. Beſt, 453.
——— Robert Kyrle, ib.
——— Harley, Robert and Sarah, ib.
——— William and Edward Fox, 454.
——— Wigmore, John, ib.
——— Callow, William, 456.
——— Preece, Robert. ib.
——— Godwyn, Charles, ib.
——— Capel, Richard, ib.
——— Baily, James, ib.
——— Chamberlain, Thomas, ib.
——— Haywood, John, ib.
——— Thornton, Dr. ib.
——— Hoſkin, Dr. ib.
——— Skinner, Edward, ib.
——— at Ledbury, ib.
——— Leominſter, 458.
——— Philip Reding, ib.
——— Hakluits, ib.
——— Matilda Mowbray, ib.
——— Verdon, 459.
——— Rowland Brugge, ib.
——— John Abell, ib.
——— ſir Walter Helion, 461.
——— Blanche Mortimer, ib.
——— Roger Mortimer, ib.
——— ſir John Kirle, ib.
——— Stretford, 462.
——— Delabere, ib.
——— Rudhall, ib.
——— Colmer, 483.
——— St. Pier, 485.
——— at Abergavenny, 486.
——— ſir William, Thomas, William, and ſir Richard Herbert,
——— Llandaff, 499.
——— Mathews, ib.
——— abbot at Margam, 501.
——— at St. David's, 519.
——— Owen Tudor, ib.
——— Rhys ap Tudor, ib.
——— biſhop Jerwerth, ib.
——— biſhop Anſelm, ib.
——— Edmund earl of Richmond, ib.
——— biſhop Chirbury,
——— Dolgelhe, 540.
——— Llanvihangel, 541.
——— Yſputti Jevan, 545.
——— St. Beuno, 554.
——— at Bangor, 556.
——— archbiſhop Williams, 557.
——— St. Jeſtin, 569.
——— Wynnes, at Llanrwſt, 577.
——— St. Winifred, ib.
——— ſir John Saluſbury, 578.
——— Humphrey Lluyd, ib.
——— Richard Middleton, ib.
——— Thelwall family, 580.
——— Dr. Gabriel Goodman, 581.
——— ſir Richard Middleton, 583.
——— biſhop Bellot, ib.
——— a knight at Wrexham, ib.
——— Gryffyd Llewellin, 584.
——— Madocap Llewellinap Gryffydd, 586.
——— John Robinſon, 586.
——— at St. Aſaph, 592.
——— at Northop, 596.
Moorgate, 4, 16.
Moorland, 394, 377.
Moorleg, 42.
Moor, ſir John, founds a freeſchool, 201.
The Moor, 477.
Moore, biſhop of Ely, his library, 134.
Moores, 377.
Moothill, 185.
Mor, what in Welch, 493, 466.
Mora, a bird, 522.
Morbum, 163.
Morclay caſtle, 503.
Morcot, 219.
Mordaunt, John, baron of Rygate and viſcount Avalon, 166.—earl of Peterborough and Monmouth, 185.
Morden, 460.
More, ſir Thomas, his monument, 15. —where born, 29.
Morfa Rhuddlan, a tune, 591.
Morfe foreſt, 409.
Morgan family, 491.—John, muſician, 570.
Morganum, or Vorganum, 493, 496.
Morkar, 233.
Morlais, 493.
Morlaſh, 507.
Morley family, 47, 63, 94, 74.
Mornglath, 576.
Morteville family, 198.
Mortimer family, 94, 396*, 443, 454, 466, 575.
Mortimer's hole, 284, 287.
——— Clebury, 404.
——— caſtle, 461.
——— bank, 343.
——— croſs and battle, 450.
Morton, John, biſhop of Ely, his MSS. 178.
Morton, 380.—mineral water, 413.
Morton caſtle, 309.
——— Corbet, 398, 420.
——— Foliot, 360.
Moſaic pavement at Weſtminſter, 24.
Moſelies, William, 82.—rev. Mr. 84.
Moſſes, 154, 395, 428, 435
Moſtyn, ſir Thomas, 592.
Moſtyn hall, 595.
Mould, 589.
Moulds for forging coins, 413, 414, 415.
Moulton, 239.—freeſchool, 240.
Mounts, 545.
Mountneſyng, 53.
Mowbray family, 98, 117, 196, 233, 330.—Anne, 7. —Roger, 233.—earl of Nottingham, earl marſhal, and duke of Norfolk, 297.—Roger de, 329.—John de, ib.
Mulberton, 108.
Mumby, 272.
Mundeſley, 112
Municipia, what, 3, 57.
Munith Cader, 477.
Munnow river, 441, 477, 482.
Munnuth y gadir, 472.
——— de, 473.
Munſlow, 417.
Murage and murengers, 432.
Murdack family, 334.
Muſard family, 302.
Muſcle pearls, where found, 557
Muſeum Britiſh, 28.
Muſwell hill, 30.
Mwnglatt, 576.
Mwthwy, 538.
——— commot, ib.
——— Dinas, 540.
——— vale, ib.
Mwythan, 398.
Mynnes, ſir Chriſtopher, 112.
Mynydh Margan, 495.—Gelhi Onnen, 402.—y Drymmeu, 502.—Dygoll, 534.
Mynepanic, 426.

N.

NACTON, 86.
Nadbury camp, 383.
Naked field, 394.
Nangle, 517.
Nant, 4.
—— berris vale, 553.
—— cribba, 534.
—— gwinan vale, 553.
—— y gwyrthein, 553.
—— glyn, 594.
—— Penkarn river, 481.
Nantwich, 424, 425, 436.
Narborough, 173, 183.
Narborough, ſir John, 112.
Narburgh, 116*.
Narford, 116*.
Nar river, 117.
Naſeby, a bloody battle there between king Charles I. and the parliament army, 179.
Naſh's plantations, 371.—Dr his hiſtory of Worceſterſhire, 361.
Naſſum burgi, 185.
Naunton hall, 86.—family, ib.—monuments deſtroyed, ib.—houſe, ib.
Naupactus, Naupliæ, Nauſtathmos, } 3.
Navalia Auguſti, 3.
Navigation, 211. — Coventry, 346.—Birmingham, 343.—between Trent and Severn, 357.
Naveſtock, 51.
Neath, 502, 503. — -river, 495. — quickſands, 502, 503.
Necham, Alexander, prior of St. Nicholas, 228, 303, 481.
Needham, 75, 85.
——— ſir Robert, viſcount Kilmurry, 429.
Needingworth, 159.
Needwood foreſt, 377, 394.
Negem college, 261.
Neirborough, 98.
Neirford, 98.—family, ib.
Nen river, 166.—floods ſtopped, 187.
Neot, St. who, 157.
Neot's, St. 5, 154.
——— title, 157.
Neoteſtow, 5.
Neotſtock, 154.
Neotus, 5, 154.
Neſs, 46, 59, 399.
Nêſt, the daughter of Gruffydh, prince of Wales, 471.—illegitimated her ſon upon oath, to diſinherit him, for affronting her gallant, ib.
Neſton, 585.
Neteſham, 114.
Netherſole, ſir Francis, 348.
Nether hall, 55.
Nether Went, 481.
Nettleſted, 74, 84.
Neubo, 251.
Le Neve, Peter, 117*.
Nevern river, 515, 522.—croſs, 522.
Nevil family, 197, 285, 477, 522, 495.—dean, 124.—earls of Warwick, 344.—Ralph, 329.—earl of Warwick, 331.—John, marquis of Montacute, 125.—lords of Glamorgan, 443.
Neville Holt, 197.—cloſe, 287.
Nevin, 548, 553.
Neuodh, 528.
Newark, 284, 291.—mint, 291.
Newbold, 335.
Newborough, 566, 570.
Newbottle, 170.
Newcaſtle, 396*.
——— Emlyn, 505, 506.
Newcaſtle, title, 509.—marquis, 293. William, 293.
Newcaſtle under Lyne, 376.—title, 385.—dukes of, 293.
Newchurch haw, 26.
Newenham Regis, 328.
Newgal, 510, and trees, ib.

New-

INDEX.

Newgate, 16, 4.
New hall, 585.
Newhall tower, 438.
Newington, 29.
New Leame, 167.
New Inn, 18.
Newland, 253.
Newmarch, Bernard, reduced Glamorganſhire, 473, 476.
Newmarket, 79, 72.—heath, 72, 140. —races and fire, 140.
New market, Flintſhire, 592.
—— houſe, 277.
Newnham, 173.
Newnham regis, 335.
New park, 289, 290.
Newport in Shropſhire, 419*.—in Eſſex, 46, 62.—in Monmouthſhire, 481, 491.—in Pembrokeſhire, 515, 520, 521.
Newport gate, 228.
——— family, 398, 253, 254.
——— bridge, 481.
New river head, 29.
Newſted, 284, 286, 294.
Newſtede, 278.
Newton, 142, 166, 414, 531, 534.—Notes, 500.
——— caſtle, 506.
——— ſir Iſaac, 24.—his portrait, 198. —family and monument, 249.
——— biſhop, 392.
——— in Shropſhire, 420.
Neyland, 84.
Nicholas, ſir Ambroſe, 159
Nicholas, de Lynne, 115.
St. Nicholas's hoſtle, 134.
Nichole, 227.
Nicol, 253.
Nicolſhire, 223.
Nidum, 494, 495, 499.
Nigel, biſhop of Ely, 133.
Nigel or Niel, baron of Haulton, 441.
Nigel, the poet, 225.
Nightingale, Mr. 24.
Nine ladies, 311.
Nine ſtone cloſe, 311.
Niphates, 548.
Niſmes, Roman moulds for coins found at, 409.
Nivicollini, 548.
Noantes, } 1.
Novantes, }
Nobold, 178.
Nocton, 267.
Noel family, 389, 376,
Noman's land, 237.
Nooe brook, 319.
Norbury, 301, 306.
Norfolk, 93—122.—ſoil and bounds, 93.—ſeats, families, clergy, rivers, Domeſday, 101.—plants, 118—122. —the number of attornies reſtrained there by the 33d of Henry VI, 101. —earls and dukes of, 98, 117, 118.
——— library, 28.
Norman gate, 182, 162.
Norman croſs, hundred, and way, 187. —water, 223*.
Normanburgh, 106.
Normanby, 279.
Normanton, 200, 166.
North family, 140.—portraits and epitaph, 140.
Northafandun, 176.
Northampton, 166.—family, 176.—univerſity, 176.—earls, 168, 169.—battle, 166.—houſe, 22.
Northamptonſhire, 165*—191.—form, extent, ſoil, contents, inhabitants, Domeſday, 170.—plants, 189-191.
Northop, 596.
Norton, 201.—in Suffolk, 74.
——— abbey, 426, 441.
——— wood, 289, 290.
Northumberland houſe, 22.
Northwich, 424, 425, 436.
Norwich, 94, 75, 106.—caſtle, 106, 107.—bridge, ſee, cathedral, 107. —monuments, churches, religious houſes, natives, 108.—John de, 77. —biſhop, his barony, 111.
Norris, ſir Francis, 24.
Noſley, 198.
Notley Black, 55.
Le Notre planted St. James's park, 25.
Nottingham, 287, 288, 283.
Nottinghamſhire, 283—300.—bounds, 283.—lords and earls 285, 294.—plants, 299, 300.
Nun Ormeſby, 273.
—— Cotun, 276.
—— Eaton, 347, 331.
Nutmeg hall, 81.

O.

OAK in which Charles II. took ſhelter, 413.
Oak, parliament, 293.—Greendale, 293.—abbot's, 593.
Oakley park, 403.
Oar devi, what, 530.
Oat malt, 394.
Obarrow, 370.
Octopitarum promontory, 514, 548, 554.
Odingſell, family, 330.
Oela, 362.
Ofaly palace, 443.
Offa church, 327.
Offa's dike, 465, 467, 468, 484, 585. —any Britan found on this ſide of it was to have his right hand cut off, ib.
Offton, 74.
Ogmore caſtle, 500.
Ogoras, ib.
Ogwen river, 552, 556.
Oilwy river, 479.
Okeham, 219, 222.——every baron obliged to give a horſe-ſhoe to nail on the caſtle gate the firſt time he comes thither, ib.
Okenate, 399.
Okendon, South, 42.
Okeover, 395.
Old becke, 237.
Oldborn, 9, 26.—hall, 26.
Oldbury, 331, 348.—caſtle, 442.—hill, 29.
Oldfield's banks, 348.
Oldford, 41, 30.
Oldford dyke, 143.
Old ſtreet haven, 278.——ſtrait way, 411.
Old Troy, 483.
Olyffe bridge, 109.
Ombersley, 365.
Ombridge, 417.
Ongar, 41, 51.
Onion river, 541.
Onney river, ib.
Onſlow family, 417.—title, ib.—Richard, firſt Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, ib.
Onyx, 89.
Ophites, 279.
Oppidum, 3.
Oræ denar. 431.
Orange trees, when firſt brought into England, 501.
Oratory, with carving25 1.
Orbey, 424.
Orbies family, 247.
Ordericus Vitalis, where born, 411.
Ordevices, 395*, 530.
Ore river, 75.
Orford, 75, 87.——title, 113, 87.—— chapel and font, 87.
Organ, 391.
Orleton, 455.
Ormeſby, S. and Nun, 273.
Ormſby, 96, 272.
Orwel harbour, 75, 60, 86.—title, 60, 86.
Oſberton, 293.
Oſgodby, 276.
Oſgotby, 230.
Oſhere, viceroy of the Wiccians, 356.
Oſith, St. murdered by Daniſh pirates, 46, 59.—town, 59.—nunnery, title, 59.—honour, 59, 60.
Oſmundſton, 104.
Oſrick, earl of Worceſter, 373.
Oſſington, 290.
Oſſulſton hundred, 24.—title, 29.
Oſter hill, 188.
Oſterley houſe, 414.
Oſtorius, P. prætor in Britain, 166. —his fortifications, 165.—his tumulus, 188.
Oſwald, ſlain by king Penda, and afterwards torn limb from limb, 399. —where buried, 229, 418.—his banner, 229.
Oſwald, biſhop of Worceſter, his reliques, 267.—hoſpital, 366, 367.—low and land, 367.
Oſwald's law, 354.
Oſweſton, 198.
Oſweſtry, 399, 418. *420.
Oſwy, king of Northumberland, built a church at, and made Duina the firſt biſhop of Lichfield, 377.
Otho IV. emperor, coin of, 250.
Othona, 43.
Ouldceſter, 329.—ſtreet, 229.
Oumby, 266.
Oundle, 166, 180.
Ouſe river, 101, 153.
Ouſley, 329, 341.
Over, what, 335.
Overbury, ſir Thomas, 334.
Over-rhey, what, 9.—St. Mary, 279.
Overſley, 341.
Overton, 155.—Long, 163.
Overſtonall, 385.
Over went, 481.
Oving's Inn, 136.
Ovinus' croſs, 141*.
Owen, Thomas, juſtice of the Common Pleas, 396*.—William, 515.
Owen, lady, 29.
Owen Glyndwr, 470, 473, 546, 549. —Tudor, 569.
Owen Gwenyd, 546.—his fine retreat, ib.
Owen ap Kadwgan occaſioned his father to loſe his eſtate by his crimes, 524.—ſlain by Girald of Pembroke for raviſhing his wife, 525.—ſon of Grufydh ap Gwenwynwyn, lord of Powis, 532.
Owl longeared, 271.
Owlar Torr, Great, 325*.
Oxburgh, 116*.
Oxendon, Great, 185.
Oxnead, 110.
Oxney iſland, 248.
Oxtun, 280.
Oxwich bay, 503.
Oxylus, his wooden tomb, 51.
Oyſtermouth caſtle, 503.
Oyſter ſhells, where found bedded in green ſand, 161.
Oyſters, Walfleot, 43, 45, 54.

P.

PABEL lowarch hen, 546.
Pabo, 573, 572.—poſt Prytain, 573.
Packingdon, Great, 344.
Packington, family, 367.—lady, an author, ib.
Paget, Henry, baron and earl of Uxbridge, 12.——William, baron of Beaudeſert, 376.—family, 390.
Paigle, or Pagle, dikes, 61.
Painted chamber of St. Edward, 8.
Painted glaſs, 88.
Painterſtainers hall, 28.
Painting, antient, on a wall, 26.
Pakenham, 81.
Palace yard, 25.—Weſtminſter, 8.—St. James's, ib.
Palatine counts, 428.—juriſdiction, 422.
Palavicini family, 138.—ſir Horace and epitaph, 138, 139.

INDEX.

Palmer family, 177. 334.—ſir John, 186.
Palmer's chain, a cave, 455.
Palladius, biſhop of London, 55.
Pallas, ſtatue of, 430.
Pancras, 30.
Pandonia, St. 129.
Pantaleon, Dr. 72.
Pantfield, ib.
Panton, 250.
Pant river, 42, 43, 44.
Pantulph, William, baron of Wem, 398.
Pant y Polion, 508.
Panwen byndhin, 502.
Papey hoſpital, 24.
Papworth, Agnes and Everard, 129.
Parco de Carleton, 294.
Parcolude, 274.
Parſew, Robert, biſhop of St. Aſaph, 595.
Parham, 75. 87.—baron Willoughby, ib.—thorn, ib.
Parken, 510.
Parkins family, 287.—ſir Thomas, ib.
Parker family, barons of Morley, 94.—Matthew, archbiſhop of Canterbury, 108, 132.
Park vechan, 490,—gate, 434.
Parliament houſe, 25.
Parliament forces defeated at Brentford by thoſe of king Charles I. 14.
Parliamentum Diabolicum & Indoctorum, where held, and why ſo called, 345.
Parndon, 55.
Parr family, William, earl of Eſſex, 48.—marquis of Northampton, 169, 178, 188.—Henry, marquis of Northampton, 335.
Parr, old, where buried, 24.
Parſons green, 15.
Parry, ſir Thomas, 24.
Parys Mountain, 570.
Paſcentius, the ſon of Aurelius Ambroſius, 470.
Paſton town and family, 108, 110.
Patera, 81, 140, 490.
Paternus, St. 524.
Pateſhul, 173, 166.
Patrick, 280.
St. Patrick, 154.
Pattingham, 380.
Pavement, 15, 50, 57. 58, 59, 81, 117, 175, 179, 180, 182, 197, 208, 209, 210, 251, 266, 278, 318, 449, 484, 485, 489, 490.—at Weſtminſter, 24.
Pauls Perry, 172.
Paul's, St. church, by whom founded, 5, 17.—burnt, 17.—its antient and preſent dimenſions, 17, 18.—antiquities found under, 16.—biſhops, 5.—monuments, 5, 17.—croſs and ball, 17.—library, 18.
Paul, St. family, 230.—Mary counteſs of Pembroke founded Pembroke hall, 124.
Paul's hill, 17.—biſhops buried, 17.—chapter-houſe, 18.
St. Paul's inn, 134.
Paulinus, the firſt that preached the Goſpel at Lincoln, and converted its governor and all his family, 228.—his church at Lincoln, 228.—baptiſed the Coritani in the Trent, 284.
Paunton, 227.
Payne's caſtle, 467.
Peada, king of the Mercians, built a monaſtery at Medehampſtead, 167.—his oratory, 223*.
Peag kirk, 168, 185.
Peak, 303, 301, 302.—Devil's arſe in the, 303.—king of, ib.
Peak's hole, 319, 320.
Pearce, biſhop, 24.
Pearſon, biſhop, where born, 113.
Pearteneu, 229.
Pearls, Britiſh, 558.
Peaſe growing out of the rocks, 76, 87.
Pearteni, 267.
Pebidiauc, 519.
Peche, Gilbert, 123.
Peck, Francis, 198.
Peckſall, ſir Richard, 24.
Peckwell, 212.
Pedwardin, 453.
Peddle ditches, 51.
Pedder way, 114, 117.
Pega, St. 168, 185.
Pegge, rev. Mr. 308.
Peito family, 328, 335.—legate, 328.
Pelagius, the arch-heretic, where born, 422.
Pembridge, 461, 513.--family, 398, 461.
Pembroke, 513, 518.—houſe, 4.
Pembroke hall in Cambridge, founded by Mary St. Paul, counteſs of Pembroke, 124, 132.
Pembrokeſhire, 513—523.—earls of, 515, 523.—buried in the Temple church, 5.—plants, 523.
Penalht, 531, 533.
Penates, 242.
Pen bedw, 597.
Penborough, 513.
Penbrè, 506.
Penbuc, 578.
Penchurch, 445.
Pencomb, 460.
Pengwern, 398.
Pen Helen, 559.
Penhow, 477.
Penhryn and title, 557.
Peniſtone family, 351.
Penkethle, 475.
Penkridge, 376.
Penk river, 376.
Penmaenmawr,, 548, 546.—bychan, 548.
Penmon priory, 569.—mynyd, 569.
Penn, Mr. where born, 29.
Pennant Melangle, 535.
Pennarth caſtle, 503.
Pennocrucium, 348, 376.
Penrin, 596.
Penriſe, 503.
Pen ſtraed, 542.
Penteney, 98.
Pentney, 116.
Pentre Evan, 521.
Pentre' r Gwydhel, 568.
Pentry, 475.
Pentuc, what, 430.
Pen y gaer, 536, 553.
[illegible]nyard caſtle and pence, 449.
Pen y Gader, 541.
Pen [illegible]gaer vawr, 585.
Pen y Dinas, 557.
Pen y Llwch, 595.
Pen y morva, 554.
Pen y parc, 526.
Peover, Over and Nether, 438.
——— family, 426.
Peperell family, 43.
——— Ingelrica, ib.
Peperkin Ranulph, 42.
Pepper lake, 237.—hill, 417*, 420.
Percy family, 230.—Thomas earl of Worceſter, 354.
Peregrines, what, 515.
Pergama, what, 4.
Periho, 182.
Perihoe, 173.
Perne, Andrew, 116*.
Perry, what, 325*, 351.
Perry mill and lane, 182.
Perſhal, 389.
Perſhore, 354, 371.
Peſhal family, 396*.
Peter houſe in Cambridge founded by Hugh Balſham, biſhop of Ely, 124, 132.
Peter earl of M llent, 354.
Peterborough, 167, 183.—ſpital, 185.—earl of, ib.—gulf, bridge, cathedral, cloiſter, lady chapel, 183.—cloiſter windows, cieling painted, biſhop's palace, Thomas Becket's chapel, and church, 184.
Peter's, St. on the wall, 43.
Petre, ſir William, 42, 44, 53.
——— George, his epitaph, 593.
Petrefying ſpring, 178, 360.
Petrus Bleſenſis, 224, 229, 380.
Pettour, Baldwin le, 75.
Peverel family, 123, 172, 174.—William lord of Nottingham, 285.—Payne, 124.
Pewits, 271.
Pews, rich, 84.
Peyton family, 116*, 142.
Pharos, 572.—Roman, 593.
Phelips family, 76, 116*.
Phiala, 490.
Philippa ducheſs of York, 7.
Philips, ſerjeant, 211.
Philips the poet, 24.
Phiol, what, 490.
Phiſwicke's hoſtel, 133, 134.
——— William, 132.
Phynon yr Iwrch, 528.
Phyſicians, college of, in London, 28.—library, 28.
Picot, 123.
Pictavia de, family, 335.
Picton caſtle, 519.
Pictures, 187, 248.—at Houghton, 113.
Pierre family, 484.
Piers Plowman's Creed, 404.
Pirgo, 52.
Pierpoint, marquiſſes of Dorcheſter, 287, 284.—dukes of Kingſton, 287.
Piggot, Robert, 160.
Pike fattened, 9.
Pikenham, William, 85.
Pile, 501.
Pill, 519.
Pillerton, 327.
Pimble Mear, 535, 438.
Pimhill hundred, 419.
Pinchbeck, 239.
Pinkney, barons of, 165.—family, 171.
Pinley, 341.
Pinſenall hill, 30.
Piona de, 461.
Pipes found in a kiln, 29.
—— earthen, 116, 270, 291.
Pippins, 242.
Pippins Girton, 137.
Pipwel, 167, 186.
Piſtil y cain, 541.
—— rhaidr, 585.
Pitchford family, 396*, 398.—Ralph de, 396*.
Pits, 117*.
Pitt, William, earl of Chatham, 24.
Placentia, 398.
Plaſnewydd, 568.—teg, 596.
Plague in 1314, 9.
——— at Lincoln, 265.—Stamford, 244.
Plaiſy, 43.
Plantagenet, William, fifth ſon of Henry III, his monument, 121.
Plants, Middleſex, 32—39.
——— Eſſex, 70.
——— Suffolk, 91.
——— Norfolk, 118.
——— Cambridgeſhire, 144—152.
——— Huntingdonſhire, 163.
——— Northamptonſhire, 189—191.
——— Leiceſterſhire, 215—217.
——— Rutlandſhire, 224*.
——— Lincolnſhire, 282.
——— Nottinghamſhire, 295—300.
——— Staffordſhire, 306.
——— Derbyſhire, 325.
——— Warwickſhire, 350.
——— Worceſterſhire, 374.
——— Shropſhire, 421*.
——— Cheſhire, 440*.
——— Herefordſhire, 463.
——— Radnorſhire, 469.
——— Brecknockſhire, 476.
——— Monmouthſhire, 492.
——— Glamorganſhire, 503.
——— Caermarthenſhire, 510.
——— Pembrokeſhire, 523.
——— Cardiganſhire, 529.

Plants,

INDEX.

Plants, Montgomeryſhire, 537.
——— Merionethſhire, 547.
——— Caernarvonſhire, 562—564.
——— Angleſey, 574.
——— Denbighſhire, 587.
——— Flintſhire, 597.
Plas Gwyn, 569.—Amedeu, 580.
Plaſter, 281.
Plaxton, George, 417.
Pleſhy, 43, 54.
Plin Lhymmon, 524, 534, 538.
Pochards, 271.
Pœneus river, 422
Pola, 535.
Pole caſtle, ib.
Polleſworth, 331, 348.
Pont yr gamlan, 541.—Aber Glaſlyn, 546.—Mwnwgl y Lhyn, 494.—y Pan, 560.
Ponte, 227.
Ponte del Arche, William, 9.
Pool of three grains, 541.
Pool making a noiſe to be heard ten miles off, againſt ſtormy weather, 523.
Pool's hole, 325*, 326*.
Poole, 44, 49, 424.
Poor, proviſion for in Wales, 555.
Pope, ſir Thomas, 52, 55.
Pope, Mr. his garden, 14.—where born, 29.
Pont y Gwydhel, 568
Pont yr alt goch, 590.
Pontytvpryd bridge, 498.
Porcelain, 386.
Porius, inſcription to, 544.
Port amal, 476.
Porta Fluentana, 4.
Porth Sini Krân, 490.
Porth yllyn, 554
Port Hogan and Clui, 422.
Porth Hogan and Cleys, 429.
——— huch and iſa, 586.
Portmawr, 519.
Port pool, 434.
Portraits, 174, 179, 535.—of Elizabeth, 245.
Portreve, 10, 515.
Portſholme, 153.
Port Skeweth, 477, 485.
Port St. John, 307.
Pottery, Roman, in London, 16.—Wedgwood's, 386.
Potvary, 590.
Port ſand, 326.
Pouderbach caſtle, 397.
Pouleford, 423.
Poultney family, 193, 198.—college, 24.
Poundeling, ſir Robert, 592.
Powick, 353, 366.—barons of, ib.
Powis, lord, 403.—princes of, 540.—lords of, 531.—barons, 8.—caſtle, 535.
Powiſland, 583.
Poynton, 439.
Præfectures, what, 3.
Praer family, 423.
Præſidium, what among the Romans, 328, 335.
Praſutagus, king of the Iceni, made Nero his heir, 71.
Prebends, inheritable, 398.
Prebendye, 290.
Preceptory, 142.
Prenvol, or Prennol, what, 528.
Preſtatyn, 593.
Preſtbury, 452.
Preſteign, 457, 467.
Preſton capes, 173, 174.
Price, glaſs painter, 359.
—— baron Robert, 577.—his painted windows, 372.
Prideaux, biſhop, where buried, 369.
Prieſt holme, 572.
Prieſts married, 352.
Princes buried at Weſtminſter, 7.
Prior, Matthew, 24.
Priors field, 235.
Pritchard, Mrs. 24.
Prittlewell, 42, 52.
Prodigies foretelling the ruin of Camulodunum, 45.
Proby, Dr. 187.
Proceſſions, 205.
Puberty premature, 140.
Puckering, 8.
Puffin, a bird, 522, 572.
Puits, birds, 230.
Pulford, 430.
Pulheli, 454.
Pulpits of ſtone, 453.
Pulteney, William earl of Bath, 24.
Pulton, 440.
Punctuobice, 499.
Pungull, 457.
Punhill hundred, 419.
Purcell, 24.
Purchas, Samuel, 54.
Purlebache, 397.
Putheli, 548
Pwlkeris, 569.
Pyfleet creek, 60.
Pymmer, 29.
Pythagoras' ſchool at Cambridge, 134, 135.

Q.

QUARENDON, 211.
Quarles, Francis, 52.
Quarries of ſtone, 168.
Quarry wood, 461.
Queen hope, 595.
———'s croſs, 176.
———'s houſe, 25.
———'s college in Cambridge, begun by Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry VI. and completed by queen Elizabeth, 124, 132.
Querendon, 210.
Querns, 311.
Quickſands, 223.
Quietorium, 62.
Quincy, Roger, earl of Lincoln, 233.
Quintin, St. Robert de, a follower of Fitz Haimon, conqueror of Glamorganſhire, 493.

R.

RACES, 116*.
Radbourn, 306, 301.
Radcliff, 10, 210, 398.
Radcliff family, 44, 94, 56.—and monuments, 56.
Radeclive, 433.
Radegund, St. 133.
Radnor, 455.—Old, 465.
Radnorſhire, 465--468.—earls of, 469.—plants, ib.
Radulph of Bretagne, 71.
Radwinter, 44.
Raganeia, 42.
Ragæ, 194.
Ραγαι, 209.
Ragarth caſtle, 583, 584.
Ragland, 478, 488.—title, 488.
Ragley, 34.—baron of, ib.
Rails, 271.
Raines, 55.
Rainham and title, 106.—South, ib.
Rainſborough, 170.
Rainton, 293.
Raleigh, 42, 53.
Raleigh, ſir Walter, his houſe, 26, 29.
Rahere, his monument, 22.
Ralph, earl of Cheſter and Lincoln, 233.
Rampart field, 81.
Randes, biſhop, 235.
Ramſey, 154, 160.
——— abbey, 154, 160.
——— fire, 160.
——— iſland, 522.
——— mere, 154.
Randolph, Thomas, 173.
Ranelagh houſe, 15.
———, viſcount, 24.
Raſen, Eaſt, Tupholm, and Market, 268.
Ratæ, 193, 209.—is, 347, 209.
Ratby and camp, 209.
Ratcliff, 213.—family, 44, 105.
Ratoniibii oſtium, 493, 498.
Raveningham, 108.
Raven's bank, 239.
Ravins heuch, 114.
Raunton, 376 389.
Rawdikes, 194, 209.
Rawlinſon, ſir Francis and ſir Walter, 81.
Ray, Mr. where buried, 55.
Rayfield, 113.
Rayton, ſir Henry, 29.
Razor bill, a bird, 522.
Read family, 353.—Charles, his free-ſchool, 291.
Red caſtle, 81. 398, 531.—bank, 435.
—— point, 219.—ſea, ib.
—— cliffe, 10.
Rede, Bartholomew, mayor of London, 111.
Redeham, 108.
Redenhall, 104.
Redford, 293.
Redgrave, 91.
Red horſe, 333.—vale, 327.
Redlingfield, 89.
Redlington, 287.
Redman, biſhop, 139.
Redmayne, Dr. 24.
Redſhanks, who, 271, 333.
Redwald, king of the Eaſt Angles, 75.
Redwardun family, 225.
Redwell, 178.
Reeche, 129, 141.
Reedmote, 29.
Regiſter of a ſchool, 272.
——— old, 593
Regnault's tower, 596.
Reinbudcourt, Guy de, 166.
Relics, hid to preſerve the memory of perſons, 5.
Reliquary, 572.
Remigius, biſhop, builds Lincoln cathedral, 228.
Remney, 661.
Remny river, 493.
Rendiſham, 75, 86.
Renimed 2.
Rents, increaſe of, 18
Repandun, 306.—ſepulchre, ib.
Repeham, 117*.
Reppes, North, 111.—biſhop, ib.
Repreſentatives paid, 137.
Repton, 301.
Requeſts, court of, 8.
Reſolute Doctor, 96.
Reſtitus, biſhop of London, 4.
Rethilen, 590.
Rethunus, biſhop of Leiceſter, 209.
Reveſby, 270.
Reynard's hall and kitchen, 305.
Reynardſon, ſir Abraham, 29.
Reynolds, biſhop, his monument, 157.
——— place, 207.
Rhaider Gwy caſtle, 465, 468.
——— du fall, 541, 544.
——— cynwid, 546.
Rhaiadr Gigfraw, 578.
Rheidiol river, 524.
Rhia, barons of, 94, 104.—Hubert de, ib.
Rhine river, 422.
Rhiw goch, 249.
Rhiwaedog, 546.
Rhos, 513, 518, 519.
Rhos ir, 570.
Rhos vale, 513, 519.
Rhos Diaberd, 533.
—— y Gadva, 579.
Rhuddlan, 590, 591.
——— ſtatute, 591.
——— battle, 591.
Rhyd Pencarn, 480.
Rhydpont, 571.
Rhys ap Gruffydh, burnt Radnor, 465.—demoliſhed Bualt caſtle, 470.—deſtroyed Cardigan, 524.—ap Thomas, mas, assisted Henry VII. in gaining the kingdom, and was made a knight of the garter, 505. — ap Tewdwr, prince of Wales, slain in battle by Fitz Haimon, 493.

Rhys, prince of South Wales, 465.— slaughtered the English, and reduced Cardiganshire, 525.
Riber hill, 312.
Ribbesford, 358.
Rich, Richard, chancellor in the time of Edward VI. 43, 55. — Henry, earl of Holland, 233. — Edward Henry, earl of Warwick and Holland, 349.—his monument, 15.
Richardson, sir Thomas, 24, 108.
Richard, the Conqueror's nephew, where buried, 80.
Richard II. his adventures and surrender of his crown, 597.
Richard III. 166.—at Ludlow, 403.— where buried, 203.—slain in Bosworth battle, by Henry, duke of Richmond, 200.
——— duke of York, his letter, 415. —born, 416.
Richard's castle, 443, 454.
Ricknall street, 318.
Ridel, 435.
Ridge house, 386, 459.
Ridgway family, 517.
Riding house, 293.
Ridley family, 424.
Rignall street, 318.
Ring, 239, 291, 333, 460, 561.
Ringhill, 62, 63.
Rings, 31, 138, 200.—gold, 111, 141* —jet, 54, 57.—brass, 85, 200.— with Arabic inscription, 200. antient, 266.—one with a coin in it, 268.
Ripariis de, family, 41.
Ripley, in Derbyshire, 306. — Worcestershire, 358.
Risbury, 457.
Riseley park, and plate found there, 308.
Rithomagus, 101.
Rivers, divinity attributed to, 422.
Robartes, earl of Radnor, 130.—family, 469.
Robert, earl of Mellent, 354.
Robin Hood's cross, 249.
Robinson, John, his history and epitaph, 586.
Robsert, viscount, 7.
Rocheberie, 335.
Roche castle, 519.
Rochford, 42, 52.—family, 52.—earl of, 42.
Rock, 372.
Rock bason, 311.
Rockingham, 167. — castle, 186. — earl, ib.—marquis, ib.—forest, ib.
Rock Savage, 426, 438.
Rodam, 398.
Rodely, 210. — preceptory and soke, ib.
Rodes, Gerard de, 229.
Roding, 41.—Leaden and Eythorp, ib.
Rodley, 327.
Rodway, 327.
Roe, sir Thomas, 50.
Roe-bucks, formerly in Wales, 528.
Rofts, the, 586.
Roger, bishop of Sarum, his saying concerning Lantoni abbey, 477.
Roisia, the wife of Pagan de Beauchamp, 139.
Rolleston, 212.
Rollrich stones, 334.
Rolls, 5, 19.
Roman antiquities, 15, 16, 52, 117.
——— altar, 480.
——— arch, 182.
——— banks, 233.
——— brass vessel, 55.
——— bricks, 16, 17, 60, 62, 57, 77, 485, 488, 533, 550, 595.
——— burial ground, 17, 51, 187.
——— bust, 62.
Roman camp, 105, 111.
——— coins, 15, 16, 17, 28, 45, 50, 56, 57, 60, 77, 86, 88, 93, 105, 117, 138, 140, 141*, 159, 165, 166, 173, 178 179, 187, 209, 211, 212, 163, 397.—gold coins, 30, 90.
——— fibulæ, 62.
——— gate, 430.
——— glass vessel, 55, 317.
——— gold instruments, 62.
——— hill, 60.
——— ingot, 16.
——— inscription, 161.
——— inscriptions at Trinity college, Cambridge, 133.
——— kiln, 16.
——— lamps, 16.
——— patera, 17, 146.
——— pavement, 16, 37, 50, 57, 58, 60, 117, 175, 179, 209, 210.
——— pottery, 55, 56, 470, 473, 475, 478 483, 485, 540, 558, 570, 533, 535, 536, 583.
——— road, 12, 30, 61, 53, 56, 13, 29, 60, 62, 63, 117, 134, 141*, 165 166, 167, 194, 210, 229, 239, 240, 247, 318, 392, 434, 533, 595.
——— roads in Staffordshire, 379, 392.
——— sandal, 55.
——— skeleton, 62.
——— station, 595.
——— tower, 16.
——— town, 162.
——— vessels, 16, 58, 110, 140.
——— urns, 50, 52, 88, 140.
Romara, William de, earl of Lincoln, 196, 232.
Romberd priory, 89.
Rond, king, 105.
Rood, miraculous, 60.
Rood's eye, 433.
Rookwood family, 89.
Room, subteraneous, 570.
Roomwood, 293.
Roos, or Rouse, barons, 225, 249.
Roof of a kitchen, 55.
Ropesley, 250.
Ros, Robert, his monument and history, 21.
Rose tavern, 26.
Roseby, 250.
Ross, 444, 452, 462, 463.—John, 337.
Rossal, 399, 417*.
Rotelond, 221.
Rotheram, archbishop of York, 134.
Rotheras, 454.
Rotherton, 437.
Rothwell, 166, 178.
Rougham, 116*.
Round churches, 17.
——— hill, 188.
Rous, 371.—Linch, 37.
Rous family, 76, 89.—sir John, 89.
Routon, 397.
Rowcester, 395.
Rowe, the poet, 24.—where born, 29.
Rowe monument, 80.
Rowland, Mr. 569.
Rows, what, 432.
Rowtor rocks, 311, 312.
Royal Exchange, 10, 28.—society, 28. —African company, ib.
Roydon, 55.
Royston, 123.—cave, 129.—club, 139.
Roxby, 266.
Ruabon, 565.
Rubens, Elias, 141.
Ruckholt hall, 50.
Rudgely, 393.
Rudheath, 381.
Rudham East, 113.
Rud's hostle, 134.
Ruff, a fish, 95, 108.
Rufford, 294.
Ruffs, 271.
Rufin, the son of Wulpher, king of Mercia, murdered by his father for turning Christian, 387.
Rugby, 328, 335.
Rugmount, 545, 546.
Rulos, Richard and Emma, 240.
Rumald, St. where born, 165. — his well, 170.
Rume river, 294.
Rumeford, 294.
Rumford, 42, 52.
Runckhorn, 426, 440.
Runwell, 53.
Runymead, 2.
Ruperra, 491.
Rusca, what, 431.
Rushbrook, 73, 81.
Rushbury, 411.
Rushden, 179.
Rushton, 166, 178.
Rushworth, 105.
Russel family, 142, 354, 371.—lord John, 8.—bishop, buried at Bugden, 157.—his rebus, ib.
Russet well, 319.
Russia company, 28.
Ruthal, Thomas, bishop of Durham, 24.
Rutherforth, Mr. and his collections, 129.
Ruthin, 575, 581.
Ruthlan, 586.
Rutlandshire, 219, 221. — earls and dukes of, 220, 223*, 224*.—plants, 224*.
Rutt, fable of, 219.
Rutunium, 397—412.
Ryder, sir Dudley, 8.—and monument, 251.
Ryhale, 216, 223*.

S.

SAbrina, her story, 531.
Sacheverell, Henry, his first preferment, 386.
Sac and Soc, 220.
Sac friars, 22.
Sacrifices with vervain and frankincense, on what occasions used by the antients, 490.
Sacrificing knife, 81.
Sacy forest, 166.
Sadler's wells, 30.
Saffron, where produced, 46. 62. — wild, 372.
Saffron Walden, 46, 61.—baron Audley, ib.
St. Amor heath, 389.
St. Clere family, and monuments, 56.
St. George family, 123.
St. John family, 179.—Oliver, 249.
St. Ives, 154.
St. Liz, 153, 156. — earl of Lincoln, 233.
St. Mary Stokkys church, 237.
Saint Maur, 478.
St. Medard family, 168.
St. Paul family, 230.
St. Pierre family, 422.
St. Sepulchre's church, 135.
St. Stephen's chapel, 8.
St. Stephen's college, 25.
Saintfoin, where plentiful,
Saith Marchag, 546.
——— Circle, ib.
Salfleet haven, 275.
Salfletby, ib.
Salflete, 275.
Salinæ, 355.
Salines, 436.
Salisbury house, 21.
Salle, 117*.
Salmon, 446.
——— leap, 515. 524.
Salmonby, 271.
Salopia, 398.
Salston, 125.
Saltfleet, 273.
Salt hills, 223.
Salt pits, 106. 351, 352.
Salthouse, 434.

I N D E X.

Salt hills, 223.
Salt ſprings, 327, 352.
Salt ſpring and boiling, 360—364.
Salt wiches, 424.
Salt works, antient, 425. — modern, 361, 436, 437.
Salrflete, 275.
Salters load, 167.
Salter's road, 251.
Saltney, 166.
Saltrey, 154.
Salwarp, 359.—river, 251, 359.
Sarn Elen, 538.
—— Helen, 544.
—— y Dhiual, 544.
—— Swſan, 533
Sampierre family, 422.
Sampoll family, 233.
Sanchez, Balthazar, 29.
Sancroft, archbiſhop, 88.
Sandle boro, what, 462.
Sanctuary 438.—at Weſtminſter, 25.
Sand flood, 89.
Sandal, Roman, 55.
Sandbach, 438.
Sanderſon, ſir William, 48.—biſhop, 157.—monuments, ib.
Sandford, 419.
Sandford, J. 493.
Sandiacre, 302 308.
Sandon, 56. 376.
Sandwell, 343. 383. 386.
Sandys family, 142.—family and lord, 365.—William, hydrauliſt, 371.
Santeho, 434.
Sapcot, 155.
Sarden, Great, 382.
Satyr of bronze, 105.—buſt of, 138.
Saunderſon, biſhop, 250.
Savage family, 425, 426.—biſhop, 426.
Savenſby, Allen de, biſhop of Coventry, 330.
Saville family, 294.
Saville, George, marquis of Halifax, 24.
Savoy, 8, 21.
Sawſton, 139.
Sawyer's alms houſes, 178.
Saxham, Great, 81.—Little, 82.
Saxon architecture, 141.
—— coins, 222.
—— gate, 80.
—— inſcription, 144.
Say, 411.
Say family, 443, 456.
Scales family, 129.—lords, 116.
Scalmey, Great and Little, 522.
Scarſdale, 302.—title, 306.—family, 309.—Robert earl, 24.
Sceorſtan, 356.
Schendon, 348.
Schochlach, 423.
Schomberg, duke, 24.—marſhal, embarks for Ireland, 434.
School, Weſtminſter, 24.
Schools, public, at Cambridge, 133, 134.
Schoukhold iſland, 522.
Scole inn and ſign, 104.
Scotch chapel, 114.
Scotch hall at Lincoln, 265.
Scoteney barony, 230.
Scrivelſby, 268.
Scroby, 285, 294.
Scrolls of parchment found in urns, 63.
Scrope family, 290.
Scudamore family, 444, 445. 462.
Scull petrified, 178.
Sculls, 236. 334.
Sculton, 104.
Scythe blades, 382.
Sea man, 75.
Sea ſhells uſed for manure, 86.
Seaberig, 52.
Seal, 9. 16, 90, 116*, 163, 172, 178, 251, 281, 292, 463, 572.
—— firſt uſed, 43.
—— antient, of Oxford univerſity, 117.
—— old, of London, 22, 138.
Seal of Wellow abbey, 271, 274.
—— of Robert Fitz Walter, 266.
—— of Boſton, 241.
—— of St. Leonard's hoſpital, Leiceſter, 204.
—— with Arabic inſcription, 230.—
—— of Robert Boſſu, 213.
—— of Ralph, earl of Cheſter, 233.
—— of dean Dudley, 59.
—— of John de Beauchief, 308.
—— Roman, 293.
Seaſdon, 381.
Seaton prizes, 177.
Sebert, whether he built Weſtminſter abbey, 24.
Secandunum, 331.
Sechey, 116.
Secker, archbiſhop, 289.
Seckers, 116.
Seckford, Thomas, 86.
Seckindon, 331.
Sedgebrook, 251.
Segelocum, 284, 292.
Segontiorum portus, 548.
Segontium, 548 556.
Segrave, 155. 200. 213.
——— baron, 331.—Stephen, ib.
Segs or Six hill, 210.
Seint Maur, 478.
Sekindon, 348.
Selleck, 463.
Selleſton, 292.
Sempringham, 225.
Sempringham hall, 244.
Sempringham, Gilbert de, and order of, 246.
Senate houſe at Cambridge, 134.
Seneca's uſury in Great Britain, 71.
Senliz family, 168, 169.
Senvey lane, 205.
Senvi ſby, 229.
Scot, John, earl of Cheſter, 427.
Setantiorum portus, 548.
Seven ſiſters, a tree, 294.
Severn end, 369.
Severnſtoke, 371.
Severn head, 531.
Severn river, 251. 534.
Seward, John, his lines, 478.
Sewardſley, 172.
Sewen, a fiſh, 499.
Sewer, 15.
Seymour, Algernon, duke of Somerſet, 24.
Shadwell, 24.
Shadwell, Thomas, born, 117*.
Shaire, what, 302.
Shakſpeare, his birth, houſe, mulberry tree, epitaph, 340.—monument, 24.
Shanton, 419.
Sharnborne, ſtory of, 97, 114.
Shavinton, 424.
Sheathes, what, 425.
Sheep, 165.
—— too numerous, 328.
—— with four horns, 379.
Sheffield family, and tombs, 281.
——— Edmund, 233.
——— John, duke of Buckingham, 24
———, ſir Edmund, 24.
Shelbrok walk, 172.
Sheldon family, 334.
——— archbiſhop, 396.
Shelford, 284. 287.
——— Great, 134.—and Little, 138.
Shelfsey, 3.
Shelſley, Walſh, and Beauchamp, 372.
Shells, 59.
Shelton and family, 84. 94.
Shene, 2.
Shenfield, 53.
Shengay, 129.
Shenſhales and water, 417.
Shenton, 400. 438.
Shepeton Corbet, 410.
Shepherd's race, 287.
Shepperton, 12.
Shepreth, 141.
Sherard, lord, 197.—Abigail, ib.—pedigree, ib.
Sheriffs of London, 10.
Sheringham, 111.
Sherlock, Dr. where born, 29.
Sherry iſland, 572.
Sherwood foreſt, 292.
Shettington, 198.
Shield, 568.
——- found at Oſweſtry, 418.
Shipley hill, 210.
Shipſton, 327.
Shipſton on Stour, 369.
Shipton caſtle, 396*.
Shirbeck, 273.
Shire manor, 137.
Shireburn river, 330
Shires, parts of, divided from the reſt, 353.
Shirewood foreſt. 283.
Shirley 306.—and family, 301.
Shirly, ſir Robert, rebuilds the church of Stanton Harold, 201.
Shobdon, 457.
Shrewbury and neſs, 42.
Shochlach, 430.
Shoebury, 52.
Shoes, antient, found in a moſs, 280.
Shoreditch, 30.
Shortgrove, 62.
Shotwic, 424, 434.
Shoudham, 117*.
Shovel, ſir Cloudſley, 24, 112.
Shovelers, 270.
Shrawarden, 399. 420*.
——— Great and Little, 418.
Shrekingham, 225, 246.
Shrewſbury, 398, 399, 415, 416, 417*.—ſchool and library, 415.—battle, 416.—natives, 416.—Robert and Ralph de, 416.—earls, 400, 420.
Shrewſbury, Talbot earl of, 24.
Shrine of St. Hugh, 201.
Shrockingham, 225.
Shropſhire, 395*, 401.—dimenſions, produce, Domeſday, caſtles, 401.
Shotwike, 434.
Shrob walk, 172.
Shrubland hall, 88.
Shuckborough, 334.
Shugbury, 327.
Shuſtock, 344.
Shutburrow, 390.
Siamber Wen, 592.
Sibbertoft, 185.
Sibertoft, 179.
Sibthorpe, 289.
Sibton, 76. 88.
Sidnaceſter, 242, 266, 279.
Sidney family, 113.
——— earl of Leiceſter, 214.
——— Henry, lord preſident, 413.—
——— lady Frances, counteſs of Suſſex, founds Sidney college, Cambridge, 124.—where buried, 8, 124.
Sidney Suſſex college, 133.
Sigebert, king of the Eaſt Angles, 73.—turns monk, and ſlain, 77, 90.
——— founder of Cambridge univerſity, 124.
Silk mills at Derby, 307.
Silures, 441.
Silver plate, 30.—at Sutton, 144.—Riſley, 308.
Simeni, 71.
Simeon, ſir James, his mauſoleum, 386.
Simomagus, 93, 101.
Simpſon, Mr. 200.
Sinai, 392.
Single, 386.
Sinnol iſland, 572.
Sinodune, 560.
Sinomagus, 93, 101.
Sinſil dyke, 255.
Sion college, 24.
Sion houſe, 2, 12, 14.
Sire Maiſeveth, 465,
Sit river, 93.
Sitomagus, 93, 101.
Sitſylt family, 442.
Siward family, 495.

INDEX.

Sixhill, 267.
Skarri, what, 302.
Skeffington, 196, 198.
Skegneſs, 276.
Skeleton, 15, 17, 90, 142*, 176, 277, 448. 535.—in chains, 141*.
Skeletons, 62, 113, 342.
Skellefthorp, 267.
Skellingthorpe, 252.
Skelton the poet, 104.—ſir Ralph, ib.
Skerries, 224.
Skerry iſland, 572.
Skinfrith, 477. 482.
Skipwith family, 211.
Skirbech, 273.
Skiridvawr, 486.
Skulton,
Slapton, 171.
Slate, 210. 211.
Slate quarry, 535.
Slates, 168.
Slave trade at Cheſter, 431.
Slaughden vale, 76.
Slebach, 513, 518.
Sleford, 2 5, 247.
Slepe, 154 158.
Sleves holme, 116*.
Sloanian library, 29.
Smalbridge, 84.
Smalridge, biſhop, 391.
Smite brook, 291.
Smith family, 424.
—— ſir Thomas, 62.
Snailwell, 144.
Snape, 87.
Snaudonia, 548.
Snawdon, 551.
Sned, 401.
Snetſham, 114.
Sniter, 284.
Snitterley, 112.
Snodhill, 446.
Snoring, 113.
Snothill caſtle, 442.
Snottingham, 283.
Snowdon, 548, 550, 541. — plants, 551.—birds, 552.
———— foreſt, 548, 550.
Soame, ſir Stephen, 83.
Soar river, 194, 202, 211.
Soccage tenure retained, 111.
Sodales Auguſtales, 45.
Sodington, 372.
Soham, 144.
Soham, Earl's, 87.
Soho manufactory, 343.
Solebay fights, 88.
Solihull, 342.
Solyhill, 330.
Somerby, 90, 198.
Somerley, 77, 90.
Somers, lord, born, 367, 370.
Somerſet, earls of Worceſter, 354.
Somerſet houſe, 6, 21, 28.
Somerſham, 154, 159.—free ſchool, ib.—rectory, ib.—medicinal water, ib.—biſhop's palace, ib.
Somercotes, North, 275.
Somerton caſtle, 227.
Somery family, 375.
Sorbus pyriformis, 372.
Sorithwold, 76.
Sothy bank, 223.
Sough, what, 323.
Soeur, le, 25.
South, Dr. 24.—born, 30.
South Sea Company, 27.
Southam, 327, 334.
Southgate, 29.
Southoe, 157.
Southorpe pits, 187.
Southſtone, 372.
Southtown, 382.
Southwark, 9, 27.
Southwell, 284, 289, 290.—family, 105, 290.
Southwell, J. his monument, 88.
Southwold, 76, 88.
Sow river, 276, 386.
Sowes of lead, 303.
Spalding, 224, 237. — cum Croyland manor, ib —abbey, 237.—priory, 238.—regiſter, ib.—power of life and death, 238.—tower, ib.—pariſh, liberties, perambulations, ſociety, caſtle, 239.
Spaldwick, 157.
Spaldwicke, 155.
Spanheim, 24.
Spar, 303.
Spear head, 113, 235, 348.
Spechley, 367.
Speed, John, 341, 439*.
Spelman, ſir Henry, where born, 101, 117*.—where buried, 24.
Spelwell, 165, 173.
Spencer, John, 327.
——— and family, 334.
——— family, 165, 175.——baron Wormleighton, 165.
Speney family, 329.
Spenſer family, 493, 495.—Hugh, 498.
——— Edmund, the poet, 8, 24.—born, 29.
——— biſhop, 81, 219.
Σφην, 71.
Spilſby, 270.
Spital fields, 9, 16, 22.
Spital ſermons, 17.
Spitle in the ſtreet, 229.
Spits turned by water, 382.
Spittlegate, 251.
Sponde, Mr. 166.
Sponne, archdeacon, and tomb, 172.
Sponne hoſpital, 345.
Sporle, 116*.
Spot Ulfric, 377.
Spotſwood, archbiſhop, 24.
Sprage, admiral, ib.
Spratt, biſhop, ib.
Sprawſton, 250, 266.
Spring fine one, 52.—holy, 85.—petrifying, 178.—occaſional, 273.—medicinal, 371.—bitter, ib.
Springs, ſalt, 595.
Springe family, 84.
Spinney, 141.
Spur, 239 242.
Spurs, 12.
Stableford bridge, 223*.
Stackpole court, 517.
Stadenlow, 325*.
Stafford, 376, 389.
——— family, 155.
——— earls and family, 378, 396.
——— Edward, duke of Buckingham, founds Buckingham college, 133.
——— biſhop and John, ib.
——— Henry, earl, 24.
——— Mary counteſs of, 24.—William, earl of, buried, 30.
——— earl of Wiltſhire, 166, 180.—family, 168.
Staffordſhire, 375.—extent, diviſion, 375.—Domeſday, names uſed in, 370.—plants, 396.
Stag's horn, 52.
Staircaſe, double, 384.
Stalburgborough, 275.
Stalhere, what, 41.
Stamford, 243, 225.—baron, ib.—univerſity, ib.—earls, 244.
Stanbow, 255.
Stanbridge, 54.
Standard in Cornhill, 28.
Stanes, 2, 12.
Stanes foreſt or warren, 3.
Staneſgate priory, 57.
Staneſtreet, 63.
Staney and fiſhery, 141*.
Stanfield, 245 269.
Stanford, 168, 188, 198, 286, 292, 372.
Stanford bridge, 12.
Stanford Rivers, 41.
Stanground, 163.
Stanhope, 284.
Stanhope family, 284, 309.—James earl, 24.—Dr. 305.—Anne, 8.
Stanlaw, 424.
Stanley family, 165, 413, 424, 589.
Stanley, Dr. 200.
Stanley, Thomas earl of Derby, 304.
Stanley, Sir Humphry, 24.
Stanleys, earls, 376.—earls of Derby, 326*.
Stanligre, James, earl, 24.
Stanlow, 434, 439.
Stanmore, Great and Little, 30.
Stanſted Montfitchet, 47. 63.
Stanton, 396.—family, 301.
Stanton Harold, 201.
Stanton moor, 311.
Stanton Wyvill, 198.
Stanway, 59.
Stanwell, 2, 12.
Stanyards, 429.
Staple for wool, 224, 229.
Staplefordſ, 138, 197, 212.
Staple Inn, 18.
Stapleton monument, 110.
Star chamber, 8, 25.
Starberry hill 61, 63.
Statue of Aſtræa, 498.
—— of a Roman ſoldier at Cheſter, 430.
Staveley, 308.—barons, 302.
——— Chriſtopher, letter carver, 212.
Stawford, 283.
Steelyard, 28.
Steeple, 16.—round, 82.
Steeple, inſcription on, 51.
Steeple pariſh, 57.
Steeples in London, 28.
Stephen, king, where buried, 214, 234.
Stepleton, 457.
Stepney, 30.
Stepney, the poet, 24.
Stewards, 52.
Stewart, duke of Richmond, 24.
Stewkeley, Great, 161.
Stews, 9, 27.
Steynor, Mr. his ſaltworks, 361.
Stibium 303.
Sticklebacks, ſhoals of, 270.
Stiſkey, 112.
Stilton, 155, 163.—cheeſes, 163.
Stipperſhal, 331, 348.
Stipperſtones hill, 397.
Stiſhers, 112.
Stixwold, 269.
Stock chapel, 114.
Stocking manufacture, 206.
Stockling, 51.
Stockport, 426, 439.
Stoke, 200, 411, 413.
—— battle of, 284, 289.
—— Clare, 73,
—— by Neyland, 84.
—— Donnington, 462.
—— on Trent, 385.
—— Rochford, 249.
—— Say, 411.
Stokkyn,, what, 51.
Stokkys, St. Mary, church, 237.
Stone, 376, 385.
—— circle, 385, 401, 546.—walls, 81.—ſingle, 386.—ſpeaking, 518, 519.—rocking, 520.
—— at Kinfare, 381.
—— at Lhech y Aſt, &c. in Cardiganſhire, —— of Scone, 360.
—— coffin, 21, 61.
—— Nicholas, monument by, 91.
Stoneham, 87.
Stoneley, 155, 335.
Stoneley priory, 162.
Stoneley and holme, 328.
Stones, three at Checkley, 378.—at Chebſey, 388 —Leek, 394.—Margam, 501, 502.—in Carmarthenſhire, 510.
—— piles of, 397.
—— erect and circles, 557.
—— circle of, on Corndon, 534.
—— upright, 541.
—— St. Cadvan's, 541.
—— at Keilwort, 542.
Stonyng, what, 51.
Stoter, what, 322.

Stough-

Stoughton, 162.
Stour mere, 73.
Stour river, 60, 61, 73, 356.—made navigable by an act of parliament, from Manningtree to Clare, 83.
——— navigation, port, and bridge, 357.
Stourbridge, 356.
Stourbridge fair and chapel, 134.
Stourton caſtle, 382.
Stow, 230, 278.
Stow, what, 322.
Stow nine churches, 172.
Stow Bardolph, 116.
Stow Langtoft, 81.
Stow Market, 75, 87.
Stow Quoi, 137.
Stowe, John, 10.
Stowe, 171.
Stowton, 371.
Stradclwyd, 560.
Stradling family, 495.
———, ſir Edward, 493.—William, a follower of Fitz Haimon, conqueror of Glamorganſhire, ib. — ſir John, 494.—family, 494, 495.
Strafford, Henry earl, 241.
Le Strange family, 97.
Strange family, 171.
Stratcluyd, 575.
Stratclwyd, 599.
Stratfleur, 524, 526.
Stratford le Bow, 30.
Stratford on Avon, 340, 329.
Stratford abbey, 329.
Stratford, 50, 84.
——— Langton, 41.
Stratton ſuper Dunſmore, 335.
Strawberry hill, 14.
Strawſton, 250.
The Street, 438.
Streethay, 384.
Street vawr, 533.
Strelley and family.
Strenſham, 354, 371.
Streteley chapel, 309.
Stretford, 438, 462.
Stretham, 143*.
Stretton, 279. 384 397. 417, 430.
——— church, 412.
——— Aſd, ib.
——— Little, ib.
——— Granſom, 463.
Strighull caſtle and earls of, 478, 482.
Strode, le, 60.
Strongbow, Richard, 478, 515.—Gilbert, 515.
Strype, Mr. 30.
Stuart family, 469.
Stuccia flu. 524.
Studley, 340.
Studley caſtle, 329.
Sturbridge chapel, 137.—fair, 136.
Sture in Uſmerum, 357.
Stuteville family, 117*.
Styleman, Mr. 114.
Styles, 114.
Stylus, 292
Sudbrook, 485.
Sudbury, 74, 83, 355.
Sudley, barons, 329.
Suene, 53.—took Norwich, 94.
Suene Tinghege, his death, 230.
Suetonius Paulinus, proprætor in Britain, invaded and took Mona, 565.
Suffolk, 71—92.—extent, diviſion, 79.—high and low, ib —Domeſday, ib.—ſoil, ib.—earls, 91. — plants, 92.—cheeſe, 72.—dukes and earls of, 77, 78.—houſe, 22.—court, 72.
Suffragan biſhop, 72.
Sugwas, 450.
Suidhelm, king of the Eaſt Angles, baptized by biſhop Cedda, 86.
Sully and family, 494.
——, Reginald, a follower of Fitz Haimon, conqueror of Glamorganſhire, 492.—Robert de, 494.
Sulby, 188.
Sulgrave, 171.
Sunbury, 12.
Surfleet, 241.
Suthred, 1.
Sutterton, 223, 242.
Sutton, 200, 290, 291, 302, 310, 443, 460.—plate found at, 144.
——— family, 290, 291, 375, 423.
——— church, 141*.
Sutton Bonington, 292.
Sutton Coldfield, 330, 343.
Sutton, St. James, Mary, and Michael, 234.—St. Edmund, 235.
Sutton, Thomas, 279. — founds the Charter-houſe, 26.
Swaffham, 98, 116*.
——— Bolebec, Priors or Little, St. Ciric, 141.
Swaineſwell, 330.
Swane of Eſſex, 42.
Swanpool, 228, 253.
Swanſea, 495, 496. 503.
Swapham, R. de, 167.
Swaveſay, 129.
Swearer, judgment on, 380.
Sweating ſickneſs, 399, 416, 433.
Swerdeſdelf, 155.
Swift river, 193, 198.
Swindon, 382.
Swinerton, 387.
Swine's pennies, 284.
Swineſewell pool, 331.
Swineſhead abbey, 242.
Swinford, Old, 356.
Swinford Kings, 380.
Swinford, Catherine, her tomb, 228.
Swinnerton, 387.
Swinsford, 198.
Swithelm, king of the Eaſt Angles, converted, 75.
Swithin, St. his badge, 187.
Sword given by king John to Lynne, 115.
Swords found, 12, 142*.
Sydenham, Dr. 24.
Syfer ſpring, 276.
Sylham, 90.—lamps, ib.
Symonds, Mr. his houſe, 20.
Symond's gate, 448.
Sympſon, Mr. on Lindum, 256.
Synod enjoining celibacy to the clergy, 366.—of Llandewi brewi, 527.

T.

TACHMELIN, 375.
Tacitus, 166.
Taf, or Tâv, 505, 508.—the name of many Welch rivers, 493, 498.
Taeſborough, 94, 105.
Tair ponte, what in Britiſh, 165*.
Takeley, 54.
Tal-lhin, 228.
Talacavan, 578.
Talbois family, 225.—Ivo de, earl of Anjou, 224, 225.—Gilbert, baron, Talbot, 443, 448.—family, 293, 295, 352, 378, 398, 413, 416, 444, 445, 448, 499.—monuments, 400, 419.—John, viſcount L'Iſle of Grafton, 360. — John, the firſt earl of Shrewſbury of this name, 419.—George, duke of Shrewſbury, 295 —
Talc, 60.
Talcharn caſtle, 505, 507.
Talebont hundred, 540.
Taleſarn green, 526.
Talgarth, Engliſh and Welſh, 476.
Taliеſin the poet, his grave, 529.
Taliſman, 103.
Talk, 223*.
Talley, 507.
Talmaſh family, 74, 84.
Talvarn caſtle, 498.
Tal y Gareg, 533.
Tame river, 375.
Tamworth, 344, 348, 375.
Tan tivy, whence derived, 223*.
Tanarus, Jupiter, 430.
Tanaw family, 161.
Tanet river, 531.
Tanbenykeſn, 567.
Tapeſtry, 105, 245.—repreſenting the defeat of the Spaniſh armada, 25.—at Burley on the hill, 222.
Taran, what, 430.
Tardebig, 360.
Tarven, 438.
Taſburg family, 90.
Tathaus, a Britiſh ſaint, 478.
Tathwell, 273.
Tatſall family, 93.
Tatteſall, 229, 269, 270. — barons, ib.—family, 219, 222, 269, 270.
Tav, what, 508.
Taverner, Richard and Roger, 116*.
Taurobolia, what, 5.
Taylor, Dr. 269.—martyred, and inſcription to, 84.—Jeremiah, biſhop, 136.
Teal, 271.
Tearnes, what, 397.
Teberry caſtle, 541.
Tecla, St. and well, 584.
Teclaw, St. 476.
Tedford, 272.
Teſidiauc river, 395*.
Teg Eingl, what, 588.
Teg Engle, 588.
Tegenia, ib.
Tegerna, 588.
Teilaw, a Britiſh ſaint, biſhop of Landaff, 499.
Tein river, 378.
Teivi river, 508.
Temd river, 395*.
Teme river, 371, 401.
Temebury, 371.
Tems, 271.
Templars, 6, 41.—church, 9.—monuments, 19.
Temple, 41.—of Diana, 5, 17.—of Claudius, 56.
———, Bruer, 248.
Temple, 210. — ſir William, where born, 29.
Temples, inner and middle, 6.
Tenbury, 371.
Tenby, 513, 517.
Tendring hundred, 84.
Teniſon, Thomas, archbiſhop of Canterbury, 25, 137.—John, 112.
Tenure, 55. — of turning the king's ſpit, ib.—by the ſervice of keeping one gerfalcon of the king's, 137.—by ſerjeantry, to perform, every Chriſtmas-day, before the king, one ſaltus, one ſufflatus, and one bumbulus, 75.—by the ſervice of carrying to the king, whatever part of England he ſhould be in, an hundred herrings in pies, when they came firſt in ſeaſon, 93, 103.—of leading the men of Norfolk and Suffolk from St. Edmund's dyke, 83. — by the ſervice of being butler at the coronation, 101.—by the ſervice of being chief lardiner at the coronation, 104. — by ſerjeantry, to ſhoe the king's horſe when he came to Mansfield, 284.—being king's baker, 137.—finding the earl of Arundel bacon and ſpurs, 142.—finding an ounce of ſilk, 170.—finding a foot-ſoldier, &c. 185.—hunting in the king's foreſts, 187.—to conduct the king's ambaſſadors down Trent to York, 227.—at Caiſtre, 276.—by driving a gooſe round the fire, 385.—bacon flitch, 393. — of Conwy caſtle, 559. — of Pencomb, 460.
Tenure in chief, to find two foot ſoldiers for one day towards the army of Wales in war time, 396*.
——— in capite, by the ſervice of giving the king one barbed arrow as often as he hunted in Cornedon chace, 443.

INDEX.

Tenure granted without writing before the Conqueſt, 43.
Term of bronze found at Caſter, 183.
Tern river, 397, 412, 417.
Terricus, a ſubtle ſophiſt, 125.
Teſe, 105.
Teſſeræ, 163, 291.
Tetnall, 375, 380.
Tetricus, 122.
Teyne river, 393.
Thames mouth, 42.
Thames water raiſed, 27.
Thameſis of Cæſar, 2.
Thanet houſe, 26.
Thaxted, 43, 54
Theatre at Hampton court, 13.
Thedlethorp, St. Helen's and All Saints, 274.
Thel, what, 246.
Thelesford, 340.
Thellisford, 328.
Thelwall, 246.
Theobald, archbiſhop, murdered, 83.—buried, ib.—his head preſerved, ib.
Theodoſius, gold coins of, 31.
Theodulus, his eclogues, 181.
Theonus, the laſt Briton that was biſhop of London, 5.
Theotenhall, 375.
Therſton, 105.
Theſter Over, 347.
Thet river, 93.
Thetford, 93, 101.—caſtle, 101.—biſhoprick, 102.—religious houſes, ib.—goal, ib.—inſcription, ib.
Theydon Gernon, 51.
Thingdon, 179.
Thirlby, Thomas, biſhop of Weſtminſter, 7.
Thirn river, 96.
Thobie, 53.
Thoke family, 114.
Thomas of Woodſtock, 7, 43, 48.
Thomas's, St. hoſpital, 9, 27.
——— hoſtel, 134.
——— priory, 387.
St. Thomas of Acon's hoſpital, 22.
Thomaſine, John, 438.
Thomſon, the poet, 24.
Thong, 276.
Thong caſtle, 230.
Thoreſby. 273, 294.
Thoreſway and family, 275.
Thorn Aſh, 279.
Thorndon, 42, 53.
Thorney iſland, 6, 141*. — Malmſbury's account of, ib.
Thornhaugh, 168, 186. — baron of, 186.
Thornhill, ſir James, painted St. Paul's dome, 18.
———, Cooper. 163.
Thornholm, 267.
Thornton, 230, 277.—college, 277.
Thorp, 59.
Thorp family, 93.
Thorpe, ſir William, 134.
Thorpe, 183.—tower at, ib.
Thorpe Belet or Underwood, ib.
Thorpe Waterville, 180. — cloud, 305.—Conſtantine, 394.
Thorpſton, 166.
Thrapſton, 166, 179.
Throckmorton family, 329.
Throggy river, 477.
Thruſton family, 89.
Thuanus, Aug. 515.
Thurcaſton, 219.
Thurgarton, 289.
Thurlow and family, 83.—ſecretary, 51 142*.—lord, 81.
Thurmaſton, 209.
Thurrock, Weſt, 52.
Thurſdon, 179.
Thurſtington, 434.
Thwong, 268.
Tibba, St. 219, 223*.
Tiberius, gold coin of, 358.
Tickenhall, 351.
——— cote, 223*.
——— hill, 358.
Tickill, 358.
Ticks hall, 376.
Tigeni, 71.
Tigris river, 329.
Tilbury, 41.—Weſt and Eaſt, 52.
Tiled hoſtel, 134.
Tiles, tomb of, 51.
——— inſcribed, 475.
Tillabirig, 52.
Tillaburgh, 41.
Tilligone chapel, 521.
Tillingham, 43.
Tilney family, 93. 97.—dame Margaret, 241.
Tilney Smith, 97, 115.
Tiltey, 43, 54.
Tilton, 212.
Tinbod caſtle, 465.
Tinghurſt, 263.
Tin plate work, 52.
Tindal family, 168.
Tintern, 484.
Tio-vul-Fingaceſter, 251, 284, 290.
Tiptoft, earls of Worceſter, 290, 284. —Joice, her monument, 29.
Tiptre, 56.
Tir Mon, 565.
Tirnington, and William, 115.
Tirrel family, 56.
Tirwhit family, 230.
Tiſſitio, 530.
Titchmarſh, 188.
Titley, 452, 462.
Tittleſhall, 117.
Tivy river, 524, 526.
Tixal, 389.
Toad, in coal, 347.
Tobius fl. 504.
Todene, 226.
Todeney, Roger de, 225.
——— Robert de, 465.
Togodumnus, 1, 44.
Toiſovius fl. 549, 558.
Toltſbury, 58.
Tolleſhunt Knights, 53.
Tom of Lincoln bell, 261.
Tombertus, governor of the South Girvii, 142.
Tomkins, Henry, 489.
Tommen y Bala, 545.
——— Llan St. Frid, 468.
——— y caſtle, 545, 412, 325*.
——— yr Rhodwyld, 583, 584.
Tompſon, 105.
Tong, 419.
Tong caſtle, 398.
Tongley camp, 404.
Tor coch, a fiſh, 548.
Torch, what, 542.
Torgoch, a fiſh, 548, 552, 553.
Torkſey, 227, 251.
Torques, of fine gold, where found, 380, 542.—by whom worn, 542.
Torrington and William, 115.
Totenei, Ralph de, 442.
Tothal, 273.
Totheby, 272.
Tothil fields, 24.
Tottenham, 29.—croſs, ib.
Touchet family, 376, 426, 438, 462. barons Audley, ib.
Tournament, 171.
Tov, 41.
Tovy river, 504, 506, 507.—vale, 504, 507.
Tours, Martin of, 515.
Towceſter. 171.
Tower, 166.596.--of London, 4, 16.--Roman, 16.—round to a church, 25, 60, 560.—octagon, 141.
——- gwin, 4.
Town, Roman, 162.
Townſhend, family and title, 106.—Charles, baron of King's Lynne and viſcount, 115. — colonel Edward's monument, 24.
Towns, drowned, 5. — taking their names from oxen, 494.—named from porpoiſes or ſea hogs, 495.
Towyn, 541.
Trabs, what, 301.
Traeth bychan, 554.
——— coch, 569.
——— lyn, 535.
——— mawr, 554.
Traſwynydh, 544, 545.
Tralhwn, 534.
Tre'r Caeri, 553.
Treboeth, 423.
Trebulcho, 465.
Trecaſtle, 473.
Trechen tre rechthre, 571.
Tredegar, the ſeat of the Morgans, 491.
Tredenowen, 592.
Tredington, 369.
Tredynog, 489.
Trees, foſſil, 280. — ſubterraneous, 242. — large, 463. — in the ſands, 520.—at Newgal, 519.
Trees and fiſhes ſwimming preſage death, 425.
Trefaldwyn, 531.
Trefawith, 442.
Tref draeth, 515.
Trefos, 572.
Trefrid, 578.
Trefycloud, 465.
Tref y Gwam caſtle, 584.
Tregan, 572.
Tre' Garon, 524, 526.
Tregoze, barons, 442.
Trekethle, 472.
Trekingham, 225, 247.
Trelawnyd, 592.
Trelhu, 531.
Trenant, 1.
Trenewen, 553.
Tre' newdh, 531.
Tre' garnedh, 561.
Tremhall, 54.
Trenddyn, 596.
Trent place, 29.
Trent river, 230, 283, 301, 376, 379.
Trentham, 376, 386.—family, 386.
Tre'r Druw, 567.
Tre'r greg caſtle, 488.
Tre'r Bard, 567.
Tre' Vawr, 569.—houſe, 583.
Treſan, 572.
Treſſewith, 475.
Tretwr, 475.
Tretr caſtle, 592.
Treurewe caſtle, 560.
Trevenan tower, 476.
Trewaen, 552.
Triades quoted, 1.
Triago, 448.
Trw Very, 567.
Triguilchan, 552.
Trillo, St. his chapel, 560.
Trimley St. Martin, 85.
Trinity, or Chriſt church, 22.
Trinity college in Cambridge founded by king Henry VIII. 124, 133.—library, 133.—hoſtle, 134. ——— hall, founded by William Bateman, biſhop of Norwich, 124, 132.
Trinoantes, 1.
Trinobantes, 1.
Triphont, 483, 488.
Tripleton, 452.
Triplow, 141.
Tripontium, 165, 171, 188, 333.
Tripſley, 452.
Trivet, Sir Thomas, his death, 137.
Trogy caſtle, 483, 488.
Troi, what, 543.
Trout mountain, 552.
Troy, Old, 483.
Trumpington, 140.
Trunk of a tree for a coffin, 333.
Truſbut, barony of, 229.
Truſley, 308.
Truſſel family, 112.

Tryffynon

INDEX.

Tryffynon caſtle, 593.
Tryſkont, 546.
Tudenham family, 77.
Tuerobius flu. 524.
Tui ogo banc, 283.
Tulip tree, 49.
Tumman's hill camp, 595.
Tumuli, 12, 59, 87, 141*, 142*, 210, 250, 278, 347, 394, 498, 584.
Tunbridge wells, New, 30.
Tunſtall, 266.
Tupholme, 269.
Turbervil, 495.—Pain, a follower of Fitz Haimon, conqueror of Glamorganſhire, 505.
Turkey company, 27.
Turkil, a Dane, 155.
Turnebus on wine, 302.
Turner, ſir John, 113.
Turner, Dr. his monument, 174.
Turnor, Sir Edward, 249.—ſir Edmund, his charity, 267.
Turobius flumen, 524.
Tutbury caſtle, 378, 395.
Tutt hill, 101.
Tuxford, 291.
Twickenham, 14.
Twll du, 552.
Twr Bronwen, 543.
Twr Bronwyn, 542.
Twr Silod and y Brennin, 591.
Twy croſs, 201.
Twyn, 505, 508.
Twy river, 515.
Tydd, St. Mary's, 234.
Tylney, 293.
Tylney, earl, 50.
Tyderſtone, 404.
Ty Dywi, 514.
Tyerford, 158.
Tyernas, what, 510.
Tyrwhit family, 269.
Tyrraw mawr, 541.
Tyſoe, Over and Temple, 338.
Tywiſog, what, 579.
Tywyn, 541.

V.

VAENOR, 476, 536, 540.
Vale crucis, monaſtery, 576, 581.
Vale Royal, 425, 437.
Valens and Valentinian, gold coins of, 31.
Valentia, Audomar de, earl of Pembroke, 7.—William de, earl of Pembroke, 7, 515.—Mary de, 132.
Valentinian, emperor, gold coin of, 179.
Valoniis family, 75.
Vainona, 275.
Vane, ſir Henry, 273.
—— 590.
Vanne, 498.
Vanneck, ſir Joſhua and Gerard, 89.
Vapour inflammable, 543.
Varia, 590.
Varis, 588, 590.
Vaſe, 116*.
Vauldy abbey, 245.
Vault, Roman, 17.
Vaulx family, 225.—lord, 166.—Nicholas, baron, 166.
Uchindon, 237.
Vehindon, 335.
Venables, barons of Kinderton, 425, 426, 438.
Vendraeth vechan, 504, 506.—vawr, 506.
Venedotia, 530.
Vennonæ, 193, 198.
Venta Icenorum, 94.—Silurum, 477, 484.
Verdon family, 193 331, 378, 442.
Vere family, 84, 166, 413.—Aubrey, earl of Oxford, 23.—ſir Francis, 24.—Robert de, 54.—monuments at Earls Colne, 58.—arms, ib.—tomb, 166.
Vere court, 277.
Verioneth ſir, 538.
Verney family, 329, 334.
Vernometum, 195, 212, 213, 287.—what, in Gauliſh, 195.
Vernon family, 302, 364, 398, 413.—ſir George, for his great hoſpitality called King of the Peak, 302.—Hugh de, baron of Shipbrook, 376.
Vernon, Arethuſa, her monument, 83.—Henry, eſq; ib.
Verrio, paintings of, 307.
Verulam family, 243.
Veſcy family, 250.
Veſey, biſhop, 330, 343.
Veſpaſian, his gold coin, 170.
Veſſels, Roman, 110, 140.—glaſs, 142*, 170.—braſs, 227.
Vexillum, frame of, 243.
Uffa, king of the Eaſt Angles, 71.
Uff-kines, ib.
Uffington, 244.
Ufford, 75.—font, 86, 229.
Ufford family, 5, 77, 86, 142.—earls of Suffolk, 77, 79.—Robert de, earl of Suffolk, 110.
Uhtred, earl of Worceſter, 374.
Victoria Alleluiatica, why ſo called, 596.
Vicus Malbinus, 425.
Villa Fauſtini, 47, 72, 73, 77.
Villiers family, 213.—George, duke of Buckingham, 24.—ſir George, 213.—Adam de, 212.
Vine cloſe, Lincoln, 265.
Vineyard, at Ely, 143.—Denny, 142*.
Vineyards introduced in England, 42, 457.
Vipont, Robert de, 549.
Viroconium, 397.
Viſcounts, firſt, 195.
Vivonia, Hugh de, 478.
Ulceby, 272, 277.
Ulfere's low, 367.
Ullenhale, 341.
Ullerhampton, 380.
Ulverſcroft, 211.
Umbo of ſhield, 142*.
Umbræ, what, 470, 472.
Umfranvil family, 225.
Undola, 180.
Univerſity at Northampton, 176.—at Caerwent, 477, 481.—hoſtel, 132, 134.
Univora, biſhop, 209.
Unlaf, a Daniſh pirate, 12.
Voelas, 575, 578.
Vortigern, the father of Vortimer, 465.
Vortigern, gave London, as a ranſom, to Hengiſt, who took him priſoner, 5.
Vortigerni vallis, 553.
Vortimer, died and was buried at Lincoln, 228.
Vow church, 445.
Upland men, 126.
Upminſter, 52.
Uppingham, 219, 221.—ſchool, 221.
Upton, 167, 269, 183, 333, 353.
Upwell, 142*.
Ureſby, 259.
Uriconium, 397.
Urioconium, 397, 412.
Urns, Roman, 9, 12, 15, 17, 52, 53, 54, 56, 62, 88, 149, 141*, 142*, 170, 172, 176, 179, 182, 198, 250, 266, 278, 281, 291, 240, 335, 338, 339, 318, 393, 452, 454, 484, 498, 584.
—— Celtic, 12.
—— glaſs, 81.
Vrondeg, 570.
Urſo, 353.
Uſk river, 472, 474, 479, 488.
Uſocona, 397, 412.
Uſtrina, 163.
Utceſter, 378.
Utkinton and horn, 424, 439.
Utoxeter, 378, 394, 395.
Vulfshampton, 375.
Vulfruna, a pious woman, 375.
Uvedale, Mr. a botaniſt, 29.
Uxacona, 412.
Uxbridge, 2, 12.—earl of, 12.—treaty, 12.
Vyrnwy, 535.

W.

WADEBURY, 293.
Wadenhou, 73.
Wadel river, 445.
Wager, Sir Charles, 24.
Wainfleet, 230, 275.
——— haven, 275.
Wakefield bridge, chapel on, 27.
——— lodge, 172.
Wake family, 166, 168, 172, 174, 225, 280.
—— chapel, 240.
—— lady Blanche, 159.
Walbery, 47.
Walbury, 63.
Walcot, 173, 246.
Waldby, archbiſhop, 29.
Walden, Saffron, 46, 61.—barons, 47.—priory and caſtle, 61.—burgh, 63.
——— Cheping, 46.
Waldof, 156.
Waldegrave family, 84.
Walderſey ring, 142*.
Walderſwick, 88.
Waleran, earl of Mellent, 354.
Wales, South, 465.—Weſt, 513.—North, 530.—princes of, 598.
Waleſby, 268, 277.
Walfleet oyſters, 45, 54.
Wall, a village, 375.
Wall hills camp, 456, 467.
Wall, Dr. Martin, 365.
Wall low or hill, 170.
Walla, 63.
Wallers, 425.
Walley, 425.
Wallingwells, 294.
Wallor iſland, 42.
Walmsford, 155, 187.
Walnesford, 166, 173.
Walpole, 97.
——— family, 113, 116.
Walpole, Mr. his muſeum, 14.
Walſal, 375.
Walſingham, 97.—lady chapel, 97.—way, 97, 113, 117*.—eſteemed impious not to viſit and make an offering to the virgin of, 97.—king Henry VIII. when a child, went barefooted thither, and offered a valuable necklace to the virgin of, ib.
——— New, 113.——Old or Great, ib.
——— ſir Francis, 113.
Walſoken, 116.
Walter family, 44.
Waltham foreſt, 49.
——— croſs, 29.
——— abbey, 11, 49.
——— Much, 55.
——— on the Wold, 213.
——— abbot of Weſtminſter, 24.
Walton, 75, 116, 302.—bridge, 56.—caſtle and priory, 85, ——— colonel, 159.
Walworth college, 24.
Wambridge, 417.
Wangford, 88.
Wapenham, 171.
Wapiham, 171.
Warboys, 166.
Warburton, biſhop, his library, 359.

Ward,

INDEX.

Ward, lord, 380.
Wards, court of, 8.
Wards of London, 10.
Ware, abbot, his pavement at Weſtminſter abbey, 24.
Warham, 113.
Warkton, 178.
Warley, Great, 53.
Warmington, 327, 333.
Warner family, 113, 117*.—John, biſhop of Rocheſter, 113.
Warner, Sir John, 597.—turns papiſt, 87.
Warr cloſe, 12.
Warrelock camp, 463.
Warren family, 117, 479.—Sir Peter, 24.
Warren camp, 459.
Warton, 380.
Warton houſe, 291.
Waveney, 341.
Warwick, 318, 336.—caſtle, vineyard, church, monuments, 336.—earls of, 331, 348, 349.
Warwickſhire, 327—350.—diviſion, 327.--Domeſday, 333.--plants, 350.
Waſh, or Guaſh, river, 219, 220, 225, 244.
Waſhborne, Little and Knights, 369.
Waſhbourn and family, 353.
Waſhenborough, 174.
Waſhingborough, 271.
Waſhes, 97.
Waſſal, 358.
Wat's dyke, 584.
Water, chalybeate, 200, 223*, 245, 335.
——— medicinal, 52, 153, 159, 170, 171, 174, 178, 197, 198, 201, 223*, 310, 328.
——— purging, 110.
——— mineral, 245, 346.
——— works, 307, 535.—works at Chelſea, 15.
——— pipes, 253, 257.——pipes of earth, 17.
——— hens, 271.
——— conveyed to London, 10, 27.
Waterhull cavern, 321.
Waterbeche, 142*.
Waterland, Dr. 277.
Watford, 174.
Watleſbury, 397.
Watlingſtreet, 10, 174, 193, 198, 397, 417.
Watſon family, 186.—admiral, 24.—biſhop of St. David's, 140.—John, 275.
Watt, William, 115.
Watt's dyke, 593, 597.
Watton, 105.
Wauburn hope, 96.
Waybourne, 112.
Weald moor, 417.
Weald, South, 53.
Wealling, 361.
Weapons found, 554.
Wearham, 116.
Webley caſtle, 503.
Webley, 459.
Wederburn, Alexander, 211.
Weddesborough, 375.
Wedgewood, his pottery, 386.
Wednesfield, 380.
Weedon Pinkney, 165, 171.
——— on the Street, 165, 174.
Welbeck abbey, 293.
Welby, 212.
Welch Maelor, 583.
Weldon, 180.
Well, 141*, 183, 272.
Well, holy, 30.
Welland river, 22, 167, 185.
Welledon, 168.
Welles family, 272.—barons, 229.—Leo, baron, 230.—viſcount, 7.
Welle ream river, 242.
Wellingborough, 166, 178.
Wellington, 417.
Wellow abbey, 274.
Wells, 442.
Welnetham, Great, 81.
Welney, 141*.
Welſh pool, 534.
Wem, 398, 419.
Wemgrave family, 84.
Wendling, 117*.
Wendy, 477.
Wenlock, 396*, 411.
Wenny, 500.
Wentfar river, 94.
Went, 481.
——— Nether and Over, 481.
Wentlug, 490.
Wentſbeck river, 113.
Wentſet, 478.
Wentſland, 477, 483.
Wentſum river, 94, 113.
Wentworth family, 186.—barons, 14.—lord Thomas, 8.—Thomas, 84.
Weobley, 443.
Weolod, 167.
Weorth, 375.
Werburg, a holy virgin, the daughter of king Wolpher, 423.
Werburga, 376.
Werenbert, biſhop, 209.
Wergins meadow and ſtones, 460.
Weſt Acre, 116*.
Weſtminſter, 6.—hall and abbey, 7.—burials, ib.—monks, ib.—dean, 7, 24.—ſchool, 7, 24.—biſhopric, 24.—chapter houſe, 25.—gatehouſe, ib.—ſanctuary, ib.—bridge, ib.—infirmary, ib.—monuments, ib.—natives, 29.
Weſton, 334, 376.
——— judge, 392.
Weſtfield caſtle, 75.
Weſthorpe houſe, 90, 91.
Weſtwade chapel, 105.
Weſtwood, 365.
Wetenhall, biſhop, 24, 390.
Wethersfield, 58.
Weting All Saints, 117*.
Wever river, 424.
Whaplode, 235.
Wharling, 193.
Wharton, lord Thomas, 8.—Henry, 24.
Wheat at Heſton, 13.
Wheat in Flintſhire, 591.
Wheeloc Abraham born, 419.
——— river, 438.
Wheeler family and almſhouſes, 335.
Whichbury, 358.
Whichbury hill, 355.
Whichcote, Dr. born, 411.
Whichenour, 393.
Whileſton mews, 366.
Whimbrels, 271.
Whinwall, 117.
Whiſton, William, account of, 201.—his epitaph, 223*.
——— Daniel, Thomas, and William, 159.
——— priory, 365.
Whitburn, 452.
Whitby, Dr. 179.
Whitchurch, 30, 400, 419, 580.
White, Dr. 157.—ſir Thomas, 345.
White croſs, 450.
Whiteford, 592.
White friars, 21.
Whitehall, 8, 25.
White ladies, 365, 419.
Whiteminſter, 418.
Whiteſbrictſthorne, 53.
Whitewick caſtle, 201.
Whitgift, John, archbiſhop of Canterbury, 274.—Robert abbot of Wellow, ib.
Whitland abbey, 505, 508.
Whitlebury foreſt, 172.
Whitley, 245.
Whitley, Nether, 426, 438.
Whitney, 442.
Whittington, 419.
——— Richard, 392.
Whittleſey, 141*.
——— mere, 141*, 154, 155.
——— archbiſhop, 141*.
Whitton, 173.
Wibba, king of the Mercians, 424.
Wibbenbury, 424, 437.
Wiberton, 241, 242.
Wibiſca mons, 356.
Wic, 106, 107.
Wic, what, 351.
Wicceſia mons, 356.
Wiccia, 351, 356.
Wich, 352.
——— Richard de la, biſhop of Chicheſter, 352.
Wiches, what, 42.
Wickham in Suffolk, 86.
Wickanford, 228, 369.
Wickliff, John, well verſed in the Scriptures, wrote againſt the Pope's authority, 193, 198.—his body burnt forty-one years after his death, by order of the council of Sienna, 193, 198.—his pulpit and cope, 198.
Wicton, 365.
——— North, 246.
Widdeville, baron, 166.—earl, ib.
Wigenhall, 98.
Wighton camp, 113.
Wightwick and family, 380.
Wigmore, 443, 454, 455.
Wigornia, 352.
Wigſton's hoſpital, 202, 204.
Wiken, 142.
Wikerford, 252.
Wilbraham, 140.
Wilbrighton, 380.
Wilcocks, biſhop, 24.
Wilden ferry, 212.
Wildmore fen, 380.
Wilford, 287.
Wilfred, 209.
Wilkins, Dr. biſhop of Cheſter, 174.
William earl of Henhaud and Leiceſter, 196.
Willey, 410.
Willeley, 410.
William, king of Scotland, ſwears fealty to king John, 264.
Williams, archbiſhop, 557.
——— Dr. his charity ſchools, 592.
——— Peere, his reports, 180.
——— ſir Booth, baronet, ib.
Willingham, 140.
Willis, Dr. Thomas, 172.—biſhop, 358.
Willoughby family, 9, 75, 87, 229, 230, 271, 283, 286, 303.—barons, 229, 230, 286.—barons of Brooke, 329.—Robert baron of Brooke, 353.—William baron of Parham, 279.—ſir Hugh ſtarved to death in diſcovering the frozen ſea, 302, 308.—Mr. the ornithologiſt, 286.
Willoughby on the Wold, 287.—Silk, 246.
Willowbridge, 395.
Willy, 326*.
Wilſon, Arthur, 109.
Wilton houſe, 444.—baron, ib.—caſtle, 463.
Wimare family, 42.
Wimley, 462.
Wimondham, 213.
Wimple, 130.
Winard, St. 448.
Winceby and battle, 268.
Windeſcleve, 371.
Windham family, 105.
Window of a cathedral painted by a lady, 107.—in a chimney, 174.—painted, 243, 269, 291, 454, 588, 591.
Winfield, 302.
Winfreton, 445.
Wingfield, South, 308.
Wingfield family, 76, 155, 167.—monuments, 88.
Wingfield college and caſtle, 88.
Winifred, St. a virgin, beheaded by Cradock, a prince of Wales, for not yielding to his ſolicitations, 593, 549.

—her well held in great veneration, 588, 593.—tomb, 594.—ſhrine, 578.
Winniffe, biſhop, 51.
Winnington, 426, 412.
Winſtanley, Mr. 62.
Winſtre, 311.
Winterdyne, 358.
Winterton, 96, 111, 278.—cliff, 278.
Wintor family, 365.
Wintringham, 278.
Winwallo, St. 116.
Winyeve family, 84.
Wire foreſt, 358.
Wirkſworth, 310.
Wirral, 424.
Wiſbich, 141*.
Wiſeberum, 144.
Witchcote, 198.
Witchingam, 117*.
Witewick, 293.
Witham, 241, 273.—South, or port, 245.
—— river, 226, 227, 251.—honour, 55.
Withburga, St. daughter of king Anna, 99, 117*.
Withorn, 273.
Witley, Great, 372.
Wittering heath, 168.
Wittiſca mons, 356.
Wittleſea mere, 166.
Wiverton, 284.
Wobury, 462.
Wodehouſe family, 105.
Wodenoth family, 424.
Wolds, 213.
Wolfe, general, 24.
Wolfhamcote, 333.
Wollaſton, William, 393.
Wollaton, 283, 286.
Wolpher, king of Mercia, 187.—murdered his ſons Vulfard and Rufin for turning Chriſtians, 376.
Wolſeley, ſir William, drowned, 392.
Wolſey, cardinal, his college at Ipſwich, 45, 75, 85.—built Hampton court, 13.—his agreement with the prior of Clerkenwell for a houſe, 27. his grave opened, 203.
Wolſtan, 335.
Wolſtrop, 249.
Wolthorpe, 249.
Wolves, formerly in Derbyſhire, 302. in Wales, 538.
Wolvehunt, 302.
Wolverhampton, 300, 375.—church yard, 380.
Wolveſley, 373, 392.
Wombridge, 419*.
Woodbridge, 85, 86.
Woodbury hill and camp, 372.
Woodcroft houſe, 185.
Woodford, 179, 439.
Wood foſſil, 251.
Woodham Walters, 44. — Mortimer, 53.
Woodhay, 424.
Woodland of Derbyſhire, 321.
Woodland, 327, 329.—plea court, 401.
Woodlark, Robert, 133.
Woodriſing, 105.
Woods, 239.
Woodſtock, Thomas of, duke of Glouceſter, 54.—his college and tomb, ib.
Woodſton, 183.
Woodſtone, 163.
Woodthorpe, 237.
Woolveſton, 86.
Worceſter, 352. 365.—fight, 366.
Worceſterſhire, 351—374.—Roman, 355, 356.—ſhape, dimenſions, rivers, Domeſday, 354. —ſituation, 356. —earls of, 373, 374.—rare plants, 374.
Work's chantry, 262.
Workſop, 285.—houſe burnt and rebuilt, 293.
Workſworth, 303.
Worlaby, 278.
Worlingworth and font, 86.
Worm, 445.
Wormgay, 99, 116*.
Wormhill moor, 325*. — lands held here by the tenure to hunt and deſtroy wolves, 302.
Wormleighton, 327, 334. — baron Spencer of, ib.
Worms head point, 500.
Wormſley, 461.
Worſted, 107.—ſtuffs, ib.
Wothorp, 187, 277.
Wotton, 389.
Wotton under Weever, 377, 394.
Wragby, 229, 267.
Wrawby, 278.
Wreke rivulet, 210, 213.
Wreken hill, 397, 416.
Wren, ſir Chriſtopher, 133.
Wreſtling, an exerciſe much uſed by the Corniſh men, 287.
Wrexham, 576, 583.
Wrey, ſir Chriſtopher, lord chief juſtice of England, 133.
Wright family, 347.
Wrightholt, 241.
Writtle and title, 44, 55.
Wroth, ſir Thomas, 31.
Wrotteſley, 380.
Wroxeter, 412, 597.—ford, ib.—the old works of, ib.
Wroxhall, 329.
Wulfere, 167.
Wulpett, 74, 83, 101.
Wulfran, St. 251.
Wulſtan, biſhop of Worceſter, 353.
Wycherley, 417.
Wyckham hall, 239.
Wydhva, 550, 551.
Wye, what, 461.
Wye river, 325*, 442, 445, 483.—made navigable, 446.
Wyham, 273.
Wyken, 200.
Wymerley, 212.
Wymondham, 94, 105.
Wyndham family, 105.
Wyngal, 276.
Wynne family, and monuments, and portraits, 578, 585.—Dr. William, his epitaph, 596.—ſir George, his extravagance, ib.
Wynſtay, 585.
Wyral, 434.
Wyre foreſt, 351.
Wyre hall, 29.
Wyſk river, 470.

Y.

Y Fannon vawr, 590.
Y Gîſt vaen, 502.
Y maen Sigl, 520.
Y Clawdh coch, 551.
YVoellas, 575.
Yale, 576, 581.
Yarborough camp and family, 278.
Yardley Haſtings, 166, 178.
Yarmouth, 95, 109.—earl of, 90.
Yarn, 89.
Yarranton, Andrew, 357.
Yaxters, 163.
Yelverton family, 144, 173.—library, 157.
Ymwithig, 398.
Yelpers, 271.
Yeveley, 308.
Ykeling ſtreet, 266.
Ynnis Enli, 554. — Drwall, 565. — Gybi, 572.—Rug, 572.
Yn hericy Gwidil, 565, 568.
Yoxall, 393.
Ypoceſſa, 369.
Ynnys y Moelrhom, 572.—Cewenni, 569.
Ys, what, 398.
Yſtrad Marcell, 535.—Clwyd, 575.
Yſtymkiged, 554.
Yſtwyth river, 241.
Yſpytty Yevan, 545.
Yſtraedvelty, 473.

Z.

ZOUCH family, 130, 186, 502.—of Codnor, 165, 306.

VOLUME II.

CORRECTIONS AND ADDITIONS.

P. 28. col. 1. l. ult. muſic, law, phyſic, and rhetoric
l. antep. for four r. ſeven.
P. 86. col. 1. l. 48. } for daughter r. ſiſter.
P. 87. col. 1. l. 35. }
P. 88. col. 1. l. 34. for Nicholas r. John.
P. 93. col. 2. l. 1. after conſul put a point.
P. 95. col. 1. l. 17. after kept add it.
P. 98. col. 1. l. 3. in margin for Newford r. Neirford
P. 101. col. 1. l. 4. for county r. county.
P. 105. col. 1. l. 6. for bart. r. knt.
l. 2. for Carſbrook r. Carbrook.
l. 11. 12. dele who firſt brought the Mortlake tapeſtry into England, and add it, l. 13. after ſir Francis Crane, knt.
P. 107. col. 1. l. 45. r. ſummer aſſizes
P. 109. col. 2. l. 29. 54. for 1733 and 1719 r. 1732.
P. 110. col. 1. l. 8. for in company r. company in
l. 5. from bottom for 1719 r. 1732.
l. 4. from bottom r. (to pay debts)
P. 112. col. 1. l. 26. for exceeding r. exceedingly
P. 116. col. 2. l. 36. dele market town
l. 51. for ſome r. and
l. 52. for and r. ſome
P. 117*. col. 1. l. 34. for bart. r. knt.
l. 55. in the margin add Witchingham
l. 30. for Milford r. Mitford
l. 52. for Hacton r. Hackford col 2. l. 39. r. St. Edmund's
P. 134. col. 1. l. 12. 13. from bottom r. the houſe of Mr. Finch, now Mr. Mortlake's, occupies the ſite
P. 138. col. 2. l. 18. r. Linſdale.
P. 198. col. 2. l. 24. r. 1387.
P. 199. col. 1. l. 8. r. preceptory
l. 29. r. ſurmounted
l. 54. r. abhinc.
col. 2. l. 29. r. Henry II.
P. 200. col. 1. l. 24. r. came firſt to Robert Blanchmaines
P. 201. col. 1. l. 33. dele or Heatherne
l. 38. r. Stoughton belongs reference c. r. Burton, 229.
col. 2. l. 24. r. criticiſms on
l. 29. r. Penn Aſheton Curzon, eſq.
P. 205. col. 2. l. 13. for one r. of
P. 211. col. 1. l. 22. Swithland is the ſeat of ſir John Danvers; but the quarries are lord Stamford's.
l. 51. for ſon r. grandſon
l. 64. for Derby r. Denby.
col. 2. l. 23. r. Garendon park. Quarendon, the ſeat of Mr. Meynell, is cloſe to the Soare, about four miles ſouth eaſt of Garendon.
l. 35. for Charnwood r. Beaumanor.
P. 212. col. 1. l. 7. from bottom, and col. 2. l. 33. r. Lyſonby
P. 213. col. 1. l. 52. r. firſt duke of Buckingham of that name
col. 2. l. 21. r. Henry duke of Lancaſter
P. 291. col. 2. l. 7. r. Hugh
P. 333. col. 2. l. 8. from bottom r. coffin
P. 347. col. 1. l. 16. r. duke of Norfolk
l. 27. r. Fillongley
col. 2. l. 11. r. near Bedworth at Erdbury
P. 348. note z. r. 1081.
col. 2. from bottom r. died 19 years
P. 352. col. 2. l. 13. from bottom r. when I
P. 364. note m. r. Ib. 329.
P. 377. col. 2. l. 10. r. profeſt.
l. 18. r. rivers
P. 379. col. 2. l. 4. 5. r. The river Dove divides Staffordſhire and the peak country of Derbyſhire, between which there is
P. 386. col. 1. l. 41. r. ſix
P. 388. col. 2. l. 25. for Thomas r. Gilbert
P. 394. col. 1. 32. 33. r. Edmund ſecond ſon
col. 2. for Dove r. Manifold
P. 395. col. 2. 27. r. Magdalea
P. 575. col. 1. l. 5. r. and Flintſhire the reſt
l. 37. r. Llewellyn

PLATES AND MAPS IN VOLUME II.

Plates.

I.	to front	p. 41
II.		105
III.		237
IV.		208
V.		223*
VI. } *VI. }	one plate pasted together.	256
VII.		257
VIII.		256
*IX.		281
*X.		282
IX.		288
X.		368
XI.		379
XII.		404
XIII.		430
XIV.		452
*XIV.		473
XV.		490
XVI.		497
XVII.		500
XVIII.		501
XIX.		541
XX.		578
XXI.		583
XXII.		582

Maps.

Middleſex	to face	p. 1
Eſſex		41
Suffolk		71
Norfolk		93
Cambridgeſhire		123
Huntingdonſhire		153
Northamptonſhire		165
Leiceſterſhire		193
Rutlandſhire		219
Lincolnſhire		223
Nottinghamſhire		283
Derbyſhire		301
Warwickſhire		327
Worceſterſhire		351
Staffordſhire		375
Shropſhire		395*
Cheſhire		421
Herefordſhire		441
Monmouthſhire		477
South Wales		465
North Wales		531

END OF THE SECOND VOLUME.